Fitz. My lord, 'tis true: yea, we were in presence then;
And you can witness with me, this is true.

Surrey. As false, by heaven, as heaven itself is true.
Fitz. Surrey, thou liest.

Surrey. Dishonourable boy! That lie shall lie so heavy on my sword, That vengeance and revenge, Till thou the lie-giver, and that lie do lie
In earth as quiet as thy father's soul.
In proof whereof, there is my honour's pawn;
Engage it to the trial, if thou dar'st.
Fitz. How fondly dost thou spur a forward horse!
If I dare eat, or drink, or breathe, or live,
I dare meet Surrey in a wilderness, And spit upon him, whilst I say, he lies, And lies, and lies: there is my bond of faith, To tie thee to my strong correction.—
As I intend to thrive in this new world, Aumerle is guilty of my true appeal:
Besides, I heard the banish'd Norfolk say,
That thou, Aumerle, didst send two of thy men To execute the noble duke at Calais.
Aum. Some honest Christian trust me with a gage,
That Norfolk lies: here do I throw down this,
If he may be repeal'd to try his honour.

Boling. These differences shall all rest under gage, Till Norfolk be repeal'd: repeal'd he shall be, And though mine enemy, restor'd again.
To all his land and seignories; when he's return'd, Against Aumerle we will enforce his trial.

Car. That honourable day shall never be seen.—
Many a time hath banish'd Norfolk fought
For Jesus Christ; in glorious Christian field
Streaming the ensign of the Christian cross
Against black pagans, Turks, and Saracens
And, toold with works of war, retir'd himself
To Italy; and there, at Venice, gave
His body to that pleasant country's earth,
And his pure soul unto his captain Christ,
Under whose colours he had fought so long.

Boling. Why, bishop, is Norfolk dead?
Car. As sure as I live, my lord.

Boling. Sweet peace conduct his sweet soul to the
Of good old Abraham—Lords appellant's,
Your differences shall all rest under gage,
Till we assign you to your days of trial.

Enter York, attended.

York. Great duke of Lancaster, I come to thee
From plume-pluck'd Richard; who with willing soul
Adopts thee heir, and his high scepter yields
To the succession of thy kingly ha't; and:
Ascend his throne, descending now from him,—
And long live Henry, of that name the fourth!

Boling. In God's name, I'll ascend the regal throne.

Car. Marry, God forbid!—
Worst in this royal presence may I speak,
Yet best seeming me to speak:
Would God, that any in this noble presence
Were enough noble to be upright judge
Of noble Richard; then true nobles would Learn him forbearance from so foul a wrong.
What subject can give sentence on his king?
And who sits here, that is not Richard's subjece
Thieves are not judg'd, but they are not to hear,
Although apparent guilt be seen in them:

And shall the figure of God's majesty,
His captain, steward, deputy elect,
Anointed, crowned, planted many years,
Be judg'd by subject and inferior breath,
And he himself not present? O, forbid it, God,
That, in a Christian climate, souls offend.

The very man that should be his friend shew so base, so black, so obscene, a deed! I speak to subjects, and a subject speaks,
Stir'd up by heaven thus boldly for his king.
My lord of Hereford here, whom you call king,
Is a foul traitor to proud Hereford's king:
And if you crown him, let me prophesy,—
The blood of English shall蔓,neer the ground, And future ages groan for this foul act.
Peace shall go sleep with Turks and infidels, And, in this seat of peace, tumultuous wars
Shall kin with kin, and kind with kind confound;
Disorder, horror, fear, and mutiny,
Shall here inhabit, and this land be call'd
The field of Golgotha, and dead men's sculls.
O, if you rear this house against this house, It will be the mosteful division prove,
That ever full upon this cursed earth:

Prevent, resist it, let it not be so,
Lest children's children, cry against you—woe!

North. Well have you arg'd, sir; and for your
Of capital treason we arrest you here:—

[Exeunt the lords, and the other public characters.]

York. I will be his conduct. [Exit.

Boling. Lords, you that are here under our arrest
Procure your sureties for your days of answer:—

2A
Little are we beholden to your love, (To Carlisle. And little looked for at your helping hands.

Re-enter York, with King Richard, and Officers bearing the crown, &c. K. Rich. Alack, why am I sent for to a king, Before I have shook off the regal thoughts Wherewith I reign'd! I hardly yet have learn'd To insinuate, flatter, bow, and bend my knee: Give sorrow leave a while to tutor me To this submission. Yet I well remember The favors of these men: Were they not mine? Did they not sometime cry, all for the King? So Judas did to Christ: but he, in twelve, [none. Found truth in all, but one; I, in twelve thousand, God save the king!—Will no man say, amen? Am I both priest and clerk? well then, amen. God save the king! although I be not he; And yet, amen, if heaven do think him me. To do what service am I sent for hither? York. To do that office of thine own good will, Which tired majesty did make thee offer,— The resignation of thy state and crown To Henry Bolingbroke. [the crown; K. Rich. Give me the crown;—Here, cousin, seize Here, on this side, my hand; on that side, thine. Now is this golden crown like a deep well, That owes two bucket's of water to another; The emptier ever dancing in the air, The other down, unseen, and full of water: That bucket down, and full of tears am I, Drinking my griefs, whilst you mount up on high. Boling. I thought you had been willing to resign. K. Rich. My crown, I am, but still my griefs are mine: You may use all my state, and all my crown; But not my griefs; still am I king of those, (crown. Boling. Part of your cares you give me with your K. Rich. Your cares set up, do not pluck my cares. My care is—loss of care, by old care done; [down. Your care is,—gain of care, by new care won; The cares I give, I have, though given away; The crown I set down, yet still with me they stay. Boling. Are you contented to resign the crown? K. Rich. Ay, no; —no, ay; —for I must nothing be; Therefore no, no, for I resign to thee. Now mark me how I will undo myself: I give this heavy weight from off my head, And this unwise sceptre from my hand, The pride of kingly sway from out my heart; With mine own tears I wash away my balm, With mine own hands I give away my crown, With mine own tongue deny my sacred state, With mine own breath release all duteous oaths, All pomp and majesty I do forswear; My manors, rents, revenues, I forego; My acts, decrees, and statutes, I deny; God pardon all oaths, that are broke to me! God keep all gloom and sorrow, that are come to thee! Make me, that nothing have, with nothing griev'd; And thou with all pleas'd, that last all ache'd! Long mayst thou live in Richard's seat to sit, And soon lie Richard in an earthly pit! God save King Henry, unking'd Richard says, And send him many years of sunshine days! What more remaineth? [Drown. North. No more, but that you read [Offering a paper. These accusations, and these grievous crimes, Committed by your person and your followers Against the state and profit of this land; That, by confessing them, the souls of men May deem that you are worthy depos'd. K. Rich. Must I do so? and must I ravel out My weav'd-up follies? Gentle Northumberland, If thy offences were upon record, Would it not shame thee, in so fair a troop, To read a lecture of them? If thou would'st, There should'st thou find one heinous article,— Containing the deposing of a king, And cracking the strong warrant of an oath,— Mark'd with a blot, damn'd in the book of heaven, Nay, all of you, that stand and look upon me, Whilst that my wretchedness doth bate myself,— Though some of you, with Pilate, wash your hands. Since should'st thou find me guilty yet you Pilates Have here deliver'd me to your sword and cross, And water cannot wash away your sin. North. My lord, despacht; read o'er these articles. [K. Rich. Mine eyes are full of tears, I cannot see: And yet salt water blinds them not so much, But they can see a sort of traitors here. Nay, if 'tis mine eyes upon myself, I find myself a traitor with the rest: For I have given here my soul's consent, To undeck the pompos body of a king; Make glory base; and sovereignty a slave; Proud majesty, a subject; state, a peasant. [man North. My lord,— [Exit an Attendant. K. Rich. No lord of thine, thou hast, insulting Nor no man's lord; I have no name, no title,— No, not that name was given me at the font, — But 'tis usurp'd;—Alack the heavy day, That I have worn so many winters out, And know not now what name to call myself! O, that I were a mockery king of snow, Standing before the sun of Bolingbroke, To melt myself away in water-drops! Great king, —great king, (and yet not greatly good,) An if my word be stereing yet in England, Let it command a mirror hither straight; That it may show me what a face I have, Since it is bankrupt of his majesty. Boling. Go some of you, and fetch a looking-glass [Exit an Attendant. North. Read o'er this paper, while the glass doth come. [Exit. K. Rich. Fiend! thou torment'st me ere I come to Boling. Urge it no more, my lord Northumberland. North. The commons will not then be satisfied. K. Rich. They shall be satisfied; I'll read enough. When I do see the very book indeed Where all my sins are writ, and that's—myself. Re-enter Attendant, with a glass. Give me that glass, and therein will I read. No deeper wrinkles yet? Hath sorrow struck So many blows upon this face of mine, And made no deeper wounds?—O, flattering glass, Like to my followers in prosperity, Thou dost beguile me! Was this face the face, That every day was so confident and high? Did keep ten thousand men? Was this the face, That, like the sun, did make beholders wink? Was this the face, that faced so many follies, And was at last out-fac'd by Bolingbroke? A brittle glory shineth in this face: As brittle as the glory is the face; [Drown the glass against the ground. For there it is, crack'd in a hundred shivers,— Mark, silent king, the moral of this sport, How soon my sorrow hath destroy'd my face. Boling. The shadow of your sorrow hath destroy'd The shadow of your face. K. Rich. Say that again. The shadow of my sorrow! Ha! let's see —
KING RICHARD II

KING RICHARD Weep thou for me in France
Act IV. Sc. 1
ACT V.—SCENE I.
371
'Tis very true, my grief lies all within;
And these external manners of lament
Are merely shadows to the unseen grief,
That swells with silence in the tortur'd soul;
There lies the substance: and I thank thee, king,
For thy great bounty, that not only giv'st
Me cause to wail, but teachest me the way
How to lament the cause. I'll beg one boon,
And then be gone, and trouble you no more.
Shall I obtain it?
Boling.
Your Name it, fair cousin.
K. Rich. Fair cousin? Why, I am greater than a king;
For, when I was a king, my flatterers
Were then but subjects; being now a subject,
I have a king here to my flatterer.
Being so great, I have no need to beg.
Boling. Yet ask.
K. Rich. And shall I have?
Boling. You shall.
K. Rich. Then give me leave to go.
Boling. Whither?
[Exeunt.]

ACT V.
SCENE I.—London. A street leading to the Tower.
Enter QUEEN and Ladies.
Queen. This way the king will come; this is the way
To Julius Caesar's ill-erected tower,
To whose firm bosom my condemned lord
Is doom'd a prisoner by proud Bolingbroke:
Here let us rest, if this rebellions earth
Have any resting for her true king's queen.
Enter KING RICHARD andguards.
But soft, but see, or rather do not see.
My fair rose wither: Yet look up; behold;
That you in pity may dissolve to dew,
And wash him fresh again with true-love tears.—
Ah, thou, the model where old Troy did stand;
Thou map of honour; thou king Richard's tomb,
And not king Richard; thou most beautiful inn,
Why should hard fav'rd grief bid lodg'd in thee,
When triumph is become an alehouse guest?
K. Rich. Join not with grief, fair woman, do not so,
To make my end too sudden: learn, good soul,
To think our former state a happy dream;
From which awak'd, the truth of what we are
Shews us but this: I am sworn brother, sweet,
To grim necessity; and he and I
Will keep a league till death. The thee to France
And cloister thee in some religious house:
Our holy lives must win a new world's crown;
Which our profane hours here have striken down.
Queen. What, is my Richard both in shape and mind
Transform'd, and weaken'd? Hath Bolingbroke
Depos'd thine intellect? Hath he been in thy heart?
The lion, dying, thrusteth forth his paw,
And wounds the earth, if nothing else, with rage
To be o'erpower'd; and wilt thou, pupil-like,
Take thy correction mildly? kiss the rod;
And fawn on rage with base humility,
Which art a lion, and a king of beasts?
K. Rich. A king of beasts; indeed; if aught but I had been still a happy king of men.
[beasts,
Good sometime queen, prepare thee hence for France:
Think, I am dead; and that even here thou tak'st,
As from my death-bed, my last living leave.
In winter's tedious nights, sit by the fire
With good old folks; and let them tell thee tales
Of woeful ages, long ago betid:
And, ere thou bid good night, to quit their grief,
Tell them the lamentable fall of me,
And send the hearers weeping to their beds.
For why? to senseless beasts to speak, and move
The heavy accent of thy moving tongue,
And, in compassion, weep the fire out:
And some will mourn in ashes, some coal-black,
For the deposing of a rightful king.

Enter NORTHUMBERLAND, attended.
North. My lord, the mind of Bolingbroke is chang'd;
You must to Pomfret, not unto the Tower.—
And, madam, there is order ta'en for you;
With all swift speed you must away to France.
K. Rich. Northumberland, thou ladder wherewith
The mounting Bolingbroke ascends my throne,—
The time shall not be many hours of age
More than it is, to cool sin, gathering head,
Shall break into corruption; thou shalt think,
Though he divide the realm, and give thee half,
It is too little, helping him to all;
And he shall think, that thou, which know'st the way
To plant unrightful kings, wilt know again,
Being ne'er so little urg'd, another way
To pluck him headlong from the usurped throne.
The love of wicked friends converts to fear:
That fear, to hate; and hate turns one, or both,
To worthy danger, and deserved death.
North. My guilt be on my head, and there an end.
Take leave, and part; for you must part forthwith.
K. Rich. Doubly divorc'd!—had men, ye violate
A twofold marriage; "twixt my crown and me;
And then, betwixt me and my married wife.—
Let me unkiss the oath "twixt thee and me;
And yet not so, for with a kiss 'twas made.—
Part us, Northumberland; I towards the north,
Where shivering cold and sickness pines the clime;
My wife to France: from whence, set forth in pomp,
She came adorned lither like sweet May,
Sent back like Hallowmas, or short'st of day.
Queen. And must we be divided! must we part?
K. Rich. Ay, hand from hand, my love, and heart from heart.
Queen. Banish us both, and send the king with me.
North. That were some love, but little policy.
Queen. Then whither she goes, the better let me go.
K. Rich. So two, together weeping, make one woe.
Weep thou for me in France, I for thee here;
Better far off, than—near, be ne'er the near.
Go, count thy way with sighs; I, mine with groans
A 2
Queen. So longest way shall have the longest moans.

K. Rich. Twice for one step I'll groan, the way being

And piece the way out with a heavy heart. [short,]

Come, come, in woeing sorrow, let's be brief,

Since we're dead, it is there much length in grief.

One kiss shall stop our mouths, and doubly part;

Thus give me mine, and thus I take thy heart. [They kiss.]

Queen. Give me mine own again; 'twere no good part,

To take on me to keep, and kill thy heart. [Kiss again.]

So now, I have mine own again, begone,

Through thy love, my Warwick may strive to kill.

K. Rich. We make woe wanton with this fond delay:

Once more, adieu; the rest let sorrow say. [Exeunt.]

SCENE II.

The same.—A Room in the Duke of York's Palace.

Enter York and his Duchess.

Duch. My lord, you told me you would tell the rest,

When weeping made you break the story off

Of our two cousins coming into London.

York. Where did I leave?

Duch. At that sad stop, my lord,

Where rude misgov'rn'd hands, from windows' tops,

Threw dust and rubbish o'er the king Richard's head.

York. Then, as I said, the duke, great Bolingbroke,

Mounted upon a hot and fiery steed,

Which his aspiring rider seem'd to know,—

With slow, but stately pace, kept on his course,

While all tongues cried—God save thee, Bolingbroke!

You would have thought the very windows spake,

So many greedy looks of young and old,

Through all the casements darted their desiring eyes

Upon his visage; and that all the walls,

With painted imagery, had said at once.—

Jesus preserve thee! welcome, Bolingbroke!

Whiles he, from one side to the other tripping,

Bare-headed, lower than his proud steed's neck,

Bespake them thus.—I thank you, countrymen:

And thus still doing, thus he pass'd along.

Duch. This poor Richard where rides he the while?

York. As in a theatre, the eyes of men,

After a well-grac'd actor leaves the stage,

Are idly bent on him that enters next,

Thinking his prattle to be tedious:

Even so, or with much more contempt, men's eyes

Did scowl on Richard; no man cried, God save him;

No joyful tongue gave him his welcome home:

But death was thrown upon his sacred head;

Which with such gentle sorrow he shook off,—

His face still combusting with tears and smiles,

The badges of his grief and patience.—

That had not God, for some strong purpose, steed'd

The hearts of men, they must perfere have melted,

And barbarism itself have pitied him.

But leaves hath a hand in these events:

To whose high will we bound our calm contents,

To Bolingbroke are we sworn subjects now,

Whose state and honour I for aye allow.

Enter Aumerle.

Duch. Here comes my son Aumerle.

Aumerle. That was; but that is lost, for being Richard's friend,

And, madam, you must call him Rutland now:

I am in parliament pledge for his truth,

And lasting fealty to the new-made king.

Duch. Welcome, my son: Who are the violets now,

That strew the green lap of the new-come spring?

Aum. Madam, I know not, nor I greatly care not:

God knows, I had as little be none, as one.

York. Well, bear you well, in this new spring of time,

Lest you be crop'd before you come to prime. [umps?

What news from Oxford! I hold those justs and trial.

For aught I know, my Lord, they do.

York. You will be there, I know.

Aum. If God prevent it not; I purpose so.

York. What seal is that, that hangs without thy beare?

Yea, look'st thou pale? let me see the writing. [son?

Aum. My lord, 'tis nothing.

York. No matter then who sees it:—l

I will be satisfied, let me see the writing.

Duch. I do beseech your grace to pardon me;

It is a matter of small consequence,

Which for some reasons I would not have seen.

York. Which for some reasons, sir, I mean to see.

I fear, I fear,—

Duch. What should you fear?

Tis nothing but some bond, that he is enter'd into

For gay apparel, 'gainst the triumph day.

York. Bound to himself! what doth he with a bond

That he is bound to? Wife, thou art a fool.—

Boy, let me see the writing. [t

Treason! foul treason!—will you forgive slave!—

Duch. What is the matter, my lord?

York. He! who is within there? [Enter a Servant.

Saddle my horse.

God for his mercy! what treachery is here!

Duch. Why, what is it, my lord?

York. Give me my boots, I say; saddle my horse:—

Now by mine honour, by my life, my soul,

I will appease the villain. [Exit Servant.

Duch. What's the matter?

York. Peace, foolish woman.

Duch. I will not peace.—What is the matter, son?

Aum. Good mother, be content; it is no more

Than my poor life must answer.

Duch. Thy life answer?

Re-enter Servant, with boots.

York. Bring me my boots, I will unto the king.

Duch. Strike him, Aumerle.—Poor boy, thou art

amaz'd:

Hence, villain: never more come in my sight.—

York. Give me my boots, I say.

Duch. Why, York, what wilt thou do?

Wilt thou not hide the trespass of thine own?

Have we more sons? or are we like to have?

Is not my teeming date drunk up with time?

And wilt thou pluck my fair son from mine age,

And rob me of a happy mother's name?

Is he not like thee? is he not thine own?

York. This fond mad woman,

Wilt thou conceal this dark conspiracy?

A dozen of them have tag'en the sacrament,

And interchangeably set down their hands,

To kill the king at Oxford.

Duch. He shall be none;

We'll keep him here: What then is that to him?

York. Away.

Duch. Good Lord! I were two times my son

I would appease him.

Duch. Hadst thou gross'd for him,

As I have done, thou'lt be more pitiful.

But now I know thy mind; thou dost suspect,

That I have been disloyal to thy bed,

And that he is a bastard, not thy son:

Sweet York, sweet husband, be out of that mind:

He is as like thee as a man may be,
ACT V.—SCENE III.

Not like to me, or any of my kin,
And yet I love him.
York. Make way, unruly woman. \[Exit.\]
Duch. After, Aumerle; mount thee upon his horse;
Spar, post; and get before him to the king,
And beg thy pardon ere he do accuse thee.
I’lt be long before; though I be old,
I doubt not but to ride as fast as York:
And never will I rise up from the ground,
Till Belingbroke have pardon’d thee: Away;
Begone. \[Exeunt.\]

SCENE III.—Windor. A Room in the Castle.

Enter Bolingbroke, as King: Percy, and other Lords.
Boling. Can no man tell of my untruthy son?
’Tis six full months, since I did see him last:—
If any plague hang over us, ’tis he.
I would to God, my lords, he might be found:—
Inquire at London, ’mongst the taverns there,
For there, they say, he daily doth frequent,
With unrestrained loose companions;
Even such, they say, as staid in narrow lanes,
And beat our watch, and rob our passengers;
While he, young, wanton, and effeminate boy,
Takes on the point of honour, to support
So dissolute a crew.

Percy. My lord, some two days since I saw the prince;
And told him of these triumphs told at Oxford.
I know the word that said the gallant!—
Percy. His answer was,—he would unto the stews;
And from the common’st creature pluck a glove,
And wear it as a favour; and with that
He would unhorse the lustiest challenger.

Boling. As dissolute, as desperate: yet, through both
I see some sparkles of a better hope,
Which elder days may happily bring forth.
But who comes here?

Enter AUMERLE, hastily.
Aum. Where is the king?
Boling. What means our cousin, that he stares and looks so wildly?
Aum. God save your grace. I do beseech your majesty,
To have some conference with your grace alone.
Boling. Withdraw yourselves, and leave us here alone.—
[Exeunt Percy and Lords.
What is the matter with our cousin now?
Aum. For ever may my knees grow to the earth,
[Knelt.
My tongue cleave to my roof within my mouth,
Unless a pardon, ere I rise, or speak.
Boling. Intended, or committed, was this fault?
If but the first, how heinous is it be,
To win thy after-love, I pardon thee.
Aum. Then give me leave that I may turn the key,
That no man enter till my tale be done.

Boling. I have thy desire. \[AUMERLE looks the door.\]
York. \[Within.\] My liege, beware; look to thyself;
There hast a traitor in thy presence here.
Boling. Villain, I’ll make thee safe. \[Drawing.\]
Aum. Thy strange and heavy ban,
Thou hast no cause to fear.
York. \[Within.\] Open the door, secure, fool-hardy
Shall I, for love, speak treason to thy face? \[king.\]
Open the door, or I will break it open.
[BoSCOMB opens the door. \[Enter YORK.\]
Boling. What is the matter, uncle? I speak;
Recover breath; tell us how near is danger,
That we may arm us to encounter it.
York. Peruse this writing here, and thou shalt know
The treason that my haste forbids me shew.
Aum. Remember, as thou read’st, thy promise past:
I do repent me; read not my name there,
My heart is not confederate with my hand.
York. Twas, villain, ere thy hand did set it down.—
I tore it from the traitor’s bosom, king;
 Fear, and not love, begat his villany:
Forget to pity him, lest thy pity prove
A serpent that will sting thee to the heart.
Boling. O heinous, strong, and bold conspiracy!—
O loyal father of a treacherous son!
Thou see’st, imaculate, and silver fountain,
From whence this stream through thready passages,
Hath held his current, and deified himself!
Thy overflow of good converts to bad;
And thy abundant goodness shall excuse
This deadly blot in thy digressing son.
York. So shall my virtue be his vice’s bawd:
And he shall spend mine honour with his shame,
As thriftless sons their scraping fathers’ gold.
Mine honor, when his dishonour dies,
Or my sham’d life in his dishonour lies:
Thou kill’st me in his life; giving him breath,
The traitor lives, the true man’s put to death.

Duch. \[Within.\] What ho, my liege! for God’s sake let me in.
Boling. What shrill-voic’d suppliant makes this Duch. A woman, and thine aunt, great king; ’tis I.
Speak with me, pity me, open the door:
A beggar begs, that never begg’d before.
Boling. Our scene is alter’d,—from a serious thing,
And now chang’d to The Beggar and the King.—
My dangerous cousin, let your mother in;
I know, she’s come to pray for your soul.
York. If thou dost pardon, whatsoever pray
More sins, for this forgiveness, prosper may.
This fester’d joint cut off, the rest resists sound;
This, let alone, will all the rest confound.

Enter Dukess.
Duch. O king, believe not this hard-hearted man,
Love, loving not itself, none other can.
York. Thou frantic woman, what dost thou make Shall thy old dogs once more a traitor rear? \[here.\]
Duch. Sweet York, very patient: Iear me, gentle liege.
[Knelt.
Boling. Rise up, good aunt.
Duch. Not yet, I thee beseech:
For ever will I kneel upon my knees,
And never see day that the happy sees,
Till thou give joy; until thou bid me joy,
By pardoning Rutland, my transgressing boy.
Aum. Unto my mother’s prayers I bend my knee.
York. Against them both, my true joints bended be.
[Knelt.
Duch. Ill may’st thou thrive, if thou grant any grace!
Duch. Pleads he in earnest? look upon his face;
His eyes do drop no tears, his prayers are in jest;
His words come from his mouth, ours from our breast;
He prays but faintly, and would be denied;
We pray with heart, and soul, and all beside:
His weary joints would gladly rise, I know;
Our knees shall kneel till to the ground they grow:
His prayers are full of false hypocrisy;
Ours, of true zeal and deep integrity.
Our prayers do out-pray his; then let them have
That mercy, which true prayers ought to have.
Boling. Good aunt, stand up.
Duch. Nay, do not say—stand up;
But pardon, first; and afterwards, stand up.
An if I were thy nurse, thy tongue to teach,
Pardon—should be the first word of thy speech.
KING RICHARD II.

I never long’d to hear a word till now;
Say—pardon, king; let pity teach thee how:
The word is short, but not so short as sweet;
No word like, pardon, for kings’ mouths so meet.
York, Speak it in French, king; say, pardonning, Duch. Dost thou teach pardon pardon to destroy?
Abbot, Ah, my sour husband, my hard-hearted lord,
That setst the word itself against the word—
Speak, pardon, as ’tis current in our land;
The chopping French we do not understand,
Thine eye begins to speak, set thy tongue there:
Or, in thy pitious heart plant thou thine ear;
That, hearing how our plaints and prayers do pierce,
Pity may move thee, pardon to rehearse.
Boling. Good Aunt, stand up, then.
Duch. I do not sue to stand,
Pardon is all the suit I have in hand.
Boling. I pardon him, as God shall pardon me.
Duch. O happy vantage of a kneeling knee!
Yet do I sick for fear: speak it again:
Twice saying pardon, doth not pardon strain;
But makes one pardon strong.
Boling. With all my heart
I pardon him.
Duch. A god on earth thou art.
Boling. But for our trusty brother-in-law,—and the
All the rest of the consorted crew,—[salute,
Destruction straight shall dog thee at the heel.
—Good uncle, help to order several powers
To Oxford, or where’er these traitors are:
They shall not live within this world, I swear,
But I will have them, if I once know where.
Uncle, farewell,—and cousin too, adieu:
Your mother well hath pray’d, and prove you true.
Duch. Come, my old son; I pray God make thee new.
[Exeunt.

SCENE IV.

Enter Exton and a Servant.

Exton. Didst thou not mark the king, what words he spake?
Have I no friend will rid me of this living fear?
Was it not so?
Serv. Those were his very words.
Exton. Have I no friend? quoth he: spake it
And urg’d it twice together; did he not? [twice,
Serv. He did.
Exton. And speaking it, he wistfully look’d on me;
As who should say,—I would, thou wert the man
That would divorce this terror from my heart;
Meaning, the king at Pomfret. Come, let’s go;
I am the king’s friend, and will rid his foe.
[Exeunt.

SCENE V.—Pomfret. The Dungeon of the Castle.

Enter King Richard.

K. Rich. I have been studying how I may compare
This prison, where I live, unto the world:
And, for because the world is populous,
And here is not a creature but myself,
I cannot do it:—Yet I’ll hammer it out.
My brain I’ll prove the female to my soul;
My soul, the father: and these two begot
A generation of still-breeding thoughts,
And these same thoughts people this little world;
In humour, like the people of this world,
For no thought is contented. The better sort,—
As thoughts of things divine,—are intermix’d
With scruples, and do set the word itself
Against the word:
As thus,—Come, little ones; and then again,—
It is as hard to come, as for a comet
To thread the pattern of a needle’s eye.

Thoughts tending to ambition, they do plot
Unlikely wonders: how these vain weak naves
May tear a passage through the flinty ribs
Of this hard world, my ragged prison walls;
And, for they cannot, die in their own pride.

Thoughts tending to content, flatter themselves,—
That they are not the first of fortune’s slaves,
Nor shall not be the last; like silly beggars,
Who, sitting in the stocks, refuse their shame,—
That many have, and others must sit there:
And in this thought they find a kind of ease,
Bearing their own misfortune on the back.
Of such as have before endur’d the like.

Thus play I, in one person, many people,
And none contented: Sometimes am I king;
Then treason makes me wish myself a beggar,
And so I am: Then crushing penury
Persuades me I was better when a king;
Then I think’d again: and, by-and-by,
Think that I am unking’d by Bolingbroke,
And straight am nothing:—But, whate’er I am,
Nor I, nor any man, that but man is,
With nothing shall be pleas’d till he be eas’d
With being nothing.—Music do I hear?
[Music.
Ha, ha! keep time:—How sour sweet music is,
When men are broke, and no proportion kept!
So is it in the music of men’s lives.
And here have I the daintiness of ear,
To check time broke in a disorder’d string;
But, for the concord of my state and time,
Had not an ear to hear my true time broke.
I wasted time, and now doth time waste me.
For now hath time made me his servile clock:
My times, my minutes, on my hours:
How many times,
Runs posting on in Bolingbroke’s proud joy.
While I stand fouling here, his Jack o’ the clock.
This music mads me, let it sound no more;
For, though it holpe madmen to their wits,
In me, it seems it will make wise men mad.
Yet blessing on his heart that gives it me!
For ‘tis a sign of love; and love to Richard
Is a strange brooch in this all-hating world.

Enter Groom.

Groom. Hail, royal prince!
K. Rich. Thanks, noble peer;
The cheapest of us is ten groats too dear.
What art thou? and howcomest thou hither,
Whereon man never comes, but that sad dog
That brings me food, to make misfortune live?
Groom. I was a poor groom of thy stable, king,
When thou went king; who, travelling towards York,
With much ado, at length have gotten leave
To look upon my sometime master’s face.
O, how it yern’d my heart, when I beheld
In this hard world, my ragged prison walls,
When Bolingbroke rode on roan Barbary!
That horse, that thou so often hast bestrid;
That horse, that I so carefully have dress’d!
K. Rich. Ride he on Barbary? Tell me, gentle
How went he under him?
[friend,
Groom. So prudently, as if he disdain’d the ground.
K. Rich. So proud that Bolingbroke was on his
That jade hath eat bread from my royal hand; [back,
ACT V.—SCENE VI.

This hand hath made him proud with clapping him. / Would he not stumble? Would he not fall down? / (Since pride must have a fall,) and break the neck / Of that proud man, that did usurp his back? / Forgiveness, horse! why do I rail on thee, / Since thou, created to be aw'd by man, / Was born to bear? I was not made a horse; / And yet I bear a burden like an ass, / Suffer-gall'd, and tir'd by jaunecing Bolingbroke. Enter Keeper, with a dish. / Keep. Fellow, give place; here is no longer stay. / [To the Groom. / K. Rich. If thou love me, 'tis time thouwert away. / Groom. What my tongue dares not, that my heart shall say. / [Exit. / Keep. My lord, wilt please you to fall to? / K. Rich. Taste of it first, as thou art wont to do. / Keep. My lord, I dare not; sir Perci of Exton, / Lately came from the king, commands the contrary. / K. Rich. The devil take Henry of Lancaster, and / Patience is stale, and I am weary of it. [thee! / [Beats the Keeper. / Keep. Help, help, help! / Enter Exton, and Servants, armed. / K. Rich. How now! what means death in this rude assault? / Villain, thy own hand yields thy death's instrument. / [Snatching a weapon, and killing one. / Go thou, and fill another room in hell. / [Exeunt Exton and Servants. / [killed another, then Exton strikes him down. / That hand shall burn in never-sleeping fire, / That stagers thus my person.—Exton, thy fierce hand / Hath with the king's blood staid the king's own land. / Mount, mount, my soul! thy seat is up on high; / Whilst my gross flesh sinks downward, here to die, / [Dies. / Exton. As full of valour, as of royal blood; / Beth have I spelt; O, would the deed were good! / For now the devil, that told me—I did well, / Says, that this deed is chronicled in hell. / This dead king to the living king I'll bear; — / Take hence the rest, and give them burial here. [Exeunt.

SCENE VI.—Windsor. A Room in the Castle. / Flourish. Enter BOLINGBROKE and YORK, with / Lords and Attendants. / Boling. Kind uncle York, the latest news we hear / Is—that the rebels have consum'd with fire / Our town of Cicester in Glosister; / But whether they be ta'en, or slain, we hear not. / [Enter NORTHUMBERLAND. / Welcome, my lord! What is the news? / North. First, to thy sacred state wish I all happiness; / The next news is,—I have to London sent / The heads of Salisbury, Spencer, Blunt, and Kent / The manner of their taking may appear / At large discoursed in this paper here. / [Presenting a paper. / Boling. We thank thee, gentle Percy, for thy pains; / And to thy worthy will add right worthy gains. / Enter FITZWATER. / Fitz. My Lord, I have from Oxford sent to London / The heads of Brocas, and sir Bennet Scely; / Two of the dangerous consorted traitors, / That sought at Oxford thy由于 overthrow. / Boling. Thy pains, Fitzwater, shall not be forgot; / Right noble is thy merit, well I wet. / Enter PERCY, with the Bishop of CARLISLE. / Percy. The grand conspirator, abbot of Westminster, / With clog of conscience, and sour melancholy, / Hath yielded up his body to the grave; / But here is Carlisle living, to abide / Thy kindest doom, and sentence of his pride. / Boling. Carlisle, this is your doom: — / Choose out some secret place, some reverend room, / More than thou hast, and with it joy thy life; / So, as thou liv'st in peace, die free from strife: / For though mine enemy thou hast ever been, / High sparks of honour in thee have I seen. / Enter Exton, with Attendants bearing a coffin. / Exton. Great king, within this coffin I present / Thy buried fear; herein all breathless lies / The mightiest of thy greatest enemies, / Richard of Bourdeaux, by me lither brought. / Boling. Exton, I thank thee not; for thou hast / A deed of slander, with thy fatal haud, / Wrought Upon my head, and all this famous land. / [Die. / Exton. From your own mouth, my lord, did I this / Boling. They love not poison that do poison need, / Nor do I thee; though I did wish him dead, / I hate the murderer, love him murdered. / The guilt of conscience take thou for thy labour, / But neither my good word, nor princey favour: / With Cain go wander through the shade of night, / And never shew thy head by day nor light. / Lords, I protest, my soul is full of woe, / That blood should sprinkle me, to make me grow. / Come, mourn with me for what I do lament, / And put on sullen black, inconstant; / I'll make a voyage to the Holy land, / To wash this blood off from my guilty hand: — / March sadly after; grace my mournings here, / In weeping after this untimely bier. / [Exeunt. / *}

* This play is extracted from the "Chronicle of Holinshed," in which many passages may be found which Shakespeare has, with very little alteration, transplanted into his scenes; particularly in a speech of the bishop of Carlisle, in detence of King Richard's intolerable right, and immunity from human production. Johnson, who, in his "Caroline and Scauran," has inserted many speeches from the Roman historians, was perhaps indebted to that practice by the example of Shakespeare, who had consecrated some time to copy more trouble writers. But Shakespeare had more of his own than Johnson; and, if he sometimes was willing to spare his labour, shewed, by what he performed at other times, that his extracts were made by choice or idleness rather than necessity. This play is one of those which Shakespeare has apparently revisited; but as success in works of invention is not always proportioned to labour, it is not surprising that, with the happy force of some of his tragedies, nor can be said much to affect the passions or enlarge the understanding.—JohNSON. The notion that Shakespeare revised this play, though it has long prevailed, appears to me extremely doubtful; or, to speak more plainly, I do not believe it.—NAIoner.
FIRST PART OF
KING HENRY IV.

This exquisite play was entered at Stationers’ Hall, Feb. 25, 1597; and was printed in quarto the following year. The transactions contained in it are comprised within the period of about ten months. The action commences with the news brought of Hotspur having defeated the Scots under Archibald earl of Douglas, at Holmedon (or Holincote-hall), which battle was fought on Holy-day (the 1th of September), 1402; and it closes with the defeat and death of Hotspur at Shrewsbury; which engagement happened on Saturday the 21st of July (the eve of saint Mary Magdalen, in the year 1403.

"Shakespeare has," says Dr. Johnson, "apparently designed a regular connexion of these dramatic histories, from Richard the Second, to Henry the Fifth. King Henry, at the end of Richard the Second, declares his purpose to visit the Holy Land, which he resumes in the first speech of this play. The complaint made by King Henry in the last act of Richard the Second, of the wildness of his son, prepares the reader for the broils which are here to be recounted, and the characters which are now to be exhibited."

ACT I.

Enter King Henry, Westmoreland, Sir Walter Blunt, and others.

K. Hen. So shaken as we are, so wan with care, Find we a time for trifled peace to pant, And breathe short-winded accents of new broils To be commende’d in sounds afar remote.
No more the thirsty entrance of this soil Shall daub their lips with her own children’s blood; No more shall trenching war channel her fields, Nor bruise her flowers with the armed hoofs Of hostile pace: those opposed eyes. Which,—like the meteors of a troubled heaven, All of one nature, of one substance bred,— Did lately meet in the intestine shock And furious close of civil butchery. Shall now, in mutual well—beseeching ranks, March all one way; and be no more oppos’d Against acquaintance, kindred, and allies: The edge of war, like an ill—sheathed knife, No more shall cut his master. Therefore, friends,

As far as to the sepulchre of Christ,
(Whose soldier now, under whose blessed cross We are impressed and engag’d to fight,) Forthwith a power of English shall we levy; Whose arms were moulded in their mothers’ womb To chase these pagans, in those holy fields, Over whose acres walk’d those blessed feet, Which, fourteen hundred years ago, were mail’d For our advantage, on the bitter cross. But this our purpose is a twelvemonth old, And boastless ’tis to tell you,—we will go; Therefore we meet not now:—Then let me hear Of you, my gentle cousin Westmoreland, What yesternight our council did decree, In forwarding this dear expedition. West. My liege, this haste was hot in question, And many limits of the charge set down But yesternight: when, all athwart, there came A squad of Angles, with heavy news; Whose worst was,—that the noble Mortimer, Leading the men of Herefordshire to fight Against the irregular and wild Glendower, Was by the rude hands of that Welshman taken, And a thousand of his people butchered: Upon those dead corpse there was such misuse, As brings un—happy and shameless transformation. By those Welshmen done, as may not be, Without much shame, re—told or spoken of. K. Hen. It seems then, that the tidings of this broil Brake off our business for the Holy land. West. This, match’d with other, did, my gracious For more uneven and unwelcome news [lord; Came from the north, and thus it did import. On Holy—day old, the gallant Hotspur there, Young Harry Percy, and brave Archibald, That ever—valiant and approved Scot, At Holmedon met, Where they did spend a sad and bloody hour; As by discharge of their artillery, And shape of likelihood, the news was told; For he that brought them, in the very heat, And pride of their contention did take horse, Uncertain of the issue any way. K. Hen. Here is a dear and true—industrious friend, Sir Walter Blunt, new lighted from his horse, Steadil with the variation of each soil Betwixt that Holmedon and this seat of ours: And he hath brought us smooth and welcome news, The earl of Douglas is discomfited; Ten thousand bold Scots, two— and twenty knights, Balk’d in their own blood, did sir Walter see On Holmedon’s plains: Of prisoners, Hotspur took Mordake the earl of Fife, and eldest son To beaten Douglas; and the earls of Athol, Of Murray, Angus, and Menteith.
And is not this an honourable spoil? A gallant prize! ha, cousin, is it not? West. In faith, it is a conquest for a prince to boast of. K. Hen. Yes, there thou mak'st me sad, and mak'st me envy that my lord Northumberland [me see] should be the father of so blest a son: A son, who is the theme of honour's tongue; Amongst a grove, the very straightest plant; Who is sweet fortune's minion, and her pride: Whilst I, by looking on the praise of him, See not and dishonour stain the brow Of my young Harry. O, that it could be prov'd, That some night-tripping fairy had exchang'd That cradle-clothes our children where they lay, And call'd mine—Percy, his—Plantagenet! Then would I have his Harry, and he mine. But let him from my thoughts:—What think you, coz', Of this young Percy's pride? the prisoners, Which he in this adventure hath surpris'd, To his own use he keeps; and sends me word, I shall have none but Mordake earl of Eife. West. This is his uncle's teaching, this is Worcester, Malevolent to you in all aspects! Which makes him husky, and bristles up The crest of youth against your dignity. K. Hen. But I have sent for him to answer this: And, for this cause, a while we must neglect Our holy purpose to Jerusalem. Cousin, on Wednesday next our council we Will hold at Windsor, so inform the lords: Do not reserve yourself with speech to gain; For more is to be said, and to be done, Than out of anger can be uttered. West. I will, my liege. [Exeunt.]

SCENE II.—The same. Another Room in the Palace. Enter Henry, Prince of Wales, and Falstaff.

Fal. Now, Hal, what time of day is it, lad? P. Hen. Thou art so fat witted, with drinking of old sack, and unbuttoning thee after supper, and sleeping upon benches after noon, that thou hast forgotten to demand that truly which thou wert truly to know. What a devil hast thou to do with the time? Being a young lad, and with speed to us, days of sack, and minutes capons, and clocks the tongues of bawds, and dials the signs of leaping houses, and the blessed sun himself a fair hot witch in flame colour'd taffeta: I see no reason, why thou shouldest be so superfluous to demand the time of the day.

Fal. Indeed, you come near me, now, Hal: for we, that take purses, go by the moon and seven stars; and not by Phoebus,—be, that wandering knight so fair. And, I pray thee, sweet wag, when thou art king,—as, God save thy grace, (majesty, I should say; for grace thou wilt have none,)—

P. Hen. What! none? Fal. No, by my troth; not so much as will serve to be prologue to an egg and butter. P. Hen. Well, how then? come, roundly, roundly. Fal. Marry, then, sweet wag, when thou art king, let not us, that are squires of the night's body, be called thieves of the day's beauty; let us be—Diana's foresters, gentlemen of the shade, minions of the moon: And let men say, we be men of good government; being governed as the sea is, by our noble and chaste mistress the moon, under whose countenance we—steal.

P. Hen. Thou say'st well; and it holds well too: for the fortune of us, that are the moon's men, doth ebb and flow like the sea; being governed as the sea is, by the moon. As, for proof, now: A purse of gold most resolutely snatched on Monday night, and most dissolutely spent on Tuesday morning; got with swearing—lay by; and spent with cryings and springing in: now, in as low an ebb as the foot of the ladder: and, by and by, in as high a flow as the ridge of the gallows.

Fal. By the lord, thou say'st true, lad. And is not my hostess of the tavern a most sweet wench? P. Hen. As the honesty of Hybla, my old lady of the castle. Fal. As, for instance, is not a buff jerkin a most sweet robe of durability? P. Hen. How now, how now, mad wag? what, in thy quirps, and thy quiddities? what a plague have I to do with a buff jerkin? P. Hen. Why, what a pox have I to do with my hostess of the tavern? Fal. Well, thou hast called her to a reckoning many a time and oft

P. Hen. Did I ever call for thee to pay thy part? Fal. No; I'll give thee thy due, thou hast paid all there.

P. Hen. Yea, and elsewhere, so far as my coin would stretch; and, where it would not, I have used my credit to procure it. Fal. Yea, and so used it, that were it not here apparent that thou art heir apparent,—But, I pr'ythee, sweet wag, shall there be gallows standing in England when thou art king? and resolution thus lobbed as it is, with the rusty eurl of old father antient the law! Do not thou, when thou art king, hang a thief.

P. Hen. I will, by the Lord. Fal. Shall I? O rare! by the Lord, I'll be a brave P. Hen. Thou judgest false already; I mean, thou shalt have the hanging of the thieves, and so become a rare hangman.

Fal. Well, Hal, well; and in some sort it jumps with my humour, as well as waiting in the court, I can tell you.

P. Hen. For obtaining of suits? Fal. Yea, for obtaining of suits: whereof the hangman hath no lean wardrobe. 'Sblood I am as melancholy as a gib cat, or a hagg'd bear.

P. Hen. Or an old lion; or a lover's lute.

Fal. Yea, or the drone of a Lincolnshire bagpipe.

P. Hen. What? dost thou say'st thou to a hare, or the melancholy of Moor-ditch?

Fal. Thou hast the most unsavoury similes; and art, indeed, the most comparative, rascalliest, sweet young prince. But, Hal, I pr'ythee, trouble me no more with vanity. I would to God, thou and I knew where a commodity of good names were to be bought: An old lord of the council rated me the other day in the street about you, sir; but I marked him not: and yet he talked very wisely; but I regarded him not: and yet he talked wisely, and in the street too.

P. Hen. Thou didst well; for wisdom cries out in the streets, and no man regards it.

Fal. O, thou hast damnable iteration and art, indeed, able to corrupt a saint. Thou hast done much harm upon me, Hal.—God forgive thee for it! Before I knew thee, hal, I knew nothing; and now am I, if a man should speak truly, little better than one of the wicked. I must give over this life, and I will give it over; by the Lord, and I do not, I am a villain; I'll be damned for never a king's son in Christendom.

P. Hen. Where shall we take a purse to-morrow, Jack?

Fal. Where thou wilt, lad, I'll make one; and I do not, call me villain, and haif thee.

P. Hen. I see a good amendment of life in thee; from praying, to purse-taking.
Enter Poins, at a distance.

Fal. Why, Hal, 'tis my vocation, Hal; 'tis no sin for a man to labour in his vocation. Poins!—Now shall we know if Godshill have set a match. O, if men were to be saved by merit, what hole in hell were hot enough for him? This is the most omnipotent villain that ever cried, Stand, to a true man.

P. Hen. Good-morrow, Ned.

Poins. Good morrow, sweet Hal.—What says mon- sieur Remorse! What says sir John Sack-and-Sugar?

Jack, how agrees the devil and thee about thy soul, that thou soldest him an old Friday last, for a cup of Madeira, and a cold capon's leg?

P. Hen. Sir John stands to his word, the devil shall have his bargain; for he was never yet a breaker of proverbs, he will give the devil his due.

Poins. Then art thou damned for keeping thy word with the devil.

P. Hen. Else he had been damned for coveting the devil's cap.

Poins. But, my lads, my lads, to-morrow mor- ning, by four o'clock, early at Godshill: There are pilgrims going to Canterbury with rich offerings, and traders riding to London with fat purses: I have visors for you all, you have horses for yourselves: Godshill lies to-night in Tocester: I have bespoke supper to-morrow night in Eastcheap; we may do it as secure as sleep: If you will go, I will stuff your purses full of crowns; if you will not, tarry at home, and be hanged.

Fal. Hears me, Yedward; if I tarry at home and go not, I'll hang you for going.

Poins. You will, chops?

Fal. Hal, wilt thou make one?

Fal. There's neither honesty, manhood, nor good fellowship in thee, nor thou canst not of the blood royal, if thou darest not stand for ten shilling.

P. Hen. Well, then, once to my days I'll be a mad cap.

Fal. Why, that's well said.

P. Hen. Well, come what will, I'll tarry at home.

Fal. By the Lord, I'll be a traitor then, when thou art king.

P. Hen. I care not.

Poins. Sir John, I pr'ythee, leave the prince and me alone; I will lay him down such reasons for this adventure, that he shall go.

Fal. Well, may'st thou have the spirit of persuasion, and be the ears of profiling, that what thou speakest may move, and what he hears may be believed, that the true prince may (for recreation sake) prove a false thief; for the poor abuses of the time want countenance. Farewell: you shall find me in Eastcheap.

P. Hen. Farewell, thou latter spring! Farewell All-hallow summer! [Exit Falstaff.]

Poins. Now, my good sweet honey lord, ride with us to-morrow; I have a jest to execute, that I cannot manage alone. Falstaff, Bardolph, Peto, and Godshill, shall rob those men that we have already way-laid; yourself, and I, will not be there: and when they have the booty, if you and I do not rob them, cut this head from my shoulders.

P. Hen. But how shall we part with them in setting forth?

Poins. Why, we will set forth before or after them, and appoint them a place of meeting, wherein it is at our pleasure to fall: and then will they adventure upon the exploit themselves: which they shall have no sooner achieved, but we'll set upon them.

P. Hen. Ay, but 'tis like, that they will know us, by our horses, by our habits, and by every other ap- pointment, to be ourselves.

Poins. Tut! our horses they shall not see, I'll tie them in the wood; our visors we will change, after we leave them; and, sirrah, I have cases of buckram for a monce, to imark our noted outward garments.

P. Hen. But, I doubt, they will be too hard for us.

Poins. Well, for two of them, I know them to be as true-bred cowards as ever turned back; and for the third, if he fight longer than he sees reason, I'll forswear arms. The virtue of this jest will be, the incomprehensible lies that this same fat rogue will tell us, when we meet at supper; how thirty, at least, he fought with; what words, what blows, what ex- tremities he endured; and, in the reproof of this, lies the jest.

P. Hen. Well, I'll go with thee; provide us all things necessary, and meet me to-morrow night in Eastcheap, there I'll sup. Farewell.

Poins. Farewell, my lord. [Exit Poins.] P. Hen. I know you all, and will abide uphold

The un yok'd humour of your idleness;
Yet herein will I imitate the sun;
Who doth permit the base contagious clouds
To smother up his beauty from the world,
That when he please again to be himself,
Being wanted, he may be more wonder'd at,
By breaking through the foul and ugly mists
Of vapours, that did seem to strangle him.
If all the year were playing holidays,
To sport would be as tedious as to work;
But, when they seldom come, they wish'd-for come,
And nothing pleaseth but rare accidents,
So, when this loose behaviour I throw off,
And pay the debt I ever promised,
By much better than my word I am,
By so much shall I falsify men's hopes;
And, like bright metal on a sullen ground,
My reformation, glittering o'er my fault,
Shall shew more goodly, and attract more eyes,
Than that which hath no foil to set it off.
I'll so offend, to make offence a skill;
Redeeming time, when men think least I will. [Exit.]
North. Nay, my good lord.
Those prisoners in your highness' name demanded,
Which Harry Percy here at Holmedon took.
Were, as he says, not with such strength denied,
As is deliver'd to your majesty:
Neither envy, therefore, or suspicion
Is guilty of this fault, and not my son.
Hot. My liege, I did deny no prisoners.
But, I remember, when the fight was done,
When I was dry with rage, and extreme toil,
Breathless and faint, leaning upon my sword,
Came there a certain lord, neat, trimly dress'd,
Fresh as a bridegroom; and his chin, new reap'd,
Shew'd like a stubble-land at harvest-home;
He was perfumed like a milliner;
And 'twixt his finger and his thumb he held
A pounce box, which ever and anon
He gave his nose, and took 'tway again;—
Who, therewith angry, when it next came there.
Took it in snuff;—and still he smil'd and talk'd.
And, as the soldiers bore dead bodies by,
He call'd them—untangled knives, una monerly,
To bring a soberly unhandsome corse
Betwixt the wind and his nobility.
With many holiday and lady-like nonsense
He question'd me; among the rest, demanded
Many prisoners, in your majesty's behalf.
I then, all smarting with my wounds being cold,
To be so pestered with a popinjay,
Out of my grief and my impatience,
Answer'd neglectingly, I know not what;
He should, or he should not— for he made me mad,
To see him shine so brisk, and smell so sweet;
And talk so like a waiting-gentlewoman,
Of guns, and drums, and wounds, (God save the mark!)
And telling me, the sovereign thing on earth
Was parcelliz'd, for an inward bruise;
And that it was great pity, so it was,
That villainous salt-peetre should be digg'd
Out of the bowels of the harmless earth,
Which many a good fellow had destroy'd
So cowardly; and, but for these vile guus,
He would himself have been a soldier.
This bald unjointed chat of his, my lord,
I answer'd indirectly, as I said;
And, I beseech you, have my report
Correct for the infinite accusation,
Betwixt my love and your high majesty.
Blunt. The circumstance consider'd, good my lord,
Whatever Harry Percy then had said,
To such a person, and in such a place,
At such a time, with all the rest re-told,
May reasonably die, and never rise
To do him wrong, or any way impeach
What then he said, so he unsay it now.
K. Hen. Why, yet he doth deny his prisoners;
But with proviso, and exception,—
That we, at our own charge, shall ransom straight
His brother-in-law, the foolish Mortimer;
Who, on my soul, hath willfully betray'd
The lives of those that he did lead to fight Against the great magician, damn'd Glendower;
Whose daughter, as we hear, the earl of March
Hath lately married. Shall our coffers then
Be emptied, to redeem a traitor home?
Shall we buy treason! and indulgence, fears,
When they have lost and forfetted themselves?
No, on the barren mountains let him starve;
For I shall never hold that man my friend,
Whose tongue shall ask me for one penny cost
To ransom home revolted Mortimer.
Hot. Revolted Mortimer!
He never did fall off, my sovereign liege,
But by the chance of war;—To prove that true,
Needs no more but one tongue for all those wounds,
Those mouthed wounds, which valiantly he took,
When on the gentle Severn's sedgy bank,
In single opposition, hand to hand,
He did confound the best part of an hour
In changing hardiment with great Glendower:
Three times they breath'd, and three times did they Upon agreement, of swift Severn's flood; [drink,
Who then, affrighted with their bloody looks,
Ran fearfully among the trembling reeds,
And hid his crisp head in the hollow bank
Blood-stained with these valiant combatants.
Never did bare and rotten policy
Colour her working with such deadly wounds;
Nor never could the noble Mortimer
Receive so many, and all willingly;
Then let him not be slander'd with revolt.
K. Hen. Thou dost believe, Percy, thou dost believe
He never did encounter with Glendower; [him,
I tell thee,
He durst as well have met the devil alone,
As Owen Glendower for an enemy.
Art not ashamed? But, sirrah, henceforth
Let me not hear you speak of Mortimer,
Send me your presents with the speediest means,
Or you shall hear in such a kind from me
As will displease you.—My lord Northumberland,
We licence your departure with your son:—
Send us your prisoners, or you'll hear of it.
[Exeunt King Henry, Blunt, and Train.
Hot. And if the devil come again near for them,
I will not send them;—I will still after straight,
And tell him so;—for I will ease my heart,
Although it be with hazard of my head.
North. What, drunk with choleric? stay, and pause
Here comes your uncle.
[Aside;
Re-enter Worcester.
Hot. Speak of Mortimer?
Zonnds, I will speak of him; and let my soul
Want mercy, if I do not join with him:
Yea, on his part, I'll empty all these veins,
And shed my blood drop by drop 't the dust,
But I will lift the down-trod Mortimer
As high 't the air as this unthankful king,
As this ingrate and cankered Mortimer.
North. Brother, the king hath made your nephew MAD.
[Worcester.
War. Who struck this heat up, after I was gone?
Hot. He will, forsooth, have all my prisoners;
And when I urg'd the ransom once again
Of my wife's brother, then his cheek look'd pale;
And on my face he turn'd an eye of death,
Trembling even till he name of Mortimer.
War. I cannot blame him: Was he not proclaim'd,
By Richard that dead is, the next of blood?
North. He was; I heard the proclamation;
And then it was, when the unhappy king
(Whose wrongs in us God pardon!) did set forth
Upon his Irish expedition;
From whence he, intercepted, did return
To be depos'd, and, shortly, murdered.

[Food.
War. And for whose death, we in the world's wide
Live scandaliz'd, and foully spoken of.
Hot. But, soft, I pray you; Did king Richard then Proclaim my brother Edmund Mortimer
Heir to the crown?
North. He did; myself did hear it.
Hot. Nay, then I cannot blame his cousin king,
That wish'd him on the barren mountains star'd.
But shall it be, that you,—that set the crown Upon the head of this forgetful man; And, for his sake, wear the detested blot Of wondrous subornation,—shall it be, That you a world of curses undergro Be the agents, or base second means, The cords, the ladder, or the hangman rather?— O, pardon me, that I descend so low, To shew the line, and the predication, Wherein you range under this subtle king— Shall it, for shame, be spoken in these days, Or shall I chronicle in time to come, That men of your nobility and power, Did 'gage them both in an unjust behalf,— As both of you, God pardon it! have done, To put down Richard, that sweet lovely rose, And plant this thorn, this canker, Bolingbroke? And shall it, in more shame, be further spoken, That you are fool'd, discarded, and shook off By fairer hands, for whom these shameful ends? No; yet time serves, wherein you may redeem Your banish'd honours, and restore yourselves Into the good thoughts of the world again: Revenge the jeering, and disdain'd contempt, Of this proud king; who studies, day and night, To answer all the debt he owes to you, Even with the bloody payment of your deaths, Therefore, I say,—

War. Peace, cousin, say no more; And now I will unclasp a secret look, And to your quick-conceiving discontents I'll read you matter deep and dangerous; As full of peril, and adventurous spirit, As to o'er-walk a current, roaring loud, Or to unfairest footing of a spear. Hot. If he fall in, good night;—or sink or swim; Send danger from the east unto the west, So honour cross it from the north to south, And let them grapple;—O! the blood more stirs, To rouse a lion, than to start a hare. North. Imagination of some great exploit Drives him beyond the bounds of patience. Hot. By heaven, methinks, it were an easy leap, To pluck bright honour from the pale-fac'd moon; Or dive into the bottom of the deep, Where fathom-line could never touch the ground, And pluck up drowned honour by the locks; So he, that doth redeem her thence, might wear, Without corrival, all her dignities, But out upon this half-fac'd fellowship! War. He apprehends a world of figures here, But not the form of what he should attend— Good cousin, give me audience for a while. Hot. I cry you mercy. War. Those same noble Scots, That are your prisoners,— Hot. I'll keep them all; By heaven, he shall not have a Scot of them: No, if a Scot would save his soul, he shall not: I'll keep them, by this hand. War. You start away, And lend no ear unto my purposes.— Those prisoners you shall keep That I have brought up, whil's I will; that's flat:— He said, he would not ransom Mortimer; Forbade my tongue to speak of Mortimer; But I will find him when he lies asleep, And in his car I'll holla—Mortimer! Nay, I'll have a starving shall be taught to speak Nothing but Mortimer, and give it him, To keep his anger still in motion.

War. Hear you,

Consin; a word.

Hot. All studies here I solemnly defy, Save how to gall and pinch this Bolingbroke And that same sword and buckler prince of Wales, But that I think his father loves him not, And would be glad he met with some mischance, I'd have him poison'd with a pot of ale. War. Farewell, kinsman! I will talk to you, When you are better temper'd to attend. North. Why, what a wisp-stung and impatient fool Art thou, to break into this man's mood? Tying thine ear to no tongue but thine own? Hot. Why, look you, I am whipp'd and scour'd with rods, Nettled, and stung with pismires, when I hear Of this vile politician, Bolingbroke. In Richard's time,—What do you call the place?— A plague upon it!—it is in Gloucestershire;— There was the mad-cap duke his uncle kept; His uncle York—where I first bow'd my knee Unto this king of smiles, this Bolingbroke, When you and he came back from Ravenspur. North. At Berkley castle. Hot. You say true:— Why, what a candy deed of courtesy That young greyhound then did proffer me! Look,—when his infant fortune came to age, And, gentle Harry Percy,—and, kind cousin,— O, the devil take such concerters!—God forgive me— Good uncle, tell your tale, for I have done. War. Nay, if you have not, to 't again; We'll stay your leisure. Hot. I have done, I faith. War. Then once more to your Scottish prisoners Deliver them up without their ransome straight, And make the Douglas' son your only mean For powers in Scotland; which,—for divers reasons, Which I shall send you written,—be assur'd, Will easily be granted. You, my lord,—

To Northumberland. Your son in Scotland being thus employ'd, Shall secretly into the bosom creep Of that same noble prelate, well belov'd, The archbishop. Hot. Of York, is 't not? War. True; who bears hard His brother's death at Bristol, the lord Scroop. I shall not this in estimation As what I think might be, but what I know Is ruminated, plotted, and set down; And only stays but to behold the face Of that occasion that shall bring it on. Hot. I smell it; upon my life, it will do well. North. Before the game's a foot, then still let it slip, Hot. Why, it cannot choose but be a noble plot;— And then the power of Scotland, and of York,— To join with Mortimer, ha? War. And so they shall. Hot. In faith, it is exceedingly well aim'd. War. And 'tis no little reason bids us speed, To save our heads by raising of a head: For, bear ourselves as even as we can, The king will always think him in our debt; And think we ourselves unsatisfied, Till he hath found a time to pay us home. And see already, how he doth begin To make us strangers to his looks of love. Hot. He does, he does; we'll be reveng'd on him. War. Cousin, farewell,—No further go in this. Than I by letters shall direct your course. When time is ripe, (which will be suddenly- )
I'll steal to Clarendon, and Lord Mortimer; Where you and Douglas, and our powers at once, (As I will fashion it,) shall happily meet, To bear our fortunes in our own strong arms, Which now we hold with much uncertainty. [trust. North. Farwell, good brother: we shall thrive, 1 Hot. Uncle, adieu.—O, let the hours be short, Till fields, and blows, and groans applaud our sport! [Exit.]

ACT II.

SCENE I.—Rochester. An In Yard. Enter a Carrier, with a lantern in his hand. 1 Car. Heigh ho! An't be not four by the day, I'll be hanged: Charles' wam is over the new chimney, and yet our horse not packed. What, ostler! Out. [Within.] Anon, anon. 1 Car. I pr'ythee, Tom, best Cut's saddle, put a few focks in the point; the poor jade is wrong in the withers out of all cress.

Enter another Carrier. 2 Car. Peace and beans are as dund hore as a dog, and that is the next way to give poor jades the bogs: this house is turned upside down, since Robin ostler died. 1 Car. Poor fellow! never joyed since the price of oats rose; it was the death of him. 2 Car. I think, this be the most villainous house in all London road for fess: I am stung like a teac'h. 1 Car. Like a teac'h? by the mass, there is never a king in Christendom could be better bit than I have been since the first cock. 2 Car. Why, they will allow us n'er a jordan, and then we leak in your chimney; and your chamber-lie breeds fess like a loach. 1 Car. What, ostler! come away, and be hanged, come away.

2 Car. I have a garmmon of bacon, and two rases of ginger, to be deliver'd as far as Charing-cross. 1 Car. Odsbody! the turkies in my pannier are quite starved. —What, ostler! —A plague on thee! hast thou never an eye in thy head! canst not bear! An'twere not as good a deed as drink, to break the pate of thee, I am a very villain. —Come, and be hanged:—Hast no faith in thee?

Enter Gaswell. Gasw. Good morrow, carriers. What's o'clock? 1 Car. I think it be two o'clock. Gasw. I pr'ythee, lend me thy lantern, to see my gelding in the stable.

1 Car. Nay, soft, I pray ye; I know a trick worth two of that, I faith. Gasw. I pr'ythee, lend me thine. 2 Car. Ay, when? cannot tell? —Lend me thy lantern, quoth a!—marry, I'll see thee hanged first. Gasw. SIRRah carrier, what time do you mean to come to London? 2 Car. Time enough to go to bed with a candle, I warrant thee. —Come, neighbour Mugs, we'll call up the gentlemen; they will along with company, for they have great charge. [Exit Carewriers. Gasw. What, ho! chamberlain! Cham. [Within.] At hand, quoth pick-purse. Gasw. That's even as fair as—at hand, quoth the chamberlain: for thou variest no more from picking of purses, than giving direction doth from labouring; thou lay'st the plot how.
the rascal have not given me medijcines to make me love him, I'll be hanged; it could not be else, I have drunk medicines. — Poins! — Hal! — a plague upon you both! If I be taken, I'll strive, ere I'll rob not further. An 'twere not as good a deed as drink, to turn true man, and leave these rogues, I am the veriest varlet that ever chewed with a tooth. Eight yards of uneven ground, is threescore and ten miles afoot with me: and the stony-hearted villains will know it well enough: A plague upon't, when thieves cannot be true to one another! [They whistle.] Whoa! — A plague upon you all! Give me my horse, you rogues; give me my horse, and be hanged.

P. Hen. Peace, ye fat-guts! lie down; lay thine car close to the ground, and list if thou canst hear the tread of travellers.

Fal. Have you any levers to lift me up again, being down? 'Sblood, I'll not bear mine own flesh so far afoot again, for all the coin in thy father's exchanger. What a plague mean ye to colt me thus?

P. Hen. Thouliest, thou art not colted, thou art uncouled.

Fal. I 'pryethee, good prince Hal, help me to my horse, good king's son.

P. Hen. Out, you rogue! shall I be your usher?

Fal. Go, hang thyself in the town by-the-apparent garret; if I be taken, I'll fetch for this. An I have but baldcuts made on you all, and sung to filthy tunes, a cup of sack be my poison: When a jest is so forward, and afoot too,—I hate it.

Enter Gascoigne.

Gads. Stand.

Fal. So I do, against my will.

Poins. O, 'tis our settler: I know his voice.

Enter Bardolph.

Bard. What news?

Gads. Case ye, case ye: on with your visors; there's money of the king's coming down the hill; 'tis going to the king's exchequer.

Fal. You lie, you rogue; 'tis going to the king's tavern.

Gads. There's enough to make us all.

Fal. To be hanged.

P. Hen. Sirs, you four shall front them in the narrow lane; Ned Poins and I will walk lower: if they 'scape from your encounter, then they light on us.

Fal. How many be there of them?

Gads. Some eight, or ten.

Zounds. Would they not rob us?

P. Hen. What, a coward, sir John Paunch?

Fal. Indeed, I am not John of Gaunt, your grandfather: but yet no coward, Hal.

P. Hen. Well, we leave that to the proof.

Point. Sirrah Jack, thy horse stands behind the hedge; when thou need'st him, thou shalt find him. Farewell, and stand fast.

Fal. Now cannot I strike him, if I should be hanged.

P. Hen. Ned, where are our disguises?

Poins. Here, hard by; stand close.

[Exeunt P. Henry and Poins.

Fal. Now, my masters, this happy man be his dole, say I; every man to his business.

Enter Travellers.

1 Trav. Come, neighbour; the boy shall lead our horses down the hill: we'll walk afoot awhile, and ease our legs.

Thieves. Stand.

Trav. Jesus bless us!

Trav. Strike; down with them; cut the villains' throats: Ah! whose an caterpillars! bacon-fed knaves! they hate us youth: down with them; loose them.

1 True. O, we are undone, both we and ours, for ever.

Fal. Hang ye, gorbelhiss knaves: Are ye undone? No, ye fat chaffs; I would your store were here! Out, you are grand-jurors are ye? We'll jure ye, t'faith.

[Exeunt Fal. &c. driving the Travellers out.

Re-enter Prince Henry and Poins.

P. Hen. The thieves have bound the true men. Now could thou and I rob the thieves, and go merrily to London, it would be argument for a week, laughter for a month, and a good jest for ever.

Poins. Stand close, I hear them coming.

Re-enter Thieves.

Fal. Come, my masters, let us share, and then to horse before day. An the prince and Poins be not two arrant cowards, there's no equity stirring: there's no more valour in that Poins, than in a wild duck.

P. Hen. Your money.

Poins. Villains.

[As they are sharing, the Prince and Poins set upon them. Falstaff, after a blow or two, and the rest, run away, leaving their booty behind them.

P. Hen. Got with much ease. Now merrily to horse: The thieves are scatter'd, and possess'd with fear. So strongly, that they dare not meet each other; Each takes his fellow for an officer. Away, good Ned. Falstaff sweats to death, and lards the lean earth as he walks along; Wer't not for laughing, I should pity him.

Poins. How the rogue rear'd!

[Exeunt.

SCENE III.—Warkworth. A Room in the Castle.

Enter Horsen, reading a letter.

—but, for mine own part, my lord, I could be well contented to be there, in respect of the love I bear your house—He could be contented,—Why is he not then? In respect of the love he bears our house—he shows in this, he loves his own barn better than he loves our house. Let me see some more. The purpose you undertake, is dangerous;—Why, that's certain, 'tis dangerous to take a cold, to sleep, to drink: but I tell you, my lord, out of this nettle, danger, we pluck this flower, safety. The purpose you undertake, is dangerous; the friends you have hanged; the truth; your blood, and your whole plot too light for the counterpoise of so great an opposition.—Say you so, say you so? I say unto you again, you are a shallow, cowardly hind, and you lie. What a lack-brain is this? By the Lord, our plot is a good plot as ever was laid; our friends true and constant: a good plot, good friends, and full of expectation; an excellent plot, very good friends. What a fat, fat rogue is this? Why, my lord of York commendeth the plot, and the general course of the action. Zounds, an I were now by this rascal, I could brain him with his lady's fan. Is there not my father, my uncle, and myself? lord Edmund Mortimer, my lord of York, and Owen Glendower! Is there not besides, the Douglases! Have I love, if their letters meet me in arms by the ninth of the next month? and are they not, some of them, set forward already? What a pagan rascal is this? an im- fidel! Hal! if you shall see now, in very sincerity of fear and cold heart, will he to the king, and lay open all our proceedings. O, I could divest myself, and go to buffets, for moving such a dish of skimmed milk with so honestable an action! Hang him! Let him tell the king: We are prepared; I will set for- ward to-night.
Enter Lady Percy.

How now, Kate! I must leave you within these two hours.

Lady. O, my good lord, why are you thus alone?

For what offence have I, this fortnight, been
A banish'd woman from my Harry's bed?
Tell me, sweet lord, what is't that takes from thee
Thy stomach, pleasure, and thy golden sleep?
Why dost thou bend thine eyes upon the earth;
And start so often when thou sitst alone?
Why hast thou lost the fresh blood in thy cheeks;
And given my treasures, and my rights of thee,
To thick-ey'd musings, and curs'd melancholy!
In thy faint slumbers, I by thee have watch'd,
And heard thee murmur tales of irn' wars:
Speak terms of manage to thy bounding steed;
Cry, Courage—to the field! And thou hast talk'd
Of sallies, and retirets; of treachces, tents,
Of palfiades, frontiers, parapets;
Of basliaks, of cannon, culverin;
Of prisoners' ransome, and of soldiers slain,
And all the 'currents of a heady fight.
Thy spirit within thee hath been so at war,
And thus hath so bestir'd thee in thy sleep.
That beads of sweat have stood upon thy brow,
Like bubbles in a late disturbed stream:
And in thy face strange motions have appear'd,
Such as we see when men restrain their breath
On some great sudden haste. O, what portents are Some harry business hath my lord in hand, [these
And I must know it, else he loves me not.

Hot. What, ho! is Gilliams with the packet gone?

Enter Servant.

Serv. He is my lord, an hour ago. [sighreif—
Hot. Hath Butler brought those horses from the Serv. One horse, my lord, he brought even now.
Hot. What horse? a roan, a crop-ear, is it not?
Serv. It is, my lord.

Hot. That roan shall be my throne.
Well, I will lack him straight: O esperance!—
Bid Butler lead him forth to the park. [Exit Servant.

Lady. But hear you, my lord.

Hot. What say'st, my lady?

Lady. What is it carries you away?

Hot. My horse.

Lady. Out, you mad-headed ape!
A weasle hath not such a deal of spleen,
As you are toss'd with. In faith, I'll know your business, Harry, that I will,
I fear, my brother Mortimer doth stir
About his title; and hath sent for you,
To line his enterprise: But if you go—

Hot. So far afoot, I shall be weary, love.

Lady. Come, come, you parasite, answer me
Directly to this question that I ask.
O faith, I'll break thy little finger, Harry,
An if thou wilt not tell me all things true.

Hot. Away, away, you tripper!—Love?—I love thee not,
I care not for thee, Kate: this is an world,
To play with mamants, and to tilt with lips;
We must have bloody noses, and crack'd crowns,
And pass them current too.—Gods me, my horse!—
What say'st thou, Kate! what would'st thou have with me?

Lady. Do you not love me? do you not, indeed?
Well, do not then; for, since you love me not,
I will not love myself. Do you not love me?
Nor tell me, if you speak in jest, or no.

Hot. Come, wilt thou see me ride?

And when I am a horse-back, I will swear
I love thee infinitely. But hark you, Kate;
I must not have you henceforth question me
Whither I go, nor reason whereabout:
Whither I must, I must; and, to conclude,
This evening must I leave you, gentle Kate.
I know you wise; but yet no further wise,
Than Harry Percy's wife: constant you are;
But yet a woman; and for secrecy,
No lady closer; for I well believe,
Thou wilt not utter what thou dost not know;
And so far will I trust thee, gentle Kate!

Lady. How! so far?

Hot. Not an inch further. But hark you, Kate;
Whither I go, thether shall you go too;
To day will I set forth, to-morrow you.—
Will this content you, Kate?

Lady. It must, of force. [Exit.

SCENE IV.

Eastcheap.—A Room in the Boar's Head Tavern.

Enter Prince Henry and Poins.

P. Hen. Ned, pr'ythee, come out of that fat room,
And lead me thy hand to laugh a little.

Poins. Where hast been, Hal?

P. Hen. With three or four loggerheads, amongst Three or four score hogsheads; I have sounded the very base string of humidity. Sirrah, I am sworn brother to a leash of drawers; and can call them all by their christian names, as—Tom, Dick, and Francis.
They take it already upon their salvation, that, though
I be but prince of Wales, yet I am the king of courtesy;
and tell me flatly I am no proud Jack, like Falstaff, or aCornishman, a lad of mettle, a good boy,—by the Lord, so they call me; and when I am king of England, I shall command all the good lads in Eastcheap. They call—drinking deep, dying scarlet; and when you breathe in your watering, they cry—hem! and bid you play it off.—To conclude, I am so good a proficient in one quarter of an hour, that I can drink with any tinker in his own language during my life. I tell thee, Ned, thou hast lost much honour, that thou wert not with me in this action.
But, sweet Ned,—to sweeten which name of Ned, I give thee this pennyworth of sugar, clapped even now into my hand by an under-skinker; one that never spake other English in his life, than—Eight shillings and sixpence; for I am free to tell thee: with this shrill addition,—Anon, anon, sir! Score a pint of bastard in the Half-moon, or so. But, Ned, to drive away the time till Falstaff come, I pr'ythee, do thou stand in some by-room, while I question my pumy drawer, to what end he gave me the sugar; and do thou never leave calling—Francis, that his tale to me may be nothing but—anon. Step aside, and I'll shew thee a precedent.

Poins. Francis! Francis!

P. Hen. Thou art perfect.

Poins. Francis! Francis! [Exit Poins.

Enter Francis.

Fran. Anon, anon, sir.—Look down into the pomegranate, Ralph.

P. Hen. Come hither, Francis.

Fran. My lord.

P. Hen. How long hast thou to serve, Francis?

Fran. Forsooth, five year, and as much as to—

PoiNs. [Within.] Francis!

Fran. Anon, anon, sir.

P. Hen. Five years! by 'tis bad, a long lease for the Enter Falstaff, Gardshield, Bardolph, and Peto.

Pinto. Welcome, Jack. Where hast thou been?

Fal. A plague of all cowards! I say, and a vengeance too! marry, and amen! — Give me a cup of sack, boy, — or I lead this life long, I'II sell nestheustocks, and mend them, and foot them too. A plague of all cowards! — Give me a cup of sack, rogue. — Is there no virtue extant?

[He drinks.]

Pinto. Didst thou never see Titus kiss a dish of butter? pitiful hearted Titus, that melted at the sweet tale of the son! if thou didst, then behold that comportment of thine.

Fal. You rogue, there is lime in this sack too: There is nothing but rougery to be found in villainous man: Yet a coward is worse than a cup of sack with lime in it: a villainous coward. — Go thy ways, old Jack; die when thou wilt, if mankind, good mankind, be not forgot upon the face of the earth, then am I a shotten herring. There live not three good men unhanged, and one of them is fat, and grows old: God help the while! a bad world, I say! I would I were a weaver; I could sing psalms or any thing: A plague of all cowards, I say still.

Pinto. How now, woodsack? what matter you?

Fal. A king's soul! If I do not beat thee out of thy kingdom with a dagger of faith, and drive all thy subordinates and thy whitecoat, and thy thimble of wild geese, I'll never wear hair on my face more. You Prince of Wales? Pinto. Why, you whorason round man! what's the matter?

Fal. Are you not a coward? answer me to that; and Pinto there?

Pinto. Zounds, ye fat panche, an ye call me coward, I'll strike thee down.

Fal. I call thee coward! I'll see thee damned ere I call thee coward: but I would give a thousand pound, I could run as fast as thou canst. You are straight enough in the shoulders, you care not who sees your back! Call you that, backing of your friends? A plague upon such backing! give me them that will face me. Give me a cup of sack: — I am a rogue, if I do not drink the cup.

Pinto. O villain! thy lips are scarce wiped since thou drank'st last.

Fal. All's one for that. A plague of all cowards, still say I.

[He drinks.]

Pinto. What's the matter?

Fal. What's the matter? there be four of us here have taken the brand pound this morning. Pinto. Where is it, Jack? where is it?

Fal. Where is it? taken from us it is: a hundred upon poor four us.

Pinto. What, a hundred, man?

Fal. I am a rogue, if I were not at half-sword with a dozen of them two hours together. I have 'scap'd by miracle. I am eight times thrust through the doublet; four, through the hose; my buckler cut through and through; my sword hacked like a hand-saw, esse omnium. I never dealt better since I was a man: all would not do. A plague of all cowards!

—Let them speak: if they speak more or less than truth, they are villains, and the sons of darkness.

Pinto. Speak, sir; how was it?

Gads. We four set upon some dozen.

Fal. Sixteen, at least, my lord.

Gads. And bound them.

Peto. No, no, they were not bound.

Fal. You rogue, they were bound, every man of them; or I am a Jew else, an Ebew Jew.

Gads. As we were sharing, some six or seven fresh men set upon us,
Mark now, how plain a tale shall put you down.—
Then did we two set on you four: and, with a word, out-faced you from your prize, and have it; yea, and can show it you here in the house;—and, Falstaff, you carried your guts away as nimble, with as quick dexterity, and roared for mercy, and still ran and roared, as ever I heard bull-call. What a slave art thou, to hack thy sword as thou hast done; and then say, it was in fight! What trick, what device, what starting-hole, canst thou now find out, to hide thee from this open and apparent shame!
Pains. Come, let's hear, Jack; What trick hast thou now now?
Fal. By the Lord, I knew ye, as well as he that made ye. Why, hear ye, my masters; Was it for me, to kill the heir apparent? Should I turn upon the true prince? Why, thou knowest, I am as valiant as Hercules; but beware instinct; the lion will not touch the true prince. Instinct is a great matter: I was a coward on instinct. I shall think the better of myself, and thee, during my life; I, for a valiant lion, and thou, for a true prince. But, by the Lord, lads, I am glad you have the money.—Hostess, clap to the doors; watch to-night, pray to-morrow.—Gallants, lads, boys, hearts of gold, all the titles of good fellowship come to you! What, shall we be merry? shall we have a play extempore?

P. Hen. Content;—and the argument shall be, thy running away.
Fal. Ah! no more of that, Hal, an thou lovest me.

Enter Hostess.

Host. My lord the prince,—

P. Hen. How now, my lady the hostess? what say'st thou to me?
Host. Marry, my lord, there is a boodleman of the court at door, would speak with you: he says, he comes from your father.

P. Hen. Give him as much as will make him a royal man, and send him back again to my mother.

Fal. What manner of man is he?

Host. An old man.

P. Hen. What doth gravity out of his bed at midnight?—Shall I give him his answer?
P. Hostess. Pr'ythee, do, Jack.

Fal. 'Faith, and I'll send him packing. [Exit P. Hen. Now, sirs; by'ld lady, you fought fair:—so did I, and I'll thank you, Bardolph; you are lions too, you ran away upon instinct, you will not touch the true prince; no,—fye!

Bard. 'Faith, I ran when I saw others run.
P. Hen. Tell me now in earnest, how came Falstaff's sword so hacked?
Peto. Why, he hacked it with his dagger; and said, he would swear truth out of England, but he would make you believe it was done in fight; and persuaded us to do the like.

Bard. Yea, and to tickle our noses with spear-grass, to make them bleed; and then to beslubber our garments with it, and to swear it was the blood of true men. I did that I did not this seven year before, I blasphemed to hear his monstrous devices.
P. Hen. O villain, thou stolest a cup of sack eighteen years ago, and wert taken with the manner, and ever since thou hast blush'd extempore: Thou hadst fire and sword on thy side, and yet thou ran'st away; What instinct hadst thou for it?

Bard. My lord, do you see these meteors? do you behold these exhalations?
P. Hen. I do.

Bard. What think you they portend?
P. Hen. Hot livers and cold purses.
KING HENRY IV.—PART I.

Bard. Choler, my lord, if rightly taken.

P. Hen. No, if rightly taken, halter.

Re-enter Falstaff.

Here comes lean Jack, here comes bare-bone. How now, my sweet creature of bombast? How long is't ago, Jack, since thou wast thine own knee?

Fal. My own knee! when I was about thy years, Hal, I was not an eagle's talon in the waist; I could have crept into any alderman's thumb-ring: A plague of sighing and grief! it blows a man up like a bladder. There's villainous news abroad: here was sir John Bracy from your father: you must to the court in the morning. That same mad fellow of the North, Percy; and he of Wales, that gave Amaimon the bastard, and made Lucifer cuckold, and swore the devil his true liege-man upon the cross of a Welsh hook. —What, a plaque, call you him? —

Points, O, Glendover.

Fal. Owen, Owen; the same;—and his son-in-law, Mortimer; and old Northumberland; and that spirtually Scot of Scots, Douglas, that runs o'horsecake, and Jeddart.

P. Hen. He that rides at high speed, and with his pistol kills a sparrow flying.

Fal. You have hit it.

P. Hen. So did he never the sparrow. Fal. Well, that rascal hath good mettle in him: he will not run.

Fal. Why, what a rascal art thou then, to praise him so for running.

Fal. O'horsecake, ye cuckoo! but, afoot, he will not budge a foot.

P. Hen. Yes, Jack, upon instnect.

Fal. I grant ye, upon instinct. Well, he is there too, and one Mordake, and a thousand blue-caps more; Worcester is stolen away to-night; thy father's heard is turned white with the news; thou mayst land now as cheap as stinking mackerel.

P. Hen. Why then, 'tis like, if there come a hot June, and this civil buffeting hold, we shall buy maineheads as they buy hobs-nails, by the hundreds.

Fal. By the mass, lad, thou sayest true; it is like, we shall have good trading that way.—But, tell me, Hal, art thou not horribly afraid? art thou being heir apparent, couldst the world pick thee out three such enemies again, as that fed Douglas, that spirit Percy, and that devil Glendower? Art thou not horribly afraid? dost not thy blood thrill at it?

P. Hen. Not a whitt i' faith; I lack some of thy instinct.

Fal. Well, thou wilt be horribly chid to-morrow, when thou comest to thy father: if thou love me, practise an answer.

P. Hen. Do thou stand for my father, and examine me upon the particulars of my life.

Fal. Shall I? content.—This chair shall be my state, this dagger my sceptre, and this cushion my crown.

P. Hen. Thy state is taken for a joint-stool, thy golden sceptre for a leaden dagger, and thy precious rich crown, for a pitiful bald crown!

Fal. Well, an the fire of grace be not quite out of thee, now shalt thou be moved. —Give me a cup of sack, to make mine eyes look red, that it may be thought I have wept; for I must speak in passion, and I will do it in king Cambyses' vein.

P. Hen. Well, here is my leg.

Fal. And here is my speech:—Stand aside, nobility. Host. This is excellent sport, i' faith. [sighs.

Fal. Weep not, sweet queen, for trickling tears are Host. O the father, how he holds his countenance!

Fal. For God's sake, lords, convey my tristful queen For tears do stop the flood-gates of her eyes.

Host. O rare! he doth it as like one of these ha- lotry players, as I ever see.

Fal. Peace, good pint-pot; peace, good tickle-brain. —Harry, I do not only marvel where thou spendest thy time, but also how thou art accompanied: for, as thou wilt, thou hast but trodden on the faster it grows, yet yowth, the more it is wasted, the sooner it wears. That thou art my son, I have partly thy mother's word, partly my own opinion; but chiefly a villainous trick of thine eye, and a foolish hugging of thy nether lip, that doth warrant me. It then thou be son to me, here lies the point:—Why, being son to me, art thou so pointed at? Shall the blessed sun of heaven prove a cherisher, and eat black-berries? a question not to be asked. Shall the son of England prove a thief, and take purses? a question to be asked. There is a thing, Harry, which thou hast often heard of, and it is known to many in our land by the name of pitch: this pitch, as ancient writers do report, doth defile; so doth the company the better, the more they do drink of the news, and think what I do speak to them; but in tears; not in pleasure, but in passion; not in words only, but in wees also:—And yet there is a virtuous man, whom I have often noted in thy company, but I know not his name.

P. Hen. What manner of man, an it like you my majesty?

Fal. A good portly man, i' faith, and a corpulent: of a cheerful look, a pleasing eye, and a most noble carriage; and, as I think, his age some fifty, or by'r-lady, inclining to threescore; and now I remember me, his name is Falstaff: if that man should be luckily given, he deceiveth me; for, Harry, I see virtue in his looks. If then the tree may be known from the fruit, as the fruit by the tree, then, peremptorily I speak: there is virtue in that Falstaff: his keepth faith, the rest banish. And tell me now, thou naughty varlet, tell me, where hast thou been this month?

P. Hen. Dost thou speak like a king? Do thou stand for me, and I'll play my father.

Fal. Depose me! if thou dost it half so gravely, so majestically both in word and matter, hang me up by my thumbs, like a ribbed buckle, or a poultier's hare.

P. Hen. Well, here I am, and here I stand.

Fal. And here I stand:—judge, my masters. P. Hen. Now, Harry, whence come you?

Fal. My noble lord, from Eastcheap.

P. Hen. The complaints I hear of thee are grievous. Fal. 'Blood, my lord, they are false:—nay, I'll tickle ye for a young prince, i' faith.

P. Hen. Swear thou, ungracious boy? henceforth ne'er look on me. Thou art violently carried away from grace: there is a devil haunts thee, in the likeness of a fat old man: a tun of man is thy companionship. Why dost thou converse with that trunk of humours, that bolting hutch of beastliness, that swoln parcel of dresses, that huge bombard of sack, that stuffed cloak-bag of guts, that roasted Manncgtree ox with the welding in his belly, that revenged vice, that grey iniquity, that father Ruffian, that vanity in years! Wherein is he good, but to taste sack and drink it? wherein neat and cleanly, but to carve a capon and eat it? wherein cunning, but in craft? wherein crafty, but in villainy? wherein villainous, but in all things? wherein worthy, but in nothing? Fal. I would, your grace would take me with you; Whom means your grace?

P. Hen. That villainous abominable misleader of youth, Falstaff, that old white-bearded Satan.

Fal. My lord, the man I know.
KING HENRY IV.

FALSTAFF—This chair shall be my state.

Part First. Act II. Sc. 4.
P. Hen. I know, thou dost.
Fal. But to say, I know more harm in him than in myself, were to say more than I know. That he is old, (the more the pity,) his white hairs do witness it: but that he is (saving your reverence,) a whom- master, that I utterly deny. If sack and sugar be a fault, God help the wicked! If to be old and merry be a sin, then many an old bost that I know, is damned: if to be fat, he to be hated, then Pharaoh’s lean kine are to be loved. No, my good lord; banish Peto, banish Bardolph, banish Points: but for sweet Jack Falstaff, kind Jack Falstaff, true Jack Falstaff, valiant Jack Falstaff, and therefore more valiant, being as he is, old Jack Falstaff, banish not him thy Harry’s company, banish not him thy Harry’s company; banish plump Jack, and banish all the world.

P. Hen. I do, I will. [A knocking heard.]

[Enter Hostess, Francis, and Bardolph.]

Re-enter Bardolph, turning.
Barb. O, my lord, my lord; the sheriff, with a most monstrous oaths, is at the door.
Fal. Out, you rogue! play out the play: I have much to say in the behalf of that Falstaff.

Re-enter Hostess, hastily.
Host. O Jesu, my lord, my lord!—
Fal. Height, height! the devil rides upon a fiddle-stick: What’s the matter? Host. The sheriff and all the watch are at the door: they are come to search the house; Shall I let them in?
Fal. Dost thou hear, lad! never call a true piece of gold, a counterfeit: thou art essentially mad, without seeming so.

P. Hen. And thou a natural coward, without insta-

Fal. I deny your major: if you will deny the sheriff, so; if not, let him enter: if I become not a cart as well as another man, a plague on my bringing up! I hope, I shall as soon be strangled with a halter, as another.

P. Hen. Go, hide thee behind the arras:—the rest walk up above. Now, my masters, for a true face, and good conscience.

Fal. Both which I have had: but their daze is out, and therefore I’ll hide me.

[Exit all but the Prince and Poins.]

P. Hen. Call in the sheriff.—

[Enter Sheriff and Carrier.]

Now, master sheriff: what’s your will with me!
Sher. First, pardon me, my lord. A hue and cry Hath follow’d certain men unto this house.
P. Hen. What men?
Sher. One of them is well known, my gracious lord; A gross fat man.
Cor. As fat as butter.
P. Hen. The man, I do assure you, is not here; For I myself at this time have employ’d him.
And, sheriff, I will engage my word to thee, That I will, by to-morrow dinner-time, Send him to answer thee, or any man, For any thing he shall be charg’d withal: And so let me entreat you leave the house. Sher. Will I, my lord. There are two gentlemen Have in this robbery lost three hundred marks.
P. Hen. It may be so: if he have robb’d these men, He shall be answerable; and so, farewell.
Sher. Good night, my noble lord.
P. Hen. I think it is good morrow; Is it not?
Sher. Indeed, my lord, I think it be two o’clock.

[Enter Sheriff and Carrier.]

P. Hen. This oilyascal is known as well as Paul’s. Go, call him forth.
Poins. Falstaff!—fast asleep behind the arras, and sporting like a horse.

P. Hen. Hark, how hard he fetches breath: Search his pockets. [Poins searches.] What hast thou found?
Poins. Nothing but papers, my lord.
P. Hen. Let’s see what they be: read them.
Poins. Item. A capon, 2s. 6d.
Item. Sauce, 4d.
Item. Sack, two gallons, 5s. 6d.
Item. Anchovies, and sack after supper, 2s. 6d.
Item. Bread, a halfpenny.
P. Hen. O monstrous! but one half-pennyworth of the frame and hugest deal of sack!—What there is else keep close; we’ll read it at more advantage: there let him sleep till day. I’ll to the court in the morning: we must all to the wars, and thy place shall be honourable. I’ll procure this fat rogue a charge of foot; and, I know his death will be a march of twelve score. The money shall be paid him; compare thee with advantage. Be not idle times in the morning; and so good morrow, Poins.

Poins. Good morrow, good my lord. [Exeunt.]

ACT III.

SCENE I.

BANGOR.—A Room in the Archdeacon’s House.

Enter HOTSPUR, WORCESTER, MORTIMER, and GLENDOWER.

Mort. These promises are fair, the parties sure, And our induction full of prosperous hope.
Hot. Lord Mortimer, and cousin Glendower,—

Will you sit down?—
And, uncle Worcester:—A plague upon’t! I have forgot the map.

Gle. No, here it is.
Sith, cousin Percy; sit, good cousin Hotspur; For by that name as oft as Lancaster
Both spoke in our behalf. Now, in the shape of a rising sigh, he wisheth you in heaven.
Hot. And you in hell, as often as he bears Owen Glendower spake of.

Gle. I cannot blame him: at my nativity, The front of heaven was full of fiery shapes, Of burning cressets; and, at my birth, The frame and huge foundation of the earth Shok’d like a coward.

Hot. Why, so it would have done At the same season, if your mother’s cat had But kitted, though yourself had ne’er been born. Gle. I say, the earth did shoke when I was born.
Hot. And I say, the earth was not of my mind, If you suppose, as fearing you it shoke more. [Tremble.
Gle. The heavens were all on fire, the earth did Then the earth shook to see the heavens on And not in fear of your nativity. [fire, Daiseed nature oftentimes breaks forth In strange eruptions: off the teeming earth Is with a kind of cholic pinch’d and vex’d By the imprisoning of nervice wind. Within her womb; which, for enlargement striving Shakes the old baldine earth, and topples down Steeples, and moss-grown towers. At your birth, Our grandam earth, having this distemperature, In passion shook.

Gle. Cousin, of many men
I do not bear these crossings. Give me leave
ACT III.—SCENE II.

Wife. In faith, my lord, you are too wonderful blame,
And since your coming hither, have done enough
To put him quite out of patience.

You must needs run a race, to reach that fault!
Though sometimes it does greatness, courage, speed.
Yet that's the hardest; and it renders you

And other times it does present harsh rage.

II. Mamma. Brave, majestic, opulent, and splendid;
The heart of a web, hanging a noblemen.
Lothert's men's hearts, and leaves behind a stain
Upon the beauty of all parts besides.

Bringing the time of communication. ['Speed

War. I am a schoolboy, good manners be mine,
Here come other waves, and let us take them leave.

Wife. The two hands are very close together.

Glaucus. Greenflower, the Ladies.

War. This is the deadly sense that anguish are—
My wife can speak no language but Welsh.

Glaucus. My daughter's words, she said, and part with Shall be a sorrow too; she, to the words
Repeal it: long words—ah!—she, and I warrant,
Shall follow in your sweet speech. [Furly,

Greenflower says she speaks no language but Welsh,
And not of a word to me.

Glaucus. She's desperate here, a very sad soul would.
One no person can do good speech. [Journey.

War. M. Greenflower.

I understand the language, and their name,
And that a hasty conversation.
But it is the case, I am well, and the words
Wives Welsh as well as men is not your case,
Sung by a captain in a distant town.
While crossing, or even to the end.

War. Nay, you are well, for she shall make.

Glaucus. Oh, I am very much to blame.

War. She knows you.

I put my warrant over to you deliver,
And rest you in your house, for her beauty.

And she will say, sit, and put the trust,
And do your eyes as your own good day,

Glaucus. Singing of the beauty as they are in, and

War. And she well know it, and do the best.

Glaucus. Nay, she will make no mistake.

I come to the news.

Look, I come to the news.

You know my wife.

You know my wife.

Now I perceive, as I am now a Welsh
And is no matter, wish her such.

Furly. He is a good young man.

[War. I know, you believe everything but anomalous;
For you are altogether that are by your way.

I told you there, and a kind man you are.

But, I had rather bear a bowl of new broth,
Of all the court and princes of my blood:
The hope and expectation of thy time
Is rais'd; and the soul of every man
Prophetically does foreteign thy fall.
Had I so lavish of my presence been,
So common-hackney'd in the eyes of men,
So stale and cheap to vulgar company;
Oft, that did help me to the crown,
Had still kept loyal to possession;
And left me in repeateless banishment,
A fellow of no mark, nor likelihood.
By being seldom seen, I could not stir,
But, like a comet, I was wonder'd at:
That men would tell their children, This is he;
Others would say,—Where? which is Bestingbroke?
And then I stole all courtesy from heaven,
And dress'd myself in such humility,
That I did pluck allegiance from men's hearts,
Loud shouts and salutations from their mouths,
Even in the presence of the crowned king.
Thus did I keep my person fresh, and new;
My presence, like a robe pontifical,
Not seen, but felt; as well in my state,
Seldom, but sumpuous, showed like a feast;
And woo, by rareness, such solemnity.
The skipping king, he ambled up and down
With shallow jesters, and rash bavin wits,
Soon kindled, and soon burn'd: carded his state;
Mingled his royalty with capering fools;
Had his great name profan'd with their scars:
And gave his countenance, against his name,
To laugh at gibing boys, and stand the push
Of every heedless vain comparative:
Grew a companion to the common streets,
Eresco'd himself to popularity:
That being daily swallow'd by men's eyes,
They suffoc'd with honey; and began
To loathe the state of Authority:
So, and so of a little
More than a little is by much too much.
So, when he had occasion to be seen,
He was but as the cuckoo is in June,
Heard, not regarded; seen, but with such eyes,
As, sick and blinded with community,
Afford no extraordinary gaze,
Such as is bent on sun-like majesty
With it shines itself in all eyes:
But rather drow'st, and hang their eye-bis down,
Slept in his face, and render'd such aspect
As cloudy men use to their adversaries;
Being with his presence glutton'd, gorg'd, and full.
And in that very line, Harry, stand'st thou:
For thou hast lost thy princely privilege,
With vile participation; not an eye
But is a weary of thy common sight.
Save mine, which hath desir'd to see thee more;
Which now doth that I would not have it do,
Make blind itself with foolish tenderness.

K. Hen. I shall hereafter, my thrice-gracious lord,
Be more myself.

K. Hen. For all the world,
And thou art to this hour, was Richard then
When I from France set foot at Ravenspurg;
And even as I was then, is Percy now,
Now by my sceptre, and my soul to hont,
He hath more worthy interest to the state,
Than thou, the shadow of succession:
For, of no right, nor colour like to right,
He doth fill hold with harness in the realm:
This head against the lord's saw jowis;
And, being no more in debt to years than thou,
Leads ancient lords and reverend bishops on,
To bloody battles, and to bruising arms.

What never-dying honour hath be get Against renowned Douglas; whose high deeds,
Whose hot incursious, and great name in arms,
Holds from all soldiers chief majesty,
And military title capital,
Through all the kingdoms that acknowledge Christ?
Fierce hath this Hotspur Mars in swathing clothes,
This infant warrior in his enterprises
Discomfited great Douglas: ta'en him once,
Enlarg'd him, and made a friend of him,
To fill the mouth of deep defiance up,
And shake the peace and safety of our throne.
And what say you to this? Percy, Northumberland.
The archbishop's grace of York, Douglas, Mortimer,
Capitalate against us, and are up.
But whither do I tell these newes to thine?
Why, Harry, do I tell thee of my foes,
Which art my nearest and dearest enemy?
Then that art like enough,—through vassal fear,
Base inclination, and the start of spleen,—
To fight against me under Percy's pay,
To dug his heels, and count'st by his frowns,
To show how much degenerate war-art.

P. Hen. Do not think so, you shall not find it so;
And God forgive them, that have so much sway'd
Your majesty's good thoughts away from me!
I will redeem all this on Percy's head,
And, in the closing of some glorious day,
He bold to tell you, that I am your son;
When I will wear a garment all of blood,
And then my favour in a bloody mantle,
Which, wash'd away, shall scar our shame with it.
And that shall be the day, wher'ere it lights,
That this same child of honour and renown,
This gallant Hotspur, this all-praised knight,
And your unthought-of Harry, chance to meet
For every honour sitting on his helm,
To show how much degenerate war-art.
His prowess, and his triumph, in a bloody mantle,
Which, wash'd away, shall scar our shame with it.
This, in the name of God, I promise here:
The which if he be pleas'd I shall perform,
I do beseech your majesty, may save
The long-grown wounds of my intemperance:
If not, the end of life cancels all bands;
And I will die a hundred thousand deaths,
Ere break the smallest parcel of this vow.

K. Hen. A hundred thousand rebels die in this:
Thou shalt have charge, and sovereign trust, herein.

Enter Blunt.

Now good, Blunt! thy looks are full of speed.
Blunt. So hath the business that I come to speak of,
Lord Mortimer of Scotland hath sent word,
That Douglas, and the English rebels, met,
The eleventh day of this month, at Shrewsbury
A mighty and a fearful head they are,
If promises be kept on every hand,
As ever offered to play in a state:

K. Hen. The sixteenth of Westmoreland set forth to day,
With him his son, lord John of Lancaster;
For this advertisement is five days old:
On Wednesday next, Harry, you shall set Forwar'd; on Thursday, we ourselves will march:
Our meeting is Bridgnorth: and, Harry, you
ACT III. — SCENE III.

Shall march through Glossgiere, by which account, Our business valued, some twelve days hence Our general forces at Bridgnoth shall meet. Our hands are full of business: let's away; Odvantage feeds him fat, while men delay. [Exeunt.

SCENE III.

Eastcheap. — A Room in the Boar's Head Tavern. Enter Falstaff and Bardolph.

Fal. Bardolph, am I not fallen away vilely since this last action? do I not rate? do I not dwindle? Why, my skinkings about me like an old fayly's loose gown; I am with'der like an old apple-John. Well, I'll repent, and that suddenly, while I am in some iking; I shall be out of heart shortly, and then I shall have no strength to repent. As I have not forgotten what the inside of a church is made of, I am a pepper-corn, a brewer's horse: the inside of a church! Company, villainous company, hath been the spoil of me.

Bard. Sir John, you are so fretful, you cannot live long.

Fal. Why, there is it:—come, sing me a bawdy song; make me merry. I was as virtuously given, as a gentleman need to be; virtuous enough: swore little; dined, not above seven times a week: went to bed, not above once in a quarter,—of an hour; paid money that I borrowed, three or four times; lived well, and in good compass: and now I live out of all order, out of all compass.

Bard. Why you are so fat, sir John, that you must needs be out of all compass; out of all reasonable compass, sir John.

Fal. Come, then, I'll amend the face, and I'll amend my life: Thou art our Admiral, thou bestrest the Lantern in the pooping,—but 'tis in the nose of thee: thou art the knight of the burning lamp.

Bard. Why, sir John, my face does you no harm.

Fal. No, I'll be sworn; I make as good use of it as many a man doth of a death's head, or a momento mori. I never see thy face, but I think upon hell-fire, and Dives that lived in purple; for there he is in his robes, burning, burning. If thou wert any way given to virtue, I would swear by thy face; my oath should be, by this fire: but thou art altogether given over; and wert indeed, but for the light in thy face, the son of utter darkness. When thou canst not thy God—bull in thy heart to catch thee, thou didst not think thou hadst been a numen tainan, or a baal of wildfire, there is no purchase in money. O, thou art a perpetual triumph, an everlasting bonfire-light! thou hast saved me a thousand marks in links and torches, walking with thee in the night betwixt tavern and tavern: but the sack that thou hast drunk me, would have bought me light as good cheap, at the dearest chandler's in Euroype. I have maintained that salamander of yours with fire, any time this two and thirty years; Heaven reward me for it!

Bard. Shrewd, I would my face were in your belly!

Fal. God's mercy! so should I be sure to be heart-burned.

Enter Hostess.

Host. How now, dame Partlet the ben? have you inquired yet, who picked my pocket?

Host. Why, sir John! what do you think, sir John? do you think I keep thieves in my house? I have searched, I have inquired, so has my husband, man by man, boy by boy, servant by servant: the tide of a hair was never lost in my house before.

Fal. You lie, hostess; Bardolph was shaved, and lost many a hair: and I'll be sworn, my pocket was picked; Go io, you are a wuss, go.

Host. Who, I! I defy thee; I was never called so in mine own house before.

Fal. Go to, I know you well enough.

Host. No, sir John; you do not know me, sir John; I know you, sir John: you owe me money, sir John, and now you pick a quarrel to beguile me of it: I bought you a dozen of shirts to your back.

Fal. Dowlas, filthy dowlas: I have given them away to bakers' wives, and they have made bolters of them.

Host. Now, as I am a true woman, holland of eight shillings an ell, I owe money here besides, sir John, for your diet, and by-drinkings, and money lent you, four and twenty pound.

Fal. He had his part of it; let him pay.

Host. He! alas, he is poor; he hath nothing.

Fal. How? poor! look upon his face; What call you rich? let them coin his nose, let them coin his cheeks; I'll not pay a denier. What, will you make me a younget of me? shall I not take mine case in mine inn, but I shall have my pocket picked? I have lost a seal-ring of my grandfather's, worth forty mark.

Host. O Jesu! I have heard the prince tell him, I know not how oft, that that ring was copper.

Fal. How! the prince is a Jack, a sneak-up; and, if he were here, I would engulge him like a dog, if he would say so.

Enter Prince Henry and Poins, Marching. Falstaff meets the Prince, playing on his truncheon, like a fife.

Fal. How now, lad! is the wind in that door, I'faith! must we all march.

Bard. The tour, two and three, Newgate-fashion.

Host. My lord, I pray you, hear me.

P. Hen. What savest thou, mistress Quickly? How doth thy husband! I love him well, he is an honest man.

Host. Good my lord, hear me.

Fal. Pr'ythee, let her alone, and list to me.

P. Hen. What savest thou, Jack!

Fal. The other night I fell asleep here behind the arras, and had my pocket-picked: this house is turned bawdy-house, they pick pockets.

P. Hen. What didst thou lose, Jack?

Fal. Will thou believe me, Hal! three or four bonds of forty pound a-piece, and a seal-ring of my grandfather's.

P. Hen. A truth, some eight-penny matter.

Host. So I told him, my lord; and I said, I heard your grace say so: And, my lord, he speaks most vilely of you, like a four-mouthed man as he is; and said he would engulge you.

P. Hen. What! he did not?

Host. There's neither faith, truth, nor womanhood in me else.

Fal. There's no more faith in thee than in a stewed prune: nor no more truth in thee, than in a drawn fox: and for womanhood, said Marian may be the deputy's wife of the ward to thee. Go, you think, go. H'rt say, what thing? what thing?

Fal. What thing! why, a thing to thank God on.

Host. I am no thing to thank God on, I would thou shouldst know it; I am an honest man's wife, and, setting thy knighthood aside, thou art a knave to call me so.

Fal. Setting thy womanhood aside, thou art a beast to say otherwise.

Host. Say, what beast, thou knave thou!

Fal. What beast! why an otter.

P. Hen. An otter, sir John! why an otter?

Fal. Why! she's neither fish nor flesh; a man knows not where to have her.
Host. Thou art an unjust man in saying so; thou or any man knows where to have me, thou know'st thou!

P. Hen. Thou sayest true, hostess; and he slanders thee most grossly.

Host. So he doth you, my lord; and said this other day, you ought him a thousand pound.

P. Hen. Pr'ythee, do I owe thee a thousand pound?

Fal. A thousand pound, Hal? a million: thy love is worth a million; then owest me thy love.

Host. Nay, my lord, he called you Jack, and said, he would eng德尔 you.

Fal. Did I, Bardolph?

Bard. Indeed, sir John, you said so.

Fal. Yea; if he said, my ring was copper.

P. Hen. I say, 'tis copper: Darest thou be as good as thy word now?

Fal. Why, Hal, thou knowest, as thou art but man, I dare: but, as thou art prince, I fear thee, as I fear the roaring of the lion's whelp.

P. Hen. And why not, as the lion?

Fal. The king himself is to be feared as the lion: Do you think, I'll fear thee as I do thy father? nay, an I do, I pray God, my girdle break!

P. Hen. O, if it should, how would thy guts fall about thy knees! But, sirrah, there's no room for faith, truth, nor honesty, in this bosom of thine; it is all filled up with guts and mind: Charge an honest woman with picking thy pocket! Why, thou whoreson, impudent, embossed rascal, if there were any thing in thy pocket but tavern-reckonings, memoranda of bawdy-houses, and one poor penny-worth of sugar-candy, to make thee long winded; if thy pocket were enriched with any other injuries but these, I am a villain. And yet you will stand to it; you will not pocket up wrong: Art thou not ashamed?

Fal. Dust thou hear, Hal? thou knowest, in the state of innocence, Adam fell; and what should poor Jack Falstaff do, in the days of villainy? Thou seest I have more flesh than another man; and therefore more frailty. —You confess, then, you picked my pocket?

P. Hen. It appears so by the story.

Fal. Hostess, I forgive thee: Go, make ready breakfast; love thy husband, and cherish thy guests: thou knowest I find me tractable to any honest reason: thou seest I am pacified. —Still! —Nay, pray thee, be gone. [Exit Hostess.] Now, Hal, to the news at court: For the robbery, lad; How is that answered?

P. Hen. O, my sweet beef, I must still be good angel to thee: —The money is paid back again.

Fal. O, I do not like that paying back, 'tis a double labour.

P. Hen. I am good friends with my father, and may do any thing.

Fal. Rob me the exchequer, the first thing thou dost, and do it with unwashed hands too.

Bard. Do, my lord.

P. Hen. I have procured thee, Jack, a charge of foot.

Fal. I would, it had been of horse. Where shall I find one that can steal well? O for a fine thief, of the age of two, and twenty, or thereabouts! I am heinously unprovided. Well God he thanked for these rebels, they offered none but the virtuous; I land them, I praise them.

P. Hen. Bardolph. —

Bard. My lord.

P. Hen. Go bear this letter to lord John of Lancaster, My brother John; this to my lord of Westminster.

Go, Poins, to horse, to horse: for thou, and I, Have thirty miles to ride yet ere dinner time.

Jack,

Meet me to-morrow the Temple-hall: At two o'clock the afternoon: There shalt thou know thy charge; and there receive Money, and order for their furniture.

The land is burning; Percy stands on high; And either they, or we, must lower limb.

[Exit Prince, Poins, and Bardolph.

Fal. Rare words! brave world! —Hostess, my breakfast; come:—

O, I could wish, this tavern were my drum. [Exit.

ACT IV.

SCENE I.—The Rebel Camp near Shrewsbury.

Enter Horshun, Worcester, and Douglas.

Hot. Well said, my noble Scot: If speaking truth, In this fine age, were not thought flattery, Such attention should the Douglas have, As not a soldier of this season’s stamp Should go so general current through the world. By heav'n, I cannot flatter; I declare The tongues of soothsayers; but a braver place In my heart’s love, hath no man than yourself: Nay, task me to the word: approve me, lord.

Dou. Thou art the king of honour:
No man so potent breathes upon the ground, But I will hear him.

Hot. Do so, and 'tis well:—

Enter a Messenger, with letters.

What letters hast thou there? —I can but thank you. Mes. These letters come from your father,—

Hot. Letters from him! why comes he not himself? Mes. He cannot come, my lord; he’s grievous sick.

Hot. Bounds! how has he the leisure to be sick, In such a justling time? Who leads his power? Under whose government come they along? Mes. His letters bear his mind, not I, my lord. Wor. I pray thee, tell me, doth he keep his bed? Mes. He did, my lord, four days ere I set forth; And at the time of my departure thence, He was so much fear’d by his physicians. [Exit Mes.] Wor. I would the state of time had first been whole, Ere he by sickness had been visited; His health was never better worth than now.

Hot. Sick now! drop now! this sickness doth in—

The very life-blood of our enterprise: [Exit

'Tis catching hither, even to our camp. —

He writes me here,—that inward sickness— And that his friends by deposition could not So soon be draw’d; nor did he think it meet, To lay so dangerous and dear a trust On any soul renov’d, but on his own. Yet doth he give us bold advertisement,—

That with our small conjunction, we should on, To see how fortune is dispos’d to us; For, as he writes, there is no qualifying now; Because the king is certainly possess’d Of all our purposes. What say you to it? Wor. Your father’s sickness is a main to us. Hot. A perilous gash, a very limb lopp’d off: —And yet, in faith, ’tis not; his present want Seems more than we shall find it.—Were it good, To set the exact weight of all our states All at one cast? to set so rich a main On the nice hazard of one doubtful hour? It were not good: for therein should we read The very bottom and the soul of hope; The very list, the very utmost bound Of all our fortunes.
Doug.
'Thath, and so we should;
Where now remains a sweet reversion:
We may boldly spend upon the hope of what
Is to come in:
A comfort of retirement lives in this.
Hot.  A rendezvous, home to fly unto,
If that the devil and mischance look big
Upon the maidenhead of our affaires.
Ver.  But yet, I would your father had been here.
The quality and hair of our attempt
Brooks no division: It will be thought
By some, that know not why he is away,
That wisdom, loyalty, and more dislike,
Of our proceedings, kept the earl from hence;
And think, how such an apprehension
May turn the tide of fearful faction,
And breed a kind of question in our cause:
For, well you know, we of the offering side
Must keep aloof from strict arbitrement;
And step a night-hold step from whence
The eye of reason may pry in upon us.
This absence of your father's draws a curtain,
That shews the ignorant an kind of fear
Before not dreamt of.
Hot.  You strain too far.
I, rather, of his absence make this use:—
For all his Jove, and more great division,
A larger dare to our great enterprise,
Then if the earl were here: for men must think,
If we, without his help, can make a head
To push against the kingdom: with his help,
We shall o'erturn it topoy-turny down.
Yet all goes well, yet all our joints are whole.
Doug.  As heart can think: there is not such a word
Spoke in of Scotland, as this term of fear.
Enter Sir Richard Vernon.
Hot.  My cousin Vernon! welcome, by my soul.
Ver.  Pray God, my news be worth a welcome, lord.
The earl of Westmoreland, seven thousand strong,
Is marching hitherwards, with him, prince John.
Hot.  He's no harm: What more?
Ver.  And further, I have learn'd,—
The king himself in person is set forth,
Or hitherwards intended secrecy.
With strong and mighty preparation.
Hot.  He shall be welcome too. Where is his son,
The nimble-footed mad-cap prince of Wales.
And his comrade, that daff'd the world aside,
And bid it pass?
Ver.  All furish'd, all in arms,
All plan'd as lestridges, that with the wind
Bated, like eagles having lately bath'd;
Glittering in golden coats, like images
As full of spirit as the month of May,
And goshous as the sun at midsummer;
Wanton as youthful goats, wild as young bulls.
I saw young Harry,—with his beaver on,
His cuisses on his thighs, gallantly arm'd,—
Rise from the ground like feather'd Mercury,
And vaulted with such ease into his seat.
As if an angel dropped down from the clouds,
To turn and wind a furt'ry Peacock.
And watch the world with noble horsemanship.
Hot.  No more; no more; worse than the sun in March,
This praise doth nourish agues.  Let them come;
They come like sacrifices in their train,
And to the fierce-eyed maid of smoky war,
All hot, and bleeding, will we offer them:
The mailed Mars shall on his altar sit.
Up to the ears in blood. I am on fire,
To hear this rich reprimand is so nigh,
And yet not ours:—Come, let me take my horse,
Who is to bear me, like a thunderbolt,
Against the bosom of the prince of Wales;
Harry to Harry shall, hot horse to horse,
Meet, and ne'er part, till one drop down a corse.—
Ver.  That Glendower were come!
There is more news: I learn'd in Worcester, as I rode along,
He cannot draw his power this fourteen days.
Doug.  'That's the worst tidings that I hear of yet.
Ver.  Ay, by my faith, that bears a frosty sound.
Hot.  What may the king's whole battle reach unto?
Ver.  To thirty thousand.
Hot.  Forty let it be;
My father and Glendower being both away,
The powers of us may serve so great a day.
Come, let us make a muster speedily:
Doomsday is near; die all, die merrily.
Doug.  Talk not of dying; I am out of fear
Of death, or death's hand, for this one half year.
[Exeunt.
SCENE II.—A public Road near Coventry.
Enter Falstaff and Bardolph.
Fal.  Bardolph, get thee before to Coventry; fill me a bottle of sack; our soldiers shall march through: we'll to Sutton-Colefield to-night.
Bard.  Will you give me money, captain?
Fal.  Lay out, lay out.
Bard.  This bottle makes an angel.
Fal.  An if it do, take it for thy labour; and if it makes twenty, take them all, I'll answer the coinage.
Did my lieutenant Peto meet me at the town's end.
Bard.  I will, captain: farewell.
Fal.  If I be not ashamed of my soldiers, I am a much-guzet. I have misused the king's press damnably. I have got, in exchange of a hundred and fifty soldiers, three hundred and odd pounds. I press one none but good householders, yeomen's sons: inquire me out contracted bachelors, such as had been asked twice on the bars; such a commodity of warm slaves, as had as lief hear the devil as a drum; such as fear the report of a caliver, worse than a strick fowl, or a hurt wild-duck. I pressed me none but such toasts and butter, with hearts in their bellies no bigger than pins' heads, and they have bought out their services; and now my whole charge consists of ancients, and townsmen, and gentlemen of rich companies, slaves as ragged as larrums in the painted cloth, where the glutton's dogs licked his sores: and such as, indeed, were never soldiers; but discarded unjust serving-men, younger sons to younger brothers, revolted tapsters, and ostlers trade-fallen; the cankers of a calm world, and a long peace; ten times more dishonourable ragged than an old fac'd ancient: and such have I, to fill up the rooms of them that have bought out their services, that you would think, that I had a hundred and fifty tattered prodigals, lately come from swine keeping, from eating draft and huns.
a mad fellow met me on the way, and told me, I had unloosed all the giblets, and pressed the dead bodies.
No eye hath seen such scarred cows. I'll not march through Coventry with them, that's flat:—Nay, and the villains march wide betwixt the legs, as if they had gyves on; for, indeed, I had the most of them out of prison. There's but a shirt and a half in all my company; and the half-shirt is two napkins, tacked together, and thrown over the shoulders like a herald's coat without the sleeves; and, and the shirt, too. The truth, stolen from my host at Saint Allan's, or the red-nose ino keeper of Dainty: But that's all one; they'll
't find theirs enough on every hedge.
Enter Prince Henry and Westmoreland.

P. Hen. How now, blow'n Jack! how now quiet? Fal. What, Hal! How now, mad wag! what a devil dost thou in Warwickshire?—My good lord of Westmoreland, I cry you mercy; I thought, your honour had already been at Shrewsbury.

West. 'faith, sir John, 'tis more than time that I were there, and you too; but my powers are there already: The king, I can tell you, looks for us all; we must away all night.

Fal. Tut, tut! never fear me; I am as vigilant, as a cat to steal cream.

P. Hen. I think, to steal cream indeed; for thy theft hath already made thee butter. But tell me, Jack; Whose fellows are these that come after? Fal. Mine, Hal, mine.

P. Hen. I did never see such pitiful rascals. Fal. Tut, tut; good enough to tuss: food for powder, food for powder; they'll fill a pot, as well as better: tush, man, mortal men, mortal men. West. Ay, but, sir John, methinks they are exceeding poor and bare; too beggarly. Fal. 'faith, for their poverty,—I know not where they had that: and for their bareness,—I am sure they never learned that of me.

P. Hen. No, I'll be sworn; unless you call three fingers of the ribs, bare. But, sirrah, make haste; Percy is already in the field.

Fal. What, is the king uncapped? West. He is, sir John; I fear, we shall stay too long. Fal. Well, To the latter end of a fray, and the beginning of a feast, Fits a dull lighter, and a keen guest. [Exeunt.

SCENE III.—The Rebel Camp near Shrewsbury.

Enter Hotspur, Worcester, Douglas, and Vernon. Hot. We'll fight with him to-night. Wor. It may not be.

Dou. You do not counsel well; You speak it out of fear, and cold heart. Ver. Do me no slander, Douglas: by my life, (And I dare well maintain it with my life,) If well-respected honour bid me so, I hold as little counsel with weak fear, As you, my lord, or any Scot that lives:— Let it be seen to-narrow in the battle, Which of us fears.

Dou. Yea, or to-night. Ver. To-night, to-morrow, say I. Ver. Come, come, it may not be.

I wonder much, being men of such great leading, That you foresee not what impediments Drag back our expedition: Certain horse Of my cousin Vernon's are not yet come up: Your uncle Worcester's horse came but to-day; And now their pride and exult they is asleep, Their courage with hard labour tamed and dull, That not a horse is half the half himself. Hot. So are the horses of the enemy In general, journey-bated, and brought low; The better part of ours is full of rest. Wor. The number of the king exceedeth ours For God's sake, cousin, stay till all come in. [The trumpet sounds a parley.
In rage dismiss'd my father from the court;
Broke oath on oath, committed wrong on wrong;
And, in conclusion, drove us to seek out
This head of safety; and, withal, to pry
Into his title, the which we find
Too indirect for long continuance.

\[Hot.\] Not so, sir Walter; we'll withdraw awhile.
Go to the king; and let there be no laugh'd
Some safety for a safe return again,
And in the morning early shall mine uncle
Bring him our purposes: and so farewell.

[Exeunt.]

SCENE IV.
York.—A Room in the Archbishop's House.
Enter the Archbishop of York, and a Gentleman.
Arch. He, good sir Michael; hear this sealed brief,
With winged haste, to the lord mareschal;
This to my cousin Scoop; and all the rest
To whom they are directed: if you knew
How much they do import, you would make haste.

[To his lord.]
I guess their terror.
Arch. Like enough, you do.
To-morrow, good sir Michael, is a day,
Wherein the fortune of ten thousand men
Must bide the touch: For, sir, at Shrewsbury,
As I am truly given to understand,
The king, with mighty and quick-rais'd power,
Meets with lord Harry; and I fear, sir Michael,—
What with the sickness of Northumberland.
(Whose power was in the first proportion.)
And what with Owen Glendower's absence, thence,
(Who with them was a rated sionew too,
And comes not in, dis-cruis'd by prophecyes,)—
I fear, the power of Percy is too weak.
To wage an instant trial with the king.
Gent. Why, good my lord, you need not fear; there's And lord Mortimer.
[Douglas,
Arch. No, Mortimer's not there.
[Perrey.
Gent. But there is Mortlake, Vernon, lord Harry
And there's my lord of Worcester, and a head
Of Spanish arrack, noble gentlemen.
Arch. And so there is; but yet the king hath drawn
The special head of all the land together:—
The prince of Wales, lord John of Lancaster,
The noble Westmoreland, and warlike Blunt;
And many more cor-rivals, and dear men
Of estimation and command in arms.

[pos'd.]
Gent. Doubt not, my lord, they shall be well op.
Arch. I hope no less, yet needful it's to fear;
And, to prevent the worst, sir Michael, speed:
For, if lord Percy throve not, ere the king
Dismiss his power, he means to visit us,—
For he hath heard of our confederacy,—
And 'tis but wisdom to make strong against him;
Therefore, make haste: I must go write again
To other friends; and so farewell.

ACT V.

SCENE I.—The King's Camp near Shrewsbury.
K. Hen. How bloody the sun begins to peer
Above you busky hill the day looks pale
At his distemperate.
P. Hen. The southern wind
Both play the trumpet to his purposes.
And, by his hollow whistling in the leaves,
Foretels a tempest, and a blustering day.
K. Hen. Then with the losers let it sympathize;
For nothing can seem foul to those that win.—

Trumpet. Enter Worcester and Vernon.
Now, my lord of Worcester! 'tis not well,
That you and I should meet upon such terms;
As now we meet; you have deceived our trust;
And made us dott our easy robes of peace.
To crush our old limbs in gentle steel:
That is not well, my lord, this is not well.
What say you to't? will you again unknit
This churlish knot of all abhorred war!
And more than that, my lord.
Where you did give a fair and natural light;
Be no more an exhal'd meteor,
A prodigy of fear, and a portent
Of broached mischief to the unborn times!
Vern. Hear me, my liege:
For mine own part, I could be well content
To appear in the Grendel's end of my life.
With quiet hours: for, I do protest,
I have not sought the day of this dislike.
K. Hen. You have not sought it! how comest then?
Eul. Rebellion lay in his way, and he found it.
P. Hen. Peace, cheater, peace.
Vern. Well, it pleas'd your majesty, to turn your looks
Of favour, from myself, to all the house;
And yet I must remember you, my lord,
We were the first and dearest of your friends.
For you, my staff of office did I break
In Richard's time, and posted day and night
To meet you on the way, and kiss your hand,
When yet you were in place and in account
Nothing so strong and fortunate as I.
That brought you home, and boldly did out bare
The dangers of the time: You swore to us,
And you did swear that oath at Doncaster,—
That you did nothing purpose against the state;
Nor claim no further than your new fall'n right,
The seat of Gaunt, dishonour'd;
To this we swore our oaths also,
But, in short space, it rain'd down fortune showering on your head;
And such a load of greatness fell on you,—
What with our help; what with the absent king;
What with the injuries of a wanton time;
The seeming sufferings that you had borne;
And the contagious winds, that held the king
So long in his unlucky Irish wars,
That all in England did repute him dead,—
And, from this swarm of fair advantages,
You took occasion to be quickly wed
To grasp the general sway into your hand:
Forget your oath to us at Doncaster;
And, being fed by us, you need us no more.
As that anguished gull, the eagle's bird,
Useth the sparrows; did oppress our nest;
Grew by our feeding so great a bulk,
That even our love durst not come near your sight
For fear of swallowing; but with nimble wing
We were enforce'd, 'tis unsafe, sake, to fly
Out of your sight, and raise my discontent head:
Wherefor we stand approved by such means
As you yourself have long'd against yourself;
By unkind usage, dangerous countenance,
And violation of all faith and troth.
KING HENRY IV.—PART I.

Sworn to us in your younger enterprise.

K. Hen. These things, indeed, you have articulated, Proclaim'd at market crosses, read in churches; To face the garment of rebellion With some fine colour, that may please the eye Of fickle changelings, and poor discontents, Which gaped and rais'd the elbow, at the news Of hurlyburly innovation: And never yet did insurrection want Such water-colours, to impart his cause; Nor wooden beggars, starving for a time, Of pelimell havoc and confusion.

P. Hen. In both our armies, there is many a soul Shall pay full dearly for this encounter, If once they join in trial. Tell your nephew, The prince of Wales doth join with all the world In praise of Henry Percy: By my hopes,— This present enterprize set off his head,— I do not think a braver gentleman, More active-valiant, or more valiant-young, More daring, or more bold, is not alive, To brace this latter age with noble deeds. For my part, I may speak it to my shame, I have a truant been to chivalry; And so, I hear, he doth account me too: Yet this before my father's majesty,— I am content, that he shall take the odds Of his great name and estimation; And well, to save the blood on either side, Try fortune with him in a single fight.

K. Hen. And, prince of Wales, so dare we venture albeit, considerations infinite [there, Do make against it:—No, good Worcester, no, We love our people well; even those we love, That are misled upon your cousin's part: And, will they take the offer of our grace. Both he, and they, and you, yea, every man Shall be my friend again, and I'll be his: So tell your cousin, and bring me word What he will do:—But if he will not yield, Rebuke and dread correction wait on us, And they shall do their office. So, be gone; We will not now be troubled with reply: We offer fair, take it wisely.

E'xecut Worcester and Vernon.

P. Hen. It will not be accepted, on my life: The Douglas and the Hotspur both together Are confederate against the world in arms.

K. Hen. Hence, therefore, every leader to his charge; For, or their answer, will we set on them: And God befriend us, as our cause is just! [Exeunt King, Bristol, and Pow'r Joun.

Fal. Hal, if thou see me down in the battle, and bestride me, so; 'tis a point of friendship.

P. Hen. Nothing but a colossus can do thee that friendship. Say thy prayers, and farewell.

Fal. I wish'd I were bed-time, Hal, and all well. P. Hen. Why, thou artres God a death. [Exit. Fal. I wish'd I were bed-time, Hal, I would be res vacat to pay him before his death. What need I be so forward with him that calls not on me? Well, 'tis no matter: Honour pricks me on. Yea, but how if honour pricks me off when I come on? how then? Can honour set to a leg? No. Or an arm? No. Or take away the grief of a wound? No. Honour hath no skill in surgery then? No. What is honour? A word. What is that word, honour? What is that honour? Air. A trim reckoning!—Who hath it? He that died o' Wednesday. Doth he feel it? No. Doth he hear it? No. Is it insensible then? Yea, to the dead. But will it not live with the living? No. Why? Detraction will not suffer it:—therefore I'll none of it: Honour is a mere scutcheon, and so ends my catechism.

SCENE II.—The Rebel Camp.

Enter Worcester and Vernon.

Ifor. O, no, my my vehemust not know, sir Richard, The liberal kind offer of the king.

Ver. 'Twere best, he did.

Ifor. Thee are we all undone It is not possible, it cannot be, The king should keep his word in loving us: He will suspect us still, and find a time To punish this offence in other faults: Suspicion shall be all stuck full of eyes: For treason is but trusted like the fox; Who, ne'er so tame, so cherish'd, and look'd up, Will have a wild trick of his ancestors. Look how we can, or sad, or merrily, Interpretation will misquote our looks; And we shall feel like oxen at a stall, The better cherished, still the nearer death. My nephew's trespass may be well forgot, It hath the excuse of youth, and heat of blood; And an adopted name of privilege, A hare-brain'd Hotspur, govern'd by a spleen: All his offences live upon my head, And on his father's:—we did trust him on; And, his corruption being taken from us, We, as the spring of all, shall pay for all. Therefore, good cousin, let not I Harry know, In any case, the offer of the king. Ver. Deliver what you will, I'll say, 'tis so Here comes your cousin.

Enter Hotspur and Douglas; and Officers and soldiers, behind.

Hot. By uncle is return'd:—Deliver up My lord of Westmorland.—Uncle, what news? Ifor. The king will bid you battle presently. Doug. Defy him by the lord of Westmorland. Hot. Lord Douglas, go you and tell him so. Doug. Marry, and shall, and very willingly. [Ex. Ver. There is no seeming mercy in the king.热. But you beg any? God deliver you. Ifor. I told him gently of our grievances, Of his oath-breaking; which he mended thus,— By now foreseeing that he is forsworn: He calls us rebels, traitors; and will scourge With haughty arms this hateful name in us.

Re-enter Douglas.

Doug. Arm, gentlemen: to arms! for I have thrown A brave defiance in King Henry's teeth, And Westmorland, that was engag'd, did hear it; Which cannot choose but bring him quickly on. Wor. The prince of Wales stepp'd forth before the And, nephew, challenge'd you to single fight. [king, Hot. O, 'would the quarrel lay upon our heads; And that no man might draw short breath to-day, But I, and Harry Monmouth! 'Tell me, tell me, How shew'd his tasking? seem'd it in contemn? Ver. No, by my soul; I never in my life, Did hear a challenge urg'd more modestly, Unless a brother should a brother dare To gentle exercise and proof of arms. He gave you all the duties of a man; Trim'd up your praises with a princely tongue; Spoke your deservings like a chronicle; Made you ever better than his praise, By still disguising praise, valued with you: And, which became him like a prince indeed, He made a blushting cial of himself;
And chid his truant youth with such a grace,
As it he master'd they a double spirit,
Of teaching, and of learning, instantly.
There did he pause; but let me tell the world,—
If he outlive the envy of this day,
England did never owe so sweet a hope,
So much misconstrued in his wantonness.
Hot. Cousin, I think, thou art enamoured
Upon his follies; never did I hear
Of any prince, so wild, at liberty:—
But, be he as he will, yet once aye night
I will embrace him with a soldier's arm.
That he shall shrink under my courtesy,—
And, fellows, soldiers, better consider what you have to do, [friends,
Than I, that have not well the gift of tongue,
Can lift your blood up with persuasion.

Enter a Messenger.

Mess. My lord, here are letters for you.

Hot. I cannot read them now.

O gentlemen, the time of life is short;
To spend that shortness basely, were too long;
If life did ride upon a dial's point,
Still ending at the arrival of an hour.
An if we live, we live to tread on kings;
If die, brave death, when princes die with us!
Now for our conscience,—the arms are fair,
When the intent of bearing them is just.

Enter another Messenger.

Mess. My lord, prepare; the king comes on apace.

Hot. I thank him, that he cuts me from my tale;
For I profess not talking; only this—
Let each man do his best; and here draw I
A sword, whose temper I intend to stain
With the best blood that I can meet withal
In the adventure of this perious day.
Now,—Esperance!—Percy!—and set on.—
Sound all the lofty instruments of war,
And by that music let us all embrace:
For, heaven to earth, some of us never shall
A second time so do a courtesan.
[The trumpets sound. They embrace, and exit.]

ACT V.—SCENE IV.

A gallon knight he was, his name was Blunt;
Sensibly furnish'd like the king himself.
Doug. A fool go with thy soul, whither it goes!
A borrow'd title: hast thou bought too dear?
Why didst thou tell me that thou wert a king?
Hot. The king hath many marchings in his coats.
Doug. Now, by my sword, I will kill all his coats;
I'll murder all his wardrobe, piece by piece.
Until I meet the king.

Hot. Up, and away;
Our soldiers stand full fairly for the day. [Exit.

Other Alarums. Enter Falstaff.

Fal. Though I could 'scape shot free at London,
I fear the shot here: here's no scoring, but upon the pate.—Soft! who art thou! Sir Walter Blunt;—
there's honour for you; Here's no vanity!—I am as hot as molten lead, and as heavy too; God keep lead out of me! I need no more weight than my own bowed.—I have led my ragamuffins where they are peppered:—there's but three of my hundred and fifty left alive; and they are for the town's end, to beg during life. But who comes here?

Enter Prince Henry.

P. Hen. What, stand'st thou idle here? lend me
Many a nobleman lies stark and stiff [thy sword:
Under the hoofs of vaunting enemies, [sword.
Whose deaths are unreveng'd! Pr'ythee, lend me thy Fal. O Hal, I pr'ythee, give me leave to breathe awhile.—Tark Gregory never did such deeds in arms, as I have done this day. I have paid Percy, I have made him sure.

P. Hen. He is, indeed; and living to kill thee.
Lend me thy sword, I pr'ythee.

Fal. Nay, before God, Hal, if Percy be alive, thou get'st not my sword; but take my pistol, if thou wilt.

P. Hen. Give it me: What, is it in the case?

Fal. Ay, Hal; 'tis hot, 'tis hot; there's that will sack a city. [The Prince draws out a bottle of sack.

P. Hen. What, is't a time to jest and dally now?

Fal. Well, if Percy be alive, I'll pierce him. If he do come in my way, so; if he do not, if I come in his willingly, let him make a carbuncle of me.
I like not such a grinning humour as sir Walter hath:
Give me life: which if I can save, so; if not, honour comes unlooked for, and there's an end. [Exit.

SCENE IV.—Another part of the Field.

Alarums. Excursions. Enter the King, Prince Henry, Prince John, and Westmoreland.

K. Hen. I pr'ythee,
Harry, withdraw thyself; thou bleed'st too much:—
Lord John of Lancaster, go you with him.

P. John. Not I, my lord, unless I did bleed too.
I do beseech your majesty, make up, Lest your retirement do amaze your friends.

K. Hen. I will do so:—
My lord of Westmoreland, lead him to his tent.

West. Come, my lord, I will lead you to your tent.

P. Hen. Lead me, my lord! I do not need your help.
And heaven forbid, a shallow scratch should drive
The prince of Wales from such a field as this;
Where stain'd nobility lies trodden on.

And rebels' arms triumph in massacres!

P. John. We breathe too long:—Come, cousin
Westmoreland,
Our duty this way lies: for God's sake come.

[Exit Prince John and Westmoreland.]
P. Hen. By heaven, thou hast deceiv'd me, Lan-. I did not think thee lord of such a spirit: —[easter, Before, I lov'd thee as a brother, John; But now, I do respect thee as my soul. K. Hen. I saw him hold thee Perci at the point, With lustier maintenance than I did look for Of such an ungrown warrior. P. Hen. O, this boy, [Exeunt. AYeare. Enter Douglas.

Douglas. Another King! they grow like Hydras' I am the Douglas, fatal to all those [heads: That wear those colours on them.—What art thou, That counterfeiter'st the person of a king? K. Hen. The king himself, who, Douglas, griev's So many of his shadows thou hast met, [at heart, And not the very king. I have two boys, Seek Percy, and thyself, about the field: But, seeing thou fall'st on me so luckily, I will assay thee; so defend thyself. Douglas. I fear, thou art another counterfeit; And yet, in faith, thou bear'st thee like a king: But, seeing thou art sure on such a trust, art'ru' er thee, and thus I win thee. [They fight: the King being in danger, enter Prince Henry. P. Hen. Hold up th' head, vile Scot, or th' head art Never to hold it up again! the spirits [like Of Shirley, Stafford, Blunt, are in my arms: It is the prince of Wales, that threatens thee; Who never promiseth, but he means to pay. [They fight: Douglas flies. Cheers, my lord; How fares your grace? — Sir Nicholas Gawsewy hath for succour sent, And so hath Clifton: I'll to Clifton straight. K. Hen. Stay, and breathe awhile: Thou hast redeem'd thy lost opinion And shew'd, thou mak'st some tender of my life, In this fair rescue thou hast brought to me. P. Hen. O heaven! they did me too much injury, That ever said, I hearken'd for thy death, If it were so, I might have let alone The insulting hand of Douglas over you; Which would have been as speedy in thy end, As all the poison's wiles, that threatens thee, And sav'd the treacherous labour of your son. K. Hen. Make up to Clifton, I'll to sir Nicholas Gawsewy. [Exit King Henry. Enter Hotspur.

Hot. If I mistake not, thou art Harry Monmouth. P. Hen. Thou speak'st as if I would deny my name. Hot. My name is Harry Percy. P. Hen. Why, then I see A very valiant relish of the name. I am the prince of Wales; and think not, Percy, To share with me in glory any more: Two stars keep not their motion in one sphere; Nor can one England brook a double reign, Of Harry Percy and the prince of Wales. Hot. Nor shall it, Harry, for the hour is come To end the one of us; And 'would to God, Thy name in arms were now as great as mine! P. Hen. I'll make it greater, ere I part from thee; And all the budding honours on thy crest I'll crop to make a garland for my head. Hot. I can no longer brook thy vanities. [They fight. Enter Falstaff; he fights with Falstaff, who falls down as if he were dead, and exit Douglas. Hotspur is wounded and falls. Hot. O, Harry, thou hast robb'd me of my youth: I better brook the loss of brittle life, Than those proud titles thou hast won of me; [flesh They wound my thoughts, worse than thy sword But thought's the slave of life, and life, time's fool; And time, that takes survey of all the world, Must have a stop. O, I could prophesy, But that the earthy and cold hand of death Lies on my tongue:—No, Percy, thou art dust, And food for —— [Dies. P. Hen. For worms, brave Percy: Fare thee well, great heart! —— Ill-ween'd ambition, how much art thou shrunk! When that this body did contain a spirit, A kingdom for it was too small a bound; But now, two paces of the vilest earth Is room enough:—This earth, that bears thee dead Bears not alive so stout a gentleman. If thou wert sensible of courtesy, I should not make so dear a show of zeal: —— But, seeing, in the shape of some mangled face, And, even in thy behalf, I'll thank myself For doing these fair rites of tenderness. Alieu, and take thy praise with thee to heaven! Thy ignomy sleep with thee in the grave, But not remember'd in thy epitaph!— [He sees Falstaff the ground. What! old acquaintance I could not all this flesh Keep in a little life! Poor Jack, farewell! I could have better spare'd a better man. O, I should have a heavy miss of thee, If I were much in love with vanity. Death hath not struck so fat a deer to-day, Though many dearer in this bloody fray:— Embowell'd will I see thee by and by: Till then, in blood by noble Percy lie. [Exit. Fal. [Rising slowly.] Embowell'd I if thou embowell me to-day, I'll give you leave to powder me, and eat me too, to-morrow. 'Sblood, 'twas time to counterfeit, or that hot termagant Scot had paid me scot and lot too. Counterfeit! I lie, I am no counterfeiter: To die is to be a counterfeiter; for he is but the counterfeit of a man; but the man is counterfeit dying, when a man thereby liveth, is to be no counterfeit, but the true and perfect image of life indeed. The better part of valour is—discretion; in which the better part I have saved my life. 'Zounds, I am afraid of this gunpowder Percy, though he be dead; low, if he should counterfeit too, and rise! I am afraid, he would prove the better counterfeiter. Therefore I'll make him sure: yea, and I'll swear I killed him. Why may not he rise, as well as I? Nothing confutes me but eyes, and nobody sees me. Therefore, sirrah, [stabbing him] with a new wound in thy thigh, come you along with me. [Takes Hotspur on his back. Re-enter Prince Henry and Prince John. P. Hen. Come, brother John, full bravely hast thou Thy maiden sword. [flesh'd P. John. But, soft! whom have we here? Did you not tell me this fat man was dead? P. Hen. I did; I saw him dead, breathless and Upon the ground. —[bleeding Arise, Henry! or is it phantasy? That plays upon our eye-sight? I pr'ythee, speak; We will not trust our eyes, without our ears:— Thou art not what thou seem'st. Fal. No, that's certain; I am not a double man:}

but if I be not Jack Falstaff then am I a Jack. There is Percy: [throwing the body down.] if your father will do me any honour, so; if not, let him kill the next Percy himself. I look to be either earl or duke, I can assure you.

P. Hen. Why, Percy I killed myself, and saw thee dead.

Fal. Didst thou?—Lord, lord, how this world is given to lying! I grant you I was down, and out of breath; and so was he; but we rose both at an instant, and fought a long hour by Shrewsbury clock. If I may be believed, so; if not, let them, that should reward valour, bear the sin upon their own heads. I'll take it upon my death, I gave him this wound in the thigh; if the man were alive, and would deny it, I would make him eat a piece of my sword.

P. John. This is the strongest tale that ever I heard.

P. Hen. This is the strongest fellow, brother John. Come, bring your luggage nobly on your back: For my part, if a lie may do thee grace, I'll gild it with the happiest terms I have.

[Exit retreating.]

The trumpet sounds retreat, the day is ours. Come, brother, let's to the highest of the field, To see what friends are living, who are dead.

[Exit Prince Henry and Prince John.

Fal. I'll follow, as they say, for reward. He that rewards me, God reward him! If I do grow great, I'll grow less; for I'll purge, and leave sack, and live cleanly, as a nobleman should do.

SCENE V.—Another part of the field.

The trumpets sound. Enter King Henry, Prince Henry, Prince John, Westmoreland, and others, with Worcester and Vernon, prisoners.

K. Hen. Thus ever did rebellion find rebuke.— Ill-spirited Worcester! did we not send grace, Pardon, and terms of love to all of you? And would'st thou turn our offers contrary?

Mische the tenor of thy kinsman's trust! Three knights upon our party slain to-day, A noble earl, and many a creature else, Had been alive this hour, If, like a christian, thou hadst truly borne Betwixt our armies true intelligence. Wor. What I have done, my safety urg'd me to; And I embrace this fortune patiently, Since not to be avoided it falls on me.

K. Hen. Bear Worcester to the death, and Vernon Other offenders we will pause upon. [too:]

How goes the field?

P. Hen. The noble Scot, Lord Douglas, when he saw The fortune of the day quite turn'd from him, The noble Percy slain, and all his men Upon the foot of fear,—fled with the rest, And, falling from a hill, he was so bruised, That the pursuers took him. At my tent The Douglas is; and I beseech your grace, I may dispose of him.

K. Hen. With all my heart.

P. Hen. Then, brother John of Lancaster, to you This honourable bounty shall belong: Go to the Douglas, and deliver him Up to his pleasure, ransomless, and free:

His valour, shewn upon our crests to-day, Hath taught us how to cherish such high deeds, Even in the bosom of our adversaries. [power.

K. Hen. Then this remains,—that we divide our You, son John, and my cousin Westmoreland, Towards York shall bend you, with your dearest speed, To meet Northumberland, and the prelate Scroop, Who, as we hear, are busily in arms: Myself,—and you, son Harry,—will towards Wales, To fight with Glendower, and the earl of March. Rebellion in this land shall lose his sway, Meeting the check of such another day: And since this business so fair is done, Let us not leave till all our own be won. [Exit.

SECOND PART OF

KING HENRY IV.

The first edition of this play was the quart of 1600, in which year it was twice reprinted in the same form. As it is mentioned in Nares’ Wits’ Treasury, 1598, and contains an allusion to the murder of the sons of Anarach the Third by their brother Mahomet, which took place Feb. 1598: the tragedy must have been written in the intervening period. It was entered at Stationers’ Hall, August 23, 1600.

The transactions comprised in the history take up almost nine years. The action commences with the account of Hotspur’s being defeated and killed, 1403; and closes with the death of Henry the Fourth, and the coronation of Henry the Fifth, 1413-14.

SCENE.—England.
INDUCTION.

Warkworth.—Before Northumberland's Castle.

Enter Rumour, painted full of tongues.

Rum. Open your ears: For which of you will stop The vent of hearing, when loud Rumour speaks? I, from the orient to the drooping west, Making the wind my post-horse, still unbold The acts commenced on this ball of earth: Upon my tongue continual slanders ride; The, which in every language I pronounce, Stifling the ears of men with false reports. I speak of peace, while covert enmity, Under the smile of safety, wounds the world: And who but Rumour, who but only I. Make fearful musters, and prepar'd defence; Whilst the big year, swol'n with some other grief, Is thought with child by the stern tyrant war, And so much matter! Rumour is a pipe Blown with surmisings, jealousies, conjectures; And so of easy and so plain a stop, That the blunt monster with uncounted heads, The still-discordant waver ing multitude, Can play upon it. But what need I thus My well-known body to anatomize Among my household? Why is Rumour here? I run before king Harry's victory; Who, in a bloody field by Shrewsbury, Hath beaten down young Hotspur, and his troops, Quenching the flame of bold rebellion Even with the rebels' blood. But what mean I To speak so true? That my office is To noise ahead,—that Harry Monmouth fell Under the wrath of noble Hotspur's sword; And that the king before the Douglas' rage Stood his anointed head as low as death. This have I rumour'd through the peasant towns Between that royal field of Shrewsbury And this worm-eaten hold of ragged stone, Where Hotspur's father, old Northumberland, Lies crafty-sick: the posts come tiring on, And not a man of them brings other news Than they have learn'd of me; From Rumour's tongues They bring smooth comforts false, worse than true wrongs. [Exit.]

ACT I.

SCENE I.—The same.

The Porter before the Gate; Enter LORd BARDOLPH.
Bard. Who keeps the gate here, ho!—Where is the Part, What shall I say you are? [Enter Harcourt.]
Bard. To Harcourt, and to thy lordship's return, The lord Bardolph doth attend him here.
Part. His lordship is walk'd forth into the orchard; Please it your honour, knock but at the gate, And he himself will answer.

Enter Northumberland.

Bard. Here comes the earl.
North. What news, lord Bardolph? every minute Should be the father of some stratagem: [now The times are wild; contention, like a horse Full of high feeding, madly hath broke loose, And bears down all before him.
Bard. Noble earl, I bring you certain news from Shrewsbury. North. Good, an heaven will!
Bard. As good as heart can wish:—

The king is almost wounded to the death; And, in the fortune of my lord your son, Prince Harry slain outright; and both the Blunts, Kill'd by the hand of Douglas: young prince John, And Westmoreland, and Stafford, fled the field; And Harry Monmouth's brawn, the hulk sir John, Is prisoner in your son: O, such a day, So fought, so follow'd, and so fairly won, Came not, till now, to dignify the times, Since Cæsar's fortunes!

How is this deriv'd?

Saw you the field? came you from Shrewsbury? Bard. I spake with one, my lord, that came from A gentleman well bred, and of good name. [thence; That freely render'd me these news for true.

North. Here comes my servant, Travers, whom I On Tuesday last to listen after news. [sent Bard. My lord, I over-ride him on the way; And he is furnish'd with no certainties, More than he haply may retail from me.

Enter Travers.

North. Now, Travers, what good tidings come with you?
Trav. My lord, sir John Umfrevel turn'd me back With fearful tidings; and, being better hord, Out-rode me. After him, came, spurring hard, A gentleman almost forspent with speed, That stopp'd by me to breathe his bloodyed horse: He ask'd the way to Chester; and of him I did demand, what news from Shrewsbury. He told me, that rebellion had bad luck, And that young Harry Percy's spur was cold, Which he said, he gave his able horse the head, And, bending forward, struck his armed heels Against the panting sides of his poor jade Up to the rowel-head; and starting so, He seem'd in running to devour the way, Staving no longer question.

North. Ha!—Again, said he, young Harry Percy's spur was cold? Of Hotspur, coldspur? that rebellion Had met ill luck!
Bard. My lord, I'll tell you what;— If my young lord your son have not the day, Upon mine honour, for a silken point I'll give my barony: never talk of it.

North. Why should the gentleman, that rode by Give them such instances of loss?
Travers, Bard. Who, he?
He was some hilding fellow that had stole The horse he rode on; and, upon my life, Spoke at a venture.

Look, here comes more news.

Enter Morton.

North. Yea, this man's brow, like to a title-leaf, Foretells the nature of a tragic volume: So looks the stormd, whereon the imperious flood Hath left a witness'd usurpation.——
Say, Morton, didst thou come from Shrewsbury?
Mort. I ran from Shrewsbury, my noble lord; Where hateful death put on his ugliest mask, To fright our party.

How doth my son, and brother?
Thou tremblest: and the whiteness in thy cheek Is auster than thy tongue to tell thy errand. Even such a man, so faint, so spiritless, So dull, so dead in look, so woe-begone, Drew Priam's curtain in the dead of night, And would have told him, half his train was burn'd But Priam found the fire, ere he his tongue, And I my Percy's death, ere thou report'st it.
MORTON  Whose swift wrath beat down the never-daunted Percy to the earth.

Second Part. Act I. Sc. 1
ACT I.—SCENE I.

This thou would'st stay,—Your son did thus, and thus:
Your brother thus: so fought the noble Douglas:
Stopping my greedy ear with their bold deeds:
But in the end, to stop mine ear indeed.
Thou hast a sigh to blow away this praise,
Ending with—brother, son, and all are dead.
Mor. Douglas is living, and your brother, yet:
But, for my lord your son,—
Why, he is dead.

See, what a ready tongue suspicion hath!
He, that but fears the thing he would not know,
Hath, by instinct, knowledge from others' eyes;
That what he fear'd is charted. Yet speak, Morton;
The tell them thy ear, his divination lies,
And I will take it for thee to make me gaided:
Your spirit is too true, your fears too certain.

North. Yet for all this, say not that Percy's dead.
I see a strange confession in the heirs:
Thou shak'st thy head; and hold'st it fear, or sio,
If he be slain, say so:
The tongue offended not, that reports his death:
And he doth sin, that doth belie the dead;
Not he, which says the dead is not alive.
Yet the first bringer of unwelcome news
Hath but a losing office; and this tongue
Sounds ever after as aullen bell,
Remember'd knowing a departing friend.
Bard. I cannot think, my lord, your son is dead.
Mor. I am sorry, I should force you to believe
That, which I would to heaven I had not seen:
But these mine eyes saw him in blood.
Read'ring faint quittance, weak'ning by each breath'd,
To Harry Monmouth; whose swift wrath beat down
The temples of a curse, the neck of a crime.
From whence life he never more sprung up.
In few, his death (whose spirit bear a fire
Even to the dullest peasant in his camp,
Being bruit'd once, took fire and heat away
From the best temper'd courage in his troops:
For from his metal was his party steel'd;
Though once in him abated, all the rest
Turn'd on themselves, like dall and heavy lead.
And as the thing that's heavy in itself,
Upon enforcement, flies with greatest speed;
So did our men, heavy to Hotspur's force,
Lend to this weight such lighten'ss with their fear,
That arrows fled not nearer toward their aim,
That did our soldiers, aiming at their safety.
Fly from the field: then was that noble Worcester
Too soon ta'en prisoner: and that furious Scot,
The bloody Douglas, whose well labouring sword
Had three times slain the appearance of the king,
'Gain vail his stomach, and did grace the shame
Of those that turn'd their backs; and, in his flight,
Strange in fear, was took. all the sum.
Is,—that the king hath won; and hath sent out
A speedy power to encounter you, my lord,
Under the conduct of young Lancaster.
And Westminster: this is the news at fall.
North. For this I shall have time enough to mourn.
In poison there is physic: and these news,
Having been well, that would have made me sick,
Being sick, have in some measure made me well:
And as the wretch, whose fever-weak'd joints,
Like strengthless hinges, buckle under life,
Impatient of his fit, breaks like a fire,
Out of his keeper's arms: so now say limbs,
Weakened with grief, being now engag'd with grief,
Are.thrice themselves: hence therefore, thou nice
chutch;
SCENE II.—London. A Street.

Enter Sir John Falstaff, with his Page bearing his sword and buckler.

Fal. Sirrah, you giant, what says the doctor to my water?

Page. He said, sir, the water itself was a good healthy water: but, for the party that owed it, he might have more diseases than he knew for.

Fal. Service at my lord: but, by God, I must have my dinner: the brain of this fool's-compounded ale, man, is not able to vent that many things that tends to laughter. But, sir, more than I invent, or is invented on me: I am not only witty in myself, but the cause that wit is in other men. I do here walk before thee, like a sow, that hath overthrown all her litter but one: if the prince put thee into my service for any other reason than to set me off, why then I have no judgment. Thou whoreson mandrake, thou art fit to be worn in my cap, than to wait at my heels. I was never manned with an agate till now; but I will set you neither in gold nor silver, but in vile apparel, and send you back again to your master, for a jewel; the juvenile, the prince your master, whose chin is not yet fledged. I will sooner have a beard grow in the palm of my hand, than he shall get one on his cheek; and let it not be said, his face is a face-royal: God may finish it when he will, it is not a hair amiss yet: he may keep it still as a face-royal, for a barber shall never earn sixpence out of it; and yet he will be crowing, as if he had writ man ever since his father was a bachelor. He may keep his own grace, but he is almost out of mine, I can assure him.

What said my master then about the satyris for my shy hand and sleep?

Page. He said, sir, you should procure him better assurance than Bardolph: he would not take his bond and yours: he liked not the security.

Fal. Let him be damned like the guttun: may his tongue be hotter!—A whoreson Aechitophel! a rascally yea-forsaith knave! to bear a gentleman in hand, and that stand upon security!—The whoreson smalls and gattes do now wear nothing but high shoes, and bunches of keys at their girdles; and if a man is thorough with them in honest taking up, then they must stand upon—security. I had as lief they would put ratsbane in my mouth, as offer to stop it with security. I looked he should have got me the two and twenty shillings of satn, as I am a true knight, and he sends me security. Well, he may sleep in security; for he hath the horn of abundance, and the lightness of his wife shines through it: and yet cannot he see, though he have his own lantern to light him.

—Where's Bardolph?

Page. He's gone into Smithfield to buy your worship a horse.

Fal. I bought him in Paul's; and he'll buy me a horse in Smithfield: an I could get me but a wife in the streets, I was manned, hosed, and vived.

Enter the Lord Chief Justice, and an Attendant.

Page. Sir, here comes the nobleman that committed the prince for striking him about Bardolph!

Fal. Wait close, I will not see him.

Ch. Just. What's he that goes there?

Attent. Falstaff, ain't please your lordship.

Ch. Just. He that was in question for the robbery?

Attent. He, my lord; but he hath since done good service at Shrewsbury; and, as I hear, is now going with some charge to the lord John of Looacaster.

Attent. Sir John Falstaff!

Fal. Boy, tell him, I am deaf.

Page. You must speak louder, my master is deaf.

Ch. Just. I am sure he is, to the hearing of any thing good.—Go, pluck him by the elbow; I must speak with him.

Attent. Sir John Falstaff.

Fal. What! a young knave, and beg! Is there not wars? is there not employment? Doth not the king lack subjects? do not the rebels need soldiers? Though it be a shame to be on any side but one, it is worse shame to beg than to be on the worst side, were it worse than the name of rebellion can tell how to make it.

Ch. Just. Why, sir, did I say you were an honest man?

Attent. Setting my knighthood and my soldiership aside, I had lied in my throat if I had said so.

Attent. I pray you, sir, then set your knighthood and your soldiership aside; and give me leave to tell you, you lie in your throat, if you say I am any other than an honest man.

Fal. Three bee leave to tell me so! I lay aside that which grows to me. If thou get'st any leave of me, hang me; if thou takest leave, thou wert better be hanged: You hunt-counter, hence! avvant!

Attent. Sir, my lord would speak with you.

Ch. Just. Sir John Falstaff, a word with you.

Fal. My good lord!—God give you your lordship good time! I will not stick to say, his face is a face-royal: I heard say, your lordship was sick: I hope, your lordship goes abroad by advice. Your lordship, though not clean past your youth, hath yet some smack of age in you, some relish of the saltiness of time; and I most humbly beseech your lordship, to have a reverend care of your health.

Ch. Just. Sir John Falstaff, I sent for you before your expedition to Shrewsbury.

Fal. An't please your lordship, I hear, his majesty is returned with some discomfort from Wales.

Ch. Just. I talk not of his majesty:—You would not come when I sent for you.

Fal. And I hear moreover, his highness is fallen into this same whoreson apoplexy.

Ch. Just. Well, heaven mend him! I pray, let me speak with you.

Fal. This apoplexy is, as I take it, a kind of lethargy, an't please your lordship; a kind of sleeping in the blood, a whoreson tingling.

Ch. Just. What tell you me of it? be it as it is.

Fal. It hath its original from your excellency; from study, and perturbation of the brain: I have read the cause of his effects in Galen: it is a kind of deafness.

Ch. Just. I think, you are fallen into the disease; for you hear not what I say to you.

Fal. Very well, my lord, very well: rather, an't please you, it is the disease of not listening, the malady of not marking, that I am troubled with.

Ch. Just. To punish you by the heels, would amend the attention of your ears; and I care not, if I do become your physician.

Fal. I am as poor as Job, my lord; but not so patient: your lordship may minister the pain of imprisonment to me, in respect of poverty; but how I should be your patient to follow your prescriptions, the wise may make some dram of a scruple, or, indeed, a scruple itself.

Ch. Just. I sent for you, when there were matters against you for your life, to come speak with me.

Fal. As I was then advised by my learned counsel in the laws of this land-service, I did not come.

Ch. Just. Well, the truth is, sir John, you live in great infamy.

Fal. He that buckles him in his belt, cannot live in less.
ACT I.—SCENE III.

Ch. Just. Your means are very slender, and your waste is great.
Fal. I would it were otherwise; I would my means were greater, and my waist slenderer.
Ch. Just. You have missed the youthful prince.
Fal. The young prince hath missed me: I am the fellow with the great belly, and he my dog.
Ch. Just. Well, I am loath to call a new-healed wound; your day's service at Shrewsbury hath a little gilded over your night's exploit on Gods-hill: you may thank the unquiet time for your quiet over-posting that action.
Fal. My lord?
Ch. Just. But since all is well, keep it so: wake not a sleeping wolf.
Fal. To wake a wolf, is as bad as to smell a fox.
Ch. Just. What! you are as a candle, the better part burnt out.
Fal. A wassal candle, my lord; all tallow: if I did say of wax, my growth would approve the truth.
Ch. Just. There is not a white hair on your face, but should have his effect of gravity.
Fal. His effect of gravy, gravy, gravy.
Ch. Just. You follow the young prince up and down, like his ill angel.
Fal. No, my lord; your ill angel is light; but, I hope, he that looks upon me, will take me without weighing: and yet, in some respects, I grant, I cannot go, I cannot tell: Virtue is of so little regard in these coster-monger times, that true value is turned bear-bead: Pregnancy is made a tapster, and hath his quick wit wasted in giving reckonings: all the other gifts appertaining to man, as the malice of this age shapes them, are not worth a gooseberry. You, that are old, consider not the capacities of us that are young: you measure the heat of our livers with the bitterness of your galls: and we that are in the vaward of our youth, I must confess, are wags too.
Ch. Just. Do you set down your name in the scroll of youth, that are written down old with all the characters of age? Have you not a moist eye? a dry hand? a yellow cheek? a white beard? a decreasing leg? an increasing belly? Is not your voice broken? Is your woid short? your chin double? your wit single? and every part you blasted with antiquity? and will you yet call yourself young? Fye, fye, fye, sir John!
Fal. My lord, I was born about three of the clock in the afternoon, with a white head, and something a round belly. For my voice,—I have lost it with hollaying, and singing of anthems. To approve my youth further, I will not: the truth is, I am only old in judgment and understanding; and be that will caper with me for a thousand marks, let him lend me the money, and have at him. For the box of the ear that the prince gave you,—he gave it like a rude prince, and you took it like a sensible lord. I have checked him for it; and the young lions repent: marry, not in ashes, and sackcloth; but in new silk, and old sack.
Ch. Just. Well, heaven send the prince a better companion!
Fal. Heaven send the companion a better prince! I cannot rid my hands of him.
Ch. Just. Well, the king hath sever'd you and prince Harry I hear, you are going with lord John of Lancaster against the archbishop, and the earl of Northumberland.
Fal. Yeas; I thank your pretty sweet wit for it. But look you pray, all you that kiss my lady peace at home, that our armies join not in a hot day! for, by the Lord, I take but two shirts out with me, and I mean not to sweat extraordinarily: if it be a hot day, an I brandish any thing but my bottle, I would I might never spit white again. There is not a dangerous action can peep out his head, but I am thrust upon it: Well, I cannot last for ever: But it was always yet the trick of our English nation, if they have a good thing, to make it too common. If you will needs say, I am an old man, you should give me rest. I would to God, my name were not so terrible to the enemy as it is. I were better to be eaten to death with rust, than to be scour'd to nothing with perpetual motion.
Ch. Just. Well, be honest, he honest; And God bless your expedition!
Fal. Will your lordship lend me a thousand pound, to furnish me forth?
Ch. Just. Not a penny, not a penny; you are too impatient to bear crosses.
Page. Fare you well: Command me to my cousin Westmoreland.
[Exeunt Chief Justice and Attendant.
Fal. If I do, fillip me with a three-man beetle.—
A man can no more separate age and covetousness, than he can part young limbs and lechery: but the gout galls the one, and the pox pinches the other; and so high a degree prevent my curses. —Boy!—
Page. Sir?
Fal. What money is in my purse?
Page. Seven greats and two-pence.
Fal. I can get no remedy against this consumption of the purse: borrowing only lingers and lingers it out, but the disease is incurable. —Go bear this letter to my lord of Lancaster; this to the prince; this to the earl of Westmoreland; and this to old mistress Ursula, whom I have weekly sworn to marry since I perceived the first white hair on my chin: About it; you know where to find me. [Exit Page.] A pox of this gout! or, a gout of this pox! for the one, or the other, plays the rogue with my great toe. It is no matter, if I do bolt; I have the wars for my colour, and my pension shall seem the more reasonable: A good wit will make use of any thing; I will turn diseases to commodity. —

SCENE III.

York.—A Room in the Archbishop's Palace.

Arch. Thus have you heard our cause, and known our means; And, my most noble friends, I pray you all, Speak plainly your opinions of our hopes:— And first, lord marshal, what say you to it?—
Mowbray. I well allow the occasion of our arms; But gladly would be better satisfied, How, in our means, we should advance ourselves To look with forehead bold and big enough Upon the power and puissance of the king.
Hast. Our present muster grows upon the field To five and twenty thousand men of choice; And our supplies live largely in the hope Of great Northumberland, whose bosom burns With an incensed fire of injuries.
Dard. The question then, lord Hastings, standeth Whether our present five and twenty thousand [thus; May hold up head without Northumberland.
Hast. With him, we may.
Dard. Ay, marry, there's the point; But if without him we be thought too feeble, My judgment is, we should not step too far Till we had his assistance by the hand:
For, in a theme so bloody-fac'd as this,
Before he was what thou would'st have him be?
And being now trimm'd in thine own desires,
Thou, beastly feeder, art so full of him,
That thou provok'st thyself to cast him up.
So, so, thou common dog, didst thou disgrace
Thy glutious bosom of the royal Richard?
And now thou wouldst eat thy dead vomit up,
And bow'ls to find it? What trust is in these times?
They that, when Richard liv'd, would have him die,
Are now become enamour'd on his grave:
Thou, that throw'st dust upon thy goodly head,
When through proud London he came sighing on
After the admired heels of Bolingbroke,
Cry'st at now, O earth, yield us that king again,
And take thou this! O thoughts of men accurst!
Past, and to come, seems best; things present, worst.
Momb. Shall we go draw our numbers, and set on?
Hust. We are time's subjects, and time bids be gone.
[Exeunt,

ACT II.

SCENE I.—London. A Street.

Enter Hostess; Fung, and his Boy, with her; and Snare following.

Host. Master Fang, have you entered the action?
Fung. It is entered.
Host. Where is your yeoman? Is it a lusty yeoman?
Will a stand to 't?
Fung. Sirrah, where's Snare?
Host. O lord, ay: good master Snare.
Snare. Here, here.
Fung. Snare, we must arrest sir John Falstaff.
Snare. Seven, good master Snare; I have entered him and all
Snare. It may chance cost some of us our lives, for he will stab.
Host. Alas the day! take heed of him; he stabbed me in mine own house, and that most beastly: in good faith, a cares not what mischief he doth, if his weapon be out: he will fain like a bloody devil; he will spare neither man, woman, nor child.
Fang. If I can close with him, I care not for his thrust.
Host. No, nor I neither: I'll be at your elbow.
Fang. An I but list him once; an a come but within my vicre—
Host. I am undone by his going; I warrant you, he's an inimitive thing upon my score:—Good master Fang, hold him sure;—good master Snare, let him not scape. He comes continually to pie-corner, (saving your manhoods,) to buy a saddle; and he's indited to dinner at the lubbar's head in Lumbert-street, to master Smooth's the silkenman: I pray ye, since my exion is entered, and my case so openly exposed, I hope you will, let him be brought in to his an-swer. A hundred mark is a long loan for a poor lone woman to bear: and I have borne, and borne, and borne; and have been faff'd off, and faff'd off, and faff'd off, from this day to that day, that it is a shame to be thought on. There is no honesty in such a dealing; unless a woman should be made an ass, and a beast, to bear every knave's wrong.

Enter Sir John Falstaff, Page, and Bardolph.

Yonder he comes; and that arrant malmsey-nese knave, Bardolph, with him. Do your offices, do your offices, master Fang, and master Snare; do me, do me, do me your offices.
ACT II.—SCENE I.

Fal. How now? whose mare's dead? what's the matter?
Fal. Sir John, I arrest you at the suit of mistress Quickly.
Fal. Away, varlets!—Draw, Bardolph; cut me off the villain's head; throw the queen in the channel.
Host. Throw me in the channel! I'll throw thee in the channel. Wilt thou wilt thou? thou bastards rogue!—Murther, murder! O thou honey-suckle villain! wilt thou kill God's officers, and the king's? O thou honey-sucked rogue! thou art a honey-sweet, a man queller, and a woman queller.
Fal. Keep than thou off, Bardolph.
Fal. A rescue! a rescue!
Host. Good people, bring a rescue or two.—Thou wot'st thou wot'st thou? do, do, thou rogue! do, thou, hemp-sessed.
Fal. Away, you scullion! you rumpollion! you fustilarian! I'll tackle your catastrophe.

Enter the Lord Chief Justice, attended.
Ch. Just. What's the matter? keep the peace here, ho!
Host. Good my lord, be good to me! I beseech you, stand to me! —[ing here!
Ch. Just. How now, Sir John? what, are you brawl thy place, your time, and business?
You should have been well on your way to York.—Stand from him, fellow! Wherefore hang'st thou on him?
Host. O, my most worshipful lord, an't please your grace, I am a poor widow of Eastcheap, and he is arrested at my suit.
Ch. Just. For what sum?
Host. It is more than for some, my lord; it is for all, I have: he hath eaten me out of house and home; he hath put all my substance into that fat belly of his;—but I will have some of it out again, or I'll ride thee o' nights, like the mare.
Fal. I think, I am as like to ride the mare, if I have any vantage of ground to get up.
Ch. Just. How comes this, sir John? Fye! what man of good temper would endure this tempest of excoriation? Are you not ashamed, to enforce a poor widow to so rough a course to come by her own?
Fal. What is the gross sum that I owe thee?
Host. Marry, if thou went an honest man, thyself, and thine house, I would set thee upon a paraded-gilt goblet, sitting in my Dolphin-chamber, at the round table, by a sea-coal fire, upon Wednesday in Whitsun-week, when the prince broke thy head for liking his father to a singing-man of Windsor; thou didst swear to me then, as I was washing thy wound, to marry me, and make me thy lady thy wife. Canst thou deny it? Did not goodwife Keech, the butcher's wife, come in then, and call me gossip Quickly! coming in to borrow a mess of vinegar; telling us, she had a good dirk of prawns; whereby thou didst desire to eat some; whereby I told thee they were ill for a green wound? And didst thou not, when she was gone down stairs, desire me to be more so to familiarity with such poor people, saying, that ere long they should call me madam? And didst thou not kiss me, and bid me fetch thee thirty shillings? I put thee now to thy book-oath; deny it, if thou canst.
Fal. My lord, this is a poor mad soul: and she says, up and down the town, that her eldest son is lay thereof to me upon a bag of salt, the truth is, poverty hath distracted her. But for these foolish officers, I beseech you, I may have redress against them.
Ch. Just. Sir John, sir John, I am well acquainted with your manner of wrenching the true cause the false way. It is not a comendit brow, nor the thron of words that come with such more than impudent sauciness from you, can thrust me from a level consider-ation: you have, as it appears to me, practised upon the easy-yielding spirit of this woman, and made her serve your uses both in a piece and person.

Host. Ye, in troth, my lord.
Ch. Just. Pr'ythee, peace:—Pay her the debt you owe her, and unpay the villain you have done with her: the one you may do with sterling money, and the other with current repentance.
Fal. My lord, I will not undergo this snare without reply. You call honourable boldness, impudent sauciness; if a man will make courtly, and say nothing, he is virtuous: No, my lord, my humble duty re-remembered, I will not be your suitor; I say to you, I do desire to be among those officers, being upon hasty employment in the king's affairs.
Ch. Just. You speak as having power to do wrong, but answer in the effect of your reputation, and satisfy the poor woman.
Fal. Come hither, hostess. —[Taking her aside.
Enter Gower.
Ch. Just. Now, master Gower: What news?
Gow. The king, my lord, and Harry prince of Wales Are near at hand: the rest the paper tells.
Fal. As I am a gentleman:——
Ch. Just. Nay, you said so before.
Fal. As I am a gentleman;—Come, no more words of that sort here.
Host. By this heavenly ground I tread on, I must be fain to pawn both my plate, and the tapestry of my dining-chambers.
Fal. Glasses, glasses, is the only drinking; and for thy walls,—a pretty slight drollery, or the story of the prodigal, or the German hunting in water-work, is worth a thousand of these bed-hangings, and these fly-bitten tapsteries. Let it be ten pound if thou canst. Come, as it were not for thy honours, there is not a better wench in England. Go, wash thy face, and draw thy action: Come, thou must not be in this humour with me; dost not know me? Come, come, I know thou wast set on to this.
Host. Fray thee, sir John, let it be but twenty pounds, and I will be loath to pawo my plate, in good earnest, la.
Fal. Let it alone; I'll make other shift: you'll be a fool still.
Host. Well, you shall have it, though I pawo my gown. I hope, you'll come to supper: You'll pay me altogether!
Fal. Will I live?—Go, with her, with her; [to BARDOLPH hook on, hook on.
Fal. Will you have Doll Tear-sheets meet you at supper?
Fal. No more words, let's have her.
[Exeunt Hostess, BARDOLPH, Officers, & Page.
Ch. Just. I have heard better news.
Fal. What's the news, my good lord?
Ch. Just. Where lay the king last night?
Gow. At Basingstoke, my lord.
Fal. I hope, my lord, all's well: What's the news, my lord?
Ch. Just. Come all his forces back?
Gow. No, fifteen hundred foot, five hundred horse, Are march'd up to the lord of Lancaster.
Against Northumberland, and the archbishop.
Fal. Comes the king back from Wales, my noble lord?
Ch. Just. You shall have letters of me presently.
Come, go along with me, good master Gower.

Fal. My lord!

Ch. Just. What’s the matter?

Fal. Master Gower, shall I entreat you with me to dinner?

Gow. I must wait upon my good lord here: I thank you, good sir John.

Ch. Just. Sir John, you loiter here too long, being you are to take soldiers up in counties as you go.

Fal. Will you sup with me, master Gower?

Ch. Just. What foolish master taught you these manners, sir John?

Fal. Master Gower, if they become me not, he was a fool that taught them me.—This is the right fencing grace, my lord; tap for tap, and so part fair.

Ch. Just. Now the lord lighten thee! thou art a great fool. [Exeunt.]

SCENE II.—Another street.

Enter Prince Henry and Poins.

P. Hen. Trust me, I am exceeding weary.

Poins. Is it come to that? I had thought weariness durst not have attached one of so high blood.

P. Hen. ’Tis faith it doeth me; though it discourseth the complexion of my greatness to acknowledge it. Doth it not shew vilenly in me, to desire small beer?

Poins. Why, a prince should not be so hollily studied, as to remember so weak a composition.

P. Hen. Belike then, my appetite was not princely got; for, by my troth, I do now remember the poor creature, small beer. But, indeed, these humble considerations make me out of love with my greatness. What a disgrace is it to me, to remember thy name! or to know thy face to-morrow? or to take note how many pair of silk stockings thou hast; viz. these, and those that were of peach-colour’d, and one of them? or bear the inventory of thy shirts; as, one for superfluity, and one other for use?—but that, the tennis court-keeper knows better than I; for it is a low elb of linen with thee, when thou keepest not racket there; as thou hast not done a great while, because the rest of thy low-countries have made a shift to eat up thy holland: and God knows, whether those that baw out the parts of thy linen, shall inherit his kingdom: but the midwives say, the children are not in the fault; whereupon the world increases, and kindreds are mightily strengthened.

Poins. How ill it follows, after you have laboured so hard, you should talk so idly? Tell me, how many good young princes would do so, their fathers being so sick as yours at this time is.

P. Hen. Shall I tell thee one thing, Poins? Poins. Yes; and let it be an excellent good thing.

P. Hen. It shall serve among wits of no higher breeding than thine.

Poins. Go to; I stand the push of your one thing that you will tell.

P. Hen. Why, I tell thee,—it is not meet that I should be sad, now my father is sick: albeit I could tell to thee, (as to one it pleases me, for fault of a better, to call my friend,) I could be sad, and sad indeed too.

Poins. Very hardly upon such a subject.

P. Hen. By this hand, thou think’st me as far in the devil’s book, as thou, and Falstaff, for obstinacy and persistency: Let the end try the man. But I tell thee,—my heart bleeds inwardly, that my father is so sick: and keeping such vile company as thou art, hath reason taken from me all ostentation of sorrow?

Poins. The reason?

P. Hen. What wouldst thou think of me, if I should weep?

Poins. I would think thee a most princely hypocrite.

P. Hen. It would be every man’s thought, and thou art a blessed fellow, to think as every man thinks; never a man’s thought in the world keeps the road-way better than thine: every man would think me an hypocrite indeed. And what accites your most worshipful thought, to think so?

Poins. Why, because you have been so slow, and so much engraven to Falstaff.

P. Hen. And to thee.

Poins. By this light, I am well spoken of, I can hear it with my own ears: the word that they can say of me is, that I am a second brother, and that I am a proper fellow of my hands: and those two things, I confess, I cannot help. By the mass, here comes Bardolph.

P. Hen. And the boy that I gave Falstaff: he had him from me christian; and look, if the fat villain have not transformed him apace.

Enter Bardolph and Page.

Bard. ’Save your grace!

P. Hen. And yours, most noble Bardolph!

Bard. Come, you virtuous ass, [to the Page.] you bashful fool, must you be blushing? wherefore blush now? What a maidenly am I at amours you become? Is it such a matter, to get a pottle-pot’s maidshead? Page. He called me even now, my lord, through a red lattice, and I discerned no part of his face from the window: at last, I spied his eyes; and, methought he had made two holes in the ale-wife’s new petitcoat, and peeped through.

P. Hen. Hath not the boy prorated?

Bard. Away, you whoreson upright rabbit, away! Page. Away, sir, you ass. Althea dreamed she was delivered of a fire-brand; and therefore I call him her dream.

P. Hen. A crown’s worth of good interpretation.—There it is, boy. [Gives him money.] Poins. O, that this good blossom could be kept from the caskers!—Well, there’s sixpence to preserve thee.

Bard. An you do not make him be hanged among you, the gallows shall have wrong.

P. Hen. And how doth thy master, Bardolph?

Bard. Well, my lord. I heard of your grace’s coming to town; there’s a letter for you.

Page. Delivered with good respect.—And how dath the marllemas, your master?

Bard. In bolely health, sir.

Poins. Marry, the immortal part needs a physician, but that moves him not, though that be sick, itteth not.

P. Hen. I do allow this wen to be as familiar with me as my dog: and he holds his place; for, look you, how he writeth.

Page. [Reads.] John Falstaff, knight.—Every man must know that: as oft as he has occasion to name himself. Even like those that are kin to the king; for they never prick their finger, but they say, There is some of the king’s blood spilt: How comes that? says he, that, takes upon him not to conceive: the answer is as ready as a borrower’s cap, I am the king’s poor cousin. Nay, they will be kin to us, or they will fetch it from Japhet. But the letter:—

Poins. Sir John Falstaff, knight, to the son of the king, nearest his father, Harry prince of Wales, greeting,—Why this is a certificate.
ACT II.—SCENE IV.

P. Hen. Peace!

Poins. I will imitate the honourable Roman in brevity: he sure means brevity in breath; short winded.

—I commend you to her; I commend thee, and I leave thee. Be not too familiar with Poins: for he misuses thy favors so much, that he swears thou art to marry his sister Nell. Repeat at idle times as thou may'st, and so farewell.

Thee, by you and so, (which is as much as to say, as thou wast him,) Jack Falstaff, with my familiars; John, with my brothers and sisters; and Sir John with all Europe.

My lord, I will steep this letter in sack, and make him eat it.

P. Hen. That's to make him eat twenty of his words. But do you use me thus, Ned! must I marry your sister? Poins. May the witch have no worse fortune! but I never said so.

P. Hen. Well, thus we play the fools with the time; and the spirits of the wise sit in the clouds, and mock us.—Is your master here in London? Bard. Yes, my lord.

P. Hen. Where sups he? doth the old boar feed in the old frank?

Bard. At the old place, my lord; in Eastcheap.

P. Hen. What company?

Page. Eppeswans, my lord; of the old church.

P. Hen. Sup any women with him?

Page. None, my lord, but old mistress Quickly, and mistress Doll Tear-sheet.

P. Hen. What pagan may that be?

Page. A proper gentlewoman, sir, and a kinswoman of my master.

P. Hen. Even such kin, as the parish hoes are to the town bull.—Shall we steal upon them, Ned, at supper?

Poins. I am your shadow, my lord; I'll follow you.

P. Hen. Sirrah, you boy, — and Bardolph; — no word to your master, that I am yet come to town:

There's for your silence.

Bard. I have no tongue, sir.

Page. And for mine, sir,— I will govern it.

P. Hen. Fare ye well; go. [Exit BARDOLPH and PAGE. —This Doll Tear-sheet should be some read.

Page. I warrant you, as common as the way between St. Alban's and London.

P. Hen. How knew you Falstaff bestow himself to-night in his true colours, and not ourselves be seen?

Poins. Put on two leather jerkins, and aprons, and wait upon him at his table as drawers.

P. Hen. From a god to a bull? a heavy descent! it was Jove's case. From a prince to a prentice! a low transformation! that shall be mine: for, in every thing, the purpose must weigh with the folly.

Follow me, Ned. [Exit.

SCENE III.—Warkworth. Before the Castle.

Enter Northumberland, Lady Northumberland, and Lady Percy.

North. I pray thee, loving wife, and gentle daughter, Give even way unto my rough affairs:
Put not you on the visage of the times, And be, like them, to Percy troublesome.

Lady N. I have given over, I will speak no more: Do what you will; your wisdom be your guide.

North. Alas, sweet wife, my honour is at pawn; And, but my going, nothing can redeem it.

Lady P. O, yet, for God's sake, go not to these wars! The time was, father, that you broke your word,
When you were more headstrong'd to it than now:
When your own Percy, when my heart's dear Harry Throw many a northward look, to see his father
Bring up his powers; but he did long in vain.

Who then persuaded you to stay at home? There were two honours lost; yours, and your son's.
For yours,—may heavenly glory brighten it! For his,—it stuck upon him, as the sun
In the grey vault of heaven: and, by his light,
Did all the chivalry of England move
To do brave acts; he was, indeed, the glass
Wherein the noble youth did dress themselves.
He had no legs, that practis'd not his gait:
And speaking thick, which nature made his blemish,
Because the accents of the valiant
For those that could speak low, and tardily,
Would turn their own perfection to abuse,
To seem like him: So that, in speech, in gait,
In diet, in affections of delight,
In military rules, hymns of blood,
He was the mark and glass, copy and book,
That fashion'd others. And him,—O wondrous him! O miracle of men!—hin did you leave,
(Second to none, unsecoed by you,,)
To look upon the hideous god of war
In disadvantage: to abide a field,
Where nothing but the sound of Hotspur's name
Did seem defendable—so you left him;

Never, O never, do his glory the wrong,
To hold your honour more precise and nice
With others, than with him; let them alone;
The marshal, and the archbishop, are strong:
Had my sweet Harry had but half their numbers,
To-day might I, hanging on Hotspur's neck,
Have talk'd of Monmouth's grant.

North. Beshrew your heart, Fair daughter! you do draw my spirits from me,
With new lamenting ancient overlooks.

But I must go, and meet with danger there;
Or it will seek me in another place,
And find me worse provided.

Lady N. O, fly to Scotland,
Till that the nobles, and the armed commons,
Have of their puissance made a little taste.

Lady P. If they get ground and vantage of the king,
Then join you with them, like a rib of steel,
To make strength stronger; but, for all our loves,
First let them try themselves: So did your son;
He was so suffer'd: so came he to a widow:
And never shall have length of life enough,
To rain upon remembrance with mine eyes,
That it may grow and sprout as high as heaven,
For recordation to my noble husband.

North. Come, come, go in with me; 'tis with my mind,
As with the tale swell'd up unto its height,
That makes a still stand, running neither way.
Fain would I go to meet the archbishop,
But many thousand reasons hold me back:—
I will resolve for Scotland; there am I,
Till time and vantage crave my company. [Exeunt.

SCENE IV.—London. A Room in the Bear's Head Tavern, in Eastcheap.

Enter two Drawers.

1 Drawer. What the devil hast thou brought there?

2 Drawer. Mass, thou sayest true: The prince once set a dish of apple-Johns before him, and told him, there were five more sir Johns; and, putting off his hat, said, I will now take my leave of these six dry, round, old, withered knights. It angered him to the heart: but he had forgot that.
KING HENRY IV.—PART II.

1 Draw. Why then, cover, and set them down: And see if thou canst find out Sneak's noise; mistress Tear-sheet would fain have some music. Despatch:—The room where they sippets, is too hot; they'll come in straight.

2 Draw. Sirrah, here will be the prince, and master Pains-anon; and they will put on two of ear jerkins, and aprons, and sir John must not know of it. Bar- dolph hath brought word.

1 Draw. By the mass, here will be old utis: it will be an excellent stratagem.

2 Draw. I'll see if I can find out Sneak. [Exit.

Enter Hostess and Doll Tear-sheet.

Host. I faith, sweet heart, methinks now you are in an excellent good temperality: your pulsidge beats as extraordinarily as heart would desire; and your colour, I warrant you, is as red as any rose: But, I faith, you have drunk too much canaries; and that's a marvellous searching wine, and it perfumes the blood ere one can say,—What's this! How do you now? Doll. Better than I was. Here.

Host. Why that's well said; a good heart's worth gold. Look, here comes sir John.

Enter Falstaff, singing.

Fal. When Arthur first in court—Empty the jor- dace.—And was a worthy king: [Exit Drawer.] How now, mistress Doll? Doll. Sick of a calm: yea, good sooth. Fal. So is all her sect; so they be once in a calm, they are sick. Doll. You muddy rascal, is that all the comfort you give me? Fal. You make fat rascals, mistress Doll. Doll. I make them! gluttony and diseases make them; I make them not.

Fal. If the court help to make the gluttony, you help to make the diseases, Doll: we catch of you, Doll, we catch of you; grant that, my poor virtue, grant that.

Doll. Ay, marry; our chains, and our jewels. Fal. Your branches, peels, and overaches;—for to serve bravely, is to come batalting off, you know: To cut off the breech with his pike bent bravely, and to surgyery bravely; to venture upon the charged chambers bravely:

Doll. Hang yourself, you muddy congery, hang yourself! Host. By my troth, this is the old fashion; you never meet, but you fall to some discord: you are both, in good troth, as rheumatic as two dry toasts; you cannot one bear with another's confirmities. What the good-year! one must bear, and that must be you: [to Doll.] you are the weaker vessel, as they say, the emptier vessel.

Doll. Can a weak empty vessel bear such a huge full hosehead? there's a whole merchant's venture of Bourdeaux stuff in him; you have not seen a hulk better stuff'd in the hold.—Come, I'll be friends with thee, Jack: thou art going to the wars; and whether I shall ever see thee again, or no, there is nobody cares.

Re-enter Drawer.

Draw. Sir, ancient Pistol's below, and would speak with you.

Doll. Hang him, swaggering rascal! let him not come hither: it is the soul-mouth'd rogue in Eng- land.

Host. If he swagger, let him not come here: no, by my faith; I must live amongst my neighbours; I'll no swaggers: I am in good name and fame with the very best: Shut the door;—there comes no swaggerers here; I have not lived all this while, to have swaggering now:—shut the door, I pray you.

Fal. Dost thou hear, hostess?—Host. Pray you, pacify yourself, Sir John; there comes no swaggerers here.

Fal. Dost thou hear; it is mine ancient.

Host. Tilly-fally, sir John, never tell me; you ancient swaggerer comes not in my doors. I was before master Tissick, the deputy, the other day; and, as he said to me, — it was no longer ago than Wednesday last. — Neighbours Quickly, says he; — master Dumb, our minister, was by then; — Neigh- bor Quickly, says he, receive those that are evil; for, saith he, you are in an ill name:—now he said so, I can tell whereupon;—for, says he, you are an honest woman, and well thought on; therefore take heed what guests you receive: Receive, says he, no swaggering companions. — There comes none here; — you would bless you to hear what he said,—no, I'll no swaggerers.

Fal. Dost thou hear:—there's no swaggerer, hostess; a tame cheater, he; you may stroke him as gently as a puppy grey- hound: he will not swagger with a Barbary hen, if her feathers turn back in any show of resistance. — Call him up, drawer.

Host. Chester, call you him? I will bar no honest man my house, nor no cheater: But I do not love swaggering; by my troth, I am the worse, when one says: feel, masters, how I shake; look you, I warrant you.

Doll. So you do, hostess.

Host. Do I? yea, in very truth, do I, an 'twere an aspen leaf: I cannot abide swaggerers.

Enter Pistol, Baroloph, and Page.

Pist. 'Save you, sir John! Fal. Welcome, ancient Pistol. Here, Pistol, I charge you with a cup of sack: do you discharge upon mine hostess.

Pist. I will discharge upon her, sir John, with two bullets.

Fal. She is pistol-proof, sir; you shall hardly of- fend her.

Host. Come, I'll drink no proofs, nor no bullets: I'll drink no more than will do me good, for no man's pleasure, I.

Pist. Then to you, mistress Dorothy; I will charge you.

Pist. I know you, mistress Dorothy. Fal. Away, you cut-purse rascal! you filthy bung, away! by this wine, I'll thrust my knife in your mouldy chaps, and you play the saucy cuttle with me. Away, you bottle-ale rascal! you basket-hilt slate juggling, you rogue, in the face when I pray you, sir.—What, with two points on your shoulder! much!

Pist. I will murder your ruff for this.

Fal. No more, Pistol; I would not have you go off here: discharge yourself of our company, Pistol.

Host. No, good captain Pistol; not here, sweet captain.

Pist. Captain! thou abominable damned knave, art thou not ashamed to be called—captain? If cap- tains were of my mind, they would truncheon you out, for taking their names upon you before you have earned them. You a captain, you slave! for what? for tearing a poor whore's ruff in a bawdy-house?—He a captain! Hang him, rogue! He lives upon mouldy stewed prunes, and dried cakes. A captain! these villains will make the word captain as odious as the word occupant; which was an excellent good word before it was ill-sorted: therefore captains had need look to it.

Bard. Pray thee, go down, good ancient.

Fal. Hark thee hither, mistress Doll.

Pist. Not I: tell thee what, corporal Bardolph:—I could tear her:—I'll be revenged on her.

Pist. I'll see her damned first:—to Pluto's damned lake, to the infernal deep, with Erebuses and tortures vile also. Hold book and line, say I. Down! down, dogs! down factors! Have we not Hiren here!

Host. Good captain Peesel, be quiet; it is very late, i'faith: I beceed you now, aggravate your choler.

Pist. These be good humours, indeed! Shall pack—And hollow papam'd jades of Asia, These, Which cannot go but thirty miles a day, Compare with Caesars, and with Canibals, And Trojan Greeks! nay, rather damn them with King Cercebus; and let the welkin roar.

Shall we fall foul for toys?

Host. By my troth, captain, these are very bitter words.

Bard. Be good, gone ancient; this will grow to a brawl anon.

Pist. Die men, like dogs; give crown like pins; Have we not Hiren here?

Host. O' my word, captain; there's none such here. What the good-year! do you think, I would deny her! for God's sake, be quiet.

Pist. Then, feed and be, fat, my fair Calipolis; Come, give's some sack.

_Si fortuna me tormenta, sperata me contenta._

Fear we broadsides? no, let the feed give fire: Give me some sack:—and, sweetheart, lie thou there.

[Laying down his sword.]

Come we to full points here; and are et cetera's nothing?

Fal. Pistol, I would be quiet.

Pist. Sweet knight, I kiss thy neif: What! we have seen the seven stars.

Doll. Thrust him down stairs; I cannot endure such a fistian rascal.

Pist. Thrust him down stairs! know we not Galloway nags?

Fal. Cut him down, Bardolph, like a shove-great shilling: nay, if he do nothing but speak nothing, he shall be nothing here.

Bard. Come, get you down stairs.

Pist. What! shall we have incision? shall we imbibe?—_[Switching up his sword._

Then death rock me asleep, abridge my doleful days! Why then, let grievous, ghastly, gaping wounds Unline the sisters three! Come, Atripos, I say! Host. Here's good stuff toward!

Fal. Give me my rapier, boy.

Doll. I pray thee, Jack, I pray thee, do not draw.

Fal. Get you down stairs.

_Drawing, and driving Pistol out._

Host. Here's a goodly tumult! I'll forsware keeping house, afore I'll be in these terrors and frights. So; murder, I warrant now.—Alas, alas! put up your naked weapons, put up your naked weapons._

[Exeunt Pistol, and Bardolph.]

Doll. I pray thee, Jack, be quiet; the rascal is gone. Ah, you whorsom little valiant villain, you.

Host. Are you not hurt i' the groin? methought, he made a shrewd thrust at your belly.

Re-enter Bardolph.

Fal. Have you turned him out of doors?

Bard. Yes, sir. The rascal's drunk: you have hurt him, sir, in the shoulder.

Fal. A rascal! to brave me!

Doll. Ah, you sweet little rogue, you. Alas, poor ape, how thou sweest! Come, let me wipe thy face;—come on, you whorsom chops:—Ah, rogue i'faith, I love thee. Thou art as valorous as Hector of Troy, worth five of Agamemnon, and ten times better than the nine worthes. Ah, villain!

Fal. A rascally slave! I will toss the rogue in a blanket.

Doll. Do, if thou dar'st for thy heart: if thou dost, I'll canvas thee between a pair of sheets.

Enter Music.

Fal. Let them play!—Play, sirs.—Sit on my knee, Doll. A rascal bragging slave! the rogue fled from me like quicksilver.

Doll. I, faith, and thou followedst him like a church. Thou whorsom little tidy Bartholomew hoar-pig, when wilt thou leave fighting o'days, and joining o' nights, and begin to patch up thine old body for heaven?

Enter behind, Prince Henry and Poins, disguised like drawers.

Fal. Peace, good Doll! do not speak like a death's head: do not bid me remember mine end.

Doll. Sirrah, what humour is the prince of?

Fal. A good shallow young fellow: he would have made a good pantler, he would have chipped bread well.

Doll. They say, Poins has a good wit.

Fal. He a good wit? hang him, baboo! his wit is as thick as Tewsbury mustard; there is no more conceit in him, than is in a mallet.

Doll. Why does the prince love him so then?

Fal. Because their legs are both of a bigness: and he plays at quots well; and eats conger and fennel, and drinks off candles' ends for flap-dragons; and rides the wild mare with the boys; and jumps upon joint-stools; and swears with a good grace; and wears his boot very smooth, like unto the sign of the leg; and breeds so bate with telling of discreet stories, and such other gambol faculties he hath, that shew a weak mind, and an able body, for which the prince his: for the prince himself is such another; the weight of a hair will turn the scales between their avadipsos.

P. Hen. Would not this nave of a wheel have his ears cut off?

Poins. Let's beat him before his whore.

P. Hen. Look, if the withered elder hath not his poll clawed like a parrot.

Poins. Is it not strange, that desire should so many years outlive performance?

Fal. Kiss me, Doll.

P. Hen. Saturn and Venus this year in conjunction! what says the almanac to that?

Poins. And, look, whether the fiery Trigon, his man, be not lying in his master's old table; his note-book, his counsel-keeper.

Fal. Thou dost give me flattering busses.

Doll. Nay, truly; I kiss thee with a most constant heart.

Fal. I am old, I am old.

Doll. I love thee better than I love e'er a seamy young boy of them all.

Fal. What stuff wilt have a kittle of? I shall receive money on Thursday; thou shalt have a cap to-morrow. A merry song, come: it grows late, we'll to bed. Thou'll forget me, when I am gone.
Doll. By my troth thou'lt set me a weeping, an thou savest so; prove that ever I dress myself handsome till thy return — Well, hearken to the end.

Fal. Some sack, Francis.

Fal. Hal! a bastard son of the king's! — And art not thou Pains his brother?

P. Hen. Why, thou speakest of sinful continents, what a life dost thou lead?

Fal. A better than thou; I am a gentleman, thou art a drawer.

P. Hen. Very true, sir: and I come to draw you out by the ears.

Host. O, the Lord preserve thy good grace! by my troth, welcome to London. — Now the Lord bless that sweet face of thee! O Jesu, are you come from Wales?

Fal. Thou whoreson mad compound of majesty, — by this light flesh and corrupt blood, thou art welcome.

[Leaving his hand upon Doll.]

Doll. How! you fat fool, I see you. Pains. My lord, he will drive you out of your revenge, and turn all to a merriment, if you take not the heat.

P. Hen. You whoreson candle-mine, you, how vilely did you speak of me even now, before this honest, virtuous, civil gentleman?

Host. 'Blessing o' your good heart, and so she is, by my troth.

Fal. Didst thou hear me?

P. Hen. Yes; and you knew me, as you did when you ran away by God's-hill: you knew, I was at your back; and spoke it on purpose, to try my patience.

Fal. No, no, no, not so; I did not think thou wast within hearing.

P. Hen. I shall drive you then to confess the wilful abuse; and then I know how to handle you.

Fal. No abuse, ifal, on mine honour; no abuse. P. Hen. Not to disparage me; and call me — panter, and bread-chipper, and I know not what.

Fal. No abuse, Hal.

Pains. No abuse!

Fal. No abuse, Ned, in the world; honest Ned, none. I disparaged him before the wicked, that the wicked might not fall in love with him; — in which doing, I have done the part of a careful friend, and a true subject, and thy father is to give me thanks for it. No abuse, Hal; — none, Ned, none; — no, boys, none.

P. Hen. See now, whether pure fear, and entire cowardice, doth not make thee wrong this virtuous gentlewoman to close with us? Is she of the wicked? Is thine hostess here of the wicked? or is the boy of the wicked? or honest Bardolph, whose zeal burns in his nose, of the wicked?

Pains. Answer, thou dead elm, answer.

Fal. The fiend hath pricked down Bardolph, irrecoverable; and his face is Lucifer's privy-kitchen, where he doth nothing but rust malt-worms. For the boy, — there is a good angel about him; but the devil outshouts him too.

P. Hen. For the women. —

Fal. For one of them, — she is in hell already, and burns, poor soul! For the other, — I owe her money; and whether she be damned for that, I know not.

Host. No. I warrant you.

Fal. No, I think, thou art not; I think, thou art quit for that. Marry, there is another indictment upon thee, for suffering flesh to be eaten in thy house contrary to the law; for the which, I think, thou wilt have.

Host. All victuallers do so: What's a joint of mutton or two in a whole Lent?

P. Hen. You, gentleman,
ACT III.—SCENE II.

Seal up the ship boy's eyes, and rock his brains in cradle of the rude imperious surge; And in the visitation of the waves, Who take the ruffian billows by the top, Curling their monstrous heads, and hoaing them With deal'ting clamours in the slipper'y clouds, That with the hurly, death itself awakes? Can'st thou, O partial sleep! give thy repose To the wet sea-boy in an hour so rude: And, in the calmest and most stillst night, With all appliances and means to boot, Deny it to a king? Then, happy low, lie down! Uncasvies the head that wears a crown.

Enter Warwick and Surrey.

War. Many good morrows to your majesty! K. Hen. Is it good morrow, lords? War. 'Tis one o'clock, and past.

K. Hen. Why then, good morrow to you all my lords, Has been read o'er the letters that I sent you! War. We have, my liege, K. Hen. Then you perceive, the body of our kingdom How foul it is; what rank diseases grow, And with what danger, near the heart of it.

War. It is but as a body, yet, distemper'd; Which to his former strength may be restor'd, With good advice, and little mediocrum. My lord Northumberland will soon be cool'd.

K. Hen. O heaven! that one might read the book And see the revolution of the times of fate; Make mountains level, and the continent (Weary of solid firmness,) melt itself Into the sea! and, other times to see The beeves read o'er the letters that I sent them.

War. Too wide for Neptune's hips; how chances muck, And changes fill the cup of alteration With divers liquors! O! if this were seen, The happiest youth,—viewing his progress through, What perils past, what crosses to ensue,— Would shut the book, and sit him down and die. Tis not ten years gone Since Richard, and Northumberland, great friends, Did feast together, and, in two years after, Were they at wars: it is but eight years, since This Percy was the man nearest my soul; Who like a brother toil'd in my affairs, And laid his love and life under my foot: For every sake, I cared of Richard, Gave him defence. But which of you was by. (You, cousin Nevill, as I may remember,) 'Tis War. When Richard, with his eye brimful of tears, Then check'd and rated by Northumberland,— Did speak these words, now prov'd a prophecy? Northumberland, thou ladder, by the which My cousin Holtyngbrooke ascends my throne: Though then, heaven knows, I had no such intent; But that necessity so bow'd the state, That I and greatness were compell'd to kiss:— The time shall come, thus did he follow it, The time will come, that foul sin, gathering head, Shall break into corruption,—was went on, Unravelling this same time's condition, And the division of our amity.

War. There is a history in all men's lives, Figuring the nature of the times deceas'd: The which observ'd, a man may prophecy, With a near aim, of the main chance of things As yet not come to life; which in their seeds, And weak beginnings, he Intreasserted. Such things become the hatch and brood of time; And, by the necessary form of this, King Richard might create a perfect guess, That great Northumberland, then false to him, Would, if that seed, grow to a greater falseness; Which should not find a ground to root upon, Unless on you.

K. Hen. Are these things then necessities? Then let us meet them like necessities— And that same word even now cries out on us, They say, the bishop and Northumberland Are fifty thousand strong.

War. It cannot be, my lord; Rumour doth double, like the voice and echo, The numbers of the fear'd.—Please it your grace, To go to bed; upon my life, my lord, The powers that you already have sent forth, Shall bring this prize in very easily.

To comfort you the more, I have receiv'd A certain instance, that Glendower is dead. Your majesty hath been this fortnight ill; And these unseason'd hours, perforce, must add Unto your sickness.

K. Hen. I will take your counsel: And, were these inward wars once out of hand, We would, dear lords, unto the Holy Land. [Exeunt.]

SCENE II.—Court before Justice Shallow's House in Gloucestershire.

Enter Shallow and Silence, meeting; Mouldy, Shadow, Wart, Peeble, Bell-calf, and Servants behind.

Shal. Come on, come on, come on: give me your hand, sir, give me your hand, sir: an early stirrer by the road. And how doth my good cousin Silence? Sil. Good morrow, good cousin Shallow.

Shal. And how doth my cousin, your belfellow? and your fairest daughter, and mine, my god-daughter Ellen? Sil. Alas, a black ouzel, cousin Shallow.

Shal. By yea and nay, sir, I dare say, my cousin William is become a good scholar: He is at Oxford, still, is he not?

Sil. Indeed, sir; to my cost.

Shal. He must then to the inns of court shortly: I was once of Clement's-inn; where, I think, they will talk of mad Shallow yet.

Sil. You were called—lusty Shallow, then, cousin. Shal. By yea and nay, I called any thing; and I would have done any thing, indeed, and roundly too. There was I, and little John Dout of Staffordshire, and black George Bare, and Francis Pickbone, and Will Squele a Cottswole man,—you had not four such swinge-bucklers in all the inns of court again: and, I may say to you, we knew where the bona-radas were; and had the best of them all at commandment. Then was Jack Falstaff, now sir John, a boy; and page to Thomas Mowbray, duke of Norfolk.

Sil. This sir John, cousin, that comes hither anon about soldiers!

Shal. The same sir John, the very same. I saw him break Skogan's head at the court gate, when he was a crack, not thus high: and the very same day did I fight with one Sampson Stockfish, a fruiterer, behind Gray's inn. O, the mad days that I have spent! and to see how many of mine old acquaintance are dead!

Sil. We shall all follow, cousin.

Shal. Certain, 'tis certain; very sure, very sure: death, as the Psalmist sais, is certain to all; all shall die. How a good yoke of bullocks at Stamford fair?

Sil. Truly, cousin, I was not there.
Enter Bardolph, and one with him.

Sir. Here come two of Sir John Falstaff's men, as I think.

Bard. Good morrow, honest gentlemen: I beseech you, which is justice Shallow?

Shal. I am Robert Shallow, sir; a poor esquire of the county, and one of the king's justices of the peace.

What is your good pleasure with me?

Bard. My captain, sir, commands him to you; my captain, Sir John Falstaff: a tall gentleman, by heaven, and a most gallant leader.

Shal. He greets me well, sir; I knew him a good backsword man: how doth the good knight? may I ask how my lady his wife doth?

Bard. Sir, pardon: a soldier is better accommodated, than with a wife.

Shal. It is well said, in faith, sir; and it is well said indeed too. Better accommodated!—it is good; yea, indeed, it is: good phrases are surely, and ever were, very commendable. Accommodated!—it comes from accommod: very good; a good phrase.

Bard. Pardon me, sir: I have heard the word. Phrase, call you it? By this good day, I know not the phrase: but I will maintain the word with my sword, to be a soldier-like word, and a word of exceeding good command. Accommodated; That is, when a man is, as they say, accommodated: or, when a man is,—being,—whereby,—he may be thought to be accommodated; which is an excellent thing.

Enter Falstaff.

Shal. It is very just:—Look, here comes good sir John. Give me your good hand, give me your worship's good hand: by my troth, you look well, and bear your years very well: welcome, good sir John.

Fal. I am glad to see you well, good master Robert Shallow.—Master Sure-card, as I think.

Shal. No, sir John; it is my cousin Silence, in commission with me.

Fal. Good master Silence, it well behoves you should be of the peace.

Sir. Your good worship is welcome.

Fal. Fye! this is hot weather. — Gentlemen, have you provided me here half a dozen sufficient men?

Shal. Marry, have we, sir. Will you sit?

Fal. Let me see them, I beseech you.

Shal. Where's the roll? where's the roll! where's the roll!—Let me see, let me see. So, so, so, so: Yea, marry, sir;—Ralph Mouldy:—let them appear as I call; let them do so, let them do so.—Let me see; Where is Mouldy?

Mould. Here, an't please you.

Shal. What think you, sir John? a good limbed fellow; young, strong, and of good friends.

Fal. Is thy name Mouldy?

Mould. Yea, an't please you.

Fal. 'Tis the more time then worth used.

Shal. Ha, ha, ha! most excellent, I'faith! things, that are moudly, lack use: Very singular good!—In faith, well said, sir John; very well said.

Fal. Prick him.

Shal. I was prick'd well enough before, an you could have let me alone; my old dame will be undone now, for one to do her husbandry, and her drudgery. You need not to have prick'd me; there are other men fitter to go out than I.

Fal. Go to; peace, Mouldy, you shall go. Mouldy, it is time you were spent.

Shal. Spent!

Fal. Peace, fellow, peace; stand aside; Know you where you are?—For the other, sir John,—let me see,—Simon Shallow?

Fal. Ay, marry, let me have him to sit under him: he's like to be a cold soldier.

Shal. Where's Shadow?

Shal. Here, sir.

Fal. Shadow, whose son art thou?

Shal. My mother's son, sir.

Fal. Thy mother's son! like enough; and thy father's shadow; so the son of the female is the shadow of the male: It is often so indeed; but not much of the father's substance.

Shal. Do you like him, sir John?

Fal. Shadow will serve for summer,—prick him;—for we have a number of shadows to fill up the muster-book.

Feer. Thomas Wart!

Fal. Where's he?

Wart. Here, sir.

Fal. Is thy name Wart?

Wart. Yea, sir.

Fal. Thou art a very ragged wart.

Shal. Shall I prick him, sir John?

Fal. Why thou art superfluous; for his apparel is built upon his back, and the whole frame stands upon pins: prick him no more.

Shal. Ha, ha, ha!—you can do it, sir; you can do it: I commend you well.—Francis Feeble?

Feer. Here, sir.

Fal. What trade art thou, Feeble?

Feer. A woman's tailor, sir.

Shal. Shall I prick him, sir john?

Fal. You may: but if he had been a man's tailor, he would have prick'd you.—Wilt thou make as many holes in an enemy's battle, as thou hast done in a woman's petticoat?

Feer. I will do my good will, sir; you can have no more.

Fal. Well said, good woman's tailor! well said, courageous Feeble! Thou wilt be as valiant as the wrathful dove, or most magnanimous mouse.—Prick the woman's tailor well, master Shallow; deep, master Shallow.

Feer. I would, Wart might have gone, sir.

Fal. I would, thou went a man's tailor; that thou might'rt mend him, and make him fit to go. I cannot put him to a private soldier, that is the leader of so many thousands: Let that suffice, most forcible Feeble.

Feer. It shall suffice, sir.

Fal. I am bound to thee, reverend Feeble.—Who is next?

Shal. Peter Bull-calf of the green!

Fal. Yea, marry, let us see Bull calf.

Bull. Here, sir.

Fal. 'Fore God, a likely fellow!—Come, prick me Bull calf till he roar again.

Bull. O lord! good my lord captain.—

Fal. What, dost thou roar before thou art prick'd?

Bull. O lord, sir! I am a diseased man.
Act III.—Scene II.

Fal. What disease hast thou?

Ful. A whooping-cold, sir; a cough, sir; which I caught with ringing in the king's affairs, upon his coronation day, sir.

Fal. Come, thou shalt go to the wars in a gown; we will have away thy cold; and I will take such order, that thy friends shall ring for thee.—Is here all?

Shal. Here is more called than thy number; you must have but four here, sir; and so, I pray you, go in with me to dinner.

Fal. Come, I will go drink with you, but I cannot tarry dinner. I am glad to see you, in good troth, master Shallow.

Shal. O, sir John, do you remember since we lay all night in the windmill in Saint George's fields.

Fal. No more of that, good master Shallow, no more of that.

Shal. Ha, it was a merry night. And is Jane Nightwork alive?

Fal. She lives, master Shallow.

Shal. She never could away with me.

Fal. Never, never: she would always say, she could not leave me, master Shallow.

Shal. By the mass, I could anger her to the heart. She was then a bona-roba. Dost she hold her own well?

Fal. Old, old, master Shallow.

Shal. Nay, she must be old; she cannot choose but be old; certain, she's old; and had Robin Nightwork by old Night-work, before I came to Clement's inn.

Sir. That's fifty-five year ago.

Shal. Ha, cousin Silence, that thou hadst seen that that knight and I have seen!—Ha, sir John, said I well!—

Fal. We have heard the chimes at midnight, master Shallow.

Shal. That we have, that we have, that we have; in faith, sir John, we have; our watch-word was, Hem, boys!—Come, let's to dinner; come, let's to dinner: O, the days that we have seen! Come, come.

[Exeunt Falstaff, Shallow, and Silence.

Bard. Good master corporal Bardolph, stand by my friend; and here is four Harry ten shillings in French crowns on you. In very truth, sir, I had as lief he'd hanged, sir, as go; and yet, for mine own part, sir, I do not care: but, rather, because I am unwilling, and, for mine own part, have a desire to stay with my friends; else, sir, I did not care, for mine own parts so much.

Bard. Go to; stand aside.

Mow. And good master corporal captain, for my old dame's sake, stand by my friend: she has nobody to do any thing about her, when I am gone; and she is old, and cannot help herself: you shall have forty, sir.

Bard. Go to; stand aside.

Fee. By my troth I care not;—a man can die but once;—We owe God a death,—I'll ne'er bear a base mind—'tis not my destiny, so; and, by my troth, sir, I had as lief he'd hanged, sir, as go; and yet, for mine own part, I do not care: but, rather, because I am unwilling, and, for mine own part, have a desire to stay with my friends; else, sir, I did not care, for mine own parts so much:

Bard. Well said; thou'rt a good fellow.

Fee. 'Faith, I'll bear no base mind.

Re-enter Falstaff, and Justices.

Fal. Come, sir, which men shall I have?

Shal. Four of which you please.

Bard. Sir, a word with you—I have three pound to free Moudly and Bull-calf.

Fal. Go to; well.

Shal. Come, sir John, which four will you have?

Fal. Do you choose for me.

Shal. Harry then,—Moudly, Bull-calf, Feeble, and Shallow.

Fal. Moudly, and Bull-calf:—For you, Moudly, stay at home, still; you are past service: and, for your part, Bull-calf,—grow till you come unto it: I will none of you.

Shal. Sir John, sir John, do not yourself wrong; they are your likeliest men, and I would have you served with the best.

Fal. Will you tell me, master Shallow, how to choose a man? Care I for the limb, the thewes, the stature, bulk, and big assembly of a man! Give me the spirit, master Shallow.—Here's Wart;—you see what a ragged appearance it is; he shall charge you, and discharge you, with the motion of a powerer's hammer; come off, and on, swifter than he that giblets on the brewer's bucket. And this same half-faced fellow, Shadow,—give me this man; he presents no mark to the enemy; the foeman may with as great aim level at the edge of a penknife: And, for a retreat,—how swiftly will this Feeble, the woman's tailor, run off? O, give me the spare men, and spare me the great men,—Put me a caliver into Wart's hand, Bardolph.

Bard. Hold, Wart, traverse; thus, thus, thus.

Fal. Come, manage me your caliver. So—very well—go to:—very good,—exceeding good.—O, give me always a little, lean, old, chapped, bald shot.

Well said, Sir, Wart; thou'rt a good scab: hold, there's a medal for thee.

Shal. He is not his craft's master, he doth not do it right. I remember at Mile-end green. (When I lay at Clement's inn,—I was then Sir Dagonet in Arthur's show,) there was a little quiver fellow, and 'a would manage you his piece thus: and 'a would about, and about, and come you in, and come you in: rah, tah, tah, would 'a say; bounce, 'a would 'a say; and away again would 'a go, and again would 'a come:—I shall never see such a fellow.

Fal. These fellows will do well, master Shallow,—

God keep you, master Silence; I will not use many words with you:—Fare you well, gentlemen both:—I thank you; I must do a mile to-night.—Bardolph, give the scab a medal for thee.

Shal. Sir John, heaven bless you, and prosper your affairs, and send us peace! As you return, visit my house; let our old acquaintance be renewed: perdurance, I will with you to the court.

Fal. I would you would, master Shallow.

Shal. Go to; I have spoke, at a word. Fare you well.

Fal. Fare you well, gentle gentlemen. On, Bardolph; lead the men away. [Exeunt Falstaff, Silence, and others. As I return, I will fetch off these justices: I do see the bottom of justice Shallow. Lord, lord, how subject we old men are to this vice of lying! This same starved justice hath done nothing but prate to me of the wildness of his youth, and the feats he hath done about Tushbury street; and every third word a lie, dier paid to the hearer than the Turk's tribute. I do remember him at Clement's inn, like a man made after supper of a cheese-paring: when he was naked, he was, for all the world, like a forked redish, with a head fantastically carved upon it with a knife; he was so forlorn, that his dimensions to any thick sight were invisible: he was the very Cénaus of fame; yet lecherous as a monkey, and the whores called him—maudrake: he came ever in the rearward of the fashion; and sang those tunes to the over-starched huswives that he heard the carmen whistle, and aver—these were his fancies, or his good-nights. And now is this Vice's dagger become a squire; and talks as familiarly of John of Gaunt, as if he had been sworn brother to king; and I'll be sworn he never saw him but once in the Tilt-yard; and then he burst his head, for crowding among the marshal's men. I saw it; and told John of Gaunt, he beat his own name; for you might have trust'd him, and all his apparel, into an eel-skin; the case of a treble hound was a mansion for him, a court; and now he hath and beaves. Well; I will be acquainted with him if I return; and it shall go hard, but I will make him a philosopher's two stones to me: If the young duke be a bait for the old pike, I see no reason, but the law of nature, but I may snap at him. Let time shape, and there an end. [Exit.

ACT IV.

SCENE I.—A Forest in Yorkshire.

Enter the Archbishop of York, Mowbray, Hastings, and others.

Arch. What is this forest called?

Aust. This Guiltree forest, an't please your grace.

Arch. Here stand, my lords: and send discoverers forth, To know the numbers of our enemies.

Host. We have sent forth already.

Arch. 'Tis well done. My friends, and brethren in these great affairs, I must acquaint you that I have receiv'd New-dated letters from Northumberland; Their cold intent, temper and substance, thus:— Here doth he wish his person, with such powers As might hold sortance with his quality, The which he could not levy; whereupon He is retir'd, to rip his growing fortunes, To Scotland: and concludes in hearty prayers, That your attempts may overlive the hazard, And fearful meeting of their opposite.

Mowbr. Thus do the hopes we have in him touch ground, And dash themselves to pieces.

Enter a Messenger.

Host. Now, what news?

Mess. West. West of this forest, scarcely off a mile, In goodly form comes on the enemy: And by the ground they hide, I judge their number Upon, or near, the rate of thirty thousand.

Mowbr. The just proportion that we gave them out. Let us sway on, and face them in the field.

Enter WESTMORELAND.

Arch. What well-appointed leader fronts us here?

Mowbr. I think, it is my lord of Westmoreland.

West. West. Health and fair greeting from our general, The prince, lord John and duke of Lancaster.

Arch. Say on, my lord of Westmoreland, in peace; What doth concern your coming?

West. Then, my lord, Unto your grace do I in chief address The substance of my speech. If that rebellion Came like itself, in both my line and my right, Led on by bloody youth, guarded with rage, And countenance'd by boys, and beggary; I say, if'd fam'd commotion so appear'd; In his true, native, and most proper shape, You, reverend father, and these noble lords, had not been here to dress the ugly form Of base and bloody insurrection.

With your fair honours. You, lord archbishop, Whose see is by a civil peace maintain'd; Whose heard the silver hand of peace hath touch'd; Whose learning and good letters peace hath tutor'd; Whose white investments figure movements, The dove and very blessed spirit of peace, Wherefore do you so ill translate yourself, Out of the speech of peace, that bears such grace, Into the harsh and boisterous tongue of war! Turning your books to graves, your shed to blood, Your pens to lances; and your tongue divine To a loud trumpet, and a point of war?

Arch. Wherefore do I this?—so the question stands, Briefly to this end:—We are all discons'd; And, with our surfeiting and wanton hours, Have brought ourselves into a burning fever, And we must bleed for it: of which disease Our late king, Richard, being infected, died. But, my most noble lord of Westmoreland, I take not on me here a physician; Nor do I, as an enemy to peace, To troop in the throns of military men: But, rather, shew a while like fearful war, To diet rank minds, sick of happiness; And off our obstructors, which begin to stop Our very veins of life. Hear me more plainly, I have in equal balance justly weigh'd [fer, What wrongs our arms may do, what wrongs we suffer, And find our griefs heavier than our offences. We see, in which way the stream of time doth run, And are enfor'd from our most quiet sphere By the rough torrent of occasion; And have the summary of all our griefs, What we shall serve, to shew in articles; Which, long ere this, we offered to the king, And might by no snit gain our audience: When we are wrong'd, and would unfold our griefs, We are denied access unto his person Even by those men that most have done us wrong. (The dangers of the days but newly gone, Whose memory is written on the earth With yet-appearing blood,) and the examples Of every minute's instance, (present now,) Have put us in these ill-seeming arms: Not to break peace, or any branch of it; But to establish here a peace indeed, Concurring both in name and quality.

West. When ever yet was your appeal denied? What wrongs have you been galled by the king's enemy? What peer hath been suborn'd to grace on you? That you should seal this lawless bloody book Of forg'd rebellion with a seal divine, And consecrate commotion's bitter edge? Arch. My brother general, the commonwealth, To brother born an household cruelty, I make my quarrel in particular.

West. There is no need of any such redress; Or, if there were, it not belongs to you.

Mowbr. Why not to him, in part; and to us all, That feel the bruises of the days before; And suffer the condition of these times To lay a heavy and unequal hand Upon our honours?

West. O, my good lord Mowbray, Construe the times to their necessities, And you shall say, indeed, it is the time, And not the king, that doth you injure. Yet, for your part, it not appears to me, Either from the king, or in the present time, That you should have an inch of any ground To build a grief on: Were you not restored To fill the duke of Norfolk's seignories, Your noble and right-well-remember'd father's? Mowbr. What thing, in honour, had my father lost,
ACT IV.—SCENE II.

That need to be reviv'd, and breath'd in me!
The king, that lov'd him, in the state stood then,
Was, then, when Harry Bolingbroke, and he—
Being mounted, and both roused in their seats,
Their neighing couriers darting of the spur,
Their armed staves to charge, their beavers down,
Their eyes of fire sparkling through sights of steel,
And the loud trumpet blowing them together;
Then, then, when there was nothing could have stood
My father from the breast of Bolingbroke.
O, when the king did throw his wardour down,
His own life hung upon the staff he threw;
Then throw he down himself; and all their lives,
That, by indictment, and by dint of sword,
Have since miscarried under Bolingbroke.

War. You speak, lord Mowbray, now you know not
The earl of Hereford was reputed then: [what:
In England the most valiant gentleman;
Who knows, o whom fortune would then have smil'd?
But, if your father had been victor there,
He never had borne it out of Coventry:
For the whole of the country, his foes so entwined with his friends,
Cried hate upon him; and all their prayers and love,
Were set on Hereford, whom they doted on.
And bless'd, and grace'd indeed, more than the king.
But this is mere digression from my purpose.—
Here come I from our principally.
To know your griefs; to tell you from his grace,
The king, as he will, will give you what he will.
It shall appear that your demands are just,
You shall enjoy them; every thing set off,
That might so much as think you enemies.
Mowb. But he hath forc'd us to compel this offer;
And it proceeds from policy, not love.
West. Mowbray, you overween, to take it so;
This offer comes from mercy, not from fear:
For, lo! within a ken, our army lies:
Upon mine honour, all too confident
To give admittance to a thought of fear.
Our battle is more full of names than yours,
Our men more perfect in the use of arms,
Our armour all as strong, our cause the best;
The reason why, our hearts should be as good:
Say you not then, our offer is compell'd.
Mowb. Well, by my will, we shall admit no parley.
West. That argues but the shame of your offence;
A rotten case abides no handling.
Hast. Hast the prince John a full commission,
In very ample virtue of his father,
To hear, and absolutely to determine
Of what conditions we shall stand upon?
West. That is intended in the general's name:
I muse, you make so slight a question. [schedule;
Arch. Then take, my lord of Westminster, this
For this contains our general grievances:
Each several article herein redress'd;
All members of our cause, both here and hence,
That are issuinew'd to this action,
Acquitted by a true substantial form;
And present execution of our wills
To as, and to our purposes, consign'd:
We come within our awful banks again,
And knit our powers to the arm of peace.
Let this will I show the general. Please you lords,
In sight of both our battles we may meet;
And either end in peace, which heaven so frame!
Or to the place of difference call the swords
Which must decide it.
Arch. My lord, we will do so. [Exit West.
Mowb. There is a thing within my bosom, tells me,
That no conditions of our peace can stand.

Hast. Fear you not that? if we can make our peace
Upon such large terms and so absolute,
As our conditions shall consist upon,
Our peace shall stand as firm as rocky mountains.
Mowb. Ay, but our valuation shall be such,
That every slight and false derived cause,
Yea, every idle, nice, and wanton reason,
Shall, to the king, taste of this action:
That were our royal faiths martyrs in love,
We shall be winnow'd with so rough a wind,
That even our corn shall seem as light as chaff,
And good from bad find no partition.
Arch. No, no, my lord; Note this,—the king is weary
Of dainty and such picking grievances:
For he hath found,—to end one doubt by death,
Revises two greater in the heirs of life.
And therefore will he wipe his tables clean;
And keep no tell-tale to his memory,
That may repeat and history his loss
To new remembrance: For full well he knows
He cannot so precisely weed this land,
As his misdoubts present occasion:
His foes so entwined with his friends,
That, plucking to uex an enemy,
He doth unfasten so, and shake a friend.
So that this land, like an offensive wife,
That hath enrag'd him on to offer strokes;
As he is striking, holds his infant up,
And hangs resolv'd correction in the arm
That was once to be so tendered.
Hast. Besides the king hath wasted all his rods
On late offenders, that he now doth lack
The very instruments of chastisement:
So that his power, like to a fangless lion,
May offer, but oot hold.

Arch. 'Tis very true:
And therefore he assured, my good lord marshal,
If we do now make our atonement well,
Our peace will, like a broken limb united,
Grow stronger for the breaking.
Mowb. Be it so.
Here is return'd my lord of Westmoreland.

Re-enter WESTMORELAND.
West. The prince is here at hand: Pleadeth your lordship,
To meet his grace just distance 'tween our armies?
Mowb. Your grace of York in God's name then set forward.
Arch. Before, and greet his grace—my lord, we come. [Entreat.

SCENE II.—Another Part of the Forest.

Enter from one side, MOWBRAY, the ARCHBISHOP, HASTINGS, and others; from the other side, Prince JOHN of Lancaster, WESTMORELAND, Officers, and Attendants.

P. John. You are well encounter'd here, my cousin Mowbray:
Good day to you, gentle lord archbishop
And so to you, lord Hastings,—and to all—
My lord of York, it better shew'd with you,
When that your flock, assembled by the bell,
Encircled you, to hear with reverence
Your exposition on the holy text;
Than now to see you here an iron man,
Cheering a rout of rebels with your drum,
Turning the word to sword, and life to death.
That man, that sits within a monarch's heart,
And ripens in the sunshine of his favour,
Would be abuse the countenance of the king,
Ahak, what mischiefs might he set abroad.
In shadow of such greatness! With you, lord bishop,
It is even so:—Who hath not heard it spoken,
How deep you were within the books of God!
To us, the speaker in his parliament,
To us, the imag’d voice of God himself;
The very opener and intelligencer,
Between the grace, the sanctities of heaven,
And our dull workings: O, who shall believe,
But you misuse the reverence of your place;
Employ the countenance and grace of heaven,
As a false favourite doth his prince’s name,
In deeds dishonourable! You have taken up,
Under the counterfeited zeal of God,
The subjects of his substitute, my father;
And, both against the peace of heaven, and him,
Have here up-swarm’d them.

Arch. Good my lord of Lancaster,
I am not here against your father’s peace:
But, if I told my lord of Westmoreland,
The time miscar’d doth, in common sense,
Crowd us, and crush us, to this monstrous form,
To hold our safety up. I sent your grace
The parcels and particulars of our grief;
The which hath been with scorn shov’d from the court,
Whereon this Hydra son of war is born:
Whose dangerous eyes may well be charm’d asleep,
With most of our most just and rightful desires:
And true obedience of this madness cur’d,
Stoop tamely to the foot of majesty.

Momb. If not, we ready are to try our fortunes
To the last man.

Hast. And though we here fall down,
We have supplies to second our attempt:
If this disorder’s, there shall second them:
And so, success of mischief shall be born;
And heir from heir shall hold this quarrel up,
Whiles England shall have generation.

P. John. You are too shallow, Hastings, much too
To sound the bottom of the after-times. [shallow.
West. Pica-etch your grace, to answer them directly.
Hast. Far-forth you do like their articles?
P. John. I like them all, and do allow them well;
And swear here by the honour of my blood,
My father’s purposes have been mistook;
And some about him have toolavishly
Wrested his meaning, and authority.—
My lord, these griefs shall be with speed redress’d;
Upon my soul, they shall. If this may please you,
Discharge your power upon their several counties,
As we will ours: and here, between the armies,
Let’s drink together friendly, and embrace:
That all their eyes may bear those tokens home,
Of our restored love, and amity.

Arch. I take your princely word for these redresses,
P. John. I give it you, and will maintain my word:
And thereupon, I drink unto your grace.

Hast. Go, captain, [to an Officer.] and deliver to the army
This news of peace; let them have pay, and part:
I know, it will well please them; the thee, captain.

[Exit Officer.

Arch. To you, my noble lord of Westmoreland.
West. I pledge your grace: And, if you knew
I have bestow’d, to breed this present peace,
You would drink freely: but my love to you
Shall show itself more openly hereafter.

Arch. I do not doubt you.

West. I am glad of it:—
Health to my lord, and gentle cousin, Mowbray.
Mowb. You wish me health in very happy season:

For I am, on the sudden, something ill.

Arch. Against all chances, men are ever merry,
But heaviness foreruns the good event.

West. Therefore be merry, sir; since sudden sor-
Serves to say thus,—Some good thing comes to-

Arch. Believe me, I am passing light in spirit.

Mowb. So much the worse, if your own rule be true.

P. John. The word of peace is render’d; Hark, how they shout!

Mowb. His is but waited cheerful, after victory.

Arch. A peace is of the nature of a conquest;
For then both parties nobly are subdued,
And neither party loser.

P. John. Go, my lord,
And let our army be discharge too.—[Exit West.
And, good my lord, so please you, let our trains
March by us, that we may peruse the men.

We should have cop’d with.

Arch. Go, good lord Hastings,
And, ere they be dismissed, let them march by.

[Exit Hastings.

P. John. I trust, my lords, we shall be to-night
Together.

Re-enter Westmoreland.

Now, cousin, wherefore stands our army still?

West. The leaders, having charge from you to stand,
Will not go off until they hear you speak.

P. John. They know their duties.

Re-enter Hastings.

West. My lord, our army is dispatch’d already.
Like youthful steers unyok’d, they take their courses
East, west, north, south; or, like a school broke up,
Each hurries toward his home, and sporting-place.

West. Good tidings, my lord Hastings; for which I do arrest thee, traitor, of high treason:

And you, lord archbishop,—and you, lord Mowbray,
Of capital treason I attach you both.

West. Is this proceeding just and honourable?

West. Is your assembly so?

Arch. Will you thus break your faith?

P. John. I pawa’d thee none.

I promis’d you redress of these same grievances,
Whereof you did complain; which, by mine honour,
I will perform with a most christian care.
But, for you, rebels,—like to taste the due
Meet for rebellion, and such acts as yours.
Most shallowly did you these arms commence,
Fondly brought here, and foolishly sent hence.—
Strike up our drums, pursue the scatter’d stray;
Heaven, and not we, hath safely fought to-day.—
Some guard these traitors to the block of death;
Travison’s true bed, and yeilder up of breath.

[Exeunt.

SESCENE III.—Another Part of the Forest.

Alarums: Excursions. Enter Falstaff and Coleville, meeting.

Fal. What’s your name, sir? of what condition are you; and of what place, I pray?

Cole. I am a knight, sir; and my name is—Cole-ville of the pale.

Fal. Well then, Coleville is your name; a knight is your degree; and your place, the pale: Cole-ville shall still be your name; a traitor your degree;
and the dungeon your place,—a place deep enough;
so shall you still be Coleville of the date.

Cole. Are not you sir John Falstaff?

Fal. As good a man as he, sir, who’er I am. Do
I hear, the king my father is sore sick:
Our news shall go before us to his majesty.—
Which, cousin, you shall bear,—to comfort him;
And we with sober speed will follow you.

Fal. My lord, I beseech you, give me leave to go through Glosstershire: and, when you come to court, stand my good lord, 'pray, in your good report.

P. John. Fare you well, Falstaff: I, in my condition,
Shall better speak of you than you deserve. [Exit.
Fal. I would, you had but the wit; 'twere better with your dukedom.—Good faith, this same young sober-blooded boy doth not love me; nor a man can not make him laugh;—but that's no marvel, he drinks no wine. There's never any of these demure boys come to any profit; for thin drink doth so overcool their blood, and making many fish-meats, that they fall into a kind of male green-sickness;
and then, when they marry, they get wenchers: they are generally fools and cowards,—which some of us should be too, but for inflammation. A good sherriss-sack hath a two-fold operation in it. It ascends me into the brain; dries me there all the foolish, and dull, and cruddy vapours which environ it: makes it apprehensive, quick, forgetive, full of nimble, fiery, and delectable shapes; which deliver'd o'er to the voice (the voice which is) my brain,) gives me an excellent wit. The second property of your excellent sherris is,—the warming of the blood; which, before cold and settled, left the white liver and pale,
which is the badge of pusillanimity and cowardice:
but the sherris warms it and makes it course from the inwards to the parts extreme. It illumineth the face; which, in a man, gives warning to all the rest of this little kingdom, man, to arm: and then the vital commoners, and inland petty spirits, must me all to their captain, the heart; who, great, and pulled up with this retinue, doth any deed of courage; and this valour comes of sherris: So that skill in the weapon is nothing without sack; for that sets it a-work: and learning a mere board of gold kept by the devil, it anon commences it, and serves in act and use. Hereof comes it, that prince Harry is va-lient: for the cold blood he did naturally inherit of his father, he hath, like bean, steril, and bare land, manured, husbanded, and tilled, with excellent endeavour of drinking good, and good store of fertile sherris; that he is become very hot, and valiant. If I had a hand with the first common principle I would teach them, should be,—to forswear thin potations, and addict themselves to sack.

Enter BARDOLPH.

How now, Bardolph?
Bard. The army is discharg'd all, and gone.

Fal. Let them go. I'll through Glosstershire; and there will I visit master Robert Shallow, esquire: I have him already tempering between my finger and my thumb, and shortly will I seal with him. Come away. [Exit.

SCENE IV.—Westminster. A Room in the Palace.
Enter KING HENRY, CLARENCE, PRINCE
HUMPHREY, WARWICK, and others.

K. Hen. Now, lords, if heaven doth give successful
To this debate that bleadeth at our doors, [end
We will our youth lend on to higher fields,
And draw no swords but what are sanctified.
Our navy is address'd, our power collected,
Our substitutes in absence well invested,
And every thing lies level to our wish:
Only, we want a little personal strength;
And pause us, till these rebels, now afoot,
Come underneath the yoke of government.

War. Both which, we doubt not but your majesty
Shall soon enjoy.

K. Hen. [To Humphrey, my son of Gloucester,
Where is the prince your brother?]

P. Humph. I think, he's gone to hunt, my lord, at K. Hen. And how accompanied? [Windsor.]

P. Humph. I do not know, my lord.

K. Hen. Is not his brother, Thomas of Clarence, with him?

P. Humph. No, my good lord; he is in presence here.

Clu. What would my lord and father? [repose.]

K. Hen. Nothing but well to thee, Thomas of Cla-
How chance, thou art not with the prince thy brother?

He loves thee, and thou dost neglect him, Thomas;
Thou hast a better place in his affection,
Than all thy brethren: cherish it, my boy;
And noble offices thou may'st effect
Of mediation, after I am dead.

Between his greatness and thy other brethren,—
Therefore, omit him not; blust not his love:
Nor lose the good advantage of his grace,
By seeming cold, or careless of his will.
For he is gracious, if he be observ'd;
He hath a tear for pity, and a hand
Open as day for melting charity:
Yet notwithstanding, being incensed, he's flint;
As humorous as winter, and as sudden
As rains congealed in the spring of day.
His temper, therefore, must be well observ'd;
Chide him for faults, and do it reverently,
When you perceive his blood incensed to mirth:
But, being moody, give him line and scope;
Till that his passions, like a whale on ground,
Confound themselves with working. Learn this, Thomas,
And thou shalt prove a shelter to thy friends;
A hoop of gold, to bind thy brothers in;
That the united vessel of their blood,
Mingled with venom of suggestion,
(As, force perforce, the age will pour it in,) Shall never leak, though it do work as strong Asaconitum, or rash gunpowder.

Clu. I shall observe him with all care and love.

K. Hen. Why art thou not at Windsor with him,
Thomas?

Clu. He is not there to-day; he dines in London.

K. Hen. And how accompanied? can'st thou tell that?

Clu. With Poins, and other his continual followers.

K. Hen. Most subject is the fatted soil to weeds;
And he, the noble image of my youth,
Is overspread with them: therefore my grief
Stretches itself beyond the hour of death;
The blood weeps from my heart, when I do shape,
In forms imaginary, the unguided days,
And rotten times, that you shall look upon
When I am sleeping with my ancestors.
For when his headstrong riot hath no curb,
When rage and hot blood is his counsellors,
When passions and rash manners meet together,
O, with what wings shall his affections fly
Towards confounding peril and oppos'd decay!

War. My gracious lord, you look beyond him quite:
The prince but studies his companions,
Like a strange tongue: wherein, to gain the language,
'Tis needful, that the most incommoded word
Be looked upon, and learnt: which once attain'd,
Your highness knows, comes to no farther use,
But to be known, and hated. So, like gross terms,
The prince will, in the perfection of time,
Cast off his followers: and their memory

Shall as a pattern or a measure live,
By which his grace must mote the lives of others;
Turning past evils to advantages.

K. Hen. Tis seldom, when the bee doth leave her
In the dead career.—Who's there? Westmoreland?

Enter Westmoreland.

West. Health to my sovereign! and new happiness
Added to that that I am to deliver!

Prince John, your son, doth kiss your grace a hand:
Mowbray, the bishop Scoope, Hastings, and all,
Are brought to the correction of your law;
There is not now a rebel's sword unsheathed,
But peace puts forth her olive everywhere,
And the manner how this action hath been borne,
Here at more leisure, may your highness read;
With every course, in his particular.

K. Hen. O Westmoreland, thou art a summer bird,
Which ever in the launch of winter sings

The lifting up of day. Look! here's more news.

Enter Harcourt.

Harr. From enemies heaven keep your majesty;
And, when they stand against you, may they fall
As those that I am come to tell you of!
The earl Northumberland, and the lord Bardolph,
With a great power of English, and of Scots,
Are by the sheriff of Yorkshire overthrown:
The manner and true order of the fight,
This packet, please it you, come, large, to large.

K. Hen. And wherefore should these good news make me sick?

Will fortune never come with both hands full,
But write her fair words still in foulest letters?
She either gives a stomach, and no food,—
Such are the poor, in health; or else a feast,
And takes away the stomach,—such are the rich,
That have abundance, and enjoy it not.
I should rejoice now at this happy news;
And now my sight fails, and my brain is giddy:—
O me! come near me, now I am much ill. [Skeous.]

P. Humph. Comfort, your majesty!

Clu. O my royal father! West. My sovereign lord, cheer you up yourself, look up!
My father's princely princes; you do know, these fits Are with his highness very ordinary.

Stand from him, give him air; he'll straight be well.

Clu. No, no; he cannot long hold out these pangs; The incessant care and labour of his mind Hath wrung the mure, that should confine it in,
So thin, that life looks through, and will break out.

P. Humph. The people fear me; for they do observe Unfather'd hairs, and leathern birds of nature: The seasons change their manners, as the year Had found some months asleep, and leap'd them over.

Clu. The river hath thrice flow'd, no ebb between.
And the old folk, time's dotting chronicles,
Say, it did so, a little time before
That our great grandsire, Edward, sick'd and died.

War. Speaker, lower, princes, for the king recovers.

P. Humph. This apple will, certain, be his end.

K. Hen. I pray you, take me up, and bear me hence
Into some other chamber: softly, pray.

Let there be no noise made, my gentle friends; Unless some dull and favourable hand Will whisper music to my weary spirit.

War. Call for the music in the other room.

K. Hen. Set me the crown upon my pillow here.
Clu. His eye is hollow, and he changes much.

War. Less noise, less noise.
ACT IV.—SCENE IV.

Enter Prince Henry.
P. Hen. Who saw the duke of Clarence?
Cla. I am here, brother, full of heaviness.
P. Hen. How now! rain within doors, and none
How doth the king?
[Aside.] P. Humph. Exceeding ill.
P. Hen. Heard he the good news yet?
Tell it him, P. Humph. He alter'd much upon the hearing it.
P. Hen. If he be sick
With joy, he will recover without physic.
War. Not so much noise, my lords; —sweet prince, speak low;
The king your father is dispose'd to sleep.
Cla. Let us withdraw into the other room.
War. Will't please your grace to go along with us?
P. Hen. No; I will sit and watch here by the king.

[Event all but P. Henry.]

Why doth the crown lie there upon his pillow,
Being so troublesome a bedfellow?
O polish'd perturbation! golden care!
That keep'st the parts of slumber so enwreath'd
To make a watchful night — night-sleep with it now!
Yet not so sound, and half so deeply sweet,
As he, whose brow, with honelly bigg'd round,
Snores out the watch of night. — O majesty!
When thou dost pinch thy bearer, thou dost sit
Like a rich armour worn in heat of day,
That scalds with safety. — By his gasp of breath
There lies a downy feather, which stint's not:
Did he suspect, that light and weightless dream
Perforce must move. — My gracious lord! my father! —
This sleep is sound indeed; this is a sleep,
That from this golden rigid hath divorc'd
So many English kings. Thy due, from me,
Is tears, and heavy sorrows of the blood;
Which nature, love, and filial tenderness,
Shall, O dear father, pay thee plenteously:
My due, from thee, is this imperial crown;
Which, as immediate from thy place and blood,
Derives itself to me. Lo, here it sits,—

[Putting it on his head.]

What heaven shall guard: And put the world's whole
Into one giant arm, it shall not force
[strength]
This lineal honour from me: This from thee
Will I to thine leave, as 'tis left to me.
[Exit.]

Cla. Doth the king call? — [grace]
War. What would your majesty? I how fares your
K. Hen. Why did you leave me here alone, my lords.
Cla. We left the prince my brother here, my liege,
Who undertook to sit and watch by you.
K. Hen. The prince of Wales! Where is he? let me
He is not here.
[see him.]
War. This door is open; he is gone this way.
P. Humph. He came not through the chamber where we stay'd.

[pillow.]

K. Hen. Where is the crown? who took it from my
War. When we withdrew, my liege, we left it here.
K. Hen. The prince hath 'tis en it hence: — go, seek Is he so hasty, that he doth suppose him out.
My sleep my death?
Find him, my lord of Warwick; chide him hither.

[Exit Warwick.]

This part of his conjoins with my disease,
And help'st to end me. — See, sons, what things you are!
Hark! Hark! the true falls into revolt,
When gold becomes her object!
For this the foolish over-careful fathers
Have broke their sleep with thoughts, their brains with Their bones with industry,
For this they have engrossed and pil'd up
The canker'd heaps of strange-achieved gold;
For this they have been thoughtful to invest
Their sons with arts, and martial exercises;
Then, like the bee, toiling from every flower
The virtuous sweets;
Our thighs pack'd with wax, our mouths with honey,
We bring it to the hive; and, like the bee,
Are murder'd for our pains. This bitter taste
Yield his engagements to the ending father. —
Re-enter Warwick.

Now, where is he that will not stay so long
Till his friend sickness hath determin'd me?
War. My lord, I found the prince in the next room,
Washing with kindly tears his gentle cheeks;
With such a deep demeanour in great sorrow,
That life did manifest, thou dost not see.
Would, by beholding him, have wash'd his knife
With gentle eye-drops. He is coming hither.
K. Hen. But wherefore did he take away the crown?

Re-enter Prince Henry.

Lo, where he comes. — Come hither to me, Harry,
Depart the chamber; let us use here as [K. Hen. Thys wish was father, Harry, to that thought;

I stay too long by thee, I weary thee.
Dost thou so hunger for my empty chair,
That thou wilt needs invest thee with mine honours
Before thou hast the ripe O foot of crown?
Thou seek' st the greatness that will overwhelm thee.
Stay but a little; for my cloud of dignity
Is held from falling with so weak a wind,
That it will quickly drop: my day is dim.
Thou hast stol'n that, which, after some few hours,
Were thine without offence; and, at my death,
Thou hast seal'd up my expectation;
Thy life by art thou dost beggar me,
And thou wilt have me die assur'd of it,
Thou bid'st a thousand daggers in thy thoughts;
That thou hast whetted on thy stony heart,
To stab at half an hour of my life.
What! cannot thou not forbear me half an hour?
Then get thee gone; and dig my grave thyself,
And bind the merry bells ring to thee as far,
That thou art crowned, not that I am dead.
Let all the tears that should bedew my ears,
Be drops of balm, to sanctify thy head;
Only compound me with forgotten dust;
Give that, which gave thee life, unto the worms.
Pluck down my oaths, break my decrees;
For now a time is come to mock at form,
Harry the fifth is crown'd — Up, vanity!
Down, royal state! all you sage counsellors, hence!
And to the English court assemble now,
From every region, apes of idleness!
Now, neighbour confuses, purge you of your scum:
Have you a roanish, that will swear, drink, dance,
Revel the night; rob, murder, and commit
The oldest sins the newest kind of ways?
Be happy, he will trouble you no more;
England shall double gild his treble gilt;
England shall give him office, honour, might:
For the fifth Harry from curb'd licence plucks
The muzzle of restraint, and the wild dog
Shall fling his teeth in every breach;
O my poor kingdom, sick with civil blows!
When that my care could not withstand thy riots,
What wilt thou do, when riot is thy care?

2 D 2
O, thou wilt be a wilderness again,
Peopled with wolves, thy old inhabitants!
P. Hen. O, pardon me, my liege! but for my tears,

Kneeling.

The moist impediments unto my speech,
I had forestall'd this dear and deep rebuke,
Ere you with grief had spake, and I had heard
The course of it so far. There is your crown;
And I'll that wears the crown immortally,
Long guard it yours! If I affect it more,
Than as your honour, and as your renown,
Let me no more from this obedience rise,
(Which my most true and inward duteous spirit
Teacheth,) this prostrate and exterior bending!
Heaven witness with me, when I here came in
And found no course of breath within your majesty,
How cold it struck my heart! If I do feign,
O, let me in my present wildness die;
And never live to shew the incredulous world
The noble change that I have purposed!
Coming to look on you, thinking you dead.
(And dead, almost my liege, to think you were,) I spake unto the crown as having no case,
And thus upbraided it. The core on thee depending,
 Hath fed upon the body of my father;
Therefore, thou, best of gold, art worst of gold.
Other, less fine in curat, is more precious,
Preserving life in med'cine potable:
But thou, most fine, most honour'd, most renowned,
Hast eat thy bread up. Thus, my most royal liege,
Accusing it, I put it on my head;
To try with it,—as with an enemy,
That had before my face murder'd my father,—
The quarrel of a true inheritor,
But if it did infect my blood with joy,
Or swell my thoughts to any stain of pride;
If any rebel or vain spirit of pride
Did, with the least affection of a welcome,
Give entertainment to the might of it,
Let God for ever keep it from my head!
And make me as the poorest vassal is,
That doth with awe and terror kneel to it!
K. Hen. O my son!
Heaven put it in thy mind to take it hence,
That thou mightst win the more thy father's love,
Pleasing so wisely in excess of it.
Come hither, Harry, sit thou by my bed;
And hear, I think, the very latest counsel
That ever I shall breathe. Heaven knows, my son,
By what by-paths, and indirect crook'd ways,
I met this crown; and I myself know well,
How troublesome it sat upon my head;
To thee it shall descend with better quiet,
Better opinion, better confirmation;
For all the soil of the achievement goes
With me into the earth. It seem'd in me,
But as an honour snatch'd with boisterous hand;
And I had many living, to uphold
My gain of it by their assistances;
Which daily grew to quarrel, and to bloodshed,
Wounding suppos'd peace: all these bold fears,
Thou seest, with peril I have answered:
For all my reign hath been but as a scene
Acting that argument; and now my death
Changes the mode: for what in me was purchas'd,
Falls upon thee in a more fairer sort;
So thou the garland wert'st successively.
Yet, though thou stand'st more sure than I could do,
Thou art not firm enough, since griefs are green;
And all thy friends, which thou must make thy friends,
Have but their strings and teeth newly ta'en out;
By whose fell working I was first advance'd,
And by whose power I well might lodge a fear
To be again displac'd: which to avoid,
I cut them off: and had a purpose now
To lead out many to the Holy Land;
Lest rest, and lying still, might make them look Too near unto my state. Therefore, my Harry,
Be it thy course, to busy holy minds
With foreign quarrels: that action, hence borne out,
May waste the memory of the former days.
More would I, but my lungs are wasted so,
That strength of speech is utterly denied me.
How I came by the crown, O God, forgive!
And grant it may they in true peace live!
P. Hen. My gracious liege,
You won it, wore it, kept it, gave it me;
Then plain, and right must my possession be:
Which I, with more than with a common pain,
'Gainst all the world will rightfully maintain.

Enter Prince John of Lancaster, Warwick
Lords, and others.

K. Hen. Look, look, here comes my John of Lanc-estar.

[father]
P. John. Health, peace, and happiness, to my royal
K. Hen. Thou bring'st me happiness, and peace, son
John;
But health, alack, with youthful wings is flown
From this bare, wither'd trunk: upon thy sight,
My worldly business makes a period.

Where is any lord of Warwick?

P. Hen. My lord of Warwick!
K. Hen. Doth any name particular belong
Unto the lodging where I first did swoon?
War. 'Tis call'd Jerusalem, my noble lord.
K. Hen. Land be to God!—even there my life must
It hath been prophesied to me many years,
[and
I should not dwell out in Jerusalem;
Which vainly I supposed the Holy Land:
But, bear me to that chamber; there I'll lie;
In that Jerusalem shall Harry die.

[Exeunt.

ACT V.

SCENE I.

Glosstershire.—A Hall in Shallow's House.

Enter Shallow, Falstaff, Bardolph, and Page.

Shal. By cock and pye, sir, you shall not away to-night.—What, Davy, I say.
Fal. You must excuse me, master Robert Shallow.
Shal. I will not excuse you; you shall not be excused; excuses shall not be admitted; there is no excess shall serve; you shall not be excused.—
Why, Davy!

Enter Davy.

Davy. Here, sir.
Shal. Davy, Davy, Davy.—let me see, Davy; let me see:—yec, marry, William cook, bid him come hither.—Sir John, you shall not be excused.
Davy. Marry, sir, thus;—those precepts cannot be served: and, again, sir,—Shall we sow the head land with wheat?
Shal. With red wheat, Davy. But for William cook.—Are there no young pigeons?
Davy. Yes, sir.—Here is now the smith's note, for shoeing, and plough irons.
Shal. Let it be cast, and paid:—sir John, you shall not be excused.
Davy. Now, sir, a new link to the bucket must needs be had:—And, sir, do you mean to stop any of William’s wages, about the sack he lost the other day at Hinckley fair!

Slat. He shall answer it: — Some pigeons, Davy; a couple of short-legged hens; a joint of mutton; and any pretty little tiny kickshaws, tell William cook.

Davy. Doth the man of war stay all night, sir?

Slat. Yes, Davy. I will use him well; A friend of the court is better than a penny in purse. Use his men well, Davy; for they are arrant knaves, and well backbit.

Davy. No worse than they are back-bitten, sir; for they have marvellous foul lines.

Slat. I beseech you, sir, to contemnance William Visor of Wincot against Clement Perks of the hulk.

Slat. There are many complaints, Davy, against that Visor; that Visor is an arrant knife, on my knowledge. Davy. I grant your worship, that he is a knife, sir; but yet, God forbid, sir, but a knife should have some contemnance at his friend’s request. An honest man, sir, is able to speak for himself, when a knife is not. I have served your worship truly, sir, this eight years; and if I cannot once or twice in a quarter bear out a knife against an honest man, I have not a very little credit with your worship. The knife is mine honest friend, sir; therefore, I beseech your worship, let him be contemnance.

Slat. Go to; I say, he shall have no wrong. Look about, Davy. [Exit Davy.] Where are you, sir John? Come, off with your boots.—Give me your hand, master Bardolph.

Dav. Sir John, I am glad to see your worship.

Slat. I thank thee with all my heart, kind master Bardolph: — and welcome, my tall fellow. [To the Page.] Come, sir John. [Exit Shallow.]

Fal. I’ll follow you, good master Robert Shallow.

Bardolph, look to your horses. [Exeunt BARDOLPH and Page.] If I were saved into quantities, I should make four dozen of such bearded hermit’s staves as master Shallow. It is a wonderful thing, to see the semblable coherence of his man’s spirits and his: They, by observing him, do bear themselves like foolish justices; he, by conversing with them, is turned into a justice-like serving-man; their spirits are so married in conjunction with the participation of society, that they do not like to consent, hide so many wild-goose. If I had a suit to master Shallow, I would humour his men, with the imputation of being near their masters: if to his men, I would curry with master Shallow, that no man could better command his servants. It is certain, that either wise bearing, or ignorant carriage, is caught as men take diseases, one of another: therefore, let men take heed of their company. I will devise matter enough out of this Shallow, to keep prince Harry in continual laughter, the wearing-out of six fashions, (which is four terms or two actions,) and he shall laugh without intercalations. O, it is much, that a lie, with a slight oath, and a jest, with a sad brow, will do with a fellow that never had the ache in his shoulders: O, you should see him laugh, till his face be like a wet cloak ill laid up.

Slat. [Within.] Sir John!

Fal. I come, master Shallow; I come, master Shallow. [Exit Falstaff.]
As things acquainting and familiar to us; —
In which you, father, shall have foremost hand.

[To the Lord Chief Justice.
Our coronation done, we will accost,
As I before remember'd, all our state:
And (God consenting to my good intents,) No prince, nor peer, shall have just cause to say—
Heaven shorten Harry's happy life one day. [Exeunt.

SCENE III.

Glostershire.—The Garden of Shallow's House.

Enter Falstaff, Shallow, Silence, Bardolph, the Page, and Davy.

Shal. Nay, you shall see mine orchard: where, in an arbour, we will eat a last year's pippin of my own graffing, with a dish of caraways, and so forth;—
coming, cousin Silence,—and then to bed.
Fal. Fore God, you have here a goody dwelling, and a rich.
Shal. Barren, barren, barren; beggars all, beggars all, sir John;—merry, good air.—Spread, Davy; spread, Davy. Well said, Davy.
Fal. This Davy serves you for good uses; he is your serving man, and your huntsman.
Shal. A good dish of a good virus, a very good virus, sir John.—By the mass, I have drunk too much tack at supper:—A good varlet. Now sit down, now sit down;—come, cousin.
Sil. Ah, sirrah! quoth-a,—we shall
Do nothing but eat, and make good cheer, [Singing
And praise heaven for the merry year;
When pease is cheap, all females dear,
And lucky bulls run hither and thither.
So merrily,
And ever amongst so merrily.
Fal. There's a merry heart!—Good master Silence
I'll give you a health for that anon.
Shal. Give master Bardolph some wine, Davy.
Davy. Sweet sir, sit; [seating Bardolph and the Page at another table.] I'll be with you anon:—most sweetest sir, sit;—Master Page, good master Page, sit: profuse! What you want in meat, we'll have in drink. But you must bear; The heart's all. [Exit.
Shal. Be merry, master Bardolph;—and my little soldier there, be merry.
Sil. Be merry, be merry, my wife's aspect;— [Singing
For women are shrunk both short and tall;
'Tis merry in hall, when beards wag all.
And welcome merry shrive-tide.
Be merry, be merry, &c.
Fal. I did not think, master Silence had been a man of this mettle.
Sil. Who if I? I have been merry twice and once ever more.

Re-enter DAVY.

Davy. There is a dish of leath-casts for you.
[Setting them before BARDOLPH.
Shal. Davy,—
Davy. Your worship?—I'll be with you straight.
[To BARDOLPH.]—A cup of wine, sir?
Sil. A cup of wine, that's brisk and fine,
And drink unto the lemon wine; [Singing
And a merry heart lives long a.

Fal. Well said, master Silence.
Sil. And we shall be merry;—now comes in the sweet of the night.
Fal. Health and long life to you, master Silence.
Sil. Fill the cup, and let it come;
I'll pledge you a mile to the bottom.
Shal. Honest Bardolph, welcome; if thou wastet any thing, and wilt not call, beware thy heart.
Welcome, my little tiny thief; [to the Page.] and welcome, indeed, too.—I'll drink to master Bardolph, and to all the cavaliers about London.

Davy. I hope to see London once ere I die.

Bard. An I might see you there, Davy.—

Shal. By the mass, you'll crack a quart together.

Ha! will you not, master Bardolph?

Bard. Yes, sir, in a potte pot.

Shal. I thank thee:—The knave will stick by thee, I can assure thee that: he will not out; he is true bred.

Bard. And I'll stick by him, sir.

Shal. Why, these spoke a king. Lack nothing: be merry. [Knocking heard.] Look who's at door there:

Ho! who knocks?

[Exit Davy.]

Fal. Why, now you have done me right.

To Silence, who drinks a hamper.

Sill. Do me right, [Singing. And dub me knight:

Samingo.

Is't not so?

Fal. 'Tis so.

Sil. Is 't so? Why, then say, an old man can do somewhat.

Re-enter Davy.

Davy. An it please your worship, there's one

Pistol come from the court with news.

Fal. From the court, let him come in.—

Enter Pistol.

How now, Pistol?

Pistol. God save you, sir John!

Fal. What wind blew you hither, Pistol?

Pistol. Not the ill wind which blows no man to good.—Sweat knight, thou art now one of the greatest men in the realm.

Sil. By'r lady, I think 'a be; but goodman Puff of Barson.

Puff. Puff!

Puff in thy teeth, most recreant coward base!—Sir John, I am thy Pistol, and thy friend,

And heller-shelter have I rode to thee;

And tidings do I bring, and lucky joys,

And golden times, and happy news of price.

Fal. I pr'ythee now, deliver them like a man of this world.

Pistol. A foutra for the world, and worldlings base!

I speak of Africa, and golden joys.

Fal. O base Assyrian knight, what is thy news?

Let king Cophetua know the truth thereof.

Sil. And Robin Hood, Sowerlet, and John. [Sings.

Pistol. Shall daugh'g'rs ears confront the Helicon?

And shall good news be baffled!

Then, Pistol, lay thy head in Faries' lap.

Shal. Honest gentleman, I know not your breeding

Pistol. Why then, lament, therefore.

Shal. Give me pardon, sir;—If, sir, you come with news from the court, I take it, there is but two ways; either to utter them, or to conceal them. I am, sir, under the king, in some authority.

Pistol. Under which king, Bezonian? speak, or die.

Shal. Under king Harry.

Pistol. Harry the fourth? or fifth?

Shal. Harry the fourth.

Pistol. A foutra for thine office!—Sir John, thy tender lambkin now is king;

Harry the fifth's the man. I speak the truth:

When Pistol lies, do thus; and ay me, like

The bragging Spaniard.

Fal. What! is the old king dead?

Pistol. As nail in door; the things I speak, are just.

Fal. Away, Bardolph; saddle my horse.—Master Robert Shallow, choose what office thou wilt to the land, 'tis thine.—Pistol, I will double-charge thee with dignities.

Bard. O joyful day!—I would not take a knighthood for my fortune.

Pist. What? I do bring good news?

Fal. Carry master Silence to bed.—Master Shallow, my lord Shallow, be what thou wilt, I am fortune's Stewart. Get on thy boots: we'll ride all night:—O, sweet Pistol:—Away, Bardolph. [Exit Bard.]—Come, Pistol, utter more to me: and, withal, devise something, to do thyself good.—Boot, boot, master Shallow: I know the young king is sick for me. Let us take any man's horses; the laws of England are at my commandment. Happy are they which have been my friends; and woe to my lord chief justice.

Pist. Let vultures vite seize on his lungs also

Where is the life that late I led, say they;

Why, here it is;—Welcome these pleasant days.

[Exeunt.]

SCENE IV.—London. A Street.

Enter Beadle, dragging in Hostess Quickly and Doll Tearsheet.

Host. No, thou arrant knave; I would I might die, that I might have thee hang'd: thou hast draw

my shoulder out of joint.

1 Bead. The constables have delivered her over to me: and she shall have whipping-cheer enough, I warrant her; there hath been a man or two lately killed a about her.

Doll! Nut-hook, nut-hook, you lie. Come on; I'll tell thee what, thou damned tripe visaged rascal; an

the child I now go with, do miscarry, thou hadst better thou hadst struck thy mother, thou paper-faced villain.

Host. O the Lord, that sir John were come! he would make this a bloody day to somebody. But I pray God the fruit of her womb miscarry!

1 Bead. If it do, you shall have a dozen of cushions again; you have but eleven now. Come, I charge you both to go with me; for the man is dead, that you and Pistol beat among you.

Doll. I'll tell thee what, thou wish a man in a caper?

I will have you as soundly forsworn for this, you blue-bottle rogue! you filthy famished corrector; if you be not forsworn, I will forswear half-kirtles.

1 Bead. Come, come, you she knight-errant, come.

Host. O, that right should thus overcome might!

Well; of snuff'ness comes ease.

Doll. Come, you rogue, come; bring me to a justice.

Host. Ay; come, you starved blood-hound.

Doll. Goodman death! Goodman bones!

Host. Thou atony thou.

Doll. Come, you thin thing; come, you rascal!

1 Bead. Very well. » [Exeunt.]

SCENE V.—A publi Place near Westminster Abbey.

Enter two Grooms, strewing rushes.

1 Groom. More rushes, more rushes.

2 Groom. The trumpets have sounded twice.

1 Groom. It will be two o'clock ere they come from the coronation: Despatch, despatch. [ExeuntGrooms

Enter Falstaff, Shallow, Pistol, Bardolph, and the Page.

Fal. Stand here by me, master Robert Shallow.

I will make the king do you grace: I will hear upon him, as 'a comes by; and do but mark the countenance that he will give me.

Pist. God bless thy lungs, good knight.

Fal. Come here, Pistol; stand behind me.—O, if
1 had had time to have made new liverys, I would have bestowed the thousand pound I borrowed of you.

[To Shallow.] But 'tis no matter; this poor show doth better: this doth infer the zeal I had to see him.

Shal. I doth so.

Ful. It shows my earnestness of affection.

Shal. It doth so.

Ful. My devotion.

Shal. It doth, it doth, it doth.

Ful. As it were, to ride day and night; and not to deliberate, not to remember, not to have patience to shift me.

Shal. It is most certain.

Ful. But to stand stained with travel, and sweating with desire to see him: thinking of nothing else; putting all affairs else in oblivion; as if there were nothing else to be done, but to see him.

Pist. 'Tis semper idea, for absque habe nihil est: 'Tis all in every part.

Shal. 'Tis so, indeed.

Ful. My knight, I will inflame thy noble liver, and make thy rage.

Thy Doll, and Helen of thy noble thoughts, is in base durance, and contagious prison; shall I thither.

By most mechanical and dirty hand:

Rouze up revenge from ebon den with fell Alecto's

For Doll is in; Pistoll speaks not but truth: [snake, snake.

Ful. I will deliver her. [Shouts within, and the trumpet sound.]

Pist. There roar'd the sea, and trumpet-changer sounds.

Enter the King and his Train, the Chief Justice among them.

Ful. God save thy grace, king Hal! my royal Hal!

Pist. The heavens thee guard and keep, most royal imp of fame!

Ful. God save thee, my sweet boy!

King. My lord chief justice, speak to that vain man.

Ch. Just. Have you your wits? know you what 'tis you speak?

Ful. My king! my Jove! I speak to thee, my heart!

Kast. I know thee not, old man: fall to thy prayers; how canst thou wish thee on pain of death, and justice! I have long dream'd of such a kind of man, so surfeit-swell'd, so old, and so profane; but, being awake, I do despise my dream.

Make less thy body, hence, and more thy grace; leave gormandizing; know, the grave doth gape

For thee three wider than for other men:

Reply not to me with a fool-born jest;

Presume not, that I am the thing I was:

For heaven doth know, so shall the world perceive,

That I have turn'd away my former self;

So will I those who kept me company.

When thou dost hear I am as I have been,

Approach me; and thou shalt be as thou wast,

The tutor and the feeder of my riots:

Till then, I have rais'd thee on pain of death.

As I have done the rest of my misleaders,

Not to come near our person by ten mile.

For competence of life, I will allow you,

That lack of means enforce you not to evil:

And, as we hear you do reform yourselves,

We will, according to your strength, and qualities,

Give you advancement—Be it your child, my lord, to see perform'd the tenor of our word.

Set on. [Enter King and his Train.

Ful. Master Shallow, I owe you a thousand pound.

Shal. Ay, marry, sir John; which I beseech you to let me have home with me.

Ful. That can hardly be, master Shallow. Do not you grieve at this; I shall be sent for in private to him: look you, he must seem thus to the world. Fear not your advancement; I will be the man yet, that shall make you great.

Shal. I cannot perceive how; unless you give me your doublet, and stuff me out with straw. I beseech you, good sir John, let me have five hundred of my thousand.

Ful. Sir, I will be as good as my word: this that you heard, was but a colour.

Shal. A colour, I fear, that you will die in, sir John.

Ful. Fear no colours; go with me to dinner. Come, lieutenant Pistoll;—come, Bardolph;—I shall be sent for soon at night.

Re-enter Prince John, the Chief Justice, Officers, &c.

Ch. Just. Go, carry sir John Falstaff to the Fleet.

Take all his company along with him.

Ful. My lord, my lord,—

Ch. Just. I cannot now speak; I will hear you soon.

Take them away.

P. John. I like this fair proceeding of the king's:

He hath intent, his wonted followers

Shall all be very well provided for.

But all are banish'd, till their conversations

Appear more wise and moderate to the world.

Ch. Just. And so they are.

P. John. The king hath call'd his parliament, my

Ch. Just. He hath. [lend.

P. John. I will lay odds;—that, ere this year expire,

We bear our civil swords, and native se.

As far as France: I heard a bird so sing;

Whose music, to my thinking, pleas'd the king.

Come, will you hence? [Exit.

EPILOGUE.

Spoken by a Dancer.

First, my fear; then, my court'sy: last, my speech.

My fear is, your displeasure; my court'sy, my duty; and my speech, to beg your pardons. If you look for a good speech now, you undo me: for what I have to say, is of mine own making; and what, indeed, I should say, will, I doubt, prove mine own marring.

But to the purpose, and so to the venture. Be it known to you, (as it is very well,) I was lately here in the end of a displeasing play, to pray your patience for it, and to promise you a better. I did mean, indeed, to pay you with this; which, if, like an ill venture, it come unluckily home, I break, and you, my gentle creditors, lose. Here, I promised you, I would be, and here I commit my body to your mercies: hate me some, and I will pay you some, and, as most debtors do, promise you infinitely.

If my tongue cannot entreat you to acquit me, will you command me to use my legs? and yet that were but light payment,—to dance out of your debt. But a good conscience will make any possible satisfaction, and so will I. All the gentlewomen here have forgiven me; if the gentlemen will not, then the gentlemen do not agree with the gentlewomen, which was never seen before in such an assembly.

One word more, I beseech you. If you be not too much cloyed with fat meat, our humble author will continue the story, with Sir John to it, and make you merry with fair Katherine of France; where, for any thing I know, Falstaff shall die of a sweat, unless already he be killed by your high opinions; for Oldcastle died a martyr, and this is not the man. My tongue is weary; when my legs are too, I will bid you good night: and so kneel down before you; but, indeed, to pray for the queen.

I fancy every reader, when he ends this play, cries out with Desdemona, "O most base and impotent conclusion!" As this play was not to our knowledge, divided into acts by the author, I could be content to conclude it with the death of Henry the Fourth; "In that Jerusalem shall Harry die." These scenes, which now make the fifth act of Henry the Fourth, might have been the first of Hen. Ali, the but the truth is that they do not unite very commodiously to either play. When these plays were represented, I believe they looked as they are now ended in the books; but Shakespeare seems to have designed that the whole series of action, from the beginning of Richard the Second, to the end of Henry the Fifth, should be considered by the reader as one work, upon one plot, only broken into parts by the necessity of exhibition.

None of Shakespeare's plays are more read than the First and Second Parts of Henry the Fourth. Perhaps no author has ever, in two plays, afforded so much delight. The great events are interesting, for the fate of kingdoms depends upon them; the sligher occurrences are diverting, and, except one or two, sufficiency probable; the incidents are multiplied with wonderful fertility of invention, and the characters diversified with the utmost variety of discourse, and the profoundest skill in the nature of men.

The prince, who is the hero both of the comic and tragic part, is a young man of great abilities and violent passions, whose sentiments are right, though his actions are wrong; whose virtues are obscured by negligence, and whose understanding is disguised by levity. In his idle hours he is rather loose than wicked; and when the occasion forces out his latent qualities, he is great without effort, and brave without tumult. The triver is raised into a hero, and the heroic apothesizes in the trifer, the character is great, original, and just.

Percy is a rugged soldier, choler, and generous, and has only the soldier's virtues, generosity and courage. But Falstaff, unamiable, unamiable Falstaff, how shall I describe the other's companionship of sense and vice, of some which may be admired, but not esteemed; of vice, which may be de- nounced, but hourly detected. Falstaff is a character loaded with faults, and with those faults which naturally produce contempt. He is a thief and a villain, a coward and a boaster, always ready to cheat the weak, and prey upon the poor, to terrify the timorous, and insult the defenceless. At once obsequious and magnificent, he satirizes in their absence those whom, he lives by flattering. He is familiar with the prince only as an agent of vice, but of this familiarity he is so proud, as not only to be supercilious and haughty with common men, but to think his interest of importance to the Duke of Lancaster. Yet the man thus corrupt, thus dispicable, makes himself necessary to the prince that desires him, by the most pleasing of all qualities, perpetual gaiety, by an unflagging power of exciting laughter, which is the more freely indulged, as his wit is not of the splendid or ambiguous kind, but consists in easy sallies and sallies of levity, which make sport, but raise no envy. It must be observed, that he is trained with no uncommon or extraordinary crimes, so that his licentiousness is not at his heels. The prince is thus to be drawn from this representation, that no man is more dangerous than he that, with a will to corrupt, hath the power to please; and that a fellow wit, nor honesty ought to think themselves safe with such a companion, when they see Henry seduced by Falstaff.—JOHNSON.

KING HENRY V.

This play was entered on the Stationers' books, August 14, 1600, and printed in the same year. It was written after the Second Part of Henry IV., being promulgated in the epilogue to that play; and while the epilogue was extant in Ireland, as we learn from the chorus to the fifth act. Lord Exe went to Ireland, April 15, 1599, and returned to London on the 20th of September in the same year. So that this play must have been produced between April and September, 1599.

The transactions comprised in this Historical Play commence about the latter end of the first, and terminate in the eighth, year of this king's reign, when he married Katharine princess of France, and concludes the differences between England and that crown. —MALONE and THOROLD.

O, for a muse of fire, that would ascend The brightest heaven of invention! A kingdom for a stage, princes to act, And monarchs to behold the swelling scene! Then should these necessary times excite our carriage, like himself, Assume the port of Mars; and those the soldiers in the same. Leash'd in like hounds, should famine, sword, and fire Crouch for employment. But pardon, gentles all, The flat unrais'd spirit, that hath dard, On this unworthy scaffold, to bring forth So great an object: Can this cockpit hold The vasty fields of France? or may we cramp Within this wooden O, the very capacities, That did affright the air at Agincourt? O, pardon! since a crooked figure may Attest, in little place, a million: And let us, cyphers to this great accompt, On your imaginary forces work: Suppose, with 'n the girdle of these walls
Are now confin'd two mighty monarchies,
Whose high uprear'd and abutting fronts
The perilous, narrow ocean parts asunder.
Piece out our imperfections with your thoughts;
Into a thousand parts divide one man,
And make imaginary puissance:
Think, when we talk of horses, that you see them
Printing their proud hoofs the receiving earth;
For 'tis your thoughts that now must deck our kings,
Carry their better and more dignity;
Turning the accomplishment of many years
Into an hour-glass; For the which supply,
Admit me chorus to this history:
Who, prologue-like, your humble patience pray,
Gently to hear, kindly to judge, our play.

ACT I.

SCENE I.

London.—An Ante-chamber in the King's Palace.

Enter the Archbishop of Canterbury, and
Bishop of Ely.

Cant. My lord, I'll tell you,—that self bill is arg'd,
Which, in the eleventh year of the last king's reign
Was like, and had indeed against us pass'd,
But that the scembling and unquiet time
Did push it out of further question.

Ely. But how, my lord, shall we resist it now?
Cant. It must be thought on. If it pass against us,
We lose the better half of our possession:
For all the temporal lands, which men devout
By testament have given to the church,
Would they strip from us; being valued thus,—
As much as would maintain, to the king's honour,
Full fifteen ears, and fifteen hundred knights;
Six thousand and two hundred good esquires;
And, to relief of laars, and weak age,
Of indigent faint souls, past corporal toil,
A hundred alms houses, right well supplied;
And to the coffers of the king beside,
A thousand pounds by the year: Thus runs the bill.

Ely. This would drink deep.

Cant. 'Twould drink the cup and all.

Ely. But what prevention?

Cant. The king's good will, of grace, and fair regard.

Ely. And a true lover of the holy church.

Cant. The courses of his youth promis'd it not.
The breath no sooner left his father's body,
But that his wildness, mortified in him,
Seem'd to die too: yea, at that very moment,
Consideration like an angel came,
And whipp'd the offending Adam out of him;
Leaving his body as a paradise,
To envelop and contain celestial spirits.
Never was such a sudden scholar made:
Never came reformation in a flood,
With such a heady current, searing faults;
Nor ever Hydra headed wildness
So soon did lose his head, and all at once,
As this king.

Ely. We are blessed in the change.

Cant. Hear him but reason in divinity,
And, all-admiring, with an inward wish
You would desire, the king were made a prelate:
Hear him debate of commonwealth affairs,
You would say,—it hath been all-in-all his study:
List how his counsel is, and you shall hear
A fearful battle render'd you in music:
Turn him to any cause of policy,
The Gordian knot of it he will unloose,

Familiar as his garter; that, when he speaks,
The air, a charter'd libertine, is still,
And the mate wonder lurketh in men's ears,
To steal his sweet and honeyed sentences,
So that the art and practic part of life
Must be the mistress to this theoric;
Which is a wonder, how his grace should giean.
Since his addiction was to courses vain:
His companies unlike'd, rude, and shallow;
His hours fill'd up with riots, sports,
And never noted in him any study,
Any retirement, any sequestration
From open haunts and popularity.

Ely. The strawberry grows underneath the nettle:
And wholesome berries thrive and ripen best,
Neighbour'd by fruit of baser quality:
And so the prince obscurs'd his contemplation
Under the veil of wildness; which, no doubt,
Grew like the summer grass, fastest by night,
Unseen, yet creepish in his faculty.

Cant. It must be so; for miracles are eas'd;
And therefore we must needs admit the means,
How things are perfected.

Ely. But, my good lord,
How now for mitigation of this bill,
'Gud' by the commons? Doth his majesty
Incline to it, or no?

Cant. He seems indifferent;
Or, rather, swaying more upon our part,
Than cherishing the exhibitors against us:
For I have made an offer to his majesty,—
Upon our spiritual conversation:
And in regard of causes now in hand,
Which I have open'd to his grace at large,
As touching France,—to give a greater sum
Than ever at one time the clergy yet
Did to his predecessors part withal.

Ely. How did this offer seem receiv'd, my lord?
Cant. With good acceptance of his majesty;
Save, that there was not time enough to hear
(As I perceive'd his grace would fain have done,)
The several, and unhidden passages,
Of his true titles to some certain dukedoms;
And, generally, to the crown and seat of France,
Derv'd from Edward, his great grandfather.

Ely. What was the impediment that broke this off?
Cant. The French ambassador, upon that instant,
Crv'd audience: and the hour, I think, is come,
To give him hearing: Is it four o'clock?
Ely. It is.
Cant. Then go we in, to know his embassy;
Which I could, with a ready guess, declare,
Before the Frenchman speak a word of it.

Ely. I'll wait upon you; and I long to hear it.
[Exeunt.]

SCENE II.—The same. A Room of State in the same.

Enter King Henry, Gloston, Bedford, Exeter,
Warwick, Westmoreland, and Attendants.

K. Hen. Where is my gracious lord of Canterbury?
Exe. Not here in presence.

K. Hen. Send for him, good uncle.

Wed. Shall we call in the ambassador, my liege?
K. Hen. Not yet, my cousin: we would be resolv'd,
Before we hear him, of some things of weight,
That task our thoughts, concerning us and France.

Enter the Archbishop of Canterbury and
Bishop of Ely.

Cant. God and his angels, guard your sacred throne,
And make you long become it!

K. Hen. Sure, we thank you.
Act I.—Scene ii.

My learned lord, we pray you to proceed! And justly and religiously unfold,
Why the law Salique, that they have in France,
Or should, or should not, bar us in our claim.
And God forbid, my dear and faithful lord,
That you should fashion, rest, or how your reading,
Or nicely charge your understanding soul
With opening titles miscritable, whose right
Suits not in native colours with the truth;
For God doth know, how many, now in health,
Shall drop their blood in approbation
Of what your reverence shall invite us to:
Therefore take heed how you impawn our person,
How you awake the sleeping sword of war:
We charge you in the name of God, take heed:
For never two such kingdoms did contend,
Without much fall of blood; whose guiltless drops
Are every one a woe, a sore complaint,
'Gainst him whose wrongs give edge unto the swords
That make such waste in brute mortality.
Under this conjunction, speak, my lord:
And we will hear, note, and believe in heart,
That what you speak in your conscience was'd
As pure as sin with baptism.

Caest. Then hear me, gracious sovereign,—and you
These lords your council, and these ladies,
To this imperial throne:—There is no bar
To make against your highness claim to France,
But tis, which they produce from Pharamond,—

In terram Salicam nullius se succedant,
No woman shall succeed in Salique land:
Which Salique land the French unjustly gaze,
To keep the title and solemn of Pharamond
The founder of this law and female bar,
Yet their own authors faithfully affirm,
That the land Salique lies in Germany,
Between the floods of Sala and of Elbe:
Where Charles the great, having subdued the Saxons,
There left behind and settled certain French;
Who, holding in disdain the German women,
For some dishonest manners of their life,
Establish'd there this law,—to wit, no female
Should be inheritrix in Salique land;
Which Salique, as I said, 'twixt Elbe and Sata,
Is at this day in Germany call'd—Meisen.
Thus doth it well appear, the Salique law
Well suits the chief, and all parts the same;
Nor did the French possess the Salique land
Until four hundred one and twenty years
After defunction of king Pharamond,
Idly appos'd the founder of this law;
Who died within the year of our redemption
Four hundred twenty-six; and Charles the great Subdued the Saxons, and did seat the French
Beyond the river Sala, in the year
Eight hundred five. Besides, their writers say,
King Pepin, which deposed Childerick,
Did, as heir general, being descended
Of Bilchold, which was daughter to king Clothair,
Make claim and title to the crown of France.
Hugh Capet also,—that usurp'd the crown
Of Charles the duke of Lorain, sole heir male
Of the true line and stock of Charles the great,—
To fixe his title with some show of truth,
(Though, in pure truth, it was corrupt and naught,
Convey'd himself as heir to the lady Liargue,
Daughter to Charlemain, who was the son
To the temperate Clothair, and brother
Of Charles the great. Also king Lewis the tenth,
Who was sole heir to the usurper Capet,
Could not keep quiet in his conscience,
Wearing the crown of France, till satisfied

Treat fair queen Isabel, his grandmother,
Was lineal of the lady Ermengare,
Daughter to Charles the foresaid duke of Lorain:
By the which marriage, the line of Charles the great
Was re-united to the crown of France.
So that, as clear as is the summer's sun,
King Pepin's title, and Hugh Capet's claim,
King Lewis his satisfaction, all appear
To hold in right and title of the female:
So do the kings of France unto this day;
Howbeit they would hold up this Salique law,
To bar your highnesses claiming from the female;
And rather choose to hide them in a net,
Than amply to imbibe their crooked titles
Usry'd from you and your progenitors.
[This claim?]

K. Hen. May I, with right and conscience, make
Cont. The sin upon my head, dread sovereign!
For in the book of Numbers is it writ,—
When the sea dies, let the inheritance
Descend unto the daughter. Gracious lord,
Stand for your own; unfold your bloody flag;
Look back unto your mighty ancestors:
Go, my dread lord, to your great grandsires tomb,
From whom you claim; invoke his warlike spirit,
And your great uncle's, Edward the black prince;
Who on the French ground his flag did so loudly,
Making defeat on the full power of France;
Whiles his most mighty father on a hill
Stood smiling, to behold his lion's whelp
Forge in blood of French nobility.
O noble English, that could entertain
With half their forces the full pride of France;
And let the ancient language say,
All out of work, and cold for action!

Oly. Awake remembrance of these valiant dead,
And with your puissant arm renew their feats:
You are their heir, you sit upon their throne;
The blood and courage, that renowned them,
Runs in your veins; and my thrice-puissant liege
Is in the very May-morn of his youth,
Ripe for exploits and mighty enterprises.

Eye, your brother kings and monarchs of the earth,
Do all expect that you should rose yourself,
As did the former lions of your blood. [and might;]
Wit. They know, your grace hath cause, and means,
So hath your highness; never king of England
Had nobler heart nor devised for better objects;
Whose hearts have left their bodies burning in England, and lie pavilion'd in the fields of France.

Cont. O, let their bodies follow, my dear liege,
With blood, and sword, and fire, to win your right
In aid whereof, we of the spirituality
Will raise your highness such a mighty sum,
As never did the clergy at one time
Bring in to any of your ancestors.

K. Hen. We must not only arm to invade the French,
But lay down our proportions to defend Against the Scot, who will make road upon us
With all advantages.

Cont. They of those marches, gracious sovereign,
Shall be a wall sufficient to defend
Our inland from the pillager borderers.

K. Hen. We do not mean the courting snatchers
But fear the main intendment of the Scot.

only,
Who hath been still a giddy neighbour to us;
For you shall read, that my great grandfather
Never went with his forces into France,
But that the Scot on his warlike kingdom
Came pouring, like the tide into a breach,
With ample and brim fullness of his force;
Galing the gleaned land with hot essays,
Girding with grievous siege, castles and towns;
That England, being empty of defence,
Hath shook, and trembled at the ill-neighborhood.
Can't. She hath been then more fear'd than harm'd,
For hear her but examined by herself,—
My Liege: When all her chivalry hath been in France,
And she a mourning widow of her nobles,
She hath herself not only well defended,
But taken, and impounded as a stray,
The king of Scots; whom she did send to France,
To fill king Edward's fame with prisoner kings;
And make your chronicle as rich with praise,
As is the oze and bottom of the sea
With sunken wreck and sunless treasuries.
Rest. But there's a saying, very old and true,—
*If that you will France win,
Then with Scotland first begin;*
For once the eagle England being in prey,
To her unguarded nest the wouled Scot
Comes sneaking, and so sucks her princely eggs;
Playing the mouse, in absence of the cat,
They shall have more than she can eat.
Ete. It follows then, the cat must stay at home;
Yet that is but a curs'd necessity;
Since we have locks to safeguard necessary,
And pretty traps to catch the petty thieves.
Wile that the armed hand doth fight abroad,
The advised head defends itself at home:
For Government, though high, and low, and lower,
Put into parts, doth keep in one concent;
Congraining in a full and natural close,
Like music.
Can't. True: therefore doth heaven divide
The state of man in divers functions,
Setting endeavour in continual motion;
To which is fixed, as an aim or butt,
Obedience: for so work the honey bees;
Creatures, that, by a rule in nature, teach
The act of order to a peopled kingdom;
They have a king, and officers of sorts:
Where some, like magistrates, correct at home;
Others, like merchants, venture trade abroad;
Others, like soldiers, armed in their stings,
Make boot upon the summer's velvet buds;
Which pilage they with merry march bring home
To the first royal of their empire.
Who, bust in his majesty, surveys
The singing masons building roofs of gold;
The civil citizens kneading up the honey;
The poor mechanic porters crowding in
Their heavy burdens at his narrow gate;
The sad-ey'd justice, with his early hum,
Delivering o'er to executives pale,
The lazy yawning drone.
I this infer,—
That many things, having full reference
To one concent, may work contrariously;
As many arrows, loosed several ways,
Fly to one mark;
As many several ways meet in one town;
As many fresh streams run in one self sea;
As many lines close in the dial's center;
So many a thousand actions, once about,
End in one purpose, and be all well borne
Without defeat.
Therefore to France, my liege,
Divide your happy England into four;
Whereof take you one quarter into France,
And you will find shall make all Gallia shake.
If we, with thrice that power left at home,
Cannot defend our own door from the dog,
Let us be warned; and our nation lose
The name of hardiness, and policy.

K. Hen. Call in the messengers sent from the Dauphin.
Exit an Attendant.
The King ascends his throne.

Now are we well repos'd; and,—by God's help;
And yours, the noble savers of our power,—
France being ours, we'll bend it to our awe,
Or break it all to pieces:
Ruling, in large and ample empery,
Of France, and all her almost kindling dukedoms.—
Or lay these bones in an unworthy urn,
Tombless, with no remembrance over them:
Either our history shall, with full mouth,
Speak freely of our acts; or else our grave,
Like Turkish mute shall have a tongueless mouth,
Not worship'd with a waxen epitaph.

Enter Ambassadors of France.

Now are we well prepar'd to know the pleasure
Of our fair cousin Dauphin; for, we hear,
Your greeting is from him, not from the king.
Amb. May it please your majesty, to give us leave
Freely to render what we have in charge;
Or shall we sparingly shew you far off
The Dauphin's meaning, and our embassy?
K. Hen. We are no tyrant, but a Christian king;
Unto whose grace our passion is as subject,
As are our wretches fetter'd in our prisons:
Therefore, with frank and with uncurbed plainness
Tell us the Dauphin's mind.
Amb. Thus, then, in few.
Your highness, lately sending into France,
Did claim some certain dukedoms in the right
Of your great predecessor, king Edward the third.
In answer of which claim, the prince our master
Says,—that you savour too much of your youth;
And bids you be advis'd, there's ought in France,
That can be with a nimble gaitio won;
You cannot revel into dukedoms there:
He therefore sends you, master for your spirit,
This tain of treasure; and, in lieu of this,
Desires you, let the dukedoms, that you claim,
Hear no more of us. This the Dauphin speaks.
Hen. What treasure, uncle?
Exe. Tennis-balls, my liege.
K. Hen. We are glad, the Dauphin is so pleasant
With us.
His present and your pains, we thank you for:
When we have match'd our rockets to these balls,
We will, in France, by God's grace, play a set,
Shall strike his father's crown into the hazard:
Tell him, he hath made a match with such a wrangler,
That all the courts of France will be disturb'd
With chaces. And we understand him well,
Now he comes o'er us with our wilder days,
Not measuring what use we made of them.
We never val'd this poor seat of England;
And therefore, living hence, did give ourself
To barbarous license; As 'tis ever common,
That men are merriest when they are from home.
But tell the Dauphin,—I will keep my state:
Be like a king, and shew your soil of greatness,
When I do rouse me in my throne of France:
For that I have laid by my majesty,
And plodded like a man for working days
But I will rise there with so full a glory,
That I will dazzle all the eyes of France,
Yea, strike the Dauphin blind to look on us.
And tell the pleasant prince,—this mock of his
Hath torn'd his balls to gout-stones; and his soul
Shall stand sure charged for the wasteful vengeance
That shall fly with them: for many a thousand widows
Shall his mock mock out of their dear husbands;
Mock mothers from their sons, mock castles down:
And some are yet ungotten, and unborn,
That shall have cause to curse the Dauphin's scorn.

[lin.]

KING HENRY V.
KING HENRY V.

PISTOL.  Fish for thee, Iceland dog!

Act II. Sc. 1.
But this lies all within the will of God.
To whom I do appeal; And in whose name,
Tell you the Dauphin, I am coming on,
To venge me as I may, and to put forth
My rightful hand in a well-hallow'd cause,
So, get you hence in peace; and tell the Dauphin,
His jest will savour but of shallow wit.
When thousands weep, more than did laugh at it.
Convey them with safe conduct.—Fare you well.

[Exeunt Ambassadors.

Ere. This was a merry message.

K. Hen. We hope to make the sender blush at it.

Therefore, my lords, omit so happy hour,
That we may, in our further consultation:
For we have now no thought in us but France;
Save those to God, that run before our business.
Therefore, let our proportions for these wars
Be soon collected; and all things thought upon,
That may, with reasonable swiftness, add
More feathers to our wings; for, God before,
And by his grace the Dauphin at his father's door.
Therefore, let every man now task his thought,
That this fair action may on foot be brought.

[Exeunt.

ACT II.

Enter Chorus.

Chor. Now all the youth of England are on fire,
And silken dalliance in the wardrobe lies;
Now thrive the armours, and honour's thought
Reigns solely in the breast of every man:
They sell the pasture now, to buy the horse;
Following the mirror of all Christian kings,
With winged heels, as English Mercurius,
For now sits Expectation in the air;
And hides a sword from hilts unto the point,
With crowns imperial, crowns and coroets,
Promis'd to Harry, and his followers.
The French, advis'd by good intelligence
Of most dreadful preparation,
Seek in their fear—this grace of kings must die,
Seek to divert the English purposes.
O England!—model to thy inward greatness,
Like little body with a mighty heart,—
What mightst thou do, that honour would thee do,
Were all thy children kind and natural!
But see thy fault! France hath this found out
A nest of hollow bowmen, which he fills
With treacherous crowns; and three corrupted men,—
One, Richard earl of Cambridge; and the second,
Henry lord Scroop of Masham; and the third,
Sir Thomas Grey knight of Northumberland.—
Have, for the gift of France, (O guilt, indeed!)—
Confirm'd conspiracy with fearful France;
And by their hands this grace of kings must die,
(If hell and treason hold their promises.)
Ere he take ship for France, and in Southampton.
Linger your patience on; and well digest
The abuse of distance, while we force a play.
The sun is paid; the traitors are agreed;
The king is set from London; and the scene
I now transported, gentles, to Southampton:
There is the playhouse now, there must you sit:
And thence to France shall we convey you safe,
And bring you back, charming the narrow seas
To give you gentle pass; for, if we may,
We'll not offend one stomach with our play.
But, till the king come forth, and not till then,
Unto Southampton do we shift our scene.

[Exit.

ACT II.—SCENE I.

Bard. Well met, corporal Nym.

Nym. Good morrow, lieutenant Bardolph.

Bard. What, are ancient Pistol and you friends yet?

Nym. For my part, I care not; I say little; but When time shall serve, there shall be smiles;—but that shall be as it may. I dare not fight; but I will wink, and hold out mine iron: It is a simple one; but what though? It will toast cheese; and it will endure cold as another man's sword will: and there's the humour of it.

Bard. I will bestow a breakfast to make you friends;
and we'll be all three sworn brothers to France;
let it be so, good corporal Nym.

Nym. 'Faith, I will live so long as I may, that's the certain of it; and when I cannot live any longer,
I will do as I may: that is my rest, that is the na-
ri nous of it.

Bard. It is certain, corporal, that he is married to Nell Quickly: and, certainly, she did you wrong;
for you were troth-plight to her.

Nym. I cannot tell; things must be as they may:
men may sleep, and they may have their throats about them at that time; and, some say, knives have edges.
It must be as it may: though patience be a tired mare, yet she will plod. These must be conclusions.
Well, I cannot tell.

Enter Pistol and Mrs. Quickly.

Bard. Here comes ancient Pistol, and his wife:—
good corporal, be patient here.—How now, mine host Pistol?

Pist. Base fike, call'st thou me—host?—
Now, by this hand I swear, I scorn the term;
Nor shall my Nell keep lodgers.

Quick. No, by my troth, not long: for we cannot lodge and board a dozen or fourteen gentlewomen, that live honestly by the prick of their needles, but it will be thought we keep a bawdy-house straight.

Nym draws his sword.] O well-a-day, Lady, if he be not drawn now! O Lord! here's corporal Nym's —now shall we have willful adultery and murder committed.

Pist. Fish!—

Quick. Fish for thee, Iceland dog! thou prickedeared cur of Iceland.

Quick. Good corporal Nym, shew the valour of a man, and put up thy sword.

Nym. Will you shog off? I would have you solus.

Pist. Solus, egregious dog? O viper vile!—
The solus in thy most marvellous face;
The solus in thy teeth, and in thy throat,
And in thy hateful lungs, yea, to thy maw, perdy;
And, which is worse, within thy nasty mouth!
I do retract the solus in thy bowels;
For I can take, and Pistol's cock is up,
And flashing fire will follow.

Nym. I am not Barbazon: you cannot conjure me.
I have an humour to knock you indifferently well; If you grow foul with me, Pistol, I will scour you with my rapier, as I may, in fair terms: if you would walk off, I would prick your guts a little, in good terms, as I may; and that's the humour of it.

Pist. O bragging vile, and damned furious wight!
The grave doth gape, and doting death is near;
Therefore exale.

[Exeunt. Pistol and Nym draw.

Bard. Hear me, hear me what I say:—he that strikes the first stroke, I'll run him up to the hills, as I am a soldier.

[Pist.}
KING HENRY V.

Pist. An oath of mickle might; and fury shall abate.
Give me thy fast, thy fore-foot to me give;
Thy spirits are most tall.

Nym. I will cut thy throat, one time or other, in fair terms; that is the humour of it. [again.
Pist. Coupe le gorge, that's the word?—I thee defy
O hound of Criece, think'st thou my spouse to get? No; to the spiral go,
And from the powdering tub of infamous
Fetch forth the lazar kite of Cressid's kind,
Doll Tear-sheet she by name, and her espouse:
I have, and I will hold, the quondam Quickly
For the only she: and—Pauses, there's enough.

Enter the Boy.

Boy. Mine host Pistol, you must come to my master,—and you, hostess;—he is very sick, and would to bed.—Good Bardolph, put thy nose between his sheets, and do the office of a warming-pun: faith, he's very ill.

Bard. Away, you rogue.
Quick. By my troth, he'll yield the crow a pudding one of these days; the king has killed his heart.

Good husband, come home presently. [Exit Mrs. Quickly and Boy.

Bard. Come, shall I make you two friends? We must to France together; Why, the devil, should we keep knives to cut one another's throats?

Pist. Let floods or river, and friends for food howl on!

Nym. You'll pay me the eight shillings I won of you at betting.

Pist. Base is the slave that pays.
Nym. That now I will have; that's the humour of it.

Pist. As manhood shall composed; Push home. Bard. By this sword, he that makes the first thrust I'll kill him: by this sword, I will. [course.
Pist. Sword is an oath, and oaths must have their Bard. Corporal Nym, an thou wilt be friends, be friends: an thou wilt not, why then be enemies with me too. Pr'ythee, put up.

Nym. I shall have my eight shillings, I won of you at betting?

Pist. A noble shall thou have, and present pay;
And liquor likewise will I give to thee,
And friendship shall combine, and brotherhood:
I'll live by Nym, and Nym shall live by me;—
Is not this just?—for I shall suffer be Unto the camp, and profits will accrue.
Give me thy hand.

Nym. I shall have my noble?
Pist. In cash most justly paid.
Nym. Well then, that's the humour of it.

Re-enter Mrs. Quickly.

Quick. As ever you came of women, come in quickly to sir John: Ah, poor heart! he is so shatted of a burning quotidiant terian, that it is most lamentable to behold. Sweet men, come to him.

Nym. The king hath run bad humours on the knight, that's the even of it.

Pist. Nym, then hast spoke the right;
His heart is fracted, and corroborate.

Nym. The king is a good king: but it must be as it may; he passes some humours and cares.
Pist. Let us condole the knight; for, lambkins, we will live. [Exit.

SCENE II.—Southampton. A Council Chamber.

Enter Exeter, Berford, and Westmorland.

Bed. Fore God, his grace is bold to trust these traitors. They shall be apprehended by and by, [fors. Wer. How smooth and even do they hear themselves! If as allegiance in their bosom sat,
Crowned with faith, and constant loyalty.
Bed. The king hath note of all that they intend,
By interception which they dream not of.
Exe. Nay, but the man that was his bedfellow,
Whom he hath clod'd and grec'd with princely fa,
That he should, for a foreign purse, so sell;
Yours,—His sovereign's life to death and treachery!

Trumpet sounds. Enter King Henry, Scroop, Cambridge, Grey, Lords, and Attendants.

K. Hen. Now sits the wind fair, and we will aboard
My lord of Cambridge,—and my kind lord of Ma-

And you, my gentle knight,—give me your thoughts:
Think you not, that the powers we hear with us,
Will cut their passage through the force of France;
Doing the execution, and the act.
For which we have in head assembled them?
Scroop. No doubt, my liege, if each man do his best
K. Hen. I doubt not that since we are well persuaded,
We can not a heart with us from hence,
That grows not in a fair consent with ours;
Nor leave not one behind, that doth not wish
Success and conquest to attend on us.
Cam. Never was monarch better fear'd, and lov'd
Than is your majesty; there's not, I think, a subject,
That sits in heart-grief and uneasiness
Under the sweet shade of your government.
Great. And many, that were your father's enemies,
Have steept'd their galls in honey; and do serve you
With hearts create of duty and of zeal.
K. Hen. We therefore have great cause of thankful-
And shall forget the office of our hand, [cess;
Sooner than quittance of desert and merit.
According to the weight and worthiness,
Scroop. So cease shall with steel'd steins toil;
And labour shall refresh itself with hope,
To do your grace incessant services.
K. Hen. We judge no less.—Uncle of Exeter,
Enlarge the man committed yesterday,
That rall'd against our person: we consider,
It was excess of wine that set him on.
And, on his more advice, we pardon him.
Great. He comes, that's mercy, but too much security:
Let him be punish'd, sovereign; lest example
Breed, by his sufferance, more of such a kind.
K. Hen. O, let us yet be merciful.
Cam. So may your highness, and yet punish too.
Grey. Sir, you shew great mercy, if you give him life,
After the taste of much correction.
K. Hen. Alas, your too much love and care of me
Are heavy orisons 'gainst this poor wretch.
If little faults, proceeding on distemper,
Shall not be wink'd at, how shall we stretch our eye,
When capital crimes, chew'd, swallow'd, and digested,
Ampcrar before us?—We'll yet enlarg'e that man,
Though Cambridge, Scroop, and Grey,—in their dear
And tender preservation of our person,—
Care; Would have him Scroop of Masham— and, sir knight,
And now to our French
Who are the late commissioners?
Cam. 1, one, my lord;
Your highness bade me ask for it to-day.
Scroop. So did you me, my liege.
Grey. And me, my royal sovereign. [yours:—
K. Hen. Then, Richard, earl of Cambridge there
Thou hast, lord Scroop of Masham,—and, sir knight,
Grey of Northumberland, this same yours—
Read them: and know, I know your worthiness.
My lord of Westmorland,—and uncle Exeter. —
We will aboard to-night. Why, how now, gentle
What seem you in those papers, that you lose [men?
So much complication?—look ye, how they change!
ACT II.—SCENE III.

London.—Mrs. Quickly’s House in Eastcheap.

Enter PISTOL, Mrs. QUICKLY, NYM, BARDOLPH, and Boy.

Quick. Prythee, honey-sweet husband, let me bring thee to Staines.

Pist. No; for my manly heart doth yearn.—Bardolph, behold—thee, Nym, rouseth vaunting veins; Roy, bristle thy courage up; for Falstaff he is dead, and we must yearn therefore. Bard. “Would I were with him, wheresoe’er he is, either in heaven, or in hell!”

Quick. Nay, sure, he’s not in hell; he’s in Arthur’s bosom, if ever man went to Arthur’s bosom. ‘A made such sport, and sent away, an it had been any christom child; ‘a part ed just between twelve and one, o’cn turning o’ the tide: for after I saw him fumble with the sheets, and play with flowers, and smile upon his fingers’ ends, I knew there was but one way; for his nose was as sharp as a pen, and

Their cheeks are paper.—Why, what read you there, that hath so cowarded and shied your blood out of appearance? I do confess my fault; and do submit to your highness’ mercy.

Grey. Sceopt. To which we all appeal. K. Hen. The mercy, that was quick in us but late, By your own counsel is suppressed and kill’d: You must not shun, for shame, to talk of mercy; For your own reasons turn into your bosoms, As dogs upon their masters, worrying them— See you, my princes, and my noble peers, [here,— These English monsters! My lord of Cambridge You know, how apt our loves was to accord To furnish him with all our entertainments Belonging to his honour; and this man Hath, for a few light crowns, lightly conspir’d, And sworn unto the practices of France, To kill us here in Hampton: to the which, This knight, no less for bounty bound, Than Cambridge is,—hath likewise sworn. But O What shall I say to thee, lord Sceopt; thou cruel, Treasonous, false, and whoremonger! Thou, that didst bear the key of all my counsels, That knewst the very bottom of my soul, That almost might’st have coind me into gold, Would’st thou have practis’d on me for thy use? May it be possible, that foreign inns, Could out of thee extract one spark of evil, That might annoy my finger? tin so strange, That, though the truth of it stands off as gross As black from white, my eye will scarcely see it. Treason, and murder, ever kept together, As two yoke-devils sworn to either’s purpose, Working so grossly in a natural cause, That admiration did not whoop at them: But thou, gainst all proportion, didst bring in Wonder, to wait on treason, and on murder: And whatsoever cunning fend it was, That wrought upon thee so preposterously, Hath got the voice in hell for excellence; And other devils, that suggest by reasons, Do both and bungle up damnation With patches, colours, and with forms being fetch’d from Gristling semblances of piety; But he that temper’d thee, bade thee stand up, Gave thee no instance why thou shouldst do treason, Unless to dub thee with the name of traitor, If that same daemon, that hath gull’d thee thus, Should with his lion gait walk the whole world, He might return tousty Tartar back, And tell the legions—I can never win A soul so easy as that Englishman’s. O, how hast thou with jealousy infected The sweetness of affiance! Shew men dastardly! Why, so didst thou: Seem they grave and learned? Why, so didst thou: Come they of noble family? Why, so didst thou: Seem they religious? Why, so didst thou: Or are they spare in diet? Free from gross passion, or of mirth, or anger; Constant in spirit, not swerving with the blood; Garnish’d and deck’d in modest compliment; Not working with the eye, without the ear; And, but in purged judgment, trusting neither? So, and so finely bolted, didst thou seem: And thus thy fall hath left a kind of blot, To mark the full-fraught man, and best indued, With some suspicion. I will weep for thee; For this revolt of thine, methinks, is like. Another fall of man. These fair gates are open, Arrest them to the answer of the law:— And God accept them of their practices!
'a babbled of green fields. How now, sir John? quoth i: what, man! be of good cheer. So 'a cried out—God, God, God! three or four times: now i, to comfort him, bid him, 'a should not think of God; i hoped, there was no need to trouble himself with any such thoughts yet: So, 'a bade me lay more clothes on his feet: i put my hand into the bed, and felt them, and they were as cold as any stone; then i felt to his knees: the foot so forward, and upward, and all was as cold as any stone.

Nym. They say, he cried out of sack.

Quick. Ay, that 'a did.

Bard. And of women.

Quick. Nay, that 'a did not.

Boy. Yes, that 'a did; and said, they were devils incarnate.

Quick. 'A could never abide carnation; 'twas a colour he never liked.

Boy. 'A said once the devil would have him about women.

Quick. 'A did in some sort, indeed, handle women: but then he was rheumatic; and talked of the whore of Babylon.

Boy. Do you not remember, 'a saw a flea stick upon Bardolph's nose: and 'a said, it was a black soul burning in hell-fire?

Bard. Well, the fuel is gone, that maintained that fire: that's all the riches 'tis got in his service.

Nym. Shall we shog off? the king will be gone from Southampton.

Pist. Come, let's away.—My love, give me thy lips. Look to my chattels, and my moveables: Let senses rule; the word is, Pitch and pay; Trust none: For oaths are straws, men's faiths are wafer-cakes, And hold-fast is the only dog, my duck; Therefore, esteem be thy counsellor. Go, clear thy chrysalis.—Yoke fellows in arms, Let us to France! like horse-bleeches, my boys: To sack, to suck, the very blood to suck!

Boy. And that is but unhonorable food, they say.

Pist. Touch her soft mouth, and march.

Bard. Farewell, hostess.

Nym. I cannot kiss, that is the humour of it; but I will.

Let housewifery appear; keep close, I thee command.

Quick. Farewell; adieu.

[Exeunt.

SCENE IV.

France.—A Room in the French King's Palace.

Enter the French King attended; the Dauphin, the Duke of Burgundy, the Constable, and others.

Fr. King. Thus come the English with full power And more than carefully it us concernes, [upon us; To answer royalty in our defences. Therefore the dukes of Berry, and of Btagnie, Of Brabant, and of Orleans, shall make forth,— And you, prince Dauphin,—with all sweet despatch, To line, and new repair, our tows of war, With men of courage, and with means defensat: For England his approaches makes as fierce, As waters to the sucking of a gulf.

It fits us then, to be as provident As fear may teach us, out of late examples Left by the fatal and neglected English Upon our fields.

Duc. Most my most redoubted father, I must most meet you arm us against the foe: For peace itself should not so dull a kingdom, [tion.] (Though war, nor no know no quarrel, were in ques-

But that defences, masters, preparations, Should be maintain'd, assembled, and collected, As were a war in expectation. Therefore, I say, 'tis meet we all go forth, To view the sick and feeble parts of France; And let us do it with no show of fear; No, with no more, than if we heard that Englaad Were busied with a Whitsun morris-dance: For, my good liege, she is so idly king'd, Her people bears but a faint heart.

By a vain, giddy, shallow, humorous youth, That fear attends her not.

Con. O peace, prince Dauphin.

You are too much mistaken in this king: Question your grace the late ambassadors,— With what great state he heard their embassy, How well supplied with noble counsellors, How modest in exception, and withal How terrible in constant resolution,— And you shall find, his vanities fore-spent Were but the outside of the Roman Brutus, Covering discretion with a coat of folly; As gardeners do with ordure hide those roots That shall first spring, and be most delicate.

Duc. Well, 'tis not so, my lord high constable, But though we think it so, it is no matter: In cases of defence, 'tis best to weigh The enemy more mighty than he seems, So the proportions of defence are fitt'd;

Which, of a weak and meagrely projection, Doth, like a miser, spoil his coat, with scutching A little cloth.

Fr. King. Think we king Harry strong; And, princes, look, you strongly arm to meet him. The kindred of him hath been Besh'd upon us; And he is bred out of that bloody strain, That haunted us in our familiar paths: Witness our too much memorable shame, When Cressey battle fatall'y was struck, And all our princes captiv'd, by the hand Of that black name, Edward black prince of Wales, Whiles that his mountain sire,—on mountain stand-Up in the air, crow'd with the golden sun,— [ing, Saw his heroic seed, and smil'd to see him Mangle the work of nature, and deface The patterns that by God and by French fathers Have twenty years been made. This is a stem Of that victorious stock; and let us fear The native mightiness and fate of him.

Enter a Messenger.

Mess. Ambassadors from Henry king of England Do crave admittance to your majesty.

F. King. We'll give them present audience.

Go, and bring them. [Exit Mess. and certain Lords. You see, this chase is hotly follow'd, friends.

Duc. Turn head, and stop pursuitt; for coward dogs Most spend their mouths, when what they seem to threaten, Runs far before them. Good my sovereign, Take up the English short; and let them know Of what a monarch you are the head: Self-love, my liege, is not so vile a sin As self-neglecting.

Re-enter Lords, with Exeter and Train.

Fr. King. From our brother England?

Ese. From him; and thus he greets your majesty. He wills you, in the name of God Almighty, That you digest yourself, and lay apart So far from yourself, as the gilding, In the borrow'd glories, that, by gift of heaven, By law of nature, and of nations, 'long To him, and to his heirs; namely, the crown, And all wide stretched honours that pertain,
ACT III.—SCENE I.

Enter Chorus.

Cho. Thus with imagin’d wing our swift scene flies;
In motion of no less celerity

Than that of thought. Suppose that you have seen
The well appointed king at Hampton pier
Embrace his loyalty; and his brave fleet
With silken streamers the young Phoebus fasting,
Play with your fancies; and in them behold,
Upon the hamp tire tackle, ship-boy climbing:
Hear the shrill whistle, which doth order give
To sounds confus’d! behold the threatened sails,
Borne with the invisible and creeping wind,
Draw the huge bottoms through the furious sea,
Breasting the lofty surge: O, do but think,
You stand upon the rivage, and behold
A city on the inconstant waves dancing:
For so appears this fleet majestical,
Holding due course to Harfleur.

Follow, follow! Grapple your minds to sternage of this navy;
And leave your England, as dead midnight, still,
Guarded with grandfathers, babies, and old women.
Either past, or not arrived to, pith and puissance:
For who in time, whose chin is but enrich’d
With one appearing hair, that will not follow
These cul’d and choice-drawn cavaliers to France?

Work, work, your thoughts, and therein see a siege:
Behold the ordinance on their carriages,
With fatal mouths gaping on g invisible Harfleur.
Suppose, the ambassador from the French comes back;
Tells Harfleur:—that the king doth offer him
Katherine his daughter; and with her, to dowry,
Some petty and unprofitable dukedoms.
The offer likes not: and the nimble gunner
With his stock now the devilish cannon touches,
[Alarum; and cannons go off.
And down goes all before him. Still be kind,
And eke out our performance with your mind. [Exit.

SCENE I.—The same. Before Harfleur.

Alarums. Enter King HENRY, EXETER, BERFORD,
GLOSTER, and Soldiers, with scaling ladders.

K. Hen. Once more unto the breach, dear friends,
Or close the wall up with our English dead!
In peace, there’s nothing so becomes a man,
As modest stillness, and humility:
But when the blast of war blows in our ears,
Then imitate the action of the tiger;
Stiffen the sinews, summon up the blood,
Disguise fair nature with hard-favour’d rage:
Then lend the eye a terrible aspect;
Let it pry through the portage of the head,
Like the brass cannon; let the brow o’erwhelm it,
As fearfully, as doth a gallant rock
O’erhang and jutty his confounded base,
Swift’d with the wild and wasteful ocean,
Now set the teeth, and stretch the nostril wide;
Hold hard the breast, and bend up every spirit
To his full height!—On, on, you noble English,
Whose blood is yet from fathers of war-proof!
Fathers, that, like so many Alexanders,
Have, in these parts, from morn till even fought,
And sheath’d their swords for lack of argument.
Dishonour not your mothers: now attest
That those, whom you call’d fathers, did beget you!
Be cop to men of grosser blood, [full
And teach them how to war!—And you, good yeo-
Whose limbs were made in England, shew us here,
The mettle of your pasture; let us swear
That you are worth your breeding: which I doubt not;
For this is none of you so mean and base,
That hath not noble lustre in your eyes.
I see you stand like greyhounds in the slips,
Straining upon the start. The game’s afoot;

E. 2
Follow your spirit: and, upon this charge,
Cry—God for Harry! England! and Saint George!
[Exit. _Harmon. and chambers go off.

SCENE II. —The same.

_Forces pass over: then enter Nym, Bardolph,
Pistol, and Boy.

_Nym. Pray thee, corporal, stay; the knacks are too hot; and, for mine own part, I have not a case of lives; the humour of it is too hot, that is the very plain song of it.
_Tabard.
_Pist. The plain song is most just; for humours do
Knocks go and come; God's vassals drop and die;
And sword and shield,
In bloody field,
Doth win immortal fame.

_Boy. Would I were in an alehouse in London!
_I would give all my fame for a pot of ale, and safety.
_Pist. And I:
If wishes would prevail with me,
My purpose should not fail with me,
But thither would I hie.

_Boy. As duly, but not as truly, as bird doth sing on bough.

_Enter Fluellen.

_Flu. Got's plough! —Up to the preaches, you
_rascals! will you not up to the preaches!
_[Driving them forward.
_Pist. Be merciful, great duke, to men of mould!
_Abate thy rage, abate thy manly rage!
_Abate thy rage, great duke!
_Nym. These be good humours! —Your honour wins bad humours. [_Exeunt Nym, Pistos, _Bardolph, _followed by Fluellen.

_Boy. As young as I am, I have observed these three _swashers. I am boy to them all three: but all they _three, though they would serve me, could not be man to me; for, indeed, these such antics do not amount to a man. For Bardolph, —he is white-liver'd, and red-faced; by the means whereof, 'a factes it out, but _fights not. For Pistol, he hath a killing tongue, and a quiet sword; by the means whereof 'a breaks words, and keeps whole weapons. For Nym, —he hath heard, that men of few words are the best men; and thereo _re he seems to say his prayers, lest 'a should be thought a coward; but his few bad words are match'd with as few good deeds; for 'a never broke any man's head but his own; and that was against a post, when _he was drunk. They will steal any thing, and call it, _-purchase. Bardolph steale a late-case; bore it twelve leagues, and sold it for three halfe-pence.
_Nym and Bardolph are sworn brothers in fighting; and in Calais they stole a fire-shovel: I knew, by that piece of service, the men would carry coals. They would _-have me as familiar with men's pockets, as their gloves or their handkerchiefs; which makes much against _my manhood, if I should take from another's pocket, to put into mine: for it is plain pocketing up of _wrongs. I must leave them, and seek some better
_service: their villany goes against my weak stomach,
_and therefore I must cast it up. [_Exit Boy.

_Re-enter Fluellen, Gower following.

_Gew. Captain Fluellen, you must come presently to the mines; the duke of Gloster would speak with you.

_Flu. To the mines! tell you the duke, it is not so good to come to the mines: For, look you, the mines is not according to the disciplines of the war; the conceivableness of it is not sufficient: for, look you, you and I (you may discuss unto the duke, look you,) is light himself four yards under the counter-mines; by Cheshu, I think, 'a will plow up all, if _there is not better directions.

_Gow. The duke of Gloster, to whom the order of the siege is given, is altogether directed by an Irishman;
a very valiant gentleman, _faith.

_I say, I think Captain Macmorris, is it not?
_Gow. I think, it be.

_Flu. By Cheshu, he is an ass, as in the 'orld: I will _verify as much in his part: he has no more di _rections in the true disciplines of the wars, you look, of the Roman disciplines, than is a puppy-dog.

_Enter Macmorris and Jamy, at a distance.

_Gow. Here 'a comes; and the Scots captain, capa tain Jamy, with him.

_Flu. Captain Jamy is a marvellous furious gen _tleman, that is certain; and of great expedition, and _knowledge, in the ancient wars, upon my particular _knowledge of his directions: by Cheshu, he will maintain his argument as well as any military man in the 'orld, in the disciplines of the pristine wars of _the Romans.

_Jamy. I say, gud-day, captain Fluellen.
_Flu. God-den to your worship, gud captain Jamy.

_Gow. How now, captain Macmorris? have you quit
_the mines! have the pioneers given o'er?
_Mac. By Chrish la, tish ill done: the work ish give over, the trumpet sound the retreat. By my hand, _I swear, and by my father's soul, the work ish ill done; it ish give over: I would have blew up the town, so Chrishe save me, la, in an hour. O, tish ill done, tish ill done! by my hand, tish ill done!

_Flu. Captain Macmorris, I peseche you now, will you Avoutsafe me, look you, a few disputations with you, as partly touching or concerning the disciplines of the war, the Roman wars, in the way of argument, _look you, and friendly communication; partly, to satisfy my opinion, and partly, for the satisfaction, you look, of my mind, as touching the direction of _the military discipline; that is the point.

_Jamy. It shall be very gud, gud faith, gud captains bath: and I shall quit you with gud lewe, as I may pick occasion; that shall I marry.

_Flu. It shall be to discourse, so Chrishe save me,
_the day is hot, and the weather, and the wars, and
_the king, and the dukess; it is no time to discourse.
_The town is beseeched, and the trumpet calls us to _the breach; and we talk, and, by Chrishe, do nothing;
'tis shame for us all: so God sa'me, 'tis shame to _stand still; it is shame, by my hand: and there is _throats to be cut, and works to be done; and there is _no time for discourse, so Chrishe sa'me, la.

_Jamy. By the mess, ere these eyes of mine take themselves to slumber, aile do gade service, or aile lige i'the ground for it; ay, or go to death;
_and aile pay it as valorously as I may, that sa'l surely do, that is the bruff and the long: Mary, I wald full fain
_heard some question 'ween you 'waye.

_Flu. Captain Macmorris, I think you, under your _conclusion, there be not many of your nation—

_Mac. Of my nation? What ish my nation? I ish a villain, and a bastard, and a knife, and a rascal:
_What ish my nation? Who talks of my nation?

_Flu. Look you, if you take the matter otherwise than is meant, Captain Macmorris, peradventure, I _shall think you do not use me with that affability as in discretion you ought to use me, look you; being as gott a man as yourself, both in the disciplines of
To-night in Harfleur will we be your guest;
To-morrow for the march are we address'd.

Flourish. The King, &c. enter the town.

SCENE IV.—Roiien. A Room in the Palace.

Enter Katharine and Alice.

Alice. Alice, tu as esté en Angletèrre, et tu parles bien le language.
Alice. Un peu, madame.
Alice. Je te prête, m'enseignes; il faut que j'apprenne à parler. Comment appelles vous la main, en Anglais?
Alice. La main? elle est appelée, de hand.
Alice. De hand. Et le doigt?
Alice. Les doigts? ma jou, je oublie les doigts; mais je me souviendrai. Les doigts? je peus, qu'ils sont appelé de fngres; euy, de fngres.

Kath. La main, de hand; les doigts, de fngres. Je pense, que je suis le bon avocat. J'y jugé deux mots d'Anglais ci-jà.
Alice. Les ongles? les appelles, de nails.
Kath. De nails. Ecoutes; dites moi, si je parle bien: de hand, de fngres, de nails.
Alice. C'est bien dit, madame; il est fort bon Anglais.
Kath. Dites moy en Anglais, le bras.
Alice. De arm, madame.
Kath. Et le coude.
Alice. De elbow, madame.
Kath. De elbow. Je m'en fait la repetition de tous les mots, que vous m'avez appris dès a present.
Alice. Il est trop difficile, madame, comme je pense.
Kath. Excuses moy, Alice; ecoutes; De hand, de fngre, de nails, de arm, de bilbow.

Alice. De billow, madame.

Kath. O Seigneur Dieu j'y m'en oublié; De elbow.

Comment appelles-vous le col?
Alice. De neck, madame.
Kath. De neck: et le menton?
Alice. De chin.
Alice. Ouy. Sauf votre hounorer: en verité, vous pronounces monton, au lieu que les natifs d'Angleterre.
Kath. Je ne doute point d'apprendre par la grace de Dieu; et eu peu de temps.
Alice. N'avez vous pas deja oublié ce que je vous ay enseigné?
Kath. Non, je reciteray a vous promptement. De hand, de fngre, ne mails.
Alice. De nails, madame.
Kath. De nails, de armé, de bilbow.
Alice. Sauf votre hounorer, de elbow.
Kath. Ainsi dis je; de elbow, de neck, et de sin: Comment appelles-vous les pieds et la robe?
Alice. De foot, madame; et de coo.
Kath. De foot, et de coo? O Seigneur Dieu! ces sont mots de mon mout, corruptibles, gros les entes?
Alice. Nous donnons des mots devant les Seigneurs de France, pour tout le monde. Il faut de foot, et de coo, mout-moins. Je reciteray une autre fois ma long ensemble: De hand, de fngre, de nails, de armé, de elbow, de neck, de sin, de foot, de coo.
Alice. Courvayez, madame!
Kath. C'est aussi pour une fois; allons nous a diner.

[Exeunt.

SCENE V.—The same. Another Room in the same.

Enter the French King, the Dauphin, Duke of Bourbon, the Constable of France, and others.

Fr. King. Tis certain, he hath pass'd the river Some Can. And if he be not fought withal, my lord,
KING HENRY V.

Let us not live in France; let us quit all, and give our vineyards to barbarous people.

_Dan._ O _Dien vicant!_ shall a few sprays of us,—

The emptying of our fathers' luxury,
Our scions, put in wild and savage stock,
Spat up suddenly into the clouds,
And overlooked their grafters?

_Bour._ Normans, but bastard Normans, Norman
Mort de ma vie! if they march along [bastards!]
Unfought withal, but I will sell my dukedom,
To buy a slobbery and a dirty farm
In that nook-shotten isle of Albion.

_Con._ _Dien de hartoilles?_ what have they this
Is not their climate foggy, raw, and dull? [mettle!]
On whom, as in despite, the sun looks pale,
Killing their fruit with frowns? Can sodden water,
A drench for surrein'd jade, their barley broth,
Decoct their cold blood to such valiant heat?
And shall our quick blood, spirited with wine,
Seem frosty? O, for the honour of our land,
Let us not hang like roping snakes
Upon your house's thatch, while a more frosty people
Sweat drops of gallant youth in our rich fields?
Poor—we may call them, in their native lords.

_Dan._ By faith and honour,
Our madams mock at us; and plainly say,
Our mettle is bred out; and they will give
Their bodies to the lust of English youths,
To new-store France with bastard warriors.

_Bour._ They bid us—to the English dancing-schools,
And teach fawors high, and swift curantos;
Saying, our grace is only in our heels,
And that we are most lofty runaways. [hence]

_Fr. King._ Wherein Montjoy, the herald! speed him,
Let him greet England with our sharp defiance—
Up, princes; and, with spirit of honour edg'd,
More sharper than your swords, lie to the field:
Charles De-la-bret, high constable of France;
You dukes of Orleans, Bourbon, and of Berry,
Alencon, Brabant, Bar, and Burgaudy;
Jacques Châtillon, Ramberes, Vaudemont,
Beaumont, Grandpré, Reussi, and Faunenberg,
Foix, Lezale, Bouchiquet, and Châlons;
High dukes, great princes, barons, lords, and knights,
For your great seats, now quit you of great shames.
Bar Harry England, that sweeps through our land
With penons painted in the blood of Harleian:
Rush on his host, as doth the melted snow
Upon the valleys: whose low vassal seat
The Alps doth spit and void his whim upon;
Go down upon him,—you have power enough,—
And in a captive chariot, into Rouen
Bring him our prisoner.

_Con._ This becomes the great.

_Sorry am I, his numbers are so few,
His soldiers sick, and famish'd in their march;
For, I am sure, when he shall see our army,
He'll drop his heart into the sink of fear,
And, for achievement, offer us his ransom.

_Fr. King._ Therefore, lord constable, haste on Mont;
And let him say to England, that we send [joy;
To know what willing ransom he will give—
Prince Dauphin, you shall stay with us in Rouen.

_Dan._ Not so, I do beseech your majesty.

_Ar. King._ Be patient, for you shall remain with us—
Now, forth, lord constable, and princes all,
And quickly bring us word of England's fall. [Ex._

SCENE VI.—_The English Camp in Picardy._

_Enter GOWER and FLOUHEN._

_Gov._ How now, captain Fluellen? come you from the bridge?

_Flu._ I assure you, there is very excellent service committed at the bridge.

_Gov._ Is the duke of Exeter safe?

_Flu._ The duke of Exeter is as magnificent as Agamemnon, and a man that I love and honour with my soul, and my heart, and my duty, and my life, and my living, and my uttermost powers: he is not, (God be praised and blessed!) any hurt in the 'ord; but keeps the pridge most valiantly, with excellent discipline. There is an ensign there at the pridge,—I think, in my very conscience, he is as valiant as King Henry, and he forms an no estimation in the 'ord: but I did see him do gallant service.

_Gov._ What do you call him?

_Flu._ He is called—ancient Pistol.

_Gov._ I know him not.

_Enter Pistol._

_Flu._ Do you not know him? Here comes the man.

_Pist._ Captain, I thee beseech to do me favours:

The duke of Exeter doth love thee well.

_Flu._ Ay, I praise Got; and I have merited some love at his hands.

_Pist._ Bardolph, a soldier, firm and sound of heart,
Of buxom valor, hath,—by cruel fortune,—
And for Fortune's furiousickle wheel,
That goddess blind,
That stands upon the rolling restless stone,—

_Flu._ By your patience, ancient Pistol. Fortune is painted pink, with a mullion before her eyes, to signify to you that fortune is plied: And she is painted also with a wheel; to signify to you, which is the moral of the day, that she is turning, and immutable, and variations, and mutabilities: and her foot, look you, is fixed upon a spherical stone, which rolls, and rolls, and rolls;—In good truth, the poet is make a most excellent description of fortune: fortune, look you, is an excellent moral.

_Pist._ Fortune is Bardolph's foe, and frowns on
For he hath stol'n a piz, and hanged must 'be; [him; A dammed death! Let gallows gape for dog, let man go free,
And let not hemp his wind-pipe suffocate;
But Exeter hath given the doom of death,
For piz of little price.

Therefore, go speak, the duke will hear thy voice;
And let not Bardolph's vital thread be cut
With pencil of penny cord, and vile reproach:
Speak, captain, for his life, and I will thee requite.

_Flu._ Ancient Pistol, I do partly understand your meaning.

_Pist._ Why thou rejoece therefore?

_Flu._ Certainly, ancient, it is not a thing to rejoece at: for if, look you, he were my brother, I would desire the duke to use his good pleasure, and put him to executions; for disciplines ought to be used.

_Pist._ Die and be damn'd; and figo for thy friendship.

_Flu._ It is well.

_Pist._ The fig of Spain. [Exit Pistol._

_Flu._ Very good.

_Gov._ Why, this is an arrant counterfeit rascal; I remember him now: a bawd; a cutpurse, and a person of some sort of courage.

_Gov._ Why, 'tis a gull, a fool, a rogue; that now and then goes to the wars, to grace himself, at his return into London, under the form of a soldier. And such fellows are perfect in great commanders' names; and they will learn you by rote, where services were

Go, therefore, tell thy master, here I am; My ransome, is this frail and worthless trunk; My army, but a weak and sickly guard; Yet, God before, tell him we will come on, Though France himself, and such another neighbour, Stand in our way. There's for thy labour, Montjoy. Go bid the master well add the news: If we may pass, we will; if we be hinder'd, We shall your tawny ground with your red blood Discourse: and so, Montjoy, fare you well. The sun of all our answer is but this: We would not seek a battle, as we are: Nor as we are, we say, we will not shun it; So tell your master.

MONT. I shall deliver so. Thanks to your highness. [Exit Montjoy.

Glo. I hope, they will not come upon us now. K. Hen. We are in God's hand, brother, not in theirs. March to the bridge; it now draws toward night,— Beyond the river we'll encamp ourselves: And on to-morrow bid them march away. [Exeunt.

SCENE VII.—The French Camp, near Agincourt.

Enter the Constable of France, the Lord Rambures, the Duke of Orleans, Dauphin, and others.

Con. Thou hast the best armur of the world.— Would it were day? Ort. You have an excellent armur; but let my horse have his due. Con. It is the best horse of Europe. Ort. Will it never be morning? Daup. My lord of Orleans, and my lord high constable, you talk of horse and armur,— Ort. You are as well provided of both as any prince in the world.

Daup. What a long night is this! — I will not change my horse with any that treads but on four pavers. Ca, ha! He bounds from the earth, as if his entrails were hairs; le cheval voltant, the Pegassus, puit a les marines de feu. When I bestride him, I am a hundred; he trots the air; the earth sings when he touches it; the basest horn of his hoof is more musical than the pipe of Hermes. Ort. He's of the colour of the nutmeg.

Daup. And of the heat of the ginger. It is a beast for Perseus: he is pure air and fire; and the dull elements of earth and water never appear in him, but only in past to its stillness, while his rider mounts him: he is, indeed, a horse; and all other jades you may call—beasts.

Con. Indeed, my lord, it is a most absolute and excellent horse.

Daup. It is the prince of palfreys; his neigh is like the bidding of a monarch, and his countenance enforces bonmage.
Orl. No more, cousin.

Dau. Nay, the man hath no wit, that cannot, from the rising of the lark to the lodging of the lamb, vary deserved praise on my palfrey: it is a theme as fluent as the sea; turn the sands into eloquent tongues, and my horse is argument for them all: 'tis a subject for a sovereign to reason on, and for a sovereign's sovereign to ride on: and for the world (familiar to us, and known) to lay apart their particular functions, and wonder at him. I once wrote a sonnet in his praise, and begun thus: Wonder of nature—.

Orl. I have heard a sonnet begins to one's mistress.

Dau. Then did they imitate that which I composed to my courser: for my horse is my mistress.

Orl. Your mistress bears well.

Dau. We well: which is the prescript praise and perdition of a good and particular mistress.

Con. What joy! the other day, methought, your mistress shrewdly shook your back.

Dau. So, perhaps, did yours.

Con. Mine was not bridled.

Dau. O! then, belike, she was old and gentle; and you rode, like a Kerne of Ireland, your French horse 's off, and in your straight trowsers.

Con. You have good judgment in horsemanship.

Dau. Be warned by me then: they that ride so, and ride not warily, fall into foul bogs; I had rather have my horse to my mistress.

Con. I had as lief have my mistress a jade.

Dau. I tell thee, constable, my mistress wears her own hair.

Con. I could make as true a boast as that, if I had a sow to my mistress.

Dau. Le chien est retourné à son propre vomissement, et la trève tavit au bourdon: thoukest use of any thing.

Con. Yet do I not use my horse for my mistress; or any such proverb, so little kin to the purpose.

Ram. My lord constant, the armour that I saw in your tent to-night, are those stents, or stuns upon it?

Con. Stars, my lord.

Dau. Some of them will fall to-morrow, I hope.

Con. And yet my sky shall not want.

Dau. That may be, for you bear a many superfluously; and 'were none honour, some were away.

Con. Even as your horse bears your praises; who was that one that were of your brags dismounted.

Dau. Would, I were able to load him with his desert! Will it never be day? I will trot to-morrow a mile, and my way shall be paved with English faces.

Con. I will not say so, for fear I should be faced out of my way: But I would it were morning, for I would fain be about the ears of the English.

Ram. Who will go to hazard with me for twenty English prisoners?

Con. You must first go yourself to hazard, ere you have them.

Dau. 'Tis midnight, I'll go arm myself. [Exit.

Orl. The Dauphin longs for morning.

Ram. He longs to eat the English.

Con. I think, he will eat all he kills.

Orl. By the white hand of my lady, he's a gallant prince.

Con. Swear by her foot, that she may tread out the oath.

Orl. He is, simply, the most active gentleman of France.

Con. Doing is activity; and he will still be doing.

Orl. He never did harm, that I heard of.

Con. Nor will do none to Morrow: he will keep that good name still.

Orl. I know him to be valiant

Con. I was told that, by one that knows him better than you.

Orl. What's he?

Con. Marry, he told me so himself; and he said, he cared not who knew it.

Orl. He needs not, it is no hidden virtue in him.

Con. By my faith, sir, but it is; never any body saw it, but his lackey: 'tis a hooded valour; and, when it appears, it will hate.

Orl. Ill will never said well.

Con. I will cap that proverb with— There is flat- tery in friendship.

Orl. And I will take up that with—Give the devil his due.

Con. Well placed; there stands your friend for the devil: have at the very eye of that proverb, with— A pox of the devil.

Orl. You are the better at proverbs, by much more—A fool's bolt is soon shot.

Con. You have shot over.

Orl. 'Tis not the first time you were overshot.

Enter a Messenger.

Mess. My lord high constable, the English lie within fifteen hundred paces of your tent.

Con. Who hath measured the ground?

Mess. The lord Grandpré.

Con. A valiant and most expert gentleman.— Would it were day!—Alas, poor Harry of England! he longs not for the dawning, as we do.

Mess. What a wretched and peevish fellow is this king of England, to go wroth with his fat-brained followers so far out of his knowledge?

Con. If the English had any apprehension they would run away.

Orl. That they lack; for if their heads had any intellectual armour, they could never wear such heavy head-pieces.

Ram. That island of England breeds very valiant creatures; their mastiffs are of unmatchable courage.

Orl. Foolish curs! that run winking into the mouth of a Russian bear, and have their heads crushed like rotten apples: You may as well say,—that's a valiant fela, that dare eat his breakfast on the lip of a lion.

Con. Just, just; and the men do sympathize with the mastiffs, in robustious and rough coming on, leaving these wars with their wits: and then give them great meals of beef, and iron and steel, they will eat like wolves, and fight like devils.

Orl. Ay, but these English are shrewdly out of beef.

Con. Then we shall find to-morrow—they have only stomachs to eat, and none to fight. Now is it time to arm: Come, shall we about it?

Orl. It is now two o'clock: but, let me see, by ten,

We shall have each an hundred Englishmen. [Exit.

ACT IV.

Enter Chorus.

Chor. Now entertain conjecture of a time, When creeping morning, and the poring dark, Fills the wide vessel of the universe. From camp to camp, through the foul wound of night The hum of either army still sounds, That the fox's sentinel almost receive The secret whispers of each other's watch: Fire answers fire, and through their pale flames Eve leaves these with her other's umlaced face: Steel threatens steed, in high and boastful neighs Piercing the night's dull ear; and from the teats, The armourers, accomplishing the knights,
ACT IV.—SCENE 1.

With busy hammers closing rivets up,
Do your dreadful note of preparation.
The country clocks do crow, the clocks do toll,
And the third hour of drowsy morning name.

Proud of their numbers, and secure in soul,
The confidential and over-lusty French.
Do the low-rated English play at dice;
And chide the cripple tardy-gated night,
Who, like a fool and ugly witch, doth limp
So tediously away.

The poor condemned English,
Like sacrifices, by their watchful eyes

Sit patiently, and inly ruminate
The morning's danger; and their gesture sad,
Investing buck-heavy cheek, and war-worn coat,
Presented them unto the gazing moon
So many horrid ghosts. O, now, who will behold
The royal captain of this ruin'd band,
Walking from watch to watch, from tent to tent,
Let him cry—Praise and glory on his head!
For forth he goes, and visits all his host;
Bids them good-morrow, with a modest smile:
And calls them—brothers, friends, and countrymen.
Upon his royal face there is a note
How dread an army hath surrounded him;
Nor doth he dedicate one jot of colour
Unto the weary and all-watch'd night:
But freshely looks, and over-bears attend,
With cheerful semblance, and sweet majesty;
That every wretch, pining and pale before.
Beholding him, plucks comfort from his looks:
A largess universal, like the sun,
His liberal eye doth give to every one,
Thewing cold fear. Then mean, and gentle all,
Behold, as may unworthiness define,
A little touch of Harry in the night:
And so our scene must to the battle fly;
Where (O for pity!) we shall much disgrace—
With four or five most vile and ragged toils,
Right ill dispos'd in brawl ridiculous.
The name of Agincourt: Yet, sit and see;
Minding true things, bywhat their mockeries be. [Exit.

SCENE I.—The English Camp at Agincourt.

Enter King Henry, Bedford, and Gloucester.

K. Hen. Gloster, 'tis true; that we are in great danger;
The greater therefore should our courage be.—
Good morrow, brother Bedford.—God Almighty!
There is some soul of goodness in things evil,
Would men observingly distil it out;
For our bad neighbour makes us early stirs,
Which is both healthful, and good huskaboyd:
Besides, they are our outward consciences,
And preachers to us all; admonishing,
That we should dress us fairly for our end.
Thus may we gather honey from the weed,
And make a moral of the devil himself.

Enter Erpingham.

Good morrow, old sir Thomas Erpingham:
A good soft pillow for that good white head
Were better than a charlizeif turf of France.

Erp. Not so, my liege; this lodging likes me better,
Since I may say—now be I like a king.

K. Hen. 'Tis good for men to love their present pains,
Upon example; so the spirit is eased:
And, when the mind is quicke'd, out of doubt,
The organs, though definet and dead before,
Break up their drowsy grave, and newly move
With casted slough and fresh legerity.
Lead me thy clack, sir Thomas.—Brothers both,
Command me to the princes in our camp;

Do my good morrow to them; and anon,
De-sire them all to my pavilion.

Glo. We shall, my liege. [Exit Gloster.

Erp. Shall I attend your grace?

K. Hen. No, my good knight;
Go with my brothers to my lords of England:
I and my bosom must debate a while,
And then I would no other company.

Erp. The Lord in heaven bless thee, noble Harry! [Exit Erpingham.

K. Hen. God a-mercy, old heart! thou speakest cheerfully.

Enter Pistol.

Pist. Qui vii il?,

K. Hen. A friend.

Pist. Discuss unto me; Art thou an officer?
Or art thou base, common, and popular?

K. Hen. I am a gentleman of a company.

Pist. Trailest thou the puissant pike?

K. Hen. Even so: What are you?

Pist. As good a gentleman as the emperor.

K. Hen. Thou then are a better than the king.

Pist. The king's a bawcock, and a heart of gold,
A lad of life, an imp of fate;
Of parents good, of list most valiant;
I kiss his thrifty shoe, and from my heartstrings
I love the lovely bully. What's thy name?

K. Hen. Harry le Rou.

Pist. Le Rou! a Cornish name; art thou of Cornish

K. Hen. No, I am a Welshman.

Pist. Knowest thou Fluellen?

K. Hen. Yes.

Pist. Tell him, I'll knock his leck about his pate,
Upon Saint Davy's day.

K. Hen. Do not you wear your dagger in your cap
That day, lest he knock that about yours.

Pist. Art thou his friend?

K. Hen. And his kinsman too.

Pist. The pike for thee then?

K. Hen. I thank you; God be with you!

Pist. My name is Pistol called.

K. Hen. It sorts well with your fierceness.

Enter Fluellen and Gower, secretly.

Gowe. Captain Fluellen!

Flu. So! in the name of Chem Christ, speak lower.

Gow. It is the greatest admiration in the universal orb,
When the true and auentent prerogatives and laws of the wars is not kept: if you would take the pains but to examine the wars of Pompey the Great, you shall find, I warrant you, that there is no tiddle taddle, or pibble pabble, in Pompey's camp; I warrant you, you shall find the ceremonies of the wars, and the cares of it, and the forms of it, and the sobriety of it, and the modesty of it, to be otherwise.

Gow. Why, the enemy is loud; you heard him all night.

Flu. If the enemy is an ass, and a fool, and a pratting coxcomb, is it meet, think you, that we should also, look you, be an ass, and a fool, and a pratting coxcomb; in your own conscience now?

Gow. I will speak lower.

Flu. I pray you, and beware you, that you will Enter Gower and Fluellen.

K. Hen. Though it appear a little out of fashion,
There is much care and valour in this Welshman.

Enter Bates, Court, and Williams.

Court. Brother John Bates, is not that the morning which breaks yonder?

Bates. I think it be: but we have no great cause to desire the approach of day.
KING HENRY V.

Will. We see yonder the beginning of the day, but I think, we shall never see the end of it.—Who goes there?

K. Hen. A friend.

Will. Under what captain serve you?

Will. A good old commander, and a most kind gentleman: I pray you, what thinks he of our estate?

K. Hen. Even as men wear'd upon a sand, that look to be wash'd off the next tide.

Bates. He hath not told his thought to the king? K. Hen. No; nor it is not met he should. For, though I speak it to you, I think, the king is but a man, as I am; the violet smells to him, as it doth to me; the element shews to him, as it doth to me; all his senses have but human conditions: his ceremonies laid by, in his nakedness he appears but a man; and though his affections are higher mounted than ours, yet, when they stoop, they stoop with the like wing; therefore when he sees reason of fears, as we do, his fears, out of doubt, be of the same relish as ours are: Yet, in reason, no man should possess him with any appearance of fear, lest he, by shewing it, should dishearten his army.

Bates. He may shew what outward courage he will; but, I believe, as cold a night as 'tis, he could wish himself in the Thames up to the neck; and so I would he were, and I by him, at all adventures, so we were quit here.

K. Hen. By my troth, I will speak my conscience of the king; I think, he would not wish himself any where but where he is.

Bates. Then, 'twould be here alone; so should he be sure to be ransomed, and a many poor men's lives saved.

K. Hen. I dare say, you love him not so ill, to wish him here alone: howsoever you speak this, to feel other men's minds: Methinks, I could not die any where so contented, as in the king's company; his cause being just, and his quarrel honourable.

Will. That's more than we know; and we should seek after: for we know not enough, if we know we are the king's subjects, if his cause be wrong, our obedience to the king wipes the crime of it out of us.

Will. But if the cause be not good, the king himself hath a heavy reckoning to make; when all those legs, and arms, and heads, chopped off in a battle, shall join together at the latter day, and cry all—We died at such place; some, swearing; some, crying for a surgeon; some, upon their wives left poor behind them; some, upon the debts they owe; some, upon their children rawly left. I am afraid there are few die well, that die in battle; for how can they charitably dispose of any thing, when blood is their argument? Now, if these men do not die well, it will be a black matter for the king, that led them to it; whom to disobey, were against all proportion of subordination.

K. Hen. So, if a son, that is by his father sent about merchandise, do sinfully misuse upon the sea, the imputation of his wickedness, by your rule, should be imposed upon his father that sent him there: or if a servant, under his master's command, transporting a sum of money, betrays it, be assailed by robbers, and die in many treacherous iniquities, you may call the business of the master the author of the servant's damnation:—But this is not so: the king is not bound to answer the particular endings of his soldiers, the father of his son, nor the master of his servant; for they purpose not their death, when they purpose their services. Besides, there is no king, be his cause never so spotless, if it come to the appropriation of swords, can try it out with all unsyttled soldiers. Some, peradventure, have on them the guilt of premeditated and contrived murder; some, of beguiling virgins with the broken seals of purjy, some, making the wars their bulwark, that have before gored the gentle bosom of peace with pillage and robbery. Now, if they have defeated the law, and outrun native punishment, though they can outstrip men, they have no wings to fly from God: war is his beadle, war is his vengeance; so that here men are punished, for before-break of the king's laws, in now the king's quarrel: where they feared the death, they have borne life away; and where they would be safe, they perish: Then if they die unprovided, no more is the king guilty of their damnation, than he was before guilty of those impieties for which they are now visited. Every subject's duty is the king's; but every subject's soul is his own. Therefore should every soldier in the wars do as every sick man in his bed, wash every mote out of his conscience; and dying so, death is to him advantage; or, not dying, the time was totally lost, wherein such preparation was gained: and in him that escapes, it were not sin to think, that making God so free an offer, he let him outlive that day to see his greatness, and to teach others how they should prepare.

Will. 'Tis certain, every man that dies ill, the ill is upon his own head, the king is not to answer for it.

K. Hen. If I live to see it, I will never trust his word after.

Will. 'Mass, you'll pay him then? That's a perilous shot out of an elder gun, that a poor and private displeasure can do against a monarch: you may as well go about to turn the sun to fat as to displease him in his face with a peacock's feather. You'll never trust his word after: he's a foolish saying.

Bates. Your reproof is something too round; I should be angry with you, if the time were convenient.

Will. Let it be a quarrel between us, if you live. K. Hen. I embrace it.

Will. How shall I know thee again?

K. Hen. Give me any gage of thine, and I will wear it in my bonnet: then, if ever thou dar'st acknowledge it, I will make it my quarrel.

Will. Here's my glove; give me another of thine. K. Hen. There. Will. This will I also wear in my cap: if ever thou come to me and say, after to-morrow, This is my glove, by this hand, I will take thee a box on the ear. K. Hen. If ever I live to see it, I will challenge it.

Will. Thou dar'st as well be hanged. K. Hen. Well, I will do it, though I take thee in the king's company.

Will. Keep thy word: fare thee well.

Bates. Be friends; you English fools, be friends; we have French quarrels enough; if you could tell how to reckon your. K. Hen. Indeed, the French may lay twenty French. For every twenty French soldiers, to one, they will beat us; for they bear them crowns to one, on their shoulders: But it is no English treason, to cut French crowns; and, to-morrow, the king himself will be a clipper. [Exit Soldiers.]

Upon the king: let us live our lives, our souls.
Our debts, our careful wives, our children, and
Our sins, lay on the king;—we must bear all.
Our hand's in us! twin-born with greatness.
Subjected to the breath of every fool,
Whose sense no more can feel but his own waving!
What infinite heart's ease must kings neglect,
That private men enjoy?
And what have kings, that privates have not too,
Save ceremony, save general ceremony?
And what art thou, thou idol ceremony?
What kind of god art thou, that suffer'st more
Of mortal griefs, than do thy worshippers?
What are thy rents? what are thy comings-in?
Of ceremony, shew me but thy worth?
What is the soul of adoration?
Art thou aught else but place, degree, and form,
Creating awe and fear in other men?
Whence thou art less happy being fear'd
Than they in fearing.
What drink'st thou oft, instead of homage sweet,
But poison'd flattery? O, be sick, great greatness,
And bid thy ceremony give thee cure!
Think'st thou, the fiery fever will go out
With titles blown from adulation?
Will it give place to flexure and low bending?
Canst thou, when thou command'st the beggar's knee,
Command the health of it? No, thou proud dreamer,
That play'st so subtly with a king's repose;
I am a king that find thee; and I know,
'Tis not the balm, the sceptre, and the ball,
The sword, the mace, the crown imperial,
The enter-tissued robe of gold and pearl,
The farced title running 'long the king,
The throne he sits on, nor the title of pomp
That bears upon the high shore of this world,
No, not all these, thrice-gorgeous ceremony,
Not all these, laid io bed majestical,
Can sleep so soundly as the wretched slave;
Who, with a body hild, and vacant mind,
Gives him to rest, cramm'd with distressful bread;
Never sees horrid night, the child of hell;
But, like a lackey, from the rise to set,
Sweats in the eye of Phobus, and all night
Sleeps in Elysium: next day, after dawn,
Doth rise, and help Hyperion to his horse;
And follows so the ever-running year
With profitable labour, to his grave:
A state for ceremony, such a tetch,
Winding up days with toil, and nights with sleep,
Had the fore-hand and vantage of a king.
The slave, a member of the country's peace,
Enjoys it; but in gross brain little wots,
What watch the king keeps to maintain the peace,
Whose lours the peasant best advantages.

Enter Eriningham.

Efr. My lord, your nobles, jealous of your absence,
Seek through your camp to find you.

K. Hen. Good old knight,
Collect them all together at my tent,
I'll be before thee.

Efr. I shall do't, my lord. [Exit.
K. Hen. O God of battles! steel my soldiers' hearts!
Possess them with no fear; take from them now
The sense of reckoning, if the opposed numbers
Pluck their hearts from them!—Not to-day, O Lord,
O not to-day, think not upon the fault
My father made in compassing the crown!
Richard's body have interred now;
And on it have bestowed more contrite tears,
Than from it issued forced drops of blood.
Five hundred poor I have in yearly pay,
Who twice a day their wishing hands held up
Towards heaven, to pardon blood; and I have built
Two chapellaries, where the sad and solemn priests
Sing still for Richard's soul. More will I do:
Though all that I can do, is nothing worth;
Since that my penitence comes after all,
Imploring pardon.

Enter Gloster.

Glo. My Liege!
K. Hen. My brother Gloster's voice?—Ay; I know thy errand, I will go with thee:—
The day, my friends, and all things stay for me. [Exeunt.

SCENE II.—The French Camp.

Enter Dauphin, Orleans, and others.

Orl. The sun doth gild our armour; up, my lords.
Dau. Montes à cheval:—My horse! auoit la guay! Orl. O brave spirit! [Hail.
Dau. Vio!—les eeuu et la terre
Orl. Rien puis? lair et le feu—
Dau. Ciel! cousin Orleans,

Enter Constable.

Now, my lord Constable!

Con. Hark, how our steeds for present service neigh.

Dau. Mount them, and make incision in their hides;
That their hot blood may spin in English eyes,
And dout them with superfuous courage: Ha!—

Ran. What, will you have them weep our horses'
How shall we then behold their natural tears! [Blood.

Enter a Messenger.

Mess. The English are embattled, you French peers.
Con. To horse, you gallant princes! straight to horse!
Do but behold you poor and starved band,
And your fair show shall suck away their souls,
Leaving them but the shades and husks of men.
There is not work enough for all our hands;
Scarcely enough in all their sickly veins,
To give each naked curtal a stain,
That our French gallants shall to-day draw out,
And sheath for lack of sport: let us but blow on them,
The vapour of our valour will o'turn them.
'Tis positive 'gainst all exceptions, lords,
That our superfuous lasses, and our peasants,—
Who, in unnecessary action, swarm
About our squares of battle,—enough
To purge this field of such a hilding foe;
Though we, upon this mountain's basis by
Took stand for idle speculation:
But that our honours must not.
What's to say?
A very little little let us do,
And all is done. Then let the trumpets sound
The tucket-sonance, and the note to mount:
For our approach shall so much dare the field,
That England shall couch down in fear, and yield.

Enter Grandsire.

Grandsire. Why do you stay so long, my lords of France,
You island carrious, desperate of their bones,
Ill-favouredly become the morning field:
Their ragged curtains poorly are let loose,
And our pale shades them passing scornfully.
Big Mars seems bankrupt in their beggar'd host,
And faintly through a rusty beaver peeps.
Their horsecmen sit like fixed candlesticks,
With torches-staves in their hand: and their poor jades
Lob down their heads, dropping the hides and hips;
The gum down-rooping from their pale-dead eyes;
And in their pale bull months the ensable
Lion soul with chewed grass, still and motionless;
And their executors, the knavish crows,
Fly o'er them all, impatient for their hour,
Description cannot suit itself in words, To demonstrate the life of such a battle In life so lifeless as it shows itself. Indeed.

Con. They have said their prayers, and they stay for Dou. Shall we go send their dinners, and fresh suits, And give their fasting horses provender, And other fight with them?

Con. I stay but for my guard; On, to the field:
I will the banner from a trumpet take, And use it for my haste, Come, come away!
The sun is high, and we outwear the day. [Exeunt.

SCENE III.—The English Camp.

Enter the English Host; Gloucester, Bedford, Exeter, Salisbury, and Westmoreland.

Glo. Where is the king?

Bed. The king himself is gone to view their battle.

West. Of fighting men they have full three score thousand.

Exe. There's five to one; besides, they all are fresh.

Sal. God's arm strike with us! 'tis a fearful odds.

God he wi' you, princes all; I'll to my charge:

If we no more meet, till we meet in heaven,

Then, joyful, — my dear lord Glorster,— and my good lord Exeter,— And my kind kinsman,—warriors, all adieu!

Bed. Farewell, good Salisbury; and good luck go with thee!

Exe. Farewell, kind lord, fight valiantly to-day;

And yet I do thee wrong, to mind thee of

For thou art fram'd of the first truth of valor.

[Exit Salisbury.

Bed. He is as full of valor, as of kindness;

Princefully in both.

West. O that we now had here

Enter King Henry.

But one ten thousand of those men in England,
That do no work to-day!

K. Hen. What's he, that wishes so?

My cousin Westmoreland!—No, my fair cousin:

If we are marked to die, we are enough

To do our country loss; and if to live,

The fewer men, the greater share of honour.

God's will! I pray thee, wish not one man more.

By Jove, I am not covetous for gold;

Nor care I, who doth feed upon my cost;

It yeants me not, if men my garments wear;

Such outward things dwell not in my desires:

But if it be a sin to covet honour,

I am the most offending soul alive.

No, 'faith, my enz, wish not a man from England:

God's peace! I would not lose so great an honour,

As one man more, methinks, would share from me,

For the best hope I have. O, do not wish one more:

Rather proclaim it, Westmoreland, through my host,

That he, which hath no stomach to this fight,

Let him depart: his passport shall be made,

And crowns for compy put into his purse;

We would not die in that man's company,

That fears his fellowship to die with us.

This day is call'd—the feast of Crispian:

He, that outlives this day, and comes safe home,

Will stand a tip-toe when this day is came,

And roose him at the name of Crispian.

He, that shall live this day, and see old age,

We yearly on the vigils feast his friends,

And say—tis-morrow is saint Crispian:

Then will he straump his sleeve, and show his scars,

And say, these wounds I had on Crispian's day.

Old men forget; yet all shall be forgot,

But he'll remember with advantages,

What feats he did that day: Then shall our names,

Familiar in their mouths as household words,—

Harry the king, Bedford, and Exeter.

Warwick and Talbot, Salisbury and Glorster.—

Be in their flowing cups freshly remember'd:

This story shall the good man teach his son;

And Crispin Crispian shall ne'er go by,

From this day to the ending of the world,

But we in it shall be remembered:

We few, we happy few, we band of brothers,

For he, to-day that sheds his blood with me,

Shall be my brother; he he 'er so vile,

This day shall gentile his condition:

And gentlemen in England, now a bed,

Shall think themselves accuss'd, they were not here,

And hold their manhoods cheap. Hiere any speaks,

That fought with us upon Saint Crispin's day.

[Enter Salisbury.

Sal. My sovereign lord, bestow yourself with speed:

The French are bravely in their battles set,

And will with all expedience charge on us.

K. Hen. All things are ready, if our minds be so.

West. Perish the man, whose mind is backward now!

K. Hen. Thou dost not wish more help from England,

Sal. Lord, is our will, my liege, would you and I alone,

Without more help, might fight this battle out?

K. Hen. Why, now thou hast unwish'd five thousand;

Which likes me better, than to wish us one.—

You know your places: God be with you all!

Tucket. Enter Montjoy.

Mont. Once more I come to know of thee, king Harry,

If for thy ransome thou wilt now compound,

Before thy most assured overthrow:

For, certainly, thou art so near the gulf,

Thou needs must be engulfed.

Incess, in mercy, the constable desires thee—thou wilt mind

Thy followers of repentance; that their souls

May make a peaceable and a sweet retire

From off these fields, where (wretches) their poor

Must lie and foster. [bodies

K. Hen. Who hath sent thee now?

Mont. The Constable of France.

K. Hen. I pray thee, bear my former answer back;

Did the ambassador to thee send me his boys.

Good God! why should they mock poor fellows thus?

The man, that once did sell the lion's skin

While the beast lived, was kill'd with hunting him.

A many of our bodies shall, no doubt,

Find native graves; upon the which, I trust,

Shall witness live in brass of this day's work:

And those that leave their valiant bones in France,

Dying like men, though buried in your dunghills,

They shall be fam'd; for there the sun shall greet them,

And draw their honours seeking up to heaven;

Leaving their earthly parts to choke your clime,

The smell whereof shall breed a plague in France.

Mark then a bounding valour in our English;

That, being dead, like to the ballot's grazing,

Break out into a second course of mischief,

Killing in relapse of mortality.

Let me speak prou'dly.—Tell the Constable,

We are but warriors for the working-day:

Our gyness, and our gills, are all besmirch'd

With rainy marching in the painful field;

There's not a piece of feather but our host.

(But I hope, we shall not fly.)

And time hath worn us into slavery:

But, by the mass, our hearts are in the trim

And my poor soldiers tell me,—yet ere night
ACT IV.—SCENE VI.

They'll be in fresher robes; or they will pluck
The gay new coats o'er the French soldiers' heads,
And turn them out of service. If they do this,
(As, if God please, they shall,) my ransome then
Will soon be levied. Herald, save thou thy labour;
Come thou no more for ransome, gentle herald;
They shall have none. I swear, but these my joints:
Which if they have as I will leave 'em to thou,
Shall yield them little, tell the Constable.
Mont. I shall, king Harry. And so fare thee well:
Thou never shall hear herald any more.
[Exit.]
K. Hen. I fear, thou'll once more come again for ransome.

Enter the Duke of York.
York. My lord, most humbly on my knee I beg
The leading of the vaward.
[March away.—
K. Hen. Take it, brave York.—Now, soldiers,
And how thou pleasest, God, dispose the day! [Exeunt.]

SCENE IV.—The Field of Battle.

Alarums: Excursions. Enter French Soldier,
Pistol, and Boy.

Pist. Yield, cur.
Fr. Sol. Je pence, que vous estes le gentilhomme de bonne qualité.
Pist. Quality, call you me? — Construe me, art thou a gentleman? What is thy name? discuss.
Fr. Sol. O seigneur Dieu! Pist. O, signeur Dew should be a gentleman —
Perpend my words, O signeur Dew, and mark —
O signeur Dew, thou diest on point of fox,
Except, O signeur, thou do give to me
Egregious ransome.
Fr. Sol. O, prenez misericorde! avez pitié de moi!
Pist. Moi? O seigneur Dieu!
Fr. Sol. Perdu, cur, et pauvre homme! Je vous offre une main pour vous sauver, I will have forty hos; For I will fetch thy rim out at thy throat,
In drops of crimson blood.
Fr. Sol. Est il impossible d'echapper la force de tou bras? Pist. Brass, cur!
Thou damned and luxurious mountain goat,
Offerer of thy bras! Fr. Sol. O pardonnez moy?
Pist. Say'st thou me so? is that a ton of moys?
Come hither, boy; Ask me this slave in French,
What is his name.
Boy. Escoutez; Comment estes vous appelé?
Fr. Sol. Monseur le Fer.
Pist. He says, his name is—master Fer.
Pist. Master Fer! I'll fer him, and ferr him, and ferret him —discuss the same in French unto him.
Boy. I do not know the French for fer, and ferret, and firk.
Pist. Bid him prepare, for I will cut his throat.
Fr. Sol. Que dit-il, monsieur?
Boy. Je me commande de vous dire que vous fazes vous prét; car ce soldat icy est disposé tout à cette heure de couper votre gorge.
Pist. Ouy, couper garge, par ma foi, pesant,
Unless thou give me crowns, brave crowns;
Or mangled shalt thou be by this my sword.
Fr. Sol. O, je vous supplie pour l'amour de Dieu, mé pardonner! Je suis gentilhomme de bonne union; gar-dez ma vie, et je vous donneray deux cent ecus.
Pist. What are his words?
Boy. He prays you to save his life: he is a gentleman of a good house; and, for his ransome, he will give you two hundred crowns.
Pist. Tell him — my fury shall abate, and I
The envoys will take.
Fr. Sol. Petit monsieur, que dit-il?

Boy. Encore qu'il est contre son juramento, de vendre aucun prisonnier; neantomais, pour les escus que vous l'avez promis, il est content de vous donner la liberté, le franchissement.
Fr. Sol. Sur mes genoux, je vous donne mille remor-ciems: et je m'estime heurteux que je suis tombe entre eux mains d'un chevalier, je pense, le plus brave, valant, et tres distingué seigneur d'Angletre.
Pist. Expound unto me, boy.
Boy. He gives you, upon his knees, a thousand thanks: and he esteems himself happy that he hath fallen into the hands of (as he thinks) the most brave, valorous, and thrice-worthy seigneur of England.
Pist. As I suck blood, I will some mercy shew.
Follow me, cur.
[Exit Pist.]
Boy. Suissez vous le grand capitaine. [Exit Fr. Sol.
I did never know so full a voice issue from so empty
a heart: but the saying is true, — the empty vessel makes the greatest sound. Bardolph, and Nym, had ten times more valour than this roaring devil 's the old play, that every one may pare his nails with a wooden dagger; and they are both hanged; and so would this be, if he durst steal any thing adventurously. I must stay with the lacies, with the luggage of our camp: the French might have a good prey of us, if he knew of it; for there is none to guard it, but boys.
[Exeunt.]
(Yoke-fellow to his honour-owing wounds,)

The noble earl of Suffolk also lies.

Suffolk first died: and York, all haggled over,

Comes to him, where in gore he lay dead, and

And takes him by the beard; kisses the gashes,

That bloodily did yawn upon his face:

And cries aloud,—Tarry, dear cousin Suffolk!

My soul shall thine keep company to heaven:

Tarry, sweet soul, for mine, they fly a-brazen;

As, in this glorious and well-foughten field,

We kept together in our chivalry!

Upon these words I came and cheer'd him up:

He smil'd me in the face, raught me his hand,

And with a feeble gripe, says,—Dear my lord, Command my service to my sovereign.

So did he turn, and over Suffolk's neck

He threw his wounded arm, and kiss'd his lips:

And so, espous'd to death, with blood he seal'd

A testament of noble-ending love.

The pretty and sweet manner of it forc'd

Those waters from me, which I would have stopp'd;

But I had not so much of man in me,

But all my mother came into mine eyes,

And gave me up to tears.

K. Hen. I blame you not; For, hearing this, I must perforce compound

With mistful eyes, or they will issue too.—[Aiorum.

But, hark! what new alarum is this same?—

The French have re-ford'd their scatter'd men;—Then every soldier kill his prisoners; —

Give the word through.

[Exeunt.

SCENE VII.—Another Part of the Field.

Aiorum. Enter Fluellen and Gower.

Flu. Kill the poys and the luggartes; 'tis expressly against the law of arms: 'tis as arrant a piece of knavery, mark you now, as can be offered, in the 'orld: In your conscience now, is it not?

Gow. 'Tis certain there's not a boy left alive; and the cowardly rascals, that ran from the battle, have done this slaughter: besides, they have burned and carried away all that was in the king's tent; wherefore the king, most worthy, hath caus'd every soldier to cut his prisoner's throat. O, 'tis a gallant king!

Flu. Ay, he's thesame at Monmouth, captain Gower. What call you the town's name, where Alexander the pig was born.

Gow. Alexander the great.

Flu. Why, I pray you, is not pig, great? The pig, or the great, or the mighty, or the huge, or the magnificent, are all one reckoning, save the phrase is a little variations.

Gow. I think Alexander the great was born in Macedonia; his father was called—Philip of Macedonia, as I take it.

Flu. I think it is in Macedonia, where Alexander is born. I tell you, captain,—If you look in the maps of the 'orld, I warrant, you shall find, in the comparisons between Macedonia and Monmouth, that the situations, look you, is both alike. There is a river in Macedonia; and there is also moreover a river at Monmouth: it is called Wye, at Monmouth; but it is out of my prains, what is the name of the other river; but 'tis all one, 'tis so like as my fingers is to my fingers, and there is salmons in both. If you mark Alexander's life well, Harry of Monmouth's life is come after it indifferent well; for there is figures in all things. Alexander (God knows, and you know,) in his rages, and his furies, and his wrathes, and his cholera, and his moods, and his displesures, and his indignations, and also being a little intoxicates in his prains, did, in his ales and his angers, look you, kill his pest friend, Clytus.

Gow. Our king is not like him in that; he never killed any of his friends.

Flu. It is not well done, mark you now, to take tales out of my mouth, ere it is made an end and finished. I speak but in the figures and comparisons of it. Alexander is kill his friend Clytus, being in his ales and his cups; so also Harry Monmouth, being in his right wits and his good judgments, is turn away the fat knight with the great pelly-doublet: he was full of jests, and gipses, and knaveryes, and mocks: I am forget his name.

Gow. Sir John Falstaff.

Flu. That is he; I can tell you, there is good men born at Monmouth.

Gow. Here comes his majesty.

Aiorum. Enter King Henry with a part of the English Forces; Warwick, Gloucester, Exeter, and other.

K. Hen. I was not angry since I came to France Unto this instant. —Take a trumpet, herald;

Ride thou unto the horsemen oon you hill:

If they will fight with us, bid them come down. Or voult the field; they do offend our sight:

If they 'll do neither, we will come to them;

And make them skirr away, as swift as stones

Enforced from the old Assyrian sliings:

Besides, we 'll eat the throes of those we have:

And not a man of them, that we shall take,

Shall taste our mercy: —Go, and tell them so

Enter Montjoy.

Exe. Here comes the herald of the French, myliege.

Glo. His eyes are humbler than they us'd to be.

K. Hen. How now! what means this, herald?

knowest thou not,

That I have find these bones of mine for ransom?

Com'st thou again for ransom?

Mont. No, great king

I come to thee for charitable licence,

That we may wander o'er this bloody field, To look our dead, and then to bury them; To sort our nobles from our common men; To cut our prisoners (wouned and the like)

Lie drown'd and soak'd in mercery blood;

(Do so our vulgar drench their peasan limbs

In blood of princes;) and their wounded steeds

Fret fetlock deep in gore, and, with wild rage,

Yerk out their armed heels at their dead masters,

Killing them twice. O, give us leave, great king,

To view the field in safety, and dispose

Of their dead bodies.

K. Hen. I tell thee truly, herald,

I know not, if the day be ours, or no;

For yet a many of your horsemen peer, And gallop o'er the field.

Mont. The day is yours.

K. Hen. Praised be God, and not our strength, for

What is this castle will'd, that stands hard by! [It is— Mont. They call it,—Agincourt.

K. Hen. Then call we this,—the field of Agincourt,

Fought on the day of Crispio Crispianus.

Flu. Your grand father of famous memory, and't please your majesty, and your great uncle Edward the plack prince of Wales, as I have read in the chronicles, fought a most prize battle here in France.

K. Hen. They did, Fluellen.

Flu. Your majesty says very true: if your majesties is remembered of it, the Welshmen did gout service in a garden where lecks did grow, wearing lecks in

KING HENRY V.
ACT IV.—SCENE VIII.

K. Hen. My lord of Warwick,—and my brother follow Fluellen closely at the heels: [Gloster, the glove, which I have given him for a favour, May, haply, purchase him a box o' the ear; It is the soldier's: 1, by hargain, should Wear it myself. Follow, good cousin Warwick: If that the soldier strike him, (as, I judge By his blunt bearing, he will keep his word,) For I do know Fluellen valiant, And, touch'd with choler, hot as gunpowder, And quickly will return an injury: Follow, and see there he no harm between them.— Go you with me, uncle of Exeter. [Exeunt.]

SCENE VIII.—Before King Henry's Partition.

Enter Gower and Williams.

Will. I warrant, it is to knight you, captain. Enter Fluellen.

Flu. Got's will and his pleasure, captain, I beseech you now, come space to the king: there is more goot toward you, peradventure, than is in your knowledge to dream of.

Will. Sir, know you this glove? Flu. Know the glove? I know, the glove is a glace. Will. I know this; and thus I challenge ever. [Strikes him.]

Flu. 'Sblud, an arrant traitor, as any's in the universal 'orld, or in France, or in England. Gow. How now, sir? you villain? Will. Do you think I'll be forewarned? Flu. Stand away, captain Gower; I will give treason his payment into plows, I warrant you. Will. I am no traitor.

Flu. That's a lie in thy throat.—I charge you in his majesty's name, apprehend him; he's a friend to the duke Aleton's.

Enter Warwick and Gloster. War. How now, how now! what's the matter? Flu. My lord of Warwick, here is (praised be Got for it!) a most contagious treason come to light, look you, as you shall desire in a summer's day. Here is his majesty. Enter King Henry and Exeter. K. Hen. How now! what's the matter? Flu. My liege, here is a villain, and a traitor, that, look your grace, has struck the glove which your majesty is take out of the helmet of Aleton.

Will. My liege, this was my glove; here is the fellow of it: and he, that I gave it to in change, promised to wear it in his cap; I promised to strike him, if he did: I met this man with my glove in his cap, and I have been as good as my word.

Flu. Your majesty hear now, (saving your majesty's manhood,) what an arrant, rascally, beggarly, lowsy knave it is: I hope, your majesty is not so much enflamed with testimony, and witness, and avouchments, that this is the glove of Aleton, that your majesty is give me, in your conscience now. K. Hen. Give me thy glove, soldier; Look, here is the fellow of it. 'Twas I, indeed, thou promised'st to strike; and thou hast given me most bitter terms. Flu. An please your majesty, let his neck answer for it, if there is any martial law in the 'orld. K. Hen. How canst thou make me satisfaction? Will. All offences, my liege, come from the heart; never came any from mine, that might offend your majesty.

K. Hen. It was ourself thou didst abuse.
KING HENRY V.

William. Your majesty came not like yourself: you appeared to me but as a common man; witness the night, your garments, your lowliness; and what your highness suffered under that shape, I beseech you, take it for your own fault, and not mine: for had you been as I took you for, I made no offence; therefore, I beseech your highness, pardon me. [crowns,]

K. Hen. Here, uncle Exeter, fill this glove with And give it to this fellow.—Keep it, fellow; And wear it for an honour in thy cap, Till I do challenge it. — Give him the crown:— And, captain, you must needs be friends with him. Flu. By this day and this light, the fellow has mettle enough in his belly: — Hold, there is twelve pence for you, and I pray you serve God, and keep you out of prawns, and prables, and quarrels, and dissensions, and, I warrant you, it is the better for you.

WILL. I will none of your money. Flu. It is with a good will; I can tell you, it will serve you to mend your shoes! Come, wherefore should you be so passiful? your shoes is not so good: 'tis a good silling, I warrant you, or I will change it. Enter an English Herald.

K. Hen. Now, herald; are the dead number'd? Her. Here is the number of the slaughter'd French. [Delivers a paper.]

K. Hen. What prisoners of good sort are taken uncle? Exe. Charles duke of Orleans, nephew to the king; John duke of Bourbon, and the lord Bouicquart; Of other lords, and barons, knights, and squires, Full fifteen hundred, besides common men. [French, K. Hen. This note doth tell me of ten thousand That in the field lie slain of princes, in this number, And nobles bearing banners, there he dead One hundred twenty-six: added to these, Of knights, esquires, and gallant gentlemen, Eight thousand and four hundred; of the which, Five hundred were but yesterday dub'd knights: So that, in these ten thousand they have lost, There are but sixteen hundred mercenaries; The rest are—princes, barons, lords, knights, squires, And gentlemen of blood and quality: The names of those their nobles that lie dead,— Charles De la-bret, high constable of France; Jaques of Chatillon, admiral of France; The master of the cross-bows, lord Rumbarres; Great master of France, the brave sir Guiscard Dauphin; John duke of Alencon; Antony duke of Brabant, The brother to the duke of Burgundy; And Edward duke of Bar; of lusty earls, Grandpré, and Roussy, Fanconberg, and Foix, Beaumont, and Marie, Vaudemont, and Lestrade. Here was a royal fellowship of death!— Where is the number of our English dead? [Enter Herald with another paper.]

Edward the duke of York, the earl of Suffolk, Sir Richard Katly, Davy Gam, esquire: None else of name; and of all other men, But five and twenty. O God, thy arm was here, And not to us, but to thy arm alone, Aseribe we all.—When, without stratagem, But in plain shock, and even play of battle, Was ever known so great and little loss, On one part and on the other? Take it, God, For it is only thine! Exe. K. Hen. Come, go we in procession to the village: And be it death proclaimed through our host, To boast of this, or take that praise from God, Which is his duly.

Flu. Is it not lawful, and please your majesty, to tell how many is killed?

K. Hen. Yes, captain; but with this acknowledge. They that God fought for us.

Flu. Yes, my conscience, he did us great good. K. Hen. Do we all holy rites; Let there be sung Non nobis, and Te Deum, The dead with charity enuclest in clay, We'll then to Calais; and to England then, Where ne'er from France arriv'd more happy men. [Kneels.]

ACT V.

Enter Chorus.

Chor. Vouchsafe to those that have not read the story, That I may prompt them: and of such as have, I humbly pray them to admit the excuse Of time, of numbers, and due course of things, Which cannot in their huge and proper life Be once presented. Now we bear the king Toward Calais: grant him there; there seen, Heave him away upon your winged thoughts, Athwart the sea: Behold, the English beach Pales in the flood with men, with wives, and boys, Whose shouts and claps outvoice the deep-mouth'd Which, like a mighty whirlfere the king, [sea, Seems to prepare his way: so let him land; And, so cleanly, see him set on to London. So swift a pace hath thought, that even now You may imagine him upon Blackheath: Where that his lords desire him, to have borne His bruised helmet, and his bended sword, Before him, through the city: lie forbids it, Being free from vainness and self-glorious pride; Giving full trophy, signal, and ostent, Quite from himself, to God. But now behold, In the quick forge and workhouse of thought, How London doth pour out her citizens! The mayor, and all his brethren, in best sort,— Like to the senators of the antique Rome, With the plebeians swarming at their heels,— Go forth, and fetch their counterfeiter Caesar in: And on a lover but by the loving likelihoods. Were now the general of our gracious empress (As, in good time, he may,) from Ireland coming, Bringing rebellion broached on his sword, How many would the peaceful city quit, To welcome him! much more, and much more cause, Did they this Harry. Now in London place him; (As yet the lamentation of the French Invites the king of England's stay at home: The emperor's coming in behalf of France, To order peace between them;) and omit All the occurrences, whatever chanced, Till Harry's back-return again to France; There must we bring him; and myself have play'd The interim, by remembering you—tis past. Thereon break abridgment; and your eyes advance After your thoughts, straight back again to France.

[Exit.]

SCENE I.—France. Enter Fluellen and Gower.

Gow. Nay, that's right; but why wear you your leek to-day? Saint Davy's day is past.

Flu. There is occasions and causes why and wherefore in all things: I will tell you, as my friend, captain Gower; The rascally, scald, beggarly, lowry, bragging knave, Pistol,—which you are yourself, and all the 'old, know to be no petter than a fellow, look you now of no merits,—he is come to me, and brings me pread and salt yesterday, look you, and bid me eat my leek; it was in a place where I could not breed no contentions with him; but I will be so bold as to wear it in my cap till I see him once again, and then I will tell him a little piece of my desires.

Enter Pistol.

Gen. Why, here he comes, swelling like a turkey-cock.

Flu. 'Tis no matter for his swellings, nor his turkey-cocks. — Got piess you, ancient Pistol? you scrawry, lowly knave, Got piess you!

Pist. I ari thou Bedlam! dost thou thirst, base To have me fold up Parca's fatal web? [Trojan, Hence! I am qualmish at the smell of leek.

Flu. l see peech ye heartly, scrawry, lowly knave, at my desires, and my requests, and my petitions, to eat, look you, this leek; because, look you, you do not love it, nor your affections, and your appetites, and your digestions, does not agree with it, I would desire you to eat it.

Pist. Not for Cadwallader, and all his goats.

Flu. There is one goat for you. [Strikes him.

Will you be so good, scald knife, as eat it?

Pist. Base Trojan, thou shalt die.

Flu. You say true very, scald knife, when Got's will is, I will desire you to live in the mean time, and eat your victuals; come, there is sauce for it. [Striking him again. You called me mele, mountain-squire; but I will make you to-day a squire of low degree. I pray you, fall to; if you can mock a leek, you can eat a leek.

Gen. Enough, captain; you have astonished him.

Flu. You, thou leek, I will make him eat some part of my leek, or I will peat his pate four days: Fite, I pray you, it is good for your green wound, and your ploddy coxcomb.

Pist. Must I bite?

Flu. Yes, certainly; and out of doubt, and out of questions too, and ambiguities.

Pist. By the leek, I will most horribly revenge; I eat, and eke I swear.—

Flu. Eat, I pray you: Will you have some more sauce to your leek? there is not enough leek to swear by.

Pist. Quiet thy cudgel; thou dost see, I eat.

Flu. Much goot do you, scald knife, heartily. Nay, if thou eat the skin is good bockLEK for thy proken coxcomb. When you take occasions to see leeks hereafter, I pray you, mock at them; that is all.

Pist. Good.

Flu. Ay, leeks is goot:—I hold you, there is a great to heal your pate.

Pist. Me a great!

Flu. Yes, verily, and in truth, you shall take it; or I have another leek in my pocket, which you shall eat.

Pist. I take thy goat, in earnest of revenge.

Flu. If I owe you any thing, I will pay you in cudgels; you shall be a woodcutter, and buy nothing of me but cudgels. God be wi' you, and I have seen you gleeking and gallling at this gentleman twice or thrice,

You thought, because he could not speak English in the native garb, he could not therefore handle an English cudgel; you find it otherwise; and, henceforth, let a Welsh correction teach you a good English condition. Fare ye well. [Exit.

Pist. Doth fortune play the huswife with me now? News have I, that my Nell is dead! The spital Of malady of France;

And there my rendezvous is quite cut off.

Old I do wax; and from my weary limbs Honour is cudgell'd. Well, baw'd will I turn,

And something lean to cutpurse of quick hand.

To England will I steal, and there I'll steal:

And patches will I get unto these scars,

And swear, I got them in the Gallia wars. [Exit.

SCENE II.—Troves in Champagne. An Apartment in the French King's Palace.

Enter at one door, King Henry, Bedford, Gloucester, Exeter, Warwick, Westmoreland, and other Lords; at another, the French King, Queen Isabe1, the Princess Katharine, Lords, Ladies, Sir the Duke of Burgundy, and his Train.

K. Hen. Peace to this meeting, wherefore we are met! Unto our brother France,—and to our sister, Health and fair time of day,—joy and good wishes To our most fair and princely cousin Katharine, And (as a branch and member of this royalty, by whom this great assembly is contriv'd,) We do salute you, duke of Burgundy:—

And, princes French, and peers, health to you all!

Fr. King. Right joyous are we to behold your face, Most worthy brother England; fairly met:— So are you, princes English, every one.

Q. Isa. Ye happy be the immediate Engiards, Of this good day, and of this gracious meeting, As we are now glad to behold your eyes; Your eyes, which hitherto have borne in them Against the French, that met them in their bent, The fatal balls of murdering baseliks: The venom of such looks, we fairly hope, Have lost their raze, and the French quality, Shall change all griefs, and quarrels, into love.

K. Hen. To cry amen to that, thus we appear. Q. Isa. You English princes all, I do salute you. Bar. My duty to you both, on equal love, f'ourd Great kings of France and England! That I have la-

With all my wits, my pains, and strong endeavours, To bring your most illustrious majesties Unto this bar and royal interview, Your mightiness on both parts best can witness.

Since then my office hath so far prevail'd,
That face to face, and royal eye to eye,
You have concegret; let it not disgrace me,
If I demand, before this royal view,
What rub, or what impediment, there is,
Why that the naked, poor, and mangled peace, Dear nurse of arts, plenties, and joyful births, Should not, in this best garden of the world, Our fertile France, put up her lovely visage? Alas! she hath from France too long been chas'd; And all her husbandry doth lie on heaps, Corrupting in its own fertility:—

Her vine, the merry cheerer of the heart,
Unpruned dies: her hedges even pleased,—
Like prisoners wildly over-grown with hair,
Put forth disorder'd twigs: her fallow leas
The darnation, hemlock, and rank fumitory,
Both root upon: while that the couler rusts,
That should decaract your alacrimacy.

The even mead, that erst brought sweetly forth
The freckled cowslip, burnet, and green clover,
Wanting the scythe, all uncorrected, rank,
Conceives by idleness; and nothing teems,
But hateful ducks, rough thistles, keckseys, burs,
Losing both beauty and utility.
And as our vineyards, fallsows, meads, and hedges,
Defective in their nature, grow to wildness;
Even so our houses, and ourselves, and children,
Have lost, or do not learn, for want of time,
The sciences that should become our country;
But grow, like savages,—as soldiers will,
That nothing do but meditate on blood,—
To see and hear, and study, and learn,
And every thing that seems unnatural.
Which to reduce into our former favour,
You are assembled: and my speech entreats,
That I may know the let, why gentle peace
Should not expel these inconveniences,
And bless us with her former qualities.
Come in. If, duke of Burgundy, you would the peace,
Whose want gives growth to the imperfections
Which you have cited, you must buy that peace
With full accord to all our just demands;
Whose tenours and particular effects.
You have, enschedull'd briefly, in your hands.
Bar. The king hath heard them; to the which, as
There is no answer made.
Well then, the peace,
Which you before so urg'd, lies in his answer.
Fr. King. I have but with a cursory eye
O'erglan'd the articles; pleaseeth your grace
To appoint some of your council presently
To sit with us once more, with better heed
To re-survey them, we will, suddenly,
Partly to accept, and peremptory answer.
K. Hen. Brother, we shall. —Go, uncle Exeter,
And brother Clarence,—and you, brother Gloster,
—Warwick,—and Huntingdon,—go with the king:
And take with you free power, to ratify,
Augment, or alter, as your wisdom best
 Shall see advantageous for our dignity,
Any thing In, or out of, our demands;
And our fellowship, and togetherness. —Will you, fair sister,
Go with the princes, or stay here with us?
Q. Isab. Our gracious brother, I will go with them;
Happily, a woman's voice may do some good.
When articles, too nicely urg'd, be stand on.
K. Hen. Yet leave our cousin Katharine here with
She is our capiskd demand, compat'd
Within the fore rank of our articles.
Q. Isab. She hath good leave.
[Ex. alt. but Hen. Kath., & her Gentlewoman.
K. Hen. Fair Katharine, and most fair!
Will you vouchsafe to teach a soldier terms,
Such as will enter at a lady's ear,
And plead his love-suit to her gentle heart?
Kath. Your majesty shall mock at me; I cannot speak.
K. Hen. O fair Katharine, if you will love me soundly with your French heart, I will be glad to hear you confess it brokenly with your English tongue.
Do you like me, Kate?
Kath. Pardonnez-moi, I cannot tell vat is.—like me.
K. Hen. An angel is like you, Kate; and you are like an angel.
Kath. Que dit-il? que je suis semblable à tes ames?
Alice. Oui, vraiyent, (sauf votre grace) ainsi dit-il.
K. Hen. I said so, dear Katharine; and I must not blush to affirm it.
Kath. O bon Dieu! les langues des hommes sont piques des trompertes.

K. Hen. What says she, fair one? that the tongues of men are full of deceits?
Alice. Oui; que de langues de femmes is full of deceits: dait is de princes.
K. Hen. The princess is the better English-woman.
M. Kate, my young is fit for my understanding:
I am glad, thou canst speak no better English;
for, if thou couldst, thou would'st find me such a plain king, that thou would'st think, I had sold my farm to buy my crown. I know no ways to mimic it in love, but directly to say—I love thee; then, if you urge me farther than to say—Do you in faith? I wear out those peevish looks, and answer thee, and make so clap hands and a bargain: How say you, lady? Kath. Saus voye honuer, me understand well.
K. Hen. Marry, if you would put me to verses, or to dance for your sake, Kate, why you undid me:
for the one, I have neither words nor measure; and for the other, I have no strength in measures, yet a reason some measure in strength. If I could win a lady at least, or, by wrestling into my saddle with my armour on my back, under the correction of bragging be it spoken. I should quickly leap into a wife. Or, if I might buffet for my love, or bound my horse for her favourites, I could lay on like a butcher, and sit like a jack-an-apes, never off: but, before God, I cannot look greedy, nor gasp out my eloquence, or have no running in protestation; only downright, and which I never use till urged, and never break for urging. If thou canst love a fellow of this temper, Kate, whose face is not worth sun-burning, that never looks in his glass for love of any thing he sees there, let thine eye be thy cook. I speak to thee plain soldier:
If thou canst love me for this, take me: if not, to thy freedom, and thy death, is true right-faithful love, by the Lord, no; yet I love thee too. And while thou livest, dear Kate, take a fellow of plain and uncoined constancy; for he perfuce must do thee right, because he hath not the gift to woo in other places:
for these fellows of infinite tongue, that can rhyme themselves into ladies' favours,—they do always rea-some themselves out again. What! a speaker is but a braver soldier. —I must have a word of truth, and a straight back will stoop: a black beard will turn white; a curled pate will grow bald; a fair face will wither; a full eye will wax hollow; but a good heart,
Kate, is the sun and moon; or, rather, the sun,
and not the moon; for it shines bright, and ever changes, but keeps its course truly. If thou would have such a one, take me: And take me, take a soldier; take a soldier, take a king: And what says thou then to my love? speak, my fair, and fairly, I pray thee.
Kath. Is it possible dat I should love de enemy of France?
K. Hen. No; it is not possible, you should love the enemy of France, Kate: but, in loving me, you should love the friend of France; for I love France so well, I would no woman or young woman with a village of it: I will have all mine: and, Kate, when France is mine, and I am yours, then yours is France, and you are mine.
Kath. I cannot tell vat is dat.
K. Hen. No, Kate? I will tell thee in French; which,
I am sure, will hang upon my tongue like a new-mar-
rried wife about her husband's neck, hardly to be shook off. —I am the French love, and I am the French man of France, et quand vous avez le possession de moi, (let me see, what then? Saint Dennis be my speed!) doux vosste est France, et vous estois mienne. It is as easy for me, Kate, to conquer the kingdom, at to speak so much more French I shall never move thee in French, unless it be to laugh at me.
Kath. Saus voye honuer, le François que vous parlez, est meilleu que l'Anglais lequel je parle.
ACT V.—SCENE II. 449

K. Hen. No, faith, is't not, Kate: but thy speaking of my tongue, and I thine, must truly falsely, must needs be granted to be much at one. But, Kate, dost thou understand thus much English? Canst thou love me?

Kath. I cannot tell.

K. Hen. Can any of your neighbours tell, Kate? I'll ask them. Come, I know, thou lovest me; and at night when you come into your closet, you'll question this gentlewoman about me; and I know, Kate, you will, to her, dispraise those parts in me, that you love with your heart: but, good Kate, mock me merily: the rather, gentle princess, because I love thee cruelly. If ever thou be'st mine, Kate, (as I have a saving faith within me, tell methou shalt.) I get thee with scampling, and thou must therefore needs prove a good and wise breeder. Shall not thou and I, between Saint Dennis and Saint George, compound a boy, half French, half English, that shall go to Constantinople, and take the Turk by the beard? shall we not? what sayest thou, my fair flower-de-luce?

Kath. I do not know what.

K. Hen. No; tis hereafter to know, but now to promise: do but now promise, Kate, you will endeavour to make French part of such a boy; and, for your English moiety, take the word of a king and a bachelor.

How answer you, la plus belle Katharine du monde, mon tres cher et divine desse?

Kath. Your majesty's now French enough to deceive de most sage damoiselle that is of France.

K. Hen. Now would I have my fable French! By mine honour I dare not, thou loveth me; yet my blood begrias to flatter me; that thou dost, notwithstanding the proud and uncomporting effect of my visage.

Now beswears my father's ambition! be not shoking of civil wars when he got me; therefore was I created with a stubborn outside, with an aspect of iron, that, when I come to win women, I fright them. But in faith, Kate, the elder wax, the better I shall appear, my comfort is, that old age, that ill layer-up of beauty: can do no more spoil upon my face: thou hast me, if thou hast me, at the worst; and thou shalt wear me, if thou wear me, better and better. And therefore tell me, most fair Katharine, wilt thou have me? Put off thy mind's misgustes; avouch the thoughts of your heart with the looks of an empress; take me by the hand, and say—Harry of England, I am thine; which word thou shalt no sooner bless mine ear withal, but I will tell thee alode—England is thine, Ireland is thine, France is thine, and Henry Plantagenet is thine; who, though I speak it before his face, if he be not fellow with the best king, thou shalt had the best king of good fellows. Come, your answer in broken music; for thy voice is music, and thy English broken; therefore, queen of all, Katharine, break thy mind to me in broken English. Wilt thou have me?

Kath. Dat is, as it shall please de your mon pere.

K. Hen. Nay, it will please him well, Kate; it shall please him, Kate.

Kath. Den it shall also content me.

K. Hen. Upon that I will kiss your hand, and I call you—my queen.

Kath. Laissez, mon seigneur, laissez, laissez: ma foy, je ne vous point que vous allavez votre grandeur, en laissant en ma main d'une autre indigne serviette; ex-clusivement vous supplez, mon tres puissant seigneur.

K. Hen. Then I will kiss your lips, Kate.

Kath. Les dames, et damoiselles, pour être bistres devant leur nopes, il n'est pas le costume de France.

K. Hen. Madam my interpreter, what love say's she?

Alice. Dat it is not de fashion pour les ladies of France,—I cannot tell what is, baiser, en English.

K. Hen. To kiss.

Alice. Your majesty entendre bettre que mon.

K. Hen. It is not the fashion for the maids in France to kiss before they are married, would she say?

Alice. Ouy, egrement.

K. Hen. O Kate, ma nice customs curts'ly to great kings. Dear Kate, you and I cannot be confined within the weak list of a country's fashion: we are the makers of manners, Kate; and the liberty that follows our places, stops the mouths of all fault-finders; as I will do yours, for upholding the nice fashion of your country, in denying me a kiss: therefore, patiently and yielding. [Kissing her.] You have witchcraft in your lips. Kate: there is more eloquence in a sugar touch of them, than in the tongues of the French council; and they should sooner persuade Harry of England, than a general petition of mongrels. Here comes your father.

Enter the French King and Queen, Burgundy, Bedford, Gloucester, Exeter, Wiltshire, and other French and English Lords.

Bur. God save your majesty! my royal cousin, teach you our princess English!

K. Hen. I would have her learn, my fair cousin, how perfectly I love her; and that is good English.

Bur. Is she not apt?

K. Hen. Our tongue is rough, coz; and my condition is not smooth: so that, having neither the voice nor the heart of flattery about me, I cannot so conjure up the spirit of love in her, that he will appear in his true likeness.

Bur. Pardon the frankness of my mirth, if I answer you for that. If you would conjure in her you must make a circle: if conjure up love in her in his true likeness, he must appear naked, and blind: Can you blame her then, being a maid yet rose o'er with the virgo erinon of modesty, if she deny the appearance of a naked blind boy in her naked seeing self? I were, my lord, a hard condition for a maid to consign to.

K. Hen. Yet they do wink, and yield; as love is blind and enforces.

Bur. They are then excused, my lord, when they see not what they do.

K. Hen. Then, good my lord, teach your cousin to consent to winking.

Bur. I will work on her to consent, my lord, if you will teach her to know my meaning: for maids, well summered and warm kept, are like flies at Bartholomew-tide, blind, though they have their eyes; and then they will endure handling, which before would not abide locking on.

K. Hen. This moral tires me over time, and a hot summer; and so I will catch the fly, your cousin, in the latter end, and she must be blind too.

Bur. As love is, my lord, before it loves.

K. Hen. It is so; and you may, some of you, thank love for my blindness; who cannot see many a fair French city, for one fair French maid that stands in my way.

Fr. King. Yet, my lord, you see them perspectively, the cities turned into a maid: for they are all girlied with maiden walls, that war hath never entered.

K. Hen. Shall Kate be my wife?

Fr. King. So please you.

K. Hen. I am content; so the maiden cities you talk of, may wait on her; so the maid that stood in the way of my wish, shall shew me the way to my will.

Fr. A. We have consented to all terms of reason.

K. Hen. I'lt so, my lords of England!

West. The king hath granted every article.
his daughter, first; and then, in sequel, all, According to their firm proposed natures.

Exe. Only, he hath not yet subscribed this: Where your majesty demands,—That the king of France, having any occasion to write for matter of grant, shall name your highness in this form, and with this addition, in French,—Notre tres chere plus Henry rve d'Angleterre, heretier de France; and thus in Latin,—Procarissimus filius nostri Henricus, rex Anglie, et heres Franciae.

Fr. King. Nor this I have not, brother, so denied, But your request shall make me let it pass. K. Hen. I pray you then, in love and dear alliance, Let that one line be work with the rest. And, thereupon, give me your daughter.

Fr. King. Take her, fair son; and from her blood Issue to me: that the containing kingdoms raise up Of France and England, whose very shores look pale With envy of each other’s happiness, May cease their hatred; and this dear conjunction Plant neighbourhood and christian-like accord In their said bosoms, that never war advance Ilis bleeding sword ’twixt England and fair France. All. Amen! [Exe.

K. Hen. Now welcome, Kate:—and bear me wit That here I kiss her as my sovereign queen. [Flourish. Q. Isab. God, the best maker of all marriages, Combine your hearts in one, your realms in one! As man and wife, being two, are one in love.

This play has many scenes of high dignity, and many of easy merriment. The character of the king is well supported, except in his captivity, where he has neither the vivacity of Tal, nor the grandeur of Henry. The humour of Tisad is very happily continued: his character has perhaps been the model of all the bullies that have yet appeared on the English stage. The lines given to the chorus have many admirers; but the character, that he then a little may be praised, and much must be forgiven; nor can it be easily discovered why the intelligence given by the chorus is more necessary in this play than in any others where it is omitted. The great defect of this play is the emptiness and narrowness of the last act, which a very little diligence might have easily avoided—JOHNSON.

Of the general conduct of this play it may be remarked, that the interest turns altogether upon the circumstances which accompany a single battle; consequently, the poet has put forth all his strength in colouring and contrasting the situation of the two armies; and admirably has he succeeded in this attempt, by opposing the full assurance of victory on the part of the French, their boastful clamour and importunate levity, to the conscious despair, and the saintly valor of the English, that he weaves the state of the combat with an almost breathless anxiety—DR. DRAKE.

FIRST PART OF KING HENRY VI.

Of this play there is no edition extant previous to the folio, 1631. It is a miserable production; and Shakespeare distinctly proved, in his immediate and elaborate Essay on the three parts of King Henry VI., that it has been unjustly ascribed to the hand of Shakespeare.

In the second and third parts of King Henry VI. the pen of our great poet is easily distinguished; but in the present play there is not a single passage marked with the characters of his genius. "It may be asked," says Malone, "if the drama was not written by Shakespeare, why did Heminge and Condell print it with the rest of his works? The only way I can account for their having done so, is by supposing, that they immortalised the memory of this talent, by a design was necessary to understanding the two pieces that follow it; or, that Shak- speare, for the advantage of his own theatre, having written a few lines in the first part of King Henry VI. after his own second and third parts had been played, they conceived this a sufficient warrant for attributing it, along with the rest, to him, in the general collection of his works." The historical transactions contained in this play, take in the compass of about thirty years.

ACT I.—SCENE I.

SCENE I.—Westminster Abbey.

Dead march. Corpse of King Henry the Fifth discovered, lying in state; attended on by the Duke of Bedford, the Bishop of Winchester, the Earl of Warwick, the Bishop of Winchester, &c.

Bed. Hang be the heavens with black, yield day to Comets, importing change of times and states, [night! Brandish your crystal tresses in the sky; And with them scourge the hot revolting stars, That have consented unto Henry's death! Henry the fifth, so famous to live long! England ne'er lost a king of so much worth.

Glo. England ne'er had a king until his time.

Virtue he had deserving to command: His brandish'd sword did blind men with his beams; His arms spread wider than a dragon's wings: His sparkling eyes replete with wrathful fire, More dazzled and drove back his enemies, Than mid day sun, fierce heat against their faces. What should I say! his deeds exceed all speech: He ne'er lift up his hand but conquered.

Exe. We mourn in black; Why mourn we not in Henry is dead, and never shall revive: [blood! Upon a wooden coffin we attend; And death's diabolical honour.

We wait with our stately presence to glorify, Like captives bound to a triumphant char. What! shall we curse the planets of mishap, That plotted thus our glory's overthrow? Or shall we think the subtle-witted French Conjurers and sorcerers, that, afraid of him, By magic verses have contriv'd his end? He saw himself a king of the King of kings. Unto the French the dreadful judgment day So dreadful will not be, as was his sight. The battles of the Lord of hosts he fought: The church's prayers made him so prosperous.

Glo. The church! where is it? Had not churchmen His thread of life had not so soon decay'd? [pray'd, None do you like but an effeminate prince. Whom, like a school-boy, you may over-awe.

Win. Gloster, whate'er we like, thou art protector; And lookest to command the prince, and realm. Thy wife is proud; she holdeth thee in awe, More than God, or religious churchmen, may.

Glo. Name not religion, for thou lovest the flesh; An army you have, and a church thou go'st; Except it be to pray against thy foes. [peace! Bed. Cease, cease these jars, and rest your minds in Let's to the altar.—Heralds, wait on us:— Instead of gold, we'll offer up our arms; Since arms avow not now that Henry's dead.— Fosterity, await for wretched years, When at their mothers' moist eyes babies shall suck; Our isle be made a nourish of salt tears, And none but women left to wail the dead. Henry the fifth! thy ghost I invoke; Prosper this realm, keep it from civil broils! Combat with adverse planets in the heavens! A far more glorious star thy soul will make, Than Julius Caesar, or bright—

Enter a Messenger.

Mess. My honourable lords, health to you all! Sad tidings bring I to you out of France, Of loss, of slaughter, and discomfiture: Guenee, Champagne, Rheims, Orleans, Passi, Givars, Poictiers, are all quite lost. [corse! Bed. What say'st thou, man, before dead Henry's Speak safely: or the loss of those great towns Will make him burst his lead, and rise from death.

Glo. Is Paris lost? is Rouen yielded up? If Henry were recall'd to life again, These news would cause him once more yield the ghost. Fie! How were they lost? what treachery was us'd? Mess. No treachery; but want of men and money. Among the soldiers this is mattered, That here you maintain several factions; And, whilst a field should be despatch'd and fought You are disputing of your generals. One would have king ring wars, with little cost; Another would fly swift, but wanteth wings; A third man thinks, without expense at all, By guileful fair words peace may be obtain'd. Awake, awake, English nobility!— Let not sloth dim your honours, new-begot; Cropp'd are the flower-de-luces in your arms; Of England's coat one half is cut away. Fie! Were our tears wanting to this funeral, These tidings would call forth your flowing tides.

Bed. The general of France:— Give me my steeded eait, I'll fight for France.— Away with these disgraceful waiting robes! Wounds I will bend the French, instead of eyes, To wipe their interminable miseries. Enter another Messenger.

2 Mess. Lords, view these letters, full of bad mis France is revoluted from the English quite; [chance Except some petty towns of no import: The Dauphin Charles is crowned king in Rheims; The bastard of Orleans with him is join'd; Reignier, duke of Anjou, doth take his part; The duke of Alençon fitted to his side. Exe. Thus the Dauphin crowned king! all fly to him! O, whither shall we fly from this reproach?

Glo. We will not fly, but to our enemies' throats:— Belford, if thou be slack, I'll fight it out.

Bed. Gloster, why doubt'st thou of my readiness? An army have I musterd in my thoughts, Wherewith already France is over-run. Enter a third Messenger.

3 Mess. My gracious lords,—to add to your lamentations Wherewith you now bedew king Henry's hearse,— I must inform you of a dismal sight. Betryst the stont lord Talbot and the French. Wh'm. What! wherein Talbot overcame! is't so? 3 Mess. No; wherein lord Talbot was overthrown: The circumstance I'll tell you more at large. The tenth of August last, this dreadful lord, Retiring from the siege of Orleans, Having scarce six thousand in his troop, By three and twenty thousand of the French Was round encompassed and set upon: No leisure had he to enrank his men: He wanted pikes to set before his archers; Instead whereof, sharp stakes, plick'd out of hedges They pitched in the ground confusedly, To keep the horsemen off from breaking in. More than three hours the fight continued; Where valiant Talbot, above human thought, Enfeated wunders with his sword and lance. Hundreds he sent to hell, and none durst stand him, Here, there, and every where, enrag'd he slew; The French exclaim'd, The devil was in arms; All the whole army stood agaz'd on him: His soldiers, spying his undaunted spirit, A Talbot! a Talbot! cried out again, And rush'd into the battle. Here had the conquest fully been seal'd up.
If sir John Falstaffe had not play'd the coward;
He being in the vaward, (plac'd behind,
With purpose to relieve and follow them,)
Cowardly fled, not having strick one stroke.
Hence grew the general wreck and massacre;
Enclosed were they with their enemies:
A base Walloon, to win the Dauphin's grace,
Thrust Talbot with a spear into the back;
Whom all France, with their chief assembled strength,
Durst not presume to look once in the face.

Bed. Is Talbot slain? then I will slay myself,
For living idly here, in pomp and case.
Whilst such a worthy leader, wanting aid,
Unto his dastard foe men is betray'd.

3 Mess. O, no, he lives; but is took prisoner,
And lord Scales with him, and lord Hungerford;
Most of the rest slaughter'd, or took, likewise.

Bed. His ransome there is none but I shall pay,
I'll hale the Dauphin headlong from his throne,
His crown shall be the ransom of my friend;
Four of their lords I'll change for one of ours —
Farewell, my masters; to my task I will;
Bonfires in France forthwith I am to make,
To keep our great Saint George's feast withal:
Ten thousand soldiers with me will I take,
Whose bloody deeds shall make all Europe quake.

3 Mess. So you had need; for Orleans is besieged;
The English army is grown weak and faint:
The earl of Salisbury craveth supply,
And hardly keeps his men from mutiny,
Since they, so few, watch such a multitude.

Fie. Remember, lords, your oathes to Henry sworn;
Either to quell the Dauphin utterly,
Or bring him in obedience to your yoke.

Bed. I do remember it; and here take leave,
To shew you what I purpose in my preparation. [Exit.

Glo. I'll to the Tower, with all the haste I can,
To view the artillery and munition;
And then I will proclaim young Henry King. [Exit.

Lae. To Eltham will I, where the young king is,
Being ordain'd his special governor;
And for his safety there I'll keep a close. [Exit.

Fie. Each hath his place and function to attend:
I am left out; for me nothing remains.
But long I will not be Jack-out-of-office;
The king from Eltham I intend to send,
And sit at chiefest stern of public weal.

[Exit. Scene closes.

SCENE II.—France. Before Orleans.

Enter Charles, with his Forces; Alençon,
Reignier, and others.

Char. Mars his true moving, even as in the heavens,
So in the earth, to this day is not known:
Late did he shine upon the English side;
Now we are victors, upon us he smiles.

What towns of any moment, but we have?
At pleasure here we lie, near Orleans;
Otherwhiles, the famish'd English, like pale ghosts,
Faintly besiege us one hour in a month.

Alen. They want their porridge, and their fat bull-
Either they must be dieted like mules. [beees:
And have their provender tyed to their mounis,
Or pitious they will look, like drowned mice.

Reign. Let's raise the siege: Why live we idly here?
Talbot is taken, whom we wont to fear;
Remaineth alone, but mad brain'd Salisbury;
And he may well in fretting spend his gall,
Nor men, nor money, hath he to make war.

Char. Sound, sound alarum; we will rush on them,
Now for the honour of the fairlorn French:—

Him I forgive my death, that killeth me,
When he sees me go back one foot, or fly. [Exit.

Alarums: Excursions; afterwards a Retreat.

Re-enter Charles, Alençon, Reignier, and others.

Char. Who ever saw the like? what men have I—
Dogs! cowards! dastards!—I would ne'er have fled,
But that they left me midst my enemies.

Reign. Salisbury is a desperate homicide;
He fighteth as one weary of his life.
The other lords, like lions wanting food,
Do rush upon us as their hungry prey.

Alen. Fauxis, a countryman of ours, records,
England all Olivers and Rowlands and—
During the time Edward the third did reign.
More truly now may this be verified;
For none but Samsons, and Goliasse,
It sendeth forth to skirmish. One to ten!

Lanc.- raw-bon'd rascals! who would e'er suppose
They had such courage and audacity? [slaves,
Char. Let's leave this town, for the hair-brain'd
And public-foe men will endeavor them to be more eager:
Of old I know them; rather with their teeth
The walls they'll tear down, than forsake the siege.

Reign. I think, by some odd gimmals, or device,
Their arms are set, like clocks, still to strike on;
Else ne'er could they hold out so, as they do.
By my consent, we'll e'en let them alone.

Alen. Be it so.

Enter the Bastard of Orleans.

Bast. Where's the prince Dauphin? I have news for him.
Char. Bastard of Orleans, thee welcome to us.
Bast. Methinks, your looks are sad, your cheer appear pall.;
Hath the late overthrow wrought this offence?
Be not dismay'd, for succour is at hand:
A holy maid hither with me I bring,
Which, by a vision sent to her from heaven,
Orrain'd is to raise this tellious siege,
And drive the English forth the bounds of France.
The spirit of death prophesie she the death,
Exceeding the nine sibyls of old Rome:
What's past, and what's to come, she can descry.
Speak, shall I call her to? I believe my words,
For they are certain and unifiable. [her skill,
Char. Go, call her in: [Exit Bast. But, first, to try
Reignier, stand thou as Dauphin in my place:—
Question her proudly, let thy looks the stern:—
By this means skill I sound what skill she hath.

[Retires.

Enter la Pucelle, Bastard of Orleans, and others.

Reign. Fair maid, is't thou wilt do these wondrous feats!
Puc. Reignier, is't thou that thinkest to beguile me?
Where is the Dauphin?—come, come from behind,
I know thee well, though never seen before.
Be not amaz'd, there's nothing bid from me:
In private will I talk with thee apart;—
Stand back, you lords, and give us leave awhile.

Reign. She takes upon her bravely at first dash.
Puc. Dauphin, I am by birth a shepherd's daughter,
My art attrain'd in any kind of art,
Heaven, and our Lady gracious, hath it pleas'd
To shine on my contemplable estate:
Lo, whilst I waited on my tender lambs,
And to sun's parching heat display'd my cheeks,
God's mother deigned to appear to me:
And, in a vision full of majesty,
Will'd me to leave my base vocation,
And free my country from calamity:
Her aid she promises, and assur'd success:
To complete glory she reveal'd herself;
And, whereas I was black and swart before,
With these clear rays which shew the fitness on me,
That beauty am I bless'd with, which you see.
Ask me what question thou canst possible,
And I will answer unpremeditated:
My courage try by combat, if thou dar'st,
And thou shalt find that I exceed my sex.
Resolve on this: Thou shalt be fortunate,
If thou receive me for thy warlike mate.
Char. Thou hast astonish'd me with thy high terms;
Only this proof I'll of thy valour make,—
In single combat thou shalt buckler with me:
And, if thou vauntshist, thy words are true;
Otherwise, I renounce all confidence.
Pur. I am prepar'd: here is my keck-elig'd sword,
Deck'd with five flower-de-luces on each side;
The which, at Tournai, in Saint Katharine's church—
Out of a deal of old iron I chose forth.
[yard.
Char. Then come O'God's name, I fear no woman.
Pur. And, while I live, I'll ne'er fly from a man.
[Thy fight.
Char. Stay, stay thy hands; thou art an Amazon,
And fightest with the sword of Deborah.
Pur. Christ's mother helps me, else I were too weak.
Char. Who'er helps thee, 'tis he that must help
Impatiently! Burn with thy desire:
My heart and hands thou hast at once subdued.
Excellent Pucelle, if thy name be so,
Let me thy servant, and not sovereign, be;
'Tis the French Dauphin meaneth to thee thus.
Pur. I must not yield to any rites of love,
For my profession's sacred from above:
When I have chased all thy foes from hence,
Then will I think upon a recompense.
Char. Mean time, look gracious on thy prostrate thrall.
Reig. My lord, methinks, is very long in talk.
ALEN. Doubtless, he shirveth this woman to her smock;
Else ne'er could he so long protract his speech.
Reig. Shall we disturb him, since he keeps no mean?
ALEN. He may mean more than we poor men do know.
These women are shrewd tempters with their tongues.
Reig. My lord, where are you? what devise you on?
Shall we give over Orleans, or no?
Pur. Why, no, I say, distrustful recreants!
Fight till the last gasp; I will be your guard.
Char. What she says, I'll confirm: we'll fight it out.
Pur. Assign'd I am to be the English scourge.
This night the siege assuredly I'll raise:
Expect Saint Martin's summer, halcyon days,
Since I have entered into these wars.
Glory is like a circle in the water,
Which never ceaseth to enlarge itself,
Till, by broad spreading, it disperse to nought.
With Henry's death, the English circle ends;
Dispersed are the glories it included.
Now am I like that proud insulting ship,
Which Caesar and his fortune bare at once.
Char. Was Mahomet inspired with a dove?
Thou with an eagle art inspired then.
HELEN, the mother of great Constantine.
Nor yet Saint Philip's daughters, were like thee.
Brightness of Caesar, fall'n on earth on earth,
How may I reverence worship thee enough?
ALEN. Leave off delays, and let us raise the siege.
Reig. Woman, do what thou canst to save our honours.
Drive them from Orleans, and be immortals'd.

Char. Presently we'll try.—Come, let's away about it:
No prophet will I trust, if she prove false.
[Exit.

SCENE III.—London.  Hill before the Tower.

Enter, at the gates, the Duke of Gloucester, with his Serving-men, in blue coats.

GLO. I am come to survey the Tower this day:
Since Henry's death, I fear, there is conveyance.
Where be these warders, that they wait not here?
Open the gates: Gloucester it is that calls.
1 Ward. [Within.] Who is there that knocks so im-
1 Serv. 1t is the noble duke of Gloucester. [seriously?
2 Ward. [Within.] Who'er he be, you may not be let in.
1 Serv. Answer you so the lord protector, villains?
2 Ward. [Within.] The Lord protect him! so we as-
We do no otherwise than we are will'd. [servant:]
GLO. Who willed you? or whose will stands, but mine?
There's none protector of the realm, but I.—
Break up the gates, I'll be your warrantize;
Shall I be flouted thus by dunghill grooms?

Servants rush at the Tower gates.  Enter to the gates,伍德维尔勋爵, the Lieutenant.

WOOD. [Within.] What noise is this; what traitors have we here!

GLO. Lieutenant, is it you, whose voice I hear?
Open the gates: here's Gloucester, that would enter.
WOOD. [Within.] I have patience, noble duke; I may Open the gates; to whom the Lord wills to enter.
[best even.
From him I have express commandments,
That thou, nor none of thine, shall be let in.
WOOD. Faint-hearted Woodville, prizest him 'fore me!
Arrogant Winchester? that haughty prelate,
Whom Henry, our late sovereign, ne'er could brook!
Thou art no friend to God, or to the king:
Open the gates, or I'll shut thee out shortly.
1 Serv. Open the gates unto the lord protector:
Or we'll burst them open, if that you come not quickly.

Enter Winchester, attended by a Train of Servants in tawny coats.

WIN. How now, ambitious Humphrey! what means this?

GLO. Fiend's priest, dost thou command me to be shut
WIN. I do, thou most usurping prector, [out!
And not protector of the king or realm.
WOOD. Stand back, thou manifest conspirator;
Thou, that contriv'st to murder our dead lord;
Thou, that giv'st worth insolencies to sin:
I'll canus thee in thy broad cardinal's hat,
If thou proceed in this thy insolence.
WIN. Nay, stand thou back, I will not budge a foot;
This be Damascus, be thou cursed Cain,
To slay thy brother Abel, if thou wilt,
WIN. I will not slay thee, but I'll drive thee back:
The scarlet robes, as a child's bearing cloth
I'll use, to carry thee out of this place.
WIN. Do what thou dar'st; I heard thee to thy face.
GLO. What am I dar'd, and bearded to my face!
Draw, men, for all this privileged place;
Blue-coats to tawny-coats.
Priest, beware thy beard;
GLO. and his men attack the Bishop.
I mean to tag it, and to cuff you soundly:
Under my feet I stamp thy cardinal's hat;
In spite of pope, or dignities of church,
Here by the cheeks I'll drag thee up and down.
WIN. Do what thou dar'st answer this before the pope.
GLO. Winchester goose, I cry—a rope! a rope!
Now beat them hence, Why do you let them stay?—
How went thou handled, being prisoner?
Or by what means got'st thou to be releas'd?
Discourse, I pr'ythee, on this turret's top.
Tut. The duke of Bedford had a prisoner,
Called—the brave lord Ponton de Santraillies;
For him I was exchang'd and ransomed.
But with a lesser man of arms by far,
Once, in contempt, they would have barr'd me.
Which I, disclaiming, scorn'd and crav'd death
Rather than I would be so pil'd estranc'd.
In fine, redeem'd I was as I desir'd.
But, O! the trencherous Fastolfe wounds my heart!
Whom with my bare fists I would execute,
If I now had him brought into my power.
Sol. Yet tell'st thou not, how thou wert entertain'd.
Tut. With scots, and scars, and contumelious
In open market-place produc'd they me,
Smuts.
To be a public spectacle to all:
Here, said they, is the terror of the French,
The scare-crow that affrights our children so.
Then broke I from the officers that led me;
And with my nails digg'd stones out of the ground,
To hurl at the beholders of my shame.
My bloody countenance made others fly;
Our durst come near, for fear of sudden death.
In iron walls they deem'd me not secure;
So great fear of my name 'mongst them was spread,
That they suppos'd, I could rend bars of steel,
And spurn in pieces posts of adamant:
Wherefore a guard of chosen shot I had,
That walk'd about me every minute while;
And I did find, it was the most delight then.
Sir Thomas Gargrave, and Sir William Gainsdale,
Let me have your express opinions,
Where is best place to make our battery next.
Gur. I think, at the north gate; for there stand lords.
Glus. And I, here, at the bulwark of the bridge.
Tut. For ought I see, this city must be furnish'd,
Or with light skirmishes enfeebled.
[Shot from the walls of Salisbury and Sir Tau.
Gargrave fall.
Sol. O Lord, have mercy on us, wretched sinners!
Gur. O Lord, have mercy on me, woeeful man!
Tut. What chance is this, that suddenly hath cross'd
Speak, Salisbury; at least, if thou canst speak [us—
How far thou, mirror of all martial men!
One of thy eyes, and thy cheek's side struck off!
Accursed tower! accursed fatal hand,
That hath contriv'd this woeeful tragedy!
In thirteen battles Salisbury o'camed;
Henry the fifth he first train'd to the wars;
Whilst any trump did sound, or drum struck up,
His sword did never leave striking in the field.
Yet liv'st thou Salisbury? though thy speech doth fail,
One eye thou hast, to look to heaven for grace:
The sun with one eye vieweth all the world.
Heaven, be thou gracious to none alive,
If Salisbury wants mercy at thy hand!—
Bear hence his body, I will help to bury it.
Sir Thomas Gargrave, hast thou any life?
Speak unto Talbot; nay, look up to him,
Sol. E'er we cheer thy spirit with this comfort;
Thou shalt not die, winces.
He hekcons with his hand, and smiles on me;
As who should say, When I am dead and gone,
ACT II.—SCENE I.

Enter a Messenger.

Mess. My lord, my lord, the French have gather'd head: The Dauphin, with one Joan la Pucelle join'd,— A holy prophetess, new rise up,— Is come with a great power to raise the siege.

[SALISBURY grows.]

Tal. Hear, hear, how dying Salisbury doth grow! It irks his heart, he cannot be reveng'd.—
Frenchmen, I'll be a Salisbury to you: Pucelle or puzzle, dolphin or dogfish, Your hearts I'll stamp out with my horse's heels, And make a quagmire of your mingled brains.— Convey me Salisbury into his tent, And then we'll try what these bastard Frenchmen dare. [Exeunt, bearing out the bodies.

SCENE V.—The same. Before one of the Gates.

Alarum. Skirmishings. TALBOT pursues the Dauphin, and driveth him in; then enter JOAN LA PUCELLE, driving Englishmen before her. Then enters TALBOT.

Tal. Where is my strength, my valour, and my force? Our English troops retire, I cannot stay them! A woman, clad in armour, chargeth them.

Enter La Pucelle.

Here, here she comes:—I'll have a bout with thee; Devil, or devil's dam, I'll conjure thee; Blood will I draw on thee, thou art a witch, And straightforward give thy soul to him thou serv'st.

Puc. Come, come, 'tis only 1 that must disgrace thee. [They fight.

Tal. Heavens, can you suffer hell so to prevail? My breast I'll burst with straining of my courage, And from my shoulders crack my arms asunder, But I will chastise this high minded trumpeter. Puc. Talbot, farewell; thy hour is not yet come: I must go victual Orleans withforth. Overtake me, if thou canst; I scorn thy strength. Go, go, cheer up thy hunger-starved men; Help Salisbury to make his testament: This day is ours, as many more shall be.

[Pucelle enters the Town, with Soldiers.

Tal. My thoughts are whirled like a potter's wheel; I know not where I am, nor what I do: A witch, by fear not force, like Hannibal, Drives back our troops, and conquers as she lists: So bees with smoke, and doves with noisome stench, Are from their hives, and houses, driven away. They call'd us, for our fierceness, English dogs; Now, like to whoels, we crying run away.

[Exeunt.]

SCENE VI.—The same.

Enter, on the walls, Pucelle, Charles, Reignier, Alançon, and Soldiers.

Puc. Advance our waving colours on the walls: Rescued is Orleans from the English wolves:— Thus Joan la Pucelle hath perform'd her word. Char. Divinest creature, bright Astra's daughter, How shall I honour thee for this success? Thy promises are like Adonis' gardens, That one day bloom'd, and fruitful were the next.— France triumph in thy glorious prophetess!— Recover'd is the town of Orleans: More blessed hap did ne'er behold our state. [town? Reig. Why ring not out the bells throughout the Dauphin, command the citizens make bonfires, And feast and banquet in the open streets, To celebrate the joy that God hath given us. Alan. All France will be replete with mirth and joy, When they shall hear how we have play'd the men. Char. 'Tis Joan, not we, by whom the day is won; For which, I will divide my crown with her: And all the priests and friars in my realm Shall, in procession, sing her endless praise. A statelier pyramid to her I'll rear. Than Rhodope's, or Memphis,' ever was: In memory of her, when she is dead, Her ashes, in an urn more precious Than the rich jewel'd cofier of Darius, Transported shall be at high festivals Before the kings and queens of France. No longer on Saint Dennis will we cry, But Joan la Pucelle shall be France's saint. Come in; and let us banquet royally, After this golden day of victory. [Flourish. Exeunt.]

ACT II.

SCENE I.—The same.

Enter to the gates, a French Sergeant, and Two Sentinels.

Serg. Sirs, take your places, and be vigilant: If any noise, or soldier you perceive, Near to the walls, like Adonis' garden; Let us have knowledge at the court of guard. 1 Sent. Sergeant, you shall. [Exit Sergeant.] Thus are poor servitors (When others sleep upon their quiet beds,) Constrained to watch in darkness, rain, and cold.

Enter TALBOT, BEFROYD, BURGUNDY, and Forces, with scaling ladders; their drums beating a devil march.

Tal. Lord regent,—and doubted Burgundy,— By whose approach, the regions of Artois, Walloon, and Picardy, are friends to us,— This happy night the Frenchmen are seen. Having all my carousal and banquetted: Embrace we then this opportunity; As fitting best to quittance their deceit, Contriv'd by art, and baleful sorcery. Bee! Coward of France!—how much he wrongs Despairing of his own men's fortitude, [his fame, To join with witches, and the help of hell.

Pucelle is enter'd into Orleans, In spite of us, or ought that we could do. O, would I were to die with Salisbury! The shame hereof will make me hide my head! [Alarum. Retreat. Exeunt Tal. and his Forces, &c.

[Flourish. Exeunt.]

ACT II.
Bur. Traitors have never other company.—
But what's that Pucelle, whom they term so pure?
Tal. A maid, they say.
Bur. Pray God, she prove not masquerine ere long; If underneath the standard of the French, She carry armour, as she hath begun. [spirits:
Tal. Well, let them practise and converse with God is our fortress; in whose conquering name, Let us resolve to scale their flotant bulwarks.
Bur. Ascend, brave Talbot: we will follow thee.
Tal. Not all together: better far, I guess, That we do make our entrance several ways; That, if it chance the one of us fail,
The other yet may rise against their force.
Bur. Agreed; I'll to you corner.
Bur. And to this.
Tal. And here will Talbot mount, or make his
Now, Salisbury! for thee, and for the right [grave.—
Of English Henry, shall this night appear How much in duty I am bound to both.

Sent. [Within.] Arm, arm! the enemy doth make assault!
The French troop over the walls in their shirts. Enter, several ways, Bastard, Alençon, Reignier, half ready, and half unready.
Alen. How now, my lords? what, all unready so?
Bast. Unready? ay, and glad we 'scape so well.
Reign. Twas time, I trow, to awake and leave our beds, Hearing alarmus at our chamber doors.
Alen. Of all exploits, since first I follow'd arms, Ne'er heard I of a warlike enterprise
More venturous, or desperate than this.
Bast. I think, this Talbot be a fiend of hell.
Reign. If not of hell, the heavens, sure, favour him.
Alen. Here cometh Charles; I marvel, how he sped.

Enter Charles and La Pucelle.
Post. Tis! holy Joan was his defensive guard.
Char. Is this thy coming, thou deceitful dame? Didst thou at first, to flatter us withal,
Make us partakers of a little gain,
That now our loss might be ten times so much?
Puc. Wherefore is Charles impatient with his friend? At all times will you have my power alike? Sleeping, or waking, must I still prevail,
Or will you blame and lay the fault on me? Improvident soldiers! had your watch been good,
This sudden mischief never could have fall'n.
Char. Duke of Alençon, this was your default;
That, being captain of the watch to-night,
Did look no better to that weighty charge.
Alen. Had all your quarters been as safely kept, As that whereof I had the government,
Would not been thus shamefully surpriz'd.
Bast. Mine was secure.
Reign. And so was mine, my lord.
Char. And, for myself, most part of all this night, Within her quarter, and mine own precinct,
I was employ'd in passing to and fro,
Abnnt relieving of the sentinels:
Then how, or which way, should they first break in?
Puc. Question, my lords, no farther of the case,
How, or which way: 'tis sure they found some place
But weakly guarded, where the breach was made.
And now there rests no other shift but this,—
To gather our soldiers, scatter'd and dispers'd,
And lay new platforms to endanger them.

Alarum. Enter an English soldier, crying a Talbot! a Talbot! They fly, leaving their clothes behind.
Sold. I'll be so bold to take what they have left.
The cry of Talbot serves me for a sword;
For I have loaden me with many spoils,
Using no other weapon but his name.

Exit.

SCENE II.—Orleans. Within the Town.
Enter Talbot, Bedford, Brenonry, a Captain, and others.

Bed. The day begins to break, and night is fled,
Whose pity might occur over the dead.
Here sound retreat, and cease our hot pursuit.

Tal. Bring forth the body of old Salisbury;
And here advance it in the market-place,
The middle centre of this cursed town.—
Now have I paid my vow unto his soul;
For every drop of blood was drawn from him.
There hath at least five Frenchmen died to-night.
And, that hereafter ages may behold
What ruin happen'd in revenge of him,
Within their chiefest temple I'll erect
A tomb, wherein his corpse shall be inter'd;
Upon the which, that every one may read,
Shall be engravi'd the sack of Orleans;
The mourners mark of his mortal death,
And what a terror he had been to France.
But, lords, in all our bloody massacre,
I muse, we met not with the Dauphin's grace;
His new-come champion, virtuous Joan of Arc;
Nor any of his false confederates.
Bed. Tis thought, lord Talbot, when the fight began,
Rage so sudden from their several beds,
They did, amongst the troops of armed men,
Leap o'er the walls for refuge in the field.
Bur. Myself (as far as I could well discern,
For smoke, and dusky vapours of the night,) Am sure, I scant the Dauphin, and his trul'l;
When arm in arm they both came swiftly running,
Like to a pair of loving turtle-doves,
That could not live together day or night.
After that things are set in order here,
We'll follow them with all the power we have.

Enter a Messenger.

Mest. All hail, my lords! which of this princely Call ye the warlike Talbot, for his acts [train
So much applauded through the realm of France?
Bur. Here is the Talbot; who would speak with him?
Mest. The virtuous lady, countess of Auvergne,
With modesty admiring thy renown,
By me entreats, good lord, thou wouldst vouchsafe
To visit her poor castle where she lies;
That she may boast, she hath beheld the man
Whose glory fills the world with loud report.
Bur. I am even so. I say, then, I see, our wars
Will turn into a peaceful concile sport,
When ladies crave to be encounter'd with—
You may not, my lord, despise her gentle suit.
Tal. Ne'er trust me then; for, when a world of men
Could not prevail with all their oratory,
Yet hath a woman's kindness over-rul'd—
And therefore tell her, I return great thanks;
And in submission will attend on her.
Will not your honours bear me company?
Bed. No, truly; it is more than manners will.
And I have heard it said.—Unbidden guests
Are often wellcome when they are gone.
Tal. Well then, alone, since there's no remedy,
I mean to prove this lady's courtesy.
ACT II.—SCENE IV.

Come hither, captain. [Whispers.]—You perceive my mind.
Capt. I do, my lord, and mean according [Exs.

SCENE III.—Avengue. Court of the Castle.

Enter the Countess and her Porter.

Count. Porter, remember what I gave in charge;
And, when you have done so, bring the keys to me.
Port. Madam, I will. [Exit.

Count. The plot is laid: if all things fall out right,
I shall as famous be by this exploit,
As Scythian Thomyris by Cyrus' death.
Great is the rumour of this dreadful knight,
And his achievements of no less account:
Fain would mine eyes be witness with mine ears,
To give then censure of these rare reports.

Enter Messenger and Talbot.

Mess. Madam,
According as your ladyship desireth,
By message crav'd, so is loud Talbot come.
Count. And he is welcome. What! is this the man?
Mess. Madam, it is.

Count. Is this the scourge of France?
Is this the Talbot, so much fear'd abroad,
That with his name the mothers still their babies!
I see, report is fabulous and false:
I thought, I should have seen some Hercules.
A second Hector, for his grim aspect,
And large proportion of his strong-knit limbs.
Alas! this is a child, a silly dwarf!
It cannot be, this weak and wretched shred
Should strike such terror to his enemies.

Tal. Madam, I have been too bold to trouble you:
But, since your ladyship is not at leisure,
I'll sort some other time to visit you. [Exeunt.

Count. What means he know?—Geskim him, whether Mess. Stay, my lord Talbot; for my lady craves
To know the cause of your abrupt departure.

Tal. Marry, for that she's in a wrong belief,
I go to certify her, Talbot's here.

Re-enter Porter, with keys.

Count. If thou be he, then art thou prisoner.
Tal. Prisoner! to whom?
Count. To me, blood-thirsty lord;
And for that cause I train'd thee to my home.
Long time thy shadow hath been thrust to me,
For in my gallery thy picture hangs:
But now the substance shall endure the like;
And I will chain these legs and arms of thine,
That haft by tyranny these many years,
Wasted our country, slain our citizens,
And sent our sons and husbands captive.

Tal. Ha, ha, ha! [to moon
Count. Longest thou, wretched! thy mirth shall turn
Tal. I laugh to see your ladyship so glad,
To think that you have aught but Talbot's shadow,
Whereon to practise your severity.

Count. Why, art not thou the man?
Tal. I am indeed.

Count. Then have I substance too.
Tal. No, no, I am but shadow of myself:
You are deceiv'd, my substance is not here;
For what you see, is but the smallest part
And least proportion of humanity:
I tell you, madam, were the whole frame here,
It is of such a spacious lofty pick,
Your roof were not sufficient to contain it.

Count. This is a raging merchant for the nonce;
He will be here, and yet he is not here:

How can these contradictions agree?

Tal. That will I shew you presently.

He winds a Horn. Drum heard; then a Peal of Ordnance. The Gates being forced, enter Soldiers.

How say you, madam? are you now persuaded,
That Talbot is but shadow of himself?
These are his substance, sinews, arms, and strength,
With which he yokest your rebellious necks;
Razeth your cities, and subverts your towns,
And in a moment makes them desolate.

Count. Victorious Talbot! pardon my abuse:
I find thou art no less than fame hath bruited,
And more than may be gather'd by thy shape.
Let my presumption not provoke thy wrath;
For I am sorry, that with reverence
I did not entertain thee as thou art.

Tal. Be not dismay'd, fair lady, nor misconstrue
The mind of Talbot, as you did mistake
The outward composition of his body.
What you have done, hath not offended me.
No other satisfaction do I crave,
But only (with your patience,) that we may Taste of your wine, and see what cates you have;
For soldiers' stomachs always serve them well.

Count. With all my heart; and think me honoured
To feast so great a warrior in my house. [Exeunt.

SCENE IV.—London. The Temple Garden.

Enter the Earl of Somerset, Suffolk, and Warwic; Richard Plantagenet, Vepbos, and another Lawyer.

Plan. Great lords, and gentlemen, what means this Dare no man answer in a case of truth? [silence
Suf. Within the temple hall we were too loud;
The garden here is more convenient.
Plan. Then say at once, if I maintain the truth;
Or, else, was wrangling Somerset in the error!

Suf. 'Tis faith, I have been a truant in the law;
And never yet could frame my will to it:
And therefore, frame the law unto my will. [us.
Som. Judge you, my lord of Warwick, then between
War. Between two hawks, which flies the higher pitch,
Between two dogs, which hath the deeper mouth,
Between two blades, which bears the better temper,
Between two horses, which doth bear him best,
Between two girls, which hath the merriest eye,
I have, perhaps, some shallow spirit of judgment.
But in these nice sharp quillets of the law,
Good faith, I am no wiser than a daw.

Plan. Tut, tut, here is a matter of forbearance:
The truth appears so naked on my side,
That any purblind eye may find it out.
Som. And on my side it is so well apparell'd,
So clear, so shining, and so evident,
That it will glimmer through a blind man's eye.
Plan. Since you are so glib, and so leath to
In dumb significants proclaim your thoughts; [speak,
Let him, that is a true born gentleman,
And stands upon the honour of his birth,
If he suppose that I have pleaded truth,
From off this briar pluck a white rose with me.
Som. Let him that is no coward, nor no blatter,
But dare maintain the prettiest truth,
Pluck a red rose from off this thorn with me.
War, I love no colours; and, without all colour
Of base insinuating flattery,
I pluck this white rose, with Plantagenet.

Suf. I pluck this red rose, with young Somerset;
And say withal, I think be held the right.
KING HENRY VI.—PART I.

V. [King. Stay, lords, and gentlemen, and pluck none.]

Till you conclude—that he, upon whose side
The fewest roses are crop'd from the tree,
Shall yield the other in the right opinion.

Som. Good master Vernon, it is well object'd;

If I have fewest, I subscribe in silence.

Plan. And I.

V. Then, for the truth and plainness of the case,
I pluck this pale and maiden blossom here,

Giving my verdict on the white rose side.

Som. Prick not your finger as you pluck it off;
Lost, bleeding, you do pluck a white rose red,

And fall on my side so against your will.

V. If I, my lord, for my opinion bleed,

Opinion shall be sear'd to my hurt,

And keep me on the side where still I am.

Som. Well, well, well, come on; Who else?

Law. Unless my study and my books be false,
The argument you hold, was wrong in you. [To Som.]

Som. Whereof, I pluck a white rose too.

Pon. Now, Somerset, where is your argument?

Som. Here, in my scabbard; meditating that,

Shall die your white rose in a bloody hand.

Plan. Mean time, your cheeks do counterfeit our

For pale they look with fear, as witnessing [roses];
The truth on our side.

Som. No, Plantagenet,

'Tis not for fear; but anger,—that thy cheeks
Blush for pure shame, to counterfeit our roses;

And yet thy tongue will not confess thy error.

Plan. Hath not thy rose a canker, Somerset?

Som. Hath not thy rose a thorn, Plantagenet?

Plan. Ay, sharply piercing, to maintain his truth;
Whiles thy consuming canker eats thy falsehood.

Som. The canker, and the rose,

Shall maintain what I have said is true,

Where false Plantagenet dare not be seen.

Plan. Now, by this maiden blossom in my hand,

I scorn thee and thy fashion, peevish boy.

Saj. Turn not thy scowls this way, Plantagenet.

Plan. Proud Poole, I will; and scorn both him and thee.

Saj. Wherein is part thereof into thy throat.

Som. Away, away, good William De-la Poole!

We grace the yeoman, by conversing with him.

W. Now, by God's will, thou wrong'st him; Somerset;

His grandfather was Lionel, duke of Clarence,
Third son to the third Edward king of England;
Spring endless yeomen from so deep a root!

Plan. He bears him on the place's privilege,

Or durst not, for his craven heart, say thus.

Som. By him that made me, I'll maintain my words

On any plot of ground in Christ-church:
Was not thy father, Richard, earl of Cambridge,
For treason execr'd in our late king's days?
And, by his treason, stand'st not thou attainted,
Condemne'd and banish'd in thy own country?
His trespass yet lives guilty in thy blood;

And, till thou be restor'd, thou art a yeoman.

Plan. My father was attainted, not attainted;
Condemne'd to die for treason, but no traitor;
And that I'll prove on better men than Somerset.
Were growing time once ripen'd to my will.
For your partaker Poole, and you yourself,
I'll note you in my book of memory,
To scourge you for this apprehension;
Look to it well; and say you are well warn'd.

Som. Ay, thou shalt find us ready for thee still:

And know us, by these colours, for thy foes;

For these my friends, in spite of thee, shall wear.

Plan. And, by my soul, this pale and angry rose,

As cognizance of my blood-drinking hate,
Will I for ever, and my faction, wear;
Until it wither with me to my grave,

Or flourish to the height of my degree.

And so farewell, until I meet thee next. [Exit.

Som. Have with thee, Poole. Farewell, ambitions Richard. [Exit.

Plan. How I am braved, and must perform enduce it!

V. War. This blot, that they object against your house,

Shall, god and grace, out-die the next parliament.
Ca'll'd for the trace of Winchester and Glouster.

And, if thou be not then created York,

I will not live to be accounted Warwick.

Mean time, in signal of my love to thee,

Against proud Somerset, and William Poole,

Will I upon thy party wear this rose:

And hear I prophesy,—This brawl to-day,

Grown to this factions, in the Temple garden,

Shall send, between the red rose and the white,
A thousand souls to death and endless night.

Plan. Good master Vernon, I am bound to you,

That you on my behalf would pluck a flower.

V. In your behalf still will I wear the same.

Law. And so will I.

Plan. Thanks, gentle sir.

Come, he are four to dinner: I dare say,

This quarrel will drink blood another day. [Exeunt.

SCENE V.—The same. A Room in the Tower.

Enter Mortimer, brought in by a boat Keeping.

Mort. Kind keepers of my weak decaying age,
Let me to Mortimer house, where I am expos'd.

Even like a man new hale'd from the rack,
So fare my limbs with long imprisonmen:
And these grey locks, the pursuivants of death,
Nestor-like aged, in an age of care,

Argue the end of Edward Mortimer.

These eyes,—like lamps whose wasting oil is spent,—

Wax dim, as drawing to an exigent:
Weak shoulders unwilling to bear burdens griev;

And pitiful arms, like to a wither'd vine

That drops his sapless branches to the ground:
Yet are these feet,—whose strengthless stay is numb,

Unable to support this lump of clay,—

Swift-winged with desire to get a grave,
As writting I no other comfort have,—

But tell me, keeper, will my nephew come?

I keep. Richard Plantagenet, my lord, will come.

We sent unto the Temple, to his chamber;

And answer was return'd, that he will come.

Mort. Enough; my soul shall then be satisfied.—

Poor gentleman! his wrong doth equal mine.

Since Henry Monmouth first began to reign,

( Before whose glory I was great in arms. )
This blossom sprung from monarchical bower I had;—
And even since then hath Richard been obscur'd,

Depriva'd of honour and inheritance;

But now, the arbiter of despairs,

Just deal'd, kind urban of men's miseries,

With sweet enlargement dutifully meet me:

I would, his troubles likewise were expir'd,

That so he might recover what was lost.

Enter Richard Plantagenet.

1 Keep. My lord, your loving nephew now is come.

Mort. Richard Plantagenet, my friend? Is he come?

Plan. Ay, noble uncle, thus ignorably us'd;

Your nephew, late-despis'd Richard, comes.

Mort. Direct mine arms, I may embrace his neck,
ACT III.—SCENE I.

(Enter King Henry, Exeter, Gloucester, Warwick, Somerset, and Suffolk ; the Bishop of Winchester, Richard Plantagenet, and others.)

GLOSTER. Gloucester offers to put up a bid : Winchester matches it, and turns it.

WINCHESTER. Come! with deep premeditated lines, With written pamphlets studiously devised.

HUMPHREY. Humphrey of Gloucester ! if you cannot accuse,
Or aught intend it to lay unto my charge,
Do it without invention suddenly:
As I with sudden and extemporal speech
Purpose to answer what thou canst not obstruct.

GLOSTER. Presumptuous priest! this place commands my patience,
Or thou shouldst find thou hast dishonour'd me.

THOMAS. Think not, although in writing I prefer'd
The manner of thy vile outrageous crimes,
That therefore I have forg'd, or am not able Verbatim to rehearse the manner of my pen:
No, prelate : such is thy amorous wickedness,
Thy lewd, pestiferous, and dissensious pangs,
As very infants prattle of thy pride.
Thou art a most pernicious usurer,
Froward by nature, enemy to peace:
Lascivious, wanton, more than well beseeches
A man of thy profession and degree;
And for thy treachery, What's more manifest?
In that thou laid'st a trap to take my life,
As well at London bridge, as at the Tower !
Beside, I fear me, if thy thoughts were sifted,
The king, thy sovereign, is not quite exempt
From envious malice of thy swelling heart.

WINCHESTER. Gloucester, I do defy thee.—Lords, vouchsafe
To give me hearing, what I shall propose,
If I were covetous, ambitious, or perverse,
As he will have me, How am I so poor?
Or how haps it, I seek not to advance
Or raise myself, but keep my wonted calling?
And for dissention, Who preferreth peace
More than I do,—except I be prospected
No, my good lords, it is not of my device.
It is not that, that hath incens'd the duke:
It is, because no one should sway but he;
Or make my ill the advantage of my good.

Winchester retires: the scene is cleared.
And that engenders thunder in his breast,
And makes him roar these accusations forth.
But he shall know, I am as good —
Glo. As good?
Thou bastard of my grandfather! —
Win. Ay, lordly sir; For what are you, I pray,
But one impious in another’s throne?
Glo. Am I not the protector, saucy priest?
Win. And am I not a prelate of the church?
Glo. Yes, as an outlaw in a castle keeps,
And useth it to patronize his theft.
Win. Unreverent Gloster!
Glo. Thou art reverent,
Touching thy spiritual function, not thy life.
Win. This Rome shall remedy.
War. Roam thither then.
Som. My lord, it were your duty to forbear.
War. Ay, see the bishop be not overborne.
Som. Methinks my lord should be religious,
And know the office that belongs to such.
War. Methinks, his lordship should be humbler;
It fitteth not a prelate so to plead.
Som. Yes, when his holy state is touch’d so near.
War. State holy, or unbidden, what of that?
Is not his grace protector to the king?
Win. No, Plantagenet, I see, not tell his tongue;
Lest it be said, Speak, sirrah, when you should;
Must your bold verdict enter talk with lords?
Else would I have a fling at Winchester. [Aside.
K. Hen. Uncles of Gloster, and of Winchester,
The special watchmen of our English weal;
I would prevail if prayers might prevail,
To join your hearts in love and amity.
Oh what a scandal is it to our crown,
That such two noble peers as ye, should jar!
Believe me, lords, my tender years can tell,
Civil dissonance is a viperous worm,
That gnaws the bowels of the commonwealth.—
[A noise within; Down with the tawny coats!
War. What tumult’s this?
War. An uproar, I dare warrant,
Begun through malice of the bishop’s men.
[Enter Mayor of London, attended.
May. O, my good lords, — and virtuous Henry,—
Pity the city of London, pity us! The shop and the close of Gloster’s men, Forbidden late to carry any weapon.
Have fill’d their pockets full of pebble-stones;
And banding themselves in contrary parts,
Do pelt so fast at one another’s pate,
That many have their giddy brains knock’d out:
Our windows are brok’n down in every street,
And we, for fear, compell’d to shut our shops.
Enter, skirmishing, the Retainers of Gloster and Winchester, with bloody potes.
K. Hen. We charge you, on allegiance to ourself,
To hold your slaught’ring hands, and keep the peace.
Pray, uncle Gloster, mitigate this strife.
1 Serv. Nay, if we be Forbidden stones, we’ll fall to it with our teeth.
2 Serv. Do what ye dare, we are as resolute.
[Skirmish again.
Glo. You of my household, leave this poevish broil,
And set this unaccustom’d fight aside.
1 Serv. My lord we know your grace to be a man
Just and upright; and, for your royal birth,
 Inferior to none, but his majesty:
And, ere that we will suffer such a prince,
So kind a father of the commonweal,
To be disgrac’d by an inborn mate,
We, and our wives, and children, all will fight,
And have our bodies slaughter’d by thy foes.
2 Serv. Ay, and the very parings of our nails
Shall pitch a field, when we are dead! [Skirmish again.
Glo. Stay, stay, I say! —
And, if you love me, as you say you do,
Let me persuade you to forbear a while.
K. Hen. O, how this discord doth afflict my soul! —
Can you, my lord of Winchester, behold
Murders and tears, and will not act a talent? —
Who should be pitiful, if you be not? —
Or who should study to prefer a peace,
If holy churchmen take delight in broils? —
War. My lord protector’s yield; —yield. Winches-
Except you mean, with obstinate repulse, —
To slay your sovereign, and destroy the realm.
You see what mischief, and what murder too,
Hath been enacted through your enmity;
Then be at peace, except ye thirst for blood.
Win. He shall subdue, or I will never yield.
Glo. Compassion on the king commands me stroop;
Or, I would see his heart out, ere the priest
Should ever get that privilege of me.
War. Beloved, my lord of Winchester, the duke
Hath prov’d so saucy, and so contented.
As by his smooth’d brows it doth appear:
Why look you still so stern, and tragic?
Glo. Here, Winchester, I offer thee my hand.
K. Hen. Fye, uncle Beaufort! I have heard you
That malice was a great and grievous sin: [preach,
And will not you maintain the thing you teach,
But have a chief offender in the same? —
War. Sweet king! — the bishop hath a kindly girl.—
For shame my lord of Winchester! relent!
What, shall a child instruct you what to do?
Win. Well, duke of Gloster, I will yield to thee;
Love for thy love, and hand for hand I give.
Glo. Aye; but, I fear me, with a hollow heart.—
See here, my friends, and loving countrymen;
This token serveth for a flag of truce;
Betwixt ourselves, and all our followers;
So help me God, as I dissemble not.
Win. So help me God as I intend it not! [Aside.
K. Hen. O loving uncle, kind duke of Gloster,
How joyful am I made by this contract!—
Away, my masters! trouble us no more;
But join in friendship, as your lords have done. 1 Serv. Content; I’ll to the surgeon.
2 Serv. And so will I.
3 Serv. And I will see what physic the tavern af-
[Exeunt Servants, Mayor, &c.
War. Accept this scroll, most gracious sovereign;
Which in the right of Richard Plantagenet
We do exhibit to your majesty.
K. Hen. If it please you, lord of Warwick —for, sweet
As if your grace mark every circumstance; [prince,
You have great reason to do Richard right: —
Especially, for those occasions
At Eatham-place I told your majesty.
K. Hen. And those occasions, uncle, were of force:
Therefore, my loving lords, our pleasure is,
That Richard be restored to his blood.
War. Let Richard be restored to his blood,
So shall his father’s wrongs be recompens’d.
Win. As will the rest, so will eth Winchester.
K. Hen. If Richard will be true, not that alone,
But all the whole inheritance I give,
That doth belong unto the house of York,
From whence ye spring by lineal descent.
Praise thy humble servant, vows obedience,
And humble service, till the point of death.
K. Hen. Stoop then, and set your knee against my
And, in regnemon of that duty done. [foot]
I girt thee with the valiant sword of York
Rise, Richard, like a true Plantagenet;
And rise created princely duke of York.
Plan. And so thrive Richard, as thy foes may fall!
And as my duty springs, so perish they
That grudge one thought against your majesty?
All. Welcome, high prince, the mighty duke of York!
Som. Perish, base prince, ignoble duke of York! [Aside]
Glo. Now will it best avail your majesty,
To cross the seas, and to be crown'd in France.
The presence of a king engenders love
Amongst his subjects, and his loyal friends;
As it desanirates his enemies.
K. Hen. When Gloster says the word, king Henry
For friendly counsel cuts off many foes.
[goes]
Glo. Your ships already are in readiness.
[Exeunt all but Exeter.
Er. Aye, we may march in England, or in France,
Not seeing what is likely to ensue:
This late dissolution, grown betwixt the peers
Burns under feigned ashes of forg'd love,
And will at last break out into a flame:
As foster'd members rot but by degrees,
Till bores, and fiends, and sinews, fall away.
So will this base and envious discord breed.
And now I fear that fatal prophecy,
Which, in the time of Henry, nam'd the fifth,
Was in the month of every sucking babe,—
That Henry, born at Monmouth, should win all;
And Henry, born at Windsor, should lose all:
Which is so plain, that Exeter doth wish
His days may finish ere that hapless time.
[Exit.

SCENE II.—France. Before Rouen.

Enter La Pucelle disguised, and Soldiers dressed like Countrymen, with sacks upon their backs.

Puc. These are the city gates, the gates of Rouen,
Through which our policy must make a breach:
Take heed, be wary how you place your words;
Talk like the vulgar sort of market men,
That come to gather money for their groats
If we have entrance. (As, I hope, we shall.)
And that we find the stoutest watch but weak,
I'll by a sign give notice to our friends,
That Charles the Dauphin may encounter them.
1 Sold. Our sacks shall be a means to sack the city,
And we be lords and rulers over Rouen:
Therefore we'll knock.
[Knocks.
Guard. [Within.] Who's there?
Puc. Parissains, parvires gens de France:
Poor market folks, that come to sell their corn.
Guard. Enter, go in; the market-bell is rung.
[Opens the gates.
Puc. Now, Rouen, I'll shake thy bulwarks to the ground.
[La Pucelle, &c. enter the city.

Enter Charles, Bastard of Orleans, Alençon, and Forces.

Char. Saint Dennis bless this happy stragglers! And once again we'll sleep secure in Rouen.
Bast. Here enter'd Pucelle, and her practisants;
Now she is there, how will she the spectacle
Where is the best and safest passage in?
Alon. By the trusting out a torch from yonder tower;
Which, once discern'd, shews, that her meaning is,—
No way to that, for weakness, which she enter'd.

Enter La Pucelle on a battlement: holding out a torch burning.
Puc. Behold this is the happy wedding torch,
That joineth Rouen unto her countrymen;
But burning fatal to the Talboites.

Bast. See, noble Charles! the beacon of our friend,
The burning torch in yonder turret stands.
Char. Now shine it like a comet of revenge,
A prophet to the fall of all our foes!

Alon. Deter no more, Delays have dangerous ends;
Enter, and cry—The Dauphin!—presently,
And then do execution on the watch. [They enter.

Alarums. Enter Talbot and certain English.

Tal. France, thou shalt rue this treason with thy tears,
If Talbot but survive thy treachery.—
Pucelle, that witch, that damned sorceress,
Hath wrought this hellish mischief unawares,
That hardly we escape'd the pride of France.

[Exeunt to the town.

Alarum: Excursions. Enter, from the town, Bedford, brought in sick, in a chair, with Talbot, Burgundy, and the English Forces. Then, enter on the south, La Pucelle, Charles, Bastard, Alençon, and others.
Puc. Good morrow, gallants! want ye cote for bread?
I think, the duke of Burgundy will fast,
Before he'll buy again at such a rate:
'Twas full of danel; Do you like the taste?
Bor. Scoffon, vile fiend, and shameless courtier! I trust, ere long, to choke thee with thine own
And make thee curse the harvest of that corn.
Char. Your grace may starve perhaps before that time.
Bed. O, let no words, but deeds, revenge this treason!
Puc. What will you do, good grey-beard? break a
And run a tilt at death within a chair? [Jance,
Tal. foul fiend of France, and hag of all despite,
Encompass'd with thy lustful paramours!
Becomes it thee to taunt his valiant age,
And twist with cowardice a man half dead?
Damsel, I'll have a bout with you again,
Or else let Talbot perish with this shame.
Puc. Are you so hot, sir?—Yet, Pucelle, hold thy
If Talbot do but thunder, rain will follow.— [peace;
[Exeunt Talbot, and the rest, consult together.
Char. God speed the parliament! who shall be the speaker?
Tal. Dare ye, sir, come forth, with a spirit in the field?
Puc. Be like, your lordship takes us then for fools,
To try if that our own be ours, or no.
Tal. I speak not to that raving Hecate,
But unto thee Alençon, and the rest;
Will ye, like soldiers, come and fight it out?
Alon. Signior, no.
[Exeunt, to the north.

Tal. Signior, hang!—base muleteers of France! Like peasant foot-boys do they keep the walls,
And dare not take up arms like gentlemen.
Puc. Captains, away: let's get us from the walls;
For Talbot means no goodness, by his looks.
God be wi'you, my lord! we came, sir, but to tell you
That we are here.

[Exeunt La Pucelle, &c. from the walls.
Tal. And there will we be too, ere it be long,
Or else reproach be Talbot's greatest fame!—
Vow, Burgundy, by honour of thy house,
(Prick'd on by public wrongs, sustain'd in France),
Either to get the town again, or die:
And—Be sure as English Henry lives,
And as his father here was conqueror;
As sure as in this late-betrayed town
Great Coeur-de-lion's heart was buried;
So sure I swear, to get the town, or die.
KING HENRY VI.—PART I.

Bar. My vows are equal partners with thy vows.
Tal. But, ere we go, regard this dying prince, The valiant Duke of Bedford.—Come, by heaven, We will bestow you in some better place, Fitter for sickness, and for crazy age.
Bed. Lord Talbot, do not so dis honour me: Here I will sit before the walls of Rouen, And will be partner of your weal, or woe.
Bar. Courageous Bedford, let us now persuade you.
Bed. Not to be gone from hence; for once I read, That stout Pendragon, in his litter, sick, Came to the field, and vanquished his foes: Methinks, I should revive the soldiers' hearts, Because I ever found them as myself.
Tal. And unadorned spirit in a dying breast!— Then be it so—Heavens keep old Bedford safe!— And now no more ado, brave Burgundy, But gather we our forces out of hand, And set upon our opposing enemy.
[Exeunt Burgundy, Talbot, and Forces, bearing Bedford, and others.

Alarum: Excursions. Enter Sir John Fastolfe, and a Captain.
Cap. Whither away, Sir John Fastolfe, in such haste?
Fast. Whither away? to save myself by flight; We are like to have the overthrow again.

Retreat: Excursions. Enter, from the town, La Pucelle, Alencon, Charles, &c. and a great flying. Bed. Now, quiet soul, depart when heaven please; For I have seen our enemies' overthrow. What is the trust or strength of foolish man? They, that of late were daring with their scots, Are glad and fain by flight to save themselves. [Dies, and is carried off in his chair.

Alarum: Enter Talbot, Burgundy, and others.
Tal. Last, and recover'd in a day again! This is a double honour, Burgundy! Yet, heavens have glory for this victory! Burg. Warlike and martial Talbot, Burgundy Enshrines thee in his heart; and there erects Thy noble deeds, as valor's monument. [Now?
Tal. Thanks, gentle duke. But where is Pucelle I think, her old familiar is asleep: [Gleeks! Now where's the Bastard's braves, and Charles his What, all a mort? Rouen hangs her head for grief, That such a valiant company are fell. Now will we take some order in the town, Placing therein some expert officers; And then depart to Paris, to the king: For there young Harry, with his nobles, lies. Bar. What will- Lord Talbot, pleaseth Burgundy. Tal. But yet, before we go, let's not forget The noble Duke of Bedford, late deceased, But see his exequies tenu'd in Rouen; A braver soldier never crouch'd-lance, A gentler heart did never sway in court: But kings, and mightiest potentates must die; For that's the end of human misery. [Exeunt.

SCENE III.—The same. The Plains near the City. Enter Charles, the Bastard, Alencon, La Pucelle, and Forces.
Puc. Dismay not, princes, at this accident, Nor grieve that Rouen is so recovered: Care is no cure, but rather corrosive, For things that are not to be remedied. Let frantic Talbot triumph for a while, And like a peacock sweep along his head; We'll pull his plumes, and take away his train, If Dauphin, and the rest, will be but mad. Char. We have been guided by thee hitherto, And of thy cunning had no diffidence; One sudden fall shall never breed distrust.
But. Search out thy wit for seer policies. And we will make thee famous through the world. Alen. We'll set thy statute in some holy place, And have thee reverenced like a blessed saint; Employ thee then, sweet virgin, for our good.
But. Then thus it must be; this doth Joan devise: By fair persuasions, mix'd with sugar'd words, We will entice the duke of Burgundy To leave the Talbot, and to follow.
Char. Ay, marry, sweeting, if we could do that, France were no place for Henry's warriors; Nor should that nation boast it so with us, But he extripated from our provinces. Alen. Forever should they be expuls'd from France, And not have title to an earldom here.
But. Your honours shall perceive how I will work, To lead the Talbot to his perished end. Drums heard! Har! by the sound of drum, you may perceive, Their powers are marching unto Parisward.

An English March. Enter and pass over at a distance, Talbot and his Forces.

There goes the Talbot, with his colours spread; And all the troops of English after him.

A French March. Enter the Duke of Burgundy and Forces.
Now, in the rearward, comes the duke, and lads; Fortune, in favour, makes him lag behind. Summon a parley, we will talk with him. [A parley sounded.
Char. A parley with the duke of Burgundy. Bar. Who caves a parley with the duke of Burgundy?
Puc. The princely Charles of France, thy countryman. [Hence.
Bar. What say'st thou, Charles! for I am marching Char. Speak, Pucelle; and enchant him with thy words.
Puc. Brave Burgundy, undoubted hope of France: Stay, let thy humble handmaid speak to thee. Bar. Speak on; but be not over-tertions. Puc. Look on thy country, look on fertile France, And see the cities and the towns defac'd By wasting ruin of the cruel foe! As looks the mother on her lowly babe, When death doth close his tender dying eyes, See, see, the pining malady of France; Behold the wounds, the most unnatural wounds, Which thynself hast given her woful breast! O, turn thy edged sword another way; Strike those that hurt, and hurt not those that help! One drop of blood, drawn from thy country's bosom, Should grieve thee more than streams of foreign gore; Return thee, therefore, with a flood of tears, And wash away thy country's stained spots. Either the thine lawfowl'd thee with her words, Or nature makes me suddenly relent.
Puc. Besides, all French and France exclaims on. Doubting thy birth and lawful progeny. [Thee, Who join'st thon with, but with a lordly nation, That will not trust thee, but for prétèt's sake! When Talbot hath set footing once in France, And fashion'd thee that instrument of ill,
ACT IV. — SCENE I. 463

Who then, but English Henry, will be loud,
And thou be burst out, like a fugitive?
Call we to mind, — and mark but this, for proof; —
Was not the duke of Burgundy prisoner?
But, when they heard he was thine enemy,
They set him free, without his ransom paid,
In spite of Burgundy, and all his friends.
In truth, thou light'st against thy countrymen,
And join'st with them to be thy slaughter-men.
Come, come, return; then, thou wand'ring lord;
And was he not in England prisoner?
But, when they heard he was thine enemy,
They set him free, without his ransom paid,
In spite of Burgundy, and all his friends.
In truth, thou light'st against thy countrymen,
And join'st with them to be thy slaughter-men.
Come, come, return; then, thou wand'ring lord;
And was he not in England prisoner?

Enter King Henry, Gloster, and other Lords, Vernon, Barnet, &c. To them Talbot, and some of his Officers.

Tal. My gracious prince, — and honourable peers,
Hearing of your arrival in this realm,
I have awhile given truce unto my wars,
To do my duty to my sovereign;
In sign whereof, this arm,—that hath reclaim'd
To your obedience fifty fortresses,
Twelve cities, and seven walled towns of strength,
Besides five hundred prisoners of esteem,—
Lest fall his sword before your highness' feet;
And, with submissive loyalty of heart,
Ascribes the glory of his conquest got,
First to my God, and next unto your grace.
K. Hen. Is this the lord Talbot, uncle Gloster,
That makes me long to hear your presence?
Glo. Yes, if it please your majesty, my liege.
K. Hen. Welcome, brave captain, and victorious
When I was young, (as yet I am not old,) [lord! I do remember how my father said,
A stouter champion never handled sword.
Long since we were resolved of your truth,
Your faithful service, and your toil in war;
Yet never have you tasted our reward,
Or been requir'd with so much as thanks
Because till now we never saw your face:
Therefore, stand up; and, for these good deserts,
We here create you earl of Shrewsbury;
And in our coronation take your place.

[Enter K. Henry, Gloster, Talbot, & Nobles.

Ver. Now, sir, to you, that were so hot at sea,
Disgracing of these colours that I wear
In honour of my noble lord of York,—
Dar'st thou maintain the former words thou spak'st? —
Bas. Yes, sir; as well as you dare patronage
The envious barking of your saucy tongue
Against my lord, the duke of Somerset.
Ver. Sirrah, thy lord I honour as he is.
Bas. Why, what is he? as good a man as York.
Ver. Hark ye: not so: in witness take ye that.
[Strikes him.
Bas. Villain, thou know'st, the law of arms is such,
That, whose doth draw a sword, 'tis present death;
Or else this blow should broach thy dearest blood.
But I'll unto his majesty, and may have liberty to argue this wrong:
When thou shalt see, I'll meet thee to thy cost,
Ver. Well, miscreant, I'll be there as soon as you;
And, after, meet you sooner than you would. [Exit.

ACT IV.

SCENE I.—The same. A Room of State.

Enter King Henry, Gloster, Exeter, York, Suffolk, Somerset, Winchester, Warwick, Talbot, the Governor of Paris, and others.

Glo. Lord bishop, set the crown upon his head.
Win. God save king Henry of that name the sixth!
Glo. Now, governor of Paris, take your oath,—

That you elect no other king but him:
Esteem none friends, but such as are his friends;
And none your foes, but such as shall pretend
Majestie's practices against his state:
This shall ye do, so help you righteous God!

[Exit Glo.

Enter Sir John Fastolfe.

Fast. My gracious sovereign, as I rode from Calais,
To haste unto your coronation,
A letter was deliver'd to my hands,
Writ to your grace from the duke of Burgundy.
Tal. Shame to the duke of Burgundy, and thee!
I, vowed, base knight, when I did meet thee next,
To wear the garter from thy craven's leg.

(Which I have done) because unworthy
Thou wast installd in that high degree,—
Pardon me, princely Henry, and the rest:
This dastard, at the battle of Patay,
When but in all I was six thousand strong,
And that the French were almost ten to one,—
Before we met, or that a stroke was given,
Like to a trusty squier, did run away:
In which assault we lost twelve hundred men,
Myself, and divers gentlemen beside,-
Were there surprise'd, and taken prisoners.
Then judged great lords, if they were base amiss;
Or whether that such cowards ought to wear
This ornament of knighthood, yea, or no
Glo. To say the truth, this fact was infamous,
And ill be seeming any common man;
Much more a knight, a captain, and a leader.
Tal. When first this order was ordain'd, my lords,
Knights of the garter were of noble birth;
Valiant, and virtuous, full of haughty courage,
Such as were grown to credit by the wars;
Not fearing death, nor shrinking for distress,
But always resolute in most extremes.
He then, that is not furnish'd in this sort,
Doth but usurp the sacred name of knight,
Profaning this most honourable order;
And should (if I were worthy to be judge,) Be quite degraded, like a hedge-born swain
That doth presume to boast of gentle blood. [dum.
K. Hen. Stain to thy countrymen! thou hast's thy
Be packing therefore, thou that wast a knight;
Henceforth we banish thee on pain of death.

[Exit Fastolfe.

And now, my lord protector, view the letter
Sent from our uncle duke of Burgundy.
Glo. What means his grace, that he hath chang'd his style? [Viewing the superscription
No more but, plain and bluntly,—To the king?
Hath he forgot, is he so sovereign?
Or doth this churlish superscription
Pretend some alteration in good will?
What's here?—I love upon especial cause,—[Reads,
Medit'ng with compassion of my country's wreck,
Together with the pitiful complaints
Of such as your oppression feeds upon,—
For sake your pernicious faction,
And join'd with Charles, the rightfull king of France.
O monstrous treachery! Can this be so?
That in alliance, amity, and oaths,
There should be found a false assembling guile?
K. Hen. What! doth my uncle Burgundy revolt?
Clo. He doth, my lord; and is become your foe.
K. Hen. Is that the worst, this letter doth contain?
Glo. It is the worst, and all, my lord, he writes.
K. Hen. Why then, lord Talbot there shall talk with
And give him chastisement for this abjuration:—
Thou, my lord, how say you? are you not content?
Tal. Content, my liege? Yes; but that I am prevented,
I should have begg'd I might have been employ'd.
K. Hen. Then gather strength, and march unto him straight:
Let him perceive, how ill we brook his treason;
And what offence it is, to fout his friends.
Tal. I go, my lord; in heart desiring still
You may behold confusion of your foes.

Enter VERON and BASSET.
Ver. Grant me the combat, gracious sovereign!
Bus. And me, my lord, grant me the combat too!
York. This is my servant; Hear him, noble prince!
Som. And this is mine; Sweet Henry, favour him!
K. Hen. Be patient, lords; and give them leave to speak.
Say, gentlemen, What makes you thus exclaim?
And wherefore crave you combat? or with whom?
Ver. With him, my lord; for he hath done me wrong.
Bus. And I with him; for he hath done me wrong.
K. Hen. What is that wrong whereof you both complain?
Flint. I know, and then I'll answer you. [plain
Bus. Crossing the sea from Valenciennes into France,
This fellow here, with envious carping tongue,
Upbraided me about the rose I wear;
Saying—the sanguine colour of the leaves
Did represent my master's blushing cheeks.
When stubbornly he did repugn the truth,
About a certain question in the law,
Arg'd betwixt the dukes of York and him;
With other vile and ignominious terms:
In confusion of which rude reproach,
And in defence of my lord's worthiness,
I crave the benefit of law of arms.
Ver. And that is my petition, noble lord:
For though he seem, with forged quaint conceit,
To set a gloss upon his bold intents,
Yet know, my lord, you have prov'd him by his hand,
And he first took exceptions at this badge,
Pronouncing—that the paleness of this flower
Bewray'd the faintness of my master's heart.
York. Will not this malice, Somerset, he left?
Som. Your private grudge, my lord of York, will Though ever so cunningly you smother it. [out.
K. Hen. Good Lord! what malady rules in brain,
When, for so slight and frivolous a cause, [sick men
Such factious emulations shall arise!—
Good cousins both, of York and Somerset,
Quiet yourselves, I pray, and be at peace.
York. Let this dissension first be tried by fight,
And then your highness shall command a peace.
Som. The quarrel teacheth none but us alone;
Betwixt ourselves let us decide it then.
York. There is my pledge: accept it, Somerset.
Ver. Nay, let it rest where it began at first,
Bus. Confirm it so, my liege honourable lord.
Glo. Confirm it so? Confounded be your strife!
And perish ye, with your audacious praise!
Presumptuous vassals! are you not asham'd,
With this immodest clamorous outrage
To trouble and disturb the king and us?
And you, my lords,—methinks, you do not well,
To bear with their perverse objections;
And more, to take occasion from their mouths
To raise a mutiny between yourselves;
Let me persuade you, take a better course.
Ver. It grieves his highness;—Good my lords; be friends.

[Exeunt K. Hen. Come hither, you that would be comba-Henceforth, I charge you, as you love our favour,
Quite to forget this quarrel, and the cause.—
And you, my lords, remember where we are;
In France, amongst a fickle wavering nation:
If they perceive dissention in our looks,
And that within ourselves we disagree,
How will their grudging stomachs be provok'd
To wilful disobedience, and rebel?
Beside, What infancy will there arise,
When foreign princes shall be certified,
To be the Toy for a toy, a thing of no regard;
King Henry's peers, and chief nobility,
Destroy'd themselves, and lost the realm of France?
O, think upon the conquest of my father,
My tender years; and let us not forego
That for a trifle, that was bought with blood!
Let me be umpire in this doubtful strife.
I see no reason, if I wear this robe.

That any one should therefore be suspicious.
I more incline to Somerset, than York:
Both are my kinsmen, and I love them both:
As well they may enfranchise me with my crown,
Because, forsooth, the king of Scots is crown'd.
And you, discreet nobles, how can you persuade,
Than I am able to instruct or teach?
And therefore, as we hither came in peace,
So let us still continue peace and love.—
Cousin of York, we institute your grace
To be our regent in these parts of France.—
And good my lord of Somerset, unite
Your troops of horsemen with his bands of foot:
And, like true subjects, sons of your progenitors,
Go cheerfully together, and digest
Your angry choler on your enemies.
Ourself, my lord protector, and the rest,
After some repose, will return to Calais;
From thence to England, where I hope ere long
To be presented, by your victories,
With Charles, Alecton, and that traitorous rout.

[Flourish. Enter FORTNUM, K. HENRY, GLO. SOM.
WIN. Suf, and BASSET.
Win. War. My lord of York, I promise you, the king
Pretently, methought, did play the orator.
York. And so he did; but yet I like it not,
Jo that he wears the badge of Somerset.
Win. Yea! 'that was but his fancy, blame him not;
I dare presume, sweet prince, he thought no harm.
York. And, if I wist, he did.—But let it rest;
Other affairs must now be managed.

[Exeunt YORK, WARWICK, and VERON.
Exc. Well didst thou, Richard, to suppress thy voice
For had the passions of thy heart burst out,
I fear we should have seen decipher'd there
More rancorous spite, more furious raging broils, ACT IV.—SCENE IV.

465

Than yet can be imagin'd or supposed. But howsoever, no simple man that sees This jarring discord of nobility, This swelling of each other in the court, This factious bandying of their favourites, But that it doth prestage some ill event. 'Tis much, when szepters are in children's hands: But more, when envy breeds unkind division; There comes the ruin, there begins confusion. [Exit.

SCENE 11.—France. Before Bourdeaux.

Enter Talbot, with his forces.

Tal. Go to the gates of Bourdeaux, trumpeter, Summon their general unto the wall.

Trumpet sounds a parley. Enter, on the walls, the General of the French Forces, and others.

English. John Talbot, captains, calls you forth, Servant in arms to harry king of England; And thus he would,—Open your city gates, Be humble to us; call my sovereign yours, And do him homage as obedient subjects, And I'll withdraw me and my bloody power: But, if you frown upon this proper d'peace, You tempt the fury of my three attendants, Lean and valiant, quartering steel, and burning fire; Who, in a moment, even with the earth Shall lay your stately and air-braving towers, If you forsake the offer of their love.

Gen. Thou ominous and fearful owl of death, Our nation's terror, and their bloody scourge! The period of thy tyranny approacheth. On thou my cornet, tell this to the death: For, I protest, we are well forti'd And strong enough to issue out and fight: If thou retire, the Dauphin, well appointed, Stands with the sores of war to tangle thee: On either hand thee there are squadrons pitch'd, To wall thee from the liberty of flight; And no way canst thou turn thee for redress, But death dost front thee with apparent spoil, And pale destruction meets thee in the face. Ten thousand French have ta'en the sacrament, To rive their dangerous artillery Upon no Christian soul but English Talbot. Lo! there thou stand'st, a breathing valiant man, Lean from thy burden, and thy nimble spirit: This is the latest glory of thy prince, That I, thy enemy, due withal; For ere the glass, that now begins to run, Finish the process of his sandy hour, These eyes, that see thee now well coloured, Shall see thee wither'd, bloody, pale, and dead.

[Drum short off. Hark! hark! the Dauphin's drum, a warbling bell, Sings heavy music to thy timorous soul; And mine may ring thy dire departure out. [Exeunt General, &c. from the walls.

Tal. He fables but, I hear the enemy:—Out, some light horsemen, and pursue their wings:—O, o'erignit and heedless discipline! How are we park'd, and bounded in a pale: A little herd of England's timorous deer, Muz'd with a yelping kennel of French curs! If we be English deer, be then in blood: Not rascal like, to fall down with a pinch: But rather moody-nad, and desperate stags, Turn on the bloody hounds with heads of steel, And make the cowards stand aloof at bay: Sell every man his life as dear as mine, And they shall find dear deers of us, my friends.—

God, and Saint George! Talbot, and England's right! Prosper our colours in this dangerous fight! [Exeunt.

SCENE III.—Plains in Gascony.

Enter York, with Forces; to him a Messenger.

Yor. Are not the speedy scouts return'd again, That dogg'd the mighty army of the Dauphin? Mes. They are return'd my lord: and give it out, That he is march'd to Bourdeaux with his power, To fight with Talbot: As he march'd along, By your reports were discovered Two mightier troops than that the Dauphin led; Which join'd with him, and made their march for Bourdeaux.

York. A plague upon that villain Somerset; That thus delays my promised supply Of horsemen, that were leveld for this siege! Renowned Talbot doth expect my aid; And I am forced by a lowd command To stand my ground in Talbot's place: So should we save a valiant gentleman, By forreiting a traitor and a coward. Mad ire, and wrathful fury, makes me weep, That thus we die, while remiss traitors sleep.

Lucy. O, send some succour to the distress'd lord! York. He dies, we lose; I break my warlike word; We mourn. France smiles; we lose, they daily get; All long of this vile traitor Somerset.

Lucy. Then, God take mercy on brave Talbot's soul! And on his son, young John; whom, two hours since, I met in travel toward his warlike father! This seven years did not Talbot see his son: And now they meet where both their lives are done. Where's Talbot? what joy shall noble Talbot have, To bid his young son welcome to his grave? Away! vexation almost stops my breath. That sunder'd friends greet in the hour of death.— Lucy, farewell; no more my fortune can, But curse the cause I cannot aid the man. Maine, Ibics, Poitiers, and Tours, are won away, Long all of Somerset, and his delay. [Exit. Lucy. Thus while the vaults of sedition Feeds in the bosom of such great commanders, Sleeping neglect doth betray to loss The conquest of our scarce-cold conqueror, That ever-living man of memory, Henry the fifth:—Whiles they each other cross, Lives, honours, lands, and all, hurry to loss. [Exit.

SCENE IV.—Other Plains of Gascony.

Enter Somerset, with his Forces; an Officer of Talbot's with him.

Som. It is too late; I cannot send them now. This expedition was by York, and Talbot, Too rashly plotted; all our general force Might with a sally of the very town Be buckled with: the over-daring Talbot...
Hath sullied all his gloss of former honour,
By this unheedful, desperate, wild adventure:
York set him on to fight, and die in shame,
That, Talbot dead, great York might bear the name.
Oft. Here is sir William Lucy, who with me
Set from our o'er-match'd forces forth for aid.

Enter Sir William Lucy.

Som. How now, sir William? whither were you sent?
Luc. Whither, my lord? from bought and sold lord
Who, ring'd about with bold adversity,
Cries out for noble York and Somerset;
To beat assailing death from his weak legions,
And whilsts the honourable captain there
Drops bloody sweat from his war-weary limbs,
And, in advantage hing'ring, looks for rescue,
You, his false hopes, the trust of England's honour,
Keep off about with worthless emulation.
Let not your private discord keep away
The levied succours that should lend him aid,
Whiles he, renowned noble gentleman,
Yields up his life unto a world of odds:
Orleans the Bastard, Charles, and Burgundy,
Alençon, Reignier, compass him about,
And Talbot perisheth by your default. [aid.

Som. York set him on, York should have sent him
Lucy. And York as fast upon your grace exclaims;
Swareing that you would help his levied host;
Collected for this expedition.

Som. York lies; he might have sent and had the
I-love him little duty, and less love; [horse
And take foul scorn, to lawn on him by sending.

Luc. The fraud of England, not the force of France,
Hath now entrapp'd the noble-minded Talbot:
Never to England shall he bear his head;
But dies, betray'd to fortune by your strife.

Som. Come, go; I will despatch the horsemen straight:
Within six hours they will be at his aid.

Lucy. Too late comes rescue: heis ta'en, or slain:
For fly he could not, if he would have fled;
And fly would Talbot never, though he might.

Som. He will not die, brave Talbot then ha'ie!
Lucy. His fame lives in the world, his shame in you.

[Exeunt.

SCENE V.—The English Camp near Bourdeaux.
Enter Talbot and Jones his son.

Tal. O young John Talbot! I did send for thee,
To tutor thee in stratagems of war;
That Talbot's name might be in thee reviv'd,
When sapless age, and weak unable limbs,
Should bring thy father to his drooping chair.
But,—O malignant and ill-boding stars! —
Now thou art come unto a feast of death,
A terrible and unavowed danger!
Therefore, dear boy, trust not on thy swiftest horse;
And I'll direct thee how thou shalt escape
By sudden flight: come, daily not, begone.

John. Is my name Talbot? and am I your son?
And shall I fly? O, if you love my mother,
Dishonour not her honourable name,
To make a bastard, and a slave of me:
The world will say,—He is not Talbot's blood,
That basely fled, when noble Talbot stood.

Tal. Fly, to revenge my death, if I be slain.

John. He, that flies so, will never return again.

Tal. If we both stay, we both are sure to die.

John. Then let me stay; and, father, do you fly:
Your loss is great, so your regard should be;
My worth unknown, no loss is known in me.

Upon my death the French can little boast;
In yours they will, in you all hopes are lost.
Flight cannot stain the honour you have won;
But mine it will, that no exploit have done:
You fled for vantage, every one will swear.
But, if I bow, they'll say—it was for fear.
There is no hope that ever I will stay,
If, the first hour, I shrink, and run away.
Here, on my knee, I beg mortality,
Rather than life preserve' d with infamy.

Tal. Shall all thy mother's hopes lie in one tomb?
John, I'll rather on my mother's bier.

Tal. Upon my blessing I command thee go.
John, To fight I will, but not to fly the foe.

Tal. Part of thy father may be sav'd in thee.

John. No part of him, but will be shame in me.

Tal. Thou never hast renown, or canst not lose it.
John. Yes, your renowned name; Shall flight abuse [stain.

Tal. Thy father's charge shall clear thee from that John. You cannot witness for me, being slain.

If death be so apparent, then both fly.

Tal. And leave my followers here, to fight and die?
My age was never tainted with such shame.

John. And shall my youth be guilty of such blame?

Tal. No more can I be sev'red from your side,
Though your-elf yourself in twain divide:
Stay, go, do what you will, the like do I;
For live I will not, if my father die.

Tal. Then here I take my leave of thee, fair son,
Borne to eclipse thy life this afternoon.
Come, side by side together live and die;
And soul with soul from France to heaven fly. [Ex.

SCENE VI.—A Field of Battle.

Alarum: Excursions, wherein Talbot's Son is haem'd about, and Talbot rescues him.

Tal. Saint George and victory! fight, soldiers, fight!
The regent hath with Talbot broke his word,
And left us to the rage of France his sword.

When is John Talbot —pause, and take thy breath —
I gave thee life, and rescu'd thee from death.

John. O twice my father! twice am I thy son.
The life, thou gav'st me first, was lost and done,
Till with thy warlike sword, despite of fate,
To my determined time thou gav'st new date.

Tal. When from the Dauphin's crest thy sword struck
It warmed the father's heart with proud desire [fire,
Of bold-fac'd victory. Then leaden age,
Quicken'd with youthful spleen, and warlike rage,
Beat down Alençon, Orleans, Burgundy,
And from the pride of Galia rescu'd thee.
The redful bastard Orleans—that drew blood
From thee, my boy; and had the maidenhood
Of thy first fight—I soon encountered;
And, interchanging blows, I quickly shed
Some of his bastard blood; and, in disgrace,
Bespoke him thus: Contaminated, base,
And misbegotten blood I spill of thine,
Meas and right poor; for that pure blood of mine,
Which thou didst force from Talbot, my brave boy: —
Here, purposing the Bastard to destroy,
Came to the front with proud desire — fire,
And the father's care;
Art not thou weary, John? How didst thou fare?
Wilt thou yet leave the battle, boy, and fly,
Now thou art seal'd the son of chivalry!
Fly, to revenge my death, when I am dead;
The help of one stands me in little stead.
O, too much folly is it, well I wot.
To hazard all our lives in one small boat.
If I to-day die not with Frenchmen's rage.
ACT V.—SCENE I.

To-morrow I shall die with mickle age:- By me they nothing gain, as I'll stay, But the short and end of one day:— In thee my mother dies, our household's name, My death's revenge, thy youth, and England's fame; All these, and more, we hazard by thy stay; All these are sav'd, if thou wilt fly away. John. The sword of Orleans hath not made me smart, These words of yours draw loud from my heart: On that advantage, bought with such a shame, (To save a paltry life, and slay bright fame,) Before young Talbot from old Talbot fly, The coward horse, that bears me, fall and die! And like me to the peasant boys of France; To be shame's scorn, and subject of mischance! Surely, by all the glory you have won, An I live, I am not Talbot's son: Then talk no more of flight, it is no boot; If son to Talbot, die at Talbot's foot. Taf. Then follow thou thy desperate sire of Crete, Thou earus: thy life to me is sweet: If thou wilt fight, fight by thy father's side: And, commendable prov'd, let's ride in pride. [Exeunt.

SCENE VII.—Another part of the same.

Alarum: Excursions. Enter Talbot wounded, supported by a Servant.

Taf. Where is my other life?—mine own is gone;— O, where's young Talbot? where is valiant John?— Triumphant death, smeard' with captivity! Young Talbot's valour makes me smile at thee:— When he perceived me, shrink, and on my knee, His bloody sword he brandish'd over me, And, like a hungry lion, did commence Though deeds of rage, and stern impatience; But when my angry guardian stood aloof, Teasing my ruin, and assailing of none, Dizzy-ey'd fury, and great rage of heart, Suddenly made him from my side to start Into the cluss'ring battle of the French: And in that sea of blood my boy did drench His overmounting spirit; and there died My Icarus, my blosson, in his pride. Enter Soldiers, bearing the body of John Talbot.

Serv. O my dear lord! lo, where your son is borne! Taf. Thou antick death, which laugh'st us here to Anon, from thy insulting tyranny. [sco[rned, Coupled in bonds of perpetuity, Two Talbots, winged through the lifier sky, In thy despite, shall 'scape mortality.— O then whose wounds become hard-favoured death, Speak to thy father, ere thou yield thy breath: Have death by speaking, whether he will, or no; Imagine him a Frenchman, and thy foe.— Poor boy! he smiles, methinks; as who should say— Had death been French, then death had died to-day. Come, come, and lay him in his father's arms; My spirit can no longer bear these harms. Soldiers, adieu! I have what I would have, Now my old arms are young Talbot's grave. \[Diss.

Alarums: Excurgent Soldiers and Servant, leaving the two bodies. Enter CHARLES, ALExON, BURGESS, Bastard, La Pucelle, and Forces.

Char. Had York and Somerset brought rescue in, We should have found a bloody day of this. But how the young whelp of Talbot's, raging wood, Did flesh his piny sword in Frenchmen's blood! Pucr. Once I encounter'd him, and thus I said, Thou maistren youth, be sangu'nd by a maid:

But—with a proud, majestic high score,— He answered thus: Young Talbot was not born To be the pillion of a right gench: So rushing in the bowels of the French, He left me proudly, as unworthy fight.

Char. Doubtless, he would have made a noble knight: Sue, where he lies insur'd in the arms Of the most bloody butcher of his harms. But how them to press, hath the swords smothered Whose life was England's glory, Gallia's wonder. Char. O, no; forbear: for that which we have fled During the life, let us not wrong it dead.

Enter Sir William Lucy, attended; a French Herald preceding.

Lucy. Herald, Conduct me to the Dauphin's tent; to know Who hath obtain'd the glory of the day. Char. On what submissive message art thou sent! Lucy. Submission, Dauphin! 'tis a mere French We English warriors not what it means; [word; I come to know what prisoners thou hast ta'ne, And to survey the bodies of the dead. Char. For prisoners ask'st thou? bell our prison is, But tell me whom thou seek'st.

Lucy. Where is the great Alcides of the field, Valiant lord Talbot, earl of Shrewsbury? Created, for his rare success of arms, Great earl of Washford, Waterford, and Valence; Lord Talbot of Goodrig and Urrisfield; Lord Strange of Blackmore, lord Verdun of Alton, Lord Cromwellof Wingfield, lord Frawall of Shfield, The thrice victorious lord of Falconbridge; Knight of the noble order of Saint George, Worthy Saint Michael, and the golden fleece; Great marshall to Henry the sixth, Of all his wars within the realm of France? Pucr. Here is a silly stately style indeed! The Turk, that two and fifty kingdoms hath, Writes not so tedious a style as this.— Him, that thou magnifie'st with all these titles, Stinking, and fly-blow'n, lies here at our feet. Lucy. Is Talbot slain? the Frenchman's only scourge, Our kingdom's terribl' and black Nemesis? O, were these the boys who late turn'd, That I, in rage, might shoot them at your faces! O, that I could but call these dead to life! It were enough to fright the realm of France: Were but his picture left among you here, It would amaze the proudest of you all. Give me their bodies; that I may bear them hence, And give them burial as becometh their worth. Pucr. I think, this upstart is old Talbot's ghost, He speaks with such a proud commanding spirit. For God's sake, let him have 'em; to keep them here, They would but stink, and putrefy the air. Char. Go, take their bodies hence. Lucy. I'll bear them hence But from their ashes shall be rear'd A phoenix that shall make all France afeard. Char. So we be rid of them, do with them what thou And now to Paris, in this conquering vein; [wilt. All will be ours, now bloody Talbot's slain. [Exeunt.

ACT V.

Enter KINg HENRY, Gloster, and Exeter.

K. Hen. Have you perus'd the letters from the pope The emperor, and the earl of Armagnac?

2 G 2
KING HENRY VI.—PART I.

Glo. I have, my lord, and their intents is this,—
They humbly sue unto your excellency,
To have a godly peace concluded of,
Between the realms of England and of France.

K. Hen. How doth your grace affect their motion? Glo. Well, my good lord, and as the only means
To stop effusion of our Christian blood,
And establish quietness on every side.

K. Hen. Ay, marry, uncle; for I always thought,
It was both impious and unnatural
That such immanity and bloody strife
Should reign among professors of one faith.

Glo. Beside, my lord,—the sooner to effect,
And surer bind, this knot of anity,—
The earl of Armagnac—near knit to Charles,
A man of great authority in France,—
Prolfers his only daughter to your grace
In marriage, with a large and sumptuous dowry.

K. Hen. Marriage, uncle! alas! my years are young:
And fitter is my study and my books,
Than wanton dalliance with a paramour.

Yet, call the ambassadors; and, as you please,
So let them have their answers every one:
I shall be well content with any choice,
Tends to God's glory, and my country's weal.

Enter a Legate, and two Ambassadors, with Winch.

Thelmaster, in a Cardinal's habit.

Fac. What! is my lord of Winchester install'd,
And call'd unto a cardinal's degree?
Then, I perceive, that will be verified,
Henry the fifth did sometime prophecy.
If once he come to be a cardinal,
He'll make his cap co-equal with the crown.

K. Hen. My lords ambassadors, your several suits have been consider'd and debated on.
Your purpose is both good and reasonable:
And, therefore, we are certainly resolv'd
To draw conditions of a friendly peace.
Which, by my lord of Winchester may mean
Shall be transmit't presently to France.
Glo. And for the prof'er of my lord your master,—
I have inform'd his highness so at large,
As—liking of the lady's virtuous gifts,
Her beauty, and the value of her dow'r.—
He doth intend she shall be England's queen.

K. Hen. In argument and proof of which contrâxt,
Besides her this p'ny, [fie! from the Ashes of my age,
And so, my lord protector, see them guarded, [t'ion.
And safely brought to Dover; where, inshipp'd,
Commit them to the fortune of the sea

Win. Stay, my lord legate; you shall first receive
The sum of money, which I promised
Should be deliver'd to his holiness.
For bringing me in these grave negotiations.
Leg. I will attend upon your lordship's leisure.
Win. Now, Winchester will not submit, I trow,
Or be inferior to the proudest peer.
Humphrey of Gloster, thou shalt well perceive,
That, neither in birth, or for authority,
The bishop will be overborne by thee:
I'll either make thee steep, and bend thy knee,
Or sack this country with a mutiny. [Exeunt.

SCENE II.—France. Plain in Aunay.

Enter Charles, Burgundy, Alençon, La Pucelle, and Forces, marching.

Char. These news, my lords, may cheer our drooping
Tis said, the stout Parisians do revolt. [Spirits:
And turn again unto the warlike French.

Alen. Then march to Paris, royal Charles of France,
And keep not lock your powers in dailiness.
Puc. Peace be amongst them, if they turn to us;
Else, ruin combat with their palaces!

Enter a Messenger.

Mess. Successe unto our valiant general,
And happinesse to his accomplices! [speak,
Char. What tidings send our scouts? I pr'ythee, Mess. The English army, that divided was
Into two parts, is now conjoin'd in one:
And means to give you battle presently.
Char. Somewhat too sudden, sir, the warning is;
But we will presently provide for them.
Bur. I trust, the ghost of Talbot is not there
Now he is gone, my lord, you need not fear.
Puc. Of all base passions, fear is most accurs'd:—
Command me conquer, Charles, it shall be thine;
Let Henry fret, and all the world repine.
Char. Then on, my lords; And France be fortunate!
[Exeunt.

SCENE III.—The same. Before Angiers.

Autors: Excursions. Enter La Pucelle.

Puc. The regent conquer, and the Frenchmen fly,—
Now help, ye charming spells, and peripats;
And ye that quench ambassadours' arks,
And give me signs of future accidents! [Thunder,
You speedy helpers, that are substitutes
Under the lordly monarch of the north,
Appear, and aid me in this enterprise!

Enter Fiends.

This speedy quick appearance urges proof
Of your accustom'd diligence to me.
Now, ye familiar spirits, that are cull'd
Out of the powerful regions under earth,
Help me this once, that France may get the field.
[They walk about, and speak not.
O, hold me not with silence over long!
Where I was wont to feel you with my blood,
I'll lap a member off, and give it you,
In earnest of a further benefit;
So you do condescend to help me now.—
[They hang their heads.
No hope to have redress?—My body shall Pay recompense, if you will grant my suit.
[They make their heads.
Cannot my body, nor blood-sacrifice,
Entreat to you your trusted furtherance?
Then take my soul; my body, soul, and all,
Before that England give the French the foil.
[They depart.

See! they forsake me. Now the time is come,
That France must vail her lofty-plumed crest,
And let her head fall into England's lap.
My ancient incantations are too weak,
And hilt too strong for me to buckle with:
Now, France, thy glory droopeth to the dust. [Exit.

Autors. Enter French and English, fighting. La Pucelle and Your fight hand to hand. La Pucelle is taken. The French fly.

York. Damne of France, I think, I have you fast;
Unchain your spirits now with spelling charms,
And try if they can gain your loycity.—
A goodly prize, fit for the devil's grace! See, how the ugly witch doth bend her brows,
As if, with Circe, she would change my shape.
Puc. Chang'd to a woman shape she can't not be;
York. O, Charles the Dauphin's a proper man;
No shape but his can please your dainty eye.
KING EDMUND VI.

BUFFOKE O fairest beauty, do not fear.
First Port. Act V. Sc. 3.
ACT V.—SCENE III.

Puc. A plaguing mischief light on Charles, and thee! And may ye both be suddenly surpris'd By bloody hands, in sleeping on your beds! [tongue. York. Fell, banning lies! enchantress, hold thy Puc. I pray thee, give me leave to curse a while. York. Curse, miscreant, whate' eon comes to the stake. [Exit. LADY MARGARET, the French King, and others. Enter Suffolk, leading in Lady Margaret. Suf. Be what thou wilt, thou art my prisoner. [Aside. O fairest beauty, do not fear, nor fly; For I will touch thee but with reverent hands, And lay them gently on thy tender side. I kiss these fingers [kissing her hand.] for eternal peace: Who art thou, say? that, I may know thee. Mar. Margaret is my name; and daughter to a king. The king of Naples, whose' er thou art. Suf. An earl I am, and Suffolk am I call'd. Be not offended, nature's miracle, Thou art allotted to be ta'en by me: So doth the swan her downy cygnets save, Keeping them prisoners underneath her wings. Yet if this servile usage once offend, Go, and be free again, as soon as say. [She turns away as going. O, stay!—I have no power to let her pass; My hand would free her, but my heart says—no. As plays the sun upon the glassy streams, Twinkling another counterfeited beam, So seems this gorgeous beauty to mine eyes. Fair maid, wilt thou woo me? I dare not speak: I'll call for pen and ink, and write my mind: Fye, De Do Poole! disabled not thyself; Hast not a tongue? is she not here thy prisoner? Wilt thou be daunted at a woman's sight? Ay; beauty's princely majesty is such, Confounds the tongue, and makes the senses rough. Mar. Say, earl of Suffolk,—if thy name be so,— What ransom must I pay before I pass? For, I perceive, I am thy prisoner. Suf. How canst thou tell, she will deny thy suit. Before thou make a trial of her love? [Aside. Mar. Why speak' st thou not? what ransom must I pay? Suf. She's beautiful; and therefore to be wond.
She is a woman; therefore to be won. [Aside. Mar. Wilt thou accept of ransom, yea, or no? Suf. Fond man! remember, that thou hast a wife; Then how can Margaret be thy paramour? [Aside. Mar. I were best leave him, for he will not hear. Suf. There all is marr'd; there lies a cooling card. Mar. He talks at random; sure the man is mad. And yet a dispensation may be had. Mar. And yet I would that you would answer me. Suf. I'll win this lady Margaret. For whom? Why, for my king: Tush! that's a wooden thing Mar. He talks of wood: it is some carpenter. Suf. Yet so my fancy may be satisfied. Mar. Peace establish'd between these realms. But there remains a scruple in that too: For though her father be the king of Naples, Duke of Anjou and Maine, yet is he poor, And our nobility will scorn the match. [Aside. Mar. Hear ye, captain? Are you not at leisure? Suf. It shall be so, disdain they never so much; Henry is lawful, if our grace shall yield. Madam, I have a secret to reveal. [Knight. Mar. What though I be enthralled? he seems a And will not any way dishonour me. [Aside. Suf. Lady, vouchsafe to listen what I say. Mar. Perhaps, I shall be rescu'd by the French; And then I need not crave his courtesy. [Aside. Suf. Sweet madam, give me hearing in a cause. Mar. Tush! women have been captivate ever now. [Aside. Suf. Lady, wherefore talk you so? Mar. I cry you mercy, 'tis but quiet for quo. Suf. Say, gentle princess, would you not suppose Your bondage happy, to be made a queen? Mar. To be a queen in bondage, is more vile, Than is a slave in base servility; For princes should be free. And so shall you, If happy England's royal king be free. Mar. Why, what concerns his freedom unto me? Suf. I'll undertake to make thee Henry's queen; To put a golden scepter in thy hand, And set a precious crown upon thy head, If thou wilt condescend to be— What? Mar. His love. Suf. I am unworthy to be Henry's wife. Suf. No, gentle madam; I unworthy am To woo so fair a dame to be his wife, And have no parton in the choice myself. How say thou, madam? are you not content? Mar. An if my father please, I am content. Suf. Then call our captains, and our colours forth: And, madam, at your father's castle walls We'll crave a parley, to confer with him. [Troops come forward. A PARLEY sounded. Enter REIGNIER, on the walls. Suf. See, Reignier, see, thy daughter prisoner Reig. To whom? To me. Mar. Suffolk, what remedy? I am a soldier: and unapt to weep, Or to exclaim on fortune's fickleness. Suf. Yes, there is remedy enough, my lord: Consent, (and, for thy honour give consent,) Thy daughter shall be wedded to my king: Whom I with pain have woo'd and won thereto; And this her easy-held imprisonment Hath gain'd thy daughter princely liberty. Reig. Speaks Suffolk as he thinks. Suf. That Suffolk doth not flatter, face, or feign. Reig. Upon thy princely warrant, I descend, To give thee answer to thy just demand. [Exit, from the walls. Suf. And here I will expect thy coming.
Trumpets sounded. Enter REIGNIER, below. Reig. Welcome, brave earl, into our territories; Command in Anjou what your honour please. Suf. Thanks, Reignier, happy for so sweet a child, Fit to be made companion with a king: What answer makes your grace unto my suit? Reig. Since thou dost design to woo her little worth To be the princely bird of such a lord; Upon condition I may quietly Enjoy mine own, the county Maine, and Anjou, Free from oppression, or the stroke of war, My daughter shall be Henry's, if he please. Suf. That is her ransome, I deliver her; And those two counties, I will undertake, To be the princely bird of such a lord; Reig. And I again,—in Henry's royal name, As deputy unto that gracious king, Give thee her hand, for sign of plight'd faith. Suf. Reignier of France, I give thee kingly thanks, Because this is in traffic of a king:
KING HENRY VI.—PART I.

And yet, methinks, I could be well content
To be mine own attorney in this case. [Aside.]
I'll over then to England with this news,
And make this marriage to solemnize 'd;
So, farewell, Reignier! Set this diamond safe
In golden palaces, as it becomes.
Reign. I do embrace thee, as I would embrace
The Christian prince, king Henry, were he here.
Mar. Farewell, my lord! Good wishes, praise, and Shall Suffolk ever have of Margaret. [Going.

Suf. Farewell, sweet madam! But hark you, Mar.
No princely commendations to my king? [garet;
Mar. Such commendations as become a mad
Virgin, and his servant, say to him.
Suf. Words sweetly plac'd, and modestly directed.
But, madam, I must trouble you again,—
No loving token to his majesty?
Mar. Yes, my good lord; a pure unspotted heart.
Never yet taint with love, I send the king.
Suf. And this withal. [Kisses her.
Mar. That for thyself; I will not so presume,
To send such peevish tokens to a king.
[Exit Reignier and Margaret.
Suf. O, what thought thou of thyself?—But, Suffolk, stay:
Thou mayst not wander in that labyrinth;
There Minotaurs, and ugly treasons, lurk.
Solicit Henry with her wond'rous praise.
Bethink thee on her virtues that surmount;
Mad, natural graces that extinguish art;
Repeat their semblance often on the seas.
That, when thou com'st to kneel at Henry's feet,
Thou mayst bereave him of his wits with wonder. [Exit.}

Enter York, Warwick, and others.
York. Bring forth that sorceress, condemn'd to burn.

Enter La Pucelle, guarded, and a Shepherd.
Shep. Ah, Joan! this kills thy father's heart out—
Have I sought every country far and near, [right!
And, now it is my chance to find thee out,
Must I behold thy timeless cruel death?
Ah, Joan, sweet daughter Joan, I'll die with thee! [Puc. Decrepit miser! base ignoble wretch!
I am descended of a gentler blood;
I have no fathers, nor any to inherit.
Shep. Out, out!—My lords, an please you, 'tis not
I did beget her, all the parish knows:
Her mother liveth yet, can testify
She was the first fruit of my bachelorship.
War. Graceless! wilt thou deny thy parentage?
York. This argues what her kind of life hath been;
Wicked and vile; and so her death concludes.
Shep. Fye, Joan! that thou wilt be so obstacle!
God knows, thou art a collop of my flesh;
And for thy sake have I shed many a tear:
Deny me not, I pray thee, gentle Joan.
Puc. Peasant, avanti!—You have suborn'd this
Of purpose to obscure my noble birth. [man,
Shep. 'Tis true, I gave a noble to the priest,
There were so many, whom she seduced to her mother.—
Kneel down and take my blessing, good my girl.
Wilt thou not stoup? Now cursed be the times
Of thy nativity! I would, the milk
Thy mother gave thee, when thou suck'dst her breast,
Had been a little ratsbane for thy sake!
Or else, when thou didst keep my lambs a-field,
I was some ravenous wolf had eaten thee!
Dost thou deny thy father, cursed drab?
O, burn her, burn her; hanging is too good. [Exit.
York. Take her away; for she hath liv'd too long
To fill the world with vicious qualities.
Puc. First, let me tell you whom you have con-
Not me begotten of a shepherd swain, [denn'd;
But issu'd from the progeny of kings;
Virtuous, and holy; chosen from above,
By inspiration of celestial grace,
To work exceeding miracles on earth.
I never had to do with wicked spirits;
Her sons—that are polluted with your lusts,
Stain'd with the guiltless blood of innocents,
Corrupt and tainted with a thousand vices,—
Because you want the grace that others have,
You judge it straight a thing impossible
To compass wonders, but by help of devils.
No, misconceiv'd! Joan of Arc hath been
A virgin from her tender infancy.
Chaste and immaculate in very thought;
Whose maiden blood, thus rigorously effus'd,
Will cry for vengeance at the gates of heaven.
York. Ay, ay;—away with her to execution. [War.
War. And hark ye, sirs; because she is a maid,
Spare for no fagots, let there be enough;
Place barrels of pitch upon the fatal stake,
That thou mayst not wander in thine short life.

Puc. Will nothing turn your unrelenting hearts?—
Then, Joan, discover thine infirmity;
That warranteth by law to be thy privilege.
I am with child, ye bloody homicides.
Murder not then the fruit within my womb,
Although ye hate me to a violent death.
York. Now heaven forfend! the holy maid with child?
It was Adam and Eve that enjoyed my love.
York. Alençon! that notorious Machiavel!
It dies, as if it had a thousand lives.
Puc. O, give me leave, I have desired you;
Twas neither Charles, nor yet the duke I nam'd,
But Reignier, king of Naples, that prevail'd.
War. A married man! that's most intolerable.
York. Why, here's a girl! I think, she knows not well,
There were so many, whom she seduced,
War. It's sign, she hath been liberal and free.
York. And, yet, forsooth, she is a virgin pure,—
Strumpet, thy words condemn thy brat, and thee:
Use no entreaty, for it is vain.
Puc. Then lead me hence;—with whom I leave my
May never glorious sun reflect his beams [curse:
Upon the company where you make abode;
But darkness and the gloomy shade of death
Environ you; till mischief, and despair,
Drive you to break your necks, or hang yourselves!
[Exit guarded.
York. Break thou in pieces, and consume to ashes,
Thou foul accursed minister of hell!

Enter Cardinal Beaufort, attended.
Cor. Lord regent, I do great your excellence
With letters of commission from the king.
For know, my lords, of the state of Christendom,
Moy'd with remorse of these outrageous broils,
Have earnestly implored a general peace
Betwixt our nation and the aspiring French;
And to have band the Sicilian and his train,
Approached to confer about some matter.
York. Is all our travail turn'd to this effect?
After the slaughter of so many peers,
So many captains, gentlemen, and soldiers,
That in this quarrel half the realm is overthrown,
And sold their bodies for their country's benefit,
Shall we at last conclude effeminate peace?
Have we not lost most part of all the towns,
By treason, falsehood, and by treachery.
Our great progenitors had conquer'd?
O, Warwick, Warwick! I foresee with grief
The utter loss of all the realm of France.
War. Be patient, York: if we conclude a peace,
It shall be with such strict and severe covenants
As little shall the Frenchmen gain thereby.

Enter Charles, attended: ALENCON, BASTARD, REIGNIER, and others.

Char. Since, lords of England, it is thus agreed,
That peacefull truce shall be proclaimed in France,
We come to be informed by yourselves
What the conditions of that league must be.
York. Speak, Winchester; for boiling choler choked
The hollow passage of my poison'd voice,
By sight of these our baseless enemies.
War. Count Charles, and all your family, discover'd thus:
That—in regard King Henry gives consent,
Of more compassion, and of lenity,
To ease your country of distressful war,
And suffer you to breathe in fruitful peace,—
You shall become true hegenmen to his crown:
And, Charles, upon condition thou wilt swear
To pay him tribute, and submit thyself,
Thou shalt be plac'd as viceroys under him,
And still enjoy thy regal dignity.

Alen. Must he then be as shadow of himself?
Adorn his temples with a coronet;
And yet, in substance and authority,
Retain but privilege of a private man?
This offer is absurd and reasonless.

Char. 'Tis known, already, that I am posses'd
With more than half the Galian territories,
And therein reverence'd for their lawful king:
Shall I, for lucre of the rest unvanquish'd,
Detract so much from that prerogative,
As to be call'd but victor of the whole?
Alas! the while I do not keep
That which I have, than, coveting more,
Be cast from possibility of all.

York. Insulting Charles! hast thou by secret means
Used intercession to obtain a league;
And, now the matter grows to compromise,
Stands'thou alreadv upon comparison?
Either accept the title thou usurp'st,
Of benefit proceeding from our king,
And not of any challenge of desert,
Or we will plight thee with incessant war.

Reign. My lord, you do not well in obstinacy
To cavil in the course of this contract:
If once it be neglected, ten to one,
We shall not find like opportunity.

Alen. To say the truth, it is your policy,
To save your subjects from such massacre,
And ruthless slaughters, as are daily seen
By our proceeding in hostility:
And therefore take this compact of a truce,
Although you break it when your pleasure serves.

War. How say' st thou, Charles! shall our condition
Char. It shall:

[Stand! Only reserv'd, you claim no interest
In any of our towns of garrison.
York. Then swear allegiance to his majesty;
As thou art knight, never to disobey,
Nor be rebellions to the crown of England,
Thou, or thy nobles, to the crown of England—(Characters, and the rest, give tokens of jealousy.
So, now dismiss your array when ye please;
Hang up your ensigns, let your drums be still,
For here we entertain a solemn peace.

SCENE V.—London. A Room in the Palace.

Enter King Henry, in conference with Suffolk; Gloucester and Exeter following.

K. Hen. Your wondrous rare description, noble earl,
Of beauteous Margaret hath astonish'd me:
Her virtues, gracecd with external gifts,
Do breed love's settled passions in my heart:
And like as rigour in tempestuous gales
Provokes the mightiest hull against the tide;
So am I driven, by breath of her renown,
Either to suffer shipwreck, or arrive
Where I may have fruition of her love.

Suf. Tush! my good lord! this supernatural tale
Is but a preface of her worthy praise:
The chief perfections of that lovely dame,
(Had I such skill to invent them,) would
Would make a volume of enticing lines.
Abel to ravish any dull conceit.
And, which is more, she is not so divine,
So full replete with choice of all delights,
But, with as humble lowliness of mind,
She is content to be at your command;
Command, I shew, of virtuous chase and intents,
To love and honour Henry as her lord.

K. Hen. And otherwise will Henry ne'er presume.
Therefore, my lord protector, give consent,
That Margaret may be England's royal queen.

Glo. So should I give consent to flatter sin.
You know, my lord, your highness is bethroth'd
Unto another lady of esteem;
How shall we then dispense with that contract,
And not deface your honour with reproach?

Suf. As doth a ruler with unlawful oaths;
Or one, that, at a triumph having vow'd
To try his strength, forsaketh yet the lists
By reason of his adversary's odds;
A poor exclaiming daughter of the dust,
And therefore may be broke without offence.

Glo. Why, what, I pray, is Margaret more than that?
Her father is no better than an earl,
Although in glorious titles he excel.

Suf. Yes, my good lord, her father is a king,
The king of Naples, and Jerusalem;
And of such great authority in France,
As his alliance will confirm our peace,
And keep the Frenchmen in allegiance.

Glo. And so the earl of Armagnac may do,
Because he is near kinsman unto Charles.

Exe. Beside his wealth doth warrant liberal dower;
While Reigner sooner will receive, than give.

Suf. A dower, my lord! I disgrace not so your king,
That he should be so abject, base, and poor,
To choose for wealth, and not for perfect love.

Henry is able to enrich his queen,
And not to seek a queen to make him rich:
So worthless peasants bargain for their wives,
As market-men for oxen, sheep, or horse.
Marriage is a matter of more worth,
Than to be dealt in by attorneyship:
Not whom we will, but whom his grace affects,
Must he companion of his nuptial bed:
And therefore, lords, since he affects her most,
It most of these reasons bindeth us,
In our opinions she should be prefer'd.
KING HENRY VI.—PART I.

For what is wedlock forced, but a hell,
An age of discord and continual strife!
Whereas the contrary bringeth forth bliss,
And is a pattern of celestial peace.
Whom should we match, with Henry, being a king,
But Margaret, that is daughter to a king?
Her peerless feature, joined with her birth,
Approves her fit for none, but for a king:
Her valiant courage, and undaunted spirit,
(More than in women commonly is seen,)
Will answer our hope in issue of a king;
For Henry, son unto a conqueror,
Is likely to beget more conquerors,
If with a lady of so high resolve,
As is fair Margaret, he be link'd in love.
Then yield, my lords, and here conclude with me,
That Margaret shall be queen, and none but she.
K. Hen. Whether it be through force of your report,
My noble lord of Suffolk; or for that
My tender youth was never yet attaint
With any passion of inflaming love,
I cannot tell; but this, I am assurance'd,
I feel such sharp dissension in my breast,
Such fierce alarms both of hope and fear,
As I am sick with working of my thoughts.
Take, therefore, shipping; post, my lord, to France;
Agree to any covenants; and procure
That lady Margaret do yourselves to come
To cross the seas to England, and be crown'd
King Henry's faithful and anointed queen:
For your expenses and sufficient charge,
Among the people gather up a tenth.
Be gone, I say; for, till you do return,
I rest perplexed with a thousand cares.
And you, good uncle, banish all offence:
If you do censure me by what you were,
Not what you are, I know it will excuse
This sudden execution of my will.
And so conduct me, where from company,
I may resolve and ruminate my grief.
[Exit.
Glo. Ay, grief, I fear me, both at first and last.
[Exeunt Gloster and Exeter.
Suf. Thus Suffolk hath prevail'd: and thus he goes,
As did the youthful Paris once to Greece;
With hope to find the like event in love,
But prosper better than the Trojan did.
Margaret shall now be queen, and rule the king;
But I will rule both her, the king, and realm.
[Exit.

Of this play, whoever may have been the author, it is certain that it was once extremely popular. It is evidently alluded to by Nashe, in a tract entitled Piers Polyeclit's his Supplication, &c. 1592. Where he says, "How would it have moved brave
Talbot, the terror of the French, to think that after he had lain two hundred years in his tomb, he should triumph again on the stage, and have his bones new embalmed with leaves of ten thousand spectator at least, at several times, who, in the tragical triumph that presents his person, imagine they behold him fresh bleeding,"

SECOND PART OF
KING HENRY VI.

This play, which was first printed in its present form in the folio of 1623, was founded on the old play of Marlowe's, called The First Part of the Contention between the two famous houses of York and Lancaster. In what year this new piece was produced, it is perhaps, now impossible to be discovered. It was published in 1591; but Shakespeare is supposed to have modified and improved the rude sketch of his predecessor two or three years earlier.

Mr. Malone has been at the trouble of carefully comparing the play of Marlowe with the drama which Shakespeare formed out of it; and distinguishing by different marks the alterations made by our great poet.

The play opens with Henry's surmise, which was in the twenty-third year of his reign, A. D. 1443; and closes with the first battle fought at St. Alban's, and won by the York faction, in the three third year of his reign, A. D. 1455: so that it comprises the history and transactions of ten years.

ACT I.—SCENE I.

London. A Room of State in the Palace.

Flourish of trumpets: then hush. Enter, on one side, King Henry, Duke of Gloucester, Salisbury, Warwick, and Cardinal Beaufort; on the other, Queen Margaret, led in by Suffolk; York, Somerset, Buckingham, and others following.

Suf. As by your high imperial majesty I had in charge at my depart for France, as procurator to your excellence, to marry princess Margaret for your grace; so, in the famous ancient city, Tours,—in presence of the kings of these two Sicilies, the dukes of Orleans, Calabre, Brestagione, and Alencon, seven earls, twelve barons, twenty reverend bishops,—I have performed my task, and was espous'd: and humbly now upon my bended knee, in sight of England and her lordly peers, Delive up my title in the queen.

Glo. Brave peers of England, pillars of the state, To you duke Humphrey must unload his grief, Your grief, the common grief of all the land. What! did my brother Henry spend his youth, For God ! his love and people, in the wars? Did he so often lodge in open field, In winter's cold, and summer's parching heat, To conquer France, his true inheritance? And did my brother Bedford toll his wits, To keep by policy what Henry got? Have you yourselves, Somerset, Buckingham, Brave York; and faithful and victorious Warwick, Receive'd deep scars in France and Normandy? Or hath mine uncle Beaufort and myself, With all the learned council of the realm, Studied so long, sat in the council house, Early and late, debating to and fro How France and Frenchemen might be kept in awe? And hath his highness in his passion there— Which crown'd in Paris, in despite of foes— And shall these labours, and these honours, die? Shall Henry's conquest, Bedford's vigilance, Your deeds of war, and all our counsel, die? Or peers of England, shameful is this league! Fatal this marriage!—cancelling your fame: Plotting your names from books of memory; Razing the characters of your renown: Defacing monuments of conquer'd France; Undoing all, as all had never been!

Cur. Nephew, what means this passionate discourse? This peroration with such circumstance? For France, 'tis ours: and we will keep it still, Glo. Ay, uncle, we will keep it, if we can; But now it is an impossible thing. Suffolk, the new-made duke that rules the roost, Hath given the duties of Anjou and Maine Unto the poor king Reignier, whose large style Agrees not with the leanness of his purse.

Sal. Now, by the death of him that died for all, These counties were the keys of Normandy— But wherefore wears Warwick, my valiant son?

War. For grief, that they are past recovery: For were there hope to conquer them again, My sword should shed hot blood, mine eyes no tears. Anjou and Maine! myself did win them both; These provinces these arms of mine did conquer: And are the cities, that I got with wounds, Deliver'd again with peaceful words?

Mort. Die!

Glo. York. For Suffolk's duke—may he be sufforate, That dim's the honour of this warlike isle! France should have torn and rent my very heart, Before I would have yielded to this league. I never read but England's kings have had Large sums of gold, and down, with their wives: And our king Henry gives away his own, To match with her that brings no vantages.

Glo. A proper jest, and never heard before, That Suffolk should demand a whole fifteenth, For costs and charges in transporting her! She should have staid in France, and starv'd in France, Before ——
KING HENRY VI.—PART II.

Car. My lord of Gloster, now you grow too hot; It was the pleasure of my lord the king.
Glo. My lord of Winchester, I know your mind; 'Tis not my speeches that you do dislike, But 'tis my presence that doth trouble you. Rancour will out: Proud prelate, in thy face I see thy fury: If I longer stay, We shall begin our ancient buckering — Lordings, farewell; and say, when I am gone, I prophesied — France will be lost ere long. [Exit. Car. So, there goes our protector in a rage. 'Tis known to you, he is mine enemy: Nay, more, an enemy unto you all; And no great friend, I fear me, to the king. Consider, lords,—he is the next of blood, And hear apparent to the English crown; Had Henry got an empire by his marriage, And all the wealthy kingdoms of the west, There's reason he should be displeas'd at it. Look to it, lords; let not his smoothing words Betch your hearts; be wise, and circumspect. What though the common people favour him, Calling him—Humphrey, the good duke of Gloster; Clapping their hands, and crying with loud voice — Jesu maintain your royal excellence! Why is God's good duke Humphrey? I fear me, lords, for all this flattering gloss, He will be found a dangerous protector.

Buck. Why should he be then protect our sovereign, He being of age to govern of himself?— Cousin of Somerset, join you with me, And all together—with the duke of Suffolk,— We'll quickly noise duke Humphrey from his seat. Car. This weighty business will not brook delay; I'll to the duke of Suffolk presently. [Exit.

Som. Cousin of Buckingham, though Humphrey's And greatness of his place be grief to us, [pride, Yet let us watch the haughty cardinal; His insolence is more intolerable Than all the princes in the land beside: If Gloster be disposed, he'll be his protector.

Buck. Or then, or 1, Somerset, will be protector, Despight duke Humphrey, or the cardinal. [Exit BUCKINGHAM and SOMERSET.

Sal. Pride went before, ambition follows him. While these do labour for their own preferment, Behaves it us to labour for the realm I never saw but Humphrey duke of Gloster Did bear him like a noble gentleman, Oft have I seen the haughty cardinal— More like a soldier, than a man o' the church, As stout, and proud, as he were lord of all,— Swear like a ruffian, and demean himself Unlike the ruler of a common-wealth.— Warwick, my son, the comfort of my age! Their deeds, thy plainness, and thy housekeeping, Had won the greatest favour of the commons, Excepting none but good duke Humphrey.— And, brother York, thy acts in Ireland, In bringing them to civil discipline; Thy late exploits, done in the heart of France, When thou wert yet repeat for our sovereign, Have made thee fear'd, and honour'd, of the people.— Join the two, the public good doth The public good? In what we can, to bride, and suppress The pride of Suffolk, and the cardinal, With Somerset's and Buckingham's ambition; And, as we may, cherish duke Humphrey's deeds, While they do lead the profit of the land. War. So God help Warwick, as he loves the land, And common profit of his country: York. And so says York, for he hath greatest cause.

Sal. Then let's make haste away, and look unto the main.

War. Up to the main! O father, Maine is lost; That Maine, which by main force Warwick did win, And would have kept, so long as breath did last: Main chance, father, you meant; but I mean Maine; Which I will win from France, or else be slain. [Exeunt WARRICK and SUFFOLK.

York. Anjou and Maine are given to the French; Paris is lost; the state of Normandy Stands on a tittle point, now they are gone; Suffolk concluded on the articles; The peers agreed; and Henry was well pleas'd, To change two dukedoms for a dukes' fair daughter. I cannot blame them all; What is't to them? Tis thine they give away, and not their own. Pirates may make cheap pennyworths of their pillow, And purchase friends, and give to cortezians, Still revelling, like lords, till all be gone: While as the silly owner of the goods Weeps over them, and wrings his hapless hands, And shakes his head, and trembling stands aloof, While all is shar'd, and all is borne away: Ready to starve, and dare not touch his own. So York must sit, and fret, and bite his tongue, While his good lands are beguiled and sold. Methinks, the realms of England, France, and Ireland, Bear that proportion to my flesh and blood, As did the fatal brand Althea burn'd, Unto the prince's heart of Calydon. Anjou and Maine, both given unto the French! Cold news for me; for I hail hope of France, Even as I have of fertile England's soil. Day will come, when York shall claim his own, And therefore I will take the Nevil's parts, And make a show of love to proud duke Humphrey, And, when I spy advantage, claim the crown, For that's the golden mark I seek to hit: Nor shall proud Lancaster usurp my right, Nor hold the sceptre in his childish fist, Whose church-like honours fit not for a crown. Then, York, be still awhile, till time do serve— Watch thou, and wake, when others be asleep, To pry into the secrets of the state; Till Henry, surfeiting in joys of love, With his new bride, and England's dear-bought queen, And Humphrey with the peers be fall'n at jars: They will in loose aloft the milk-white mant, Whose sweet smell the air shall be perfumed; And in my standard bear the arms of York, To grapple with the house of Lancaster; And, force perforce, I'll make him yield the crown, Whose bookish rule hath pull'd fair England down. [Exit.

SCENE II.
The same.—A Room in the Duke of Gloster's House.

Enter GLOSTER and the DUCHESS.

Duch. Why droops my lord, like over-ripepened corn, Hanging the head at Ceres' plentiful load? Why doth the great duke Humphrey knit his brows, As frowning at the favours of the world? Why are these eyes ever fixed to the milk-white mant, Gazing on that which seems to dim thy sight? What sect thou there? king Henry's diadem, Enchas'd with all the honours of the world? If so, gaze on, and grovel on thy face, Untily head be cure'd with the same. Put forth thy hand, reach at the glorious gold:— What, is't too short, then lengthen it with mine: And, having both together, hear'd it up,
ACT I.—SCENE III.

We'll both together lift our heads to heaven;
And never more abuse our sight so long,
As to vouchsafe one glance unto the ground.
Glo. O Neil, sweet Neil, if thou dost love thy lord,
Dish the canker of ambitious thoughts;
And may that thought, when I imagine ill
Against my king and nephew, virtuous Henry,
Be my last breathing in this mortal world!
My troublesome dream this night doth make me sad.
Duch. What dream'd my lord? tell me, and I'll requite it
With the sweet rehearsal of my morning's dream.
Glo. Methought, this staff, mine office-badge in court,
Was broke in twain; by whom, I have forgot,
But, as I think, it was by the cardinal;
And, on the pieces of the broken wand
Were plac'd the heads of Edmond duke of Somerset,
And William de la Poole first duke of Suffolk.
This was my dream; what it doth bode, God knows.
Duch. Tis, this was nothing but an argument,
That I did to screen the stink of Goldsmith's grove,
Shall lose his head for his presumption.
But list to me, my Humphrey, my sweet duke;
Methought, I sat in seat of majesty,
In the cathedral church of Westminster,
And in that chair where kings and queens are crown'd;
Where Henry, and dame Margaret, kneel'd to me,
And on my head did set the diadem.
Glo. Nay, Eleanor, then must I chide outright;
Presumptuous dame, ill-nurtur'd Eleanor!
Art thou not second woman in the realm;
And the protector's wife, belov'd of him?
Hast thou not worrily pleasure at command,
Above the reach or compass of thy thought?
And wilt thou still be hammering treachery,
To tumble dow thy husband, and thyself,
From top of honour to disgrace's feet?
Away from me, and let me hear no more.
Duch. What, what, my lord! are you so choleric
With Eleanor, for telling but her dream?
Next time, I'll keep my dreams unto myself,
And not be check'd.
Glo. Nay, be not angry, I am pleas'd again.
Enter a Messenger.

Mes. My lord protector, 'tis his highness' pleasure,
You do prepare to ride unto Saint Alban's,
Whereas the king and queen do mean to hawke.
Glo. I go.—Cone, Neil, thou wilt ride with us?
Duch. Yes, good my lord, I'll follow presently.

[Exit Gloster and Messenger.

Follow I must, I cannot go before,
While Gloster bears this base and humble mind.
Were I a man, a duke, and next of blood,
I would remove these tedious stumbling blocks,
And smooth my way upon their heelless necks:
And, being a woman, I will not be slack
To play my part in fortune's pageant.
Where are you there? Sir John! say, fear not, man,
We are alone; here's none but thee, and I.

Enter Hume.

Hume. Jesu preserve your royal majesty!
Duch. What say'st thou, majesty? I am but grace.
Hume. But, by the grace of God, and Hume's ad-your grace's title shall be multiplied.
[vice, Duch.
Duch. What say'st thou, man? hast thou as yet confron'd
With Margery Journaid, the cunning witch;
And Roger Holbroke, the conjurer?
And will they undertake to meet me? [highness
Hume. This they have promised, — to shew your
A spirit rais'd from depth of under ground,
That shall make answer to such questions,
As by your grace shall be propounded him.
Duch. It is enough; I'll think upon the questions:
When from Saint Alban's we do make return,
We'll see these things effected to the full.
Here, Hume, take this reward; make merry, man,
With thy confederates in this weighty case.

[Exit Duchess.

Hume. Hume must make merry with the duchess' gold;
Marry, and shall. But how now, sir John Hume?
Seal up your lips, and give no words but—mum!
The business asketh silent secrecy.
Dame Eleanor gives gold, to bring the witch;
Gold cannot come amiss, were she a devil.
Yet have I gold, flies from another coast:
I dare not say, from the rich cardinal,
And from the great and new-made duke of Suffolk;
Yet I do find it so: for, to be plain,
They, knowing dame Eleanor's aspiring humour,
Have hired no me under the duchess' grove,
And buzz these conjurations in her brain.
They say, A crafty knife does need no broker;
Yet am I Suffolk and the cardinal's broker.
Hume, if you take not heed, you shall go near
To call them both—a pair of crafty knives.
Well, so it stands; And thus, I fear at last,
Hume's knavery will be the duchess' wreck;
And her attain'ture will be Humphrey's fall:
Sort how it will, I shall have gold for all.
[Exit.

SCENE III.—The same. A Room in the Palace.

Enter Peter, and others, with petitions.

1 Pet. My masters, let's stand close; my lord protector will come this way by and by, and then we may deliver our supplications in the quill.

2 Pet. Marry, the Lord protect him, for he's a good man! Jesus bless him!

Enter Suffolk and Queen Margaret.

1 Pet. Here a comes, methinks, and the queen with him: 1 am the first, sure.

2 Pet. Come back fool! this is the duke of Suffolk, and not my lord protector.

Suf. How now, fellow! would'st any thing with me?

1 Pet. I pray, my lord, pardon me! I took ye for my lord protector.

Q. Mar. [Reading the superscription.] To my lord protector—are your supplications to his lordship? Let me see them: What is that thing?

1 Pet. Mine is, an't please your grace, against John Goodman, my lord cardinal's man, for keeping my house, and lands, and wife and all, from me.

Suf. Thy wife too? that is some wrong, indeed.—What's yours? — What's here! [Reads] Against the duke of Suffolk, for enclosing the commons of Melrose.—How's this? sir knave?

2 Pet. Alas, sir, I am but a poor petitioner of our whole township.

PETER. [Presenting his petition.] Against my master, Thomas Horner, for saying, that the duke of York was rightful heir to the crown.

Q. Mar. What say'st thou? Did the duke of York say, he was rightful heir to the crown?

Peter. That my master was? No, farsooth: my master said, That he was; and that the king was an usurper.

Suf. Who is there? [Enter Servants.]—Take this fellow in, and send for his master with a pursuivant presently: we'll hear more of your matter before the king.

KING HENRY VI. —PART II.

Q. Mar. And as for you, that love to be protected
Under the wings of our protector's grace,
Begin your suits anew, and sue to him.

[Exeunt Petitioners.]

Away, base cullions!—Suffolk, let them go.

All. Come, let's be gone.

Q. Mar. My lord of Suffolk, say, is this the guse
Is this the fashion in the court of England?
Is this the government of Britain's isle,
And this the royalty of Albion's king?
What, shall king Henry be a pupil still,
Under the surly Gloster's governance?
Am I a queen in title and in style,
And must be made a subject to a duke?
I tell thee, Poole, when in the city Tours
Thou ran'st a tilt in honour of my love,
And stoil'st away the ladies' hearts of France;
I thought king Henry had resembled thee,
In courage, courtship, and proportion;
But all his mind is bent to holiness,
To number Are-Maries on his beads:
His champions are—the prophets and apostles;
His weapons, holy saws of sacred writ;
His study is his tilt-yard, and his loves
Are brazen images of canon'd saints.
I would, the college of cardinals
Would choose him pope, and carry him to Rome,
And set the triple crown upon his head;
That were a state fit for his holiness.

Suf. Madam, be patient; as I was cause
Your highness came to England, so will I
In England work your grace's full content. [fort,
Q. Mar. Beside the haught protector, have we Beauty,
The impious churchman; Somerset, Buckingham,
And grumbling York; and not the least of these,
But can adorn more in England than the king.

Suf. And he of these, that can do most of all,
Cannot do more in England than the Nevils:
Salisbury, and Warwick, are no simple peers.
Q. Mar. Not all these lords do vex me half so much,
As that proud dame, the lord protector's wife.
She sweeps it through the court with troops of ladies,
More like an empress than Duke Humphrey's wife;
Stewards in court do take her for the queen;
She bears a duke's revenues on her back,
And in her heart she scorns our poverty;
Shall I not live to be aveng'd on her?
Contemptuous base-born callat she is,
She vaunted 'most her minions t'other day,
The very train of her worst wearing-gown
Was better worth than all my father's lands,
Till Suffolk gave two dukedoms for his daughter.

Suf. Madam, myself have lim'd a bush for her;
And plac'd a quire of such enticing birds,
That she will fight to listen to the lays,
And never mount to trouble you again.
So, let her rest: And, madam, list to me;
For I am bold to counsel you in this.
Although we fancy not the cardinal,
Yet must we join with him, and with the lords.
Till we have brought duke Humphrey in disgrace.
As for the duke of York,—this late complaint
Will make but little for his benefit:
So, one by one, we'll weep them all at last,
And you yourself shall steer the happy helm.

Enter King Henry, York, and Somerset, conversing with him; Duke and Duchess of Gloucester, Cardinal Beaufort, Buckingham, Salisbury, and Warwick.

K. Hen. Form my part, noble lords, I care not which;
Or Somerset, or York, all's one to me.

York. If York have ill demean'd himself in France,
Then let him be deny'd the regentship.

War. Whether your grace be worthy, yea, or no,
Dispute not that: York is the worthier.

Car. Ambitions Warwick, let thy better speak.
War. The cardinal's not my better in the field.
Buck. All in this presence are thy betters, Warwick.
War. Warwick may live to be the best of all.

Suf. If Somerset be unworthy of the place,
Let York be regent, I will yield to him.
War. Whether your grace be worthy, yea, or no,
Dispute not that: York is the worthier.
Car. Ambitions Warwick, let thy better speak.
War. The cardinal's not my better in the field.
Buck. All in this presence are thy betters, Warwick.
War. Warwick may live to be the best of all.
ACT I.—SCENE IV.

Master Hume, that you be by her aloft, while we be busy below; and so, I pray you, go in God's name, and leave us. [Exit Hume.] Mother Buckingham, be you prostrate, and kneel on the earth—John Southwell, read you; and let us to our work.

Enter Duchess, above.

Duch. Well said, my masters; and welcome all.
To this peer; the sooner the better.
Boling. Pity me, good lady; wilt heards know their delique, this; dark night, the silent of the night; times:
The time of night when Troy was set on fire;
The time when screech-owls cry, and ban dogs howl,
And spirits walk, and ghosts break up their graves,
That time best fits the work we have in hand.
Madam, sit you, and hear not; whom we raise,
We will make fast within a hallow'd verge.
[Here they perform the ceremonies appertaining, and make the circle; Bolingbroke, or Southwell, reads, Conjuro te, &c. It thunders and lightens terribly; then the Spirit riseth.]

Spir. Adsum.
M. Jard. Asmath.
By the eternal God, whose name and power
Then tremblest, and answer that I shall ask:
For, till you speak, thou shalt not pass from hence.
Spir. Ask what thou wilt: That I had said and done!
Boling. First, of the king. What shall of him become?
[Reading out of a paper.
Spir. The duke yet lives, that Henry shall depose;
But him unfold, and die a violent death?
[As the king's speech you all write the answer.
Boling. What fait awaits the duke of Suffolk?
Spir. By water shall he die, and take his end.
Boling. What shall befal the duke of Somerset?
Spir. Let him slum castles;
Safer shall he be upon the sandy plains,
Then where castles mounted stand.
Have done, for more I hardly can endure.
Boling. Descend to darkness, and the burning lake:
False send, avoid!
[Thunder and lightning. Spirit descends.

Enter York and Buckingham, hastily, with their Guards, and others.
York. Lay hands upon these traitors, and their trash.
Bekdame, I think, we watch'd you at an inch.—
What, madam, are you there? the king and common
Are deeply inducted for this piece of pains; [weal
My lord protector will, I doubt not,
See you well gendar'd for these good deserts.
Duch. Not half so bad as thine to England's king,
Injurious duke; that thence is where is no cause.
Buck. True, madam, none atall. What call you this thist [Shewing her the papers.
Away with them; let them be clapp'd up close,
And kepsunder:—You, madam, shall with us:—
Stafford, take her to thee—
[Exit Duchess from above.
We'll see your trinkets here all forth-coming.
All. Away! [Ex. Guards with Southwell, &c.
York. Lord Buckingham, methinks, you watch'd her
A pretty plot, well chosen to build upon; [well
Now, pray, my lord, let's see the devil's writ.
What have we here? the duke yet lives, that Henry shall depose;
But him sufficeth, and die a violent death.
Why, this is just.
Aia to, Eocida, Romanos siccores passa.
Well, to the rest:
Tell me, what fate awaits the duke of Suffolk?
By water shall he die, and take his end.—
KING HENRY VI.—PART II.

ACT II.

SCENE I.—Saint Alban’s.

Enter King Henry, Queen Margaret, Gloster, Cardinal, and Suffolk, with Falconers howling.

Q. Mar. Believe me, lords, for flying at the brook,
I saw not better sport these seven years’ day:
Yet, by your leave, the wind was very high:
And, ten to one, old Joan had not gone out.

K. Hen. But what a point, my lord, your falcon made,
And what a pitch she flew above the rest—
I know how God in all his creatures works!
Yea, man and birds, are fain of climbing high.

Suf. No marvel, as it like your majesty,
My lord protector’s hawks do tower so well;
They know, their master loves to be aloft,
And bears his thoughts above his falcon’s pitch.

Glo. My lord, ‘tis but a base ignoble mind
That mounts no higher than a bird can soar.

Car. I thought so much; he’d be above the clouds.

Glo. Ay, my lord cardinal; How think you by that?
Went it not good, your grace could fly to heaven?

K. Hen. The treasure of everlasting joy!

Car. Thy heaven is on earth; thine eyes and thoughts
Beat on a crown, the treasure of thy heart;

Fervent protector, dangerous peer,
That’s no less to the king and commonwealth!

Glo. What, cardinal, is thy priesthood grown potenter animis cælestibus inæ?
[rempitory?]

Chirchmen so hot! good uncle, hide such malice;
With such holiness can you do it?

Suf. No malice, sir; no more than well becomes Good a quarrel, and so bad a peer.

Car. As who, my lord?

Suf. Why, as you, my lord;

An’t like your lordly lord-protectorship.

Q. Mar. And thy ambition, Gloster.

K. Hen. I pray thee, peace, Good queen; and what not on these furious peers,
For blessed are the peacemakers on earth.

Car. Let me be blessed, for the peace I make,
Against this proud protector, with my sword!

Glo. ‘Faith, holy uncle, would I were come to that!
[Aside to the Cardinal.]

Car. Marry, when thou darest.

Glo. Make up no factious numbers for the matter,
In thine own person answer thy abuse.

Car. Ay, where thou dost at’t-pee; and if thou dost,
This evening, on the east side of the grove.

K. Hen. How now, my lords?

Car. Believe me, cousin Gloster,
Had not your man put up the fowl so soon,
We had more sport.—Come with thy two-hand sword.

Glo. True, uncle.

Car. Are you advis’d? —the east side of the grove?

Glo. Cardinal, I am with you.

K. Hen. Why, how now, uncle Gloster?

Glo. Talking of hawking; nothing else, my lord.—
Now, by God’s mother, priest, I’ll share your crown
Or all my fence shall fail.

Car. Mediocre teipsum;

Protector, see to’t well, protect yourself.

K. Hen. The winds grow high; so do your stomachs,
How irksome is this music to my heart?—
 Lords.
When such strings jat, what hope of harmony?
I pray, my lords, let me compound this strife.

Enter an Inhabitant of Saint Alban’s, crying, A Miracle.

Glo. What means this noise?

Car. What miracle dost thou proclaim?

Inhab. A miracle! a miracle!

Suf. Come to the king, and tell him what miracle.

Inhab. Forsooth, a blind man at Saint Alban’s shrine,
Within this half hour, hath receiv’d his sight;
A man, that never saw in his life before.

Suf. K. Hen. Now, God be prais’d! that to believing
Gives light in darkness, comfort in despair!

Enter the Mayor of Saint Alban’s and his brethren;

And Simpson, borne between two persons in a chair;

his wife and a great multitude following.

Car. Here come the townsmen on procession,
To present your highness with the man.

K. Hen. Great is his comfort in this earthly vale,
Although by his sight his sin be multiplied.

Glo. Stand by, my masters, bring him near the king,
His highness’ pleasure is to talk with him.

K. Hen. Good fellow, tell us here the circumstance,
That we for thee may glorify the Lord.

What hast thou been long blind, and now restor’d?

Simp. Born blind, an’t please your grace.

Wife. Ay, indeed, was he.

Suf. What woman is this?

Wife. His wife, an’t like your worship.

Glo. Hadst thou been his mother, thou couldst have Simp. A poor man’s child in the north, an’t like your grace.

K. Hen. Poor soul! God’s goodness hath been great
Let never day nor night unhallow’d pass,
To thee: But still remember what the Lord hath done.

Q. Mar. Tell me, good fellow, canst thou here by
Or of devotion, to this holy shrine? [chance.

Simp. God knows, of pure devotion: being call’d
A hundred times, and oftener, in my sleep
By good Saint Alban; who said,—Simper, come,
Come, offer at my shrine, and I will help thee.

Wife. Most true, forsooth; and many time and oft
Myself have heard a voice to call him so.

Car. What, art thou lame?

Simp. Ay, God Almighty help me! I can’t.

Wife. How long hast thou been blind?

Simp. O, born so, master.

Wife. A fall off of a tree.

Glo. A plum-tree, master.

Glo. How long hast thou been blind?—

Simp. O, born so, master.

Wife. How, and wouldst climb a tree?

Simp. But that in all my life, when I was a youth.

Wife. Too true; and boughthis climbing very dear.

Glo. Mass, thou lov’st plums well, that wouldst venture so.

Simp. Alas, good master, my wife desir’d some damo

And made me climb, with danger of my life.

Glo. A subtle knave! but yet it shall not serve.—

Let me see thine eyes:—wink now; now open them:—

In my opinion, yet thou see'st not well.

Simp. Yes, master, clear as day; I thank God, and Saint Alban.

Glo. Say'st thou me so? What colour is this cloak of?

Simp. Red, master, red as blood. [of?

Glo. Why, that's well said: what colour is my gown?

Simp. Black, forsooth; coal-black, as jet.

K. Hen. Why then, thou know'st what colour petis

Suf. And yet, I think, jet did he never see. [of?

Glo. But cloaks, and gowns, before this day a many.

If I, Never before this day, in all his life.

Glo. Tell me, sirrah, what's my name?

Simp. Alas, master, I know not.

Glo. What's his name?

Simp. I know not.

Glo. Nor his!

Simp. No, indeed, master.

Glo. What's thine own name?

Simp. Under Simpcox, an if it please you, master.

Glo. Then, Saunders, sit thou there, the lying'st knife

In Christendom. If thou hast been born blind,

Thou might'st as well have known our names, as thus

To name the several colours we do wear.

Sight may distinguish of colours; but suddenly

To nominate them is impossible.—

My lords, Saint Alban here hath done a miracle;

And would ye not think that cunning to be great,

That could restore this cripple to his legs again?

Simp. O, master, that you could!

Glo. My masters of Saint Alban's, have you not beadles in your town, and things called whips?

My lords, yes, my lord, if it please your grace.

Glo. Then send for one presently.

May. Sirrah, go fetch the beadle hitther straight.

[Exit an Attendant.

Glo. Now fetch me a stool lither by and by. [A stood brough out.] Now, sirrah, if you mean to save yourself from whipping, leap me over this stool, and run away.

Simp. Alas, master, I am not able to stand alone;

You go about to torture me in vain.

Re-enter Attendant, with the Beadle.

Glo. Well, sir, we must have you find your legs.

Surrah beadle, whip him till he leap over that same stool.

Bend. I will, my lord.—Come on, sirrah; off with your docket quickly.

Simp. Alas, master, what shall I do? I am not able to stand. [After the Beadle hath hit him once, he leaps over the stool, and runs away: and the people follow, andcry, A Miracle!

K. Hen. O God, see'st thou this, and hear'st so long?

Q. Mar. It made me laugh, to see the villain run.

Glo. Follow the knife; and take this drab away.

Wife. Alas, sir, we did it for pure need.

Glo. Let them be whipped through every market town, till they come to Berwick, whence they came.

[Exit Mayor, Beadle, Wife, &c.

Car. Duke Humphrey has done a miracle to-day.

Suf. True; made the lame to leap, and fly away.

Glo. But you have done more miracles than I; I

You made, in a day, my lord, whole towns to fly.

Enter Buckingham.

K. Hen. What tidings with our cousin Buckingham?

Buck. Such as my heart doth tremble to unfold.

A sort of naughty persons, lowly bent,—

Under the countenance and confidentiality

Of lady Eleanor, the protector's wife,

The ringleader and head of all this rout,—

Have practis'd dangerously against your state,

Dealing with witches, and with conjurers:

Whom we have apprehended in the fact;

Raising up wicked spirits from under ground,

Demanding of king Henry's life and death,

And other of your highness' privy council,

As more at large your grace shall understand.

Car. And so, my lord protector, by this means

Your lady is forthcoming yet at London.

This news, I think, hath turn'd your weapon's edge;

'Tis like, my lord, you will not keep your hear.

[Aside to Gloster.

Glo. Ambitious churchman, leaves to affect my heart!

Sorrow and grief have vanquish'd all my powers:

And, vanquish'd as I am, I yield to thee,

Or to the meanest groom. [ones;

K. Hen. O God, what mischief work the wicked

Heaping confusion on their own heads thereby!

Q. Mar. Gloster, see here the tainture of thy nest.

And, look'st thou thyself be faultless, thou wilt best.

Glo. Madam, for myself, to heaven I do appeal,

How I have lov'd my king, and commonweal;

And, for my wife, I know not how it stands;

Sorry am I to hear what I have heard;

Noble she is; but if she have forgot

Honour, and virtue, and converse'd with such

As, like to pitch, defile nobility,

I banish her my bed, and company;

And give her, as a prey, to law, and shame,

That hath dishonour'd Gloster's honest name.

K. Hen. Well, for this night, we will repose us here.

To-morrow, toward London, back again,

To look into this business thoroughly,

And call these foul offenders to their answers;

And poise the cause in justice' equal scales,

Whose beam stands sure, whose rightful cause prevails. [Flourish. Exit.

Enter York, Salisbury, and Warwick.

York. Now, my good lords of Salisbury and War-

Our simple supper ended, give me leave, [wick,

In this close walk, to satisfy myself,

In craving your opinion of my title,

Which is infallible, to England's crown.

Sal. My lord, I long to hear it at full.

War. Sweet York, begin: and if thy claim be good,

The Nevils are thy subjects to command.

York. Then thus—

Edward the Third, my lords, had seven sons :

The first, Edward the Black Prince, prince of Wales.

The second, William of Hasting; and the third,

Lionel, duke of Clarence; next to whom,

Was John of Gaunt, the duke of Lancaster:

The fifth, was Edmund Langley, duke of York:

The sixth, was Thomas of Woodstock, duke of Gloster;

William of Windsor was the seventh, and last.

Edward, the Black Prince, died before his father;

And left behind him Richard, his only son.

Who, after Edward the Third's death, reign'd as king;

Till Henry Bolingbroke, duke of Lancaster,

The eldest son and heir of John of Gaunt,

Crown'd by the name of Henry the Fourth,

Sits on the realm; deposed the rightful king;

Sent his poor queen to France, from whence she came,

And him to Pomfret; where, as all you know,

Harmless Richard was so traitorously;

War. Father, the duke hath told the truth;

Thus got the house of Lancaster the crown.
Draped of your honour in your life,
Shall, after three days' open penance done,
Live in your country here, in banishment,
With Sir John Stanley, in the isle of Man. [death
Due. Welcome is banishment, welcome were my Glo, Eleanor, the law, thou seest, had judged thee;
I cannot justify them the law condemns.—
[Exeunt the DUCHES, and the other prisoners guarded.
Mine eyes are full of tears, my heart of grief.
Ah, Humphrey, this dishonour in thine age
Will bring thy head with sorrow to the ground!—
I beseech your majesty, give me leave to go;
Some for solace, and mine age require it.
K. Hen. Stay, Humphrey; duke of Gloster: ere thou
Give up thy staff; Henry will to himself
[g'o, Protector be: and God shall be my hope,
My start, my grid, and lantern to my feet;
And go in peace, Humphrey: no less before,
Than when thou wert protector to thy king.
K. Hen. But I see no reason why a king of years
Should be to be protected like a child.—
God and king Henry govern England's helm:
Give up your staff, sir, and the king his realm.
Glo. My staff!—here, noble Henry, is my staff:
As willingly do I the same resign.
As ere thy father Henry made it mine;
And even as willingly at thy feet I leave it,
As others would ambitiously receive it.
Farwell, good king: when I am dead and gone,
May honourable peace attend thy throne! [Exit.
Q. Mar. Why now is Henry king, and Margaret queen,
And Humphrey, duke of Gloster, scarce himself,
That bears so shrewd a main; two pulls at once,—
His lady banish'd, and a limb lopp'd off;
This, that, and all the humours of the court,
Where it best fits to be, in Henry's hand.
Suf. Thus drops this lofty pine, and hangs his sprays;
Thus Eleanor's pride dies in her youngest days.
York. Lords, let him go,—Please it your majesty
This is the day appointed for the combat;
And ready are the appellant and defendant,
The armourer and his man, to enter the lists,
So please your highness to behold the fight.
Q. Mar. Ay, good my lord; for purposely therefore Left I the court, to see this quarrel tried.
K. Hen. O' God's name, see the lists and all things
Here let them end it, and God defend the right! [fit;
York. I never saw a fellow worse bested,
Or more afraid to fight, than is the appellant,
The servant of this armourer, my lord.
Enter, on one side, Hose'n and his neighbours, drinking to him so much that he is drunk; and he enters bearing his staff with a sand-bag fastened to it; a drum before him: at the other side, Peter, with a drum and a similar staff; accompanied by prentices drinking to him.
1 Neigh. Here, neighbour Horner, I drink to you in a cup of sack; and fear not, neighbour, you shall do well enough.
2 Neigh. And here, neighbour, here's a cup of chalice.
3 Neigh. And here's a pot of good double beer neighbour: drink, and fear not you may.
Hoc. Let it come, I trust, and I'll pledge you all
And a fig for Peter! 1 Pren. Here, Peter, I drink to thee; and be not afraid.
2 Pren. Be merry, Peter, and fear not thy master, fight for credit of the prentices.
Peter. I thank you all: drink, and pray for me, I pray you; for, I think, I have taken my last draught in this world.—Here, Robin, an if I die, I give thee my apron; and, Will, thou shalt have my hammer:—
and Peter Tom, take all the money that I have.—
O Lord, bless me, I pray God! for I am never able to deal with my master, he hath learnt so much fence already.

Sit. Come, leave your drinking, and fall to blows.

—Sirrah, what's thy name? Peter. Peter, forsooth.

—Thump! then see thou thump thy master well.

Hor. Masters, I am come hither, as it were, upon my man's instigation, to prove him a knave, and myself an honest man: and touching the duke of York, —will take my death, I never meant him any ill, nor the king, nor the queen: And therefore, Peter, have at thee with a downright blow, as Bevis of Southampton, fell upon Ascapart.

York. Despatch!—this knave's tongue begins to Sound trumpets, alarum to the combatants. [double.
[Alarum. They fight, and Peter strikes down his master.

Hor. Hold, Peter, hold! I confess, I confess treason.

[Dies. York. Take away his weapon: Fellow, thank God, and the good wine in thy master's way.

Peter. O God! have I overcome mine enemies in this presence? O Peter, thou hast prevailed in right!
K. Hen. Go, take hence that traitor from our sight:
For by his death, we do perceive his guilt: And God, in justice, hath reveal'd to us
The truth and innocence of this poor fellow,
Which he had thought to have murder'd wrongfully.—
Come, fellow, follow us for thy reward. [Exeunt.

SCENE IV.—The same. A Street.

—Enter Gloster and Servants, in mourning cloaks.

Glo. Thus, sometimes, hath the brightest day a
And, after summer, evermore succeeds [cloud;
Darren winter, with his wrathful nipping cold:
So cares and joys abounded, as seasons fleet.
Sirs, what's o'clock?

Serv. Ten, my lord.

Glo. Ten is the hour that was appointed me,
To watch the coming of my punish'd duchess;
Unmeth may she endure the flinty streets,
To tread with them her tender-feeling feet.
Sweet Nell, ill can thy noble mind abrook
The abject people, gaz'ing on thy face,
With envious looks still laughing at thy shame;
That erst did follow thy proud chariot wheels,
When thou didst ride in triumph through the streets.
But, soft! I think, she comes; and I prepare
My tear-stain'd eyes to see her misceries.

Enter the Duchess of Gloster, in a white sheet, with papers pinned upon her back, her feet bare, and a taper burning in her hand; Sir John Stanley, a Sheriff, and Officers.

Serv. So please your grace, we'll take her from the sheriff.

Glo. No, sir, not for, your lives; let her pass by.

Duch. Ah, Gloster, teach me to let myself.

For, whilst I think I am the married wife,
And thou a prince, protector of this land,
Methinks, I should not thus be led along,
Mall'd up in shame, with papers on my back;
And follow'd with a rattle, that rejoince
To see my tears, and hear my deep-felt groans
The ruthless thirt diont cut out my tender feet;
And, when I start, the envious people laugh,
And bid me be advised how I tread.
Ah, Humphrey, can I bear this shameful yoke?
Trow'st thou that e'er I'll look upon the world;
Or count them happy, that enjoy the sun?
No; dark shall be my light, and night my day,
To think upon myump, shall be my hell.
Sometimes I'll say, Iam Duke Humphrey's wife,
And he a prince, and ruler of the land;
Yet so he ruleth, and such a prince he was,
As he stood by, whilst, I, his forlorn duchess,
Was made a wonder, and a pointing stock,
To every idle rascal follower.
But be thou mild, and blush not at my shame;
Nor stir at every trifling of what and who Hang over thee, as, sure, it shortly will.
For Suffolk,—be that can do all in all
With her, that hateth thee, and hates us all,—
And York, and impious Beaufort, that false priest,
Have all kind'nes'hes to betray thy wings,
And, fly thou how thou canst, they'll tangle thee:
But fear not thon, until the first snow,
Nor never seek prevention of thy foes.

Glo. Ah, Nell, forbear; thou almost all awry;
I must offend, before I be attainted:
And had I twenty times so many foes,
And each of them had twenty times their power,
All these could not procure me my seathe,
So long as I am loyal, true, and cromless.
Would'st have me rescue thee from this reproach
Why, yet thy scandal were not wip'd away,
But I in danger for the breach of law.
Thy greatest help is quiet, gentle Nell:
I pray thee, sort thy heart to patience;
These few days' wonder will be quickly worn.

Enter a Herald.

Her. I summon your grace to his majesty's parliament, holden at Bury the first of this next month.

Glo. And my consent ne'er ask'd herein before!
This is close dealing.—Well, I will be there.

[Exit Herald.

My Nell, I take my leave:—and, master sheriff,
Let not her penance exceed the king's commission.
Sher. An't please your grace, here my commission
And sir John Stanley is appointed now

To take her with him to the isle of Man.

Glo. Must you, sir John, protect my lady here?

Stan. So am I given in charge, may't please your
Glo. Ensure her not the worse, in that I pray grace.
You use her well the world may laugh again;
And I may live to do you kindness, if
You do it her. And so, sir John, farewell.

Duch. What gone, my lord; and bid me not farewell?

Glo. Witness my tears, I cannot stay to speak.

[Exeunt Gloster and Servants.

Duch. Art thou gone too? All comfort go with thee.
For none abides with me: my joy is—death;
Death, at whose name I oft have been afeard,
Because I wish'd this world's eternity.—
Stanley, I pray thee, go, and take me hence;
I care not whither, for I beg no favour.
Only convey me where thou art commanded.

Stan. Why, madam, that is to the isle of Man;
There to be used according to your state.

Duch. That's bad enough, for I am but reproach:
And shall I then be us'd reproachfully?

Stav. Like to a goddess, and duke Humphrey's
According to that state you shall be used. [lady,

Duch. Sheriff, farewell, and better than I fare;
Although thou hast been conduct of my shame!

Sher. It is my office; and, madam, pardon me.

Duch. Ay, ay, farewell; thy office is discharge'd—
Come, Stanley, shall we go?

Stav. Madam, your penance done, throw off this
And go we to attire you for our journey. [sheet,

Duch. My shame will not be shifted with my sheet:
No, it will hang upon my richest robes,
And shew itself, attire me how I can.
Go, lead the way; I long to see my prison. [Exit,

ACT III.

SCENE I.—The Abbey at Bury.

Enter to the Parliament, King Henry, Queen Mary,
Garet, Cardinal Beaufort, Suffolk, York,
Buckingham, and others.

K. Hen. I muse, my lord of Gloucester is not come:
'Tis not his part to be the hindmost man,
Whate'er occasion keeps him from us now.

Q. Mar. Can you not see it? or will you not observe
The strangeness of his alter'd countenance?
What is the wind that bears him?—
How insolent of late he is become,
How proud, pretermitting, and unlike himself?
We know the time, since he was mild and affable;
And, if we did but glance a far-off look,
Immediately he was upon his knee,
That all the court ador'd him for submission;
But meet him now, and, be it in the morn,
When every one will give the time of day,
He knits his brow, and shews an angry eye,
And passes by with stiff unbow'd knee,
Disdaining duty that to us belongs.
Small curs are not regarded, when they grin;
But great men tremble, when the lion roars;
And Humphrey is no little man in Englad.
First, note, that he is far you in descent;
And should you fall, he is the next will mount.
Me seemeth then, it is no policy,—
Respecting what a rancorous mind he bears,
And his advantage following your decease,—
That he should come about your royal person,
Or be admitted to your highness' council.
By charity hath he won the commons' hearts;
And, when he pleased to make commotion,
'Tis to be feared, they all will follow him.
Now 'tis the spring, and weeds are shallow-rooted;
Suffer them now, and they'll o'er-grow the garden,
And choke the herbs for want of husbandry.
The reverend care, I bear unto your lord,
Made me collect these dangers in the duke.
If it be fond, call it a woman's fear;
Which fear if better reasons can supplant,
I will subscribe and say—I wrong'd the duke.
My lord of Suffolk,—Buckingham,—and York,— Reprieve my allegation, if you can;
Or else conclude my words effectual.

Suf. Well hath your highness seen into this duke;
And, had I first been put to speak my mind,
I think I should have told your grace's tale.
The duchess, by her subornation,
Upon my life, began her devilish practices:
Or if he were not privy to those faults,
Yet, by repeating of his high descent,
(As next the king, he was successive heir,)
And such high vaunts of his nobility,
Did instigate the bedlam brain-sick duchess,
By wicked means to frame our sovereign's fall.
Smooth runs the water, where the brook is deep;
And in his simple show he harbours treason
The fox-larks not, when he would steal the lamb,
No, no, my sovereign; Gloster is a man
Unsound'd yet, and full of deep deceit.

Car. Did he not, contrary to form of law,
Devise strange deaths for small offences done?
York. And did he not, in his protectorship,
Levy great sums of money through the realm,
For soldiers' pay in France, and never sent it?
By means whereof, the towns each day revolted.

Buck. Tut! These are petty faults to faults unknown,
Which time will bring to light in smooth duke Humphrey.

K. Hen. My lords, at once: The care you have of us,
To mow down thorns that would annoy our foot,
Is worthy praise: But shall I speak my conscience?
Our kinsman Gloster is innocent
From meaning treason to our royal person,
As is the sucking lamb, or harmless dove:
The duch is virtuous, mild: and too well given,
To dream on evil, or to work my downfall.

Q. Mar. Ah, what's more dangerous than this fond affiance?
Seems he a dove? his feathers are but borrow'd,
For he's disposed as the hateful raven.
Is he a lamb? his skin is surely bent him,
For he's inclin'd as are the ravenous wolves.
Who cannot steal a shape, that means deceit?
Take heed, my lord; the welfare of us all
Hangs on the cutting short that fraudulent man.

Enter Somerset.

Som. All health unto my gracious sovereign!

K. Hen. Welcome, lord Somerset. What news from France?

Som. That your interest in those territories
Is utterly bereft you; all is lost.

K. Hen. Cold news, lord Somerset: But God's will be done!

York. Cold news for me; for I had hope of France,
As timely as I hope for fertile England.
Thus are my blossoms blasted in the bud,
And caterpillars eat my leaves away:
But I will remedy this gear ere long,
Or sell my title for a glorious graze. [Exit.

Enter Gloucester.

Glo. All happiness unto my lord the king!
Pardon, my liege, that I have staid so long.

Suf. Nay, Gloster, know, that thou art come too soon,
Unless thou wert more loyal than thou art:
I do arrest thee of high treason here.

Glo. Well, Suffolk, yet thou shalt not see me blush,
Nor change my countenance for this arrest;
A heart unspeckt is not easily daunted.
The purest spring is not so free from mud,
As I am clear from treason to my sovereign:
Who can accuse me? wherein am I guilty?

York. 'Tis thought, my lord, that you took bribes of France,
And, being protector, stay'd the soldiers' pay;
By means whereof, his highness hath lost France.

Glo. I love you yet, but thought so! What are they, that think
I never rob'd the soldiers of their pay?

So help me God, as I have watch'd the night,—
Ay, night by night, — in studying good for England!
That doth that e'er I wrested from the king,
Or any groat I boarded to my use,
Be brought against me at my trial!

O, may a pound of mine own proper store,
Because I would not tax the needy commons,
Have I dispersed to the garrisons,
And never ask'd for restitution.
Cur. It serves you well, my lord, to say so much.
Glo. I say no more than truth, so help me God!
York. In your protectorate, you did devise Strange strictness for offenders, never heard of,
That England was defam'd by tyranny.
Glo. Why, 'tis well known, that whiles I was pro-

Glo. Far truer spoke than meant: I lose, indeed;—
Beshrew the winners, for they played me false!
And well such losers may have leave to speak.
Buck. He'll wrest the sense, and hold us here all day.
Lord cardinal, he is your prisoner.
Cur. Sirs, take away the duke, and guard him sure.
Glo. Ah, thus king Henry throws away his crutch,
Before his legs be firm to bear his body;
This is the shepherd beaten from thy side,
And wolves are garling who shall goa thee first.
Ah, that my fear were false! ah, that it were!
For, good king Henry, thy decay I fear.
[Exeunt Attendants, with Gloster.
K. Hen. My lords, what to your wisdoms seemeth best,
Do, or undo, as if ourself were here. [lameat
Q. Mar. What, will your highness leave the par-

K. Hen. Ay, Margaret; my heart is drown'd with Whose fires begin to flow within mine eyes; [grief,
My body round enwring with misery;
For what's more miserable than discontent? —
Ah, uncle Humphrey! in thy face I see
The map of honour, truth, and loyalty;
And yet, good Humphrey, is the hour to come,
That e'er I prov'd thee false, or fear'd thy faith.
What low report tells you can expect,
That these our great lords, and Margaret our queen,
Do seek subservion of thy harmless life!
Thou never didst them wrong, nor no man wrong:
And as the butcher takes away the cull,
And bounds the wretch, and beats it when it strays,
Bearing it to the bloody slaughter-house;
O, gracious! Every step of theirs is dangerous!
So virtuous is chok'd with foul ambition,
And charity chas'd here by rancour's hand;
Foul subordination is predominant,
And equity exil'd his highness' land.
I know, their counsels are to have my life;
And, if my death might make this island happy,
Pray, break the period of their tyranny,
I would expend it with all willingness;
But mine is made the prologue to their play;
For thousands more that yet suspect no peril
Will not conclude their plotted tragedy.
Beaumont's red sparkling eyes blash his heart's malice,
And Suffolk's cloudy brow his stormy hate;
And, if this be the end of my tongue with his tongue
The envious load that lies upon my heart;
And dogged York, that reaches at the moon,
Whose overweening arm I have pluck'd back,
By false accuse doth level at my life:—
And you my sovereign lady, with the rest,
Causeless have laid disgraces on my head;
And, with your best endeavour, have stir'd up
My busiest liege to be mine enemy:—
Ay, all of you have laid your heads together,
Myself had notice of your conventicles,
And all to make away my guiltless life:
I shall not want false witness to condemn me,
Nor store of treasons to augment my guilt;
Twill make all none, and twenty eagle read
When a staff is quickly found to beat a dog.
Car. My liege, his railing is intolerable:
If those, that care to keep your royal person
From treason's secret knife, and traitors' rage,
Be thus upbraided, chid, and rated at,
And the offender granted scope of speech,
The ancient honour will be well affected,—
Who would not leap to beat a dog?
Suf. Hath he not twit our sovereign lady here,
With ignominious words, though clerical couched'd,
As if she had suborned some to swear
False allegations to o'erthrob his state?
Q. Mar. But I can give the loser leave to chide,
Who being accused a crafty murderer,
His guilt should be but idly posted over,
Because his purpose is not executed.
Nor, let him die, in that he is a fox.
By nature prov'd an enemy to the flock.
Before his chaps be stain'd with crimson blood;
As Humphrey, prov'd by reasons, to my liege,
And do not stand on quibbles, how to slay him:
Be it by guns, by snares, by subtilty,
Sleeping or waking, 'tis no matter how,
So be he dead, for his death is foe;
Which makes him first, that first intends deceit.
Suf. Not resolute, except so much were done;
For things are often spoken, and seldom meant:
But, that my heart accordeth with my tongue,—
Seeing the deed is meritorious,
And to preserve my sovereign from his foe,—
Say but the word, and I will be his priest.
Car. But I would have him dead, my lord of Suffolk,
Ere you can take due orders for a priest:
Say, you consent, and secure well the deed,
And I will provide his executioner,
I tend to the safety of my liege.
Suf. Here is my hand, the deed is worthy doing.
Q. Mar. Then, I will stop the rage betime,
Before the wound do grow incurable;
For, being green, there is great hope of help.
Car. A breach, that crevices a quick expeditious stop.
What counsel give you in this weighty cause?
York. No, not to lose it all, as thou hast done.
I rather would have lost my life betime,
Thau bring a burden of dishonour home,
By staying there so long, till all were lost.
Shew me your scar character'd on thy skin:
Men's flesh preserves' so whole, do seldom win.
Q. Mar. Nay then, this spark will prove a raging fire,
If wind and fuel be brought to feed it with:—
No more, good York;—sweet Somerset, be still;—
Thy fortune, York, hath thou been regent there,
Might possibly have prov'd far worse than his,
York. What, worse than naught? nay, then a shame
Take all!
Som. And in the number, thee, that wishest shame!
Car. My lord of York, try what your fortune is.
The uncivil kerns of Ireland are in arms,
And temper clay with blood of Englishmen:
To Ireland will you lead a band of men,
Collected choice, from every county some,
And try your lap against the Irishmen.
York. I will, my lord, so please his majesty.
Suf. Why, our authority is his consent;
And what we do establish, he confirms:
Then, noble York, take thou this task in hand.
York. I am content—Provide me soldiers, lords,
Whiles I take order for mine own affairs.
Suf. A charge, lord York, that I will see perform'd.
But now return we to the false duke Humphrey.

Car. No more of him; for I will deal with him,
That henceforth, he shall trouble us no more.
And so break off; the day is almost spent:
York. My lord of Suffolk, you and I must talk of that event.
York. Lord Suffolk, within fourteen days
At Bristol I expect my soldiers;
For there I'll ship them all for Ireland.
Suf. I'll see it truly done, my lord of York.

York. Now, York, as never, steel thy fearful thoughts,
And change a misdoct to resolution:
Be that thou hop'st to be; or what thou art
Resign to death, it is not worth the enjoying:
Let pale-faced fear keep with the mean-born man,
And find no harbour in a royal heart.
Faster than spring-time showers, comes thought on:
And not a thought, but thinks on dignity. [thought.
My brain, more busy than the labouring spider,
Wrestes tedious snares to trap mine enemies.
Well, nobles, well, 'tis politicly done,
To send me packing with an host of men.
I fear me, you but warm the starded snake,
Who, cherish'd in your breasts, will sting your hearts.
'Twas men I lack'd, and you will give them me:
I take it kindly; yet, be well assur'd
You and your sharp weapons, a madman's hands.
Whiles I in Ireland nourish a mighty band,
I will stir up in England some black storm,
Shall blow ten thousand souls to heaven, or hell:
And this fell tempest shall not cease to rage
Until the golden circuit on my head,
Like to the glorious sun's transparent beams,
Do calm the fury of this mad-irred flaw.
And, for a minister of my intent,
I have seduced a head-strong Kentishman,
John Cade of Ashford,
To make commotion, as full well he can,
Under the title of John Mortimer.
In Ireland have I seen this stubborn Cade
Oppose himself against a troop of kerns;
Winging so long, till that his gasp with darts
Were almost like a sharp-quill'd porcupine:
And, in the end being resc'd, I have seen him
Caper upright like a wild Morisco,
Shaking the bloody darts, as he his bells.
Full often like a shag-hair'd crafty Kerne,
Hath he conversed with the enemy;
And undisclosed come to me again,
And given me notice of their villanies.
This devil here shall be my substitute;
For that John Mortimer, which now is dead,
In face, in gait, in speech, he doth resemble:
By this I shall perceive the commons' mind,
How they affect the house and claim of York.
Say, he be taken, rack'd, and tortured;
I know, no pain, they can inflict upon him,
Will make him say,—I mu'd him to those arms.
Say, that he thrive, (as 'tis great like he will,)
Why, then from Ireland come I with my strength,
And reap the harvest which that rascal sow'd:
For, Humphrey being dead, as he shall be,
And Henry put apart, the next for me.

SCENE II.—Bury. A Room in the Palace.

Enter certain Murderers, hastily.

1 Mar. Hurry to my lord of Suffolk; let him know,
We have despatch'd the duke, as he commanded.
2 Mar. O, that it were to do!—What have we done?
Didst ever hear a man so penitent?

Enter Suffolk.

1 Mar. Here comes my lord.
Enter King Henry, Queen Margaret, Cardinal Beaufort, Somerset, Lords, and others.

K. Hen. Go, call our uncle to our presence straight:
Say, we intend to try his grace to-day.
If he be guilty, as 'tis published.
Suf. I'll call him presently, my noble lord. [Exit.

K. Hen. Lords, take your places; — And, pray you Proceed no straiter 'gainst our uncle Gloster, [all.
Than from true evidence, of good esteem.
He be approv'd in practice culpable,
Be God forbid any malice should prevail,
That faultless may condemn a noblesman!
Pray God, he may acquit him of suspicion!
K. Hen. I thank thee, Margaret; these words content me much.—

Re enter Suffolk.

How now; why look'st thou pale? why tremblest thou?
Where is our uncle? what is the matter, Suffolk?
Suf. Dead in his bed, my lord; Gloster is dead.
Q. Mar. Marty, God forefend! Car. God's secret judgment: — I did dream to-night,
The duke was dumb, and could not speak a word.
[The kings scarce.
Q. Mar. How fares my lord! — Help, lords! the king is dead.
Som. Rear up his body; wring him by the nose.
Q. Mar. Run, go, help, help! — O, Henry, one thine eyes!
Suf. He doth revive again; — Madam, be patient.
Suf. Not for myself; — Come! gracious Henry, come.
K. Hen. What, doth my lord of Suffolk comfort me?
Came he right now to sing a raven's note.
Whose dismal tune bereft my vital powers; —
And thinks he, that the chirping of a wren,
By crying comfort from a hollow breast,
Can chase away the first conceived sound?
Hide not thy poison with such sugar'd words,
Lay not thy hands on me; forbear, I say;
Their touch affrights me, as a serpent's sting.
Thou baleful messenger, out of my sight!
Upon thy eye-balls murders tyrannous
Sits in grim majesty, to fright the world.
Look not upon me, for thine eyes are wounding: —
Yet do not go away — Come, haudish,
And kill the innocent gazer with thy sight:
For in the shade of death I shall find joy:
In life, but double death, now Gloster's dead.
Q. Mar. Why do you rate my lord of Suffolk thus? —
Although the duke was enemy to him.
Yet he, most Christian-like, laments his death:
And for myself, — for as he wroughest to me,
Might liquid tears, or heart-offending groans,
Or blood-consuming sighs recall his life,
I would be blind with weeping, sick with groans,
Look pale as primrose, with blood-drinking sighs,
And all to have the noble duke alive.

What know I how the world may deem of me?

For it is known, we were but hollow friends;
It may be judg'd, I made the duke away:
So shall my name with shame and sorrow be, —
And princes courts be fill'd with my reproach.
This get I by his death: Ah me, unhappy:
A to be a queen, and crown'd with infamy!
K. Hen. Ah, woe is me for Gloster, wretched man! Q. Mar. Be voo for me, more wretched than he is,
What, dost thou turn away, and hide thy face?
I am no leas-some leper, look on me.
What, art thou like the adder, waxen deaf?
Be poisonous too, and kill thy forlorn queen.
Is all thy comfort shut in Gloster's tomb?
Why, then dame Margaret was ne'er thy joy:
Erect his statue then, and worship it,
And make my image but an alehouse sign.
Was I, for this, my flight; — upon the sea,
And twice by awkward wind from England's bank
Drove back again unto my native elime!
What bodest this, but well-foreswearing wind
Did seem to say, — Seek not a scorpion's nest.
Nor set no footing on this unkind shore!
What did I then, but curs'd the gentle gusts,
And he there look'd from time to time with eyes;
And bid them blow towards England's blessed shore,
Or turn our stern upon a dreadful rock?
Yet Eolus would not be a murd'rer,
But left that hateful office unto thee:
The pretty vaulting sea refused to drown me; [shore,
Knowing, that thou wouldst have me drown'd on
With bear's breath as well as with his kindness.
The splitting rocks cow'd in the sinking sands,
And would not dash me with their ragged sides;
Because thy flinty heart, more hard than thou,
Might to thy palace perish Margaret.
As far as I could ken thy chalky cliffs,
When from the shore the tempest beat us back,
I stood upon the hatches in the storm;
And when the dusky sky began to rob
My earnest-gaping sight of thy land's view,
I took a costly jewel from my neck, —
A heart it was, bound in with diamonds,—
And throw it towards thy land; — the sea receiv'd it;
And so, I wish'd, thy body might my heart:
And even with this, I lost fair England's view,
And bid mine eyes be packing with my heart;
And call'd them blind and dusky spectacles,
For losing ken of Allion's wished coast.
How often have I tempted Suffolk's tongue
(The agent of thy foul inconstancy,)
To sit and witch me, as Ascanius did,
When he to madding Dido would unfold
His father's acts, commenç'd in burning Troy?
Am I notwitch'd like her? or thou not false like him?
Ah me, I can no more! Die, Margaret!
For Hea'ry weeps, that thou dost live so long
Noise within. Enter Warwick and Salisbury.

The Commons press to the door.

War. It is reported, mighty sovereign,
That good duke Humphrey traitorously is murder'd
By Suffolk and the cardinal Beaufort's means.
The commons, like an angry hive of bees,
That want their leader, scatter up and down,
And care not who they sting in their revenge.
Myself have calm'd their sanguine mutiny,
Until they hear the order of his death.
K. Hen. That he is dead, good Warwick, 'tis too true,
But how he died, God knows, not Henry:
Enter his chamber, view his breathless corpse,
And comment then upon his sudden death.
War. That I shall do, my liege: — Stay, Salisbury,
With the rude multitude, till I return.

Warwick goes into an inner room, and Salisbury retires.

K. Hen. O thou that judgest all things, stay my thoughts; My thoughts, that labour to persuade my soul, Some violent hands were laid on Humphrey's life! If my suspect be false, forgive me, God; For judgment only doth belong to thee! Fain would I go to chase his holy lips With twenty thousand kisses, and to drain Upon his face an ocean of salt tears; To tell my love unto his dumb deaf trunk, And with my fingers feel his hand unfeeling; But all in vain are these mean obsequies; And, to survey his dead and earthly image, What were it but to make my sorrow greater?

The folding doors of an inner chamber are thrown open, and Gloucester is discovered dead in his bed: Warwick and others standing by it.

War. Come hither, gracious sovereign, view this body.

K. Hen. This is to see how deep my grave is made: For, with his soul, fled all my worldly solace; For seeing him, I see my life in death.

War. As surely as my soul intends to live With that dread King, that took our state upon him To free us from his father's wrathful curse, I do believe that violent hands were laid Upon the life of this three-sailed duke.

Warwick. What instance gives lord Warwick for his vow? If war. See how the blood is settled in his face! Oft have I seen a timely-painted ghost. Of ashly semblance, meagre, pale, and bloodless, Being all descended to the labouring heart; Who, in the conflict that it holds with death, Attracts the same for alliance 'gainst the enemy; Which with the heart there cools, and never returneth To blush and beautify the cheek again.

But, see, his face is black, and full of blood; His eye-balls further out than when he liv'd, Staring full ghastly like a strangled man: [gling] His hair uproar'd, his nostrils stretch'd with strug-

His hands abroad display'd, as one that grasp'd And tamed for life, and was by death subdued. Look on the sheets, his hair, you see, is sticking: His well-proportioned beard made rough and ragged, Like to the summer's corn by tempest lodg'd.

It cannot be, but he was murder'd here; The least of all these signs were probable.

Suf. Why, Warwick, who should do the duke to Myself and Dunstaff, had him in protection; [death And we, I hope, sir, are no murderers. If war. But both of you were v'rd Duke Humphrey's And you, forsooth, had the good duke to keep: [fees; 'Tis like, you would not feast him like a friend; And 'tis well seen, he found an enemy.

Q. Mar. Then you, belle, suspect the nobleman As guilty of duke Humphrey's timeless death.

War. Who finds the heifer, and bleeding fresh, And sees fast by a butcher with an axe, But will suspect, 'twas he that made the slaughter? Who finds the partridge in the pittock's nest, But may imagine how the bird was dead, Although the kite soar with unbleeded beak? Even so suspicious is this tragedy.

Suf. If I wear no knife, to slaughter sleeping men; But here's a vengeful sword rusted with ease, That shall be secured in his rancorous heart, That slanders me with murder's crimson budge:— Say, if thou dar'st, proud lord of Warwickshire, That I am faulty in duke Humphrey's death.

[Exit Cardinal. Som. and others

War. What dares not Warwick, if false Suffolk dare him.

Q. Mar. He dares not calm his contumelious spirit, Nor cease to be an arrogant controller, Though Suffolk dare him twenty thousand times.

War. Madam, be still; with reverence may I say; For every word, you speak in his behalf, Is slander to your royal dignity.

Suf. Blunt-witted lord, ignoble in demeanour! If ever lady wrong'd her lord so much, Thy mother took into her shameful bed Some stern uncto'red charl, and noble stock Was graft with crab-tree slip; whose fruit thou art, And never of the Nevil's noble race.

War. But that the guilt of murder bucklers thee, And I should rob the deathsmen of his fee, Quitting thee thereby of ten thousand shames. And that my sovereign's presence makes me mild, I would not else murderously coward, on thy knee. Make thee beg pardon for thy pass'd speech, And say—It was thy mother that thou meant'st, That thou thyself wast born in bastardy: And after all this fearful homage done, Give thee thy hire, and send thy soul to hell, Pernicious bloodsucker of sleeping men! Suf. Thou shalt be waking, while I shall thy blood, If from the face of thee thou dar'st go near me.

War. Away even now, or I will drag thee hence: Unworthy though thou art, I'll cope with thee, And do some service to duke Humphrey's ghost.

[Exit Suffolk and Warwick.

K. Hen. What stronger breast-plate than a heart un- Thrice is hearm'd that hath his quarrel just? [tainted? And he but naked, though lock'd up in steel, Whose conscience with injustice is corrupted. [A noise within.

Q. Mar. What noise is this? Re-enter Suffolk and Warwick, with their weapons drawn.

Here in our presence! dare you be so bold?— What, that tumultuous clamour have we here? Suf. The traitorous Warwick, with the men of Dury, Set all upon me, mighty sovereign.

Re-enter Suffolk and Warwick.

Suf. Why, how now, lords, your wrathful wea-pens drawn Noise of a crowd within.

Dread lord, the commons send you word by me, Unless false Suffolk straight be done to death, Or banished fair England's territories, They will by violence tear him from your palace, And torture him with grievous lingering death. They say, by him the good duke Humphrey died They say, in him they fear your highness' death; And pure instinct of love, and loyal duty— Free from a stubborn opposite intent, As being thought to contradict your liking,— Makes them thus forward in his banishment, They say, in care of your most royal person, That, if your highness should intend to sleep, And charge—that no man should disturb your rest, Nor pain of your dislike, or pain of death; Yet notwithstanding such a strict edict, Were there a serpent seen, with forked tongue, That slily glided towards your majesty,
QUEEN MARGARET: Give me thy hand.

Second Part. Act III. Sc. 4
It were but necessary you were wak'd;
Lest, being suffer'd in that harmful slumber,
The mortal worm might make the sleep eternal:
And therefore do they cry, though you forb'd,
That they will guard you, whe're you will, or no,
From such fell serpents as false Suffolk is;
With whose envenom'd and fatal sting,
Your loving uncle, twenty times his worth,
They say, is shamefully bereft of Life.

Commons. [Within.] An answer from the king, my lord of Salisbury.

Suf. Tis like, the commons, rude unpolish'd hands,
Could send such message to their sovereign:
But you, my lord, were glad to be employ'd,
To show how quaint an orator you are:
But all the honour Salisbury hath won,
Is—that he was the lord ambassador,
Sent from a sort of tinkers to the king.

Commons. [Within.] An answer from the king, or we 'll break in.

K. Hen. Go, Salisbury, and tell them all from me,
I that revenge my love for so much care;
And had I not been caitiff'd by them,
Yet did I purpose as they do entreat;
For sure, my thoughts do hourly prophesy
Mischance unto my state of Suffolk's means.
And therefore—by His majesty I swear,
Whose far un worthy deputy I am,—
He shall not breathe infection in the air
But three days longer, on the pain of death. [Exit.]

Q. Mar. O Henry, let me plead for gentle Suffolk!
K. Hen. Ungentle queen, to call him gentle Suffolk.
No more, I say; if thou dost plead for him,
Thou wilt but add increase unto my wrath.
Had I but said, I would have kept my word;
But I must am, to shew him my love for
If, after three days' space, thou here be'st found
On any ground that I am ruler of,
The world shall not be ransom'd for thy life.

Come, Warwick, come, good Warwick, go with me:
I have great matters to impart to thee.

[Exeunt K. Henry, Warwick, Lords, &c.]

Q. Mar. Mischance and malediction grow along with you!
Heart's discontent, and sour affliction,
Be playfellows to keep you company!
There's two of you; the devil make a third,
And threefold vengeance tend upon your steps!

Suf. Cease, gentle queen, these executions,
And let thy Suffolk take his heavy leave.

Q. Mar. The secrets of his heart are hearted-wretch!
Hast thou not spirit to curse thine enemies? them?
Suf. A plague upon them! wherefore should I curse
Would curse's kill, as doth the mandrake's groan,
I would invent as bitter-searching terms,
As curst, as harsh, and horrible to hear,
Deliver'd strongly through my fix'd teeth,
With full as many signs of deadly hate,
As lean-fac'd Envy in her beathome cave:
My tongue should stumble in mine earnest words:
Mine eyes should sparkle like the beaten flint;
My hair be fix'd on end, as one distraight;
Ay, every joint should seem to curse and ban:
And even now my burden'd heart would break,
Should I not curse them. Poison be their drink!
Gall, worse than gall, the daintiest that they taste!
Their sweetest shade, a grove of cypress trees!
Their choicest prospect, murdering basilisks!
Their softest touch, as smart as lizards' stings!
Their music, frightful as the serpent's hiss;
And boiling screech-oaks make the concert full!
And so for terror in days, months, or aye! thyself;

Q. Mar. Enough, sweet Suffolk; thou torment'st
And these dread curses—like the sun 'gainst glass,
Or like an overcharged gun, recoil,
And turn the force of them upon thyself.

Suf. Your bade me ban, and will you bid me leave?
Now, by the ground that I am banish'd from,
Well could I curse away a winter's night,
Though standing naked on a mountain top,
Where biting cold would never let grass grow,
And think it but a minute spent in sport.

Q. Mar. O, let me entreat thee, cease! Give me thy
That I may dew it with my mournful tears; [hand,
Nor let the rain of heaven wet this place,
To wash away my woeful monuments.
O, could this kiss be printed in thy hand;
That thou might'st think upon these from the soul,
Through whom a thousand sights are breath'd for the!
So, get thee gone, that I may know my grief;
'Tis but surmis'd whilst thou art standing by,
As one that surfeits thinking upon a want.
I will repeat thee, or, be well assured,
Adventurers to be banish'd out of heaven,
And banish'd I am, if but from thee.
Go, speak not to me; even now be gone.—
O, go not yet!—Even thus two friends condemn'd
Embrace, and kiss, and take ten thousand leaves,
Loather a hundred times to part than die.
Yet now farewell; and farewell life with thee!

Suf. Thus is poor Suffolk's image banish'd,
Once by the king, and three times thrice by thee.
'Tis not the land I care for, wert thou hence;
A wilderness is populous enough,
So Suffolk had thy heavenly company:
For where thou art, there is the world itself,
With every several pleasure in the world;
And where thou art, even so is banish'd,
I can no more—Live thou to joy thy life;
Myself no joy in nought, but that thou liv'st

Enter VAUX.

Q. Mar. Whither goes Vaux so fast! what news. I

Vaux. To signify unto his majesty, [pr'ythee]
That Colden and Beaufort is at point of death:
For suddenly a grievous sickness,
That makes him gasp, and stare, and catch the air,
Blaspheming God, and cursing men on earth.
Sometime, he talks as if duke Humphrey's ghost
Were by his side; sometime, he calls the king,
And whispers to his pillow, as to him,
The secrets of his heart and charged soul;
And I am sent to tell his majesty,
That even now he cries aloud for.

Q. Mar. Go tell this heavy message to the king.

[Exit VAUX.]

Ah me! what is this world? what news are these?
But wherefore grieve I at an hour's poor loss,
Omitting Suffolk's exile, my soul's treasure?
Why only, Suffolk, mourn't I not for thee,
And with the southern clouds contend in tears;
Their's for the earth's increase, mine for my sorrows?
Now, get thee hence; The king thou know'st, is com-
If thou be found by me, thou art but dead. [ing?
Suf. If I depart from thee, I cannot live:
And in thy sight to die, what were it else,
But like a pleasant slumber in thy lap?
Here could I breathe my soul into the air,
As mild and gentle as the cradle-babe,
Dying with mother's dung between its lips:
Where, from thy sight, I should be raging mad,
And cry out for thee to close up mine eyes,
To have thee with my lips to stop my mouth;
So should'st thou either turn my flying soul,
Or I should breathe it so into thy body,
And then it liv'd in sweet Elysium.
To die by thee, were but to die in jest;
From thee to die, were torture more than death:
O, let me stay, be fall what may befal!
Q. Mar. Away! though parting be a fellrous corrosive,
It is applied to a deadly wound only give I thee:—
To France, sweet Suffolk: Let me hear from thee;
For wheresoe'er thou art in this world's globe,
I'll have an Iris that shall find thee out.
Suf. I go.
Q. Mar. And take my heart with thee.
Suf. A jewel, lock'd into the woeful'st cask
That ever did contain a thing of worth.
Even as a splitted bark, so snder we;
This way fall I to death.
Q. Mar. This way for me.
[Exeunt, severally.}

SCENE III.

London.—Cardinal Beaufort's Bed-Chamber.

Enter King Henry, Salisbury, Warwick, & others.

The Cardinal in bed; Attendants with him.

Car. If thou be'test death, I'll give thee England's

Enough to purchase such another island,

So thou wilt let me live, and feed me pain.

K. Hen. Ah, what a sign it is of evil life,

When death's approach is seen so terrible!

War. Beaufort, it is thy sovereign speaks to thee.

Car. Bring me unto my trial, when you will.

Died he not in his bed? where should he die?

Can I make men live, where they will or no?—

O, torture me no more; I will confess.

Alive again? then shew me where he is;

I'll give a thousand pound to look upon him,—

He hath no eyes, the dust hath blinded them.—

Comb down his hair; look! look! it stands upright,

Like lime-twigs set to catch my winged soul!—

Give me some drink; and bid the apothecary

Bring the strong poison that I bought of him.

Henry. O thou eternal Mover of the heavens,

Look with a gentle eye upon this wretch!
O, beat away the busy meddling fiend,

That lags strong siege unto this wretch's soul,

And from his bosom purge this black despair!
War. See how the pangs of death do make him grin.

Suf. Disturb him not, let him pass peaceably.

K. Hen. I cannot so command, if God's good pleasure be!
Lord cardinal, if thou think'st on heaven's bliss,

Hold up thy hand, make signal of thy hope.—

He dies, and makes no sign; O God, forgive him!
War. So bad a death argues a monstrous life.

K. Hen. Forbear to judge, for we are sinners all—

Close up his eyes, and draw the curtain close;
And let us all to meditation.
[Exeunt.}

ACT IV.

SCENE I.—Kent. The sea-shore near Dover.

Firing heard at sea. Then enter from a boat, a Captain, a Master, a Master's-Mate, Walter Waller, and others; with them Suffolk, and other Gentlemen, prisoners.

Cap. The gaudy, babbling, and remorseful day

Is crept into the bosom of the sea;
And now loud-howling wolves azure the jades

That drag the tragic melancholy night;
Who with their drowsy, slow, and flagging wings

Clip dead men's graves, and from their misty jaws

Breathe foul contagious darkness in the air.

Therefore, bring forth the soldiers of our prize;

For, whilst our pinion anchors in the Downs,

Here shall they make their ransome on the sand,

Or with their blood stain this discolor'd shore.—

Mark, this prisoner truly give I thee:—

And then that art his mate, make boot of this:—

The other [proposing to Suffolk,] Walter Whitmore, is thy share.

1 Gent. What is my ransome, master? let me know.

Mast. A thousand crowns, or else lay down your head.

Mote. And so much shall you give, or else goes yours.

Cap. What, think you much to pay two thousand crowns, and bear the name and port of gentlemen?—

Cut both the villains' throats;—for die you shall;

The lives of those which we have lost in fight,

Cannot be counterpois'd with such a petty sum.

1 Gent. I'll give it, sir; and therefore spare my life.
2 Gent. I'll give it, sir, and write home for it straight.

White. I lost mine eye in laying the prize about,

And therefore, to revenge it, shalt thou die; [To Suff.
And so should these, if I might have my will.

Cap. Be not so rash; take ransome, let him live.

Suf. Look on my George, I am a gentleman;
Raise me at what thou wilt, thou shalt be paid.

White. And so am I; my name is—Walter Whitmore,— How now? why start'st thou? what, doth death affect

Suf. Thy name affrighted me, in whose sound is death.
A cunning man did calculate my birth,

And told me—that by Walter I should die:
Yet let not this make thee be bloody minded;
Thy name is—Gauttier, being rightly sounded.

White. Gauttier, or Walter, which it is, I care not;

Ne'er yet did base dishonour blare our name,

But with our sword we wip'd away the blot;
Therefore, when merchant-like I sell revenge,

Broke be my sword, my arms torn and defac'd,

And I proclaim a coward through the world.

[Lauds held on Suffolk.

Suf. Stay, Whitmore: for thy song is as a prince,

The duke of Suffolk, William de la Pole.
White. The duke of Suffolk, muffled up in rags!
Suf. Ay, but these rags are no part of the duke;
Jove sometime went disguis'd, and why not I?
Cap. But Jove was never slain, as thou shalt be.
Suf. Observe and lowly swear, king Henry's blood,

The honorable blood of Lancaster,

Must not be shed by such a jaded groom.
Hast thou not kiss'd thy hand, and held my stirrup!
Bare-headed plodded by my foot-cloth nude,

And thought thee happy when I shook my head?

How often hast thou waited at my cap,

Fed from my trencher, kneel'd down at the board,
When I have feasted with queen Margaret?

Remember it, and let it make thee crest-fall'n;
Ay, and allay this thy aborative pride:
How in our voiding lobby hast thou stood,

And duly waited for my coming forth?
This hand of mine hath writ in thy behalf,

And therefore shall it charm thy rictous tongue.

White. Speak, captain, shall I stab the forlorn saint?
Cap. First let me your words stab him, as he hath me.
Suf. Base slave! thy words be blunt, and so art thou.

Cap. Convey him hence, and on our long-boat's side

Strike off his head.

Suf. Thou darst not for thy own.

Cap. Yes, Poole.

Suf. Poole?
Cap. And as for these whose ransom we have set,
It is our pleasure, one of them depart—
Therefore come you with us, and let him go.
[Exeunt all but the first Gentleman.

Re-enter Whitmore, with Suffolk's body.

Whit. There let his head and lifeless body lie,
Until the queen his mistress bury it.
[Exit.

1 Geo. O barbarous and bloody spectacle!
His body will I bear unto the king:
If he revenge it not, yet will his friends;
So will the queen, that living held him dear.
[Exit, with the body.

SCENE II.—Blackheath.

Enter George Bevis and John Holland.

Geo. Come, and get thee a sword, though made of a lath: they have been up these two days.

John. They have the more need to sleep now then.

Geo. I tell thee, Jack Cade the clothier means to dress the commonwealth, and turn it, and set a new map upon it.

John. So he had need, for 'tis threadbare. Well, I say, it was never merry world in England, since gentlemen cause up.

Geo. O miserable age! Virtue is not regarded in handycrafts-men.

John. The nobility think scurvy to go in leather aprons.

Geo. Nay more, the king's council are no good workmen.

John. True; and yet it is said, — Labour in thy vocation: which is as much to say, as,—let the magistrates be labouring men; and therefore should we be magistrates.

Geo. Thou hast hit it: for there's no better sign of a brave mind, than a hard hand.

John. I see them! I see them! There's Best's son, the tanner of Wingham;—

Geo. He shall have the skins of our enemies, to make dog's leather of.

John. And Dick the butcher,—

Geo. Then is sin struck down like an ox, and iniquity's throat cut like a calf.

John. And Smith the weaver.

Geo. Argo, their thread of life is spun.

John. Come, come, let's fall in with them.

Drum. Enter Cade, Dick the butcher, Smith the weaver, and others in great number.

Cade. We John Cade, so termed of our supposed father,—

Dick. Or rather, of stealing a cade of herrings.

[Cade. — for our enemies shall fall before us, inspired with the spirit of putting down kings and princes, Command said silence.

Dick. Silence!

Cade. My father was a Mortimer,—

Dick. He was an honest man, and a good bricklayer.

[Cade. — My mother a Plantagenet.—

Dick. I knew her well, she was a midwife.

[Cade. — My wife descended of the Lucy's,—

Dick. She was, indeed, a pedlar's daughter, and sold many faces.

[Cade. — Smith. But, now of late, not able to travel with her furred pack, she washes buck's here at home.

Cade. Therefore am I of an honourable house.

Dick. Ay, by my faith, the field is honourable; and there was he born, under a hedge; for his father had never a house, but the cage.

Cade. Valiant I am.

Smith. 'A must needs; for beggary is valiant.

Cade. I am able to endure much.

Dick. No question of that; for I have seen him whipped three market days together.

Cade. I fear neither sword nor fire.

Smith. He need not fear the sword, for his coat is of proof.

Dick. But, methinks, he should stand in fear of fire, being burnt? the hand for stealing of sheep.

Cade. De brave then; for your captain is brave, and vows reformation. There shall be, in England, seven half-penny leaves sold for a penny; the three-hooped pot shall have two hoops; and I will make it felony, to drink small beer: all the realm shall be in common, and in Cheapside shall my pallet go to grass. And, when I am king, (as king I will be)—

All. God save your majesty!

Cade. I think you, good people—there shall be no money; all shall eat and drink on my score; and I will apparel them all in livery, that they may agree, and worship me their lord.

Dick. The first thing we do, let's kill all the lawyers.

Cade. Nay, that I mean to do. Is not this a lamentable thing, that of the skin of an innocent lamb should be made parchment? that parchment, being scribbled o'er, should undo a man! Some say, the bee stings: but I say, 'tis the bee's wax, for I did but seal once to a thing, and I was never mine own man since. How now! who's there?

Enter some, bringing in the Clerk of Chatham.

Smith. The clerk of Chatham: he can write and read, and cast accounts.

Cade. O monstrous!

Smith. We took him setting of boys' copies.

Cade. Here's a villain

Smith. If as a book in his pocket, with red letters in't.

Cade. Nay, then he is a conjurer.

Dick. Nay, he can make obligations, and write court-hand.

Cade. I am sorry for't: the man is a proper man, on mine honour; unless I find him guilty, he shall not die—Come hither, sirrah, I must examine thee: What is thy name?

Clerk. Emmanuel.

Dick. They use to write it on the top of letters—

'Twill go hard with you.

Cade. Let me alone:—Dost thou use to write thy name or hast thou a mark to thyself, like an honest plain-dealing man?

Clerk. Sir, I thank God, I have been so well brought up, that I can write my name.

All. He hath confessed: away with him; he's a villain, and a traitor.

Cade. Away with him, I say: hang him with his pen and inkhorn about his neck.

[Exeunt some with the Clerk.]

Enter Michael.

Mich. Where's our general?

Cade. Here I am, thou particular fellow.

Mich. Fly, fly, fly! sir Humphrey Stafford and his brother are hard by, with the king's forces.

Cade. Stand, villain, stand, or I'll fell thee down: He that encounters with a man as good as himself: He is but a knight, is 'a?

Mich. No.

Cade. To equal him, I will make myself a knight presently; Rise up sir John Mortimer. Now have at him.

Enter Sir Humphrey Stafford, and William his brother, with drum and Forces.

Staf. Rebellious hounds, the fifth and scum of Kent, Mark'd for the gallows,—lay your weapons down, Home to your cottages, forsake this grooms—

The king is merciful, if you revolt.

W. Staf. But angry, wrathful, and inclin'd to blood, If you go forward: Therefore yield, or die.

Cade. As for these silken-coated slaves, I pass not: It is to you, good people, that I speak, O'er whom, in time to come, I hope to reign For I am rightful heir unto the crown.

Staf. Villain, thy father was a platerer: And thou thyself, a smearman, Art thou not?

Cade. And Adam was a gardener.

W. Staf. And what of that?

Cade. Marry this: Edmund Mortimer, earl of March, Married the duke of Clarence's daughter;—Did he not?

Staf. Ay, sir.

Cade. By her, he had two children at one birth W. Staf. That's false.

Cade. Ay, there's the question; but, I say, 'tis true The elder of them, being put to nurse, Was by a beggar-woman stol'n away; And, ignorant of his birth and parentage, Became a bricklayer, when he came to age:

His son am I; deny it, if you can.

Dick. Nay, 'tis too true: therefore he shall be king And one shall be a chimney in his father's house, and the bricks are alive at this day to testify it; therefore, deny it not.

Staf. And will you eredit this base drudge's words, That speaks he knows not what?

All. Ay, marry, will we; therefore get ye gone.

W. Staf. Jack Cade, the duke of York hath taught me.

Cade. He lies, for I invented it myself. [Aside]— Go to, sirrah, Tell the king from me, that—for his father's sake, Henry the Fifth, in whose time boys went to span-counter for French crowns,—I am content he shall reign; but I'll be protector over him.

Dick. And, furthermore, we'll have the lord Say's head, for selling the doredom of Maine. And good reason, for the livery is England maimed, and fan to go with a staff, but that my puissance holds it up. Fellow kings, I tell you, that that lord Say hath gelded the commonwealth, and made it an enuch: and more than that, he can speak French, and therefore he is a traitor.

Staf. O gross and miserable ignorance!

Cade. Nay, answer, if you can: The Frenchmen are our enemies: go to then, I ask but this: Can he, that speaks with the tongue of an enemy, be a good counsellor, or no?

All. No, no; and therefore we'll have his head.

W. Staf. Well, seeing gentle words will not pre-assail them with the army of the king. [vail, Staf. Herald, away; and, throughout every town, Proclaim them traitors that are up with Cade; That these, which fly before the battle ends, May, even in their wives' and children's sight, Be hang'd up for example at their doors:—

And you, that be the king's friends, follow me.

[Exeunt the two Stafford, and Forces.]

Cade. And you, that love the commons, follow me.— No shame show yourselves men, 'tis for liberty. We will not leave one lord, one gentleman—

Spare none, but such as go in clouted shoon;
For they are thrifty honest men, and such
As would (but that they dare not,) take our parts.
Dick. They are all in order, and march toward us.
Cade. But then are we in order, when we are most out of order. Come, march forward. [Exeunt.]

SCENE III.—Another Part of Blackheath.

Aubrum. The two parties enter and fight, and both the Staffordps are slain.

Cade. Where's Dick, the butcher, of Ashford?
Dick. Here, sir.
Cade. They fell before thee like sheep and oxen, and thou behavest thyself as if thou hadst been in thine own slaughter-house; therefore thus will I reward thee,—The Lont shall be as long again as it is; and thou shalt have a license to kill for a hundred lacking one.
Dick. I desire no more.

Cade. And, to speak truth, thou deservest no less. This monument of the victory I will bear; and the bodies shall be dragged at my horse's heels, till I do come to London; where we will have the mayor's sword borne before us.
Dick. If we mean to thrive and do good, break open the gaols, and let out the prisoners.
Cade. Fear not that, I warrant thee. Come, let's march towards London. [Exeunt.]

SCENE IV.—London. A Room in the Palace.

Enter King Henry, reading a supplication: the Duke of Buckingham, and Lord Say, with him; at a distance, Queen Margaret, mourning over Suffolk's head.

Q. Mar. Oft have I heard,—that grief softens the And makes it fearful and degenerate; the mind; Think therefore on revenge, and cease to weep. But who can cease to weep, and look on this! Here may his head lie on my throbbing breast: But where's the body of what I should embrace? Buck. What answer makes your grace to the rebels' speeches?
K. Hen. I'll send some holy bishop to entreat: For God forbid, so many simple souls Should perish by the sword! And I myself, Rather than bloody war should cut them short, Will parley with Jack Cade their general.— But stay, I'll read it over once again.
Q. Mar. Ah, barbarous villains! hath this lovely Ru'd, like a wandering planet, over me? [Face And could it not enforce them to relent, That were unworthy to behold the same? K. Hen. Lord Say, Jack Cade hath sworn to have thy head.

Say. Ay, but my hope, thy highness shall have his. K. Hen. How now, madam! Still Lamenting, and mourning for Suffolk's death? I fear, my love, if that I had been dead, Thou wouldst not have mourn'd so much for me. Q. Mar. No, my love, I should not mourn, but die for thee.

Enter a Messenger.

K. Hen. How now! what news? why com st thou in such haste?

Mess. The rebels are in Southwark; Fly, my lord! Jack Cade proclaims himself lord Mortimer. Descended from the duke of Clarence' house; And calls your grace usurper, openly, And vows to crown himself in Westminster. His army is a ragged multitude Of kinds and peasants, rude and merciless:
Sir Humphrey Stafford and his brother's death Hath given them heart and courage to proceed; All scholars, lawyers, courtiers, gentlemen They call—false caterpillars, and intend their death.
K. Hen. O graceless me! they know not what they do.

Buck. My gracious lord, retire to Kenelworth, Until a power be rais'd to put them down.

Q. Mar. Ah! were the duke of Suffolk now alive, These Kentish rebels would be soon appeas'd.
K. Hen. Lord Say, the traitors hate thee, Therefore away with us to Kenelworth.

Say. So might your grace's person be in danger; The sight of me is odious in their eyes; And therefore in this city will I stay, And live alone as secret as I may.

Enter another Messenger.

2 Mess. Jack Cade hath gotten London-bridge; the Fly and farseake their houses; [citizens The rascal people, thirsting after prey,
Join to the traitors: and this jointly swear, To spoil the city, and your royal court. Buck. Then finger not, my lord; away, take horse. K. Hen. Come, Margaret; God, our hope, will succour us.

Q. Mar. My hope is gone, now Suffolk is deceas'd. K. Hen. Farewell, thy lord! [to Lord Say.] I trust not the Kentish rebels.

Buck. Trust no body, for fear you be betrayed.

Say. The trust I have is in mine innocency, And therefore am I bold and resolute. [Exeunt.]

SCENE V.—The same. The Tower.

Enter Lord Scales, and others, on the walls. Then enter certain Citizens, below.

Scales. How now? is Jack Cade slain?

1 Cit. No, my lord, nor likely to be slain; for they have won the bridge, killing all those that withstand them: The lord mayor craves aid of your honour from the Tower, to defend the city from the rebels.

Scales. Such wishes I can scarce comply with. But I am troubled here with them myself. The rebels have assay'd to win the Tower. But get you to Smithfield, and gather head, And thither I will send you Matthew Gough. Fight for your king, your country, and your lives; And so farewell, for I must hence again. [Exeunt.]

SCENE VI.—The same. Cannon-street.

Enter Jack Cade, and his Followers. He strikes his staff on London-stone.

Cade. Now is Mortimer lord of this city. And here, sitting upon London-stone, I charge and command, that, till the city's cost, the passing conduit run nothing but claret wine this first year of our reign. And now, henceforward, it shall be treason for any that calls me other than—lord Mortimer.

Enter a Soldier, running.

Sold. Jack Cade! Jack Cade!

Cade. Knock him down there. [They kill him. Smith. If this fellow be wise, he'll never call you Jack Cade more; I think, he hath a very fair warning.

Dick. My lord, there's an army gathered together in Smithfield.

Cade. Come then, let's go fight with them: But, first, go and set London-bridge on fire; and, if you can, burn down the Tower too. Come, let's away.
KING HENRY VI.—PART II.

SCENE VII.—The same. Smithfield.

Alarum. Enter, on one side, Caius and his company; on the other, Citizens, and the King's Forces, headed by Matthew Gough. They fight; the Citizens are routed, and Matthew Gough is slain.

Cade. So, sirs: Now go some and pull down the Savoy; others to the inns of court; down with them all.

Dick. I have a suit unto your lordship.

Cade. Be it a lordship, thou shalt have it for that word.

Dick. Only, that the laws of England may come out of your mouth.

John. Mass, 'twill be sore law then; for he was thrust in the mouth with a spear, and 'tis not whole yet.

Cade. I have thought upon it, it shall be so. Away, burn all the records of the realm; my mouth shall be the parliament of England.

John. Then we are like to have sitting statutes, unless his teeth be pulled out.

[Aside. Cade. And henceforward all things shall be in common.

Enter a Messenger.

Mess. My lord, a prize, a prize! here's the lord Say, which sold the townes in France; he that made us pay one and twenty fifteen, and one shooting to the pound, the last subsidy.

Enter George Bevis, with the Lord Say.

Cade. Well, he shall be beheaded for it ten times.

Ah, thou say, thou serge, nay, thou buckram lord! now art thou within point blank of our jurisdiction regal. What canst thou answer to my majesty, for giving up of Normandy unto monstrous Basimeu, the dauphin of France? Be it known unto thee, by these presence, even the presence of lord Mortimer, that I am the besem that must sweep the court clean of such filth as thou art. Thou hast most traitorously corrupted the youth of the realm, in erecting a grammar-school: and whereas, before, our fore-fathers had no other books but the score and the tally, thou hast caused printing to be used; and, contrary to the king, his crown and dignity, thou hast built a paper-mill. It will be proved to thy face, that thou hast built a house that usually talk of a noun, and a verb; and such abominable words, as no Christian ear can endure to hear. Thou hast appointed justices of peace, to call poor men before them about matters they were not able to answer. Moreover, thou hast put them in prison; and because they could not read, thou hast hanged them; when, indeed, only for that cause they have been most worthy to live. Thou dost ride on a foot-cloth, dost thou not?

Say. What of that?

Cade. Marry, thou oughtest not to let thy horse wear a cloak, when honest men than thou go in their hose and doublets.

Dick. And work in their shirt too; as myself, for example, that am a butcher.

Say. You know of Kent.

Dick. What say you of Kent?

Say. Nothing but this: 'Tis bona terra, magna gens. Cade. Away with him, away with him! he speaks Latin.

Say. Hear me but speak, and bear me where you Kent, in the commentaries Caesar writ,

[will. Is term'd the civil'it place of all this isle: Sweet in the country, because full of riches; The people liberal, valiant, active, wealthy;

Which makes me hope you are not void of pity. I sold not Maine, I lost not Normandy:

Yet, to recover them, would lose my life. Justice with favour have I always done;

Prayers and tears have mov'd me, gifts could never. When have I aught exacted at your hands?

Bent to maintain the king, the realm, and you, Large gifts have I bestow'd on learned clerks,

Because my book pretend'd me to the king; And—seeing ignorance is the curse of God, Unless you be possess'd with devilish spirits, You cannot but forbear to murder me.

This tongue hath parley'd unto foreign kings For your behoof,

Cade. Tout! when struck'st thou one blow in the field? Say. Great men have reaching hands: oft have I struck Those that I never saw, and struck them dead, [folks? Geo. O monstrous coward! what, to come behind Say. These cheeks are pale for watching for your good.

Cade. Give him a box o' the ear, and that will make 'em red again.

Say. Let judging to determine poor men's causes Hath made me full of sickness and diseases.

Cade. Ye shall have a hemon candle then, and the pap of a hatchet.

Dick. Why dost thou quiver, man?

Say. The palsy, and not fear, provoketh me.

Cade. Nay, he nods at us; as who should say, 'I'll be even with you. I'll see if his head will stand amongst a pole, or no: Take him away, and behead him.

Say. Tell me, wherein I have offended most! Have I affected wealth, or honour; speak? Are my cheests fill'd up with extorted gold? Is my apparel sumptuous to behold? Whom have I injur'd, that ye seek my death! These hands are free from guiltless blood-sheeding. This breast from harbouring foul deceitful thoughts. O, let me live!

Cade. I feel remorse in myself with his words: but I'll bide it; he shall die, an it be but for pleading so well for his life. Away with him! he has a familiar under his tongue; he speaks not o' God's name. Go, take him away, I say, and strike off his head prentice. He that shall bring in his son-in-law's house, sir James Cromer, and strike off his head, and bring them both upon two poles hither.

All. It shall be done.

Say. Ah, countrymen! if when you make your God should be so olerude as yourselves, [prayers, How would it fare with your departed souls! And therefore yet relent, and save my life.

Cade. Away with him, and do as I command ye.

The proudest peer in the realm shall not wear a head on his shoulders, unless he pay me tribute; there shall not a maid be married, but she shall pay to me her maidenhead ere they have it: Men shall hold of me in capite; and we charge and command, that their wives can have of their heart can wish, or tongue can tell.

Dick. My lord, when shall we go to Cheapside, and take up commodities upon our bills?

Cade. Marry, presently.

All. O brave!

Re-enter Rebels, with the heads of Lord Say and his Son-in-law.

Cade. But is not this braver! —Let them kiss one another, for they loved well, when they were alive.
here is no staying.—In despot of the devils and hell, have through the very midst of you! and heavens and honour be witness, that no want of resolution in me, but only my followers' base and ignominious treasons, makes me betake me to my heels.

Enter. Buck. What, is he fled? go, some, and follow him; and he, that brings his head unto the king, shall have a thousand crowns for his reward.

Follow me, soldiers; we'll devise a mean;
To reconcile you all unto the king.

Follow, some of them.

Enter, King Henry, Queen Margaret, and
Seymore, on the terrace of the Castle.

K. Hen. Was ever a king, that joy'd an earthly throne, and could command no more content than I? No sooner was I crept out of my cradle, but I was made a king, at nine months old:
Was never subject long'd to be a king,
As I do long and wish to be a subject.

Enter Buckingham and Clifford.

Buck. Heath! and glad tidings, to your majesty! K. Hen. Why, Buckingham, is the traitor Cade sur-
Or is he but retir'd to make him strong? [priz'd]

Enter, below, a great number of Cade's Followers, with halter's about their necks.

Cliff. He's bed, my lord, and all his powers do yield; and humble these, with halter's on their necks,
Expect your highness' doom, of life, or death.

K. Hen. Then, heaven set ope thy everlasting gates,
To entertain my vows of thanks and praise!—
Soldiers, this day have you redeem'd your lives, and shew'd how well you love your prince and coun-
Continue still in this so good a mind, [cry]
And Henry, though he be unfortunate,
Assure yourselves, will never be unkind;
And so, with thanks, and pardon to you all,
I do dismiss you to your several countries.

All. God save the king! God save the king!

Enter a Messenger. Mess. Please it your grace to be advertised,
The duke of York is newly come from Ireland:
And with a puissant and a mighty power,
Of Gallowsglasses, and stout Kernes,
Is marching hitherward in proud array:
And still proclameth, as he comes along,
His arms are only to remove from thee
The duke of Somerset, whom he terms a traitor.

K. Hen. Thus stands mystate, 'twixt Cade and York
distress'd;
Like to a ship, that having 'scape'd a tempest,
Is straitway calm'd and boarded with a pirate;
But now is Cade driven back, his men dispers'd; and Now is York in arms to second him.—
I pray thee, Buckingham, go forth and meet him:
And ask him, what's the reason of these arms.
Tell him, I'll send duke Edmund to the Tower?—
And, Somerset, we will commit them thither,
Until his army be dismissed from him.

Som. My lord,
I'll yield myself to prison willingly,
Or unto death, to do my country good.

K. Hen. In any case, be not too rough in terms;
For he is fierce, and cannot brook hard language.
Buck. I will, my lord; and doubt not so to deal,
As all things shall redound unto your good.

[Enter. K. Hen. Come, wife, let's and learn to govern bet-
For yet may England curse my wretched reign.

[Exeunt.}
SCENE X.—Kent. Iden's Garden.

Enter Cade.

Cade. Fye on ambition! fye on myself; that have a sword, and yet am ready to famish! These five days have I been in these woods; there I sit, and put out, for all the country is lay'd for me; but now I am so hungry, that if I might have a lease of my life for a thousand years, I could stay no longer. Wherefore, on a brick-wall have I climbed into this garden; to see if I can eat grass, or pick a sallet another while, which is not amiss to cool a man's stomach this hot weather. And, I think, this word sallet was born to do me good for, in many a time, for a sallet, my brain-pan had been cleft with a brown bill; and, many a time, when I have been dry, and bravely marching, it hath serv'd me instead of a quart-pot to drink in; and now the word sallet must serve me to feed on.

Enter Iden, with Servants.

Iden. Lord, who would live tormoiled in the court, And may enjoy such quiet walks as these? This small inheritance, my father left me, Conteneth me, and is worth a monarchy. I seek not to wax great by others' warranting; Or gather wealth, I care not with what envy; Sufficeth, that I have maintains my state, And sends the poor well pleased from my gate. Cade. Here's the lord of the soil come to seize me for a stray, for entering his fee-simple without leave. Ah, villain, thou wilt betray me, and get a thousand crowns of the king for carrying my head to him; but I'll make thee a catkin like an ostrich, and swallow my sword like a great pin, ere thou and I part. Iden. Why, rude companion, whatsoever thou be, I know thee not; Why then should I betray thee? Is't not enough to break into my garden, And, like a thief, to come to rob my grounds, Climbing my walls in spite of me the owner, But thou wilt betray me with these sancy terms? Cade. Brave thee? ay, by the best blood that ever was broached, and heard thee too. Look on me well; I have eat no meat these five days: yet, come thou and thy five men, and if I do not leave you all as dead as a door-nail, I pray God, I may never eat grass more. Iden. Nay, it shall never be said while England That Alexander Iden, an esquire of Kent, [stands, This shall be to come to mince men's bones. Oppose thy stoutest glasses to mine, See if thou canst outface me with thy looks. Set limb to limb, and thou art far the lesser; Thy hand is but a finger to my fist; Thy leg a stick, compared with this truncheon; My foot shall fight with all the strength thou hast; And if mine arm be heaved in the air, Thy grave is digged already in the earth. As for more words, whose greatness answers words, Let this my sword report what speech forbeares. Cade. By my valour, the most complete champion that ever I heard.—Steel, if thou turn the edge, or cut not out the burley-boned clown in chins of beef ere thou sleep in thy sheath, I beseech God on my knees, thou mayest be turned to hob-nails. [They fight. Cade falls.] O, I am slain! famine, and no other, hath slain me: let ten thousand devils come against me, and give me but the ten meals I have lost, and I'd defy them all. Wither, garden; and henceforth a burying place to all that do dwell in this house, because the unconquered soul of Cade is fled. Iden. Is't Cade that I have slain, that monstrous traitor?—Swell, I will hang thee for this thy deed, [for? And hang thee o'er my tomb, when I am dead:—

Ne'er shall this blood be wiped from thy point; But thou shalt wear it as a herald's coat, To embraze the honour that thy master got.

Iden. Iden, farewell: and be proud of thy victory. Tell Kent from me, she hath lost her best man, and exhort all the world to be cowards; for, that never feared any, am vanquished by famine, not by valour.

ACT V.

SCENE I.—The same. Fields between Dartford and Blackheath.

The King's Camp on one side. On the other, enter York, attended, with drum and colours: his Forces at some distance.

York. From Ireland thus comes York to claim his right.

And pluck the crown from feeble Henry's head: Ring, bells, aloud: burn, bonfires, clear and bright; To entertain great England's lawful king. Ah, sancta majestas! who would not buy thee dear? Let them obey, that know not how to rule; This hand was made to handle nought but gold: I cannot give due action to my words, Except a sword, or sceptor, balance it. A sceptor shall it have, have I a soul, On which I'll toss the flower-de-luce of France.

Enter Buckingham.

Whoe have we here? Buckingham, to disturb me? The king hath sent him sure: I must dissemble. Buck. If, York, if thou meanest well, I great thee well. York. Haply Buckingham, I accept thy Art thou a messenger, or come of pleasure? [greeting. Buck. A messenger from Henry, our dread liege, To know the reason of these arms in peace; Or why, thou—being a subject as I am,— Against thy oath and true allegiance sworn, Should'st raise so great a power without his leave, Or dare to bring thy force so near the court, York. Searce can I speak, my choler is so great. O, I could hew up rocks, and fight with fiant, I am so angry at these abject terms; And now, like Ajax Telamonius, On sheep and oxen could I spend my fury! A side. I am far better born than is the king; More like a king, more kindly in my thoughts; But I must make fair weather yet a while, Till Henry be more weak, and I more strong.—

O Buckingham, I pr'ythee, pardon me, That I have given no answer all this while, My mind was troubled with deep melancholy. The cause why I have brought this army hither, Is—to remove proud Somerset from the king, Selctions to his grace, and to the state.
Buck. That is too much presumption on thy part: if by thy arms be to no other end, the king hath yielded unto thy demand; the duke of Somerset is in the Tower.

York. Upon thine honour, is he prisoner?

Buck. Upon mine honour, he is prisoner.

York. Then, Buckingham, I do dismiss my powers,—soldiers, I thank you all; disperse yourselves; meet me to-morrow in Saint George's field, you shall have pay, and every thing you wish. And let my sovereign, virtuous Henry, Command my eldest son,—nay, all my sons, is pledges of my faith and love, I'll send them all as willing as I live; lands, goods, horse, armour, anything I have is his to use, so Somerset may die.

Buck. York, I commend this kind submission: We twain will go into his highness' tent.

Enter King Henry, attended.

K. Hen. Buckingham, dost thou contend no harm to That thus he marcheth with thee arm in arm? [us, York. In all submission and humility, York doth present himself unto thy highness. [bring?

K. Hen. Then what intend these forces thou dost

York. To heave the traitor Somerset from hence; and fight against the monstrous rebel, Cade, Who since I heard to be discomfited.

Enter Iden, with Cade's head.

Iden. If on so rude, and of so mean condition, lay pass into the presence of a king,

K. Hen. The head of Cade!—Great God, how just

Iden. Present your grace a traitor's head, the head of Cade, whom I in combat slew.

K. Hen. And I am sure I have a mind to know

Iden. What art thou call'd? and what is thy degree?

K. Hen. Alexander Iden, that's my name; A poor esquire of Kent, that loves his king.

Buck. So please it you, my lord, 'twere not amiss Here were created knight for his good service.

K. Hen. Iden, kneel down; [He kneels.] Rise up a knight, and let the world know he's for reward a thousand marks; [knight. And will, that thou henceforth attend on us.

Iden. May Iden live to merit such a bounty, And never live but true unto his liege! K. Hen. See, Buckingham! Somerset comes with the 366, bid her hide him quickly from the duke.[queen; Enter Queen Margaret and Somerset.

Q. Mar. For thousand Yorks he shall not hide his feet boldly stand, and front him to his face. [head, York. How now! Is Somerset at liberty?

Then, York, unloose thy long-imprison'd thoughts, And let thy tongue be equal with thy heart. Shall I endure the sight of Somerset? False king! why hast thou broken faith with me, Knowing how hardly I can break abuse? King did I call thee? no, thou art not king; Not fit to govern and rule multitudes, Which darst not, no, nor canst not rule a traitor. That head of thine doth not become a crown: Thy hand is made to grasp a palmer's staff, And not to grace an awful princely sceptre. That gold must round engirt these brows of mine; Whose smile and frown, like to Achilles' spear, Is able with the change to kill and cure. Here is a hand to hold a scepter up, And with the same to act contriving laws. Give place; by heaven, thou shalt rule no more Of him whom heaven created for thy ruler.

Som. O monstrous traitor!—I arrest thee, York, Of capital treason 'gainst the king and crown: Obey, audacious traitor; kneel for grace.

York. Would'st have me kneel? first let me ask of If they canbrook I bow a knee to man.— [these,

Sarah, call in my sons to be my bane, To save me from the traitor. [Exit an Attendant

I know, ere they will have me go to ward, They'll pawn their swords for my enfranchisement.

Q. Mar. Call hither Clifford; bid him come again, [Exit Buckingham.

To say, if that the bastard boys of York Shall be the surety for their traitor father.

York. O blood-bespotted Neapolitan, Outcast of Naples, England's bloody scourge! The sons of York, thy better in their birth, Shall be their father's bane; and base to those That for my surety will refuse the boys.

Enter Edward and Richard Plantagenet, with Forces, at one side; at the other, with Forces also, Old Clifford and his Son.

See, where they come; I'll warrant they'll make it good.

Q. Mar. And here comes Clifford, to deny their bane. Cif. Health! and all happiness to my lord the king! [Kneels.

York. I thank thee, Clifford: Say, what news with Nay, do not fright us with an army! [York: [Thee! We are thy sovereign, Clifford, kneel again; For thy misconstruing, so we pardon thee.

Cif. This is my king, York. I do not mistake; But thou mistak'st me much, to think I do:

To Bedlam with him! is the man grown mad? K. Hen. Ay, Clifford; a bedlam and ambitious hu-

Make's him drench himself with blood and gruel. [kneels.

Cif. He is a traitor; let him to the Tower, And chop away that factious pate of his. Q. Mar. He is arrested, but will not obey; His sons, he says, shall give their words for him.

York. Will you not, sons? Eng. Ay, noble father, if our words will serve. Rich. And if our words will not, then our weapons shall.

Cif. Why, what a breed of traitors have we here! York. Look in a glass, and call thy image so; I am thy king, and thou a false-heart traitor.— Call hither to the stake my two brave bears, That, with the very shaking of their chains, They may astonish these fell lurking curs; Bid Salisbury, and Warwick, come to me.

Drum. Enter Warwick and Salisbury, with Forces.

Cif. Are these thy bears? we'll bait thy bears to And manacle the bear-ward in their chains, [death, If thou dar'st bring them to the baiting-place.

Rich. Oft have I seen a hot o'erweening cur Run back and bite, because he was withheld; Who, being satisfied, would have gone his way, Hath clipp'd his tail between his legs, and cry'd: And such a piece of service will you do, If you oppose yourselves to match lord Warwick.

Cif. Hence, heap of wrath, foul indigested lump, As mocked in thy manners as thy shape!

York. Nay, we shall beat you thoroughly anon.

Cif. Take thee need, lest by thy beat you burn your- selves.

K. Hen. Why, Warwick, hast thy knee forget To Old Salisbury,—shame to thy silver hair, [how? Thou mad misleader of thy brain-sick son!— What, wilt thou on thy death-bed play the ruffian, And seek for sorrow with thy spectacles? O, where is faith? O, where is loyalty!
If it be dishonourable from the frosty head, Where shall it find a harbour in the earth?— Wilt thou go dig a grave to find out war, And shame thine honourable age with blood? Why art thou old, and want'st experience? Or wherefore dost abuse it, if thou hast it? For shame! in duty bend thy knee to me, That bows unto the grave with middle age.

Sal. My lord, I have consider'd with myself The title of this most renowned duke; And in my conscience do repute his grace The rightfull heir to England's royal seat. K. Hen. Hast thou not sworn allegiance unto me? Sal. I have. K. Hen. Canst thou dispense with heaven for such an Sal. It is great sin, to swear unto a sin; [oath? But greater sin, to keep a sinful oath. Who can be bound by any solemn vow To do a murder, to rob a man, To force a spotless virgin's chastity, To leave the orphan of his patrimony, To wrong the widow from her husband's right; And have no other reason for this wrong, But that he was bound by a solemn oath? Q. Mar. A sublie traitor need's no sophister. K. Hen. Call Buckingham, and bid him arm himself. York. Call Buckingham, and all the friends thou I am resolv'd for death, or dignity. [hast, Clif. The first I warrant thee, it dreams prove true, York. If you were best to go to bed, and dream again, To keep thee from the tempest of the field, Clif. I am resolv'd to bear a greater storm, Than any thou canst conjure up to day; And that I'll write upon thy burgonet, Might I but know thee by thy household badge. War. Now, by my father's badge, old Neville's crest, The rampant bear chain'd to the ragged staff, This day I will wear aloft my burgonet, [As on a mountain-top the cedar shews, That keeps his leaves in spite of any storm,) Even to affright thee with the view thereof. Clif. And from thy burgonet I'll rend thy bear, And tread it under foot with all contempt, Despight the bearward that protects the bear. York. And so to commends, victorious father, To quell the rebels, and their complices. Rich. Fye! charity, for shame! speak not in spite, For you shall sup with Jesus Christ to-night. [tell. Y. Clif. Foul stigmatical, that's more than thou canst Rich. It not in heaven, you'll surely sup in hell. [Loudly severally.

SCENE II.—Saint Albans.

Alarums: Excursions. Enter Warwick.

War. Clifford of Cumberland, 'tis Warwick calls! And if thou dost not hide thee from the bear, Now,—when the angry trumpet sounds alarm, And dead men's cries do fill the empty air,— Clifford, I say, come forth and fight with me! Proud northern lord, Clifford of Cumberland, Warwick is house with calling thee to arms. Enter York.

How now, my noble lord? what all a-foot? York. The deadly-handed Clifford slew my steed; But match to match I have encounter'd him, And made a prey for carrion kites and crows, Even of the bonny beast he lov'd so well. Enter Clifford.

War. Of one or both of us the time is come. York. Hold, Warwick, seek thee out some other For I myself must hunt this deer to death. [chase, War. Then, nobly, York; 'tis for a crown thou As I intend, Clifford, to thrive to-day, [fight'st. It grieves my soul to leave thee unassail'd. [Exit Warwick.

Clif. What seem'st thou in me, York? why dost thou pause! York. With thy brave bearing should I be in love, But that thou art so fast mine enemy. Clif. Nor shouldst thou prove'st want praise and esteem, But that 'tis shewn ignobly, and in treason. York. So let it help me now against thy sword, As I in justice and true right express it! Clif. My soul and body on the action both!— York. A dreadful lay!—address thee instantly. [They fight, and Clifford falls. Clif. La fin en revons les œuvres. [Dies. York. Thus war hath given thee peace, for thou art still. Peace with his soul, heaven, if it be thy will! [Exit. Enter Young Clifford.

Y. Clif. Shame and confusion! all is on the rout; Fear frames disorder, and disorder wounds Where it should guard. O war, thou son of hell, Whom angry heavens do make their minister, Throw in the frozen bosoms of our part Hot coals of vengeance!—Let no soldier fly; He that is truly dedicate to war, Hath no self love; nor he, that loves himself, Hath not essentially, but by circumstance, The name of valor. O, let the vile world end, [Seeing his dead father And the promised flames of the last day Knit earth and heaven together! Now let the general trumpet blow his blast, Particularities and petty sounds To cease!—Wast thou ordained, dear father, To lose thy youth in peace, and to achieve The silver livery of advised age, And, in thy reverence, and thy chair-days, thus To die in rufian battle?—Even at this sight, My heart is turn'd to stone; and, while 'tis mine It shall be stony. York not our old men spares; No more will I their labors; tears virginal Shall be to me even as the dew to fire; And beauty, that the tyrant oft clasched, Shall to my flaming wrath be oil and flax. Henceforth, I will not have to do with pity: Meet I an infant of the house of York, Into as many gobbets will I cut it, As wild Medea young Absyrtus did; In cruelty will I seek out my fame. Come, then new ruin of old Clifford's house; [Tack up the body. As did Asceas old Anchises bear, So bear I thee upon my manly shoulders; But then Asceas bare a living load, Nothing so heavy as these woes of mine. Enter Richard Plantagenet and Somerset, fighting, and Somerset is killed. Rich. So, lie thou there; For, underneath an heaviest power sign, The Castle in Saint Alban's, Somerset Hath made the wizard famous in his death.— Sword, hold thy temper; heart, be wrathful still; Priests pray for enemies, but princes kill. Enter Alarums: Excursions. Enter King Henry, Queen Margaret, and others, retrieving. Q. Mar. Away, my lord! you are slow; for shame, away!
ACT V.—SCENE III.

K. Hen. Can we outrun the heavens? good Margaret, stay.
Q. Mar. What are you made of? you'll not fight,
Now is it manhood, wisdom, and defence,
To give the enemy way, and to secure
By what we can, which can no more but fly.

If you be too'n, we then should see the bottom
Of all our fortunes: but if we happily scape,
Well we may, if not through your neglect.
We shall to London get: you where you are lov'd,
And where this breach, now in our fortunes made,
May readily be stop'd.

Enter Young Clifford.

Y. Cliff. But that my heart's on future mischief,
I would speak blasphemy ere bid you fly; [set,
But fly you must; uncurable discomfit
Reigns in the hearts of all our present parts.

Away, for your relief: and we will live
To see their day, and them our fortune give;
Away, my lord, away!

EXECUT.

SCENE III.—Fields near Saint Albans.

Harum: Retreat. Flourish: then enter York,
Richard Plantagenet, Warwick, and Soldiers, with drum and colours.

York. Of Salisbury, who can report of him;
That winter lion, who, in rage, forgets
Aged contumies and all brush of time;
And, like a gallant in the brow of youth,
Repairs him with occasion? this happy day

Is not itself, nor have we won one foot,
If Salisbury be lost.

Rich.
My noble father,
Three times to-day I help him to his horse,
Three times bestrud him, thrice I led him off,
Persuaded him from any further act:
But still, where danger was, still there I met him;
And like rich hangings in a homely house,
So was his will in his old feeble body.

But, noble as he is, look where he comes.

Enter Salisbury.

Sal. Now, by my sword, well hast thou fought to-day:
By the mass, so did we all.—I thank you, Richard:
God knows, how long it is I have to live;
And it hath pleas'd him, that three times to-day
You have defended me from imminent death.
Well, lords, we have not got that which we have:
'Tis not enough our foes are this time fled,
Being opposites of such repairing nature.

York. I know, our safety is to follow them;
For, as I hear, the king is fled to London,
To call a present court of parliament.
Let us pursue him, ere the works go forth:
What says lord Warwick? shall we after them?
War. After them! nay, before them, if we can.
Now, by my faith, lords, 'twas a glorious day:
Saint Alban's battle, won by famous York,
Shall be eterniz'd in all age to come.

Sound, drums and trumpets:—and to London all:
And more such days as these to us befall! [EXECUT.

THIRD PART OF

KING HENRY VI.

This historical drama, like the preceding one, was not printed in its present form till it appeared in the folio edition of our author's works, in 1603. It was formed on a play by Marlowe, or by Marlowe, Peele, and Greene, called The True Tragedy of King Henry the Sixth; or, The Second Part of the Contention of York and Lancaster, Shakespeare's version of this original play was made, according to Halone, in 1601.

The play opens just after the first battle of Saint Alban's, [May 23, 1455.] wherein the York faction carried the day; and closes with the murder of King Henry V, and the birth of prince Edward, afterwards Edward V. [November 4, 1471.] So that this history takes in the space of fifteen years.

This play is only divided from the former for the convenience of exhibition; for the series of action is continued without interruption, nor are any two scenes of any play more closely connected than the first scene of this play with the last of the former.

ACT I.

War. I wonder, how the king escap'd our hands.

York. While we pursu'd the horsemen of the north, He sily stole away, and left his men: Whereat the great lord of Northumberland, Whose warlike ears could never brook retreat, Cheer'd up the dropping army; and himself, Lord Clifford, and Lord Stafford, all a-breast, Charg'd our main battle's front, and, breaking in, Were by the swords of common soldiers slain.

Edw. Lord Stafford's father, duke of Buckingham, is either slain, or wounded dangerous: I left his beaver with a downright blow; That this is true, father, behold his blood. [Shewing his bloody sword.

Mont. And, brother, here's the Earl of Wiltshire's blood, Whom I encounter'd as the battles join'd.

Rich. Speak thou for me, and tell them what I did. [Throwing down the Duke of Somerset's head.

York. Richard hath best deserv'd of all my sons.— What, is your grace dead, my lord of Somerset? Norf. Such hope have all the line of John of Gaunt! Rich. This do I hope to shake King Henry's head.

War. And so do I.—Victorious prince of York, Before I see thee seated on that throne Which now the house of Lancaster usurps, I vow by heaven, these eyes shall never close. This is the palace of the fearfull king, And this the regal seat: possess it, York; For it is thine, and not king Henry's heir's. York. Assist me then, sweet Warwick, and I will; For better we have broken in by force.

Norf. We'll all assist you; lie, that flies, shall die. York. Thanks, gentle Norfolk.—Stay by me, my lords;— And, soldiers, stay, and lodge by me this night.

War. And, when the king comes, offer him no violence: Unless he seek to thrust you out by force. [Exeunt. [They retire.

York. The queen, this day, here holds her parlia But little thinks, we shall be of her council: [ment, By words, or blows, here let us win our right. Rich. Arm'd as we are, let's stay within this house. War. The bloody parliament shall this be call'd, Unless Plantagenet, duke of York, be king; And beshrew Henry Godfrey, whose cowardice Hath made us by-words to our enemies. York. Then leave me not, my lords; be resolute; I mean to take possession of my right. War. Neither the king, nor he that loves him best, The proudest he that holds up Lancaster, Dare stir a wing, if Warwick shake his bell, I'll plant Plantagenet, root him up who dares!— Resolve thee, Richard, to claim the English crown. [War. leads York to the throne, who seats himself.

Flourish. Enter King Henry, Clifford, Northumberland, Westmoreland, Exeter, and others, with red roses in their hats.

K. Hen. My lords, look where the sturdy rebel sits, Even in the chair of state! belike, he means, [back'd by the power of Warwick, that false peer,) To aspire unto the crown, and reign as king.— Earl of Northumberland, he swy his father;— And thine, Lord Clifford; and you both have vow'd revenge On him, his sons, his favourites, and his friends. North. If I be not, heavens be reveng'd on me! Clif. The hope thereof makes Clifford mourne it steel.

West. What, shall we suffer this? Let's pluck him My heart made for anger burns, I cannot brook it, [down; K. Hen. Be patient, gentle earl of Westmoreland. Clif. Patience is for politoos, and such as he; He durst not sit there, had your father liv'd. My gracious lord, here in the parliament Let us assail the family of York. North. Well hast thou spoken, cousin; be it so. K. Hen. Ah, know you not, the city favours them, And they have troops of soldiers at their beck? Ere. But when the duke is slain, they'll quickly fly. K. Hen. Far be the thought of this from Henry's To make a shambles of the parliament-house! [heart, Cousin of Exeter, frown's, words, and threats, Shall be the war that Henry means to use,— [They advance to the Duke. Thou factions' duke of York, descend thy throne, And kneel for grace and mercy at my feet; I am thy sovereign.

York. Thou art deceiv'd, I am thine. [York. For shame, come down; he made thee duke York. 'Twas my inheritance, as the earldom was. Ere. Thy father was a traitor to the crown. War. Exeter, thou art a traitor to the crown, In following this usurping Henry. Clif. Whom should he follow, but his natural king? War. True, Clifford; and that's Richard, duke of York.

K. Hen. And shall I stand, and thou sit in my throne? York. It must and shall be so. Content thyself. War. Be duke of Lancaster, let his father be king, And that the lord of Westmoreland shall maintain. War. And Warwick shall disprove it. You forget, That we are these, which chas'd you from the field, And slew your fathers, and with colours spread March'd through the city to the palace gates. North. Yes, Warwick, I remember it to my grief, And, by his soul, thou and thy house shall rue it. West. Plantagenet, of thee, and these thy sons, Thy kinsmen and thy friends, I'll have more lives, Than drops of blood that are in my father's veins.

Cliff. It is no more: lest that, instead of words, I send thee, Warwick, such a messenger, As shall revenge his death, before I stir. [War. Poor Clifford! how I scorn his worthless threats. York. Will you, we shew our title to the crown? If not, our swords shall plead in the field. K. Hen. What title hast thou, traitor, to the crown? Thy father wast, as thou art, duke of York; Thy grandfather Roger Mortimer, earl of March; I am the son of Henry the Fifth, Who made the Dauphin and the French to stoop, And sold'nd upon their towns and provinces. War. Talk not of France, sith thou hast lost it all. K. Hen. The lord protector lost it, and not I; When I was crown'd, I was but nine months old. Rich. You are old enough now, and yet, methinks lose:— Father, tear the crown from the usurper's head. Edw. Sweet father, do so; set it on your head. Mont. Good brother, [to York.] as thou lov'st and honour'st arms, Let's fight it out and not stand cavilling thus. Rich. Sound drums and trumpets, and the king will fly. York. Sons, peace!
K. Hen. Peace thou, and give King Henry leave to speak.

War. Plantagenet shall speak first—hear him. And be you silent and attentive too. [lords.

For, he that interrupts him, shall not live.

K. Hen. Think'st thou, that I will leave my kingly

Wherein my grand sire, and my father, sat? [throno, No; first shall war unpeople this my realm;

Ay, and their colours from hence borne in France;

And now in England, to our heart's great sorrow,—

Shall be my winding-sheet—Why faint you, lords?

My title's good, and better far than his.

War. But prove it, Henry, and thou shalt be king.

K. Hen. Henry the Fourth by conquest got the York. 'twas by rebellion against his king, [crown. K. Hen. I know not what to say, my title's weak,

Tell me, may not a king adopt an heir?

What then?—

K. Hen. An if he may, then am I lawful king:

For Richard, in the view of many lords,

Resigned the crown to Henry the Fourth;

Whose heir my father was, and I am his.

His rebellion against, being his sovereign,

And made him resign his crown perforce.

War. Suppose, my lords, he did it unconstraining,

Think you, 'twere prejudicial to his crown;

But that the next heir should succeed and reign.

K. Hen. Art thou against us, duke of Exeter?

Exe. His title's right, and therefore pardon me.

York. Why whisper you, my lords, and answer not?

Exe. My conscience tells me, he is lawful king.

K. Hen. All will revolte from me, and turn to him.

North. Plantagenet, for all the claim thou lay'st, not that, Henry shall be so depos'd.

War. depos'd he shall be, in despite of all.

North. Thou art descendent: 'tis not thy southern

Of Essex, Norfolk, Suffolk, nor of Kent.—[power

Which makes thee thus presumptuous and proud,—

Can set the duke up, in despite of me.

Cliff. King Henry, be thy title right or wrong,

Lord Clifford vows to fight in thy defence:

May that ground gape, and swallow me alive.

And I, the bell howl to hit that slain my father?

K. Hen. O Clifford, hear how my dead revived my heart.

York. Henry of Lancaster, resign thy crown:

What matter you, or what conspire you, lords?

War. Do right unto this princeful duke of York; Or I will fill the house with arm'd men,

And d'ere the chair of state, where now he sits,

Write up his title with usurping blood.

He's stamp'd, and the Soldiers show themselves.

K. Hen. My lord of Warwick, hear me but one word; Let me, for this my life-time, reign as king.

York. Confirm the crown to me, and to mine heirs,

And thou shalt reign in quiet while thou livest.

K. Hen. I am content: Richard Plantagenet,

Enjoy the kingdom after my decease.

Cliff. What wrong is this unto the prince your son?

War. What good is this to England, and himself?

West. Base, fearful, and despairing Henry!

Cliff. How hast thou injur'd both thyself and us?

West. I cannot stay to hear these articles.

North. Nor I.

Cliff. Come, cousin, let us tell the queen these news;

West. Farewell, faint-hearted and degenerate king, To whose cold blood no spark of honour bides.

North. Be thou a prey unto the house of York,

And die in bands for this unmanly deed!

Cliff. In dreadful war may'st thou be overcome!

Or live in peace, abandon'd and despis'd!

[Exeunt North., Cliff. and West.]

War. Turn this way, Henry, and regard them not. Exe. They seek revenge, and therefore will not yield.

K. Hen. Ah, Exeter! War. Why should you sigh, my lord?

K. Hen. Not for myself, lord Warwick, but my son,

Whom I unnaturally shall disinherit.

But, be it as it may—I here entreat

The crown to thee, and to thine heirs for ever;

Conditionally, that here thou take an oath

To cease this civil war, and, whilst I live,

To honour me as thy king and sovereign;

And neither by treason, nor hostility.

To seek to put me down, and reign myself.

York. This oath I willingly take, and will perform. [Coming from the throne.

War. Long live king Henry!—Plantagenet embrace him.

K. Hen. And long live thou, and these thy forward

York. Now York and Lancaster are reconcil'd.

Exe. Accurs'd be he that seeks to make them foes!

[Senet. The Lords come forward.

York. Farewell, my gracious lord; I'll to my castle.

War. And I to my house, and keep my soldiers.

Norf. And I to Norfolk, with my followers.

Mont. And I unto the sea, from whence I came.

[Exeunt York, and his Sons, Warwick, Nor- folk, Montague, Soldiers, & Attendants.

K. Hen. And I, with grief and sorrow, to the court.

Enter Queen MARGARET and the Prince of WALES

Exe. Here comes the queen, whose looks bewray

I'll steal away. [her anger.

Q. Mar. Nay, go not from me, I will follow thee.

K. Hen. Be patient, gentle queen, and I will stay.

Q. Mar. Who can be patient in such extremes?

Ah, wretched man! 'twould I had died a maid,

And never seen thee, never born thee son;

Seeing thou hast prov'd so unnatural a father!

Hath he deserv'd to lose his birthright thus?

Had'st thou but lov'd him so well as I; Or felt that pain which I did for him once;

Or nourish'd him, as I did with my blood;

Thou wouldst have left thy nearest heart-blood there.

Rather than have made that savage wild heir,

And disinherited thine only son.

Prince. Father, you cannot disinherit me:

If you be king, why should not I succeed? [son—

A. Hen. Pardon me, Margaret;—pardon me, sweet

The earl of Warwick, and the duke, enforced me.

Q. Mar. Enforce'd thee! art thou king, and wilt be

I shame to hear thee speak. Ah, timorous wretch Thou hast undone thyself, thy son, and me;

And given unto the house of York such head,

As thou shalt reign but by their sufferance.

To entail him and his heirs unto the crown,

What is it, but to make thy sepulchre, And creep into it for before thy time?

Warwick is chancellor, and the lord of Calais;

Stern Faulconbridge commands the narrow seas,

The duke is made protector of the realm;

And yet shall thou be safe? such safety finds

The trembling lamb, environed with wolves.

Hast thou been there, which am a silly woman, The soldiers should have took'rd me on their pikes

Before I would have granted to that act.

But thou prefer'st thy life before thine honour.

And, seeing dost, I here divorce myself,

Both from thy table, Henry, and thy bed,

Until that act of parliament be repealed,

Whereby my son is disinherited.

214.
The northern lords, that have forsworn thy colours,
Will follow mine, if once they see them spread;
And spread they shall be; to thy foul disgrace.
And utter ruin of the house of York.
Thus do I leave thee:—Come, son, let's away;
Our army's ready; come, we'll after them.
K. Hen. Stay, gentle Margaret, and hear me speak.
Q. Mar. Thou hast spok's too much already; get thee gone.
K. Hen. Gentle son Edward, thou wilt stay with me?
Q. Mar. Ay, to be murder'd by his enemies.
Prince. When I return with victory from the field,
I'll see your grace: till then, I'll follow her.
Q. Mar. Come, son, away; we may not linger thus.
[Exit Queen Margaret and the Prince.
K. Hen. Poor queen! how love to me, and to her son;
Hath made her break out into terms of rage!
Reveng'd may she be on that hateful duke;
Whose hungry spirit, winged with desire,
Will coast my crown, and, like an empty cale,
Tire on the flees of me, and of my soul?
The loss of those three lords torments my heart:
I'll write unto them, and entreat them fair;—
Come, cousin, you shall be the messenger.
E. And I, I hope, shall reconcile them all.
[Exit.

SCENE II.—A Room in Sandal Castle, near Wakefield, in Yorkshire.

Enter Edward, Richard, and Montague.
Rich. Brother, though I be youngest, give me leave.
Edw. No, I can better play the orator.
Mont. But I have reasons strong and forcible.
Enter York.
York. Why, now how, sons and brother, at a strife?
What is your quarrel? how began it first?
Edw. No quarrel, but a slight contention.
York. About what?
Rich. About that which concerns your grace, and
The crown of England, father, which is yours. [As York. Mine, boy! not till king Henry be dead.
Rich. Your right depends not on his life, or death.
Edw. Now you are heir, therefore enjoy it now:
By giving the house of Lancaster leave to breathe,
It will outrun you, father, in the end.
York. I took an oath, that he should quietly reign.
Edw. But, for a kingdom, any oath may be broken:
I'd break a thousand oaths, to reign one year.
Rich. No; God forbid, your grace should be—
York. I shall be, if Iclaim by open war. [swoon.
Rich. I'll prove the contrary, if you'll hear me speak.
York. Thou canst not, son; it is impossible.
Rich. An oath is of no moment, being not took
Before a true and lawful magistrate,
That hath authority over him that swears:—
Henry hath none, but did usurp the place;
Then, since he was 'twas he that made you depose,
Your oath, my lord, is vain and frivolous.
Therefore, to arms. And, father, do but think,
How sweet a thing it is to wear a crown;
Within whose circuit is Elysium,
And all that poets feign of bliss and joy.
Why do we linger thus? I cannot rest,
Until the white rose, that I wear, be dyed
Even in the lukewarm blood of Henry's heart.
York. Richard, enough; I will be king, or die.—
Brother, thou shalt to London presently,
And what on Warwick to this enterprise.—
Thou, Richard, shalt unto the duke of Norfolk,
And tell him privily of our intent.
You, Edward, shall unto my lord Cobham,
With whom theKentish men will willingly rise;
To them I trust: for they are soldiers.
Witty, courtous, liberal, full of spirit.—
While you are thus employ'd, what resteth more
But that I seek occasion how to rise;
And yet the king not privy to my drift,
Nor any of the house of Lancaster?

Enter a Messenger.

But, stay; What news? why com'st thou in such post?
Mon. The queen, with all the northern earls and Intend her to besiege you in your castle.
[Edw. Lords, she is hard by with twenty thousand men;
And therefore fortify your hold, my lord.
York. Ay, with my sword. What! think'st thou, that we fear them?—
Edward and Richard, you shall stay with me;
My brother Montague shall post to London:
Let noble Warwick, Cobham, and the rest,
Whom we have left protectors of the king.
With powerful policy strengthen themselves,
And trust not simple Henry, nor his oaths.
Mont. Brother, I go; I'll win them, fear it not:
And thus most humbly I do take my leave.
[Exit.

Enter Sir John and Sir Hugh Mortimer.
York. Sir John, and sir Hugh Mortimer, mine uncles!
You are come to Sandal in a happy hour;
The army of the queen mean to besiege us.
Sir John. She shall not need, we'll meet her in the York. What, with five thousand men?
Rich. Ay, with five hundred, father, for a need.
A woman's general; what should we fear?
[Exit Sir Hugh far off.
Edw. I hear their drums; let's set our men in order;
And issue forth, and bid them battle straight.
York. Five men to twenty!—though the odds be
I doubt not, uncle, of our victory.
[Great, Many a battle have I won in France,
When as the enemy hath been ten to one;
Why should I now have the like success?
[Enter Clifford and Soldiers.

Cliff. Chaplain, away! thy priesthood saves thy life.
As for the brat of this accursed duke,
Whose father slew my father,—he shall die.
Tut. And I, my lord, will hear him company.
Cliff. Soldiers, away with him.
Tut. Ah, Clifford! murder not this innocent child,
Lest thou be hated both of God and man.
[Exit, forced off by Soldiers.
Cliff. How now! is he dead already? Or, is it fear,
That makes him close his eyes?—I'll open them.
Rut. So looks the pent-up lion o'er the wretch
That trembles under his devouring paws:
And so he walks, insulting o'er his prey;
And so he comes, to rend his limbs and stern,—
Ah, gentle Clifford, kill me with thy sword,
And not with such a cruel threat'ning look.
Sweet Clifford, hear me speak before I die;
I am too mean a subject for thy wrath.
Be thou reveng'd on men, and let me live.
Cliff. In vain thou speakest, poor boy; my father's blood [Enter.
Hath stopp'd the passage where thy words should
Rut. Then let my father's blood open it again;
He is a man, and, Clifford, cope with him.
Clif. Had I thy brethren here, their lives, and thine
Were not revenge sufficient for my quarrel,
No, if I digg'd up thy forefathers' graves,
And hung their rotten coffins up in chains,
It could not make mine ire, nor ease my heart.
The sight of any of the house of York
Is as a fury to torment my soul;
And till I root out their accursed line,
And leave not one alive, I live in hell.
Therefore,—[Lifting up his hand.
Rut. O, let me pray before I take my death,—
To thee I pray;—Sweet Clifford, pity me!
Clif. Such pity as my rapiers' point affords.
Rut. I never did thee harm; Why wilt thou slay me?
Clif. Thy father hath.
Rut. But 'twas ere I was born.
Thou hast one son, for his sake pity me;
Lest in revenge thereof,—sith God is just,—
He be as miserably slain as I.
Ah, let me live in prison all my days;
And when I give occasion of offence,
Then let me die, for now thou hast no cause.
Clif. No cause!
Thy father slew my father; therefore, die.
[CLIFFORD STABS HIM.
Rut. Dit faciunt, launis summam sit toto tuo! [Dies.
Clif. Plantagenet! I come. Plantagenet!
And this thy son's blood, cleaning to my blade,
Shall rust upon my weapon, till thy blood
Congeal'd with this, do make me wipe off both. [Exit.

SCENE IV.—The same.
Alarum. Enter York.
York. The army of the queen hath got the field;
My uncles both are slain in rescuing me:
And all my followers to the eager foe
Turn back, and fly, like ships before the wind,
Or lambs pursu'd by hungry starved wolves.
My sons—God knows, what hath bechanced them:
But this I know,—they have demean'd themselves
Like men born to renown, by life, or death.
Three times did Richard make a land for me;
And thrice cried,—Courage, father, fight it out!
And full as oft came Edward to my side
With purple fanion, painted to the hilt
In blood of those that had encounter'd him:
And when the hardiest warriors did retire,
Richard cried,—Charge! and give no foot of ground!
And cried,—A crown, or else a glorious tomb!
A sceptre, or an earthly sepulchre!
With this we charg'd again: but, out, alas!
We hodge'd again; as if I had seen a swan
With bootless labour swim against the tide,
And spend her strength with over-matching waves.
[A short alarum within.
Ah, hark! the fatal followers do present;
And I am faint, and cannot fly their fury:
And, were I strong, I would not shun their fury:
The sands are number'd, that make up my life;
Here must I stay, and here my life must end.

Enter Queen Margaret, Clifford, Northumberland, and Soldiers.
Come, bloody Clifford,—rough Northumberland,—
I dare you, speechless fury to more rage;
I own you butt, and I abide your shot.
North. Yield to our mercy, proud Plantagenet.
Clif. Ay, to such mercy, as his ruthless arm,
With dowrayment payment, shew'd unto my father.

Now Phaeton hath tumbled from his car,
And made an evening at the noontide pricks.
York. My ashes, as the phoenix, may bring forth
A bird that will revenge upon you all:
And, in that hope, I throw mine eyes to heaven,
Scorning whate'er you can afflict me more.
Why come you not! what great multitudes, and fear?
Clif. So cowards fight, when they can fly so further;
So doves do peck the falcon's piercing talons;
So desperate thieves, all hopeless of their lives,
Breathe out inventives 'gainst the officers.
York. O Clifford, but bethink thee once again,
And in thy thought o'er-run my former time:
And, if thou canst for blushing, view this face;
And bite thy tongue, that slanders him with cowardice
Whose frowns a pray hath made thee faint and fly ere this.
Clif. I will not bendy with thee word for word;
But buckle with thee blows, twice two for one. [Drares.
Q. Mar. Hold, valiant Clifford! for a thousand causes,
I would prolong awhile the traitor's life:
Wrath makes him deaf:—speak thou, Northumberland.
North. Hold, Clifford; do not honour him so much,
To prick thy finger, though to wound his heart:
What valour were it, when a cur doth grin,
For one to thrust his hand between his teeth,
When he might spurn him with his foot away?
It is war's prize to take all vantages;
And ten to one is now impudent to war.
To fly, ye hands on York, who struggle.
Clif. Ay, ay, so striveth the woodcock with the gin.
North. So doth the covey struggle in the nest.
York. So triumph thieves upon their conquer'd booty:
So true men yield, with robbers so o'er-match'd.
North. What would your grace have done unto him now?
[Hand.
Q. Mar. Brave warriors, Clifford and Northumberland,
Come, make him stand upon this mulehill here;
That rought at mountains with outstretched arms,
Yet parted but the shadow with his hand,—
What! was it you that would be England's king?
Was it that revel'd in our parliament,
And made a preaching of your high descent?
Where are your mess of sons, to back you now?
The wanton Edward, and the lusty George?
And where's that valiant crook-buck prodigy,
Dicky your boy, that with his grumbling voice,
Was wont to cheer his dead in mourning,
If this is your darling Rutland?
Look, York; I stain'd this napkin with the blood
That valiant Clifford, with his rapiers' point,
Made issue from the bosom of the boy:
And, if thine eyes can water for his death,
I give thee this to dry thy cheeks withal.
Alas, poor York! but that I hate thee deadly,
I should lament thy miserable state.
I pr'ythee, grace, to make me merry, York;
Stamp, rave, and fret, that I may sing and dance,
What hath thy fiery heart so parch'd thine entrails,
That not a tear can fall for Rutland's death?
Why art thou patient, man? thou should'st be mad;
And I, to make thee mad, do mock thee thus.
York cannot speak, unless he wear a crown.
A crown for York and, lords, bow low to him.
Hold you his hands, whilst I do set it on.
Ay, marry, sir, now looks he like a king;
Ay, this is he that took the king Henry's chair.
And this is he was his adopted heir.
But how is it, that great Plantagenet
Is crown'd so soon, and broke his solemn oath?
As I bethink me, you should not be king,
Till our king Henry had shook hands with death.
And will you pale your head in Henry's glory,
And rob his temples of the diadem,
Now in his life, against your holy oath?
O, 'tis a fault too, too unpardonable!—
Off with the crown; and, with the crown, his head;
And, whilst we burst, take time to do him dead.
Clif. That is my office, for my father's sake.
Q. Mar. Nay, stay; let's hear the orisons he makes.
York. She-wolf of France, but worse than wolves of France,
Whose tongue more poisons than the adder's tooth!
How ill-beseeming is it in thy sex,
To triumph like an Amazonian troll,
Upon their woes, whom fortune captivates?
But that thy face is, visor-like, unchanging,
Made impudent with use of evil deeds,
I would assay, proud queen, to make thee blush:
To tell thee whence thou can'st, of whom derived,
Were shame enough to shame thee, wert thou not shameless.
Thy father bears the type of king of Naples,
Of both the Sicils, and Jerusalem;
Yet not so wealthy as an English yeoman.
Hath that poor monarch taught thee to insult?
It needs not now it boots thee not, proud queen;
Unless the adage must be verified—
That beggars, mounted, run their horse to death.
Tis beauty that doth oft make women proiic;
But God, he knows, thy share thereof is small;
Tis virtue that doth make them most admired;
The contrary doth make thee wonder'd at;
Tis government that makes them seem divine;
The want thereof makes thee abominable:
Thou art as opposite to every good,
As the Antipodes are unto us,
Or as the south to the septentrion.
O, tiger's heart, wrapp'd in a woman's hide!
How could'st thou drain the life-blood of the child,
To bid the father wipe his eyes withal,
And yet be seen to bear a woman's face?
Women are soft, mild, pitiful, and flexible;
Thou, stern, obdurate, flinty, rough, remorseless.
Bist'st thou me rage? why then now hast thou wish
Would'st have me weep? why then now hast thou will?
For raging wind blows up incessant showers,
And, when the rage allays, the rain begins.
These tears are my sweet Rutland's obsequies;
And every drop cries vengeance for his death.—
'Gainst thee, tell Clifford,—and thee, false Frenchwoman.
North. Beshrow me, but his passions move me so,
That hardly can I check my eyes from tears.
York. That face of his the hungry cannibals
Would not have touch'd, would not have stain'd with but you are more inhuman, more inexcusable,
O, ten times more,—than tigers of Hyrcania.—
See, ruthless queen, a hapless father's tears:
This cloth thou dress'dst in blood of my sweet boy,
And I with tears do wash the blood away.
Keep thou the napkin, and go boast of this:
[He gives back the handkerchief.
And, if thou tell'st the heavy, heavy story,
Upon my soul, the washers will shed tears;
Yea, even my foes will shed fast-falling tears,
And say,—Alas, it was a piteous deed!—
There, take the crown, and, with the crown, my curse;
And, in thy need, such comfort come to thee,
As now I reap at thy too cruel hand!—

Hard hearted Clifford, take me from the world;
My soul to heaven, my blood upon your heads!
North. Had he been slaughter-man to all my kin,
I should not for my life but weep with him,
To see how inly sorrow gripes his soul.
Q. Mar. What, weeping-ripe, my lord Northumberland think but upon the wrong he did us all, [berland]
And that will quickly dry thy melting tears.
Clif. Here's for my oath, here's for my father's death.
[Stabbing him.
Q. Mar. And here's to right our gentle-hearted king.
York. Open thy gate of mercy, gracious God!
My soul flies through these wounds to seek out thee.
[Dies.
Q. Mar. Off with his head, and set it on York gates;
So York may overlook the town of York. [Exit.

ACT II.

SCENE I.

A Plain near Mortimer's Cross in Herefordshire.

Drums. Enter Edward, and Richard, with their Forces, marching.

Edw. I wonder, how our princely father 'scap'd; Or whether he be 'scap'd away, or no,
From Clifford's and Northumberland's pursuit:
Had he been taken, we should have heard the news:
Had he been slain, we should have heard the news:
Or, had he 'scap'd, methinks, we should have heard
The happy tidings of his good escape.—
How fares my brother? why is he so sad?
Rich. I cannot joy, until I be resolv'd
Where our right valiant father is become.
I saw him in the battle range about;
And watch'd him, how he singled Clifford forth.
Methought, he bore him in the thickest troop,
As doth a lion in a herd of neat:
Or as a bear, encompass'd round with dogs:
Who having pinch'd a few, and made them cry,
The rest stand all aloof, and bark at him.
So far'd our father with his enemies;
So fled his enemies my warlike father:
In this, were his prize ever so enough to be his son.
See how the morning opens her golden gates,
And takes her farewell of the glorious sun!
How well resembles it the prime of youth,
Trimm'd like a younger, prancing to his love!
Edw. Dazzle mine eyes, or do I see three suns?
Rich. Three glorious suns, each one a perfect sun;
Not separated with the raking clouds,
But sever'd in a pale clear-shining sky.
See, see! they join, embrace, and seem to kiss,
As if they vow'd some league inviolable:
Now are they but one lamp, one light, one sun.
In this the heaven figures some event.
Edw. 'Tis wondrous strange, the like yet never
I think, it cit's us, brother, to the field; [beard of.
That we, the sons of brave Plantagenet,
Each one already blazing by our need's:
Should, notwithstanding, join our lights together,
And over-shine the earth, as this the world.
What'er it be, henceforward will I bear
Upon my target three fair shining suns.
Rich. Nay, bear three daughters—by your leave! I
You love the breeder better than the male. [speak it, Enter a Messenger.

But what art thou, whose heavy looks foretell
Some dreadful story hanging on thy tongue?
ACT II.—SCENE I.

Mest. Ah, one that was a well-favoured looker on,
When as the orrible duke of York was slain,
Yet, princely father, and my loving lord.
Lulu. O, speak no more! for I have heard too much.
Rich. Say how he died, for I will hear it all.
Mest. Environed he was with many foes;
And stood against them, as the hope of Troy
Against the Greeks, that would have enter'd Troy.
But Hercules himself may yield to odds:
And many strokes, though with a little axe,
Hew down and fell the hardest-timber'd oak.
By many hands your father was subdu'd;
But only slaughter'd by the ireful arm
Of unrelenting Clifford, and the queen:
Who crown'd the gracious duke, in high despite;
Laugh'd to his face; and, when with grief he wept,
The ruthless queen gave him, to dry his cheeks,
A saucin steeped in the harmless blood
Of sweet young Rutland, by rough Clifford slai'd.
And, after many scars, many foul taunts,
They took his head, and on the gates of York
They set the same; and there it doth remain,
The saddest spectacle that e'er I saw.

Edward. O Clifford! boist'rous Clifford, thou hast slai'd
The flower of Europe for his chivalry;
And treacherously hast thou vanquish'd him,
For, hand to hand, he would have vanquish'd thee!
Now my soul's palace is become a prison;
Ah, woe's me! the day of his decease,
Is kindling coals, that fire all my breast,
And burn me up with flames, that tears would quench.
To weep, is to make less the depth of grief:
Tears, then, for babes; blows, and revenge for me!
Rich. I, bear thy name, I'll whet thy death,
Or die renowned by attempting it.
Edward. Nay, if thou be that princely eagle's bird,
Shew thy descent by gaz'ing 'gainst the sun:
For chair and dukedom, throne and kingdom say;
Either that is thine, or else thou wert not his.

March. Enter Warwick and MONTAGUE, with Forces.
War. How now, fair lords? What fate? what news abroad?
Rich. Great lord of Warwick, if we should recount
Our halfeul news, and, at each word's deliverance,
Stab poinding in our flesh, till all were told,
The words would add more anguish than the wounds.
O valiant lord, the duke of York is slain.
Edward. O Warwick! Warwick! that Igladagenet
Which held thee dearly, as his soul's redemption,
Is by the stern lord Clifford done to death.
War. Ten days ago I drownd these news in tears:
And now, to add more measure to your woes,
I come to tell you things since then befall'n.
After the bloody fray at Wakefield fought,
Where your brave father breath'd his latest gasp,
Tidings, as swiftly as the post could run,
Were brought me of your loss, and his depart.
I then in London, keeper of the king.
Muster'd my soldiers, gather'd blocks of friends,
And very well appointed, as I thought,
March'd towards Saint Alban's to intercept the queen,
Behold the king in triumph half as large as life.
For by my scout I was advertised,
That she was coming with a full intent
To dash our late decree in parliament,
Touching king Henry's oath, and your succession.
Short tale to make,—we at Saint Alban's met,
Our battles join'd, and both sides fiercely fought:
But this next was the coldness of the king,
Who look'd full gently on his warlike queen,
That rob'd my soldiers of their hated spleen;
Or whether 'twas report of her success;
Or more than common fear of Clifford's rigour.
Who thunder'd to his captives—blood and death,
I cannot judge: but, to conclude with truth,
Their weapons like to lightning came and went;
Our soldiers—like the night-owl's lazy flight,
Or like a lazy thresher with a flail,—
Fell gently down, as if they struck their friends.
I cheer'd them up with justice of our cause,
With promise of high pay, and great rewards;
But all in vain: they had no heart to fight,
And we, in them, no hope to win the day,
So the king fled; the late king unto his prop to lean upon:
Now thou art gone, we have no staff, no stay!—
O Clifford, boist'rous Clifford, thou hast slai'd

KING HENRY VI.—PART III.

Rich. Ay, now, methinks, I hear great Warwick Ne'er may he live to see a sunshine day, [speak That cries—Retire, if Warwick bid him stay. Edw. Lord Warwick, on thy shoulder wilt I lean; And when thou fall'st (as God forbid the hour!) Most Edward fall, yarrow, let them heave fore’foot in war. No longer earl of March, but duke of York; The next degree is, England's royal throne: For king of England shalt thou be proclaimed In every borough as we pass along; And he that throws not up his cap for joy, Shall for the fault make forfeit of his head. King Edward,—valiant Richard,—Montague,— Stay we no longer dreaming of return, But sound the trumpets, and about our task. Rich. Then, Clifford, were thy heart as hard as steel, (As thou hast show'd it flinty by thy deeds,) I come to pierce it,—or to give thee mine. Edw. Then strike up, drums,—God, and Saint George, for us! Enter a Messenger. War. How now? what news? Mess. The duke of Norfolk sends you word by me. The queen is coming with a present host; And craves your company for speedy counsel. War. Why, then it sorts, brave warriors: Let's away. [Exeunt.

SCENE II.—Before York.

Enter King Henry, Queen Margaret, the Prince of Wales, Clifford, and Northumberland, with Forces. Q. Mar. Welcome, my lord, to this brave town of Yonder's the head of that arch-enemy. [York. That sought to be encompass’d with your crown; Doth not the object cheer your heart, my lord? K. Hen. Ay, as the rocks cheer them that fear their To see this sight, it irks my very soul.— [wreck — Withhold revenge, dear God! 'tis not my fault, Not wittingly have I infring'd my vow. Clif. My gracious liege, this too much lenity Harmful pity must be laid aside. To whom do lions cast their gentle looks? Not to the beast that would usurp their den. Whose hand is that, the forest bear doth flick? Not his, that spoils her young before her face. Who 'scapes the lurking serpent's mortal sting? Not he that sets his foot upon her back. The smallest worm will turn, being trodden on; And doves will peck, in safeguard of their brood. Ambitious York did level at thy crown, Thou smiling, while he knitt'st angry brows: He, but a duke, would have his son a king. And raise his issue, like a loving sire: Thou, being a king, bless'd with a goodly son, Dost yield consent to doth inherit him. Which argued thee a most unfailing love. Unreasonable creatures feed their young; And though man's face be fearful to their eyes, Yet, in protection of their tender ones, Who hath not seen them, (even with those wings Which sometime they have us'd with fearful flight,) Make war with him, that would thus upbraide their nest, Offering their own lives in their young's defence? For shame, my liege, make them your precedent! Were it not pity, that this goodly boy Should lose his birthright by his father's fault? And long hereafter say unto his child,— What my great-grandfather and grand sire got, My careless father, boldly gave away?

Ah, what a shame were this! Look on the boy, And let his manly face, which promises Successful fortune, steel thy melting heart, To hold thine own, and leave thine own with him. K. Hen. Full well hath Clifford play'd the octor, Inference argu't, with elements of mighty force. But, Clifford, tell me, didst thou never hear,— That things ill got had ever bad success? And happy always was it for that son, Whose father for his boarding went to hell? I'll leave my son my virtuous deeds behind; And I, my father, had left me no more! For all the rest is held at York's discretion. As brings a thousand-fold more care to keep, Than in possession any jot of pleasure. Ah, cousin York! would thy best friends did know, How it doth grieve me that thy head is here! [high, Q. Mar. My lord, cheer up your spirits; our foes are And this soft courage makes your followers faint. You promised knighthood to our forward son; Unsheath your sword, and dub him presently. — Edward, kneel down. K. Hen. Edward Plantagenet, arise a knight; And learn this lesson,—Draw thy sword in right. Prince. My gracious father, by your kingly leaving, I'll draw it as apparent to the crown, And in that quarter use it to the death. Clif. Why, that is spoken like a toward prince. Enter a Messenger. Mess. Royal commandes, be in readiness: For, with a band of thirty thousand men, Comes Warwick back'ing of the duke of York; And, in the towns, as they do much along, Procures his king, and many fly. Darraign your battle, for they are at hand. Clif. I would, your highness' welfare depart the field; The queen hath best success when you are absent. Q. Mar. Ay, good my lord, and leave us to our fortune. K. Hen. Why, that's my fortune too; therefore I'll North, Be it with resolution then to fight. [stay. Prince. My royal father, cheer these noble lords, And cheer up those who fight in your defence. Unsheath your sword, good father; cry, Saint George! March. Enter Edward, George, Richard, Warwick, Norfolk, Montague, and Soldiers. Edw. Now, perjur'd Henry! wilt thou kneel for And set thy diadem upon my head; [grace, Or hide the mortal fortune of the field? Q. Mar. Go, rate thy minions, proud insulting boy! Becomes thee the to be thus bold in terms, Before thy sovereign, and thy lawful king? Edw. I am his king, and he should bow his knee; I was adopted heir by his consent: Since when, his oath is broke; for, as I hear, You—that are king, though he do wear the crown,— Have drest him by his act of parliament, To blot out me, and put his own son in. Clif. And reason too; Who should succeed the father but the son? Rich. Are you there, butcher?—O, I cannot speak! Clif. Ay, crook-back; here I stand, to answer thee, Or any he the proudest of thy sort. [not? Rich. 'Twas you that kill'd my brother Rutland, was it Clif. Ay, and old York, and yet not satisfy'd. Rich. For God's sake, lords, give signal to the fight. War. What say'st thou, Henry, wilt then yield the crown! [dare you speak? Q. Mar. Why, how now, long-tongu'd Warwick! When you and I met at Saint Albans' last, Your legs did better service than your hands.}
Edw. No, wrangling woman; we'll be longer stay:
These words will cost ten thousand lives to-day.
[Exeunt.

SCENE III.—A Field of Battle between Totton and Saxton in Yorkshire.

Alarums: Excursions. Enter Warwick.

War. Forsworn with foil, as runsners with a race,
I lay me down a little while to breathe:
For strokes receiv'd, and many blows repay'd,
Have rob'd my strong-knit sinews of their strength,
And, spite of spine, needs must I rest awhile.

Enter Edward, running.

Edw. Smile, gentle heaven! or strike, ungentele death!
For this world frowns, and Edward's sun is clouded.
War. How now, my lord? what hap? what hope of good?

Enter George.

Geo. Our hap is lo's, our hope but sad despair;
Our ranks are broke, and ruin follows us:
What counsel give you, whether shall we fly?
Edw. Bootless is flight, they follow us with wings;
And weak we are, and cannot shun pursuit.

Enter Richard.

Rich. Ah, Warwick, why hast thou withdrawn thy—Thy brother's blood the thirsty earth hath drunk;[self]
Broach'd with the steely point of Clifford's lance:
And, in the very pangs of death, he cry'd,—
Like to a dismal clangour heard from far,—
Warwick, revenge! brother, revenge my death!
So underneath the belly of their steeds,
That stain'd their felllocks in his smoking blood,
The noble gentleman gave up the ghost.
War. Then let the earth be drunken with our blood:
I'll kill my horse, because I will not fly.
Why stand we like soft-hearted women here,
Waiting our losses, whiles the foe doth rage;
And look upon, as if the tragedy
Were play'd in jest by country playing actors?
Here on this field I saw God above,
I'll never pause again, never stand still,
Till either death hath clos'd these eyes of mine,
Or fortune given me measure of revenge.

Edw. O Warwick, I do bend my knee with thine;
And, in this vow, do chain my soul to thine.—
Aye, and my knee rise from the earth's cold face,
I throw my hands, mine eyes, my heart to thee,
Thou sett'st up and plucker down of kings!
Beseeching thee,—if with thy will it stands,
That to my foes this body must be prey,—
Yet that thy brazen gates of heaven may ope,
And give sweet passage to my sinful soul!—
Now, broach'd, let us take leave until we meet again,
Where'er it be, in heaven, or on earth.
Rich. Brother, give me thy hand;—and, gentle
Let me embrace thee in my weary arms: [Warwick,
I, that did never weep, now melt with woe,
That winter should cut off our spring-time so.
War. Away, away! Once more, sweet lords, fare—
Geo. Let us all together to our troops.[well
And give them leave to fly that will not stay;
And call them pillars, that shall stand to us;
And, if we thrive, promise them such rewards
As victors wear at the Olympic games:
This may plant courage in their qualifying breasts;
For yet is hope of life and victory.—
Fore slows no longer, make we hence amain. [Exeunt.
KING HENRY VI.—PART III.

SCENE IV.—The same. Another Part of the Field.

Excursions. Enter Richard and Clifford.

Rich. Now, Clifford, I have single thee alone: Suppose this arm is for the duke of York, And this for Rutland, both bound to revenge, Wert thou environ'd with a brazen wall.

Clif. Now, Richard, I am with thee here alone: This is the hand, that stab'd thy father York; And this the hand, that slew thy brother Rutland; And here's the heart, that triumphs in their death, And cheers these hands, that slew thy sire and brother To execute the like upon thyself; [there, And so, have at thee.

Rich. Nay, Warwick, single out some other chase; For I myself will hunt this wolf to death. [Exeunt.

SCENE V.—Another Part of the Field.

Alarum. Enter King Henry.

K. Hen. This battle fares like to the morning's war, When dying clouds contend with growing light; What time the shepherd, blowing of his nails, Can neither call it perfect day, nor night. Now sways it this way, like a mighty sea, For 'tis the tide to come that wins the wind: Now sways it that way, like the self-same sea For'd to retire by fury of the wind: Sometime, the flood prevails; and, then, the wind: Now, one the better; then, another best; Both tugging to be victors, breast to breast, Yet neither conqueror, nor conquer'd: So is the equal poise of this fell war.
Here on this moholl will I sit me down, To whom God will, there be the victory! For Margaret my queen, and Clifford too, Have bid me from the battle; swearing both, They prosper best of all when I am thence. Would I were dead! if God's good will were so: For what is in this world but grief and woe! O God! methinks it were a happy life, To be no better than a homely swain; To sit upon a hill, as I do now, To carve out dials quaintly, point by point, Thereby to see the minutes how they run: How many make the hour full complete, How many hours bring about the day, How many days will finish up the year, How many years a mortal man may live: When this is known, then to divide the times: So many hours must I tend my flock; So many hours must I take my rest; So many hours must I contemplate; So many hours must I sport myself; So many days my eyes have been with young; So many weeks ere the poor fools will yeat; So many years ere I shall sheepe the fleece; So minutes, hours, days, weeks, months, and years, Pass'd over to the end they were created, Would bring white hair's unto a quiet grave. Ah, what a life were this! how sweet! how lovely! Gives not the hawkborn bush a sweeter shade To shepherds, looking on their silly sheep, Than doth a rich embroider'd canop? To kings, that fear their subjects' treachery? O, yes it doth; a thousand fold it doth. And to conclude,—the shepherd's homely cards, His cold thin drink out of his leather bottle, His wonted sleep under a fresh tree's shade All which secure and sweetly he enjoys Is far beyond a prince's delicacies, His viands sparkling in a golden cup, His body couched in a curious bed, Whom care, mistrust, and treason wait on him. Alarum. Enter a Son that has killed his Father, dragging in the dead body.

Son. Ill blows the wind, that profits no body. This man, whom hand to hand I slew in fight, May be possessed with some store of crowns: And I, that haply take them from him now, May yet ere night yield both my life and them To some man else, as this dead man doth me,— Who's this?—O God! is it my father's face, Whom in this conflict I unwares have kill'd. O heavy times, begetting such events! From London by the king was I press'd forth, My father, being the earl of Warwick's man, Came on the part of York, press'd by his master, And I, who at his hands record my life, Have by my hands of life bereav'd him.— Pardon me, God, I knew not what I did!— And pardon, father, for I knew not thee!— My tears shall wipe away these bloody marks, And no more words, till they have fow'd their fill.

K. Hen. O piteous spectacle! O bloody times! With many hours, and battles for the dearth, Poor harmless lambs abide their eminence,— Weep, wretched man, I'll aid thee, tear for tear, And let our hearts, and eyes, like civil war, Be blind with tears, and break o'errag'd with grief. Enter a Father, who has kill'd his Son, hearing the body in his arms.

Path. Thou that so stoutly hast resist'd me, Give me thy gold, if thou hast any gold; For I have bought it with an hundred blows,— But let me see:—is this our feaman's face! Ah, no, no, no, it is mine only son!— Ah, boy, if any life be left in thee, Throw up thine eye; see, see, what showers arise, Blown with the windy tempest of my heart; Upon my wounds, that kill mine eye and heart!— O, pity, God, this miserable age!— What stratagems, how fell, how butchery, Erroneous, mutinous, and unnatural, This deadly quarrel daily doth beget!— O boy, thy father gave thee life too soon, And hath bereft thee of thy life too late. [grief K. Hen. With the love! grief more than common, O, that my death would stay these ruthless deeds!— O pity, pity, gentle heaven, pity!— The red rose and the white are on his face, The fatal colours of our striving houses: The one, his purple blood right well resembles; The other, his pale cheeks, methinks, present; Wither one rose, and let the other Wither! If you contend, a thousand lives must wither. Son. How will my mother, for a father's death, Take on with me, and ne'er be satisfied? Path. How will my wife, for slaughter of my son, Shed seas of tears, and ne'er be satisfied? K. Hen. How will the country, for these woeful Misthink the king, and not be satisfied? [chances, Son. Was ever so son, so rul'd a father's heart? Path. Was ever father, so bemist a son? K. Hen. Was ever king, so griev'd for subjects' woe? Much is your sorrow; mine, ten times so much. Son. I'll bear thee hence, where I may weep my fill. Path. These arms of mine shall be thy winding-sheet. My heart, sweet boy, shall be thy sepulchre; For from my heart thine image ne'er shall go.
ACT II.—SCENE VI.

My sighing breast shall be thy funeral bell;
And so obsequious will thy father be,
Sad for the loss of thee, having no more,
As Priam was for all his valiant sons—
I'll bear thee hence; and let them fight that will,
For I have murdered where I should not kill.

[Kill, with the body

SCENE VI.—The same.

A loud Alarum. Enter Clifford, wounded.
Cliff. Here burns my candle out, ay, here it dies.
Which, while it lasted, gave King Henry light.
O, Lancaster! I fear thy overthrow!
More than my body's parting with my soul.
My love, and fear, giev'd many friends to thee;
And, now I fall, thy tough comminxures melt.
Impairing Henry, strengthening mis-proud York,
The common people swarm like summer flies;
And whither fly the gnats, but to the sun?
And who shines now but Henry's enemies?
O, Phoebus! haste thou never given consent
That Phaeton should check thy fiery steeds,
Thy burning car never had scorched the earth:
And Henry, hast thou swayed as kings should do,
Or as thy father, and his father, did,
Giving no ground unto the house of York,
They never then had sprung like summer flies;
1, and ten thousand in this luckless realm,
Had left no mourning widows for our death,
And thou this day hadst kept thy chair in peace.
For what doth cherish weeds, but gentle air?
And what makes robbers bold, but too much leity?
Bootless are plaints, and careless are my wounds:
No way to fly, nor strength to hold out flight;
The foe is merciless, and will not pity;
For, at their hands, I have deserved no pity.
The air hath got into my deadly wounds,
And much effuse of blood doth make me faint;
Come, York, and Richard, Warwick, and the rest;
I stabb'd your fathers' bosoms, split my breast.

[He faints.

Alarum and retreat. Enter Edward, George, Richard, Montague, Warwick, & Soldiers.

Edward. Now breathe we, lords; good fortune bids us pause,
And smooth the frowns of war with peacefull looks.—
Some troops pursue the bloody-minded queen—
That led calm Henry, though he were a king,
As doth a sail, fill'd with a fretting gust,
Command an argosy to stem the waves.
But think you, lords, that Clifford feels with them?
[Exit. No, 'tis impossible he should escape:
For, though before his face I speak the words,
Your brother Richard mark'd him for the grave:
And, wheresoe'er he is, he's surely dead.

Edward. Whose soul is that which takes her heavy load?
Edward. See who it is: and, now the battle's ended,
If friend, or foe, let him be gently us'd.

Rich. Revoke that dole of mercy, for 'tis Clifford;
Who, not contented that he lopp'd the branch
In hewing Rutland when his leaves put forth,
But set his murdering knife unto the root
From whence that tender spray did sweetly spring,
I mean, our princely father, duke of York.

War. From off the gates of York fetch down the
Your father's head, which Clifford placed there:
Instead whereof, let this supply the room;
Measure for measure must be answered.

Edward. Bring forth that fatal screech-owl to our house,
That ever strove with thee to keep thee down:
Now death shall stop his dismal threatening sound,
And his ill-boding tongue no more shall speak.

[Attendants bring the body forward.

War. I think his understanding is bereft:—
Speak, Clifford, dost thou know who speaks to thee?—
Dark cloudy death o'ershades his beams of life,
And he nor sees, nor hears us what we say.
Rich. O, would he did! and so, perhaps, he doth;
Tis but his policy to counterfeit,
Because he would avoid such bitter taunts
Which in the time of death he gave our father.
Geo. If so thou think'st, vex him with eager words.
Rich. Clifford, ask mercy, and obtain no grace.
Edward. Clifford, repeat in bootless punctence.
War. Clifford, devise excuses for thy faults.
Geo. While we devise fell tortures for thy faults.
Rich. Thou didst love York, and I am son to York.
Edward. Thou pitt'dst Rutland, I will pity thee.
Geo. Where's captain Margaret, to fenced you now?—
War. They mock thee, Clifford! I swear as thou wast bane,
Rich. What, not an oath? nay, then the world goes
When Clifford cannot spare his friends an oath:—
I know by that, he's dead; And, by my soul,
If this right hand would buy two hours' life,
That I in all despite might rai'l at him, [blood
This hand should chop it off; and with the issuing Stife the villain, whose unstanch'd thirst
York and young Rutland could not satisfy.
War. Ay, but he's dead: Off with the traitor's head,
And rear it in the place your father's stands:—
And now to London with triumphant march.
To there to be crowned England's royal king.
From whence shall Warwick cut the sea to France
And ask the lady Bona for thy queen?
So shalt thou sinew both these hands together;
And, having France thy friend thou shalt not dread
The scatter'd foe, that hopes to rise again;
For though they cannot greatly sting to hurt,
Yet look to have them buzz, to offend thine ears.
First, will I see the coronation;
And then to Brittany I'll cross the sea,
To effect this marriage, so it please my lord.

Edward. Even as thou wilt, sweet Warwick, let it be
For on thy shoulder do I build my seat;
And never will I undertake the thing,
[Wherein thy counsel and consent is wanting.
Richard. I will create thee duke of Gloster:
And George, of Clarence;—Warwick, as myself,
Shall do, and undo, as he pleaseth best.
Rich. Let me be duke of Clarence; George, of
For Gloster's dukedom is too o'minous. [Gloster:
War. Tut, that's a foolish observation;
Richard, be duke of Gloster: Now to London,
To see these honours in possession. [Exit.

ACT III.

Enter two Keepers, with cross-bows in their hands.

1 Keep. Under this thick-crown brake we'll shroud ourselves;
For through this laund anon the deer will come:
And in this covert we will make our stand,
Culling the principal of all the deer.
2 Keep. I'll stay above the hill, so both may shoot.
1 Keep. That cannot be; the noise of the cross-bow
Will scare the herd, and so my shoot is lost.
Here stand we both, and aim we at the best:
And, for the time shall not seem tedious,
I'll tell thee what befell me on a day,
In this self-place where now we mean to stand.
2 Keep. Here comes a man, let's stay till he be past.

Enter King Henry, disguised, with a prayer-book.
K. Hen. From Scotland am I stol'n, even of pure
To greet mine own land with my wishful sight. [love.
No, Harry, Harry, 'tis no land of thine:
The place is fill'd, thy sceptre wrung from thee,
Thy balm wash'd off, wherewith thou wast anointed,
No bending knee will call thee Caesar now,
No humble sitters press to speak for right,
No, not a man comes for redress of thee;
For how can I help them, and not myself. [fee
1 Keep. Ay, here's a deer, whose skin's a keeper's
This is the grandam king; let's seize upon him.
K. Hen. Let me embrace these sour adversities.
For wise men say, it is the wisest course.
2 Keep. Why linger we? let us lay hands upon him.
1 Keep. Forbear a while; we'll bear a little more.
K. Hen. My queen, and son, are gone to France
For aid:
And, as I hear, the great commanding Warwick
Is thither gone, to crave the French king's sister
To wise for Edward: If this news be true,
Poor queen and son, your labour is but lost:
For Warwick is a subtle orator,
And Lewis a prince soon won with moving words.
By this account, then, Margaret may win him;
For she's a woman to be pitied much;
Her sighs will make a battery in his breast;
Her tears will pierce into a marble heart;
The tiger will be mild, while she doth mourn;
And Nero will be tainted with remorse.
To hear, and see, her plaints, her brilliant tears.
Ay, but she's come to beg: Warwick, to give:
She, on his left side, craving aid for Henry;
He, on his right, asking a wife for Edward.
She weeps, and says—her Henry is depos'd;
He smiles and says—his Edward is install'd;
That she poor wretch, for great can speak no more:
Whiles Warwick tells his title, smooths the wrong.
Infereth arguments a mighty strength.
And, in conclusion, wins the king from her,
With promise of his sister, and what else,
To strengthen and support king Edward's place.
O Margaret, thus 'twill be; and that poor soul,
Art thou forsaken, as thou wast forlorn.
2 Keep. Say, what art thou, that talk'st of kings
And queens? [born to:
K. Hen. More than I seem, and less than I was A man at least, for less I should not be:
And men may talk of kings, and why not I?
2 Keep. Ay, but thou talk'st as if thou wert a king.
K. Hen. Why, so I am, in mind; and that's enough.
2 Keep. But, if thou be a king, where is thy crown?
K. Hen. My crown is in my heart, not on my head;
Not deck'd with diamonds, and Indian stones,
Nor to be seen: my crown is call'd, content.
A crown it is, that seldom kings enjoy,
[trait,
2 Keep. Well, if you be a king crown'd with con-
Your crown content, and you, must be contented
To go along with us: for, as we think,
You are the king. King Edward hath depose'd:
And we his subjects, sworn in all allegiance,
Will apprehend you as his enemy.
[feath
K. Hen. But did you never swear, and break an 2 Keep. No, never such an oath; nor will not now.
K. Hen. Where did you dwell, when I was king?
2 Keep. Here in this country, where we now remain.
K. Hen. I was anointed king at nine months old;
My father, and my grandfather, were kings:
And you were sworn true subjects unto me:
And tell me then, have you not broke your oaths!
1 Keep. No:
For we are true subjects, but while you were king.
K. Hen. Why, am I dead? do I not breathe a man?
Ah, simple men, you know not what you swear.
Look, as I blow this feather from my face,
And as the air blows it to me again,
Obeying with my wind when I do blow,
And yielding to another when it blows,
Commanded always by the greatest gust:
Such is the lightness of you common men.
But do not break your oaths; for, of that sin
My mild entreaties shall not make you guilty.
Go where you will, the king shall be commanded;
And be you kings; command, and I'll obey.
1 Keep. We are true subjects to the king, king Ed-
K. Hen. So would you be again to Henry, [ward.
If he were sent as king Edward is.
1 Keep. We charge you, in God's name, and in the king's
To go with us unto the officers.
K. Hen. In God's name, lead; your king's name be obey'd:
And what God will, then let your king perform;
And what he will, I humbly yield unto. [Exit.

SCENE II.—London. A Room in the Palace.

Enter King Edward, Gloster, Clarence, and Lady Grey.
K. Edu. Brother of Gloster, at Saint Alban's field
This lady's husband, sir John Grey, was slain,
His land then seized on by the compoimer;
Her suit is now, to reposess those lands;
Which we in justice cannot well deny,
Because in quarrel of the house of York
The worthy gentleman did lose his life.
Give our highness shall do well, to grant her suit;
It were dishonour, to deny it her.
K. Edu. It were less; but yet I'll make a pause.
Glo. Yet is it so?
I see, the lady hath a thing to grant,
Before the king will grant her humble suit.
K. Edw. But now you partly may perceive my mind.
L. Grey. My mind will never grant what I perceive.
K. Edw. To tell you plain, I had rather be in prison.
L. Grey. My friends and burgesses.
K. Edw. Why, then shall not have this house?
L. Grey. Those in the wrong, these children might.
K. Edw. Hence your highness wrongs both whom.
B. Norton, lord, this marry meditation (and me).
K. Edw. Through the wrongs of this highness.
L. Grey. Then, no, my lord. My suit is at an end.
Glo. The widow likes him not, she knits her brows.
K. Edw. He is the bluest woor in Christendom.
Glo. [Aside.] Her looks do argue her repulse with modesty.
K. Edw. Her words do shew her wit incomparable.
Glo. [Aside.] All her perfections challenge sovereignty.
K. Edw.
L. Grey. One way, or other, she is for a king.
K. Edw. And she shall be my love, or else my queen.
L. Grey. Say, that king Edward take then for his queen?
K. Edw. I'll take her, and then done, my gracious
K. Edw. I am a subject fit to just withal.
K. Edw. But far unfit to be a sovereign.
Glo. Sweet widow, by my state I swear to thee,
K. Edw. I speak no more than what I soul intend.
L. Grey. And that is, to enjoy thee for my love.
K. Edw. And that is more than I will yield unto it.
L. Grey. I know, I am too mean to be your queen.
K. Edw. And yet too good to be your concubine.
Glo. K. Edw. You ravish, widow; I did mean, my queen.
L. Grey. Twill grive your grace, my son should call you.
K. Edw. Father.
L. Grey. No more, than when thy daughters call thee
K. Edw. Thou art a widow, and thou hast some children:
L. Grey. And, by God's mother, I, being but a bachelor.
K. Edw. Have other some: why, 'tis a happy thing
K. Edw. To be the father unto many sons.
K. Edw. Answer no more, for thou shalt be my queen.
K. Edw. The ghostly father now hath done his shift.
K. Edw. We can make a richer, 'twas for shift.
K. Edw. Brothers, you may what chat we two have had.
Glo. The widow likes it not, for she looks sad.
K. Edw. You'd think it strange, if I should marry
K. Edw. Why, Clarence, to myself.
Glo. That would be ten days' wonder, at the least.
K. Edw. That's a day longer than a wonder lasts.
K. Edw. By so much is the wonder in extremities.
K. Edw. Well, jest on, brothers: I can tell you
K. Edw. Her suit is granted for her husband's lands.
K. Edw. Enter a Nobleman.
Nob. My gracious lord, Henry your foe is taken,
K. Edw. This, that he be convey'd unto the lower.
K. Edw. And go we, brothers, to the man that took him.
K. Edw. To question of his apprehension.
Nob. Widow, go you along; Lords, use her honourable

ACT III.—SCENE II.
Glo. Ay, Edward will use women honourably.

'Would he were want was, marrow, bones, and all,
That from his loins no hopeful branch may spring,
To cross me from the golden time I look for!
And yet, between my soul's desire, and me,
(The lustful Edward's title buried.)

Is Clarence, Henry, and his son young Edward,
And all the unlook'd-for issue of their bodies,
To take their rooms, ere I can place myself:
A cold premeditation for my purpose.
Why, then I do but dream on sovereignty;
Like one that stands upon a promontory,
And spies a far-off shore where he would tread,
Wishing his foot were equal with his eye;
And chides the sea that sunders him from thence, Saying—he'll Iade it dry to have his way;
So do I wish the crown, being so far off;
And so I chide the means that keep me from it;
And so I say—I'll cut the causes off,
Flattering me with impossibilities.
My eye's too quick, my heart o'erweenes too much,
Unless my hand and strength could equal them.
Well, say there is no kingdom then for Richard;
What other pleasure have the world afford'd?
I'll make my heaven in a lady's lap,
And deck my body in gay ornaments,
And witch sweet ladies with my words and looks.
O miserable thought! and more unlikely,
Than to accomplish twenty golden crowns!

Love, why forswore me in my mother's womb?
And, for I should not deal in her soft laws,
Shall I cut short frail nature with some brie
To sprinkle arm up like a wither'd shrub;
To make an envious mountain on my back,
Where sits deformity to mock my body;
To shape my legs of an unequal size;
To disproportion me in every part,
Like to a chaos, or an unluck'd bear-whelp,
That the reader no impression like the dam.
And am I then a man to be bel'd?
O, monstrous fault, to harbour such a thought!
Then, since this earth affords no joy to me,
But to command, to check, to o'erbear such
As are of better person than myself,
I'll make my heaven—to dream upon the crown;
And, whiles I live, to account this world but hell,
Unto my mind that bears the will's head,
Be round impaled with a glorious crown.
And yet I know not how to get the crown,
For many lives stand between me and home;
And I,—like one lost in a thorny wood,
That rents the thorns, and is rent with the thorns;
Seeking a way, and straying from the way.
Not knowing how to find the open air,
But toiling desperately to find it out,—
Torment myself to catch the English crown:
And from that torment I will free myself,
Or how my way out with a bloody axe.
Why, I can smile, and murder while I smile:
And cry, content, to that which grieves my heart;
And wet my cheeks with artifical tears,
And frame my face to occasion,
I'll drown more sailors than the mermaid shall;
I'll slay more gazers than the basilisk;
I'll play the orator as well as Nestor,
Deceive more shilly than Ulysses could,
And, like a Simon, take another Troy:
I can add colours to the cameoon;
Change shapes, with Protes, for want advantages,
And set the mermaids Machiavel to school.
Can I do this, and cannot get a crown?
True! were it further off, I'll pluck it down. [Exit.]

SCENE III.—France. A Room in the Palace.

FLOURISH. Enter Lewis the French King, and Lady Bona, attended; the King takes his state. Then enter QUEEN MARGARET, PRINCE Edward, her son, and the Earl of Oxford.

K. Lew. Fair queen of England, worthy Margaret,
Sit down with us; it ill befits thy state.

Bona. And birth, that thou shouldn't stand, while Lewis doth

K. Lew. No, mighty king of France; now Margaret
Must strike her sail, and learn awhile to serve,
Where kings command. I was, I must confess,
Great Albion's queen in former golden days:
But now mischance hath trod me thy title down,
And with dishonour laid me on the ground;
Where I must take like seat unto my fortune,
And to my humble seat conform myself.

K. Lew. Why, say, fair queen, whence springs this deep despair?

Bona. From such a cause as fills mine eyes with
And stops my tongue, while heart is drown'd in cares.

K. Lew. Whate'er it be, he thou still like thyself,
And sit thee by our side: yield not thy neck
To fortune's yoke, but let thy dauntless mind
Still ride in triumph over all mischance.
Be plain, queen Margaret, and tell thy grief,
It shall be eas'd, if France can yield relief.

K. Lew. What can those gracious words revivify my drooping thoughts,
And give me to un-tied sorrows leave to speak.
Now, therefore, be it known to noble Lewis,—
That Henry, sole possessor of my love,
Is, of a king, become a banish'd man,
And forced to live in Scotland a forlorn;
While proud ambitious Edward, duke of York,
Usurps the regal title, and the seat
Of England's true-annointed lawful king.
This is the cause, that I, poor Margaret,
With this my son, prince Edward, Henry's heir,—
Am come to crave thy just and lawful aid;
And, if thou fail us, all our hope is done:
Scotland hath will to help, but cannot help;
Our people and our peers are both misled,
Our treasure seiz'd, our soldiers put to flight,
And, as thou seest, the empty air prevails.

K. Lew. Renowned queen, with patience calm the
We whiletheking'smeans to break it off.

Bona. The more we stay, the stronger grows our foe.

K. Lew. The more I stay, the more I'll succour thee.

Bona. But, impatient waste on true sorrow;
And see, where comes the breeder of my sorrow.

Enter Warwick, attended.

K. Lew. What's he, that approacheth boldly to our presence?

K. Lew. Our earl of Warwick, Edward's greatest

K. Lew. Welcome, brave Warwick! What brings thee to France?

K. Lew. Despise not our fair state. Queen Margaret rises.

K. Lew. Ay, now begins a second storm to rise;
For this is he, that moves both wind and tide.

War. From worthy Edward, king of Albion,
My lord and sovereign, and thy vowed friend,
I come,—in kindness and unfigned love,—
First, to do greetings to thy royal person;
And, then, to crave a base of vanity:
And, lastly, to confirm that'minity
With nuptial knot, if thou vouchsafe to grant
That virtuous lady Bona, thy fair sister,
Te England's king, in lawful marriage.

Q. Mar. If that go forward, Henry's hope is done. War. And, gracious madam, [to Bona.] in our king's behalf, I am commanded, with your leave and favour, humbly to kiss your hand, and with my tongue To tell the passion of my sovereign's heart; Where, fame, late entering at his heelful ears, Hath plac'd thy beauty's image, and thy virtue. Q. Mar. King Lewis,—and lady Bona, hear me Before you answer Warwick. His demand [speak, Springs not from Edward's well-mean't honest love, But from deceit, bred by necessity; For how can tyrants safely govern home, Unless abroad they purchase great alliance? To prove him tyrant, this reason may suffice,— That Henry liveth still: but were he dead, Yet here prince Edward stands, king Henry's son. Look therefore, Lewis, that by this league and marriage Thou draw not on thy danger and dishonour: For though usurpers sway the rule a while, Yet heaven and earth are yet, time suppresseth wrongs. War. Injurious Margaret! Prince.

And why not queen? War. Because thy father Henry did usurp; And thou no more art prince, than she is queen.

Ofy. Then Warwick disannuls great John of Gault, Which did subdue the greatest part of Spain; And John of Gault, Henry the Fourth, Whose wisdom was a mirror to the wisest; And, after that wise prince, Henry the Fifth, Who by his prowess conquered all France: From these our Henry lineally descends.

War. Oxford, how hasti, in this smooth discourse, Thou tellst not, how Henry the Sixth hath lost All that which Henry the Fifth had gotten? Methink, these peers of France should smile at that. — But for the rest,—You tell a pedigree Of three score and two years; a silly time To make prescription for a kingdom's worth.

Ofy. Why, Warwick, canst thou speak against thy Wiston thou obey'dst thirty and six years. [siec, And not bewray thy treason with a blush? War. Can Oxford, that did ever fense the right, Now buckler falsehood with a pedigree? For shame, leave, Henry, and call Edward king. Ofy. Call him my king, by whose injurious doom My elder brother, the lord Aubrey Vere, Was done to death! and more than so, my father, Even my great-grandfather, the Earl of Warwick. When nature brought him to the door of death? No, Warwick, no; while life upholdeth this arm, This arm upholdeth the house of Lancaster.

War. And I the house of York.

K. Leo. Queen Margaret, prince Edward, and Oxmore, at our request, to stand aside. [lord, While I use further conference with a blush.

Q. Mar. Heaven grant, that Warwick's words be With him not hit. [Retiring with the Prince and Oxford.

K. Leo. Now, Warwick, tell me, even upon thy conscience, Is Edward your true king? for I were loath, To link with him that were not lawful chosen. War. Theroon I pawn my credit and mine honour. K. Leo. But is he gracious in the people's eye? War. The more, that Henry was unfortunate. K. Leo. Then further,—all dissembling set aside, Tell me for truth the measure of his love Unto our sister Bona. War. Such it seems, As may beseen a monarch like himself. Myself have ofen heard him say, and swear,— That this his love was an eternal plant; Whereof the root was fix'd in virtue's ground, The leaves and fruit maintain'd with beauty's sun; Exempt from envy, but not from disdain, Unless the lady Bona quit his pain.

K. Leo. Now, sister, let us hear your firm resolve. Bona. Your grant, or your denial shall be mine.— Yet I confess, [to War.] that often ere this day, When I have heard your king's desert recounted, Mine ear hath tempted judgment to desire.

K. Leo. Then, Warwick, thus,—Our sister shall be Edward's; And now forthwith shall articles be drawn Touching the joynoint that your king must make, Which with her dowry shall be counterpois'd:— Draw near, queen Margaret, and be a witness, That Bona shall be wife to the English king. Prince. To Edward, but not to the English king. Q. Mar. Deceitful Warwick! it was thy device By this alliance to make void my suit; And betwixt thee and Lewis was his dear friend. K. Leo. And still is friend to him and Margaret: But if your title to the crown be weak,— As may appear by Edward's good success,— Then 'tis but reason, that I be releas'd From giving aid, which late I promised. Yet shall you have all kindness at my hand, That ye shall do as I shall command you. War. Henry now lives in Scotland, at his case, Where having nothing, nothing he can lose. And as for you yourself, our quondam queen,— You have a father able to maintain you; And bett'were, you troubled him than France.

Q. Mar. Peace, impatient and shameless Warwick, Proud setter up and puller-down of kings! [peace; I will not hence, till with my talk and ear Both full of truth, I make king Lewis behold Thy sly conveyance, and thy lord's false love; For both of you are birds of self-same feather.

K. Leo. Warwick, this is some post to us, or thee. Enter a Messenger.

Mess. My lord ambassador, these letters are foryou; Sent from your brother, marquis Montague. These from our king unto your majesty. — And, madam, these for you; from whom, I know not. [To Margaret. They all read their letters. Ofy. If this be well, that our fair queen and mistress Smiles at her news, while Warwick frowns at his. Prince. Nay, mark, how Lewis stamps as he were I hope, all's for the best. [settled:

K. Leo. Warwick, what are thy news? and yours, fair queen? [joys.

Q. Mar. Mine, such as fill my heart with unhoped War. Mine, full of sorrow and heart's discontent. K. Leo. What! has your king married the lady And now, to soothe your forgery and his, [Grey? Sends me a paper to persuade me patience? Is this the alliance that be seeks with France? Dare he presume to seors us in this manner? Q. Mar. I tolh your majesty as much before: This proveth Edward's love, and Warwick's honesty. War. King Lewis, I here protest,—in sight of heaven. And by the hope I have of heavenly bliss, — even That I am clear from this misdeed of Edward's; No more my king, for he dishonours me; But most himself, if he could see his shame. — Did I forget, that by the house of York My father came unhit by his death; Did I let pass the abuse done to my niece?
Did I importune him with the royal crown? Did I put Henry from his native right? And am I guardian of the last with shame? Shame on himself: for my desert he honours. And to redeem his honour lost for him. I here entreat him, and return to Henry: My noble queen, let former grudges pass. And henceforth I am thy true servitor. I will revenge his wrong to Lady Bosca, And replant Henry in his former state.

Q. Mar. Warwick, these words have turned my hat. And I forgive and quite forget old faults. [to love] And joy that then became st Henry's friend. War. So much his friend, ay, his un葭igned friend. That, if King Lewis would be safe to furnish us With some few bands of chosen soldiers, I'll undertake to land them on our coast, And force the tyrant from his seat by war. 'Tis not his new-made bride shall succour him: And as for Clarence,—as my letters tell me, He's very likely now to fall from him: For matching more for wanton than honour, Or for them strength and safety of our country. War. Dear brother, how shall I revenge? But I'll not help this distressed queen! Q. Mar. Renowned prince, how shall poor Henry Unless thou rescue him from foul despair? [live. Rous. My quartal and this English queen's are one. War. And mine, fair Lady Bosca, join with yours. K. Lew. And mine with hers, and thine, and Mars. Therefore, at last, I firmly am resolv'd. [shortly. Q. Mar. Let me give humble thanks for all at once. A. Lew. Then England's messenger, return in post: And tell false Edward, thy supposed king,— That Lewis of France is sending over masters, To reveal with him and his new bride: Thou seest what's past, go fear thy king withal. Rous. Tell him, in hope he'll prove a widower, I'll wear the willow garland for his sake. [shortly. Q. Mar. Tell him, My mourning weeds are laid And I am ready to put armour on. [aside. War. Tell him from me, That he hath done me wrong: And therefore I'll unclaw him, e'en be long. There's thy reward: be gone. [Exit Mess. A. Lew. But, Warwick, thou, and I, To ford, with five thousand men, Shall cross the seas, and bid false Edward battle: And, as occasion serves, this noble queen And prince shall follow with a fresh supply. Yet, ere thou go, but answer me one doubt:—What pledge have we of thy firm loyalty? War. This shall assure my constant loyalty: That if our queen and this young prince agree, I'll join mine eldest daughter and my joy, To him forswear in holy wedlock bands. Q. Mar. Yes, I agree, and thank you for your mor-son Edward, she is fair and virtuous. [tien: Therefore delay not, give thy hand to Warwick: And, with thy hand, thy faith irrevocable. That only Warwick's daughter shall be thine. Prince. Yes, I accept her, for she well deserves it; And here, to pledge my vow, I give my hand. [He gives his hand to WARWICK

K. Lew. Why stay we now? These soldiers shall be And thou, lord Bourbon, our high admiral. [leived, Shall wait them over with our royal fleet.— I long, till Edward fall by war's insuffice. For mocking marriage with a dama of France. [Except all but Warwick

War. I came from Edward as ambassador, But I return his sworn and mortal foe. Matter of marriage was the charge he gave me, But dreadful war shall answer his demand. Had he none else to make a stake, but me: Then none but I should bear his jest to sorrow. I was the child that raised him to the crown. And I'll be sure of bringing him down again: Not with the help of my misety. But seek revenge on Edward's mockery. [Exit.

ACT IV.

SCENE I.—London. [In side the Tower.

Enter Gloucester, Clarence, Somerset, Montague, and others.

Glo. Now, tell me, brother Clarence, what think you Of this new marriage with the late Queen? Hath net our brother made a worthy choice? Car. Alas, you know, 'tis far from hence to France; How could he stay till Warwick made return? So, my lords, forbear, he must talk; here comes the king.

Warwick. Enter King Edward, attended: Lady Grey, as Queen; Pembroke, Stafford; Hastings, and others.

Glo. And his well-chosen bride.
Car. I must to tell him plainly what I think.
K. Edw. New brother of Clarence, how like you our choice, That you stand pensive, as half makeoutent?
Car. As well as Lewis of France, or the earl of Warwick;
Which are so weak of courage, and in judgment, That they'll take no offence at our alone.
K. Edw. Suppose they take offence without a cause, They are but Lewis and Warwick: I am Edward, Your king and Warwick's, and must have my will. Glo. And you shall have your will, because our Yet hasty marriage seldom proveth well. [King. K. Edw. Yet, brother Richard, are you offended
Car. No; God forbid that I should wish them sev'rd Whom God hath joined together; yet I have pity, To suffer them that yoke so well together.
Car. Then this is my opinion,—that king Lewis Becomes your enemy for mocking him. About the marriage of the lady Boua.
Glo. And Warwick, doing what you gave in charge, Is now dishonoured by this new marriage.
K. Edw. What, if both Lewis and Warwick be appl By such invention as I can devise! [peas'd, Mont. Yet to have joined with France in such al- ance. [wealth Would more have strength'd this our common- 'Gainst foreign storms, than any home-breede marriage Hmt. Why knows not Montague, that of itself, England is safe, if true within itself? [France Mont. Yes; but the safer, if it be back with Hmt. 'Tis better using France, than trusting France.
Car. Let us be back'd with God, and with the seas, Which he hath given for fence impropicable, And with their helps only defend ourselves; In them, and in ourselves, our safety lies. [serves
Car. For this one speech, lord Hastings, well de-
To have the heir of the lord Hungerford.
K. Edw. Ay, what of that? It was my will, and grant;
And, for this end, I shall stand by law.
Glo. And yet, methinks, your grace hath not done
To give the heir and daughter of lord Scales [well, Unto the brother of your loving bride;
She better would have fitted me, or Clarence :
But in your bride you bury brotherhood.
Clar. Or else you would not have bestowed the heir
On them that were nought but poor and base,
And leave your brothers to go speed elsewhere.
K. Edw. Alas, poor Clarence! is it for a wife,
That thou art malcontent? I will provide thee.
Clar. In chusing for yourself, you shew'd your judgment;
Which being shallow, you shall give me leave
To play the broker in mine own behalf;
And, to that end, I shortly mind to leave you.
K. Edw. Leave me, or tarry, Edward will be king,
And not be tied unto his brother's will.
Q. Eli. My lords, before it pleased his majesty
To raise my state to title of a queen,
Do me but right, and you must all confess
That I am as noble, and my person as fair,
And meaner than myself have had like fortune.
But as this title honours me and mine,
So your dislikes, to whom I would be pleasing,
Do cloud my joys, with danger and with sorrow.
K. Edw. My love, forbear to fawn upon their frowns:
What danger, or what sorrow can befall thee,
So long as Edward is thy constant friend,
And their true sovereign, whom they must obey?
Nay, whom they shall obey, and love thee too,
Unless they seek for hatred at my hands:
Which if they do, yet will I keep thee safe,
And they shall feel the vengeance of my wrath.
Glo. I hear, yet say not much, but think the more.
[Aside.
Enter a Messenger.
K. Edw. Now, messenger, what letters, or what
From France?
Mess. My sovereign liege, no letters; and few
But such as I, without your special pardon, [words, Dare not relate.
Glo. Go to, Garto, we pardon thee: therefore, in brief,
Tell me their words as near as thou canst guess me.
What answer makes king Lewis unto our letters?
Mess. At my depart, these were his very words;
Go tell false Edward, thy supposed king,—
That Lewis of France is sending over maskers,
To revel with him and his new bride.
K. Edw. Is Lewis so brave as he belike he thinks me
But what said lady Bona to my marriage? [Henry,
Mess. These were her words, utter'd with mild disis,
Tell him, in hope he'll prove a widower shortly, [lair; I'll wear the widow garland for his sake.
K. Edw. I blame not her, she could say little less;
She had the wrong. But what said Henry's queen?
For I have heard that she was there in place.
Mess. Tell him to say, the queen of France sends the mourning words are
And I am ready to put armour on. [done.
K. Edw. Belike, she minds to play the Amazon.
But what said Warwick to these injuries?
Mess. He, more incens'd against your majesty
Than all the rest, discharged me with these words;
Tell him from me that he hath done me wrong;
And therefore I'll reconcile him, 'tis he long,
K. Edw. Ha! burst the traitor breath out so proud
Well, I will arm me, being thus forewarn'd: [words;
They shall have wars, and pay for their presumption.
But say, is Warwick friends with Margaret?
Mess. Ay, gracious sovereign; they are so link'd in friendship,
[daughter
That young prince Edward marries Warwick's
Clar. Belike, the elder; Clarence will have the younger.
Now, brother king, farewell, and sit you fast,
For I will hence to Warwick's other daughter;
That, though I want a kingdom, yet in marriage
I may not prove inferior to yourself. You, that follow me and Warwick, follow me.
[Exit Clarence, and Somerset follows.
Glo. Not I.
My thoughts aim at a further matter; I
Stay not for love of Edward, but the crown. [Aside.
K. Edw. Clarence and Somerset both gone to War-
Yet am I arm'd against the worst can happen; [wick! And haste is needful in this desperate case.—
Pembroke, and Stafford, you in our behalf
Go levy men, and make prepare for war.
They are already, or quickly will be hand'd:
Myself in person will straight follow you.
[Exit Pembroke and Stafford.
But, ere I go, Hastings,—and Montague,—
Rest, or you take the oath of your duty,
Are near to Warwick, by blond, and by alliance:
Tell me, if you love Warwick more than me?
If it be so, then both depart to him;
I rather wish you foes, than hollow friends; But if you mind to hold your true obedience,
Give me assurance with some friendly vow,
That I may never have cause in surmise;
Mont, So God help Montague, as he proves true! Hast, And Hastings, as he favours Edward's cause!
K. Edw. Now, brother Richard, will you stand by us?
Glo. Ay, in despite of all that shall withstand you.
K. Edw. Why so? then I am sure of victory.
Now therefore let us hence; and lose no hour,
Till we meet Warwick with his foreign power.
[Exit.

SCENE II.—A Plain in Warwickshire.

Enter Warwick and Oxford, with French and other Forces.
Har. Trust me, my lord, all hitherto goes well;
The common people by numbers swarm to us.

Enter Clarence and Somerset.
But, see, where Somerset and Clarence come;—
Speak suddenly, my lords, are we all friends?—
Clar. Fear not that, my lord. [wic
War. Then, gentle Clarence, welcome unto War-
And welcome, Somerset;—I hold it unawardable,
To rest mistrustful where a noble heart
Hath pawn'd an open hand in sign of love;
Else might I think, that Clarence, Edward's brother,
Were but a leagued friend to our proceedings:
But welcome, Clarence; my daughter shall be thine,
And now what rests, but, in night's coverture,
Thy brother being carelessly encompass'd,
His soldiers marching in the town about,
And but attended by a single guard.
We may surprise and take him at our pleasure? Our scouts have found the adventure very easy:
That as Ulysses, and stout Diomedes,
With slight and manhood stote to Rhesus' tents,
And brought from the near the Thracian fatal steeds;
So we, well cover'd with the night's black mantle,
At unwares may heat down Edward's guard.
And seize himself: I say not,—slay him,
For I intend but only to surprise him.
You, that will follow me to this attempt,
KING HENRY VI.—PART III.

SCENE II.—Edward's Court near Warwick.

Enter Carmichael, to rejoin the King's court.

Carm. Count on my master, and mark me well.

Carm. Nay, sure, your Majesty does not know it yet.

Edw. Why not? I have made a solemn vow never to see my master, or to think of him.

Carm. Tomorrow then, better, shall be the day.

Edw. But why not today? what netherman is that?

Carm. This will be my long search in your Majesty's friend.

Edw. The Duke of Exeter, the King's chamberlain.

Carm. But I command the King that

That has been of secret weight in his thoughts.

Edw. I know myself respected at the court.

Carm. This is the honour that befalls him most.

Edw. Aye, but give me warning, and quittance.

Carm. You have merit and advantage.

Edw. The King knows where great love is.

Carm. That he doth! unless one meekly and truly pass answer, Aye, wherefore first guaranty we the royal part.

But it is defend his person from might here.

Carm. Ware, this is the test, and see, where stand his guests.

Edw. [to the messenger.] Say to my master, honour now or never!

Carm. I say now, my Edward, shall be won.

Edw. Does he go there?—

Carm. Yes, Sir, to then there.

Edw. [to the messenger.] Warwick, Warwick, and he know the Countess, Sir, moving—nay, even Warwick, and the King pronouncing them.

The Countess and the young newspaper, re-enter.

Edw. [to the messenger.] Let them go, here goes the Countess.

Carm. [to the Countess.] The next way, Warwick; when we parted I tell not me king.

Edw. Ay, but the case is altered:

This should you present in your kingdom.

Now how to comment with one face?

Now how to trust your others treachery.

And now how to stand for the people's weather.

Now how in this secret fromecess.

Emancipation, lest Edward, the other here too.

Edward, I have, in the secret of a mass inch.

That you present in my conscience.

Edward will always bear himself as long:

Though fortune's make overthrow my state,

My mind exceeds the composition, and value needs.

Then, for his hand, be Edward, England's king.

Latter life of my crown.

But Henry now shall wear the English crown,

And be true king indeed. But, but, but the shadow—

My best of Somerset, as you require.

See that he become Edward, and become drown my brother, and I have nothing more.

When I did have with Pembroke and his shadow,

Here you, and tell him. What answer welsh, and the end from end of him—

Now, sit a while, and where good Devon.

Edw. This, men, suppose, that men must needs it, how to possess both worse and worse. The KING. Edward and me, Somerset with London.

What new coming, my lord, for us to be.

Pembroke will come to us, our soldiers.

Ay, and so the first thing that we have to do.

You see, true Henry from imprisonment.

And see him seated in the royal throne. [Exeunt.

SCENE IV.—London. a room in the palace.

Que. Mayhem, what manner you to this maiden change?

Riv. Dumb. What worst between the King and Edward?

Que. With what more base than we, to hear against War-

Riv. Que. No, but the loss of his own royal person.

Que. Then is my sovereign safe?

Riv. Que. Am I, being where he is taken prisoner.

Riv. Que. As it of the knowledge of his guard,

Que. Or by the supposition of an unknown, and,

And, as I understand, to the throne of Ireland.

Riv. Que. Warwick's brother, by that to our foe.

Que. These news, I must confess, are full of grief.

Que. Riv. What manner madam, bear it as you may.

Que. Riv. Tell me, how have I been made thus wondrously gay.

Que. Riv. I, the rather wear them from despair.

Que. Riv. Warwick's assaying in my wound.

Que. Riv. That is it that makes me hourly passion.

Que. Riv. Wears with me, my countess's cross.

Que. Riv. ay, for this I drew in every hour.

Que. Riv. And keep the rising of blood-sucking sighs.

Que. Riv. Last with my sight or tears I found some Que. Riv. And be informed, he comes towards London.

Que. Riv. To set the crown once more on Henry's head.

Que. Riv. Arouse them the rest. King Edward's friends must down.

Que. Riv. To prevent the tyrant's violence.

Que. Riv. To cause to forget that once he had broke faith.

Que. Riv. He comes towards the sanctuary.

Que. Riv. To save at least the hand of Edward's sight.

Que. Riv. That shall be safe secure from foe, and friend.

Que. Riv. Come therefore, let us fly, while we may fly.

Que. Riv. Warwick takes us, we are sure to die. [Exeunt.

SCENE V.

A Park near Middleham Castle in Yorkshire.

Enter Grisell. Hastings, Sir William Stanley, and others.

Leave off to wonder, my lord, I knew you better.

[They two the chamber(Returning of the park) with a box of Cables.]

You know, my lord, my brother.

Ger. [To the box] in the box where at his hands.

He had good wages and great liberty.

And often, but attended with well guarded.

Ger. [To the box] how to shame him to himself.

I have served him, by secret means.

That is, about this time, he make this way.
Under the colour of his usual game,
He shall here find his friends, with horse and men,
To set him free from his captivity.

Enter KIng EDWARD, and a Huntsman.

Hunt. This way, my lord; for this way lies the game.
K. EDw. Nay, this way, man; see, where the huntsmen stand.
Now, brother of Gloster, lord Hastings, and the rest,
Stand you thus close, to steal the bishop's deer?
Glo. Brother, the time and case requireth haste;
Your horse stands ready at the park corner.
K. EDw. But whither shall we then?
Hast. To Lynn, my lord; and ship from thence to Flanders.

[meaning.
Glo. Well guessed, believe me; for that was my
K. EDw. Stanley, I will requite thy forwardness.
Glo. But wherefore stay we? 'tis no time to talk.
K. EDw. Huntsman, what say'st thou? wilt thou go along?
Hunt. Better do so, than tarry and be hag'd.
Glo. Come then, away; let's have no more ado.
K. EDw. Hoy, liberty!—shiel'd thee from Warwick's frown;
And pray that I may repossess the crown. [Exeunt.

SCENE VI.—A Room in the Tower.

Enter King Henry, Clarence, Warwick, Somerset, young Richmond, Oxford, Montague, Lieutenant of the Tower, and Attendants.

K. Hen. Master lieutenant, now that God and friends
Have shaken Edward from the regal seat;
And turn'd my captive state to liberty,
My fear to hope, my sorrows unto joys;
At our enlargement what are thy due fees?
Lieu. Subjects may challenge nothing of their sove-
But, if an humble prayer may prevail, [reigns;
I then crave pardon of your majesty.
K. Hen. For what, lieutenant? for well using me.
Nay, be thou sure, 'twill well requite thy kindness,
For that made my imprisonment a pleasure:
Ay, such a pleasure as incaged birds
Could never have: when, after many wondrous thoughts,
At last, by notes of household harmony,
They quite forget their loss of liberty.—
But, Warwick, after God, thou set'st me free,
And chiefly therefore, I thank God, and thee;
He was the author, thou the instrument.
Therefore, that I may conquer fortune's spite,
By living low, where fortune cannot hurt me;
And that the people of this blessed land
May not be punish'd with my thwarting stars;
Warwick, although my head still wear the crown,
I here resign my government to thee,
For thou art fortunate in all thy deeds.
War. Your grace hath still been fam'd for virtuous;
And now may seem as wise as virtuous,
By spring, and avoiding, fortune's malice,
For few men rightly temper with the stars:
Yet in this one thing let me blame your grace,
For choosing me, when Clarence is in place.

Clarc. No, Warwick, thou art worthy of the sway,
To whom the heavens, in thy nativity,
Adjudged an olive branch, and laurel crown,
As likely to be blest in peace, and war;
And therefore I yield thee my-free consent.

War. And I choose Clarence only for protector.
K. Hen. Warwick, and Clarence, give me both your hands;
Now join your hands, and, with your hands, your
That no dissension hinder government: [hears,
I make you both protectors of this land;
While I myself will lead a private life,
And in devotion spend my latter days,
To sin's rebuke, and my Creator's praise.

War. What answers Clarence to his sovereign's will?
Clarc. That he consents, if Warwick yield consent;
For on thy fortune I repose myself.
War. Why then, though load, yet must I be con-
We'll take together, like a double shadow [tent;
To Henry's body, and supply his place;
I mean, in bearing weight of government,
While he enjoys the honour, and his ease.
And, Clarence, now then it is more than needful,
For'with that Edward be pronounce'd a traitor,
And all his lands and goods be confiscate.

Clarc. What else? and that succession be determin'd.
War. Ay, therein Clarence shall not want his part.
K. Hen. But, with the first of all your chief affairs,
Let me entreat, [for I command no more.]
That Margaret your queen, and my son Edward,
He sent for, to return from France with speed:
For, till I see them here, by doubtful fear
My joy of liberty is half despoil'd.

Clarc. It shall be done, my sovereign, with all speed.
K. Hen. My lord of Somerset, what youth is that
Of whom you seem to have so tender care?
Som. My liege, 'tis young Henry, earl of Richmond.
K. Hen. Come hither, England's hope: If secret powers
Lays his hand on his head.
Suggest him truth to my divining thoughts.
This pretty lad will prove our country's bliss.
His looks are full of peaceful majesty;
His head by nature fram'd to wear a crown,
His hand to wield a scepter; and himself
Likely, in time, to bless a regal throne.
Make much of him, my lords; for this is he Must help you more than you are hurt by me.

Enter a Messenger.
War. What news, my friend?
Mess. That Edward is escaped from your brother,
And fled, as he hears since, to Burgundy.
War. Unsavoury news: but how made he escape?
Mess. He was convey'd by Richard duke of Gloster,
And the lord Hastings, who attended him
In secret ambush on the forest side,
And from the bishop's huntsmen rescued him:
For hunting was his daily exercise.
War. My brother was too careless of his charge.—
But let us hence, my sovereign, to provide
A salve for any sore that may betide.

[Exeunt King Henry, Warwick, Clarence,
Lieutenant, and Attendants.

Som. My lord, I like not of this flight of Edward's:
For, doubtless, Burgundy will yield him help;
And we shall have more wars, before't be long.
As Henry's late preaging prophecy
Did glad my heart, with hope of this young Richmond;
So doth my heart misgive me, in these conflicts
What may befall him, to his harm, and ours:
Therefore, lord Oxford, to prevent the worst,
Forthwith we'll send him hence to be made prisoner,
Till storms be past of civil enmity.
Of? Ay; for, if Edward repossess the crown,
'Tis like, that Richmond with the rest shall down.
Som. It shall be so; he shall to Brittany.
Come, therefore, let's about it speedily.

[Exeunt.

As being well content with that my dukedom: But, when the few hath once got in his note. He'll soon find needs make the book follow. Advice. Master mayor, who stand you in a doubt? Over the gates, we are king Henry's friends. May. Ay, say you so! the gates shall then be open'd. [Flourish from above.

To keep them back that come to succour you: Why should we nit, if you pretend no title? Gio. Why, brother, wherefore stand you on nice points? K. HEN. When we grow stronger, then we'll make our claim: Till then, his wisdom to conceal our meaning. [rule, Hau. Away with scrupulous wit! now arms must So And fearless minds climb soonest into crowns. Broth. We will proclaim you out of hand: The brut is meek will bring you many friends.

May. By now we over sovereign speech like him, And now will I be Edward's champion. [Sce. Sound. Trumpet. Edward shall be here proclaimed.

Enter. sophomore, make then proclamation. [Gives him a banner. [Exit.

Sce. Long live Edward the Fourth! A. Hen. Yes, Thanks brave Montgomery, and thanks unto you all.

If fortune serve me, I'll require this kindness, Now, for this night, let's harbour here in York; And, when the morning shall raise his car Above the horizon. We'll go towards Warwick, and his mates: For well I wot, that Henry is no soldier, —Ah, truce and clarence!—now evill becesseth thee. To flatter Henry, and forsoke the brother! Yet, is so may, we'll meet both thee and Warwick. Come on, brave soldiers; doubt not the day. And, that once getten, doubt not of large pay.

SCENE VIII.—London. A Room in the Palace.

Enter K. HENRY, WARWICK, CHARLES, MONTAGUE, EXPECT, and OXFORD.

War. What counsel, lords? Edward from Belisia, With lusty Germans, and blunt Hibernians, Hath pass'd in safety through the narrow seas, And with his troops doth march amain to London; And many toldly peopled lands to him. Oxf. Let's levy men, and beat him back again. Char. A little fire is quickly kindled out. Which, being suffer'd, rives cannot quench. War In Warwickshire I have ten-hearted friends, Not mutinous in peace, yet bold in war: These will I muster: and thus, son Clarence Shall stand, in Suffolk, Norfolk, and in Kent. The king and gentle to come with thee; —His brother Montague, in Buckingham, Northampton, and in Leicester, shalt stand, Menwell inclin'd to hear what thou command'st. And thou, brave Oxford, wondrously well belov'd. In Oxfordshire shalt muster the thy friends. —My sovereign, with the loving citizens, Like to his island, girt in with the ocean, Or modest: Duan, circled with her nymphs, Shall rest in London, till we come to thee. Eair lords, take leave, and stand not to reply. Farewell, my sovereign. [hope.

K. Hen. Farewell, my hoister, and my Troy's tier. Char. In sign of truth, I kiss your highness' hand. K. Hen. We esteemed, Clarence, be thou fortunate. Montague, comfort my lord; and so take my leave. And thus (singing HENRY'S hand) I seal my truth, and bid adieu. K. Hen. Sweet Oxford, and my loving Montague, And all at once, more a happy farewell. War. Farewell, sweet lords; let us meet at Coventry. Char. OXF. and MONT. Montague, and so. K. Hen. Here at the palace will I rest a while. Cousin of Exeter, what thinks your lordship? Methinks, the power that Edw. hath in field, Shall not be able to encounter mine. Exe. The doubt is, that he will seduce the rest.
ACT V.—SCENE I.

Enter, upon the walls, WARWICK, the Mayor of Coventry, two Messengers, and others.

War. Where is the post, that came from valiant Oxford?

How far hence is thy lord, mine honest fellow?

1 MESS. By this at Dunmore, marching hitherward.

War. Where is our brother Montague?

Where is the post that came from Montague?

2 MESS. By this at Dainty, with a puissant troop.

Enter Sir John SOMERVILLE.

War. Say, Somerville, what says my loving son?

And, by thy guess, how high is Clarence now?

Som. At Southam I did leave him with his forces, and do expect him here some two hours hence.

War. Then Clarence is at hand, I hear his drum.

Som. It is not his, my lord; here Southam lies; the drum your honour hears, marcheth from Warwick.

War. Who should that be? belike, unlook'd-for.

Som. They are at hand, and you shall quickly know.

Enter King EDWARD, GLOSTER, and Forces, marching.

K. EDW. Go, trumpet, to the walls, and sound a parle.

Glo. See, how the surly Warwick mass the wall.

War. O, unbid spile! is sportful Edward come?

Speak gentle words, and humbly bend thy knee;—Call Edward—king, and at his hands beg mercy, and he shall pardon thee these outrageous

Har. Nay, rather, will thou draw thy forces hence, confess who set thee up and pluck'd thee down?

Call Warwick—patron, and be propitious.

And thou shalt still remain the duke of York.

Glo. I thought, at least, he would have said—the Or did he make the jest against his will?

War. Is not a dukedom, sir, a goodly gift?

Glo. Ay, by my faith, for a poor earl to give; I'll do thee service for so good a gift.

War. 'Twas I, that gave the kingdom to thy brother K. EDW. Why, then 'tis mine, if but Warwick's gift.

War. Thou art no Atlas for so great a weight;

And, wealthing, Warwick takes his gift again; And Henry is my king, Warwick his subject.

K. EDW. But Warwick's king is Edward's prisoner And, gallant Warwick, do but answer this,— What is the body when the head is off?

Glo. Alas, that Warwick had no more forecast,

But, while he thought to steal the single ten, The king was sily linger'd from the deck!

You left your Henry at the bishop's palace, And, ten to one, you'll meet him in the Tower.

K. EDW. 'Tis even so; yet you are Warwick still.

Glo. Come, Warwick, take the time, kneel down, kneel down:

Nay, when I strike now, or else the iron cools.

War. I had rather chop this hand off at a blow, And with the other many a bloody hay.

Than bear so low a sail, to strike to thee.

K. EDW. Sail how thou canst, have wind and tide thy friend;

This hand fast wound about thy coal-black hair, Shall, whiles the head is warm, and new cut off, Write in the dust this sentence with thy blood,— Wind-changing Warwick now can change no more.

Enter OXFORD, with drum and colours.

War. O cheerful colours! see, where Oxford comest!

[Oxford and his Forces enter the City.

Glo. The gates are open, let us enter too.

K. EDW. So other times may set upon our backs.

Stand we in good array; for, other, we are, Will issue out again, and bid us battle:

If not, the city, being but of small defence, We'll quickly rouse the traitors in the same.

War. O, welcome Oxford! for we want thy help.

Enter MONTAGUE, with drum and colours.

Mont. Montague, Montague, Lancaster, for Lancaster!

[He and his Forces enter the City.

Glo. Thou and thy brother both shall buy this treat;

Even with the dearest blood your bodies bear [son K. EDW. The harder match'd, the greater victory My mind presageth happy gain, and conquest.

Enter SOMERSET, with drum and colours.

Som. Somerset, Somerset, for Lancaster!

[He and his Forces enter the City.

Glo. Two of thy name, both dukes of Somerset, Have sold their lives unto the house of York; And thou shalt be the third, if this sword hold.

Enter CLARENCE, with drum and colours.

War. And lo, where George of Clarence sweeps Of force enough to bid his brother battle; [along With whom an upright zeal to right prevails;

More than the nature of a brother's love:

Conte, Clarence, come; thou wilt, if Warwick calls.

Clir. Falling to Warwick, know you what this means? [Taking the red rose out of his cap
Look here, I throw my infant at thee:
I will not ruin my father's house.
Who gave his blood to hime the stones together.
And set up Lancaster. Why, then I love, Warwick.
That Clarenge is so harsh, so blunt, unnatural.
To bend the fatal instruments of war.
Against his brother and his lawful king?
Perhaps, thou wilt object: my holy oath:
To keep that oath were more impati
Thou dost not, when he sacrificed his daughter.
I am so sorry for my trespass made.
Then, to deserve well at my brother's hands,
I here proclaim myself thy mortal foe:
With resolution, wherefore or I meet thee.
As I will meet thee, if thou stir abroad.
To plague thee for thy foul misleading me.
And so proud-hearted Warwick, I defy thee.
And to my brother to my blushing cheers.—
Pandion me, Edward, I will make amends.
And Richard, do not frown upon my faults.
For I will henceforth be no more constant.
K. Edu. Now welcome more, and ten times more
Thus if thou never hast deserv'd our hate. [beloved.
Glo. Welcome, good Clarenge; this is brother-like.
War. O passing traitor, perjur'd, and unjust!
K. Edu. What, Warwick, wilt thou leave the town,
And fight?
Or shall we bear the stones about thine ears?
War. Alas, I am not coopt'd here for defence:
I will away towards Barnet presently,
And bid thee battle, Edward, if thou dar'st.
K. Edu. Yes, Warwick, Edward dares, and bears the way—
Lords, to the field; Saint George, and victory. [March. Exeunt.

SCENE II.—A Field of Battle near Barnet.
Alarms, and Excursions. Enter King Edward, bringing in Warwick wounded.
K. Edu. So, he thou there: die thou, and die our
For Warwick was a bag, that fear'd us all. —[feet.
Now, Montague, sit fast: I seek for thee.
That Warwick's bones may keep thine company. [Exit. Warwick.
War. Ah, who is nigh! come to me, friend or foe,
And tell me, who is victor, York, or Warwick?
Why ask I that? my mangled body shews,
My blood, my want of strength, my sick heart shews,
That I must yield my body to the earth,
And, by my fall, the conquest to my foe.
Thus yields the cedar to the axe's edge,
Whose arms gave shelter to the princely eagle,
Under whose shade the ramping lion slept:
Whose top-branched overpeck'd Jove's spreading tree,
And kept low shrubs from Winter's powerful wind.
These eyes, that now are dim'd with death's black
Have been as piercing as the mid-day sun, [veil.
To search the secret treasures of the world:
The wrinkles in my brows, now fill'd with blood,
Were like'd oft to kingly squelches:
For who liv'd king, but I could dig his grave?
And who durst smile, when Warwick bent his brow?
Lo, now my glory smaer'd in dust and blood!
My parks, my walks, my mantors that I had,
Even now forsake me: and of all my lands,
The wrinkles add dust and earth to the strength.
Why, what is pomp, rule, reign, but earth and dust?
And live we how we can, yet die we must.

Enter Oxford and Somerset.
Som. Ah, Warwick, Warwick! were thou as we are,
We might recover all our loss again:
The queen from France hath brought a puissant power:
Even now we heard the news: Ah, could'st thou fly:
War. Why, then I would not fly.—Ah, Montague.
If this be true, sweet brother, take my hand,
And with thy lips keep in my soul awhile!
Thou hest me: for, brother, if thou didst,
Thy tears would wash this cold congealed blood,
That glews my lips, and will not let me speak.
Come quickly, Montague, or I am dead. [last.
Now, Ah, Warwick, Montague hath breath'd his
And to the latest gasp, cried out for Warwick.
And said—Commend me to my real brother.
And more he would have said: and more he spoke,
Which sounded like a cannon in a vault,
That might not be distinguish'd: but, at last,
I well might hear deliver'd with a grow.
O, farewell, Warwick!
War. Sweet rest to his soul!
Fly, lords, and save yourselves; for Warwick beds
You all farwell, to meet again in heaven. [Duer.
Out Away, away, to meet the queen's great power!
[Exeunt, bearing off Warwick's body.

SCENE III.—Another Part of the Field.
F分支机构. Enter King Edward, in triumph; with Clarence, Gloucester, and the rest.
K. Edu. Thus far our fortune keeps an upward
And we are grace'd with wreaths of victory, course.
But, in the midst of this bright shining day,
I spy a black, suspicious, threatening cloud,
That will encounter with our glorious sun,
Ere he attain his easterly western bed:
I mean, my lords,—those powers, that the queen
Hath said'd in Gallia, have arriv'd our coast.
And, as we hear, march on to fight with us.
Car. A little gale will soon disperse that cloud,
And blow it to the source from whence it caus'd
Thy very beams will dry those vapours up;
For every cloud engenders not a storm.
Glo. The queen is vaid thirti thousand strong,
And Somerset, with Oxford, fled to her:
If she have time to breathe, she will receive,
Her faction will be full as strong as ours.
K. Edu. We are advis'd by our loving friends,
That they do hold their course toward Tewksbury;
We having now the best at Barnet field,
Will thither straight, for willingness rides way:
And, as we march, our strength will be augmented
In every county as we go along—
Strike up the drum; cry—Courage! and away.
[Exeunt.

SCENE IV.—Plains near Tewksbury.
March. Enter Queen Margaret, Prince Edward, Somerset, Oxford, and Soldiers.
Q. Mar. Great lords, wise men ne'er sit and wait their loss,
But cheerily seek how to redress their harms.
What though the mast be now blown overboard,
The cable broke, the holding anchor lost,
And half our sailors swallow'd in the flood;
Yet lives our pilot still: Is't not, that he Should leave the helm, and like a fearful lad,
With fearful eyes add water to the sea,
And give more strength to that which hath too much;
Whiles, in his moan, the ship splits on the rock,
Which industry and courage might have sav'd?
Ah, what a shame! ah, what a fault were this;
Say, Warwick was our anchor; What of that?
ACT V.—SCENE V.

And Montague, our topmast; What of him? Our slaughter'd friends the tassels; What of these? Why, is not Oxford here another anchor? And Somerset another goodly mast? The friends of France our crowns of tuckings! And, though unskilled, why not Ned and I For once allow'd the skilful pilots charge! We will not from the helm, to sit and weep; But keep our course, though the rough wind say—no, From shelves and rocks that threaten us with wreck. As good to chide the waves, as speak them fair. And what is Edward, but a ruthless sea? What Clarence, but a quicksand of deceit? And Richard, but a ragged fatal rock? All these the enemies to our poor bark.

Say, you can swim; alas, 'tis but a while: Tread on the sand; why there you quickly sink: Pestrate the rock; the tide will wash you off, Or else you perish, that's a threefold death. This speak I, lords, to let you understand, In case some one of you would fly from us, That there's no hop'd-for mercy with the brothers, More than with ruthless waves, with sands and rocks. Why, courage, then! what cannot be avoided, 'Twere childish weakness to lament, or fear.

Prince. Methinks, a woman of this valiant spirit Should not be cowardly heard; or speak these words, Infuse his breast with magnanimity, And make him, naked, feel a man at arms. I speak not this, as doubting any here: For, did I but suspect a fearful man, He should have leave to go away betimes; Least, in our need, he might infect another, And make him of such, he himself. If any such be here, as God forbid! Let him depart before we need his help.

Off. Women and children of so high a courage! And warriors faint? why, 'twere perpetual shame!— O brave young prince! thy famous grandfather Doth live again in thee; Long may'st thou live, To bear his image and renew his glory! This speak I, lords, to let you understand, In case some one of you would fly from us, Go home to bed, and, like the owl by day, If he arise, be mock'd and wonder'd at. [Thanks.]

Q. Mar. Thanks, gentle Somerset; sweet Oxford, Prince. And take his thanks, that yet hath nothing else.

Enter a Messenger.

Mess. Prepare you, lords, for Edward is at hand, Ready to fight; therefore be resolute.

Off. I thought no less: it is his policy, To haste thus fast, to find us unprovided. Som. But he's deceiv'd, we are in readiness. [Ness.]

Q. Mar. This cheers my heart, to see your forward-Off. Here pitch our battle; hence we will not budge.

March. Enter, at a distance, King Edward, Clarence, Gloucester, and Forces.

K. Edw. Brave followers, yonder stands the thorny wood, Which, by the heavens' assistance, and your strength, Must by the rocks be heen up yet gro night. I need not add more fuel to your fire, For, well I wit, ye blaze to burn them out: Give signal to the fight, and to it, lords. Q. Mar. Lords, knights, and gentlemen, what I should say, My tears gain'say; for every word I speak, Ye see, I drink the bitter of mine eyes. Therefore, no more but this:—Henry, your sovereign, Is prisoner to the foe; his state usurp'd,

His realm a slaughterhouse, his subjects slain, His statutes cancel'd, and his treasure spent; And yonder is the wolf, that makes this spoil. You fight in justice; then, in God's name, lords, Be valiant, and give signal to the fight. [Exeunt both armies.

SCENE V.—Another Part of the same.

Alarums: Excursions: and afterwards a retreat. Then, enter King Edward, Clarence, Gloucester, and Forces: with Queen Margaret, Oxford, and Somerset, prisoners.

K. Edw. Now, here a period of tumultuous broils. Away with Oxford to Hammes' castle straight: For Somerset, off with his guilty head. Go, bear them hence; I will not hear them speak. Off. For my part, I'll not trouble thee with words. Som. Nor I, but steep with patience to my fortune. Q. Mar. So part we sadly in this troubled world, To meet with joy in sweet Jerusalem.

K. Edw. Is proclamation made,—that, who finds Shall have a high reward, and he his life? [Edward, Glo. It is: and lo, where youthful Edward comes.

Enter Soldiers, with Prince Edward.

K. Edw. Bring forth the gallant, let us hear him What! can so young a thorn begin to prick? [Speak. Edward, what satisfaction canst thou make, For bearing arms, for stirring up my subjects, And all the trouble thou hast turn'd me to? Prince. Speak like a subject, proud ambitious York. Suppose that I am not thy father's meanest: Resign thy chair, and, where I sit, stand, kneel thou, Whilst I propose the self-same words to thee, Which, traitor, thou'rt not have me answer to. Q. Mar. Ah, that thy father had been so resolv'd! Glo. That thou mightst still have worn the petticote, And never have stol'n the bream from Lancaster. Prince. Let Asop fable in a winter's night; His curtal biding must sort not with this place. Glo. By heaven, brat, I'll plague you for that word Q. Mar. Ay, thou want'st born to be a plague to men. Glo. For God's sake, take away this captive scold. Prince. Nay, take away this scolding crook-back rather. [Tongue.

K. Edw. Prince, wilful boy, or I will clamp your Clar. Unload'd, thou art too malapert. Prince. I know my duty, you are all unthinking: lascivious Edward,—and thou perjur'd George; And thou misshapen Dick,—I tell ye all, I am your better, traitors as ye are; And thou usurp't my father's right and mine. K. Edw. Take that, the likeness of this rather here. [Stabs him.

Glo. Sprawl'st thou? take that, to end thy agony. [Stabs him.

Glo. And there's for twitching me with perjury. [Stabs him.

Clar. And so there's for twisting me with perjury.

Q. Mar. O, kill me too! [Offers to kill her.

Q. Mar. O, Ned, sweet Ned! speak to thy mother, boy!

Canst thou not speak?—O traitors! murderers!—

They, that stab'd Caesar, shed no blood at all,
Did not offend, nor were not worthy blame,
If this foul deed were by, to equal it.

He was a man: this, in respect, a child;
And men 'er spend their fury on a child.

What's worse than murderer, that I may name it?
No, no; my heart will burst, an if I speak:

And I will speak, that so my heart may burst.

Butchers and villains, bloody cannibals!

How sweet a plant have you untimely cropp'd!

You have no children, butchers! if you had,
The thought of them would have stir'd up remorse:

But, if you ever chance to have a child,

Look in his youth to have him so cut off.

As, deathsmen! you have rid this sweet young prince!

K. Edw. Away with her; go, hear her hence perforce.

Q. Mar. Nay, never bear me hence, despatch me here;

Here sheath thy sword, I'll pardon thee my death:

What! wilt thou not?—then, Clarence, doe it thou.

Clar. By heaven, I will not do thee so much ease.

Q. Mar. Good offence, doe; sweet Clarence, thou do it.

[do it]

Clar. Didst thou not hear me swear, I would not.

Q. Mar. Ay, but thou usest to forswear thyself:

'Twas sin before, but now 'tis charity.

What! wilt thou not? where is that devil's butcher,
Hard-fav'rd Richard! Richard, where art thou?

Thou art not here: Murder is thy arms-deed;

Petitioners for blood thou 'er put't back.

K. Edw. Away, I say; I charge ye, bear her hence;

Q. Mar. So come to you, and yours, as to this price!

[Exit, led out hardly.

K. Edw. Where's Richard gone?

Clar. To London, all in post; and, as I guess,

To make a bloody supper in the Tower.

K. Edw. He's sudden, if a thing comes in his head.

Now march we hence: discharge the common sort
With joy and thanks, and let's away to London,

And see our gentle queen how well she fares;

By this, I hope, she hath a son for me.  [Exeunt.

SCENE VI.—London. A Room in the Tower.

KING HENRY is discovered sitting with a book in his hand, the Lieutenant attending. Enter GLOSTER.

Glo. Good day, my lord! What, at your book so hard?

K. Hen. Ay, my good lord: My lord, I should say

'Tis sin to flatter, good was little better: [rather:

Good Gloster, and good devil, were alike,

And both preposterous; therefore, not good lord.

Glo. Sirrah, leave us to ourselves: we must confer.

[Exit Lieutenant.

K. Hen. So flies the reckless shepherd from the wolf:

So first the harmless sheep doth yield his fleece,

And next his throat unto the butcher's knife.—

What scene of death hath Roscius now to act?

Glo. Suspicion always haunts the guilty mind;

The thief doth fear he shall be once an officer.

K. Hen. The bird that hath been twice in a bush,

With trembling wings misdoubteth every bush; And I, the hapless male to one sweet bird,

Have now the fatal object in my eye, [kill'd.

Where my young poor was lim'd, was caught, and

Glo. Why, what a peevish fool was that of Crete,

That taught his son the office of a fowl?

And yet, for all his wings, the fool was drown'd.

Thy father, Minos, that denied our course;

The sun, that scar'd the wings of my sweet boy,
SCENE VII.—The same A Room in the Palace.

King Edward is discovered sitting on his throne; Queen Elizabeth with the infant Prince, Clarence, Gloster, Hastings, and others, near him.

K. Edw. Once more we sit in England’s royal throne, Re-purchas’d with the blood of enemies, What valiant foe-men, like to autumn’s corn, Have we mow’d down, in tops of all their pride? Three duked of Somerset, threefold renown’d, For hardy and undoubted champions: Two Cliffsords, as the father and the son, And two Northenberlands: two braver men Ne’er spurr’d their coursers at the trumpet’s sound: With them, the two brave bears, Warwick and Mont— That to their chains fetter’d the kingly lion, [tage, And made the forest tremble when they roar’d. Thus have we swept suspicion from our sent, And made our footstool of security.— Come hither, Bess, and let me kiss my boy:— Young Ned, for thee, thine uncles, and myself, Have in our armours watch’d the winter’s night; Went all a foot in summer’s scalding heat, That thou might’st repose upon the crown in peace; And of our labours thou shalt reap the gain. Glo. I’ll blast his harvest, if your head were laid; For yet I am not look’d on in the world.

This shoulder was ordain’d so thick, to heave; And heave it shall some weight, or break my back:— Work thou the way,—and thou shalt execute. [Aside. K. Edw. Clarence, and Gloster, love my lovely queen, And kiss your princely nephew, brothers both. Clar. The duty, that I owe unto your majesty, I seal upon the lips of this sweet babe. K. Edw. Thanks, noble Clarence; worthy brother, thanks. [sprang’st, Glo. And, that I love the tree from whence thou Witness the loving kiss I give the fruit; To say the truth, so Judas kiss’d his master; And cried—all hail! when as he meant—] Aside. all harm.

K. Edw. Now am I seated as my soul delights, Having my country’s peace, and brothers’ loves. Clar. What will your grace have done with Mar- Reignier, her father, to the king of France [garot? Hath pawn’d the Sicils and Jerusalem And hither have they sent it for her ransome. K. Edw. Away with her, and waft her hence to France. And now what rests, but that we spend the time With stately triumphs, mirthful comic shows, Such as bed the pleasures of the court?— Sound, drums and trumpets!—farewell, sour annoy! For here, I hope, begins our lasting joy. [Exeunt.

Of the three parts of King Henry the Sixth, it is now agreed that the first part is entirely spurious, or at most does not contain one-eighth of lines written by the hand of Shakespeare; and that of the two last parts he was not the author, but merely the improver and enlarger. The total number of lines contained in these two parts, according to Malone, six thousand and forty-three; of which, one thousand seven hundred and seventy-one were written by Marlowe, or by Marlowe and his associates; two thousand three hundred and seventy-three were framed by Shakespeare, on the foundation laid by his predecessors: one thousand eight hundred and ninety-one were entirely his own composition.

Of the three plays, the first is indeed, as Mr. Morgan has lately described it, "a drum-and-trumpet thing," the second and third have some very beautiful passages. "They have non," says Dr. Johnson, "sufficient variety of action, for the incidents are too often of the same kind; yet many of the characters are well discriminated. King Henry and his queen, king Edward, the duke of Gloster, and the earl of Warwick, are very strongly and distinctly painted,"
LIFE AND DEATH OF

KING RICHARD III.

This play was entered at Stationers' Hall by Andrew Wise, Oct. 20, 1597, and published in quarto the same year. It appears to have been a popular tragedy so early as 1595, as we learn from a small volume of epigrams by John Weaver, in the collection of W. Combe, of Hanley. Of this volume, which was written in the year 1595, the twenty-second epigram is addressed to William Shakespeare, and in the poetical catalogue of his works enumerates Romeo and Richard.

The scene of the play is in England. The first scene begins with Margaret half-sister to Richard and the widow of Henry VI., who, according to the received account, was murdered on the 21st of May, 1471, and closes with the death of Richard at Bosworth-field, 22d of August, 1485.

SCENE.—England.

ACT I.

SCENE I.—London. A Street.
Enter Gloster.

Glo. Now is the winter of our discontent
Made glorious summer by this sun of York;

And all the clouds, that low'd upon our house,
In the deep bosom of the ocean busy'd.
Now are our brows bound with victorious wreaths;
Our bruised arms hung up for monuments;
Our stern alarms chang'd to merry meetings,
Our dreadful marches to delightful measures.
Grim-visag'd war hath smooth'd his wrinkled front;
And now,—instead of mounting barbed steeds,
To fright the souls of fearful adversaries,—
He capers nimbly in a lady's chamber,
To the lascivious pleasing of a lute.

But I,—that am not shap'd for sportive stints,
Nor made to court an amorous looking-glass:
1, that am rudely stamp'd, and want love's majesty;
To strut before a wanton ambling nymph, I,
that am curtail'd of this fair proportion,
Cheated of feature by disseminating nature,
Deform'd, unfinished, sent before my time
Into this breathing world, scarce half made up,
And that so lamely and unfinish'd,
The dogs bark at me, as I halt by them.
Why I, in this weak piping time of peace,
Have no delight to pass away the time
Unless to spy my shadow in the sun,
And descant on mine own deformity;
And therefore,—since I cannot prove a lover,
To entertain these fair well-spoken days,—
I am determined to prove a villain,
And hate the idle pleasures of these days,
Plots have I laid, indirect and dangerous,
By drunken prophecies, libels, and dreams,
To set my brother Clarence, and the king,
In deadly hate the one against the other
And, if king Edward be as true and just,
As I am subtle, false, and treacherous,
This day should Clarence closely be mew'd up;
About a prophecy, which says,—that G
Of Edward's heirs, the murderer shall be.
Dive, thoughts, down to my soul! here Clarence comes—

Enter Clarence, guarded, and Brakenbury.

Brother, good day: What means this armed guard,
That waits upon your grace?

Clar. His majesty,
Tendering my person's safety, hath appointed
This conduct to convey me to the Tower.

Glo. Upon what cause?

Clar. Because my name is—George.

Glo. Alack, my lord, that fault is none of yours;
He should, for that, commit your godfathers:—
O, belike, his majesty hath some intent,
That you should be new christen'd in the Tower.

But what's the matter, Clarence? may I know it?

Clar. Yea, Richard, when I know; for, I protest,
As yet I do not: But, as I can learn,
He hearkest after prophecies, and dreams;
And from the cross-row placks the letter G,
And says—a wizard told him, that by G

His issue disinherited should be; And, for my name of George begins with G, It follows in his thought, that I am he: Those, as I learn, and such like, are these, Have now'd his highness to commit me now. Glo. Why, this it is, when men are rud'd by women: 'Tis not the king, that sends you to the Tower; My lady Grey, his wife, Clarence, 'tis she, That tempers him to this extremity. Was it not she, and that good man of worship, Antony Woodville, how this trudge betwixt Lord Hastings to the Tower; From whence this present day he is deliver'd? We are not safe, Clarence, we are not safe. Clar. By heaven, I think, there is no man secure, But the queen's kindred, and night-walking heralds That trudge betwixt the king and his queen. Glo. Humbly complaining to her deity Got my lord chamberlain his liberty. I'll tell you what,—I think, it is our way, If we will keep in favour with the king, To be her men, and wear her livery: The jealous o'er-born widow, and herself, Since that her brother and fair lady women, Are mighty gossips in this monarchy. Brak. I beseech your grace both to pardon me; His majesty hath strictly given in charge, That no man shall have private conference, Of what degree soever, with his brother. Glo. Even so! an please your worship, Brakenbury, You may partake in that good counsel; We speak no treason, man:—We say, the king Is wise, and virtuous; and his noble queen Well struck in years; fair, and not jealous: We say, that Shore's wife hath a pretty foot, A cherry lip, A bonny eye, a passing pleasing tongue: And the queen's kindred are made gentlefolks: How say you, sir? can you deny all this? Brak. With this, my lord, myself have nought to do. Glo. Nought to do with mistress Shore? I tell thee, He that doth nought with her, excepting one, fellow, Were best to do it secretly, alone. Brak. What one, my lord? [me? Clar. You, my husband, known:—Would'st thou betray me? Brak. I beseech your grace to pardon me; and, withal, Forbear your conference with the noble duke, obey. Clar. We know thy charge, Brakenbury, and will Glo. We are the queen's abjects, and must obey. Brother, farewell: I will unto the king; And whatso'ever you will employ me in,— Were it, to call king Edward's widow,—sister,— I will perform it, to enfranchise you. Mean time, this deep disgrace to brotherhood, Touches me deeper than you can imagine. Clar. I know, it pleaseth neither of us well. Glo. Well, your imprisonment shall not be long; I will deliver you, or else lie for you: Mean time, have patience. Clar. I must perform; farewell, [Exit CLARENCE, BRakenbury, and Guard. Glo. Go, tread the path that thou shalt ne'er return, Simple, plain Clarence!—I do love thee so, That I will shortly send thy soul to heaven, If heaven will take the present at our hands. But who comes here? the new-deliver'd Hastings? Enter Hastings. Hast. Good time of day unto my gracious lord! Glo. As much unto my good lord chamberlain! Well are you welcome to this open air. How hath your lordship brook'd imprisonment? Hast. With patience, noble lord, as prisoners must: But I shall live my lord, to give them thanks, That were the cause of my imprisonment. Glo. Not doubt, not doubt; and so shall Clarence too: For they, that were your enemies, are his, And have prevail'd as much on him, as you. Hast. More pity, that the eagle should be mew'd, While kites and buzzards prey at liberty. Glo. No news so bad abroad, as this at home: The king is sickly, weak, and melancholy, And his physicians fear him mightily. Glo. Now, by Saint Paul, this news is bad indeed. O, he hath kept an evil diet long, And over-much consumed his royal person; It's very grievous to be thought upon. What, is he in his bed? Hast. He is. Glo. Go you before, and I will follow you. [Exit HASTINGS. He cannot live, I hope; and must not die, Till George be pack'd with posterity up to heaven. I'll in, to urge his better usage more on Clarence, With all my strength and with all weighty arguments; And, if I fail not in my deep intent, Clarence hath not another day to live: Which done, God take king Edward to his mercy, And leave the world for me to bustle in! For then I'll marry Warwick's youngest daughter: What, though I kill'd her husband, and her father! The readiest way to make the wench amend, Is—to become her husband, and her father: The which will I; not all so much for love, As for another secret close intent, By marrying her, which I must reach unto. But yet I run before my horse to market: Clarence still breathes; Edward still lives, and reigns; When they are gone, then must I count my gains. [Ex. SCENE II.—The same. Another Street. Enter the corpse of King Henry the Sixth, borne in an open coffin, Gentlemen bearing balderheads, to guard it; and Lady Anne as mourner. Anne. Set down, set down your honourable load,— If honour may be shrouded in a hearse,— Whilst I a while obsequiously lament The untimely fall of virtuous Lancaster,— Poor key-cold figure of a holy king! Pale ashes of the house of Lancaster! Thou bloodless remnant of that royal blood! Be it lawful that I invoke thy ghost, To hear the lamentations of poor Anne, Wife to thy Edward, to thy slaughter'd son, Stab'd by the self-same hand that made these wounds! Lo, in these windows, that let forth thy life, I pour the helpless balm of my poor eyes — O, cursed be the hand that made these holes! Cursed the heart, that had the heart to do it! Cursed the blood, that let this blood from hence! More direful hap betide that hated wretch, That makes us wretched, by the death of thee, Than I can wish to adders, spiders, toads. Or any creeping venom'd thing that lives! If ever he have child, abortive be it, Prodigious, and untimely brought to light, Whose ugly and unnatural aspect May fright the hopeful mother at the view; And that be heir to his unhappiness! If ever he have wife, let her be made
KING RICHARD III.

More miserable by the death of him,
Than I am made by my young lord, and thee!—
Come, now, toward Chertsey with your holy load,
Taken from Paul's to be interred there;
And, still as you are weary of the weight,
Rest you, whiles I lament king Henry's corse.

[The bearers take up the corpse, and advance.

Enter Gloster.

Glo. Stay you, that bear the corse, and set it down.

Anne. What black magician conjures up this fiend,
To stop devoted charitable deeds?

Glo. Villains, set down the corse; or, by Saint Paul,
I'll make a corse of him that disturbs
1 Gent. My lord, stand back, and let the coffin pass.

Glo. [Ulammer'd dog!] I stand thou when I command:
Advance thy halberd higher than my breast,
Or, by Saint Paul, I'll strike thee to my foot,
And spurn upon thee, beggar, for thy boldness.

[The bearers set down the coffin.

Anne. What, do you tremble? are you all afraid?
Alas, I blame you not; for you are mortal,
And mortal eyes cannot endure the devil.—
Anon, thou dreadful minister of hell!
Thou hadst but power over his mortal body,
His soul thou canst not have; therefore, be gone.

Glo. Sweet saint, for charity, be not so curt.

Anne. Foul devil, for God's sake, hence, and trouble
For thou hast made the happy earth thy hell: [as not;
Fill'd it with curing cries, and deep exclaim'd.
If thou delight to view thy heinous deeds,
Before this pattern of thy butcheries:
O, gentlemen, see! see! dead Henry's wounds
Open their congeal'd mouths and bleed afresh!
Blursh, blush, thos lump of foul deformity;
For 'tis thy presence that exalts this blood
From cold and empty veins, where no blood swells,
Thy deed, inhuman and unnatural.
Provokes this deluge most unnatural.

Glo. O God, which this blood mad'st, revenge his death!

Anne. O earth, which this blood drink'st, revenge his death!

Either, heaven, with lightning strike the murderer
Or, earth, gape open wide, and eat him quick; [dead
As thou dost swallow up this good King's blood,
Which his hell-govern'd arm hath butchered.

Glo. Lady, you know not rules of charity.

Anne. Vouchsafe, divine perfection of a woman,
Of these supposed evils, to give me leave,
By circumstance, but to acquit myself.

Anne. Vouchsafe, diffus'd infection of a man,
For these known evils, but to give me leave,
By circumstance, to curse thy cursed self.

Glo. Fairer than tongue can name thee, let me have
Some patient leisure to excuse myself.

Anne. Fairer than heart can think thee, thou canst
Not excuse current, but to hang thyself.

Glo. By such despair, I should accuse myself.

Anne. And, by despairing, shalt thou stand excus'd;
For doing worthy vengeance on thyself,
That didst unworthy slaughter upon others.

Glo. Say, that I slew them not.

Anne. Why then, they are not dead?

Glo. Nay, they are dead, and devilish slave, by thee.

Anne. Glo, I did not kill your husband.

Glo. Why then, he is alive.

Anne. Gloy, he is dead; and slain by Edward's hand.

Anne. In thy soul's throat thou liest; queen Margaret saw
Thy murderous fauchion smoking in his blood;
The which thou once didst bend against her breast,
But that thy brothers beat aside the point.

Glo. I was provoked by her slanderous tongue,
That laid their guilt upon my guiltless shoulders.

Anne. Thou wast provoked by thy bloody mind,
That never dreamt on aught but butcheries:
Dost thou not kill this king?

Glo. I grant ye. [me too.

Anne. Doth grant me, hedgehog? then, God grant
Thou may'st be damned for that wicked deed!

O, he was gentle, mild, and virtuous.

Glo. The fitter for the King of heaven that hath him.

Anne. He's in heaven, where thou shalt never come.

Glo. Let him thank me, that he help to send him thither.
For he was fitter for that place, than earth.

Anne. And thou unprofitable, else if you will hear me name
Anne. Some dungeon.

Anne. Your bed-chamber.

Anne. I'll rest beside the chamber where thou liest.

Glo. So will it, madam, till I lie with you.

Anne. I hope so.

Glo. I know so. — But, gentle lady Anne,—
To thee, when this keen encounter of our wits,
And fail somewhat into a slower method;—is not the cause of the timeless deaths
Of these Plantagenets, Henry and Edward,
As blameless as the executioner?

Anne. Thou wast the cause, and most accurs'd effect.

Glo. Thy beauty was the cause of that effect;
Thy beauty, which didst haunt me in my sleep,
To reveng'd the death of all the world,
So I might live one hour in your sweet bosom.

Anne. If I thought that, I tell thee, homicide,
These nails should read that beauty from my cheeks.

Glo. These eyes could not endure that beauty's
You should not lechimish it, if I stood by: [wreck,
As all the world is cheered by the sun.
So I by thy life, it is my day, my life.

Glo. Black night o'ershade thy day, and death

Anne. Curse not thyself, fair creature; thou art both.
Anne. I would I were, to be reveng'd on thee.

Glo. It is a quarrel most unnatural,
To be reveng'd on him that loveth thee.

Anne. It is a quarrel just and reasonable,
To be reveng'd on him that kill'd my husband,
Did it to help thee to a better husband.

Anne. His better doth not breathe upon the earth.

Glo. He lives, that loves you better than he could.

Anne. Name him.

Glo. Plantagenet.

Anne. Why, was that he?

Glo. The self-same name, but one of better nature.

Anne. Where is he? [at me?

Glo. Here: [She spits at him.] Why dost thou spit
Anne. Would it were mortal poison, for thy sake!

Glo. Never came poison from so sweet a place.

Anne. Never hung poison on a fouler toad.

Anne. He that bereft thee, lady, of thy husband,
Out of my sight! thou dost infect mine eyes.

Glo. These eyes, sweet lady, haveinfected mine.

Anne. Would they were bashful, to strike thee dead!

Glo. I would they were, that I might die at once;
For now they kill me with a living death.

Anne. These eyes of thine from mine have drawn salt tears,
Sham'd their aspects with store of childish drops,—
These eyes, which never shed remorseful teard.

Anne. Not, when my father York and Edward wept,
ACT I.—SCENE III.

To hear the piteous moan that Rutland made, When black-fac'd Clifford shook his sword at him; Nor when thy warlike father, like a child, Told the sad story of thy father's death; And twenty times made pause, to sob, and weep, That all the standers-by had wet their cheeks, Like trees bedash'd with rain: in that sad time, My manly eyes did scorn an humble tear; And what these sorrows could not thence exhale, Thy beauty bade, and made them blind with weeping. I knew thee then, nor enemy— But my tongue could never learn sweet soothing word; But now thy beauty is propis'd my tee, My proud heart sues, and prompts my tongue to speak. [She looks scornfully on him. Teach not thy lips such scorn; for it was made For kissing, lady, not for such contempt. If thy revengeful heart cannot forgive, Let! here I bend thee this sharp-pointed sword; Which if thou please to hide in this true breast, And let the soul forth that adoreth thee, I lay it naked to the deadly stroke, And humbly beg the death upon my knee. [He lays his breast open; she offers it with wounded hand.

Nay, do not pause: for I did kill king Henry;— But 'twas thy beauty that provoked me. Nay, now despatch; 'twas I that stabb'd young Edward:— [She offers again at his breast. But 'twas thy heavenly face that set me on. [She lets fall the sword.

Take up the sword again, or take up me. Anne. Arise, dissembler: though I wish thy death, I will not be thy executioner. Glo. Then bid me kill myself, and I will do it. Anne. I have already.

Glo. That was in thy rage Speak it again, and even with the word, This hand, which, for thy love, did kill thee love, Shall, for thy love, kill a far truer love; To both their deaths shalt thou be necessary. Anne. I would, I knew thy heart.

Glo. 'Tis figur'd in my tongue. Anne. I fear me, both are false.

Glo. Vouchsafe to wear this ring. Anne. To take, is not to give. [She puts on the ring. Glo. Look, how this ring encompasseth thy finger, Even so thy breast encloseth my poor heart; Wear both of them, for both of them are thine. And if thoy poor devoted servant may But beg one favour at thy gracious hand, Thou shalt not confirm his happiness for ever. Anne. What is it? Glo. That it may please you leave these sad designs To him that hath more cause to be a mourner, And presently repair to Crosby-place: Where—after I have solemnly inter'd, At Chertsey monast'ry, this noble king, And paid my last respects to his grave with my repentant tears,— I will with all expedient duty see you: For divers unknown reasons, I beseech you Grant me this boon.

Anne. With all my heart; and much it joy's me too, To see you are become so penitent,— Tressel, and Berkley, go along with me. Glo. I'll bid me farewell. Anne. Tis more than you deserve: But, since you teach me how to flatter you, Imagine I have said farewell already.

Glo. No, to Whiteh. But, as touching this my coming. [Exit the rest, with the corse.

Was ever woman in this humour wou'd? Was ever woman in this humour wou'd? I'll have her,—but I will not keep her long. What! I, that kill'd her husband, and his father, To take her in her heart's extremest hate; With cursers in her mouth, tears in her eyes, The bleeding witness of her hatred by: With God, her conscience, and these bars against me, And I no friends to back my suit withal, But the plain devil, and despising looks, And yet to win her,—all the world to nothing! Hai! Hath she forgot already that brave prince, Edward, her lord, whom I some three months since, Stabb'd in my angry mood at Tewksbury? A sweeter and a lovelier gentleman,— Fram'd in the prodigality of nature, Young, valiant, wise, and, no doubt, right royal,— The spacious world cannot again afford: And will she yet abuse her eyes on me, That cropp'd the golden prime of this sweet price, And made her widow to a woeful bed? On me, whose all not equals Edward's moiety? On me, that halt, and am mis-shapen thus? My dukedom to a beggarly denier, I do mistake my person all this while: Upon my life, she finds, although I cannot, Myself to be a marvellous proper man. I'll be at charges for a looking-glass; And entertain a score or two of tailors, To study fashions to adorn my body: Since I am crept in favour with myself, I will maintain it with some little cost. But, first, I'll turn you' fellow in his grave; And then return hansom to this lowest shine out, fair sun, till I have bought a glass, That I may see my shadow as I pass. [Exit.

SCENE III.—The same. A Room in the Palace.

Enter Queen Elizabeth, Lord Rivers, and Lord Grey.

Riv. Have patience, madam; there's no doubt his majesty Will soon recover his accustomed health.

Grey. In that you brook it ill, it makes him worse: Therefore, for God's sake, entertain good comfort, And cheer his grace with quick and merry words. Q. Eliz. If he were dead, what would betide of me? Grey. No other harm, but loss of such a lord. Q. Eliz. The loss of such a lord includes all harms. Grey. The heavens have bless'd you with a goodly To be your comforter, when he is gone. [son.

Q. Eliz. Ah, he is young; and his minority Is put to the trust of the Richard Gulston. A man that loves not me, nor none of you. Riv. Is it concluded, he shall be protector? Q. Eliz. It is determin'd, not concluded yet: But so it must be, if the king miscarry.
Enter Buckingham and Stanley.

Glo. Here come the lords of Buckingham and Stanley.

Buck. Good time of day unto your royal grace!

Stan. God make your majesty joyful as you have been.

[Stanley

Q. Eliz. The countess Richmond, good my lord of
To your good prayer will scarcely say—amen.
Yet, Stanley, notwithstanding she's your wife,
And loves not me, be you, good lord, assur'd,
I hate not you for her proud arrogance.

Q. Eliz. How do you be sure? either believe
The envious slanders of her false accusers;

Or, if she be accus'd on true report,
Bear with her weakness, which, I think, proceeds
From wayward sickness, and no grounded malice.

Q. Eliz. Saw you the king to-day, my lord of Stanley?

Stan. But now, the duke of Buckingham, and I,
Are come from visiting his majesty.

Q. Eliz. What likelihood of his amendment, lords?

Buck. Madam, good hope; his grace speaks cheerfully.

Q. Eliz. God grant him health! did you confer with Buck. Ay, madam: he desires to make atonement
Between the duke of Gloster and your brothers,
And between them and my lord chamberlain;
And sent to warn them to his royal presence.

Q. Eliz. Would all were well!—but that which never
I fear our happiness is at the height.

—Enter Gloster, Hastings, and Dorset.

Glo. They do me wrong, and I will not endure it:— Who are they, that complain unto the king,
That I, forsooth, am proud, and love them not?—by holy Paul, they love his grace but lightly.
That all his ears with such disscuous rumours. Because I cannot flatter, and speak fair,
Smile in men's faces, smooth, deceiving, and cog,
Duck with French nods and ashy courtesy,
I must be held a rancorous enemy.
Canst a plain man live, and think no harm,
Durst this his simple truth be so abus'd?

By silken, sly, insinuating Jacks? [grace!

Glo. To whom in all this presence speaks your
Glo. To thee, that hast nor honesty, nor grace.

When have I injur'd thee? when done thee wrong?— Or thee?—or thee?—or any of your faction?

A plague upon you all! his royal grace.

Glo. Would my lord speak so, without wish!—Cannot be quiet scarce a breathing-while.
But you must trouble him with lewd complaints.

Q. Eliz. Brother of Gloster, you mistake the
The king, of his own royal disposition, [matter:
And not provok'd by any suitor eke;
Aiming, belike, at your interior hatred,
That in your outward action shews itself,
Against my children, brothers, and myself,
Makes him to send; that thereby he may gather
The ground of your ill-will, and so remove it.

Glo. I cannot tell:—the world is grown so bad,
That wrens may prey where eagles dare not perch:
Since every Jack became a gentleman,
There's many a gentle person made a Jack.

Q. Eliz. Come, brother Gloster, we know your meaning, brother Gloster;

You eny my advancement, and my friends;
God grant, we never may have need of you!

Glo. Meantime, God grants that we have need of
Our brother is imprison'd by your means, [you:
Myself disgrac'd, and the nobility
Held in contempt; while great promotions
Are daily given to enoble those

That scarce, some two days since, were worth a noble.

Q. Eliz. By Him, that rais'd me to this careful
From that contented hap which I enjoy'd, [height
I never did incense his majesty
Against the duke of Clarence, but have been
An earnest advocate to plead for him.
My lord, you do me shameful injury,
Falsely to draw me in these vile suspicions.

Glo. You may deny that you were not the cause
Of my lord Hastings' late imprisonment.

Q. Eliz. She may, my lord, for—
Glo. She may, lord Rivers?—why, who knows not
She may do more, sir, than denying that:
She may help you to many fair preferments;
And then deny her aiding hand therein,
And lay those honours on your high desert.

What may she not? she may,—ay, marry, may
Riv. What, marry, may she?

Glo. What, marry, may she! marry with a king,
A bachelor, a handsome stripiling too!
I wis, your grandfather had a worse match.

Q. Eliz. My lord of Gloster, I have long borne too
Your blunt upbraiding, and your bitter scoffs:—
By heaven, I will acquaint his majesty.

Of those gross taunts I often have endured.
I dare not be a country servant-maid,
Than a great queen, with this condicion:
To be so bated, scorn'd, and scorn'd at:
Small joy have I in being England's queen.

—Enter Queen Margaret, behind.

Q. Mar. And lessen'd be that small, God, I beseech
Thy honour, state, and seat, is due to me. [thee!

Q. Mar. Out, devil! I remember them too well;
Thou kill'dst my husband Henry in the Tower,
And Edward, my poor son, at Tewkesbury.
Glo. Erst, you were as green, ay, or your husband king,
I was a pack-horse in his great affairs,
A weedder out of his proud adversaries,
A liberal rewarder of his friends;
To royalize his blood, I spilt mine own.

Q. Mar. Ay, and much better blood than his, or
Glo. In all which time, you, and your husband Grey,
Were factors for the house of Lancaster,
And, Rivers, so were you:—Was not your husband
In Margaret's battle at Saint Alban's slain?
Let me put in your minds, if you forget,
What you have been ere now, and what you are;
Withall, what I have been, and what I am.

Q. Mar. A mur'drous villain, and so still thou art.
Glo. Poor Clarence did forsake his father Warwick,
Ay, and forswore himself,—Which Jesus pardon!—
Q. Mar. Which God revenge!

Glo. To fight on Edward's party, for the crown;
And, for his meed, poor lord, he is mew'd up:
I would to God, my heart were fitt like Edward's,
Or Edward's soft and pitiful, like mine;
I am too childish-foolish for this world.
How doth the cat UEFA, & the dog UEFA, for shame and this Then cackadramon! there thy kingdom is.

Q. Mar. Resistance, to those busy days,
Which here you urge, to prove us enemies,
We follow'd then our lord, our lawful king;
So should we you, if you should be our king.

Glo. If I should be?—I had rather be a pestil:
Far be it from my heart, the thought thereof!

Q. Eliz. As little joy, my lord, as you suppose
ACT I.—SCENE III.

You should enjoy, were you this country's king; As little joy you may suppose in me, That I enjoy, being the queen's, is least. Q. Mar. A little joy enjoys the queen thereof! For I am she, and altogether joyless. I can no longer hold me patient.— [Advancing. Hear me, you wrangling pirates, that fall out In sharing that which you have pill'd from me: Which of you trembles not, that looks on me! If not, that, I being quack'd as bow like subjects; Yet that, by you depos'd, you quake like rebels!— Ah, gentle villain, do not turn away! [sight? Glo. Fool wrinkled witch, what mak'st thou in my Q. Mar. But repetition of what thou hast marr'd; That will I make, before I let thee go. Glo. Wert thou not banished on pain of death? Q. Mar. I was; but I do find more pain in banish Than death can yield me here by my abode. [mean. A husband, and a son, thou ow'st to me. And, thou a kingdom;—all of you, allegiance! This sorrow that I have, by right is yours; And all the pleasures you usurp, are mine. Glo. The curse my noble father laid on thee,— Which he too late incur'd, for his licence with paper, And with thy scions drawst'wrest from his eyes; And then, to dry them, gav'st the dote a clout, Steep'd in the saltless blood of pretty Rutland;— His curses, then from bitterness of soul Denounc'd against thee, are all fallen upon thee; And God, not we, hath plagu'd thy bloody deed. Q. Liz. So just is God, to right himself from wicked. Dost thou, in thy most confident, Face, thy fairest puppy, with the beggar's reins? Can cursing pierce the clouds, and enter heaven?— Why, then give way, dull clouds, to my quick Austerities! Though not by war, by surfeit die thy king! As ours by murder, to make him a king! Edward, thy son, that now is prince of Wales, For Edward, my son, that was prince of Wales, Die in his youth, by like untimely violence! Thyself a queen, for me that was a queen, Outlive thy glory, like my wretched self! Long may'st thou live, to wait thy children's loss; And see another, as I see thee now, Deck'd in thy rights, as thou art stoll'd in mine! Long die thy happy days before thy death; And, after many length'd hours of grief, Die neither another, wife, nor England's queen!— Riv. And, Dor. we were stoll'd by. And so wast thou, lord Hastings,—when my son was stabb'd with bloody daggers: God, I pray him, That none of you may live your natural age, But by some unlook'd accident cut off! [hag. Glo. Have done thy charm, thou bateful with'der Q. Mar. And beat me, out thee I stay, dog, for thou shalt hear me. If heaven have any grievous plague in store, Exceeding Rivers, I shall see thee die, and then hurl down their indigination. On thee, the troubler of the poor world's peace! The worm of conscience still be-gaw thy Thy friends suspect for traitors while thou, And take deep traitors for thy friends. No sleep close up that deadly eye of thine. Unless it be while some tormenting dream Affrights thee with a hell of ugly devils! Thou elvish-mark'd, abortive, rooting hog! Thou that wast seal'd in thy nativity The slave of nature, and the son of hell! Thou slanderer of thy mother's heart!— Ah! thou loathed issue of thy father's loins! Thou rag of honour! thou detested—— Glo. Margaret. Q. Mar. Richard! Glo. Ha? Q. Mar. I cry thee mercy then; for I do think, That thou had'st call'd me all these bitter names. Q. Mar. Why, so I did; but look'd for no reply. O, let me make the period to my curse. Glo. 'Tis done by me; and ends in.—Margaret. Q. Liz. Thus have you breath'd thy curse against yourself. Q. Mar. That painted queen, vain flourish of my fortune! Why strew'st thou sugar on that bottled spider, Whose deadly web ensnarest thee about? Fool, fool! thou wert'st a knife to kill thyself. The day will come, that thou shalt wish for me To help thee curse this poisonous bunch-bac'd toad. Hass. False-witted woman, end thy frantic curse; Lest, to thy harm, thou move our patience. Q. Mar. Foul shame upon you! you have all mow'd Riv. Were you well serv'd, you would be taught your duty. [duty. Q. Mar. To serve me well, you all should do me Teach me to be your queen, and you my subjects: O, serve me well, and teach yourselves that duty. Dor. Dispute not with her, she is luminous. Q. Mar. Peace, master marquis, you are malapert: Your fire-new stamp of honour is scarce current: O, that your young nobility could judge, What 'were to lose it, and be miserable! They that stand high have many blasts to shake them; And, if they fail, they dash themselves to pieces. Glo. Good morrow, marry; hear it, learn it, marquis. Dor. It touches you, my lord, as much as me. Glo. Ay, and much more: But I was born so high, Our airy buildeth in the cedar's top, And dailies with the wind, and scars the sun, Q. Mar. And turns the sun to shade,— alas! alas! Witness my son, now in the shade of death: Whose bright out-shining beams thy cloudy wrath Hath in eternal darkness folded up. Your airy buildeth in our airy's nest—— O God, that see'st it, do not suffer it; As it was won with blood, lost be it so! Back. Peace, peace, for shame, if not for charity, Q. Mar. Urge neither charity nor shame to me; Uncharitably with me have you dealt, And shamefully by you my hopes are butcher'd.— My charity is outrage, life my shame,— And in my shame still live my sorrow's rage! Back. Have done, have done. Q. Mar. And lightly Buckingham, I kiss thy hand, In sign of league and amity with thee: Now fair befall thee, and thy noble house! Thy garments are not spotted with our blood, Nor thou within the compass of my curse. Back. Nor no one here; for curses never pass The lips of those that breathe them in the air.
Q. Mar. I'll not believe but they ascend the sky,
And there awake God's gentle-sleeping peace.
O Buckingham, beware of yonder dog!
Look, when he faws, he bites; and, when he bites,
His venom tooth shall rackle to the death;
Have not to do with him, beware of him;
Sin, death, and hell, have set their marks on him;
And all their ministers attend on him.

Glo. What doth she say, my lord of Buckingham?

Buck. Nothing that I respect, my gracious lord.
Q. Mar. What, does thou scorn me for my genteel
And sooth the devil that I warrant thee from? [counsel
O, but remember this another day,
When he shall split thy very heart with sorrow :
And say, poor Margaret was a prophetess.—
Live each of you the subjects to his hate,
And he to yours, and all of you to God's! [Exit.

Hast. My hair doth stand on end to hear her curses.

Ric. And so doth mine: I muse, why she's at liberty.
Glo. I cannot blame her, by God's holy mother;
She hath too much wrong, and I repent
My part thereof, that I have done to her.
Q. Eliz. I never did her any, to my knowledge.
Glo. Yet you have all the vantage of her wrong.
I was too hot to do somebody good,
That is too cold in thickening of it.
Narry, as for Clarence, he is well repaid;
He is frank'd up to fattening for his pains—
God pardon them that are the cause thereof!
Riv. A virtuous and a christian-like conclusion,
To pray for them that have done scath to us.
Glo. So do I ever, being well advis'd—
For had I curs'd now, I had curs'd myself. [Aside.

Enter Catesby.

Cates. Madam, his majesty doth call for you—
And for your grace,—and you, my noble lords. [Exeunt
Q. Eliz. Catesby, I come;—Lords, will you go with
Riv. Madam, we will attend upon your grace.

[Exit all but Gloster.

Glo. I do the wrong, and first begin to brawl.
The secret mischiefs that I set abroad,
I lay unto the generous charge of others.
Clarence,—whom I, indeed, have laid in darkness,—
I do beweepe to many simple gulls ;
Namely, to Stanley, Hastings, Buckingham;
And tell them—'tis the queen and her allies,
That stir the king against the duke my brother.
Now they believe it; and withal what:
To be reveng'd on Rivers, Vaughan, Grey:
But then I sigh, and, with a piece of scripture,
Tell them—that God bids us do good for evil:
And thus I clothe my naked villany
With old odd ends, stol'n forth of holy writ;
And seem a saint, when most I play the devil.

Enter two Murderers.

But soft, here come my executioners.—
How now, my hardy, stout resolved mates?
Are you now going to despatch this thing?

1 Mard. We are, my lord; and come to have the
That we may be admitted where he is. [warrant
Glo. Well thought upon, I have it here about me:
When you have done, repair to Crosby-place.
But, sir, be sudden in the execution,
Withee obdurate, do not hear him plead;
For Clarence is well spoken, and, perhaps,
May move your hearts to pity, if you mark him.

1 Mard. Tut, tut, my lord, we will not stand to prate,
Talkers are no good doers; be assur'd,
We go to use our hands, and not our tongues.

Glo. Your eyes drop mill-stones, when fools' eyes drop tears:
I like you, lads;—about your business straight;
Go, go, despatch

1 Mard. We will, my noble lord. [Exit.

SCENE IV.—The same A Room in the Tower.

Enter Clarence and Brakenbury.

Brak. Why looks your grace so heavily to-day?
Clar. O, I have pass'd a miserable night,
So full of fearful dreams, of ugly sights,
That, as I am a christian faithful man,
I would not spend another such a night,
Though 'were to buy a world of happy days;
So full of dismal terror was the time. [tell me
Brak. What was your dream, my lord? I pray you,
Clar. Methought, that I had broken from the Tower,
And was embark'd to cross to Burgundy;
And, in my company, my brother Gloster.
Who from my cabin tempted me to walk
Upon the hatchies; thence we look'd toward England,
And cited up a thousand and heavy times
During the wars of York and Lancaster
That had befall'n us. As we pass'd along
Upon the giddy footing of the hatchies,
Methought, that Gloster stumb'd; and, in falling,
Struck me, that thought to stay him, over-board,
Into the tumbling billows of the main.
O Lord! methought, what pain, it was to drow
What dreadful noise of water in mine ears!
What sights of ugly death within mine eyes!
Methought, I saw a thousand fearful wrecks;
A thousand men, that fishes gann'd upon;
Wedges of gold, great anchors, heaps of pearl,
Inestimable stones, unvalued jewels,
All scatter'd in the bottom of the sea.
Some lay in dead men's skulls; and, in those holes
Where eyes did once inhabit, there were crept
(As 'twere in scorn of eyes,) reflecting gems,
That wood the skinny bottom of the deep,
And mock'd the dead bones that lay scatter'd by.
Brak. Had you such leisure in the time of death,
To gaze upon these secrets of the deep?
Clar. Methought, I had; and, indeed did I strive
To yield the ghost; but still the ominous flood
Kept my soul, and would not let it forth
To seek the empty, vast, and wand'ring air;
But smother'd it within my panting bulk,
Which almost burst to belch it in the sea.
Brak. Awak'd you not with this sure agony?
Clar. O, no, my dream was lengthen'd after life;
O, then began the tempest to my soul!
I pass'd, methought, the melancholy flood,
With that grim ferryman, which poets write of, unto the kingdom of perpetual night.
The first that there did greet my stranger soul,
Was my great father-in-law, renowned Warwick;
Who cry'd aloud,—What shape comes for perjury
Can this dark mockery afford false Clarence?
And so he vanish'd: Then came wand'ring ring by
A shadow like an angel with bright hair
Dabbled in blood; and he shriek'd out aloud,—
Clarence is come, false, fleeting, perjur'd Clarence,—
That stabb'd me in the side by Tenbury;—
Seize on him, furies, take him to your torments!—
With that, methought, a legion of fiends
Environ'd me, and bow'd in mine ears
Such hideous cries, that, with the very noise,
A trembling cries, that, with the very noise
1st murderer. What, shall we stab him as he sleeps?

Act 1, Sc. 4.
Act I.—Scene IV.

Broth. No marvel, lord, though it affrighted you; I am afraid, methinks, to hear you tell it.

Clar. O, Brakenbury, I have done these things,—This same hard evidence against my soul. —For Edward's sake; and, see, how he requites me!—O God! if my deep prayers cannot appease thee, But thou wilt be aveng'd on my misdeeds, Yet execute thy wrath on me alone: O, spare my guiltless wife, and my poor children!—I pray thee, gentle keeper, stay this word. My soul is heavy, and I fear would sleep. [rest.]

Broth. I will, my lord; God give your grace good [Clar. repents himself on a chair.]

Sorrow breaks seasons, and reposing hours. Makes the night morning, and the moon-tide night. Princes have but their titles for their glories, An outward honour for an inward toil; And, for unfelt imaginations, They often feel a world of restless cares; So that, between their titles, and low name, There's nothing differs but the outward fame.

Enter the two Murderers.

Broth. Wherefore delivered to Brakenbury, who reads it. Broth. I am, in this, commanded to deliver The noble duke of Clarence to your hands:—I will not reason what is meant hereby, Because I will be guiltless of the meaning. Here are the keys;—there sits the duke asleep: I'll to the king; and signify to him, That thus I have resigned to your charge. 1 Murd. You may, sir; 'tis a point of wisdom: Fare you well. [Exit Brakenbury.

2 Murd. What, shall we stab him as he sleeps? 1 Murd. No; he'll say, 'twas done cowardly, when he wakes. 2 Murd. When he wakes! why, fool, he shall never wake, until the great judgment day. 1 Murd. Why, then he'll say, we stabb'd him sleeping.

2 Murd. The urging of that word, judgment, hath bred a kind of remorse in me. 1 Murd. What? art thou afraid? 2 Murd. Not to kill him, having a warrant for it; but to be damn'd for killing him, from which no warrant can defend me. 1 Murd. I thought, thou had'st been resolute. 2 Murd. So I am, to let him live. 1 Murd. I'll back to the duke of Gloster, and tell him so. 2 Murd. Nay, I pr'ythee, stay a little: I hope, this holy humour of mine will change: it was wont to hold me but while one would tell twenty. 1 Murd. How dost thou feel thyself now? 2 Murd. 'Tis, faith, some certain dregs of conscience are yet within me. 1 Murd. Remember our reward, when the deed's done. 2 Murd. Come, he dies; I had forgot the reward. 1 Murd. Where's thy conscience now? 2 Murd. In the duke of Gloster's purse.

1 Murd. So, when he opens his purse to give us our reward, thy conscience flies out. 2 Murd. 'Tis no matter; let it go; there's few, or none, will entertain it.

1 Murd. What if it come to thee again? 2 Murd. I'll not meddle with it, it is a dangerous thing; it makes a man a coward; a man cannot steal, but it seems a man cannot swear, but it checks him: a man cannot lie with his neighbour's wife, but it detects him: 'Tis a blushing shame-faced spirit, that mutinies in a man's bosom; it fills one full of obstacles: it made me once restore a purse of gold, that by chance I found; it beggars any man that keeps it: it is turned out of all towns and cities for a dangerous thing; and every man, that means to live well, endeavours to trust to himself, and live without it.

1 Murd. 'Zounds, it is even now at my elbow, persuading me not to kill the duke. 2 Murd. Take the devil in thy mind, and believe him not: he would insinuate with thee, but to make thee sigh. 1 Murd. I am strong-fram'd, he cannot prevail with me. 2 Murd. Spoke like a tall fellow, that respects his reputation. Come, shall we fall to work? 1 Murd. Take him over the costard with the hilt of thy sword, and then throw him into the malmsey-butt, in this same closet. 2 Murd. O excellent device! and make a sop of him. 1 Murd. Soft! he wakes.

2 Murd. Strike. 1 Murd. No, we'll reason with him. Clarr. Where art thou, keeper? give me a cup of wine. 1 Murd. You shall have wine enough, my lord, ason. Clarr. In God's name, what art thou? 1 Murd. A man, as you are. Clarr. But not, as I am, royal. Clarr. Thy voice is thunder, but thy looks are humble. 1 Murd. My voice is now the king's, my looks mine own.

Clarr. To murder me! Both Murd. Ay, ay. Clarr. You scarcely have the hearts to tell me so, And dare not show the hearts to do it. Wherein, my friends, have I offended you? 1 Murd. Offended us you have not, but the king. Clarr. I shall be reconcil'd to him again. 2 Murd. Never, my lord; therefore prepare to die. Clarr. Are you call'd forth from out a world of men, To slay the innocent? What is my offence? Where is the evidence that doth accuse me? What lawful quest have given their verdict up Unto the frowning judge? or who pronounc'd The bitter sentence of poor Clarence' death? Before I be convict by course of law, To threaten me with death, is most unlawful. I charge you, as you hope to have redemption, By Christ's dear blood shed for our grievous sins, That you depart, and lay no hands on me; The deed you undertake is damnable. 1 Murd. What we will do, we do upon command. 2 Murd. And he, that hath commanded, is our king. Clarr. Erroneous vassals! the great King of kings Hath in the table of his law commanded, That those shall do no murder. With thou then Spurn at his edict, and fail not a man's? Take heed; for he holds vengeance in his hand, To hurl upon their heads that break his law. 2 Murd. And that same vengeance doth he hurl on For false forswearing, and for murder too: [thee,
Thou didst receive the sacrament to fight
In quarrel of the house of Lancaster.
1 Mudr. And, like a traitor to the name of God,
Didst break that vow; and, with thy treacherous blade,
Unrippest the bowels of thy sovereign's son.
2 Mudr. Whom thou hast sworn to cherish and defend.
1 Mudr. How canst thou urge God's dreadful law
When thou hast broke it in such dear degree?
Clar. Alas! for whose sake did I that ill deed?
For Edward, for my brother, for his sake:
He sends you not to murder me for this;
In that sin he is as deep as I.
If God will be avenged for the deed,
O, know you, that he doth it publicly;
Take not the quarrel from his powerful arm;
He needs no indirect nor lawless course,
To cut off those that have offended him.
1 Mudr. Who made thee then a bloody minister,
When gallant-springing, brave Plantagenet,
That princely novice, was struck dead by thee?
Clar. My brother's love, the devil, and my rage.
1 Mudr. Thy brother's love, our undoing and thy fault,
Provoke as hither now to slaughter thee.
Clar. If you do love my brother, hate not me;
I am his brother, and I love him well.
If you are hir'd for meed, go back again,
And I will send you to my brother Gloster;
Who shall reward you better for my life,
Than Edward will for tidings of my death.
2 Mudr. You are deceived, your brother Gloster hates you.
Clar. O, no; he loves me, and he holds me dear.
Go you to him from me.
Both Mudr. Ay, so we will.
Clar. Tell him, when that our princely father York
Bless'd his three sons with his victorious arm,
And charg'd us from his soul to love each other,
He little thought of this divided friendship:
Did Gloster think on this, and he will weep.
1 Mudr. Ay, mill-stones: as he lessons'd us to weep.
Clar. O, do not slander him, for he is kind.
1 Mudr. Right, as snow in harvest.—Come, you deceive yourself;
'Tis he that sends us to destroy you here.
Clar. It cannot be; for he bequeath my fortune,
And charg'd me in his arms, and swore, with oaths,
That he would deliver me safe from them.
1 Mudr. Why, so he doth, when he delivers you
From this earth's thraldom to the joys of heaven.
2 Mudr. Make peace with God, for you must die,
My lord.
Clar. Hast thou that holy feeling in thy soul,
To counsel me to make my peace with God,
And art thou yet to thy own soul so blind,
That thou wilt war with God, by murdering me?—
Ah, sirs, consider, be, that set you on
To do this deed, will hate you for the deed.
2 Mudr. What shall we do?
Clar. Relent, and save your souls.
1 Mudr. Relent! 'tis cowardly, and womanish.
Clar. Not to relent, is beastly, savage, devilish.—
With all of you, if you were a prince's son,
Being peat from liberty, as I am now.
If two such murderers as yourselves came to you,—
Would not entreat for life?—
My friend, I spy some pity in thy looks;
O, if thine eye be not a flatterer,
Come thou on my side, and entreat for me,
As you would beg, were you in my distress.
A belliger prince what belliger places not?
2 Mudr. Look behind you, my lord
1 Mudr. Take that, and that; if all this will not do,
I'll drown you in the malmosy-butt within.
Exit, with the body.
2 Mudr. A bloody deed, and desperately despatch'd!
How fair, like Pilot, would I wash my hands
Of this most grievous murder done!
Re-enter first Murderer.
1 Mudr. How now? what mean'st thou, that thou help'st me not?
By heaven, the duke shall know how slack you
2 Mudr. I would he knew, that I had saved his bro-
Take thou the fee, and tell him what I say;—
[ther?
For I repent me that the duke is slain.
Exit. 1 Mudr. So do not I; go, coward, as thou art,—
Well, I'll go hide the body in some hole,
Till that the duke give order for his burial:
And when I have my meed, I will away;
For this will out, and then I must not stay.
Exit.

ACT II.

SCENE I.—The same. A Room in the Palace.

Enter King Edward, (laid in sick,) Queen Elizabeth, Dorset, Rivers, Hastings, Buckingham, Grey, and others.

K. Edw. Why, so:—now have I done a good day's
You peers, continue this united league: [work:—
I every day expect an embassage
From my Befoomer to redeem me hence;
And now in peace my soul shall part to heaven,
Since I have made my friends at peace on earth.
Rivers and Hastings, take each other's hand;
Dissemble not your hatred, swear your love.
Riv. By heaven, my soul is purg'd from grudging
And with my hand I seal my true heart's love. [sake.
Hast. So thrive I, as I truly swear the like!
K. Edw. Take heed, you daily not before your king;
Lest he, that is the supreme King of kings,
Confound your hidden falsehood, and award
Either of you to be the other's end.
Hast. So prosper I, as I swear perfect love!
Riv. And I, as I love Hastings with my heart!
K. Edw. Madam, yourself are not exempt in this:—
Now your son Dorset.—Buckingham, nor you:—
You have been factious one against the other.
Wife, love lord Hastings, let him kiss your hand;
And what you do, do it unfeignedly.
Q. Eliz. There, Hastings:—I will never more re-
Our former hatred, so thrive I, and mine! [member
K. Edw. Dorset, embrace him,—Hastings, love
Lord marquis.
Don. This interchange of love, I here protest,
Upon my part shall be inviolable.
Hast. And so swear I. [Embraces Dorset.
K. Edw. Now, princely Buckingham, seal this thun
With thy embracements to my wife's allies, [league
And make me happy in your unity.
Buck. Whenever Buckingham doth turn his hate
Upon your grace, [to the Queen:] but with all duteous
Doth cherish you, and yours, God punish me [love
With hate in those where I expect most love!
When I have most need to employ a friend,
And most assured that he is a friend,
Deep, hollow, treacherous, and full of guile,
Be he unto me! this do I beg of heaven,
When I am cold in love, to you, or yours.
Embraces Rivers, &c.

K. Edw. A pleasing cordial, princely Buckingham,
ACT II.—SCENE II.

Who told me, how the poor soul did forsake
The mighty Warwick, and did fight for him?
Who told me in the field at Tewksbury,
When Oxford had me down, he rescued me,
And said, "Dear brother, rise, and be a king?"
But told me, when we both lay in the field,
Frozen almost to death, how he did lap me
Even in his garments; and did give himself,
All thin and naked, to the numb-cold night?
All this from my remembrance brutish wrath
Sinfully pluck'd, and not a man of you
Had so much grace to put it in my mind.
But, when your carters, or your waiting-vassals,
Have done a drunken slaughter, and deface
The precious image of our dear Redeemer,
You straight are on your knees for pardon, pardon.
And I, unjustly too, must grant it you:
But for my brother, not a man would speak,
Nor I (ungracious) speak unto myself
For his poor soul.—The proudest of you all
Have been beholden to him in his life;
Yet none of you would once plead for his life.
O God! I fear, thy justice will take hold
On me, and you, and mine, and yours, for this.
Come, Hastings, help me to my closet. O,
Poor Clarence! [Enter King, Queen, Hastings,
Red, Dor, and Grey.]

Glo. This is the fruit of rashness!—Mark'd you not,
How that the guilty kindred of the queen
Look'd pale, when they did hear of Clarence's death?
O! they did urge it still unto the king:
God will revenge it. Come, lords; will you go,
To comfort Edward with our company?

Buck. We wait upon your grace. [Exeunt]

SCENE II.—The same.

Enter the DUCHESS of York, with a Son and Daughter of Clarence.

Son. Good grandam, tell us, is our father dead?
Duch. No, boy.
Daugh. Why do you weep so oft? and best your
And cry—O Clarence, my unhappiest son! breast,
Son. Why do you look on us, and shake your head,
And call us—orpheans, wretches, cast-aways,
If that our noble father be alive?
Duch. My pretty consin, you mistake me both;
I do lament the sickness of the king,
As leath to lose him, not your father's death;
It were lost sorrow to wait one that's lost.
Son. Then, grandam, you conclude that he is dead.
The king my uncle is to blame for this:
God will revenge it; whom I will importune
With earnest prayers all to that effect.
Daugh. And so will I.
Duch. Peace, children! peace! the king doth love
Inexorable and shallow innocents,
[They all start.
You do him injury, to scorn his counsel—this is.
K. Edw. Who knows not, he is dead! who knows?
Q. Edw. All-seeing heaven, what a world is this!
Buck. Look I so pale, lord Dorset, as the rest?
Dor. Ay, my good lord! and no man in the pre
But his red colour hath forsaken his cheeks. 'Sence,
K. Edw. Is Clarence dead! the order was
To be, your son, none should be your father's heir; And that a winged Mercury did hear;
Some tardy cripple bore the countermand,
That came too late to see him buried—
God grant, that some, less noble, and less loyal,
Nearer in bloody thoughts, and not in blood.
Deserve not worse than wretched Clarence did,
And yet go current from suspicion?

Enter STANLEY.

Stan. A boon, my sovereign, for my service done!
K. Edw. I pray thee, peace; my soul is full of sorrow.
Stan. I will not rise, unless your highness hear me.
K. Edw. Then say at once, what is it thou request'st.
Stan. The forfeit, sovereign, of my servant's life;
Who slew to-day a riotous gentleman,
Lately attendant on the duke of Norfolk.
K. Edw. Have I a tongue to doom my brother's death,
And that tongue give pardon to a slave?
My brother kill'd no man, his fault was thought,
And yet his punishment was bitter death.
Who spoke of brotherhood? who spoke of love!
Enter QUEEN ELIZABETH, distractedly; RIVERS and DORSET following her.

Q. ELIZ. Ah! who shall hinder me to wail and weep! To chide my fortune, and torment myself? I'll join with black despair against my soul, And to myself become an enemy.

DUCH. What means this secret, rude impatience? Q. ELIZ. To make an act of tragic violence: Edward, my lord, thy son, our king, is dead. — Why grow the branches, when the root is gone? Why wither not the leaves, that want their sap? — If you will live, lament; if die, be brief; That our swift winged souls may catch the king's; Or, like obedient subjects, follow him To his new kingdom of perpetual rest.

Duch. Ah, so much interest have I in thy sorrow, As I had title in thy noble husband! I have bewept a worthy husband's death, And liv'd by looking on his images: But now, two mirrors of his princely semblance Are crack'd in pieces by malignant death; And I for comfort have but one false glass, That grieveth me more than the shame in him. Thou art a widow; yet thou art a prince; And hast the comfort of thy children left thee; But death hath snatch'd my husband from my arms, And pluck'd two crutches from my feeble hands, Clarence and Edward. O, what cause have I, (Thine being but a moiety of my grief, To weaken thy plaints and drown thy cries? Son, Ah, answer; you wept not for another's death, How can we aid you with our kindred tears?

Duch. Our fatherless distress was left unmoind'd.

Your widow-colour likewise be unwet!

Q. ELIZ. Give me no help in lamentation, I am not barrer to bring forth laments: All springs reduce their currents to mine eyes, That I, being govern'd by the heavy moon, May send forth plenteous tears to drown the world! Ah, for my husband, for my dear lord Edward! Chil. Ah, for our father, for our dear lord Clarence.

Duch. Alas, for both, both mine, Edward and Clarence! [gone.]

Q. ELIZ. What stay had I, but Edward? and he's Chil. What stay had we but Clarence and he's gone.

Duch. What stays had I, but they? and they are Q. ELIZ. Was never widow, had so dear a loss. Chil. Were never orphans, had so dear a loss.

Duch. Was never mother, had so dear a loss.

Alas! I am the mother of these griefs: Their woes are parcel'd, mine are general. She for an Edward weeps, and so do I; I for a Clarence weep, and do not she: These babes for Clarence weep, and so do I: I for an Edward weep, so do not they: Alas! you three, on me, threefold distress'd, Pour all your tears, I am your sorrow's nurse, And I will pamper it with lamentations. [pleas'd,

Con. Comfort, dear mother: God is much dis-

That you take with unthankfulness doing;

In common worldly things, 'tis call'd ungrateful,

With dull unwillingness to repay a debt,

Which with a bounteous hand was kindly lent;

Much more to be thus opposite with heaven,

For it requires the royal debt it lent you.

Riv. Madam, bethink you, like a careful mother,

Of the young prince your son; send straight for him,

Let him be crown'd; in him your comfort lives;

Drown desperate sorrow in dead Edward's grave,

And plant your joys in living Edward's throne.

Enter GLOSTER, BUCKINGHAM, STANLEY, HASTINGS RALCLIFF, and others.

Glo. Sister, have comfort: all of us have cause To wall! the dimming of our shining star; But none can cure their harms by wailing them. — Madam, my lady, I do cry you mercy, For I did see your grace. — Humbly on my knee I crave your blessing.

Duch. God bless thee; and put meekness in thy Love, charity, obedience, and true duty! [breaks,

Glo. Amen; and make me die a good old man! — That is the butt end of a mother's blessing; I marvel, that her grace did leave it out [Aside.

Buck. You cloudy princes, and heart-sorlowing Thert hear this mutual heavy load of moan, [peers, Now cuech each other in each other's love: Though we have spent our harvest of this king, We are to reap the harvest of his son. The broken rancour of your high swoln hearts, But lately splinted, knit, and join'd together, Must gently be preserv'd, cherish'd, and kept: Me seemeth good, that, with some little train, Forthwith from Ludlow the young prince be fetch'd Hither to London, to be crown'd our king. [ingham?

Riv. Why with some little train, my lord of Buck-Buck. Marry, my lord, lest by a multitude, The new-heal'd wound of malice should break out; Which would be so much the more dangerous, By how much the estate is green, and yet ungovern'd: Where every horse bears his commanding rein, And may direct his course as please himself, As well the fear of harm, as harm apparent, In my opinion, ought to be prevented.

Glo. I hope, the king made peace with all of us; And the compact is firm, and true, in me.

Riv. And so in me; and so, I think, in all: Yet, since it is but green, it should be put To no apparent likelihood of breach,

Which, haply, by much company might he urg'd: Therefore I say, with noble Buckingham, That it is meet so few should fetch the prince.

Hast. And so say I.

Glo. Then be it so; and go we to determine Who they shall be that shall straight post to Ludlow. — Nay — and you my mother, — will you go To give your consents in his weighty business?

[Exeunt all but BUCKINGHAM and GLOSTER.

Buck. My lord, whoever journeys to the prince, For God's sake, let not us two stay at home: For, by the way, I'll sort occasion, As index to the story we late talk'd of,

To part the queen's proud kindness from the prince.

Glo. My other self, my counsel's consistory, My oracle, my prophet — My dear cousin, I, as a child, will go by thy direction. Towards Ludlow then, for we'll not stay behind.

[Exeunt.

SCENE III. — The same. A Street.

Enter two Citizens, meeting.

1 Cit. Good morrow, neighbour: Whither away so fast? 2 Cit. I promise you, I scarcely know myself: Hear you the news abroad? 1 Cit. Yes: that the king is dead. 2 Cit. Ill news, by'r lady: seldom comes the better: I fear, I fear, 'twill prove a giddy world.

Enter another Citizen.

3 Cit. Neighbours, God speed! 1 Cit. Give you good morrow, sir,
ACT III.—SCENE I.

3 Cit. Doth the news hold of good king Edward's death?
2 Cit. Ay, sir, it is too true; God help the while!
3 Cit. Then, masters, look to see a troublous world.
1 Cit. No, no; by God's good grace, his son shall reign.
2 Cit. Tender to that land, that's govern'd by a child!
2 Cit. In him there is a hope of government;
That, in his nounage, council under him;
And, in his full and ripen'd years, himself,
No doubt, shall then, and till then, govern well.
1 Cit. So stood the state, when Henry the Sixth
Was crown'd in Paris but at nine months old;
3 Cit. Stood the state so? no, no, good friends, God
For then this land was famously enrich'd
With political grave counsel: then the king
Had virtuous uncles to protect his grace.
1 Cit. Why, so hath this, both by his father and mo-
3 Cit. Better it were, they all came by his father;
Or, by his father, there were none at all.
For, from hence upon now, when men shall weep,
Will touch us all too near, if God prevent not.
O, full of danger is the duke of Gloster;
And the queen's sons, and brothers, bought and proud:
And were they to be rule'd, and not to rule,
This sickly land might solve as before.
1 Cit. Come, come, we fear the worst: all will be 3 Cit. When clouds are seen, wise men put on their coats;
When great leaves fall, then winter is at hand;
When the sun sets, who doth not look for night?
Untimely storms make men expect a death:
All may be well; but, if God sort it so,
'Tis more than we deserve, or I expect.
2 Cit. Truly, my heart, in all this fear of man,
You cannot reason almost with a man
That looks not heavily, and full of dread.
3 Cit. Before the days of change, still is it so:
By a divine instinct, men's minds mistrust
Ensuing danger; as, by proof, we see
The water swell before a boist'rous storm;
But let the wind all to God, Whither away?
2 Cit. Marry, we were sent for to the justices.
3 Cit. And so was I; I'll bear you company.

[Exit.

SCENE IV.—The same. A Room in the Palace.

Enter the Archbishop of York, the young Duke of York, Queen Elizabeth, and the Duchess of York.

Arch. Last night, I heard, they lay at Stony-Strat dAnd at Northampton they do rest to-night: [ford;
To-morrow, or next day, they will be here.

Duch. I long with all my heart to see the prince;
I hope, he is much grown since last I saw him.
Q. Eliz. But I bear, no; they say, my son of York
Hath almost overtopp'd his father in his growth.
York. Ay, mother, but I would not have it so.

Duch. Why, my young cousin? it is good to grow.
York. Grandam, one night, as we did sit at supper,
My uncle Rivers talk'd how I did grow
More than my brother; Ay, methought my uncle Gloster,
Small herbs have grace, great weeds do grow in space;
And since, methinks, I would not grow so fast,
Because sweet flowers are slow, and weeds make haste.
Duch. 'Good faith,' 'good faith, the saying did not hold
In him that did object the same to thee:
He was the wretchedst thing, when he was young,
So long a growing, and so leisurely.
That if his rule were true, he should be gracious.
Arch. And so, no doubt, he is, my gracious madam,
Duch. I hope, he is; but yet let mothers doubt.

York. Now, by my troth, if I had been remember'd
I could have given my uncle's grace a flout,
To touch his growth, nearer than he touch'd mine.

Duch. How, my young York? I pr'ythee, let me hear it.

York. Marry, they say, my uncle grew so fast,
That he could gnaw a crown, at two hours old;
Twas full two years ere I could get a tooth,
Grandam, this would have been a biting jest.
Q. Eliz. I pr'ythee, pretty York, who told thee this?
York. Grandam, her nurse. [born.
Duch. Her nurse! why, she was dead ere thou wast
York. If't were not she, I cannot tell who told me.
Q. Eliz. A parlous boy: Go to, you are too shrewd.
Arch. Good madam, be not angry with the child.
Q. Eliz. Pitchers have ears.

Enter a Messenger.

Arch. Here comes a messenger:
What news?
Mess. Such news, my lord,
As grieves me to unfold.
Q. Eliz. How doth the prince?
Mess. Well, madam, and in health.
Duch. What is thy news?
Mess. Lord Rivers, and lord Grey, are sent to Poni-
With them sir Thomas Vaughan, prisoners. [fret,
Duch. Who hath committed them?
Mess. The mighty dukes,
Gloster and Buckingham.
Q. Eliz. For what offence?
Mess. The sum of all I can, I have disclos'd:
Why, or for what, the nobles were committed,
Is all unknown to me, my gracious lady.
Q. Eliz. Alas! I see the ruin of my house!
The tiger now hath seiz'd the gentle hind;
Insulting tyranny begins to jut
Upon the innocent and awless throne:
Welcome, destruction, blood, and massacre!
I see, as in a map, the end of all.

Duch. Accursed and unquiet wrangling days!
How many of you have mine eyes beheld?
My husband lost his life to get the crown;
And often up and down my sons were tost,
For me to joy, and weep, their gain, and loss:
And being seated, and domestic broils
Clean over-blown, themselves, the conquerors,
Make war upon themselves; brother to brother,
Blood for blood, self 'gainst self—O, preposterous
And frantic courage, and thy damned spleen:
Or let me die, to lock on death no more!
Q. Eliz. Come, come, my boy, we will to sanctu-
Mudam, farewell. [fure.

Duch. Stay, I will go with you.
Q. Eliz. You have no cause.
Arch. My gracious lady, go.
[To the Queen.
And bid me bear your treasure and your goods.
For my part, I'll resign unto your grace
The seal I keep: And so betide to me,
As well I tender you, and all of yours!
Come, I'll conduct you to the sanctuary.

[Exit.

ACT III.

SCENE I.—The same. A Street.

The trumpets sound. Enter the Prince of Wales, Gloster, Buckingham, Cardinal Bourchier, and others.

Buck. Welcome, sweet prince, to London, to your chamber.
Glo. Welcome, dear cousin, my thoughts' sovereign:
The weary way hath made you melancholy.
Prince. No, uncle; but our crossons on the way
Have made it tedious, wearisome, and heavy;
I want more uncles here to welcome me.
Glo. Sweet prince, the untainc'd virtue of your years
 Hath not yet div'd into the world's deceit;
No more can you distinguish of a man,
Than of his outward show; which, God he knows,
Seldom, or never, jumpteth with the heart.
Those uncles, which you want, were dangerous;
Your grace attended to their sugar'd words,
But look'd not on the poison of their hearts:
God keep you from them, and from such false friends!
Prince. God keep me from false friends! but they were none. [you.
Glo. My lord, the mayor of London comes to greet
Enter the Lord Mayor, and his Train.
May. God bless your grace, with health and happy days!
Prince. I thank you, good my lord;—and thank you all.
[Exeunt Mayor, &c.
I thought, my mother, and my brother York,
Would long ere this have met us on the way:
Fye, what a slug is Hastings? that he comes not
To tell us, whether they will come, or no.
Enter Hastings.
Buck. And in good time here comes the sweating lord.
[come?
Prince. Welcome, my lord: What, will our mother
Host. On what occasion, God he knows, not I,
The queen your mother, and your brother York,
Have taken sanctuary: The tender prince
Would fain have come with me to meet your grace,
But by his mother was perforce withheld.
Buck. Fye! what an indirect and-powish course
Is this of hers?—Lord cardinal, will your grace
Persuade the queen to send the duke of York
Unto his princely brother presently?
If she deny,—Lord Hastings go with him,
And from her jealous arms pluck him perforce.
Card. My lord of Buckingham, if my weak cratury
Cannot call to him the duke of York.
Anon expect him here: But if she be obdurate
To mild entreaties, God in heaven forbid
We should infringe the holy privilege
Of blessed sanctuary! not for all this land,
Would I be guilty of so deep a sin.
Buck. You are too senseless-obsistate, my lord,
Too ceremonious, and traditional:
Weigh it bat with the grossness of this age,
You break not sanctuary in seizing him.
The benefit thereof is always granted
To those whose dealings have deserv'd the place,
And those who have the wit to claim the place:
This prince hath neither claim'd it, nor deserv'd it;
And therefore, in mine opinion, cannot have it:
Then, taking him from thence, that is not there,
You break no privilege nor charter there.
Oft have I heard of sanctuary men;
But sanctuary children ne'er till now.
Card. My lord, you shall o'er-rule my mind for once.
Come on, lord Hastings, will you go with me?
Host. I go, my lord.
Prince. Good lords, make all the speedy haste you may.
[S精品 CARDINAL and HASTINGS.
Say, uncle Gloster, if our brother come,
Where shall we sojourn till our coronation?
Glo. Where it seems best unto your royal self.
If I may counsel you, some day, or two,
Your highness shall repose you at the Tower:
Then where you please, and shall be thought most fit
For your best health and recreation.
Prince. I do not like the Tower, of any place:—
Did Julius Caesar build that place, my lord?
Glo. He did, my gracious lord, begins that place;
Which, since, succeeding ages have re-edific'd.
Prince. Is it upon record? or else reported
Successively from age to age, he built it?
Buck. Upon record, my gracious lord.
Prince. But say, my lord, it were not register'd;
Methinks, the truth should live from age to age,
As 'twere retail'd to all posterity,
Even to the general all-ending day.
Glo. So wise, so young, they say, do ne'er live long.
[Aside.
Prince. What say you, uncle?
Glo. I say, without characters, fame lives long,
Thus, like the formal vice, Iniquity,
I moralize two meanings in one word.
Prince. That Julius Caesar was a famous man—
What was his value did enrich his wit,
His wit set down to make his value live:
Death makes no conquest of this conqueror;
For now he lives in fame, though not in life.—
I'll tell you what, my cousin Buckingham.
Buck. What, my gracious lord?
Prince. An if I live until I be a man,
I'll win our ancient right in France again,
Or die a soldier, as I liv'd a king.
Glo. Short summers lightly have a forward spring.
[Aside.
Enter York, HASTINGS, and the CARDINAL.
Buck. Now, in good time, here comes the duke of York?
Brother?
Prince. Richard of York! how fares our loving York? Well, my dear lord; so must I call you now.
Prince. Ay, brother; to our grief, as it is yours:
Too late he died, that might have kept that title,
Which by his death hath lost much majesty.
Glo. How fares our cousin, noble lord of York?
York. I thank you, gentle uncle. O, my lord,
You said, that idle weeds are fast in growth:
The prouce my brother hath outgrown me far.
Glo. He hath, my lord.
York.
And therefore is he idle?
Glo. O, my fair cousin, I must not say so.
York. Then is he more beholden to you, than I.
Glo. He may command me, as my sovereign;
But you have power in me, as in a kinsman.
York. I pray you, uncle, then, give me this dagger.
Glo. My dagger, little cousin! with all my heart.
Prince. A beggar, brother?
York. Of my kind uncle, that I know will give;
And, being but a toy, which is no grief to give.
Glo. A greater gift than that I'll give my cousin.
York. A greater gift! O, that's the sword to it?
Glo. Ay, gentle cousin, were it light enough.
York. Then, I see, you'll part but with light gifts;
In weightier things you'll say a beggar, say.
Glo. It is too weighty for your grace to wear.
York. I weigh it lightly, were it heavier.
Glo. What, would you have my weapon, little lord?
York. I would, that I might thank you as you call me.
Glo. How?
York. As a soldier.
Prince. My lord of York will still be cross in talk:—
Uncle, your grace knows how to bear with him.
York. You mean, to bear me, not to bear with me;—
Uncle, my brother mocks both you and me;
Because that I am little, like an ape,

He thinks that you should bear me on your shoulders.

Buck. With what a sharp-provided wit he reasons! To mitigate the scorn he gives his uncle, He prettily and aptly taunts himself: So cunning, and so young, is wonderful. Glo. My gracious lord, why do you press me so far along? Myself, and my good cousin Buckingham, Will to your mother; to entreat of her, To meet you at the Tower, and welcome you. York. What, will you go unto the Tower, my lord? Prince. My lord protector needs will have it so. York. I shall not sleep in quiet at the Tower. Glo. Why, sir, what should you fear? York. Marty, my uncle Clarence' angry ghost; My grandam told me, he was murder'd there. Prince. I fear no uncles dead. Glo. Nor none that live, I hope. Prince. An if they live, I hope, I need not fear, But come, my lord, and, with a heavy heart, Thinking on them, go I unto the Tower. [Exeunt Prince, York, HASTINGS, Cardinal, and Attendants.

Buck. Think you, my lord, this little prating York Was not incensed by his subtle mother, To taunt and scorn you thus oppressiously? Glo. No doubt, no doubt: O, 'tis a parious boy; Bold, quick, ingenious, forward, capable; He, the mother's, too, to go to the top to toe. Buck. Well, let them rest.—

Come hither, gentle Catesby; thou art sworn As deeply to effect what we intend, As closely to conceal what we impart: Thou know'st our reasons urg'd upon the way; What think'st thou? is it not an easy matter To make William lord Hasting's thoughts confound, For the instalment of this noble duke In the seat royal of this famous isle?

Cate. He for his father's sake so loves the prince, That he will not be woo to aught against him. Buck. What think'st thou then of Stanley? will not Cate. He will do all in all as Hastings doth. [Exit Cate. Buck. Well then, no more but this: Go, gentle Catesby, And, as it were far off, sound thou lord Hastings, How he doth stand affected to our purpose; And summon him to-morrow to the Tower, To sit about the coronation. If thou dost find him tractable to us, Encourage him, and then unfold all our reasons: If he be led, i' the eye, cold, unwilling, Be thou so too; and so break off the talk, And give us notice of his inclination: For we to-morrow hold divided councils, Wherein thyself shalt highly be employed. Glo. Command me to lord William: tell him, Catesby, His ancient knot of dangerous adversaries To-morrow are let blood at Pomfret-castle; And bid my friend, for joy of this good news, Give mistress Shore one gentle kiss the more. [Exit Catesby. Buck. Good Catesby, go, effect this business soundly. Cate. My lord's good lords both, with all the heed I can. Glo. Shall we hear from you, Catesby, ere we sleep? Cate. You shall, my lord. Glo. At Crosby-place, there shall you find us both. [Exit Catesby. Buck. Now, my lord, what shall we do, if we perceive Lord Hastings will not yield to our compacts? Glo. Chop off his head, man;—somewhat we will And, look, when I am king, claim thou of me [do— This manner of Holmwood, and all the moveables Wherein the king my brother was possess'd. Buck. I'll claim that promise at your grace's hand.

Glo. And look to have it yielded with all kindness. Come, let us sup betimes; that afterwards We may digest our compacts in some form. [Exeunt.

Enter HASTINGS. Host. Cannot thy master sleep the tedious nights? Mess. So it should seem by that I have to say. First, he commends him to your noble lordship. Host. And then,—

Mess. And then, he sends you word he dreamt To-night the boar had raised off his helm: Besides, he says, there are two councils held; And that may be determined at the one, Which may make you and him to rue at the other. Therefore he sends to know your lordship's pleasure,— If presently, you will take horses with him, And with all speed post with him toward the north, To shun the danger that his soul divoies. Host. Go, fellow, go, return unto thy lord: Bid him not fear the separated councils: His honour, and myself, are at the one; And, at the other, is my good friend Catesby; Where nothing can proceed, that toucheth us, Wherein shall not have intelligence. Tell him, his fears are shallow, wanting instance: And for his dreams—I wonder, he's so fond To trust the mockery of unquiet slumberers: To fly the boar, before the boar pursues, Were to incense the boar to follow us, And make pursuit, where he did mean no chase. Go, bid thy master rise and come to me; And we will both together to the Tower, Where, he shall see, the boar will use us kindly. Mess. I'll go my lord, and tell him what you say. [Exit. Enter CATESBY. Cate. Many good morrows to my noble lord! Host. Good morrow, Catesby; you are early stirring What news, what news, in this our tottering state? Cate. It is a reeling world, indeed, my lord; And, I believe, will never stand upright, Till Richard wear the garland of the realm. Host. How! wear the garland! dost thou mean the Cate. Ay, my good lord. [Crowns. Host. I'll have this crown of mine cut from my shoul Before I'll see the crown so foul mispia'd. [Ilers, But canst thou guess that he doth aim at it? Cate. Ay, on my life; and hopes to find you forward Upon his party, for the gain thereof: And, thereupon, he sends you this good news,— That, this same very day, your enemies, The kindred of the queen, must die at Pomfret. Host. Indeed, I am no mourner for that news, Because their have been still my adversaries: But, that I'll give my voice on Richard's side, To bar my master's heirs in true descent, God knows, I will not do it, to the death. Cate. God keep your lordship in that gracious mind! Host. But I shall laugh at this a twelvemonth hence. That they, who brought me in my master's hate, I live to look upon their tragedy.

Well, Catesby, ere a fortnight make me older,
KING RICHARD III.

I'll send some packing, that yet think but on't.
Curt. This a vile thing to die, my gracious lord,
When men are unprepared, and look not for it.
Hast. O monstrous, monstrous! and so falls it out
With Rivers, Vaughan, Grey: and so 'twixt do
With some men else, who think themselves as safe
As thou and I; who, when thou know'st me not,
Travel to King Richard, and to Buckingham.
Curt. The princes both make high account of you.
For they account his head upon the bridge. [Aside.
Hast. I know, they do; and I have well deserved it.

Enter STANLEY.

Come on, come on, where is your boar-spear, man?
Fare you the boar, and go so unsupplied?
Stan. My lord, good morrow: and good morrow,
Catesby:-

You may jest on, but, by the holy rood
I do not like these several councils, I.
Hast. My lord, I hold my life as dear as you do yours;
And never, in my life, I do protest.
War. Some precious to me than 'tis now:
Think you, but that I know your state secure,
I would be so triumphant as I am? [London.
Stan. The lords at Pomfret, when they rode from
Were joyous: and supposed their states were sure,
And they, indeed, had no cause to mistrust;
But yet, you see, how soon the day o'er-cast.
This sudden sigh of misfortune I must doubt;
Pray God, I say, I prove a needless coward!
What, shall we toward the Tower: the day is spent.
Hast. Come, come, have with you. - Wet you what,
my lord?
To-day, the lords you talk of are beheaded. [Heads.
Stan. They, for their truth, might better wear their
Than some, that have accord'd them, wear their hats.
But come, my lord, let's away.

Enter a Pursuivant.

Hast. Go on before, I'll talk with this good fellow.
[Exit STANLEY and CURTAIN.

How now, sirrah? how goes the world with thee?
Purs. The better, that your lordship please to ask.
Hast. I tell thee, man, 'tis better with me now,
Than when thou met'st me last, where we met:
Then was I going prisoner to the Tower,
By the suggestion of the queen's allies;
But now, I tell thee. (Keep it to thyself.)
This day those enemies are put to death,
And I in better state than ere I was.
Purs. God bend it, to your honour: good content!
Hart. Gramercy, fellow: There, drink that for me.
Purs. I thank your honour. [Exit Pursuivant.

Enter a Priest.

Pr. Well met, my lord! I am glad to see your honour.
Hast. I thank thee good: we join with all my heart,
I am in your debt for your last exercise:
Come the next Sabbath, and I will content you.

Enter BUCKINGHAM.

Buck. What talking with a priest, lord chamberlain?
Your friends at Pomfret they do seek the priest;
Your honour takes no working work in hand.
Hast. Good faith, and when I met this holy man,
The men you talk of came into my mind.
What do you go toward the Tower?
Buck. I do, my lord; but long I cannot stay there:
I shall return before your lordship's grace.
Hast. Nay, live enough, for I stay dinner there.
Buck. And suppos'd, although I know not so.

Enter, will you go?
Hast. I'll wait upon your lordship. [Exit.

SCENE III.—Pomfret. Before the castle.

Enter RATCHIFF, with a guard, conducting RIVERS,
GRAY, and VAUGHAN, to execution.
Rat. Come, bring forth the prisoners.
Riv. Sir Richard Ratchiff, let me tell thee this, —
To-day, shalt thou behold a subject die,
For truth, for duty, and for loyalty.
God keep the prince from all the pack of you!
A knot you are of damned blood-suckers.
Vow, You live that shall cry woe for this hereafter.
Rat. Despatch; the limit of your lives is out.
Riv. O Pomfret, Pomfret! O thou bloody prison,
Fatal and ominous to noble peers!
Within the guilty closure of thy walls,
Richard the Second here was hack'd to death:
And, for more slander to thy dismal seat,
We give thee up our guiltless blood to drink.
Gray. Now Margaret's curse is fallen upon our heads,
When she exclaimed on Hastings, you, and I,
For standing by when Richard stab'd her son.
Riv. Then curse'd the Hastings; then cursed the Buckingham,
Then cursed the Richard. — O, remember, God,
To hear her prayers for them, as now for us!
And for my sister, and her princely sons,—
Beati, and, dear God, with our true bloods,
Which, as thou know'st, unjustly must be spill'd!
Rat. Make haste, the hour of death is expir'd.
Riv. Come, Grey,—come, Vaugan,—let us here
barena:
Farewell, until we meet again in heaven. [Exit.

Buckingham, STANLEY, HASTINGS, the Bishop of ELY, CATESBY, LOWELL, and others, sitting at a table:
officers of the council attending.
Hast. Now, noble peers, the cause why we are met is— to determine of the coronation:
In God's name, speak, when is the royal day?
Buck. Are all things ready for that royal time?
Stan. They are: and wants but nomination
Riv. To-morrow then I judge a happy day.
Buck. Who knows the lord protector's mind herein?
Who is most inward with the noble duke? [mind.
Hast. Your grace, we think, should soonest know his Buck. We know each other's fates for our hearts,—
He knows no more of mine, than I of yours;
Nor I, of his, my lord, than you of mine:
Lord Hastings, you, and I, are near in love.
Hast. I thank thy grace, I know he loves me well:
But, for his purpose in the coronation,
I have not sounded him, nor be deliver'd
His gracious pleasure any way therein:
But you, my noble lord, may name the time;
And in the grace's behalf I will give my voice,
Which, I presume, we'll take in gentle part.

Enter GEORGE.

Glo. Is happy time here comes the duke himself.
Ob. My noble lords, and counsels, all, good morrow;
I have been long a wiser: but, I trust,
My absence doth neglect no great design.
What in my presence might have been concluded.
Buck. Had you not some upon your eye, my lord,
William lord Hasting's words pronounced your part, —
I mean, your voice,— for crowning of the king.
Ob. Than my lord Hastings, no man might be bolder;

Come,
ACT III.—SCENE V.

His lordship knows me well, and loves me well.—

"Hast. I thank your grace.

Glo. My lord of Ely, when I was last in Holborn,

I saw good strawberries in your garden there;

I do beseech you, send for some of them.

Ely. Marry, and will, my lord, with all my heart.

[Exit Ely.

Glo. Cousin of Buckingham, a word with you.

[Enter GLOSTER and BUCKINGHAM.

Stan. We have not yet set down this day of triumph.

To-morrow, in my judgment, is too sudden;

For I myself am not so well provided,

As else I would be, were the day prolong'd.

[Enter BISHOP OF ELY.

Ely. Where is my lord protector? I have sent

For these strawberries.

[Exit Ely.

Glo. I pray you all, tell me what they deserve,

That do conspire my death with devilish plots,

Of damned witchcraft: and that have prevail'd

Upon my body with their hellish charms?

Hast. The tender love I bear your grace, my lord,

Makes me most forward in this noble presence

To deem the offenders: Whose'er they be,

I swear by heaven, they have deserved death.

Glo. Then be your eyes the witness of their evil,

Look how I am bewitched: behold mine arm

Is, like a blasted sapling, wither'd up:

And this is Edward's wife, that monstrous wench,

Consorted with that harlot, strumpet Shore.

That by their witchcraft thus have marked me.

Hast. If they have done this deed, my noble lord,—

Glo. If they have done this deed, my noble lord,—

Talk'st thou on his fate?—I was a traitor.

Off with his head:—now, by saint Paul 1 swear,

I will not dine until I see the same.—

Lovell, and Catesby, look that it be done;

The rest, that love me, rise, and follow me.

[Exit Council, with Glo. and Buck.

Hast. When was, for England!—What for me; for

I, too fond, might have prevented this;

Stanley did dream, the boar did raise his helm; but

I disdained it, and did scorn to fly.

Three times to-day my foot-cloth horse did stumble,

And startled, when he look'd upon the Tower,

As loath to bear me to the slaughter-house.

O, now I want the priest that was sent to me:

I now repent I told the pursuivant,

As too triumphing, how mine enemies,

To-day at Pomfret bloodily were butcher'd,

And I myself secure in grace and favour.

O, Margaret, Margaret, now thy heavy curse

Is lighted on poor Hastings' wretched head.

Caius. Despatch, my lord, the duke shall be at dinner.

Make a short shift; he longs to see your head. [ner:—

Hast. O momentary grace of mortal men,

Which we more hunt for than the grace of God!

Who builds his hope in air of your fair looks,

Lives like a drunken sailor on a mast:—

Ready, with every nod, to tumble down

Into the fatal bowls of the deceiver:

Low. Come, come, despatch;—'tis but to elound.

Hast. O, bloody Richard!—miserable England!—

I prophesy the fearful'st time to thee.

That ever wretched age hath look'd upon.—

Come, lead me to the block, bear him my head,

They smile at me, who shortly shall be dead.

[Exeunt.

SCENE V.—The same. The Tower Walls.

Enter Gloster and Buckingham, in Military Armour, marvellous ill-favoured.

Glo. Come, cousin, canst thou quake, and change thy colour?

Murder thy breath in middle of a word,—

And then again begin, and step again,

As if thou wert distraught, and mad with terror?

Buck. Tut, I can counterfeit the deep tragedian;

Speak, and look back, and pray on every side,

Tremble and start at wagging of a straw,

Intending deep suspicion: ghastly looks

Are at my service, like enforc'd smiles;

And both are ready in their offices.

At any time, to grace my stratagems.

But what, is Catesby gone?

Glo. He is: and, see, he brings the mayor along.

Enter the Lord Mayor and CaTTsBY.

Buck. Let me alone to entertain him.— Lord Glo. Look to the draw-bride there. [mayor.

Buck. [To Gloster,] Mark! I'll make a drum.

Glo. Catesby, o'erlook the walls.

Buck. Lord mayor, the reason we have sent for

Glo. Look back, defend thee, here are enemies.

Buck. God and our innocence defend and guard us!

Enter LOVEL and Ratcliff, with HASTINGS' head.

Glo. Be patient, they are friends: Ratcliff, and Lovell. Here is the head of that ignoble traitor,

The dangerous and unsuspected Hastings.

Glo. So dear I lov'd the man, that I must weep,

I took him for the plainest harmless creature,

That breath'd upon the earth a Christian;

Make him my book, wherein my soul recorded

The history of all her secret thoughts:

So smooth he daub'd his vice with show of virtue,

That, his apparent open guilt omitted.

I mean, his conversation with Shore's wife,—

He liv'd from all attainer of suspicion.

Buck. Well, well, he was the covert's shelter'd

That ever liv'd.—Look you, my lord mayor, [traitor

Would you imagine, or almost believe.

(Were't not, that by great preservation

We live to tell it you,) the subtle traitor

This day had plotted, in the council house.

To murder me, and my good lord of Gloster?

Men! What! he heare?—

Glo. What! thank you we are Turks, or infidels?

Or that we would, against the form of law,

Proceed thus rashly in the villain's death:

But that the extreme peril of the case,

The peace of England, and our persons' safety,

Enforced us to this execution!
May. Now, fair beseach ye! he deserv'd his death,
And your good graces both have well proceed,
To warn false traitors from the like attempts.
I never look'd for better at his hands,
After he once fell in with mistress Shore.

Buck. Yet had we not determin'd he should die,
Until your lordship came to see his end;
Which now the loving haste of these our friends,
Somewhat against our meaning hath prevent'd:
Because, my lord, we would have had you hear
The traitor speak, and timeously confess
The manner and the purpose of his treasons;
That you might well have signified the same
Unto the citizens, who, haply, may Misconstrue us in him, and wait his death. [serve.
Man. But, my good lord, your grace's word shall
As well as I had seen, and heard him speak: [serve
And do not doubt, right noble princes both,
But I'll acquaint our duteous citizens
With all your just proceedings in this case.

Glo. And to that end we wish'd your lordship here,
To avoid the censures of the carping world.

Buck. But since you came too late of our intent,
Yet witness what you hear we do intende:
And so, my good lord mayor, we did farewell.
[Exit Lord Mayor.

Glo. Go, after, after, cousin Buckingham,
The mayor towards Guildhall bides him with all post:—
There, at your meetest vantage of the time,
Infer the bastardy of Edward's children:—
Tell them, how Edward put to death a citizen,
Only for saying—he would make his son
Heir to the crown; meaning, indeed, his house,
Which, by the sign thereof was term'd so.
Moreover, urge his hateful luxury,
And bestial appetite in change of lust;
Which stretch'd up unto their servants, daughters, wives,
Even where his raging eye, or savage heart,
Without control, list'd to make his prey.

Nay, for a need, this far come near my person:
Tell them, when that my mother went with child
Of that insatiate Edward, noble York,
My princely father, then had wars in France;—
And, by just computation of the time,
Found, that the issue was not his begot;
Which well i' the lineaments,
Because it was urg'd like to a noble duke's son:
Yet touch this sparingly, as 'twere far off:—
Because, my lord, you know, my mother lives.

Buck. Doubt not, my lord: I'll play the orator,
As if the golden fee, for which I plead,
Were for myself: and so, my lord, adieu. [castle;

Glo. If you thrive well, bring them to Baynard's
Where you shall find me well accompanied,
With reverend fathers, and well-learned bishops.

Buck. I go; and, towards three or four o'clock,
Look for the news that the Guildhall affords.
[Exit BUCKINGHAM.

Glo. Go, Lovel, with all speed to Doctor Shaw,—
Go thou [in Curt.] to friar Penker;—bid them both
Meet me, within this hour, at Baynard's castle.

[Exit the LOV. and CATESBY.

Now will I in, to take some privy converse
To draw the brats of Clarence out of sight;
And to give notice, that no manner of person
Have, any time, recourse unto the princes. [Exit.

SCENE VI.—A Street.

Enter a Scrivener
Scriv. Here is the inditement of the good lord
Hastings;
Which in a set hand fairly is engross'd,

That it may be to day read o'er in Paul's,
And mark how well the sequel hangs together:
Eleven hours I have spent to write it over,
For yesternight by Catesby was it sent me;
The precedent was full as long a doing:
And yet within these five hours Hastings liv'd,
Untainted, unexam'd, free, at liberty.
Here's a good world the white!—Who is so gross,
That cannot see this palpable device?
Yet who so bold, but says—he sees it not?
Bad is the world; and all will come to nought,
When such bad dealing must be seen in thought.
[Exit.

SCENE VII.—The same. Court of Baynard's Castle.

Enter GLOSTER and BUCKINGHAM, meeting.

Glo. How now, how now, what say the citizens?
Buck. Now by the holy mother of our Lord,
The citizens are mum, say not a word.
[drum:

Glo. Touch'd you the bastardy of Edward's chil
Buck. I did; with his contract with lady Lucy,
And his contract by deputy in France:
The insatiate greediness of his desires,
And his enforcement of the city wives:
His tyranny for trifles; his own bastardy,—
As being got, your father then in France;
And his resemblance, being not like the duke.

Withal, I did infer your lineaments,—
Being the right idea of your father,
Both in your form and nobleness of mind:
Laid open all your victories in Scotland,
Your discipline in war, wisdom in peace,
Your bounty, virtue, fair humility:
Indeed, left nothing, fitting for your purpose,
Untouch'd, or slightly handled, in discourse.
And, when mine oratory grew to an end,
I bade them, that did love their country's good,
Cry—God save Richard, England's royal king!

Glo. And did they so?
Buck. No, so God help me, they spake not a word;
But, like dumb statues, or breathless stones,
Star'd on each other, and look'd deadly pale.
Which when I saw, I reprehend'd them;
And ask'd the mayor, what meant this wifful silence:
His answer was—the people were not us'd
To be spoke to, but by the recorder.
Then I was urg'd like to my talk again:—
Thus with the duke, thus with the duke infer'd:
But nothing spoken in warrant from himself.
When he had done, some followers of mine own,
At lower end o' the hall, hurl'd up their caps,
And some ten voices cried, God save king Richard!
And thus I took the vantage of these few;—
Thanks, gentle citizens, and friends, quoth I;
This general applause, and cheerful shout,
Argues your wisdom, and your love to Richard:
And even here brake off, and came away.

Glo. What tongueless blocks were they? Would they not speak?
Will not the mayor then, and his brethren, come?

Buck. The mayor is here at hand, intend some fear;
But his speech was urg'd, by mighty suit:
And look you, get a prayer-book in your hand,
And stand betwixt two churchmen, good my lord;
For on that ground I'll make a holy de-cant:
And be not easily won to our requests;
Play the mad'ns part, still answer nay, and take it.

Glo. I go; and if you plead as well for them,
As I can say nay to see for myself or ordain;
No doubt we'll bring it to a happy issue

Buck. Go, go, up to the leads; the lord mayor knocks.
Enter the Lord Mayor, Aldermen, and Citizens.

Welcome, my lord: I dance attendance here; I think, the duke will not be spoke withal.—

Enter from the castle, Catesby.

Now, Catesby! what says your lord to my request?

Cate. He doth entreat your grace, my noble lord, To visit him to-morrow, or next day: He is within, with two right reverend fathers, Divinely bent to meditation:
And in no worldly suit would he be mov'd,
To draw him from his holy exercise.

Buck. Return, good Catesby, to the gracious duke; Tell him, myself, the mayor and aldermen, In deep designs, in matter of great moment, No less importing than our general good, Are come to have some conference with his grace.

Cate. I'll signify so much unto him straight. [Exit.

Buck. Ah, ha, my lord, this prince is not an Ed-
He is not rolling on a lewd day-bed, [ward! But on his knees at meditation;
Not dialling with a grace of courtiers,
But meditating with two deep divines;
Not sleeping, to engross his idle body,
But praying, to enrich his watchful soul:
Happy were England, would this virtuous prince
Take on himself the sovereignty thereof:
But, sure, I fear, we shall never win him to it. [nay! Marry, God say, God defend this grace should say
Buck. I fear, he will: Here Catesby comes again;—

Re enter CATESBY.

Now, Catesby, what says his grace?

Cate. He wonders to what end you have assembled
Such troops of citizens to come to him,
His grace not being warn'd thereof before;
He fears, my lord, you mean no good to him.

Buck. Sorry I am, my noble cousin should Suspect me, that I mean no good to him;
By heaven, we come to him in perfect love;
And so once more return and tell his grace.

When holy and devout religious men
Are at their beads, 'tis hard to draw thence;
So sweet is zealous contemplation.

Enter GLOSTER, in a gallery above, between Two Bishops. Catesby returns.

May. See, where his grace stands 'tween two clergymen!

Buck. To props of virtue for a christian prince,
To stay him from the fall of vanity:
And, see, a book of prayer in his hand?
True oraments to know a holy man.—
Famous Plantagenet, most gracious prince,
Lend favourable ear to our requests;
And pardon us the interruption
Of thy devotion, and right christian zeal.

Glo. My lord, there needs no such apology; I rather do beseech you pardon me, Who, earnest in the service of my God, Neglect the visitation of my friends,
But, leaving this, what is your grace's pleasure?

Buck. Even that, I hope, which pleaseth God above, And all good men of this ungodly isle.

Glo. I do suspect, I have done some offence, That seems disgraceful in the city's eye; And that you come to reprehend my ignorance.

Buck. You have, my lord; Would it might please your grace,
On our entreaties to amend your fault!

Glo. Else, wherefore breathe I in a christian land? Buck. Know, then, it is your fault, that you resign

The supreme seat, the throne majestical,
The scepter'd office of your ancestors, Your state of fortune, and your due of birth, The lineal glory of your royal house, To the corruption of a blemish'd stock:
Whist, in the mildness of your sleepy thoughts, (Which here we waken to our country's good,) The noble isle doth want her proper limbs; Her face fecund'd with sears of infancy, Her royal stock graft with ignoble plants, And almost shoulder'd in the swallowing gulf Of dark forgetfulness and deep oblivion.
Which to recure we heartily solicit Your gracious self to take on you the charge And kingly government of this your land
Not as protector, steward, substitute, Or lowly factor for another's gain: But as successively, from blood to blood, Your right of birth, your empery, your own. For this, consortcd with the citizens, Your very worshipful and loving friends, And by their vehement instigation, In this just suit come I to move your grace.

Glo. I cannot tell, if to depart in silence, Or bitterly to speak in your reproof, Best fitteth my degree, or your condition: If, not to answer,—you might haply think, Tongue-tied ambition, not replying, yielded To bear the golden yoke of sovereignty, Which fondly you would here impose on me,
If to reprove you for this suit of yours. So season'd with your faithful love to me, Then, on the other side, I check'd my friends. Therefore,—to speak, and to avoid the first; And then, in speaking, not to incur the last,— Definitively, thus I answer you,
Your love deserves my thanks; but my desert Unmeritable, shuns your high request.
First, if all obstacles were cut away, And that my path were even to the crown, As the ripe revenue and due of birth; Yet so much is my poverty of spirit, So mighty, and so many, my defects, That I would rather hold me from your greatness,— Being a barb to brook me no mighty seo— Than in my greatness covet to be lod, And in the vapour of my glory smother'd. But, God be thank'd, there is no need of me; (And much I need to help you, if need were;) The royal tree hath left us royal fruit, Which, mellow'd by the stealing hours of time, Will well become the seat of majesty; And make, no doubt, us happy by his reign.
On him I lay what you would lay on me, The right and fortune of his happy stars,— Which, God defend, that I should wring from him!

Buck. My lord, this argues conscience in your grace; But these respects thereof are nice and trivial, All circumstances well considered.
You say that Edward is your brother's son; So say we too, but not by Edward's wife:
For first he was contract to lady Lucy,
Your mother lives a witness to his vow; And afterwards by substitute betroth'd To Bona, sister to the king of France. These both put by, a poor pretender, A care-craz'd mother to a many sons, A beauty-waning and distressed widow, Even in the afternoon of her best days, Made prize and purchase of his wanton eye, Seduc'd the pitch and height of all his thoughts To base declension, and loath'd bigamy;
KING RICHARD III.

By her, in his unlawful bed, he got
This Edward, whom our manners call—the prince.
More mannerly could I expressulate,
Save that, for reverence to some alive,
I give a sparing limit to my tongue.
Then, good my lord, take to your royal self
This proper'd benefit of dignity:
If not to bless us and the land withal,
Yet to draw forth your noble ancestry
From the corruption of abusing time,
Caro a linear true-derived course.

May. Do, good my lord; your citizens entreat you.

But. Refuse not, mighty lord, this proper'd love.

Carr. O make them joyful; grant their lawful suit.

God. Alas, why would you heap those cares on me?

I am aunt for state and majesty:
I do beseech you, take it not amiss:
I cannot, nor I will not yield to you.

But. If you refuse it,—as in love and zeal,
Loath to defoil the child, your brother's son;
As well we know your tenderness of heart;
And gentle, kind, effemmeinate remorse,
Which we have noted in you to your kindred,
And equally, indeed, to all estates.
Yet know, who's you accept our suit or no.
Your brother's son shall never reign our king;
But, we will plant some other in your throne,
To the disgrace and downfall of your house.
And, in this resolution, here we leave you:
Come, citizens, we will entreat no more.

[Exit Buckingham and Citizens.

Carr. Call them again, sweet prince, accept their
If you deny them, all the land will rue it: [suit,

But. Will you enforce me to a world of cares?
Well, call them again; I am not made of stone,
But penetrable to your kind entreaties, [Exit Carr.

Avet against my conscience and my soul—

Re-enter Buckingham, and the rest.

Cousins of Buckingham,—and you sage, grave men,
Since you will bekele fortune on my back,
To bear her burden, she'll I will, or no,
I must have patience to endure the load:
But if black scandaL, or foul-fac'd reproach,
 Attend the sequel of your imposition,
You shall more comply with me to become me
From all the impure blasts and stains thereof;
For God he knows, and you may partly see,
How far I am from the desire of this.

May. God bless your grace! we see it, and will Carr. In saying so, you shall but say the truth.

But. Then I salve you with this royal title,
Long live king Richard, England's worthy king!

Av. Amen.

But. To-morrow may it please you to be crowned!

Carr. Even when you please, since you will have it so.

But. To-morrow then we will attend your grace;
And to most joyfully, we take our leave.

Carr. Come, let us to our holy work again:

[To the Bishops.

Farewell, good cousin; farewell, gentle friends.

[Exit."

ACT IV.

SCENE I.—Before the Tower.

Enter, on one side, QUEEN ELIZABETH, DUCHESS OF YORK, and MARCOU OF DORSET; on the other, ANNE, DUCHESS OF GLOSTER, bearing Lady Mary Mar-ton, and CLARENCE, bearing a young daughter.

Duch. Who meets us here?—my niece Plantagenet?

Lady D. Led in the hand of her kind aun: of Gloster?

Now, for my life, she's wand ring to the Tower,
On pure heart's love, to greet the tender prince—

Duch. God give your graces both
A happy and a joyful time of day!

Que. As much to you, good sister! Whither

Anne. No farther than the Tower; and, as I guess,
Upon the like devotion as yourselves,
To graduate the gentle princes there.

Que. Kind sister, thanks, we'll eat all together.

Enter Brakenbury.

And, in good time, here the lieutenant comes.—
Master lieutenant, pray you, by your leave,
How down the prince, and my young son of York?

Brak. Right well, dear madam: by your patience,
I may not suffer you to visit them:
The king hath strictly charg'd the contrary.

Que. The king! who's that?

Brak. I mean, the lord protector.

Que. The Lord protect him from that kingly title!

Anne. Has he set bounds between their love and me?

Duch. I am their mother, who shall bar me from them?

Que. I, your father's mother, I will see them.

Anne. Their aunt and I know, in love their mother:
Then bring me to their sights; I'll bear thy blame,
And take thy office from thee, on my peril!

Brak. No, madam, no, I may not leave it so;
I am bound by oath, and therefore pardon me.

[Exit Brakenbury.

Enter Stanley.

Stan. Let me but meet you, ladies, one hour hence,
And I'll salute your grace of York as mother,
And reverence look'd-on of two fair queens.
Come, madam, you must straight to Westminster;

[To the DUCHESS OF GLOSTER.

There to be crowned Richard's royal queen.

Que. Ah, out my face asunder!
That my heart's heart may have some scope to beat,
Or else I sown with this dead-killing news.

Anne. Despightful tidings! O unpleasant news!

Duch. Be it good cheer.—Mother, how fares your grace?

Que. O Dorset, speak not me, get thee gone
Death and destruction dog thee at the heels;
Thy mother's name is ominous to children:
If thou wilt outstrip death, go cross the seas,
And live with Richmond, from the reach of hell.
Go, to thee, his thee, from this slaughter-house,
Loast thou increase the number of the dead;
And make me die the till of Margaret's curse,
Nor mother, wife nor England's crowned queen.

Stan. Full of wise counsel is this your counsel, madam:
Take all the swift advantage of the hours;
You shall have letters from me to my son
In your behalf, to meet you on the way:
Be not too tardy by any wise delay.

Duch. O ill-disposing wind of misery!
O my accursed womb, the bed of death;
A cockatrice that hath hatch'd to the world,
Whose unavowed eye is murderous!

Stan. Come, madam, come; I in all haste was sent

Anne. And I with all unwillingness will go.—

Que. Yearly God that the inclusive verge
Of golden metal, that must round my brow,
Were red-hot steel, to steel me to the brain!

Anne. Upon my heart, be with doubly venous
And die, ere men can say,—God save the queen!

Que. Go, go, poor soul, I envy not thy glory;
To feed my humour, with thyself no harm.

Anne. No! why?—When be, that is my husband
Came to me, as I followed Henry's corse;
When scarce the blood was well wash'd from his
Which issu'd from my mother's angel husband, [hands,
And that dead saint which then I weeping follow'd;
O, when, I say, I look'd on Richard's face,
This was my wish,—Be thou, quoth I, accus'd,
For making me, so young, so old a widow!
And when, thou mad'st, let sorrow haunt thy bed;
And death, I pray, to come on me so swiftly,
More sure and certain of the life of thee,
Then thou hast made me by my dear lord's death!
In, ere I can repeat this curse again,
Even in so short a space, my woman's heart
Grewly grow captive to his honey words,
And prov'd the subject of mine own soul's curse;
Such ever since hath held mine eyes from rest;
For never yet one hour in his bed
Did I enjoy the golden dew of sleep,
But with his timorous dreams was still awak'd.
Besides, he hates me for my father Warwick;
And will, no doubt, shortly be rid of me.

Q. Elizabeth. Poor heart, dear lady! I pity thee, complaining,
Anne. No more than with my soul I mourn for yours.
Dor. Farewell, then, thou woeful harlot of glory!
Anne. Ah, dear soul, that tak'st leave of it!
Duch. Go thou to Richmond, and good fortune guide thee! [To Dorset.
Go thou to Richard, and good angels tend thee!—
[To An. Go thou to sanctuary, and good thoughts possess thee!

1 to my grave, where peace and rest lie with me.
Eighty odd years of sorrow have I seen,
And each hour's joy wrenched with a week of teen.
Q. Elizabeth. Stay yet; look back, with me, unto the Fifty, you ancient stones, those tender babes.
Tower. They envy him that'mor'd within your walls;
Rough cradle for such little pretty ones!
Rude ragged nurse! old sullen play-fellow
For tender princes, use my babies well!
So foolish sorrow bids your stones farewell. [Exit."

SCENE II. — A Room of State in the Palace.
Flourish of trumpets. Richard, as King upon his throne; Buckingham, Catesby, a Page, and others.
K. Rich. Stand all apart.—Cousin of Buckingham.
Buck. My gracious sovereign.
K. Rich. Give me thy hand. Thus high, by thy ad
And thy assistance, is king Richard seated:—tree,
But shall we wear these glories for a day?
Shall they last, and we rejoice in them?
Buck. Still live 'tis, and for ever let them last!
K. Rich. Ah, Buckingham, now do I play the touch,
To try if thou be current gold indeed:—
Young Edward lives;—Think now what I would speak.
Buck. Say on, my loving lord.
Buck. Why, so you are, my thrice-renewed liege,
K. Rich. Ha! am I king? 'Tis so: but Edward lives.
Buck. True, noble prince.
K. Rich. O better consequence,
That Edward still should live,—true, noble prince:—
Cousin, thou wast not born to be so dull:—
Shall I be plain? I wish the bastards dead;
And I would have it suddenly perform'd.
What say'st thou now? speak suddenly, be brief.
Buck. Your grace may do your pleasure.
K. Rich. Tut, tut, thou art all ice, thy kindness
Say, have I thy consent, that they shall die? [Receives
Buck. Give me some breath, some little pause, dear
Before I positively speak in this: [lord,
I will resolve your grace immediately. [Exit Buck,

Curtains. The king is angry; see, he grasps his esp. [Aside.
K. Rich. I will converse with iron-witted fools. [Descends from his throne.
And unequal boys; none are for me,
That look into me with considerate eyes;—
High-reaching Buckingham grows circumstpect.
Bo,—

Enter. My lord.
K. Rich. Know'st thou not any, whom corrupting
Would tempt unto a close exploit of death? [gold
Page. I know a discontented gentleman,
Whose humble means match not his haughty mind:
Gold were as good as twenty orators,
And will, no doubt, tempt him to any thing.
K. Rich. What is his name?
Page. His name, my lord, is—Tyrel.
K. Rich. I partly know the man; Go, call him bither, boy. — [Exit Page.

The deep-revolving witty Buckingham
No more shall be the neighbour to my counsels:
Hath he so long held out with me untried,
And stops he now for breath!—well, be it so.—

Enter Stanley.

How now, lord Stanley? what's the news?
Stan. Know, my loving lord,
The marquis Dorset, as I hear, is fled
To Richmond, in the attempt before he abides.
K. Rich. Come hither, Catesby: rumour it abroad,
That Anne, my wife, is very grievous sick;
I will take order for her keeping close.
Inquire me out some mean-born gentleman,
Whom I will marry straight to Clarence's daughter.

The boy is foolish, and I fear not him.—
Look, how hasty dreams!—I say again, give out,
That Anne my queen is sick, and like to die:
About it; for it stands me much upon,
To stop all hopes whose growth may damage me—

[Exit Catesby.

I must be married to my brother's daughter,
Or else my kingdom stands on brittle glass:
Murder her brothers, and then marry her!

Uncertain way of gain! But I am
So far in blood, that sin will pluck on sin.
Tear-falling pity dwells not in this eye.

Re-enter Page, with Tyrel.

Is thy name—Tyrel?

Tyrel. James Tyrel, and your most obedient subject.
K. Rich. Art thou, indeed?

Tyrel. Prove me, my gracious lord.
K. Rich. Dar'st thou resolve to kill a friend of mine?

Tyrel. Please you; but I had rather kill two enemies.
K. Rich. Why, then thou hast it; two deepennepes,
Foes to my rest, and my sweet sleep's disturbers,
Are they that I would have thee deal upon?
Tyrel, I mean those bastards in the Tower.

Tyrel. Let me have open means to come to them,
And soon I'll rid you from the fear of them.

K. Rich. Thou sing'st sweet music. Hark, come

Go, by this token:—Rise, and lend this ear: [Whispers.
There is no more but sn.—Say, it is done,
And I will love thee, and prefer thee for it.

Tyrel. I will despatch it straight. [Exit.

Re-enter Buckingham.

Buck. My lord. I have consider'd in my mind
The late demand that you did sound me in.
K. Rich. Well, let that rest. Dorset is fled to Buck. I hear the news, my lord. [Richmond.
K. Rich. Stanley, he is your wife's son:—Well, look to it.
SCENE III. — The same.

Enter Tyrrel.

Tyr. The tyrannous and bloody act is done;
The most arch deed of piteous massacre,
That ever yet this land was guilty of.
Dighton, and Forrest, whom I did suborn
To this piece of ruthless butchery.
Albeit they were flesh'd villains, bloody dogs,
Melting with tenderness and mild compassion,
Wept like two children, in their death's sad story.
O thus, quoth Dighton, lay the gentle babes, —
Thus, thus, quoth Forrest, girding one another
Within their abasest innocent lay:
Their lips were four red roses on a staff,
Which, in their summer beauty, kiss'd each other.
A book of prayers on their pillow lay:
Which once, quoth Forrest, almost chang'd my mind:
But, O, the devil — there the villain stopp'd;
When Dighton thus told on, — we smothered
The most replenished sweet work of nature,
That, from the prime creation, 'ere she fram'd. —
Hence both are gone with conscience and remorse,
They could not speak; and so I left them both,
To bear this tidings to the bloody king.

Enter King Richard.

And here he comes: — All health, my sovereign lord! K. Rich. Kind Tyrrel! am I happy in thy news? Tyr. If to have done the thing you gave in charge
Reget your happiness, be happy then;
For it is done.

K. Rich. And buried, gentle Tyrrel
Tyr. The chaplain of the Tower hath buried them;
But where, to say the truth, I do not know.
K. Rich. Come to me, Tyrrel, soon, at after supper,
When thou shalt tell the process of their death.
Mean time, but think how I may do thee good,
And be inheritor of thy desire.
Farewell, till then.

Tyr. I humbly take my leave.

[Exit.]

K. Rich. The son of Clarence have I penn'd up close;
His daughter meanly have I match'd in marriage;
The sons of Edward sleep in Abraham's bosom,
And Anne my wife hath bid the world good night.
Now, for I know the Bretagne Richmond aims
At young Elizabeth, my brother's daughter,
And, by that knot, looks proudly on the crown,
To her go I, a jolly thriving wooer.

Enter Catesby.

Cate. My lord,
K. Rich. Good news or bad, that thou com'st in
So hastily? Cate. Bad news, my lord: Morton is fled to Rich-
And Buckingham, back'd with the hardyWelshmen,
In the field, and still his power increaseth.
K. Rich. Ely with Richmond troubles me more
Than Buckingham and his rash-levied strength.
Come,—I have learn'd, that fearful commenting
Is leden servitor to dull delay;
Duly readst thou, and sauln-pac'd beggary:
Then fiery expedition be my wing,
Jove's Mercury, and herald for a king!
Go, muster men: My counsel is my shield;
We must be brief, when traitors brave the field. [Exe.

SCENE IV. — The same. · Before the Palace.

Enter Queen Margaret.

Q. Mar. So, now prosperity begins to mellow,
And drop into the rotten month of death.
Here in these confines silly have I lurk'd,
To watch the waring of mine enemies.
A dire induction am I witness to,
And will to France; hoping, the consequence
Will move as bitter, black, and tragical.
Withdraw thee, wretched Margaret! who comes here?

Enter Queen Elizabeth and the Duchess of York.

Q. Eliz. Ah, my poor princes! ah, my tender bassel
My unblown flowers, new-appearing sweets!
If yet your gentle souls fly in the air,
And be not fix'd in doom perpetual,
Hover about me with your airy wings,
And hear your mother's lamentation!
Q. Mar. Hover over her; say, that right for right
Hath dimm'd your infant womb to aged night.

Buch. So many miseries, have craz'd my voice,
That my voice-warden tongue is still and mute,—
Edward Plantagenet, why art thou dead?
Q. Mar. Why, he didst quit Plantagenet;
Edward for Edward pays a dying debt.
Q. Eliz. Wilt thou, O God, fly from such gentle
And throw me in the entral of the wolf? [Ambs. When didst thou sleep, when such a deed was done?
Q. Mar. When holy Harry died, and my sweet son.

Buch. Deal life, blind sight, poor mortal-living

Woe's scene, world's shame, grave's due by life
Brief abstract and record of tedious days, [aufsp'd,
ACT IV.-SCENE IV.

Rest thy unrest on England's lawful earth.

[Sitting down.

Unlawfully made drunk with innocent blood!

Q. Eliz. Ah, that thou would'st as soon afford a

As thou canst yield a melancholy seat;

[grave,

Then would I hide my bones, not rest them here!

Ah, who hath any cause to mourn, but we?

[Sitting down by her.

Q. Mar. If ancient sorrow be most reverent,

Give me the benefit of seniory,

And let my griefs frown on the upper hand.

If sorrow can admit society. [Sitting down with them.

Tell o'er your woes again by viewing mine:—

I had an Edward, till a Richard kill'd him;

I had a husband, till a Richard kill'd him;

Thou hadst an Edward, till a Richard kill'd him;

Thou hadst a Richard, till a Richard kill'd him.

Duch. I had a Richard too, and thou didst kill

I had a Rutland too, thou holp'st to kill him; [him.

Q. Mar. Thou hadst a Clarence too, and Richard.

kill'd him.

From forth the keneel of thy womb hath crept A child, whose death will out the death of all,

That dog, that had his teeth before his eyes,

To worry lambs, and lap their gentle blood,

That foul defacer of God's handy-work;

That excellent grand tyrant of the earth,

That reigns in galled eyes of weeping souls,

Thy womb let loose, to chase us to our graves.—

O them, just, and true disposers of this God,

How do I thank thee, that this carnal cur

Preys on the issue of his mother's body,

And makes her pew-fellow with others' mourn!

Duch. O, Harry's wife, triumph not in my woes;

God witness with me, I have wept for thine.

Q. Mar. Bear with me; I am hungry for revenge,

And now I cloy me with beholding it.

Thy Edward he is dead, that kill'd my Edward;

Thy other Edward dead, to quit my Edward;

Young York he is but boot, because they match

not the high perfection of my loss.

Thy Clarence he is dead, that fudd'd my Edward;

And the beholders of this tragic play,

The adulteress Hastings, Rivers, Vaughan, Grey,

Untimely smother'd in their dusky graves,

Richard yet lives, hell's black intelligence;

Only reserv'd their factor, to buy souls,

And send them thither: But at hand, at hand,

Ensues his piteous and unpitied end:

Earth gapes, hell burns, fiends roar, saints pray,

To have him suddenly convey'd from hence —

Cancel his bond of life, dear God, I pray,

That I may live to say, The dog is dead!

Q. Eliz. O, thou didst prophesy, the time would

That I should wish for thee to help me curse [come,

That bottled spider, that foul bouch-back'd toad.

Q. Mar. I call'd thee then, vain florish of my

I call'd thee then, poor shadow, painted queen;

The presentation of but what I was,

The flattering index of a direful pageant.

One head'd a high, to be hurl'd down below: A mother only mock'd with two fair babies;

A dream of what thou wast; a garish flag,

To be the aim of every dangerous shot;

A sign of dignity, a breath, a bubble;

A queen in jest, only to kill the scene.

Where is thy husband now! where be thy brothers?

Where be thy two sons? wherein dost thou joy?

Who sue's, and kneels, and says—God save the queen?

Where be the bending peas that flatt'rd thee?

Where be the thronging troops that follow'd thee?

Decline all this, and see what now thou art.

For happy wife, a most distressed widow;

For joyfull mother, one that wails the name;

For one being sued to, one that humbly sues;

For queen, a very cuttie crown'd with care;

For one that scornd at me, now scornd of me;

For one being fear'd of all, now fearing one;

For one commanding all, obey'd of none.

Thus hath the course of justice wheel'd about,

And left thee but a very prey to time;

Having no more but thought of what thou wert,

To torture thee the more, being what thou art.

Thou didst usurp my place, And dost thou not

Usurp the just proportion of my sorrow?

Now thy proud neck bears half my burden'd yoke;

From which even here I slip my weary shrouder.

And leave the burden of it all on thee. [change.

Farewell, York's wife,—and queen of sad mis-

These English woes shall make me smile in France.

Q. Eliz. O thou well skill'd in curses, stay a while,

And teach me how to curse mine enemies.

Q. Mar. Forbear to sleep the night, and fast the day;

Compare the state of some with thine own;—

Think that thy babies were fairer than they were,

And he, that slew them, fouler than he is.

Bettering thy loss makes the bad-caster worse;

Revolving this will teach thee how to curse. [thine!

Q. Eliz. My words are dull, O, quicken them with

Q. Mar. Thy woes will make them sharp, and

Q. Mar. Thy woes make them sharp, and Duch. Why should calamity be full of words!

Q. Eliz. Windy attorneys to their client woes,

Aire successors of instate joys,

Poor breathing orators of miseries!

Let them have scope: though what they do impart

Help nothing else, yet do they ease the heart.

Duch. If so, then be not tongue-y'd: go with me,

And in the breath of bitter words let's smoother.

My damned son, that thy two sweet sons smoother'd.

I hear his drum,—be copious in exclains.

Enter King Richard, and his Train, marching.

K. Rich. Who intercepts me in my expedition?

Duch. O, she, that might have intercepted thee,

By strangling thee in her accursed womb,

From all the slaughters, wretch, that thou hast done.

Q. Eliz. Hid'st thou that forehead with a golden crown,

Where should be branded, if that right were right,

The slaughter of the prince that ow'd that crown,

And the dire death of my poor sons, and brothers?

Tell me, thou villain-slave, where are my children?

Duch. Thou toad, thou toad, where is thy brother

And little Ned Plantagenet, his son?

Q. Eliz. Where is that gentle Rivers, Vaughan, Grey?

Duch. Where is kind Hastings?

K. Rich. He flourish, trumpet's — strike alarms,

Let not the heavens bear these tell-tale women

Rail on the Lord's announced: Strike, I say,—

[Flourish. Alarm's.

Either be patient, and entertain me fair,

Or with the clamorous report of war

Thou wilt draw my exclamations.

Duch. Art thou my son?

K. Rich. Ay; I thank God, my father, and yourself.

Duch. Then patiently hear my impatience.

K. Rich. Madam, I have a touch of your condition,

That cannot brook the accent of reproov.

Duch. O, let me speak.

K. Rich. Do, then; but I'll not hear.

Duch. I will be mild and gentle in my words.
K. Rich. And brief, good mother, for I am haste.

Duchess. Art thou so haste? I have stand for thee,

God knows, in torment and in agony.

K. Rich. And came I not at last to comfort you?

Duchess. No, by the holy rood, thou knewst it well.

Then canst thou on earth to make the earth my bell.

A precious burden was the birth to me.

Tetchy and wayward was thy infancy.

Thy school-days frightful, desperate, wild and furious;

Thy prime of manhood: daring, bold, and venturesome.

Thy are confound'd, proud, subtle, sly, and bloody.

More mild, but; yet more harmful, kind in war.

What comfortable hour canst thou name,

That ever grace'd me in thy company?

A. Rich. Faith, none, but Humphrey Hour; that call'd your grace.

To breakfast o'er, nor of my company,

If I be so gracious in your sight.

Let me march on, and not offend you, madam —

Strike up the drum.

Duch. I prithee, hear me speak.

Duch. Hear me a word.

For farewell shall never speak to thee again.

Duch. Either then will die, by God's just ordinance.

Even from this way: thou turn a conspirer;

Or I with grief and extreme age shall perish,

And never look upon thy face again.

Therefore, base with thee my most heavy curse;

Which, in the day of battle, live thee more.

That with the complete armour that thou wear'st:

My prayers on the adverse party's sight:

And there the little souls of Edward's children

Whisper the spirits of thine enemies,

And promise them success and victory.

Bloody than art, bloody will be thy end:

Sparest thyself, and death thy death attend.

Q. Eliz. Though more cause, yet much less sinister to curse.

Abides in me; I say amen to her.

[Going]

A. Rich. Say, madam. I must speak a word with you.

Q. Eliz. Have I no more sons of the royal blood;

For thee to murder: for my daughter, Richard.

They shall be praying none, weeping queens;

And therefore level not to lift their lives.

K. Rich. You have a daughter call'd —

Elizabeth, Virtuous and fair, royal and gracious.

Q. Eliz. And must she die for this? O, let her live,

And I'll corrupt her manners, stain her beauty;

Stander myself, as false to Edward's bed:

Throw over her the veil of infamy.

So she may live unscar'd of bleeding slaughter,

I will confess she was not Edward's daughter.

K. Rich. Wrought not her birth, she is of royal blood.

Q. Eliz. To save her life, I'll say — she is not so.

K. Rich. Her life is safest only in her birth.

Q. Eliz. And only in that safely used her brothers.

K. Rich. Lo, or their births good stars were opposite.

Q. Eliz. No, my lord, their lives had trends contrary,

K. Rich. All unavowed is the doom of destiny.

Q. Eliz. True, when avowed grace makes destiny:

My babes were deserv'd to a fairy death;

If grace had bless'd thee with a fairer life.

[Sunset]

Q. Eliz. You speak, as if that I had slain my constant.

Q. Eliz. Consists, indeed, and by their unseen'd

Of comfort, king's beloved, fond men's life,

Whose his own sheower had't the tender:beats,

Thy hand, all indirectly, gave direction:

No doubt the understand'd kind was dull and blunt,

Till it was wrenched on thy stone-hard heart.

To revel in the entwines of my limbs.

But that still use of grief makes wish of fame,

My tongue should to the ears not cause my boys,

Tell that my nails were ache'd against my eyes,

And I, in such a desperate day of death,

Like a poor bark, off sails and tackling reft,

Rush all to pieces on thy rocky bosom.

And dangerous success of bloody wars.

As I intend more good to you and yours,

Than ever you or yours by me were d'Held.

Q. Eliz. What grief is covered with the face of ton?

To discover, that can do me good! —

[Yes]

A. Rich. The advancement of your children, gentle lady.

Q. Eliz. Up to some scaffold, there to lose their

K. Rich. No, to the dignity and height of fortune.

The high unpartial type of this earth's glory.

Q. Eliz. Flatter my sorrows with report of it;

Tell me, what fate, what dignity, what honour,

Canst thou deserve to any child of mine?

K. Rich. Even all I have: ay, and myself and all

Will I withdraw a child of thine;

So in the Lothe of thy angry soul

Thou drowns the sad remembrance of these wrongs.

Which, thou supposeth, I have done to thee.

Q. Eliz. Be brief, lest that thou may'st in the kind

Lay to the ears of thy kindness date.

[Yes]

Q. Eliz. Then know, that, from my soul, I love thy daughter.

Q. Eliz. My daughter's mother thinks it with her

K. Rich. What do you think?

Q. Eliz. That thou dost love my daughter, from thy soul

So, from thy soul's love, did'st thou love her brothers;

And from thy heart's love, do I thank thee for it.

K. Rich. Be not so hasty to confound my meaning;

That I could learn of you,

As one being acquainted with her humour.

Q. Eliz. And wilt thou learn of me!

K. Rich. Madam, do I love all my heart.

Q. Eliz. Send to her, by the man that drew her breach;

A pair of bleeding hearts: thereon engrave, "John, Edward, and York: then, haply, will she weep;

Therefore present to her, — as sometime Margaret

Did to thy father, steep'd in Rutland's blood: —

A handkerchief; which, say to her, did drain

The purple sap from her sweet brother's body,

And bid her wipe her weeping eyes with ald.

If thou dissemblance move her not to love,

Send her a letter of thy noble deeds:

Tell her, thou mad'st away her uncle Clarence.

Her uncle Rivers: ay, and for her sake.

Mad'st quick conveyance with her good aunt Anne.

K. Rich. You mock me, madam: this is not the way

To win your daughter.

There is no other way:

Yet shall I do some couldst put on other shape;

And not be Richard that hast done all this.

K. Rich. Say, that I did all this for love of her?

Q. Eliz. Nay, then indeed, she cannot choose but have thee.

Having bought love with such a bloody spell.

K. Rich. Look, what does done cannot be now amended;
ACT IV.—SCENE IV.—

Men shall deal unadvisedly sometimes, Which after-hours give leisure to repent. If I did take the kingdom from your sons, To make amends, I'll give it to your daughter. If I have kill'd the issue of your womb, To quicken your increase, I will beget Mine issue of your blood upon your daughter. A grandam's name is little less in love. Than is the doating title of a mother; They are as children, but one step below, Even of your mettle, of your very blood; Of all one pain,—save for a night of groans End'd of her, for whom you bid like sorrow. Your children were vexation to your youth, But mine shall be a comfort to your age. The loss, you have, is but—a son being king. And, by that loss, your daughter is made queen. I cannot make you what amends I would, Therefore accept such kindness as I can. Dorset, your son, that with a fearful soul, Leads discontented steps in foreign soil, This fair alliance quickly shall call home To high promotions and great dignity: The king, that calls your beauteous daughter,—wife, Familiarly shall call thy Dorset,—brother; Again shall you be mother to a king, And all the ruins of distressful times Repair'd with double riches of content. What! we have many goodly days to see: The liquid drops of tears that you have shed, Shall come again, transform'd to orient pearl; Advantaging their loan, with interest Of ten-times double gain of happiness. Go, then, my mother, to thy daughter go, Make her life of her fruitful years with your experience; Prepare her ears to hear her lover's tale; Put in her tender heart the aspiring flame Of golden sw'eigniety; acquaint the princess With the sweet silent hours of marriage joys: And when this arm of mine hath chastis'd The petty rebel, dull-brain'd Buckingham, Bound with triumphant garniards will I come, And lead thy days to contented bed; To whom I will retail my conquest won; And she shall be sole victress, Caesar's Caesar. Q. Eliz. What were I best to say? her father's bro— Would be her lord! or shall I say, her uncle? [ther Or, be he slew her brothers, and her uncles! Under whose title shall I woo for thee, That God, thelaw, my own interest, and her love, Can make seem pleasing to her tender years? K. Rich. Inter fair England's peace by this alliance. Q. Eliz. Which she shall purchase with still last ing war. [treats. K. Rich. Tell her, the king, that may command, Q. Eliz. That at her hands, which the king's King Korin. 1st Treat. K. Rich. Say, she shall be a high and mighty queen. Q. Eliz. To wail the title, as her mother doth. K. Rich. Say, I will love her everlastingly. Q. Eliz. But how long shall that title, ever, last? K. Rich. Sweetly in force unto her fair life's end. Q. Eliz. But how long fairly shall her sweet life last? K. Rich. As long as heaven, and nature lengthens Q. Eliz. As long as hell, and Richard, likes of it. K. Rich. Say, I, her sovereign, am her subject low. Q. Eliz. But she, your subject, loaths such sove reigny. K. Rich. Be eloquent in my behalf to her. Q. Eliz. An honest tale speeds best, being plainly told. K. Rich. Then, in plain terms tell her my loving Q. Eliz. Plain, and not honest, is too harsh a style. K. Rich. Your reasons are too shallow and too quick. Q. Eliz. O, no, my reasons are too deep and dead;— Too deep and dead, poor infants, in their graves. K. Rich. Harp notion that string, madam; that is past. Q. Eliz. Harp on it still shall I, till heart-string's by. [treats. K. Rich. Now, by my George, my garter, and my Q. Eliz. Profan'd, dishonour'd, and the third usurp'd. K. Rich. I swear. Q. Eliz. By nothing: for this is no oath. Thy George, profan'd, hath lost his holy honour; Thy garter, blenndi'd, pawn'd thy knightly virtue; Thy crown, usurp'd, disgrac'd thy kingly glory; If something thou wouldst swear to be believ'd, Swear then by something that thou hast not wrong'd. K. Rich. Now by the world,— Q. Eliz. 'Tis full of thy foul wrongs. K. Rich. My father's death,— Q. Eliz. Thy life hath that dishonour'd. K. Rich. Then, by myself. Q. Eliz. Thyself is self-misus'd. K. Rich. Why then, by God. Q. Eliz. God's wrong is most of all. If thou hadst fear'd to break an oath by him, The unity, the king thy brother made, Had not been broken, nor my brother slain. If thou hadst fear'd to break an oath by him, The imperial metal, circling now thy head, Had grac'd the tender temples of my child: And both the princes had been breathing here, Which now, two tender bed-fellows for dust, Thy broken faith hath made a prey for worms. What canst thou swear by now! K. Rich. By the time to come. Q. Eliz. Thst thou hast wronged in the time o'er For I myself have many tears to wash Myself, for time past, wrong'd by thee. The children live, whose parents thou hast slaughter'd. Ungovern'd youth, to wail it in their age: The parents live, whose children thou hast butcher'd, Old barren plants, to wail it with their age. Swear now the time to come thou hast Mis-us'd ere used, by times ill-us'd o'er past. K. Rich. As I intend to prosper, and repent! So thrive I in my dangerous attempt Of hostile arms! myself myself confound! Heaven, and fortune, bar me happy hours! Day, yield me not thy light; nor, night thy rest! Under many titles of sons, I have loved, To my proceeding, if, with pure heart's love, Immortal dedication, holy thoughts, I tender not thy beauteous princely daughter! In her consists my happiness, and thine; Without her, follows to myself, and thee, Herself, the land, and many a christian soul, Death, the desolation, ruin, and decay; It cannot be avoided, but by this: It will not be avoided, but by this. Therefore, dear mother, (I must call you so,) Be the attorney of my love to her. Plead what I will be, not what I have been; Not my deserts, but what I will deserve: Urge the necessity, and State of times, And be not peevish found in great designs. Q. Eliz. Shall I be tempted of the devil thus? K. Rich. Ay, if the devil tempt thee to do good. Q. Eliz. Shall I forget myself, to be myself? K. Rich. Ay, if yourself's remembrance wrong your— Q. Eliz. But thou didst kill my children. [self. K. Rich. But in your daughter's womb I bury them: Where, in that nest of spicery, they shall breed
KING RICHARD III.

Salves of themselves to your recomfort.

Q. Eliz. Shall I go win my daughter to thy will? K. Rich. And be a happy mother by the deed.

Q. Eliz. I go.—Write to me very shortly, and you shall understand from me her mind. K. Rich. Bear her my true love's kiss, and so fare well. [Kissing her. Exit Q. ELIZABETH.]

Relenting fool, and shallow, changing—woman! How now? what news?

Enter RATCLIFF; CATESBY following.

Rat. Most mighty sovereign, on the western coast Rides a puissant navy; to the shore Throng many doubtful hollow-hearted friends, Unarm'd, and unsuccess'd to beat them back: 'Tis thought, that Richmond is their admiral; And there they hull, expecting but the aid Of Buckingham to welcome them inshore. [Norfolk:] K. Rich. Some light-foot friend post to the duke of Ratcliff, thyself,—or Catesby; where is he? Cate. Here, my good lord. K. Rich. Catesby, fly to the duke. Cate. I will, my lord, with all convenient haste. K. Rich. Ratcliff, come hither: Post to Salisbury; When thou com'st thither,—Dull, unmindful villain, [To CATESBY.] Why stay'st thou here, and go'st not to the duke? Cate. First, mighty liege, tell me your highness' pleasure What from your grace I shall deliver to him. [Sure, K. Rich.] K. Rich. Why, what would'st thou do there, before I go? Rat. Your highness told me, I should post before.

Enter STANLEY.

K. Rich. My mind is chang'd.—Stanley, what news with you? [Hearing; Stan. None good, my liege, to please you with the Nor none so bad, but well may be reported. K. Rich. Heyday, a riddle! neither good nor bad! What needst thou ramble so many miles about, When thou may'st tell thy tale the nearest way? Once more, what news? Stan. Richmond is on the seas. K. Rich. There let him sink, and be the season him! White-liver'd runagate, what doth he there! Stan. I know not, mighty sovereign, but by guess. K. Rich. Well, as you guess! [To, Stan. Stir'd up by Dorset, Buckingham, and More; He makes for England, here to claim the crown. K. Rich. Is the chair empty? Is the sword unsaw'd? Is the king dead? the empire unpossess'd? What heir of York is there alive, but we? And who is England's king, but great York's heir? Then, tell me, what makes he upon the seas? Stan. Unless for that, my liege, I cannot guess. K. Rich. Unless for that he comes to be your liege, You cannot guess wherefore the Welshman comes. Thou wilt revolt, and fly to him, I fear. Stan. No, mighty liege, therefore mistrust me not. K. Rich. Where is thy power then, to beat him back? Where be thy tenants, and thy followers? Are they not now upon the western shore, Safe-conducting the rebels from their ships? Stan. No, my good lord, my friends are in the north. K. Rich. Cold friends to me: What do they in the north, When they should serve their sovereign in the west? Stan. They have not been commanded, mighty king: Pleadeth your majesty to give me leave, I'll muster up my friends; and meet your grace, Where, and what time, your majesty shall please. K. Rich. Ay, ay, thou wouldst be gone to join with Wilt thou not trust, you, sir. [Richmond; Stan. Most mighty sovereign, You have no cause to hold my friendship doubtful; I never was, nor never will be false. [Behind K. Rich. Well, go, musten men. But, hear you, leave Your son, George Stanley; look your heart be firm, Or else his head's assurance is but frail. Stan. So deal with him, as I prove true to you.

Enter a Messenger.

Mess. My gracious sovereign, now in Devonshire, As I by friends am well-advertised, Sir Edward Courtney, and the naughty prelate, Bishop of Exeter, his elder brother, With many more confederates, are in arms.

Enter another Messenger.

2 Mess. Is Knoct, my liege, the Guilford are in arms; And every hour more competitors. Flock to the rebels, and their power grows strong.

Enter another Messenger.

3 Mess. My lord, the army of great Buckingham— K. Rich. Out on ye, owls! nothing but songs of death! There, take thou that, till thou bring better news. 3 Mess. The news I have to tell your majesty, Is,—that, by sudden floods and fall of waters, Buckingham's army is dispers'd and scatter'd; And he himself wander'd away alone, No man knows whither. K. Rich. O, I cry you mercy: There is my purse, to cure that blow of thine. Uncle any well-advised friend proclaim'd Reward to him that brings the traitor in? 3 Mess. Such proclamation hath been made, my liege.

Enter another Messenger.

4 Mess. Sir Thomas Lovel, and lord marquis Dorset, 'Tis said, my liege, in Yorkshire, are in arms. But this good comfort bring I to your highness,— The Breugge navy is dispers'd by tempest; Richmond, in Dorsetshire, sent out a boat Unto the shore, to ask those on the banks, If they were his assistants, yea, or no; Who answer'd him, they came from Buckingham Upon his party: he, mistrusting them, Hails'd said, and made his course again for Breugge. K. Rich. March on, march on, since we are up in If not to fight with foreign enemies, [Arms; Yet to beat down these rebels here at home.

Enter CATESBY.

Cate. My liege, the duke of Buckingham is taken, That is the best news; That the earl of Richmond is with a mighty power landed at Milford, Is colder news, but yet they must be told: K. Rich. Away towards Salisbury; while we reason A royal battle might be won and lost.— [Here, Some one take order, Buckingham be brought To Salisbury;—the rest march on with me. [Exeunt SCENE V.—A Room in Lord Stanley's House.

Enter STANLEY and Sir CHRISTOPHER UNSWICK.

Stan. Sir Christopher, tell Richmond this from me; That, in the sty of this most bloody boar,
ACT V.—SCENE III.

My son George Stanley is frank'd up in hold;
If I revolt, off goes young George's head;
The fear of that withholds my present aid.
But what name, or where is rich Richmond now?

Chris. At Pembroke, or at Haford-west, in Wales.
Stan. What men of name resort to him?

Chris. Sir Walter Herbert, a renowned soldier;
Sir Gilbert Talbot, sir William Stanley;
Oxford, redoubted Pembroke, sir James Blunt,
And Rice-ap-Thomas, with a valiant crew;
And many other of great fame and worth;
And towards London do they bend their course,
If by the way they be not fought withal.

Stan. Well, he the to thy lord; commend me to him.
Tell him the queen hath heartily consented
He shall espouse Elizabeth her daughter.
These letters will resolve him of my mind.
Farewell. [Gives papers to Sir Christopher. Exeunt.]

ACT V.

SCENE I.—Salisbury. An open Place.
Enter the Sheriff and Guard, with Buckingham, led to execution.
Buck. Will not king Richard let me speak with him?
Sher. No, my good lord: therefore be patient.
Buck. Hastings and Edward's children, Rivers, Grey, Holy king Henry, and thy fair son Edward,
Vaughan, and all that have miscarried
By underhand corrupted foul injustice:
If that thy worldly discontented souls
Do through the clouds behold this present hour,
Even for revenge mock my destruction!—
This is All Souls' day, fellows, is it not?
Sher. It is, my lord.

Buck. Why, then All-Souls' day is my body's dooms—
This is the day, which, in king Edward's time, [day,
I wish'd might fall on me, when I was found
False to his children, or his wife's allies:
This is the day, wherein I wish'd to fall
By the false faith of him whom most I trusted:—
This, this All Souls' day to my fearful soul,
Is the determin'd respite of my wrongs.
That high All-souer which I shall describ,
Hath turn'd my feigned prayer on my head,
And given in earnest what I begg'd in jest.
Thus doth he force the swords of wicked men
To turn their own points on their masters' bosoms:—
Thus Margaret was a prophetess.—
Remember Margaret was a prophetess.—
Come, sirs, convey me to the block of shame;
Wrong hath but wrong, and blame the due of blame.
[Exeunt Buckingham, &c.

SCENE II.—Plain near Tamworth.
Enter, with drum and colours, Richmond, Oxford, Sir James Blunt, Sir Walter Herbert, and others, with Forces, marching.
Rich. Fellows in arms, and my most loving friends,
Brats'd underneath the yoke of tyranny,
Thus far into the bowels of the land
Have we march'd without impediment;
And here receive we from our father Stanley
Lines of fair comfort and encouragement.
The wretched, bloody, and usurping boar,
That spoil'd your summer fields, and fruitful vines,
Swills your warm blood like wine, and makes his tough
In your embowell'd bosoms, this foul swine
Lies now even in the center of this isle,
Near to the town of Leicester, as we hear:
From Tamworth thither is but one day's march.
In God's name, cheerly on, courageous friends,
To reap the harvest of perpetual peace
By this one bloody trial of sharp war.

Of. Every man's conscience is a thousand swords,
To fight against that bloody homicide.
Herb. I doubt not, but his friends will turn to us.
Blunt. He hath no friends, but who are friends for Which, in his dearest need, will fly from him. [fear.
Rich. All for our vantage.
Then, in God's name, march;
True hope is swift, and flies with swallow's wings.
Kings it makes gods, and meaner creatures kings.
[Exeunt.

SCENE III.—Bosworth Field.
Enter King Richard, and Forces: the Duke of Norfolk, Earl of Surrey, and others.
K. Rich. Here pitch our tents, even here in Bosworth
My lord of Surrey, why look you so sad? [field.

Sur. My heart is ten times lighter than my looks.
K. Rich. My lord of Norfolk,—

Nor. Here, most gracious liege,
K. Rich. Norfolk, we must have knockes; Hal must we not?
Nor. We must both give and take, my loving lord.
K. Rich. Up with my tent: Here will I lie to-night,
[Soldiers begin to set up the King's tent.
But where, to-morrow?—Well, all's one for that—
Who hath descried the number of the traitors?
Nor. Sir, or no, two thousand is their utmost power.
K. Rich. Why, our battalia trebles that account;
Besides, the king's name is a tower of strength,
Which they upon the adverse faction want.

Up with the tent.—Come, noble gentlemen,
Let us survey the vantage of the ground;—
Call for some men of sound direction:—
Let's want no discipline, make no delay;
For, lords, to-morrow is a busy day.
[Exeunt.
Enter, on the other side of the field, Richmond, Sir William Brandon, Oxford, and other Lords.
Some of the Soldiers pitch Richmond's tent.
Richm. The weary sun hath made a golden set
And, by the bright track of his fiery car,
Gives token of a goodly day to-morrow.
Sir William Brandon, you shall bear my standard.
Give me some ink and paper in my tent;—
I'll draw the form and model of our battle,
Limit each leader to his several charge,
And part in just proportion our small power.
My lord of Oxford,—you, sir William Brandon,—
And you, sir Walter Herbert, stay with me:
The earl of Pembroke keeps his regiment;—
Good captain Blunt, bear my good night to him,
And by the second hour in the morning
Desire the earl to see me in my tent:—
Yet one thing more, good captain, do for me:
Where is lord Stanley quarter'd, do you know?
Blunt. Unless I have mista'en his colours much,
(Which, well I am assured, I have not done.)
His regiment lies half a mile at least
South from the mighty power of the king.
Richm. If without peril it be possible,
[him.
Sweet Blunt, make some good speed to speak with
And give him from me this most needful note.
Blunt. Upon my life, my lord, I'll undertake it;
And so, God give you quiet rest to-night!
Richm. Good night, good captain Blunt. Come, gentlemen,
Let us consult upon to-morrow's business;
In to my tent, the air is raw and cold.

[They withdraw into the tent.]

Enter, to his tent, King Richard, Norfolk,
Ratcliff, and Catesby.

K. Rich. What is it o'clock?
Cate. It's supper time, my lord;
It's nine o'clock.
K. Rich. I will not sup to-night.—

Give me some ink and paper.—
What, is my beaver easier than it was?—
And all my armour laid into my tent?
Cate. It is, my liege; and all things are in readiness.
K. Rich. Good Norfolk, bide thee to thy charge;
Use careful watch, choose trusty sentinels.
Nor. I go, my lord.
K. Rich. Stir with the dark to-morrow, gentle Norfolk.
Nor. I warrant you, my lord.

[Exit.]

K. Rich. Ratcliff,—

Send out a pursuivant at arms
To Stanley's regiment: bid him bring his power
Before sun-rising, lest his son George fall
Into the blind cave of eternal night.—
Fill me a bowl of wine.—Give me a watch:—

[Saddle white Surrey for the field to-morrow.—
Look that my staves be sound, and not too heavy.
Ratcliff.—But my lord?]
K. Rich. Saw'st thou the melancholy lord Northumberland?
Ratcliff. Thomas the earl of Surrey, and himself,
Much about cock shuts time, from troop to troop,
Went through the army cheering up the soldiers.
K. Rich. I am satisfied. Give me a bowl of wine:
I have not that alacrity of spirit,
Nor cheer of mind that I was wont to have.—
So, set it down.—Is ink and paper ready?
Rat. It is, my lord.
K. Rich. Bid my guard watch; leave me.
About the mid of night, come to my tent,
And help to arm me.—Leave me, I say.

[King Richard retires into his tent. Enter Ratcliff and Catesby.]

RICHMOND's tent opens, & discovers him & his Officers, &c.
Enter STANLEY.

Stan. Fortune and victory sit on thy helm!
Richm. Good lords, conduct him to his regiment:
I'll strive, with troubled thoughts, to take a nap;
Lest leader shudder passe me down to-morrow,
When I should mount with wings of victory:
Once more, good night, kind lords and gentlemen.

[Exit Lords, &c. with STANLEY.]

O Thou! whose captain I account myself,
Look on my forces with a gracious eye,
Put in their hands thy bruisning troves of wrath,
That they may crush down with a heavy fall
The usurping helmets of our adversaries!
Make us thy ministers of chastisement,
That we may praise thee in thy victory!
To thee I commend my watchful soul,
Ere I let fall the windows of mine eyes;
Sleeping, and waking, O. defend me still! [Sleeps.]

The Ghost of Prince Edward, son to Henry the Sixth,
Rises between the two tents.

Ghost. Let me sit heavy on thy soul to-morrow!

[To King Richard.]

Think, how thou stabdist me in my prime of youth
At Tewkesbury; Despair therefore, and die!—

Be cheerful, Richmond; for the wronged souls
Of butcher'd princes fight in thy behalf:
King Henry's issue, Richmond, comfort thee.

The Ghost of King Hen'ry the Sixth rises.

Ghost. When I was mortal, my anointed body

[To King Richard.]

By thee was punched full of deadly holes:
Think on the Tower: and me; Despair, and die;
Harry the Sixth bids thee despair, and die,—

Virtuous and holy, he thou conqueror!

[To Richmond.]

Harry, that prophesy'd thou should'st be king,
Dost comfort thee in thy sleep; Live, and flourish!

The Ghost of Clarence rises.

Ghost. Let me sit heavy on thy soul to-morrow!

[To King Richard.]

I, that was wak'd to death with fulsome wine,
Poor Clarence, by thy guiltie betray'd to death!
To-morrow in the battle think on me,
And fall thy edgeless sword; Despair, and die!—
Thou offspring of the house of Lancaster,

[To Richmond.]

The wronged heirs of York do pray for thee;
Good angels guard thy battle! Live, and flourish!

The Ghosts of Rivers, Grey, and Vaughan rise.

Riv. Let me sit heavy on thy soul to-morrow.

[To King Richard.]

That died at Pomfret! Despair, and die!
Grey. Think upon Grey, and let thy soul despair!

[To King Richard.]

Vough. Think upon Vaughan; and, with guilty fear,
Let fall thy lance! Despair, and die!—

[To King Richard.]

All. Awake! and think, our wrongs in Richard's bosom
Will conquer him; awake, and win the day!

The Ghost of Hastings rises.

Ghost. Bloody and guilty, guilty awake,

[To King Richard.]

And in a bloody battle end thy days!
Think on lord Hastings; and despair, and die!—

Quiet untroubled soul, awake, awake!

[To Richmond.]

Arm, fight, and conquer, for fair England's sake!
The Ghosts of the two young Princes rise.

Ghosts. Dream on thy consorts smother'd in the Let us be lead within thy bosom, Richard, [Tower, And weep thee down to ruin, shame, and death! Thy nephews' souls bid thee despair, and die.— Sleep, Richmond, sleep in peace, and wake in joy; Good angels guard thee from the bear's annoy! Live, and begot a happy race of kings! Edward's unhappy soul do bid thee flourish.

The Ghost of Queen Anne rises.

Ghost. Richard, thy wife, that wretched Anne thy That never slept a quiet hour with thee, [wife, Now fills thy sleep with perturbations; To-morrow in the battle think on me, I and fall thy edgeless sword; Despair, and die!— Thou, quiet soul, sleep thou a quiet sleep; [To Richmond. Dream of success and happy victory; Thy adversary's wife doth pray for thee.

The Ghost of Buckingham rises.

Ghost. The first was I, that help'd thee to the crown; [To King Richard, The last was I, that felt the tyranny: O, in the battle think on Buckingham, And die in terror of thy guiltiness! Dream on, dream on, of bloody deeds and death; Fainting, despair; despairing, yield thy breath!— I died for hope, etc I could lend thee aid.

[To Richmond. But cheer thy heart, and be thou not dismay'd: God, and good angels, fight on Richmond's side; And Richard falls in height of all his pride.

K. Rich. Give me another horse,—bind up my wounds,— Have mercy, Jesu!—Soft; I did but dream.— O coward conscience, how dost thou afflict me! The lights burn blue.—It is now dead midnight. Cold fearful drops stand on my trembling flesh. What do I fear! myself! there's none else by: Richard loves Richard; that is, I am 1. Is there a murderer here? No;—Yes; I am: Then fly,—What, from myself! Great reason! Why? Least I should lose myself. What! Myself on myself! I love myself. Wherefore? for I do good, That I myself have done unto myself! O, no: alas, I rather hate myself. For hateful deeds committed by myself. I am a villain: Yet I lie, I am not. Fool, of myself speak well!—Fool, do not flatter. My conscience hath a thousand several tongues, And every tongue brings in a several tale. And every tale condemns me for a villain. Perjury, perjury, in the high'st degree; Murder, stern murder, in the dir'st degree; All several sins, all us'd in each degree, Throng to the bar, crying all,—Guilty! guilty! I shall despair.—There is no creature loves me; And, if I die, no soul will pity me.— Nay, wherefore should they? since that I myself Find in myself no pity to myself. Methought, the souls of all that I had murder'd Came to my tent: and every one did threat To-morrow's vengeance on the head of Richard.

Enter Ratcliff.

Rat. My lord,— K. Rich. Who's there?— Ratcliff, my lord; 'tis I. The early village cock I hath twice done salutation to the morn; Your friends are up, and buckle on their armour. K. Rich. O, Ratcliff, I have dream'd a fearful dream!— What thinkesi thou, will our friends prove all true? Rat. No doubt, my lord. K. Rich. Ratcliff, I fear. I fear,— Rat. Nay, good my lord, he be not afraid of shadows. K. Rich. By the apostle Paul, shadows to-night Have struck more terror to the soul of Richard. Than can the substance of ten thousand soldiers, Armed in proof, and led by shallow Richmond. It is not yet near day. Come, go with me; Under our tents I'll play the cazes dropper, To hear if any mean to shrink from me. [Exit King Richard and Ratcliff. Richmond waketh. Enter Oxford and others. Lords. Good morrow, Richmond. Richmond. Crymercy, lords, and watchful gentlemen, That you have ta'en a tardy sluggard here. Lords. How have you slept, my lord? Richmond. The sweetest sleep, and fairest-boding That ever eater'd in a drowsy head, [dreams, Have I been. I have the very image of my lord, Methought, their souls, whose bodies Richard mur- Came to my tent, and cried—On! victory! [der'd, I promise you, my heart is very jocund In the remembrance of so fair a dream. How far into the morning is it, lords? Lords. Upon the stroke of four. Richmond. Why, then 'tis time to arm, and give direction.— [He advances to the troops. More than I have said, loving countrymen, The leisure and enforcement of the time Forbids to dwell on: Yet remember this,— God, and our good cause, fight upon our side; The prayers of holy saints, and wronged souls, Like high-road'd bulwarks, stand before our faces: Richard except, those, whom we fight against, Had rather have we win, than him they follow. For what is he they follow? truly, gentlemen, A bloody tyrant, and a homicide; One rais'd in blood, and one in blood establish'd; One that made means to come by what he hath, And slanders on those that go the means to help A base foul stone, made precious by the fall, [him, Of England's chair, where he is falsely set; One that hath ever been God's enemy: Then if you fight against God's enemy, God will, in justice, ward you as his soldians; If you do sweat to put a tyrant down, You sleep in peace, the tyrant being slain; If you do fight against your country's foes, Your country's fat shall pay your pains the hire, If you do fight in safeguard of your wives, Your wives shall welcome home the conquerors; If you do free your children from the sword, Your children's children quit it in your age. Then, in the name of God, and all the rights, Advance your standards, draw your willing swords: For me, the rason of my bold attempt Shall be this cold corpse upon the earth's cold face; But if I thrive, the gain of my attempt The least of you shall share his part thereof. Sound, drums and trumpets, boldly and cheerfully, God, and Saint George! Richmond and victory! [Exit. Re-enter King Richard, Ratcliff, Attendants, and Forces. K. Rich. What said Northumberland, as touching Richmond?
KING RICHARD III.

K. Rich. He said the truth: And what said Surrey then?

K. Rich. He said 'tis the right; and so, indeed, it is.

[Clock strikes.]

Tell the clock there.—Give me a calendar.—

Who saw the sun to-day?

K. Rich. Then he discains to shine; for, by the book, he should have brav'd the east an hour ago:
A black day will it be to somebody.—

Rateiff.

K. Rich. My lord?

The sun will not be seen to-day;
The sky doth frown and pour upon our army,
I would, these dewy tears were from the ground.
Not shine to-day! Why, what is that to me,
More than to Richmond? for the self-same heaven,
That frowns on me, looks sadly upon him.

Enter Norfolk.

Nor. Arm, arm, my lord; the foe vaunts in the field.

[horse;]

K. Rich. Come, bustle, bustle;—Caparison my Call up lord Stanley, bid him bring his power:
I will lead forth my soldiers to the plain,
And in the battle shall be ordered.

My forward shall be drawn out all in length,
Consisting equally of horse and foot;
Our archers shall be placed in the midst:
John duke of Norfolk, Thomas earl of Surrey,
Shall have the leading of this foot and horse.

They thus directed, we ourselves will follow
In the main battle; whose puissance on either side
Shall be well winged with our chiefest horse.

This, and Saint George to boot!—What think'st thou, Norfolk?

Nor. A good direction, warlike sovereign.
This found I on my tent this morning.

[Giving a scroll.]

K. Rich. [Reads.] Jockey of Norfolk, be not too bold,
For Dighton thy master is bought and sold.
A thing devised by the enemy.—

Go, gentlemen, every man unto his charge:
Let not our babbling dreams affright our souls;
Conscience is but a word that cowards use,
Devil'd at first to keep the strong in awe;
Our strong arms be our conscience, swords our law.
March on, join bravely, let us tell-mell;
If not to heaven, then hand in hand to hell.—

What shall I say more than I have inferr'd?
Remember whom you are to cope withal;—

A sort of vagabonds, rascals, and run-aways,
A scum of Bretagnes, and base lecky peasants,
Whom their o'er-cloy'd country vomits forth
To desperate ventures and sour'd destruction.

You sleeping safe, they bring you to unrest;
You having lands, and bless'd with beautious wives,
They would restrain the one, distain the other.
And who doth lead them, but a paltry fellow,
Long kept in Bretagne at our mother's cost?
A milk-sop, one that never in his life
Felt so much cold as over shoes to grow?—

Let's whip these strangers o'er the seas again;
Lash hence these ever-weeping rags of France,
These famish'd beggars, weary of their lives;
Who, but for dreaming on this fond exploit,
For want of means, poor rabs, had hang'd themselves.
If we be conquer'd, let men conquer us,
And not these bastard Bretagnes, nor our fathers
Have in their own land beaten, bob'd, and trump'd,

And, on record, left them the heirs of shame.
Shall these enjoy our lands? lie with our wives?
Rashv our daughters?—Hark, I hear their drum.

[Drawn afar off.]

Fight, gentlemen of England! fight, bold yeomen!
Draw, archers, draw your arrows to the head!
Spur your proud horses hard, and ride in blood;
Amaze the welkin with your broken shields!—

Enter a Messenger.

What says lord Stanley? will he bring his power?
Mess. My lord, he doth deny to come.

K. Rich. Off instantly with his son George's head.
Nor. My lord, the enemy is passed the marsh;
After the battle let George Stanley die.

K. Rich. A thousand hearts are great within my bow,
Advance our standards, set upon our foes;—

[sum: Our ancient word of courage, fair Saint George,
Inspire us with the spleen of fiery dragons!]

Upon them! Victory sits on our helms. [Exeunt.]

SCENE IV.—Another Part of the Field.

Alarum: Excursions. Enter Norfolk, and Forces; to him Exeunt.

Cate. Rescue, my lord of Norfolk, rescue, rescue!

The king enacts more wonders than a man,
Dare all opposite as every day:
His horse is slain, and all on foot he fights,
Seeking for Richmond in the threat of death;
Rescue, fair lord, or else the day is lost!

Alarum. Enter King Richard.

K. Rich. A horse! a horse! my kingdom for a horse!

Cate. Withdraw, my lord, I'll help you to a horse.
K. Rich. Slave, I have set my life upon a cast,
And I will stand the hazard of the die:
I think, there be six Richards in the field;
Five have I slain to-day, instead of him:—

A horse! a horse! my kingdom for a horse! [Exeunt.]

Alarum. Enter King Richard and Richmond; and exult, fighting. Retreat, and flourish. Then enter Richmond, Stanley bearing the crown, with dukes and Lawyers, and Forces.

Richm. God, and your arms, be praised, victorious.

The day is ours, the bloody dog is dead;
[friends;]

Sten. Courageous Richmond, well hast thou acquit
Lo, here, this tall unwarped royal page,
(Gliss!)

Fortune hath preserved these temples of this bloody vesture
Have I pluck'd off, to grace thy brows withal;
Wear it, enjoy it, and make much of it.

Richm. Great God of heaven, say, amen, to all!—

But, tell me first, is young George Stanley living?

Sten. He is, my lord, and safe in Leicester town,
Whither, if it please you, we may now withdraw us.

Richm. What men of name are slain on either side?

Sten. John duke of Norfolk, Walter lord Ferrers,
Sir Robert Brakenbury, and sir William Brandon.

Richm. Inter their bodies as becomes their births.
Proclaim a pardon to the soldiers fled,
That in submission will return to us,
And then, as we have taken the sacrament,
We will unite the white rose with the red:—

Smile heaven upon this fair conjunction,
That long hath frown'd upon your enmity!—

What traitor hears me, and says ant,—amen?

England hath long been mad, and scar'd herself;

The brother blindly shed the brother's blood,
The father rashly slaughter'd his own son,

This devil's been butcher'd to the sire;—
All this divided York and Lancaster.

Divided, in their dire division.—
ACT V.—SCENE IV.

O, now let Richmond and Elizabeth,
The true successors of each royal house,
By God's fair ordinance conjoin together!
And let their heirs, (God, if thy will he so,) Enrich the time to come with smooth-face'd peace,
With smiling plenty, and fair prosperous days!
Abate the edge of traitors, gracious Lord,
That would reduce these bloody days again,
And make poor England weep in streams of blood!
Let them not live to taste this land's increase,
That would with treason wound this fair land's peace!
Now civil wounds are stopp'd, peace lives again;
That she may long live here, God say—Amen! [Exeunt.

This is one of the most celebrated of our author's performances; yet I know not whether it has not happened to him as to others, to be praised most, when praise is not most deserved. That this play has scenes noble in themselves, and very well contrived to strike in the exhibition, cannot be denied; but some parts are trivial, others shocking, and some improbable.—Johnson

KING HENRY VIII.

This play was not published till it appeared in the collected edition of our author's works, in the year 1623. It was probably written in 1601 or 1602.

In June, 1601, this play was revived under the name of All the True, at the Globe theatre, when the prologue, which contains several manifest allusions to the new title, the epilogue, and the complimentary lines to King James, by Archbishop Cranmer's prophetic speech, were probably added. This representation was most unfortunate for the theatre; for, in discharging "certain canons at the King's entry to a masque at the Cardinal Wolsey's house," the theatre was set on fire and burnt to the ground.

This historical drama comprises a period of twelve years, commencing in the twelfth year of King Henry's reign, (1512) and ending with the christening of Elizabeth in 1533. Shakespeare has deviated from history in placing the death of Queen Katharine before the birth of Elizabeth, for in fact Katharine did not die till 1536.

PROLOGUE.

I come no more to make you laugh; things now, That bear a weighty and a serious brow,
Sad, high, and working, full of state and woe,
Such noble scenes as draw the eye to flow,
We now present. Those that can pity, here
May, if they think it well, let fall a tear;
The subject will deserve it. Such, as give Their money out of hope they may believe,
May here find truth too. Those, that come to see Only a show or two, and so agree,
The play may pass; if they be still, and willing,
I'll undertake, may see away their shilling
Richly in two short hours. Only they,
That come to hear a merry, bawdy play,
A noise of targets; or to see a fellow
In a long motley coat, guarded with yellow,
Will be decou'd: for, gentle hearers, know,
To rank our chosen truth with such a show
As fool and fight is, beside forfeiting
Our own brains, and the opinion that we brung,
(To make that only true we now intend,) Will leave us never an understanding friend.
Therefore, for goodness' sake, and, as you are known
The first and happiest hearers of the town,
Be sad, as we would make you: Think, ye see
The very persons of our noble story,
As they were living: think, you see them great,
And follow'd with the general throng, and sweat,
Of thousand friends: then, in a moment, see
How soon this mightiness meets misery!
And if you can be merry then, I'll say,
A man may weep upon his wedding day.

ACT I.

Enter the Duke of Norfolk, at one door; at the other, the Duke of Buckingham, and the Lord Abergavenny.

Buck. Good mornow, and well met. How have you Since last we saw in France?

[done,
Nor. I thank your grace:
Heathful; and ever since a fresh admirer
Of what I saw there.

Buck. An untimely age
Stay'd me a prisoner in my chamber, when
Those suns of glory, those two lights of men,
Met in the vale of Arde.

Nor. Twixt Guynes and Arde:
I was then present, saw them salute on horseback;
Beheld them, when they lighted, how they clung
In their embracement, as they grew together;
Which had they, what four thousand'd ones could have weight'd
Such a compounded one?

Buck. All the whole time,
I was my chamber's prisoner.

Nor. Then you lost
The view of earthly glory: Men might say,
Till this time, pomp was single; but now married
To one above itself. Each following day
 Became the next day's master, till the last
Made former wonders it's: To-day, the French,
All clinquant, all in gold, like beathings gods,
Shone down the English; and, to-morrow, they Made Britain, India a every man, that stood,
Shone like a mine. Their dwarfish pages were
As cherubins, all gait: the madams too,
Not used to toil, did almost sweat to bear
The pride upon them, that their very labour
Was to them as a painting: Now this mask
Was cry'd incomparable; and the ensuing night
Made it a fool, and beggar. The two kings,
England and France, were now lost, now worst,
As presence did present them; him in eye
Still him in praise; and, being present both,
'Twas said they saw but one; and no discernor
Durst wag his tongue in eensure. When these suns
(For so they phrase them,) by their heralds challenge'd
The noble spirits to arms, they did perform
Beyond thought's compass: that former fabulous
Being now seen possible enough, got credit, [story,
That Bevis was believ'd.

Buck. O, you go far.

Nor. As I belong to worship, and affect
In honour honesty, the tract of every thing
Would by a good discover lose some life,
Which action's self was tongue to tongue. All was royal;
To the disposing of nought rebell'd,
Order gave each thing view; the office did
Distinctly his full function.

Buck. Who did guide,
I mean, who set the body and the limbs
Of this great sport together, as you guess?

Nor. One, certes, that promises no element
In such a business.

Buck. I pray you, who, my lord?

Nor. All this was order'd by the good discretion
Of the right reverend cardinal of York.

Buck. The devil speed him! no man's pie is free'd
From his ambitious finger. What had he
To do in these fierce vanities? I would upon
That some a keech man with his very bulk
Take up the rays o' the benefical sun,
And keep it from the earth.

Nor. Surely, sir,
There's in him stuff that puts him to these ends:
For, being not propp'd by ancestry, (whose grace Chalks successors their way,) nor called upon
For high feats done to the crown; neither allied
To eminent assinants, but, spider-like,
Out of his self-drawing web, he gives us note,
The force of his own merit makes his way;
A gift that heaven gives for him, which buys
A place next to the king.

Aber. I cannot tell
What heaven hath given him, let some graver eye
Fierce into that: but I can see his pride
Peel through each part of him: Whence has he that?
If not from hell, the devil is a niggard;
Or has given all before, and he begins
A new hell in himself.

Buck. Why the devil,
Upon this French going-out, took he upon him,
Without the privy c' the king, to appoint
Who should attend on him? He makes up the file
Of all the meagre; for the most part such
Too, whom as great a charge as little honour
He meant to lay upon: and his own letter,
The honourable board of council out,
Must fetch him in the papers.

Aber. I do know
Kinsmen of mine, three at the least, that have
By this so sicken'd their estates, that never
They shall abond as formerly.

Buck. O, many
Have broke their backs with lying manors on them
For this great journey. What did this vanity,
But minister communication
A most poor issue?
Nor. Grivellingly I think,
The peace between the French and us not values
The cost that did conclude it.

Buck. Every man,
After the hideous storm that follow'd, was
A thing inspir'd; and, but consulting, broke
Into a general prophecy. That this tempest,
Dashing the garment of this peace, abodeled
The sudden breach on't.

Nor. Which is builded out;
For France hath flaw'd the league, and hath attach'd
Our merchants' goods at Bourdeaux:
Is it therefore
Aber. The ambassador is silence'd?

Nor. Marry, isn't.

Aber. A proper title of a peace; and purchase'd
At a superfluous rate!

Buck. Why, all this business
Our reverend cardinal carried.

Nor. 'Like it your grace,
The state takes notice of the private difference
Betwixt you and the cardinal. I advise you,
(And take it from a heart that wishes towards you Honour and plenteous safety,) that you read
The cardinal's malice and his potency
Together; to consider further, that
What his high hatred would effect, wants not
A minister in his power: You know his nature,
That he's revengel; and I know, his sword
Hath a sharp edge: it's long, and, it may be said,
It reaches far; and where 'twill not extend,
Thither he darts it. Bosom up my counsel,
You'll find it wholesome. Lo, where comes that rock,
That I advise your shunning.

Enter CARDINAL WOLSEY, (the purse borne before him,) certain of the Guard, and Two Secretaries with paper. The Cardinal, in his passage fixed his eyes on Buckingham, and Buckingham on him, both full of disdain.

Wol. The duke of Buckingham's surveyor? ha?
Where's his examination?

1 Ser. Here, so please you.

Wol. Is he in person ready?

1 Ser. Ay, please your grace.
ACT I.—SCENE II.

Wit. Well, we shall then know more; and Back—Shall lessen this big look. [inghara

Buck. This butcher's cut is venom-mouth'd, and I have not the power to muzzel him; therefore, best not wake him in his slumber. A beggar's book out-worths a noble's blood.

Nor. What, are you chaf'd?

Ask God for temperance; that's the appliance only, which your disease requires.

Buck. I read in his looks matter against me; and his eye revil'd me, as his object abjet: at this instant he bores me with some trick: He's gone to the king; I'll follow, and out-stare him.

Nor. Stay, my lord, and let your reason with your choler question What 'tis you go about: To climb steep hills, requires slow pace at first: Anger is like a full hot horse; who being allow'd his way, self-mettle tires him. Not a man in England can advise me like you: be to yourself as you would to your friends.

Buck. I'll to the king: and from a month of honnour quite cry down this Ipewich fellow's insolence; or proclaim, there's difference in no persons.

Nor. Be advis'd: heat a furnace for your foe so hot that it do singe yourself; we may outrun, by violent swiftness, that which we run at, and lose by over-running. Know you not, the fire, that mounts the liquer till it run o'er, to seeming to augment it, wastes it? Be advis'd: I say again, there is no English soul more stronger to direct you than yourself; and with the sap of reason you would quench, or but allay, the fire of passion.

Buck. Sir, I am thankful to you; and I'll go along by your prescription—but this top-pround fellow, (Whom from the flow of gall I name not, but from sincere motions,) by intelligence, and proofs as clear as foams in July, when we see each grain of gravel, I do know how to be corrupt and treasonous.

Nor. Say not, treasonous.

Buck. To the king I'll say't; and make my vouch as an shore of rock. Attend: this holy fox, [strong Or wolf, or both, (for he is equal ravenous as he is subtle; and as prone to mischief, as able to perform it: his mind and place infecting one another, yea, reciprocally,) only to shew his pomp as well in France as here at home, suggests the king our master to this last costly treaty, the interview. That swallow'd so much treasure, and like a glass did break l the rinsing.

Nor. 'Fath, and so it did.

Buck. Pray, give me favour, sir. This cunning ear, the articles of the combination drew, [final

As himself pleased; and they were ratified, as he cried, 'Thus let be: to as this end, as give a crutch to the dead: But our count-cardinal has done this, and 'tis well; for worthy Wolsey, who cannot err, he did it. Now this follows, (Which, as I take it, is a kind of puppy to the old dam, treason.)—Charles the emperor, under pretence to see the queen his aunt, (for 'twas, indeed, his colour; but he came to whisper Wolsey makes visitation: his fears were, that the interview, betwixt

England and France, might, through their amity, breed him some prejudice: for from this league Pope'd harms that menace'd him: He privately deals with our cardinal; and, as I trow,— Which I do well; for, I am sure, the emperor paid ere he promis'd; whereby his suit was granted Ere it was ask'd;—but when the way was made, and pay'd with gold, the emperor thus desir'd:— That he would please to alter the king's course, and break the foresaid peace. Let the king know, (As soon he shall by me,) that thus the cardinal does buy and sell his honour as he pleases, and for his own advantage.

Nor. I am sorry To hear this of him; and could wish, he were something mistaken in't.

Buck. No, not a syllable, I do pronounce him in that very shape, He shall appear in proof.

Enter Brandon; a Sergeant at Arms before him, and two or three of the Guard.

Br. Your office, sergeant; execute it.

Serg. Sir, My lord the duke of Buckingham, and earl Of Hereford, Stafford, and Northampton, I arrest thee of high treason, in the name Of our most sovereign king.

Buck. Le you, my lord, The net has fall'n upon me; I shall perish under device and practice.

Br. I am sorry To see you ta'en from liberty, to look on. The business present: 'Tis his highness pleasure, you shall to the Tower.

Buck. It will help me nothing, To plead mine innocence; for that die is on me, Which makes my whitest part black. The will of heaven Be done in this and all things!—I obey.—O my lord Abergauny, fare you well.

Br. Nay, he must bear you company:—The king to Abergauny. Is pleas'd, you shall to the Tower, till you know how he determines further.

Aber. As the duke said, The will of heaven be done, and the king's pleasure By me obey'd.

Br. Here is a warrant from The king, to attach lord Montacute; and the bodies Of the duke's confessor, John de la Court, one Gilbert Peck, his chancellor.—

Buck. So, so; These are the limbs of the plot: no more, I hope.

Br. A monk of the Chartreux.

Buck. O, Nicholas Hopkins?

Br. He.

Buck. My surveyor is false; the o'er-great cardinal Hath shew'd him gold; my life is sparrow'd already; I am the shadow of poor Buckingham; Whose figure even this instant cloud's put on, By dark'ning my clear sun.—My lord, farewell.

[Exeunt.

SCENE II.—The Council-Chamber.

Cornets. Enter King Henry, Cardinal Wolsey, the Lords of the Council, Sir Thomas Lovell, Officers, and Attendants. The King enters, leaning on the Cardinal's shoulder.

K. Hen. My life itself, and the best heart of it, Thanks you for this great care: I stood 1 the level of a full-charged confederacy, and give thanks To you that chok'd it.—Let be call'd before us
That gentleman is such a family in person.
I'll bestow one constant present.
And count by pounds the treasures of his masser
He shall again relate.

The king was in great fear. The lords of the council
And their second men. The council pass chamber
Under the king's sign, for right sake.

We must win him, young. Room for the Queen! Enter
The Queen, attended by the peers of the realm
And ladies out. The king sits down
And speaks to her, and she is pleased by him.

K. Hrk. Nay, we must longer speak! I am assured
An vows, and have place by us — that you
Never name to us: your have half our power, yet
The other money, one you can, is given;
Repeat your wish, and take it.

K. Anna. Thank your majesty.
That you would have yourself; and, in that love,
Not considered, shuave your honour, now,
The service of your office, is the point.

Of my persons.

K. Hrk. Lady nature, proceed.
K. Anna, I am resolved, not by a few.
And those of true condition, that your subjects
Are in great grievance: as we have been commissioned Sent down among those, whom have saved the heart
Of all our liberties — wherein, although.
My good lord cardinal. They went scrapeous
Most secret, on you. as putter-on.

Of these avations, yet the king our master,
(Whose honour heaven should from evil) even he escapes not.
Language unmanly, etc., such which breaks
The sense of loyalty, and almost appears
In bad sedition.

Not almost appears.
Is bad appears: for upon these taxations,
The subjects able not to maintain.
The many to them tinged, have yet old
Theatres, carousals, holidays, epistles, who,
Lent nor other than, compelled by hunger.
And then other means, in desperate manner
During the event to the truth, are all in up roar,
And danger serves among these.

K. Hrk. Taxations!
Wherein? and what taxation? — My lord cardinal,
You that are blemish'd for it, clothe with us.
Know you of this taxation?

Wilt. Please your, sir,
I know but of a single part, in sight.
Permits to the state, and from but in that file
Where others tell I steps with me.

K. Hrk. No, my lord,
You know no more than others; but, you know
Things that are known after, which are not wholesome
To those which would not, know these, and yet must Therefore be their acquaintance.
These executions
Whereof my sovereign would have more, they are Most pestilent to the hearing; and to bear them,
The back is sacrifice to the load. They say,
They are devolv'd by you: or else you strike
Too hard an exclamation.

K. Hrk. Still execution!
The cause of it? In what kind, let's know,
Is this execution?

K. Anna. I am much too venturesome
In tempting of your patience: but am bolden'd
I offer your present pardon, the subject's grief
 Comes through commission, which wrousp'd from each
The sixth part of his substance, to be levied
Without delay: and the presence for this Is need'd, your wars in France: This makes bold most

Tongues spit their damps out, and cold hearts freeze
Affection in them; their ears now.

Here where the people, and that it is come to pass,
That irascible obedience is a slave

To such uncensur'd will. I would your highness
Would give it quick consideration, for
There is no proper busines.

A. Sir. By my life,
This is against our pleasure.

Wilt. And for me,
I have no further gone in this, than by
A sacred voice: and that not passed me, but
By learned approbation of the judges.

If I am traduced by tongues, which neither know
My faculties, nor person, yet will be
The chronicles of my doing—let me say,
This but the fate of place, and the rough brake
That virtue must pass through. We must not stint
Our necessary actions, in the fear
Of malicious consumers, which ever,
As names of such fishes, in a vessel follow
That is now trim'd; but need not further
Than simply longing. What we off do best,
By sick interpreters, once we work on:
Nay, or not all, what worst, as off,
Hearing a present quality, is scored up
For the best act. If we shall stand still,
In fear our nation will be move'd or cap't at.
We should set root here where we set, or se:
State standing only.

A. Sir.

Things done well,
And with a care, exempt themselves from fear;
Things done without example, in their issue
Are to be fear'd. Have you a precedent
Of this commission? I believe, not any.
We must not need our subjects from our laws,
And stick them in our will. Sixth part of each:
A trembling contribution! Why, we take,
From every tree, leap, bark, and part of the timber;
And, though we leave it with a root, thus back'd,
The axe will drink the sap. To every county,
Where this is question'd, send our letters; with Free pardon to each man that has devised
The force of this commission: Pray, look to't.
I put it to your care.

A. Sir. To the Secretary.

Let there be letters went to every shire.
Of the king's grace and pardon. The great commons
Handily conceive of me: let it be not-d.
That, through our interference, this revokement
And pardon comes. I shall soon advise you
Further in the proceeding.

[Exit Secretary.

Enter Surveyor.

K. Anna. I am sorry, that the duke of Buckingham
Is run in your displeasure.

A. Sir. It grieves many:
The gentleman is learned, and a most rare speaker.
To nature none more bound; his training such,
That he may furnish and instruct great teachers.
And never seek for aid out of himself.
Yet see,
With these so noble benefits shall prove
Not well disposed, the mind growing once corrupt,
They turn to vicious forms ten times more ugly
Than ever they were fair.

This man so complete.
Who was enrol'd amongst wonders, and when we,
Almost with ravish'd listening, could not find
His hour of speech a minute; he, my lady,
Hath into monastical habits put the graces
That once were his, and is become as black
As if bearded in hell. Sit by us; you shall hear
This was his gentleman in trust,) of him

Things to strike honour sad.—Bid him recount
The lore-revised practices: whereas
We cannot feel too little, hear too much.

Wel. Stand forth, and with bold spirit relate what Most like a careful subject, have collected
You, out of the duke of Buckingham.
K. Hen. Speak freely.

Serv. First, it was usual with him, every day
It would inflect his speech, That if the king
Should without issue die, he'd carry it so
To make the scepter his: These very words
I have heard him utter to his son-in-law,
Lord Aberav'ny; to whom by oath he made
Revenge upon the cardinal.

Wel. Please your highness, note
This dangerous conception in this point.
Not friended by his wish, to his high person
His will is most malignant; and it stretches
Beyond you, to your friends.
Q. Kath. My learned lord cardinal,
Deliver all with charity.
K. Hen. Speak on:
How grounded he his title to the crown,
Upon our fail! to this point hast thou heard him
At any time speak ought?
Serv. I was sent from him. He was brought to this
By a vain prophecy of Nicholas Hopkins.
K. Hen. What was that Hopkins?
Serv. Sir, a Chartreux friar,
His confessor; who fed him every minute
With words of sovereignty.
K. Hen. How know'st thou this?
Serv. Not long before your highness sped to France,
The duke being at the Rose, within the parish
Saint Lawrence Poultney, did me demand
What was the speech amongst the Londoners
Concerning the French journey: I replied,
Men hear'd, the French would prove perfidious,
To the king's danger. Presently the duke
Said, Thou art the true, indeed; and that he doubted,
Twould prove the verity of certain words
Spoke by a holy monk: that oft, says he,
Hath sent to me, wishing me to permit
John de la Court, my chaplain, a choice hour
To hear from him a matter of some moment:
Whereafter under the confession's seal,
He solemnly had sworn, that, what he spoke,
My chaplain to no creature living, but
To me, should utter, with dueance confidence
Thus puzzling cas'd.—Neither the king, nor his heirs,
(Tell you the duke) hall prosper: bid him strive
To gain the love of the commonalty; the duke
Shall govern England.
Q. Kath. If I know you well,
You were the duke's surveyor, and lost your office
On the complaint o' the tenants: Take good heed,
You charge not in your speech a noble person,
And spoil your nobler soul! I say, take heed;
Yes, heartily beseech you.
K. Hen. Let him on.
Go forward.
Serv. On my soul, I'll speak but truth.
I told my lord the duke, By the devil's illusions
The monk might be deceiv'd; and that twas dangrous for him
To ruminate on this so far, until
It forc'd him some design, which, being believ'd,
It was much like to do: He answer'd, Tush!

It ran do me no damage: adding further,
That, had the king in his last sickness fail'd,
The cardinal's and sir Thomas Lovell's heads
Should have gone off.
K. Hen. Ha! what so rank? Ah, ah!
There's mischief in this man:—Canst thou say fur-
Sure? I can, my liege.
[ther?
K. Hen. Proceed.

Serv. Being at Greenwich,
After your highness had reprov'd the duke
About sir William Blomner,
— I remember
Of such a tine:—Being my servant sworn,
The duke retain'd him his,—But on; What hence?
Serv. If, quoth he, I for this had been committed,
As, to the Tower, I thought,—I would have play'd
The part my father meant to act upon
The worship Richard: who, being at Salisbury,
Made suit to come into his presence; which if granted,
As he made semblance of his duty, would
Have put his knife into him.
K. Hen. Why, now, madam, may his highness live in freedom:
And this man out of prison?
[don,
Q. Kath. God mend all!
K. Hen. There's something more would out of thee: What say'st?
Serv. After—the duke his father,—with the knife,—
He stretch'd him, and, with one hand on his dagger,
Another placed on his breast, compelling his eyes,
He did discharge a horrible oath; whose tenour
Was,—Were he evil us'd, he would out-go
His father, by as much as a performance
Does an irresolute purpose.

K. Hen. There's his period.
To sheath his knife in us. He is attach'd;
Call him to present trial: if he may
Find mercy in the law, 'tis his; if none,
Let him not seek't of us; by day and night,
He's traitor to the height.
[Exeunt.

SCENE III.—A Room in the Palace.

Enter the Lord Chamberlain and Lord Sands.

Cham. Is it possible, the spells of France should Men into such strange mysteries?
[iggledy Sands.

Lord. New customs,
Though they be never so ridiculous,
Nay, let them be unmanly, yet are follow'd.
Cham. As far as I see, all the good our English
Have got by the late voyage, is but merely
A fit or two o' the face; but they are shrewd ones;
For when they hold them, you would swear directly,
Their very voices had been counsellors
To Popen, or Clotharius, they keep state so.
Sands. They have all new legs, and lame ones;
one would take it,
That never saw them pace before the spavin,
A springhalt reign'd among them.

Cham. Death! my lord,
Their clothes are after such a paper cut too,
That, sure, they have worn out chivalry. How What news, sir Thomas Lovell?

Enter Sir Thomas Lovell.

Lov. 'Faith, my lord,
I hear of none, but the new proclamation
That's clapp'd upon the court-gate.

Cham. What is't for?

Lov. The reformation of our traveller's gowns,
That fill the court with quarrels, talk, and tailors.
Cham. I am glad, 'tis there; now I would pray our moniers
Enter Lord Chamberlain, Lord Sands, and Sir Thomas Lovell.

The very thought of this fair company
Clap'd wings to me.

Cham. You are young, sir Harry Guildford
Sands, Sir Thomas Lovell, had the cardinal.

But half my lay thoughts in him, some of these Should fill a running banquet ere they rested.
I think, would better please them. By my lie,
They are a gentle society of fair ones.

Love, O, that your lordship were but now confessor
To one or two of these!

I would, I were,
They should feel easy penance.

Lov. As easy as a damp-bed would afford it.

Cham. Sweet ladies, will it please yousir! Sir Harry,
Place you that side, I'll take the charge of this:
His grace is entering. Nay, you must not freeze;
Two women placed together makes cold weather;
My lord Sands, you are one will keep them walking;
Pray, sit between these ladies.

Sands. By my faith,
And thank your lordship. — By your leave, sweet ladies: [Seats himself between Anne Bullem and another lady.]

If I chance to talk a little wild, forgive me;
I had it from my father.

Anne. Was he mad, sir?
Sands. O, very mad, exceeding mad, in love too:
But he would haste none; just as I do now,
He would kiss you twenty with a breath. [Kisses her.
Well said, my lord.

So, now you are fairly seated: — Gentlemen,
The penance lies on you, if these fair ladies
Pass away frowning.

Sands. For my little cure,
Let me alone.

Hautboys. Enter Cardinal Wolsey, attended; and takes his state.

Wol. You are welcome, my fair guests; that noble
Or gentleman, that is not freely merry,
[ lady, Is not my friend: This, to confirm my welcome;
And to you all good health. [Drinks.

Sands. Your grace is noble: —
Let me have such a bowl may hold my thanks,
And save me so much talking.

Wol. My lord Sands,
I am beholden to you: cheer your neighbours.

Ladies, you are not merry; — Gentlemen,
Whose fault is this? —

Sands. The red wine first must rise
In their fair checks, my lord; then shall we have them
Talk us to silence.

You are a merry gamester,
My lord Sands.

Sands. YES, if I make my play.
Here's to your ladyship: and pledge it, madam,
For 'tis to such a thing, —
You cannot shew me.

Sands. I told your grace, they would talk anon.
[Drum and trumpets within: Chamberlain discharged.

Wol. What's that?
Cham. Look out there, some of you.

[Exit a Servant.

Wol. What warlike voice?

And to what end is this? — Nay, ladies, fear not;
By all the laws of war you are privileged.

Re-enter Servant.

Cham. How now! what is't?
Serv. A noble troop of strangers; For so they seem; they have left their barge, and And thither make, as great ambassadors landed; From foreign states.

Wol. Good lord chamberlain, [tongue gone; Go, give them welcome, you can speak the French And, pray, receive them nobly, and conduct them, Into our presence, where this heaven of beauty Shall shine at full upon them:—Some attend him.—

You have now a broken banquet: but we'll mend it. A good digestion to you all: and, once more, I shower a welcome on you.—Welcome all.

Henbough. Enter the King, and twelve others, as maskers, habit'd like shepherds, with sixteen torch-bearers; ushered by the Lord Chamberlain. They pass directly before the Cardinal, and gracefully salute him.

A noble company! what are their pleasures?

Cham. Because they speak no English, thus they pray'd To tell your grace:—That, having heard by fame Of this so noble and so fair assembly This night to meet here, they could do no less, Out of the great respect they bear to beauty, But leave their flocks; and, under your fair conduct, Crave leave to view these ladies, and entertain An hour of revels with them.

Wol. Say, lord chamberlain, [pay them They have done my poor house grace; for which I A thousand thanks, and pray them take their pleasures.

Wol. My lord,—

Cham. Your grace?

Wol. Pray, tell them thus much from me: There should be one amongst them, by his person, More worthy this place than myself; to whom, If I but knew him, with my love and duty I would surrender it.

Cham. [Cham. goes to the company, and returns.

Wol. What say they?

Cham. Such a one, they all confess, There is, indeed; which they would have your grace Find out, and he will take it.

Wol. Let me see then.—[Comes from his state. By all your good leaves, gentlemen;—Here I'll make My royal choice. K. Hen. You have found him, cardinal! [Unmasking. You hold a fair assembly; you do well, lord: You are a churchman, or I'll tell you, cardinal, I should judge not unhappily. I am glad, Your grace is grown so pleasant.

K. Hen. My lord chamberlain, Prythee, come hither: What fair lady is that? Cham. An't please your grace, sir Thomas Bullen's daughter, the viscount Rochford, one of her highness' women. K. Hen. By heaven, she is a dainty one.—Sweetly I were unworthy, to take you out, [heart, And not to kiss you.—A health, gentlemen, Let it go round. Wol. Sir Thomas Lovell, is the banquet ready I the privy chamber? Lov. Yes, my lord.

Wol. I fear, with dazing is a little heated. K. Hen. I fear, too much.

Wol. There's fresher air, my lord, In the next chamber. [partner, K. Hen. Lead in your ladies, every one.—Sweet I must not yet forsake you:—Let's be merry;— Good my lord cardinal, I have half a dozen healths To drink to these fair ladies, and a measure To lead them once again: and then let's dream Who's best in favour.—Let the music knock it. [Exeunt, with trumpets.

ACT II.

SCENE I.—A Street.

Enter Two Gentlemen, meeting.

1 Gent. Whither away so fast?

2 Gent. O,—God save you! Even to the hall, to hear what shall become Of the great duke of Buckingham.

1 Gent. Well, and I'll save you That labour, sir. All's now done, but the ceremony Of bringing back the prisoner. 2 Gent. Were you there?

1 Gent. Yes, indeed, was I. 2 Gent. Pray, speak, what has happen'd?

1 Gent. You may guess what. Let's see, then, has he found guilty?

2 Gent. Yes, truly is he, and condemn'd upon it. 2 Gent. I am sorry for't.

1 Gent. So are a number more. 2 Gent. But, pray, how pass'd it?

1 Gent. 'Til tell you in a little. The great duke Came to the bar; where, to his accusations, He pleaded still, not guilty, and alleg'd Many sharp reasons to defend the law. The king's attorney, on the contrary, Urg'd on the examinations, proofs, confessions Of divers witnesses; which the duke desir'd To have brought, ridd ree, to his face: At which appear'd against him, his surveyor: Sir Gilbert, his chancellor; and John Court, Confessor to him; with that devil-monk, Hopkins, that made this mischief. 2 Gent. That was he, That fed him with his prophecies?

1 Gent. The same. All these accus'd him strongly; which he fain Would have flung from him, but, indeed, he could not. And so his peers, upon this evidence, Have found him guilty of high treason. Much He spoke, and learnedly, for life; but all Was either pieted in him, or forgotten. 2 Gent. After all this, how did he bear himself? 1 Gent. When he was brought again to the bar,— His knell rang out, his judgment,—he was stirr'd With such an agony, he sweat extremely, And something spoke in chol'ry, ill, and nasty: But he fell to himself again, and, sweetly, In all the rest shew'd a most noble patience. 2 Gent. I do not think he fears death. 1 Gent. He doe not, Sure, he does not, He never was so womanish; the cause He may a little grieve at.

2 Gent. Certainly, The cardinal is the end of this. 1 Gent. 'Tis likely,
KING HENRY VIII.

By all conjectures: First, Kildare's attainer, Then deputy of Ireland; who removed, Earl Surrey was sent thither, and in haste too, Lest he should help his father.

2 Gent. That trick of state Was a deep envious one. At his return, No doubt, he will require it. This is noted, And generally; whoever the king favours, The cardinal instantly will find employment, And far enough from court too.

2 Gent. All the commons Hate him perniciously; and, o' my conscience, Wish him ten fathom deep: this duke as much They love and do; call him bounty. Buck. The mirror of all courtesy:—Tingham.

1 Gent. Stay there, sir, And see the noble ruin'd man you speak of.

Enter Buckingham from his arraignment; Tipstaves before him; the axe with the edge towards him; hedges on each side; with him, Sir Thomas Lovell, Sir Nicholas Vaux, Sir William Sands, and common people.

2 Gent. Let's stand close, and behold him.

Buck. All good people, You that thus far have come to pity me, Hear what I say, and then go home and lose me. I have this day receiv'd the traitor's judgment, And by that name must die; Yet, heaven be witness, And, if I have a conscience, let it sink me, Even as the axe falls, if I be not faithful! The law I bear no malice for my death, It has done, upon the premises, but justice: But those, that sought it, I could wish more Christians: Be they what they will, I heartily forgive them: Yet, it is a mark they glory not in mischief, Nor build their evils on the graves of great men; For then my guiltless blood must cry against them. For further life in this world I ne'er hope, Nor will I sue, although the king have mercies More than I dare make faults. You few that lov'd me, And dare be bold to weep for Buckingham, His noble friends, and fellows, whom to leave Is to die bitter to him, only dying, Go with me, like good angels, to my end; And, as the long divorce of steel falls on me, Make of your prayers one sweet sacrifice, And lift my soul to heaven.—Lead on, o'God's name.

Lov. I do beseech your grace, for charity, If ever any malice in your heart Were hid against me, now to forgive me frankly.

Buck. Sir Thomas Lovell, I ask free forgive you, As I would be forgiven: I forgive all;

There cannot be those numberless offences 'Gainst me, I can't take peace with: no black envy Shall make my grave.—Commend me to his grace; And, if he speak of Buckingham, pray, tell him, You met him half in heaven: my vows and prayers Yet are the king's; and, till my soul forsake me, Shall cry for blessings on him: May he live Longer than I have time to tell his years! Ever belov'd, and loving, may his rule be! And, when old time shall lead him to his end, Goodness and he fill up one monument!

Lov. To the water side I must conduct your grace; Then give my charge up to sir Nicholas Vaux, Who undertakes you to your end.

Vaux. Prepare there, The duke is coming; see, the barge be ready; And fit it with such furniture, as suits The greatness of his person.

Buck. Nay, sir Nicholas, Let it alone; my state now will but mock me, When I came hither, I was lord high constable, And duke of Buckingham: now, poor Edward Bohun: Yet I am richer than my base accusers, That never knew what truth meant: I now seal it; And with that blood will make them one day groan My noble father, Henry of Buckingham, {for't. Who first rais'd head against usurping Richard, Flying for succour to his servant Banister, Being distress'd, was by that wretch betray'd, And without trial fell; God's peace be with him! Henry the Seventh succeeding, truly pitying My father's loss, like a most royal prince, Restor'd me to my honours, and, out of mins, Made my name once more noble. Now his son, Henry the Eighth, life, honour, name, and all That made me happy, at one stroke has taken For ever from the world. I had my trial, And, must needs say, a noble one: which makes me A little happier than my wretched father; Yet far we are one in fortunes.—Both Fell by our servants, by those men we lov'd most; A most unnatural and faithless service! Heaven has an end in all: Yet, you that hear me, This from a dying man receive as certain: Where you are liberal of your loves, and counsels, Be sure, you be not loose; for those you make friends, And give your hearts to, when they once perceive The truest握 their hand in your fortunes, fall away Like water from ye, never found again But where they mean to sink ye. All good people, Pray for me! I must now forsake ye; the last hour Of my long weary life is come upon me.

Farewell: And when you would say something that is sad, Speak how I fell,—I have done; and God forgive me!

[Exeunt BUCKINGHAM and Train.

1 Gent. O, this is full of pity!—Sir, it calls, I fear, too many curses on their heads That were the authors.

2 Gent. If the duke be guiltless, Tis full of woe: yet I can give you inking Of an ensuing evil, if it fall, Great is this.

1 Gent. Good angels keep it from us! Where may it be? You do not doubt my faith, sir?

2 Gent. This secret is so weighty, 'twill require A strong faith to conceal it.

1 Gent. Let me have it; I do not talk much.

2 Gent. I am confident; You shall, sir: Did you not of late days hear A buzzing, of a separation Between the king and Katherine?

1 Gent. Yes, but it held not: For when the king once heard it, out of anger He sent command to the lord mayor, straight To stop the rumour, and alay those tongues That did dispurse it.

2 Gent. But that slander, sir, Is found a truth now: for it grows again Fresher than ere it was; and held for certain, The king will venture at it. Either the cardinal, Or some about him near, have, out of malice To the good queen, possess'd him with a scruple That did undo her: To confirm this too, Cardinal Campeius is arriv'd, and lately; As all think, for this business.

1 Gent. 'Tis the cardinal; And merely to revenge him on the emperor, For not bestowing on him, at his asking,
If the king please; his curses and his blessings
Touch me alike, they are breath I not believe in.
I knew him, and I know him; so I leave him
To him that made him proud, the pope.

Nor. Let's in;
And with some other business, put the king
From these sad thoughts, that work too much upon
My lord, you'll bear us company? [him:
Cham. Excuse me;
The king hath sent me other-where; besides,
You'll find a most unfit time to disturb him,
Health to your lordships.

Nor. Thanks, my good lord chamberlain.

[Exit Lord Chamberlain.

NORFOLK opens a folding-door.
The king is discovered, sitting, and reading pensively.

Suf. How sad he looks! sure, he is much addicted.
K. Hen. Who is there? ha?

Nor. 'Pray God, he be not angry.
Into my private meditations? [yourselves
Who am I? ha?

Nor. A gracious king, that pardons all offences
Malice never meant: our breach of duty, this way
Is business of estate; in which, we come
To know your royal pleasure.

K. Hen. You are too bold, Go to; I'll make ye know your times of business:
Is this an hour for temporal affairs? ha?—

Enter WOLSEY and CAMPEIUS.

Who's there? my good lord cardinal?—O my Wolsey,
The quiet of my wounded conscience,
Thou art a cure fit for a king.—You're welcome,

[To CAMPEIUS.
Most learned reverend sir, into our kingdom ;
Use us, and it:—My good lord, have great care
I be not found a talker. [To Wolsey.

Wol. Sir, you cannot,
I would, your grace would give us but an hour
Of private conference.

K. Hen. We are busy; go.
[To NORFOLK and SUFFOLK.
Nor. This priest has no pride in him!
Not to speak of; I would not be so sick though, for his place:
But this cannot continue. [Aside.
Nor. If it do,
I'll venture one heave at him.

[Exit CAMPEIUS. [Suf.
Wol. Your grace has given a precedent of wisdom
Above all princes, in committing freely
Your scruple to the voice of Christendom:
Who can be angry now? what easy reach you?
The Spaniard, tied by blood and favour to her,
Must now confest, if they have any goodness,
The trial just and noble. All the clerks,
I mean, the learned ones, in christian kingdoms,
Have their free voices; Rome, the nurse of judgment,
Invited by your noble self, hath sent
One general tongue unto us, this good man,
This just and learned priest, cardinal Campeius;
Whom, once more, I present unto your highness.
K. Hen. And, once more, in mine arms I bid him

[Exit CAMPEIUS. [Nor.
And thank the holy conclave for their loves; [for
They have sent me such a man I would have wish'd
Cam. Your grace must needs deserve all strangers:
You are so noble: To your highness' hand [loves,
I tender my commission; by whose virtue,
KING HENRY VIII.

(Enter Wolsey, with Gardiner.)

Wol. Give me your hand: much joy and favour to You are the king's now.

[Aside.]

K. Hen. Come hither, Gardiner.

Cam. My lord of York, was not one doctor face In this man's place before him?

Wol. Yes, he was. Cam. Was he not held a learned man?

Wol. Yes, surely. Cam. Believe me, there's an ill opinion spread then Even of yourself, lord cardinal.

Wol. How! of me?

Cam. They will not stick to say, you envied him; And, fearing he would rise, he was so virtuous, Kept him a foreign man still; which so griev'd him, That he ran mad, and died.

Wol. Heaven's peace be with him!

Cam. That's christian care enough: for living murmurers, There's places of rebuke: He was a fool; For he would needs be virtuous: This good fellow, If I command him, follows my appointment; I will have none so near else. Learn this, brother, We live not to be grieved by meaner persons.

K. Hen. Deliver this with modesty to the queen.

[Exit Gardiner.]

The most convenient place that I can think of, For such receipt of learning, is Black Friars; There ye shall meet about this weighty business:— My Wolsey, see if furnish'd.—O my lord, Would it not grieve an able man, to leave So sweet a bedfellow? But, conscience, conscience,— 0, 'tis a tender place, and I must leave her. [Exeunt.

SCENE III.

An Ante-Chamber in the Queen's Apartments.

Enter Anne Bullen and an old Lady.

Anne. Not for that neither;—Here's the pang that pinneth:
His highness having liv'd so long with her: and she So good a lady, that no tongue could ever Pronounce dishonour of her,—by my life, She never knew harm-doing:—O now, after So many courses of the sun ethron'd,
Still growing in a majesty and pomp,—the which To leave is a thousand-fold more bitter, than 'Tis sweet at first to acquire,—after this process, To give her the avantage! it is a pity Would move a monster.

Old L. Hearts of most hard temper
Melt and lament for her.

Anne. O, God's will! much better,
She ne'er had known pomp: though it be temporal,
Yet, if that quarrel fortune do divorce
It from the bearer, 'tis a suffrance, panging
As soul and body's suffering.

Old L. Als, poor lady!

She's a stranger now again.

Anne. Must pity drop upon her. Verily,
I swear, 'tis better to be lovely born,
And range with humble lovers in content,
Then to be perk'd up in a glistening grief,
And wear a golden sorrow.

Old L. Our content
Is our best having.

Anne. By my troth, and maidenhead, I would not be a queen.

Old L. Beshrew me, I would,
And ventre maidenhead for 't; and so would you, For all this splice of your hypocrisy:
You, that have so fair parts of woman on you,
Have too a woman's heart: which ever yet Affected eminence, wealth, sovereignty;
Which, to say sooth, are blessings: and which gifts (Saving your mincing) the capacity
Of your soft cheerful conscience would receive,
If you might please to stretch it.

Anne. Nay, good troth,—

Old L. Yes, troth, and troth,—You would not be a queen?

Anne. No, not for all the riches under heaven.

Old L. 'Tis strange: a three-pence bow'd would hire me,
Old as I am, to queen it: But, I pray you,
What think you of a duchess? I have you limbs To bear that load of title?

Anne. No, in truth.

Old L. Then you are weakly made: Pluck off a pound
I would not be a young count in your way, [little; For more than blushing comes to: if your back Cannot vouchsafe this burden, 'tis too weak Nor more to the crown but that. Lo, who comes here?

Enter the Lord Chamberlain.

Cham. Good morrow, ladies. What were't worth to The secret of your conference?

Anne. My good lord,
Not your demand; it values not your asking: Our mistress' sorrows we were pitying.

Cham. It was a gentle business, and becoming The action of good women: there is hope, All will be well.

Anne. Now I pray God, amen! [sings Cham. You bear a gentle mind, and heavenly bless Follow such creatures. That you may, fair lady, Perceive I speak sincerely, and high note's To'en of your many virtues, the king's majesty. Commends his good opinion to you, and Does purpose honour to you no less flowing Than marchioness of Pembroke; to which title A thousand pound a-year, annual support, Out of his grace he adds.

Anne. I do not know,
What kind of my obedience I should tender; More than my all is nothing; nor my prayers Are not words duly hallow'd, nor my wishes More worth than empty vanities; yet prayers, and wishes,
Are all I can return. Beseech your lordship,
VAUCHSAFE to speak my thanks, and my obedience, As from a blushing handmaid to his highness; When health, and health, and royalty, I pray for.

CHAUNCEY.

Lady, I shall not fail to approve the fair conceit, The King hath of you—

K. HENRY.

What's the need? He hath already publicly been read, And on all sides the authority allow'd; You may then spare that time.

CH.

Wol.

Be't so.—Proceed.

[Exeunt.

[The Queen makes no answer, rises out of her chair, goes to the court, comes to the King, and kneels at his feet; then speaks.

Q. RATH.

Sir, I desire you, do me right and justice, And to bestow your pity on me. for I am a most poor woman, and a stranger, Born out of your dominions; having here No judge indifferent, nor no more assurance Of equal friendship and proceeding. Alas, sir, In what have I offended you? what cause Hath my behaviour given to your displeasure, That thus you should proceed to put me off, And take your good graces from me? For, by the woman's witness, I have been to you a true and humble wife, At all times to your will conformable: Ever in fear to kindle your dislike, Yea, subject to your countenance; glad, or sorry, As I saw it inclin'd. When was the hour, I ever contradicted your desire, Or made it not mine too? Or which of your friends Have I not strove to love, although I knew He were mine enemy? what friend of mine That had to him deriv'd your anger, did I Continue in my liking? nay, gave notice He was from thence discharge'd? Sir, call to mind That I have been your wife, in this obedience, Upward of twenty years, and have been blest With many children by you; if, in the course And process of this time, you can report, And prove it too, against mine honour aught, My bond to wedlock, or my love and duty, Against your sacred person, in God's name, Turn me away, and to your soul's contempt Shut door upon me, and so give me up To the sharpest kind of justice. Please you, sir, The king, your father, was reputed for A prince most prudent, of an excellent And unmatch'd wit and judgment: Ferdinand, My father, king of Spain, was reckon'd one The wisest prince, that there had reign'd by many A year before: It is not to be question'd That they had gather'd a wise council to them Of every realm, that did debate this business, Whoe'er doth our marriage lawful: Wherefore I humbly beseech you, sir, to spare me, till I may Be by my friends in Spain advis'd; whose counsel I will improve, if not, the name of God, Your pleasure be fulfill'd!

WOL.

You have here, lady, (And of your choice,) these reverend fathers; men Of singular integrity and learning, Yea, the elect of the land, who are assembled To plead your cause: It shall be therefore bootless, That longer you desire the court; as well For your own quiet, as to rectify What is unsettled in the king.

CANN.

His grace

Hath spoken well, and justly: Therefore, madam, It's fit this royal session do proceed; And that, without delay, their arguments Be now produc'd, and heard.
Lwi...ctttxHiiitl. — Sir.

I am not so weepy, but thinking this the queen, for long I have dreamt she's certain. The daughter of a King, of my course of yours.

I burn with sparks of fire.

Be patient yet.

Ah! I wait, when you are at home, or before, On God will punish me. I do believe. Indeed by present circumstances that.

You are mine answer, and make me long.

You shall not be my judge, nor do you.

You speak not like yourself; nor yet.

You shall have consequences of harm. You charge not. That I have shown this could I do deny it. That the king is present, if it be known to him.

That I generally a deed, now may he wound, and we, my father's next, as such as you have done me wrong. But be the know. I am free of your report, he knows. I am not of your wrong. Therefore in him, here, he might be that.

I, madam, to unchain your speaking, and I say no more.

My lord, my lord.

I am a simple woman, must two week. I mourned;

Suppose your cunning. You are weak and numberless. You are not man's property. Foreigner among your own. With meekness and a willing but your heart.

I am well, with propriety, and meekness.

You know, by sincerity, and meekness' favours. Come say, my lord, how shore; and now are mounted.

I believe you on my judge, and here.

Before you I, appeal into the hope.

To bring whose cause were here his boldness. And it, be told by him.

This queen is obstinate.

Dissemble to be tried by it, it's not well. She's going away.

ACT III.—SCENE 1.

Enter a Gentleman.

Q. Kath. How now?

Gent. An't please your grace, the two great car-

Wait in the presence.

Q. Kath. Would they speak with me?

Gent. They will'd me say so, madam.

Q. Kath. Pray their graces to come near. [Exit Gent.] What can be their business

With me, a poor weak woman, fallen from favour?

I do not like their coming, now I think on't.

They should be good men; their affairs as righteous.

But all hoods make not monks.

Enter Wolsey and Campell.

Wol. Peace to your highness!

Q. Kath. Your graces find me here part of a housewife;

I would be all, against the worst may happen.

What are your pleasures with me, reverend lords?

Wol. May it please you, noble madam, to withdraw into your private chamber, we shall give you the full cause of our coming.

Q. Kath. Speak it here;

There's nothing I have done yet, o' my conscience,

Deserves a corner: 'Would, all other women

Could speak this with as free a soul as I do!

My lords, I care not, (so much I am happy

Above a number,) if my actions

Were tried by every tongue, every eye saw them,

Easv and base opinion set against them,

I know my life so even; If your business

Seek me out, and that way I am wife in,

Out with it boldly; Truth loves open dealing.

Wol. Tanta est ergo et mentis integritas, regina ter-

Q. Kath. O, good my lord, no Latin; [Wol.

Lam not such a transplant since my coming,

As not to know the language I have lived in:

A strange tongue makes my cause more strange, suspicious;

Pray, speak in English: here are some will thank you,

If you speak truth, for their poor mistress' sake;

Believe me, she has had much wrong: Lord cardinal,
The willing' st sin I ever yet committed,

May be absolv'd in English.

Wol. Noble lady, I am sorry, my integrity should breed,

(And service to his majesty and you,)

So deep suspicion, where all faith was meant.

We come not by the way of accusation,

To taunt that honour every good tongue blesses;

Nor to betray you any way to sorrow;

You have too much, good lady; but to know

How you stand minded in the weighty difference

Between the king and you; and to deliver,

Like free and honest men, our just opinions,

And comforts to your cause.

Cam. Most honour'd madam,

My lord of York,—out of his noble nature,

Zeal and obedience he still bore your grace;

Forgetting, like a good man, your late censure

Both of his truth and him, (which was too far,—)

Offers, as I do, in a sign of peace,

His service and his counsel.

Q. Kath. To betray me. [Aside.

My lords, I thank you both for your good wills,

Ye speak like honest men, (pray God, ye prove so!)

But how to make ye suddenly an answer,

In such a point of weight, so near mine honour,

(More near my life, I fear,) with my weak wit,

And to such men of gravity and learning,

In truth, I know not; I was set at work

Among my maids; full little, God knows, looking

ACT III.

SCENE 1.—Palace at Bridewell. A Room in the Queen's Apartment.

The Queen, and some of her Women, at work.

Q. Kath. Take thy lute, wench: my soul grows sad with troubles:

Sing, and disperse them, if thou canst: leave working.

SONG.

Ophera with his lute made trees,
And the mountain-tops, that freeze,
Bow themselves, when he did sing;
To his music, plants, and flowers,
Ever sprang; as sun, and showers,
There has been a lasting spring.
Every thing that heard him play,
Even the billows of the sea,
Hung their heads, and then lay by.
In sweet music is such art:
Killing care, and grief of heart,
Fall asleep, or, hearing, die.
Either for such men, or such business.
For her sake that I have been, (for I feel
The last fit of my greatness,) good your graces,
Let me have time, and counsel, for my cause;
Alas! I am a woman, friendless, hopeless.

_Wol._ Madam, you wrong the king's love with these
Your hopes and friends are infinite. _Scares._

_Q. Kath._ In England, but little for my profit: Can you think, lords,
Than any Englishman dare give me counsel? Or be a known friend, 'gainst his highness' pleasure,
(Though he be grown so desperate to be honest,)
And live a subject? Nay, forsooth, my friends,
They that must weigh out my affilictions,
They that my trust must grow to, live not here
They are, as all my other comforts, far hence,
In mine own country, lords.

_Cam._ I would, your grace
Would leave your griefs, and take my counsel.

_Q. Kath._ How, sir?

_Cam._ Put your main cause into the king's protection;
He's loving, and most gracious; 'twill be much
Both for your honour better, and your cause;
For, if the trial of the law o'ertake you,
You'll part away disgrace'd.

_Wol._ He tells you rightly.

_Q. Kath._ Ye tell me what ye wish for both, my ruin:
Is this your christian counsel? out upon ye!
Heaven is above all yet; there sits a judge,
That no king can corrupt.

_Cam._ Your rage mistakes us.

_Q. Kath._ The more shame for ye; holy men I thought ye;
Upon my soul, two reverend cardinal virtues;
But cardinal sins, and hollow hearts, I fear ye;
Mend them, for shame, my lords, Is this your comfort?
The cordial that ye bring a wretched lady?
A woman lost among ye, laugh'd at, scorn'd?
I will not wish ye half my miseries,
I have more charity: But say, I warn'd ye;
Take heed, for heaven's sake, take heed, lest at once
The burden of my sorrows fall upon ye.

_Wol._ Madam, this is a mere distortion;
You turn the good we offer into envy.

_Q. Kath._ Ye turn me into nothing: Woe upon ye,
And all such false professors! Would ye have me
(If you have any justice, any pity;
If ye be anything but churchmen's habits,)
Put my sick care into his hands that hates me?
Alas! he has banish'd me his bed already;
His love, too long ago: I am old, my lords,
And all the fellowship I hold now with him
Is only my obedience. What can happen
To me above this wretchedness? all your studies
Make me a curse like this.

_Cam._ Your fears are worse.

_Q. Kath._ Have I liv'd thus long: (let me speak myself,
Since virtue finds no friends,—a wife, a true one?
A woman (I dare say, without vain-glory,
Never yet branded with suspicion?)
Have I with all my full affections
Still met the king? lov'd him next heaven? obey'd him?
Been, out of fondness, superstitious to him?
Almost forgot my prayers to content him?
And am I thus rewarded? 'tis not well, lords.
Bring me a constant woman to her husband,
One that ne'er dream'd a joy beyond his pleasure;
And to that woman, when she has done most,
Yet will I add an honour,—a great patience.

_Wol._ Madam, you wander from the good we aim at.

_Q. Kath._ My lord, I dare not make myself so guilty,
To give up willingly that noble title
Your master wed me to: nothing but death
Shall e'er divorce my dignities.

'Pray, hear me.

_Q. Kath._ 'Would I had never trod this English earth,
Or felt the flatteries that grow upon it!
Ye have angels' faces, but I heaven knows your hearts.
What will become of me now, wretched lady? I Am the most unhappy woman living—

_Wol._ Poor wenchers, where are now your fortunes?

_Q. Kath._ To her Woe.

Shipwreck'd upon a kingdom, where no pity,
No friends, no hope; no kindred weep for me,
Almost, no grave allow'd me,—Like the lily,
That once was mistress of the field, and flourish'd,
I'll hang my head, and perish.

If your grace
Could but be brought to know, our ends are honest,
You'd feel more comfort: why should we, good lady;
Upon what cause, wrong you? alas! our places,
The way of our profession is against it;
We are to cure such sorrows, not to sow them,
For goodness' sake, consider what you do;
How you may hurt yourself, ay, utterly
Grow from the king's acquaintance, by this carriage.

The hearts of princes kiss obedience,
So much they love it; but, to stubborn spirits,
They swell, and grow as terrible as storms.
I know, you have a gentle, noble temper,
A soul as even as a calm; Pray, think us
Those we profess, peace-makers, friends, and servants.

_Cam._ Madam, you'll find it so. You wrong your virtues
With these, the women's fears. A noble spirit,
As yours was put into you, ever casts
Such doubts, a false coin, from it. The king loves you;
Beware, you lose it not: For us, if you please
To trust us in your business, we are ready
To use our utmost studies in your service.

_Q. Kath._ Do what ye will, my lords: And, pray for
If I have used myself unmanfully; _gives me_ You now, I am a woman, lacking wit
To make a seemly answer to such persons.
Pray do my service to his majesty:
He has my heart yet, and shall have my prayers,
While I shall have my life. Come, reverend fathers,
Bestow your counsels on me: she now begs,
That little thought, when she set footing here,
She should have bought her dignities so dear.

_Escunt._

_Scene II._—Ante-chamber to the King's apartment.

_Enter the Duke of Norfolk, the Duke of Suffolk, the Earl of Surrey, and the Lord Chamberlain._

_Non._ If you will now unite in your complaints
And force them with a constancy, the cardinal
Cannot stand under them: If you omit
The offer of this time. I cannot promise,
But that you shall sustain more new disgraces,
With these you bear already.

_Sur._ I am joyful
To meet the least occasion, that may give me
Remembrance of my father-in-law, the duke,
To be reveng'd on him.

_Suf._ Which of the peers
Have uncontent'd gone by him, or at least
Strangely neglected? when did he regard
The stamp of nobleness in any person,
Out of himself?

_Cham._ My lords, you speak your pleasures
What he deserves of you and me, I know,
KING HENRY VIII.

QUEEN KATHARINE  There is no judge, that no
ing can corrupt.
ACT III.—SCENE II.

What we can do to him, (though now the time Gives way to us,) I much fear: If you cannot Bar his access to the king, never attempt
Any thing on him: for he hath a witchcraft
Over the king in his tongue.

Nor. O, fear him not;
His spell in that is out: the king hath found
Matter against him, for that ever mars
The honesty of his language. No, he's settled,
Not to come off, in his displeasure.

Sur. I should be glad to hear such news as this Once every hour.

Nor. Believe it, this is true,
In the divorce, his contrary proceedings
Are all unfolded: wherein he appears,
As I could wish mine enemy.

Sur. How came
His practices to light?

Suf. Most strangely.

Sur. O, how, how?

Suf. The cardinal's letter to the pope miscarried,
And came to the eye of the king, when one was read,
How that the cardinal did entreat his holiness
To stay the judgment o' the divorce; For if
It did take place, I do, quoth he, perceive,
My king is tangled in affection to A creature of the queen's, lady Anne Bullen.

Sur. Has the king this?

Nor. Believe it.

Sur. Will this work? [coasts.
Cham. The king in this perceives him, how be
And hedges, his own way. But in this point
All his tricks founder, and he brings his physic
After his patient's death: the king already Hath married the fair lady,

Nor. Would he had!

Suf. May you be happy in your wish, my lord!
For, I profess, you have it.

Sur. Now all my joy
Trace the conjunction!

Suf. My amen to't!

Nor. What? All men's,
That's order given for her coronation:
Marry, this is yet but young, and may be left
To some ears unrecogniz'd.—But, my lords,
She is a gallant creature, and complete
In mind and feature: I persuade me, from her
Will fall some blessing to this land, which shall
In it be memorized.

Sur. But, will the king
Digest this letter of the cardinal's?

The Lord forbid!

Nor. Marry, amen!.

Suf. No, no;
There be more wasps that buzz about his nose,
Will make this sting the sooner. Cardinal Campeius
Is stolen away to Rome; hath taken no leave;
Has left the cause o' the king unhandled; and
Is posted, as the agent of our cardinal,
To second all his plot. I do assure you,
The kind cry'd, ha! at this.

Cham. Now, God incense him,
And let him cry ha, louder!

Nor. But, my lord,
When returns Cranmer?

Suf. He is return'd, in his opinions; which
Have satisfied the king for his divorce,
Together with all famous colleges
Almost in Christendom: shortly, I believe,
His second marriage shall be publish'd, and
Her coronation. Katharine no more
Shall be call'd, queen; but princess dowager,
And widow to prince Arthur.

Nor. This same Cranmer's
A worthy fellow, and hath ta'en much pain
In the king's business.

Suf. He has; and we shall see him
For it, an archbishop.

Nor. So I hear.

Suf. The cardinal—

Enter Wolsey and Cromwell.

Nor. Observe, observe, he's moody.
Wol. The packet, Cromwell, gave it you the king?
Crom. To his own hand, in his bedchamber.
Wol. Look'd he o' the inside of the paper?
Crom. Presently
He did unseal them: and the first he view'd,
He did it with a serious mind: a head
Was in his countenance! You, he bade
Attend him here this morning.

Wol. Is he ready
To come abroad?

Crom. I think, by this he is.
Wol. Leave me a while,— [Exit Cromwell.
It shall be to the duchess of Alençon,
The French king's sister: he shall marry her.—
Anne Bullen! No; I'll no Anne Bullens for him:
There is more in it than fair visage.—Bullen!
No, we'll no Bullens.—Speedily I wish
To hear from Rome.—The murchiness of Pembroke!
Nor. He's discontented.

Suf. May be, he hears the king
Does what his anger to him.

Sur. Sharp enough,
Lord, for thy justice! [daughter.
Wol. The late queen's gentlewoman; a knight's
To be her mistress' mistress! the queen's queen!—
This candle burns not clear; 'tis I must snuff it;
Then, out it goes.—What though I know her virtuous,
And well deserving? yet I know her for
A spleeny Lutheran; and not wholesome to
Our cause, that she should lie 'tis the bosom of Our hard-raft'd king. Again, there is sprung up
An heretic, an arch one, Cranmer; one
Hath crawled into the favour of the king,
And is his oracle.

Nor. He is vex'd at something.

Suf. I would, 'twere something that would fret
The master-cord of his heart!

[Enter the King, reading a schedule; and Lovell.

Suf. The king, the king.
K. Hen. What piles of wealth hath he accumulated
To his own portion! and what expense by the hour
Seems to flow from him! How, I the name of thrift,
Does he take this together!—Now, my lords;
Saw you the cardinal?

Nor. My lord, we have Stood here observing him: Some strange commotion
Is in his brain: he bites his lip, and starts;
Stops on a sudden, looks upon the ground
Then, lays his finger on his temple; straight,
Springs out into fast gait; then, stops again,
Strikes his breast hard; and anon, he casts
His eye against the moon: in most strange postures
We have seen him set himself.

K. Hen. It may well be;
There is a mutiny in his mind. This morning
Papers of state he sent me to peruse,
As I requir'd: And, wot you, what I found
There; on my conscience, put unwittingly?
KING HENRY VIII.

Forsworn, an inventory, thus importing,—
The several parcels of his plate, his treasure, Rich stuffs, and ornaments of household; which I find at such proud rate, that it out-speaks Possession of a subject.

It's Heaven's will;
Some spirit put this paper in the packet
To bless your eye withal.

K. Hen.
If we did think
His contemplation were above the earth,
And fix'd on spiritual object, he should still Dwell in his musings: but, I am afraid,
His thoughts are below the moon, not worth
His serious considering.

Wol.
Heaven forgive me!

Ever God bless your highness!

K. Hen.
Good my lord,
You are full of heavenly stuff, and bear the inventory
Of your best graces in your mind; the which
You were so running o'er; you have scarce time
To steal from spiritual leisure a brief span
To keep your earthly audit: Sure, in that
I deem you an ill husband: and am glad
To have you therein my companion.

Wol.
Sir,
For holy offices I have a time; a time
To think upon the part of business, which
I bear i' the state; and nature does require
Her times of preservation, which, perforce,
I her frail son, amongst my brethren mortal,
Must give my tendance to.

K. Hen.
You have said well.
Wol. And ever may your highness yoke together,
As I will lend you cause, my doing well
With my well-saying.

K. Hen.
Tis well said again;
And 'tis a kind of good deed, to say well:
And yet words are no deeds. My father lov'd you:
He said, he did; and with his deed did crown
His word upon you. Since I had my office,
I have kept you next my heart; have not alone
Employ'd you where high profits might come home,
But 'd my present havings, to bestow
My bounties upon you.

Wol.
What should this mean?
Sure, The Lord increase this business! [Aside.

K. Hen.
Have I not made you
The prime man of the state? I pray you, tell me,
If what I now pronounce, you have found true:
And, if you may confess it, say withal,
If you are bound to us, or no.
What say you?

Wol. My sovereign, I confess, your royal graces,
Shower'd on me daily, have been more, than could
My studied purposes require; which went Beyond all man's endeavours:—my endeavours
Have ever come too short of my desires,
Yet, fill'd with my abilities: Mine own ends
Have been mine so, that even more they pointed To the good of your most sacred person, and
The profit of the state. For your great graces
Hap'n'd upon me, poor undeserver, I
Can nothing render but alienant thanks;
My prayers to heaven for you:—my loyalty,
Which ever has, and ever shall be growing,
Till, the death of that winter, kill it.

K. Hen.
Fairly answer'd;
A loyal and obedient subject is
Thein illustrated; the honour of it
Does pay the act of it: as 't the contrary,
The foulness is the punishment. I presume
That, as my hand has open'd bounty to you,
My heart dropp'd love, my power rain'd honour more
On you, than any; so your hand, and heart,
Your brain, and every function of your power,
Should, notwithstanding that your bond of duty,
As 'were in love's particular, be more
To me, your friend, than any,

Wol.
I do profess,
That for your highness' good I ever labour'd
More than mine own; that am, have, and will be,
Though all the world should crack their duty to you,
And throw it from their soul; though peril's did
About as thick as thought could make them, and Appear in forms more horrid; yet my duty,
As doth a rock against the chiding flood,
Should the approach of this wild river break,
And stand un-broken yours.

K. Hen.
'Tis nobly spoken.
Take notice, lords, he has a loyal breast,
For you have seen him open.—Read o'er this;
[Giving him papers.
And, after, this: and then to breakfast, with What appetite you have.

[Exit Kino, frowning upon Cardinal Wolsey; the Nobles through after him, smiling, and whispering.

Wol.
What should this mean?
What sudden anger's this: how have I reasp'd it?
He parted frowning from me, as if rain
Leapt from his eyes: so looks the chafed lion
Upon the daring huntsman that has gall'd him,
Then makes him nothing. I must read this paper:
I fear, the story of his anger.—'Tis so;
This paper has undone me:—'Tis the account
Of all that world of wealth I have drawn together
For mine own ends; indeed, to gain the popedom,
And let my friends in a home. Of negligence,
Fit for a fool to fall by! What cross devil
Made me put this main secret in the packet
I sent the king? Is there no way to cure this?
No new device to beat this from his brains?
I know, 'twill stir him strongly; yet I know
A way, if it take night, in spite of fortune
Will bring me off again. What's this—To the Pope?
And let my friends in a home. Of negligence,
I writ to his holiness. Nay then, farewell!
I have touch'd the highest point of all my greatness:
And, from that full meridian of my glory,
I haste now to my setting. I shall fall
Like a bright exhalation in the evening,
And no man see me more.

Re-enter the Dukes of Norfolk and Suffolk, the Earl of Surrey, and the Lord Chamberlain.

Nor.
Hear the king's pleasure, cardinal: who com-
To render up the great seal presently
[mands you
Into our hands; and to confine yourself
To Asher-house, my lord of Winchester's,
Till you hear further from his highness.

Rid.
Stay,
Where's your commission lords? words cannot carry
Authority so weighty.

Suf.
Who dare cross them, Bearing the king's will from his mouth expressly?

If'd.
Till I find more than will, or words, to do it,
(1 mean, your malice,) know, officious lords,
I dare, and must deny it. Now I feel
Of what coarse metal ye are moulded,—envy.
How eagerly ye follow my disgraces,
As if it féd ye? and how sleek and wanton
Ye appear in every thing may bring my ruin?
Follow your envious courses, men of malice;
You have christian warrant for them, and, no doubt,
ACT III.—SCENE II.

In time will find their fit rewards. That seal, you ask with such a violence, the king.
(Mine, and your master,) with his own hand gave me:
Bade me enjoy it, with the place and honours,
During my life, and, to confirm his goodness,
Tied it by letters patent: Now, who’ll take it?
Sur. The king, that gave it.
Wol. It must be himself then.
Sur. Thou art a proud traitor, priest.
Wol. Proud lord, thou liest;
Within these forty hours Surrey durst better
Have burn’t that tongue, than said so.
Sur. Thy ambition,
Thou scarlet sin, robb’d this bewailing land
Of noble Buckingham, my father-in-law:
The heads of all thy brother cardinals,
(With thee, and all thy best parts bound together,)Weight’d not a hair of. Plague of your policy!
You sent me deputy for Ireland;
Far from his succour, from the king, from all
That might have mercy on the fault thou gavest him:
Your great goodness, out of holy pity, Absolv’d him with an axe.
Wol. This, and all else
This talking lord can lay upon my credit,
I answer, is most false. The duke by law
Found his deserts: how innocent I was
From any private malice in his end,
His noble jury and foul cause can witness.
If I loved many words, lord, I should tell you,
You have as little honesty as honour;
That 1, in the way of loyalty and truth
Toward the king, my ever royal master,
Dare mate a sounder man than Surrey can be,
And all that love his follies.
Sur. By my soul, I feel
Your long coat, priest, protects you; thou shouldst
My sword & the life-blood of thee else.—My lords, can ye endure to hear this arrogance?
And from this fellow? If we live thus tamely
To be thus judged by a piece of scarlet,
Farewell nobility; let his grace go forward,
And Bere us with his cap, like larks.
Wol. All goodness
Is poison to thy stomach.
Sur. Yes, that goodness
Of gleaming all the land’s wealth into one,
Into your own hands, cardinal, by extortion;
The goodness of your intercepted packets,
Guess, you want the base, against the king: your good—
Since you prove me, shall be most notorious.—
My lord of Norfolk, as you are truly noble,
As you respect the common good, the state
Of our desp’rd nobility, our issues,
Who, if he live, will scarce be gentlemen,—
Produce the grand sum of his sins, the articles
Collected from his life—1’ll startle you
Worse than the s attentive bell, when the brown wench
Lay kissing in your arms, lord cardinal.
Wol. How much, methinks, I could despise this man,
But that I’m bound in charity against it!
Nor. Those articles, my lord, are in the king’s hand:
But, thus much, they are foul ones.
Wol. So much fairer,
And spotless, shall mine innocence arise,
When the king knows my truth.
Sur. This cannot save you:
I thank my memory, I yet remember
Some of these articles; and out they shall.
Now, if you can blush, and cry guilty, cardinal,
You shou show a little honesty.
Wol. Speak on, sir;
I dare your worst objection: if I blush,
It is, to see a noblemen want manners.
Sur. I’d rather want those, than my head. Have at you.
First, that, without the king’s assent, or knowledge,
You wrought to be a legate: by which power
You maint’d the jurisdiction of all bishops.
Nor. Then, that, in all you write to Rome, or else
To foreign princes, Ego et Rex meus
Was still inscrib’d: in which you brought the king
To be your servant.
Sur. Then, that, without the knowledge
Either of king or council, when you went
Ambassador to the emperor, you made bold
To carry into Flanders the great seal.
Sur. Item, you sent a large commission
To Gregory de Cassalis, to conclude,
Without the king’s will, or the state’s allowance,
A league between his highness and Ferrara.
Sur. That, out of mere ambition, you have caus’d
Your holy hat to be stamp’d on the king’s coin.
Sur. Why not, that you have sent innumerable substances.
(0 what means got, I leave to your own conscience,) To Tunish Rome, and to prepare the ways
You have for dignities; to the mere undoing
Of all the kingdom. Many more there are;
Which, since they are of you, and odious,
I will my mantl mouth with.
Cham. O my lord,
Press not a falling man too far; 1st virtue:
His faults lie open to the laws; let them,
Not you, correct him. My heart weeps to seem him
So little of his great self.
Sur. Lord cardinal, the king’s further pleasure is.—
Because all those things, you have done late
By your power legatine within this kingdom,
Fall into the compass of a praemunire,—
That therefore such a writ be sued against you;
To forfeit all your goods, lands, tenements,
Chattels, and whatsoever, and to be
Out of your kingdom—Thus is my charge.
Nor. And so we’ll leave you to your meditations
How to live better. For your stubborn answer
About the giving hack the great seal to us,
The king shall know it, and, no doubt, shall thank you.
So fare you well, my little good lord cardinal.
[Exeunt all but WOLSEY.
Wol. So farewell to the little good you bear me. Farewell, a long farewell, to all my greatness!
This is the state of man: To-day he puts forth
The tender leaves of hope, to-morrow blossoms,
And bears his blushing honours thick upon him: The third day, comes a frost, a killing frost; And,—when he thinks, good easy man, full surely
His greatness is at a ripening—Is his root,
And then he falls, as I do. I have veter’d,
Like little wanton boys that swim on bladders,
This many summers in a sea of glory;
But far beyond my depth: my high-blown pride At length broke under me; and now has left me,
Weary, and old with service, to the mercy
Of a rude stream, that must for ever hide me.
Vain pomp, and glory of this world, I hate ye; I feel my heart new opened: O, how wretched Is that poor man, that hangs on princes’ favours! There is, betwixt that smile we would aspire to,
That sweet aspect of princes, and their ruin,
More pangs and fears than wars or women have; And when he falls, he falls like Lucifer,
Never to hope again.
Enter Cromwell, angrily.

Why, how now Cromwell?

Crom. I have no power to speak, sir.

Wol. What mean'st thou, Gent.

I know myself now; and I feel within me
A peace above all earthly dignities,
A still and quiet conscience. The king has cur'd me,
I humbly thank his grace; and from these shoulders,
These ruin'd pillars, out of pity, taken
A load would sink a navy, too much honour:
O, 'tis a burden, Cromwell, 'tis a burden.

Too heavy for a man that hopes for heaven; of it.

Crom. I am glad, your grace has made that right use
Of it. I hope, I leave: I am able now, methinks,
(Out of a fortitude of soul I feel,) To endure more miseries, and greater far,
Than my weak-hearted enemies dare offer.
What news abroad?

Crom. The heaviest and the worst,
Is your displeasure with the king.

Wol. God bless him!

Crom. The next is that sir Thomas More is chosen
Lord chancellor in your place.

Wol. That's somewhat sudden:
But he's a learned man. May he continue
Long in his highness' favour, and do justice
For truth's sake, and his conscience; that his bones,
When he has run his course, and sleeps in blessings,
May have a tomb of orphan's tears wept on 'em!
What more?

Crom. That Cranmer is return'd with welcome,
Install'd lord archbishop of Canterbury.

Wol. That's news indeed.

Crom. Last, that the lady Anne,
When the king hath in secrecy long married,
This day was view'd in open, as his queen,
Going to chapel; and the voice is now
Only about her coronation.

Wol. There was the weight that pull'd me down.

O Cromwell, the king has gone beyond me, all my glories
In that one woman I have lost for ever:
No sun shall ever usher forth mine honours,
Or gild again the noble troops that waited
Upon my smiles. Go, get thee from me, Cromwell;
I am a poor fallen man, unworthy now
To be thy lord and master: Seek the king;
That sun, I pray, may never set! I have told him
What, and how true thou art; he will advance thee;
Some little memory of me will stir him,
(I know by noble nature,) not to let
Thy hopeful service perish too: Good Cromwell,
Neglect him not; make use now, and provide
For thine own future safety.

Crom. My lord, Must I then leave you? must I needs forego
So good, so noble, and so true a master?
Dear witness, all that have not hearts of iron,
With what a sorrow Cromwell leaves his lord.—
The king shall have my service; but my prayers
For ever, and for ever, shall be yours.

Wol. Cromwell, I did not think to shed a tear
In all my miseries; but thou hast forc'd me
Out of thy honest truth to play the woman,
Let's dry our eyes: and thus far hear me, Cromwell;

And,—when I am forgotten, as I shall be;
And sleep in dull cold marble, where no mention
Of me more must be heard of,—say, I taught thee;
Say, Wolsey,—that once trod the ways of glory,
And sounded all the depths and shoals of honour,
Found thee a way, out of his wreck, to rise in;
A sure and safe one, though thy master miss'd it.
Mark but my fall, and that that ruin'd me.
Cromwell, I charge thee, fling away ambition;
By that sin fell the angels; how can man then,
The image of his Maker, hope to win by 't?
Love thyself last: cherish those hearts that hate thee:
Corruption wins not more than honesty.
Still in thy right hand carry gentle peace,
To silence envious tongues. Be just, and fear not:
Let all the ends, thou aim'st at, be thy country's,
Thy God's, and truth's; then, if thou fall'st, O Cromwell,
Thou fall'st a blessed martyr. Serve the king;
And,—Pr'ythee, lead me in:
There take an inventory of all, I have.
To the last penny: 'tis the king's: my robe,
And my integrity to heaven, is all
I dare now call mine own. O Cromwell, Cromwell,
Had I but serv'd my God with half the zeal
I serv'd my king, he would not in mine age
Have left me naked to mine enemies.

Crom. Good sir, have patience.

Wol. So I have. Farewell
The hopes of court! my hopes in heaven do well.

[Exeunt]

ACT IV.

SCENE 1.—A Street in Westminster.

Enter Two Gentlemen, meeting.

1 Gent. You are well met once again.

2 Gent. And so are you.

1 Gent. You come to take your stand here and be
The lady Anne pass from her coronation? [hold
2 Gent. 'Tis all my business. At our last encounter,
The duke of Buckingham came from his trial.
1 Gent. 'Tis very true; but that time 'tis dear;
This, general joy.

2 Gent. 'Tis well: The citizens,
I am sure, have shewn at full their royal minds;
As, let them have their rights, they are ever forward
In celebration of this day with shows,
Pageants, and sights of honour.

1 Gent. Never greater.

2 Gent. Nor, I'll assure you, better taken, sir.

1 Gent. May I be bold to ask what that contains,
That paper in your hand?

2 Gent. Yes; 'tis the list
Of those, that claim their offices this day,
By custom of the coronation.

The duke of Suffolk is the first, and chins
To be high steward; next, the duke of Norfolk,
He to be earl marshal; you may read the rest.

1 Gent. Thank you, sir; had I not known those cus
I should have been beholden to your paper. [toms,
But, I beseech you, what's become of Katharine,
The princess dowager? how goes her business?

2 Gent. That I can tell you too. The archbishop Of Canterbury, accompanied with other
Learned and revered fathers of his order,
Held a late court at Dunstable, six miles off
From Ampthill, where the princess lay; to which,
She oft was cited by them, but appear'd not:

And, to be short, for not appearance, and

568 KING HENRY VIII.
ACT IV.—SCENE II.

The king's late scruple, by the main assent
Of all these learned men she was divorc'd,
And the late marriage made of none effect:
Since which, she was removed to Kimbolton,
Where she remains now, sick.

2 Gent. Alas, good lady!—[Trumpets. The trumpets sound: stand close, the queen is coming.

A lively flourish of Trumpets: then, enter

1. Two Judges.
2. Lord Chancellor, with the purse and mace before him.
3. Choristers singing.
4. Mayor of London bearing the mace. Then Garder, in his coat of arms, and, on his head, a gilt copper crown.
5. Marquis Dorset, bearing a sceptre of gold, on his head a demi-coronal of gold. With him, the Earl of Surrey, bearing the rod of silver with the dove, crowned with an earl's coronet. Collars of SS.
6. Duke of Suffolk, in his robe of estate, his coronet on his head, bearing a long white wand, as high-steward. With him, the Duke of Norfolk, with the rod of marshallship, a coronet on his head. Collars of SS.
7. A canopy borne by four of the Cinque-ports; under it, the Queen in her robe; in her hair richly adorned with pearl, crowned. On each side of her, the Bishops of London and Winchester.
8. The old Duchess of Norfolk, in a coronal of gold, wrought with flowers, bearing the Queen's train.
9. Certain Ladies or Countesses, with plain circlets of gold without flowers.

2 Gent. A royal train, believe me.—These I know; Who's that, that bears the scepter?
1 Gent. Marquis Dorset:
And that the Earl of Surrey, with the rod.
2 Gent. A bold brave gentleman: And that should
The duke of Suffolk.

1 Gent. 'Tis the same; high-steward.
2 Gent. And that my lord of Norfolk?
1 Gent. Yes.
2 Gent. Heaven bless thee! [Looking on the Queen.
Thai thou the sweetest face I ever look'd on.—Sir, as I have a soul, she is an angel; Our king has all the Indies in his arms, And more, and richer, when he strains that lady; I cannot blame his conscience.
1 Gent. They, that bear
The cloth of honour over her, are four barons
Of the Cinque-ports.

2 Gent. Those men are happy; and so are all, I take it, she that carries up the train, [near her, Is that old noble lady, Duchess of Norfolk.
1 Gent. It is; and all the rest are countesses.
2 Gent. Their coronets say so. These are stars, in-
And, sometimes, falling ones. [deed;
1 Gent. No more of that.

Enter a third Gentleman.

God save you, sir! Where have you been broiling?
3 Gent. Among the crowd! the abbey; where a finger
Could not be wedg'd in more; and I am staid
With the mere rankness of their joy.

2 Gent. You saw
The ceremony?
3 Gent. That I did.
1 Gent. How was it?
3 Gent. Well worth the seeing.

2 Gent. Good sir, speak it to us.
5 Gent. As well as I am able. The rich stream
Of lords, and ladies, having brought the queen
To a prepar'd place in the choir, fell off
A distance from her: while her grace sat down
To rest a while, some half an hour, or so,
In a rich chair of state, opposing freely
The beauty of her person to the people.
Believe me, sir, she is the goodliest woman
That ever lay by man: which when the people
Had the full view of, such a noise arose
As the shrouds make at sea in a stiff tempest,
As loud, and to as many tunes: hats, cloaks.
(Doubtless, I think,) flew up: and had their faces
Been Jooes, this day they had been lost. Such joy
I never saw before. Great-bellied women,
That had not half a week to go, like rams
In the old time of war, would shake the press,
And make them reel before them. No man living
Could say, This is my wife; there; all were woken
So strangely in one piece.

2 Gent. But, 'pray, what followed? [Pages
5 Gent. At length her grace rose, and with modest Came to the altar: where she kneel'd, and, saint-like,
Cast her fair eyes to heaven, and prayed devoutly,
Then rose again, and bow'd her to the people.
When by the archbishop of Canterbury
She had all the royal making of a queen;
As holy oil, Edward Confessor's crown,
The rod, and bird of peace, and all such emblems
Laid nobly on her; which perform'd, the choir,
With all the choicest music of the kingdom,
Together sung: 'Te Deum.' So she parted,
And with the same full state pac'd back again
To York-place, where the feast is held.

1 Gent. Sir, you
Must no more call it York-place, that is past:
For, since the cardinal fell, that title's lost;
'Tis now the king's, and call'd—Whitehall.
3 Gent. I know it;
But 'tis so lately alter'd, that the old name
Is fresh about me.

2 Gent. What two reverend bishops
Were those that went on each side of the queen?
3 Gent. Stokesley and Gardiner, the one, of Win-
(NEWLY preferr'd from the king's secretary,) c.chester,
The other, London.

2 Gent. He of Winchester
Is held no great good lover of the archbishop's,
The virtuous Cranmer.

3 Gent. All the land knows that:
However, yet there is no great breach; when it comes,
Cranmer will find a friend will not shrink from him.

2 Gent. Who may that be, I pray you?
3 Gent. Thomas Cromwell;
A man in much esteem with the king, and truly
A worthy friend.—The king
Has made him master o'the jewel-house
And one, already, of the privy council.

2 Gent. He will deserve more.
3 Gent. Yes, without all doubt.
Come, gentlemen, ye shall go my way, which
Is to the court, and there ye shall be my guests;
Something I can command. As I walk thither,
I'll tell ye more.

Both. You may command us, sir. [Eystent

SCENE II.—Kimbolton.

Enter Katharine, Dowager, sick; led between Griffith and Patience.

Griff. How does your grace?
And, to add greater honours to his age
Than man could give him, he died fearing God.
Kath. After my death I wish no other herald,
No other speaker of my living actions,
To keep mine honour from corruption,
But such an honest chronicler as Griffith.
Whom I most hated living, thou hast made me,
With thy religious truth, and modesty.
Now in his ashes honour: Peace be with him!—
Patience, be near me still; and set me lower:
I have not long to trouble thee.—Good Griffith,
Cause the musicians play me that sad note
I nam'd my knell, whilst I sit meditating
On that celestial harmony I go to.
Sad and solemn music.
Grif. She is asleep: Good wench, let's sit down quiet,
For fear we wake her;—Softly, gentle Patience.

The Vision. Enter, solemnly tripping one after another, six Personages, clad in white robes, wearing on their heads garlands of' bulls, and golden vizards on their faces; branches of laurel, or palm, in their hands.
They first conge unto her, then dance; and at certain changes, the first two hold a square garland over her head; at which, the other four make reverend court'sies; then the two, that held the garland, de-liber the same to the other next two, who observe the same order in their changes, and holding the garland over her head: which done, they deliver the same garland to the last two, who likewise observe the same order; at which, (as it were by inspiration,) she makes in her sleep signs of rejoicing, and holdeth up her hands to heaven: and so in their dancing they vanish, carrying the garland with them." The muicue continues.

Kath. Spirits of peace, where are ye? Are ye all gone?
And leave me here in wretchedness behind ye?
Grif. Madam, we are here.

Kath. It is not you I call for:
Saw ye none enter, since I slept?
Grif. No, madam. No! Saw ye not, even now, a blessed troop
Invite me to a banquet; whose bright faces
Cast thousand beams upon me, like the sun?
They promis'd me eternal happiness;
And brought me garlands, Griffith, which I feel
I am not worthy yet to wear: I shall,
Assuredly.
Grif. I am most joyful, madam, such good dreams
Possess your fancy.

Kath. Bid the music leave,
They are harsh and heavy to me.
[Music ceases
Pat. Do you note,
How much her grace is alter'd on a sudden;
How long her face is drawn? How pale she looks,
And of an earthly cold! Mark you her eyes?
Grif. She is going, wench; pray, pray.
Pat. Heaven comfort her!

Enter a Messenger.
Mess. Ain't like your grace,—
Kath. You are a saucy fellow.

Deserve we no more reverence?
Grif. You are to blame.
Knowing, she will not lose her wonted greatness
To use so rude behaviour: go to, kneel.
Mess. I humbly do entreat your highness' pardon;
My haste made me unmannerly: There is staying
A gentleman, sent from the king, to see you.
ACT V.—SCENE I.

Kath. Admit him entrance, Griffith: But this fellow Let me ne'er see again. [Ex. Griffith & Messenger.

Regent Griffith, with Capucius.

If my sight fail not, You should be lord ambassador from the emperor, My royal nephew, and your name Capucius.

Cap. Madam, the same, your servant.

Kath. O my lord, The times, and titles, now are alter'd strangely With me, since first you knew me. But, I pray you, What is your pleasure with me?

Cap. Noble lady, First mine own service to your grace; the next, The in young age, and of a noble modest nature, Who graces much for your weakness, and by me Sends you his princely commendations, And heartily entreats you take good comfort.

Kath. Of my good lord, that comfort comes too late; 'Tis like a pardon after execution:
That gentle physic, given in time, had cur'd me; But now I am past all comforts here, but prayers. How goes his highness?

Cap. Nadám, in good health.

Kath. So may he ever do! and ever flourish, When I shall dwell with worms, and my poor name Banish'd the kingdom!—Patience, is that letter, I can'st you write, yet sent away?

Pat. No, madam. [Giving it to Katharine.

Kath. Sir, I most humbly pray you to deliver This to my lord the king.

Cap. Most willingly, madam.

Kath. In which I have commended to his goodness The model of our chaste loves, his young daughter:— The deys of heaven fall thick in blessings on her!— Beseeching him, to give her virtuous breeding; (The is young, and of a noble modest nature; I hope, she will deserve well;) and a little, To love her for her mother's sake, that lov'd him, Heaven knows how dearly. My next poor petition Is, that his noble grace would have some pity Upon my wretched women, that so long, Have follow'd both my fortunes faithfully: Of which there is not one, I dare avow. (And now I should not lie,) but will deserve, For virtue, and true beauty of the soul, For honesty, and decent carriage, A right good husband, let him be a noble; And, sure, those men are happy that shall have them. The last is, for my men;—they are the poorest, But poverty could never draw them from me;— That they may have their wages duly paid them, And something over to remember me by; If heaven had pleas'd to have given me longer life, And able means, we had not parted thus. These are the whole contents:—And, good my lord, By that you love the dearest in this world, As which there is not one, I dare avow. Shall these, and all your friends, and all your wishes, To me do this last right.

Cap. By heaven, I will; Or let me lose the fashion of a man! Kath. I thank you, honest lord. Remember me In all humility unto his highness:
Say, his long trouble now is passing Of which this world: tell him, in death, I bless'd him, For so I will.—Mine eyes grow dim.—Farewell, My lord.—Griffith, farewell.—Nay, Patience, You must not leave me yet. I must to bed; Call in more women.—When I am dead, good wench, Let me be us'd with honour; strew me over With maiden flowers, that all the world may know

I was a chaste wife to my grave: embalm me. Then lay me forth: although unqueen'd, yet like A queen, and daughter to a king, inter me. I can do more.— [Exeunt, leaving Katharine.

ACT V.

SCENE I.—A Gallery in the Palace.

Enter Gardiner, Bishop of Winchester, a Page with a torch before him, met by Sir Thomas Lovell.

Gard. It's one o'clock, boy, is't not time? It hath struck.

Gard. These should be hours for necessities, Not for delights; times to repair our nature With comforting repose, and not for us [fans me! To waste these times.—Good hour of night, sir Tho-Whither so late?

Lov. Came you from the king, my lord?

Gard. I did, sir Thomas; and left him at primo With the duke of Suffolk.

Lov. I must to him too, Before he go to bed. I'll take my leave.

Gard. Not yet, sir Thomas Lovell. What's the matter? It seems, you are in haste; an if there be [ter? No great offence belongs to. give your friend Some touch of your late business: Affairs, that walk (As they say, spirits do,) at midnight, have In them a wilder nature, than the business That seeks despatch by day.

Lov. My lord, I love you; And durst commend a secret to your ear

Methinks, I could

Gard. But, sir, sir,—

Methinks, I could

Lov. Hear me, sir Thomas: You are a gentleman Of mine own way; I know you wise, religions; And, let me tell you, it will ne'er be well,— 'Twill not, sir Thomas Lovell, take't of me, Till Cranmer, Cromwell, her two hands, and she, Sleep in their graves.

Lov. Now, sir, you speak of two

The most remarkable kingdom. As for Cromwell, Beside that of the jewel-house, he's made master O' the rolls, and the king's secretary; further, sir, Stands in the gap and trade of more preferments, With which the time will load him: The archbishop is the king's hand, and tongue; and who dare speak One syllable against him?

Gard. But, sir, sir,—

Lov. Yes, yes, sir Thomas,

There is that dare; and I myself have ventured To speak my mind of him: and, indeed, this day, Sir, (I may tell it you,) I think, I have Incess'd the lords o' the council, that he is (As so I know he is, the king's hand, and tongue,) A most arch heretic, a pestilence That does infect the land: with which they mov'd, Have broken with the king; who hath so far Given ear to our complaint, (of his great grace And princely care; foreseeing those fell mischiefs Our reasons laid before him,) he hath commanded,
KING HENRY VIII.

To-morrow morning to the council-board
To be continued. de's a rank weed, so Thomas,
And we must cut him out. From your affairs
I am sure you are long, good angel, Sir Thomas.
Law. Many good nights, my lord. Leave your seat.

Error to Gower the next Page.

I do not the King, and the

K. How. Chambers, I will play no more tonight.
M. Mewson, on it, you are too hard for me.
K. As I take. But his lord, Chambers.
M. Nor shall not, when my fancy I play—
Now, love, from the queen what is the news now.
I could not personally desire her to What you commanded me, but by the woman
I sent your message, which / she heard her name
It were extremely unpleasant, and dear to your kindness.
May hourly to pray for her.
K. Then. What say it cannot be To pray for her, what is she doing out
I. So said her woman, and of her appearance
Almost each day a dream.

A. Then.

A. God, God, and God. Safe Godly sent her at her request and in gentle travail, in the kindling of Your goodness was ever mine.
K. Then. The midnight, Charles.
Peri, to bed; and in the course remember.
The rest upon your queen. Leave me alone;
For I must think of that, which concern
Will not be easily to:

K. Then. I wear your kindness.
A most sweet night, and my great kindness still.
Remember in my prayers.

A. Then, Charles, good night. — [Exit.

End of Act Fourth.

Scene i. To the new Church.

Dew. So I have thought it not the undertaking,
As our council commanded.

L. Lord, the Cambridge.

Dew. At my good lord.
K. Then. This time Where is the, Dewy,
Now he addresses your highness, pleasure.
A. Then. Bring him in to us.
[Exit Dewy.
K. Then. Does ever face that wishes the noble Prince?
I am truly some mother. — [Exit.

Error to Fanny, the Chamberl.

K. Then. Avoid the gallery. [LOWELL enters to say,
Fla' — I have said. — Be gay.

What.

[Exit. LOWELL and Fanny.

Coun. I am certain. — You know what he was.
To his respect above. Does not well.
Coun. How now, my dear? I desire to know
Where I can I sent you.
Coun. It is my duty.
You intend your highness pleasure.

Coun. You intend.

My good and famous friend of Cambridge.
Come, you and I must with a heart together.
I have news to tell you. Come come come give me your love.
As good and well I give word to make. Indeed.
And all the time to repeat when followed.
I have, the most unwillingly, of late
Heard many прекрас, I say my Lord.
Some time come of you when, being persuaded.
Some you are to us and our concern, that you shall
This morning come before us, where, I know.
You cannot with such devotion purge yourself,

But that, as he makes me those charges
Which will require your answer you must take.
Your reverence of it, I am well accustomed
To make in your house the play. For a mother of us,
Is we then proceed, or do witnesses
Will a come against you.

Coun. I stumble, think you my happiness,
I am right glad to cancel an exceptional occasion.
Your talk to be, we will have in my staff
And even such in manner. I know.
There's, some instances made revengeous banquets,
I do, my Lord.
A. Then. Standing, good Cambridge.
Dewy, and the majesty is viewed.
Is, my Lord. Give me to and stand up.
They not, let's walk. Now on my holy-sole.
I think some man are you? My Lord. If I look
You would not give me your statement that I should have lien some pain to be brought,
You and your brethren; and to take you
As the instance further.

Coun.

Coun. The good I stand on us my trust, and honesty.
If I shall think, I, with some others,
Was only over my person, when I went not.
Saying of those virtues vacant. I need nothing
What can be said against me.

Coun. Know you not how
Your state sits in the world, where the whose world?
Your earnestness are many and not small; these practices
Must bear some proportion, is not over.
The passing and the death of the men on earth;
The hope of the veritable with it; A. what case
Might be, or might not, as our knowledge is concerned.
To swear against you, such things have been done.
You are wholly opposed, and with a malice of his greatness.
But you of better luck.
I mean, in pretty astonishment, that you whereby
Whose majesty you are, were here have I.
Upon this majesty e'en. Go on to, go.
To make a pretence for my enemy of danger.
And in your own destruction.

Coun. God, and your majesty.
Promise much convenience, or I am sure
The trump shall be for me.

Coun. I, so.

Be of good cheer;
They say no more present, when we are by to.
Keep comfort in us, and this sure we say
You do appear before them, if they shall chance.
In charging you with marks, to do you,
The best persuasions to the contrary.
I'm not to this, and with what woe.
Use the occasion shall instruct you our enemies
With reader you do remedy the wrong;
Deliver them, and your appeal to us.
These make before them. Look, the good man weeps.
He's honest, am now honourable. God, these mother?
I swear, by some unknown and, to head.
None power in my head.— Get a prize.
And do not dare but fall. — [Exit Chamberl.
He has His language in his head.

Scene ii. To the Lady.

Coun. [Within.] Come back. What mean you? —
Coun. I am now the the things that I wrong
With you, my chamberlaine, — Now, good angels
Fly to your own head, and make your person
Under their blessed wings.

A. Here.

Now by my books
I guess my message. Is the queen be very?
Say it! and of a joy.
ACT V.—SCENE II.

LADY.  Ay, ay, my liege; And of a lovely boy: The god of heaven Both now and ever bless thee, little girl, Promise boys hereafter. Sir, your queen Desires your visitation, and to be Acquainted with this stranger; 'tis as like you, As cherry is to cherry.

K. Hen. Lowell,—

Enter LOWELL.

Low. Sir.

K. Hen. Give her an hundred marks, I'll to the queen. [Exit King.

Lady. An hundred marks! By this light, I'll have An ordinary gown is for such payment. [more.

I will have more, or scold it out of him. Said I for this, this girl is like to him? I will have more, or else unsay; and now While it is hot, it'll put to the issue. [Exit.

SCENE II.—Lobby before the Council-Chamber.

Enter Chamber, Servants, Door-keeper, &c. attending.

Cran. I hope I am not too late; and yet the gentleman That was sent to me from the council, pray'd me. man, To make great haste. All fast! what means this?—Hoa! Who waits there?—Sure, you know me?

D. Keep. Yes, my lord, But yet I cannot help you. Why?

D. Keep. Your grace must wait, till you be call'd for.

Enter Doctor BUTTS.

BUTTS. This is a piece of malice. I am glad, I came this way so happily: The king Shall understand it presently. [Exit BUTTS.

Cran. [Aside.] 'Tis BUTTS, The king's physician; as he past along, How carelessly he cast his eyes upon me! Pray heaven, he sound not my disgraces! For certain, This is of purpose lay'd, by some that hate me. (God turn their hearts! I never sought their malice,) To quench mine honour: they would shame to make Wait else at door, a fellow counsellor, [me Among boys, grooms, and lackeys. But their pleasures Must be fulfill'd, and I attend with patience.

Enter, at a window above, the King and BUTTS.

Butts. I'll shew your grace the strangest sight,—

K. Hen. What's that, BUTTS? Butts. I think your highness saw this many a day. K. Hen. Body o' me, where is it?

BUTTS. There, my lord; The high promotion of his grace of Canterbury; Who holds his state at door, 'mongst pursuivants, Pages and footboys.

K. Hen. Ila! 'Tis he, indeed: Is this the honour they do one another? 'Tis well there's one above them yet. I had thought, They had parted so much honesty among them, (At least, good manners,) as not thus to suffer A man of his place, and so near our favour, To dance attendance on their lordships' pleasures, And at the door too, like a post with packets. By holy Mary, BUTTS, there's knavery: Let them alone, and draw the curtain close; We shall hear more anon. [Exeunt.

THE COUNCIL-CHA MBER.

Enter the Lord Chamberlain, the Duke of Suffolk, Earl of Surrey, Lord Chamberlain, Gardiner, and Cromwell. The Chancellor places himself at the upper end of the table on the left hand; a seat being left and above him, as for the Archbishop of Canterbury. The rest set themselves in order on each side. CROMWELL at the lower end, as secretary.

Cran. Speak to the business, master secretary: Why are we met in council?

Crom. Please your honours, The chief cause concerns his grace of Canterbury. Gar. Has he had knowledge of it?

Yes. Nor. Who waits there?

D. Keep. Without, of my noble lords!

Gar. Yes. D. Keep. My lord archbishop;

And has done half an hour, to know your pleasures. Cran. Let him come in.

D. Keep. Your grace may enter now. [CROMWELL approaches the council-table.

Cran. My good lord archbishop, I am very sorry To sit here at this present, and behold That chair stand empty: But we all are men, In or out of nature's trial; and capable Of our flesh, how are we subject: out of which frailty, And want of wisdom, you, that best should teach us, Have misdeem'd yourself, and not a little, Toward the king first, then his laws, in filling The whole realm, by your teaching, and your council, (For so we are inform'd,) with new opinions, [lains, Divers and dangerous: which are heresies, And, most reform'd, may prove pernicious.

Gar. Which reformation must be sudden too, My noble lords: for those that trust wild horses, Pace them not in their hands to make them gentle; But stop their mouths with stubborn bits, and spur Till they obey the manage. If we suffer [them, Out of our cautious, and childish pity, To one man's honour: this contagious sickness, Farewell, all physic: And what follows then? Commotions, uproars, with a general taint Of the whole state: as, of late days, our neighbours, The upper Germany, can dearly witness, Yet fresh in our memories.

Cran. My good lords, hitherto, in all the progress Both in my life and office, I have had you, And with no little study, that my teaching, And the strong course of my authority, Might go one way, and safely; and the end Was ever, to do well: nor is there living (I speak it with a single heart, my lords,) A man that more detests, more stirs against, Both in his private conscience, and his place, Defacers of a public peace, than I do. Pray heaven, the king may never find a heart With less allegiance in it! Men, that make Empty, and crooked malice, nourishment, Dare bite the best. I do beseech your lordships, That, in this case of justice, my accusers, Be what they will, they may stand forth face to face, And freely urge against me.

Suf. Nay, my lord, That cannot be; you are a counsellor, And, by that virtue, no man dare accuse you. Gar. My lord, because we have business of great moment. We will be sure to meet with you. 'Tis his highness' pleasure, And our consent, for better trial of you, [sure, From hence you be committed to the Tower, Where, being but a private man again, You shall know many dare accuse you boldly, More than, I fear, you are provided for.

Cran. Ah, my good lord of Winchester, I thank you,
KING HENRY VIII.

You are always my good friend; if your will pass,
I shall both find your lordship judge and juror,
You are so merciful! I see your end,
'Tis my unloving: Love, and meekness, lord,
Become a churchman better than ambition;
Woe straying souls with modesty again,
Cast none away. That I shall clear myself,
Las all the weight ye can upon my patience,
I make as little doubt, as you do conscience,
In doing daily wrongs. I could say more,
But reverence to your calling makes me modest.

Gar. My lord, my lord, you are a sectary,
That's the plain truth; your painted glass discover
To men that understand you, words and weakness.

Crom. My lord of Winchester, you are a little,
By your good favour, too sharp; men so noble,
However faulty, yet should find respect
For what they have been: 'tis a cruelty,
To load a falling man.

Gar. Good master secretary,
I cry your honour mercy; you may, worst
Of this this table, say so.

Crom. Why, my lord?
Gar. Do not I know you for a favourer
Of this new sect! ye are not sound.

Crom. Not sound?
Gar. Not sound, I say.

Crom. 'Would you were half so honest!
Men's prayers then would seek you, not their fears.
Gar. I shall remember this bold language.

Crom. Remember your bold life too.

Chan. This is too much;
Forbear, for shame, my lords.

Gar. I have done.

Crom. Then thus for you, my lord.—It stands
I take it, by all voices, that forthwith [agreed,
You be conveyed to the Tower a prisoner;
There to remain, till the king's further pleasure,
Be known unto us: Are you all agreed, lords?

All. We are.

Chan. Is there no other way of mercy,
But what must needs to the Tower, my lords?

Gar. What other
Would you expect? You are strangely troublesome:
Let some o'the guard be ready there.

Enter Guard.

For me?

Gar. Must I go like a traitor thither?

Chan. I shall find you safe i'the Tower.

Gar. Stay, good my lords;
I have a little yet to say. Look there, my lords;
By virtue of that ring, I take my cause
Out of the gripes of cruel men, and give it
To a most noble judge, the king my master.

Chan. This is the king's ring.

Surf. 'Tis the right ring, by heaven: I told ye all,
When we first put this dangerous stone a rolling,
'Twould fall upon ourselves.

Nor. Do you think, my lords,
The king will suffer but the little finger
Of this man to be vex'd!

Chan. 'Tis now too certain:
How much more is his life in value with him?
'Would I were fairly out on't.

Crom. My mind gave me,
In seeking tales, and informations,
Against this man, (whose honesty the devil
And his disciples only envy at,)
Of thee, which says thus, Do my lord of Canterbury
A shrewd turn, and he is your friend for ever.—
Come, lords, we trifle time away: I long
To have this young one made a christian.
As I have made ye one, lords, one remain;
So I grow stronger, you more honour gain. [Exeunt.]

SCENE III.—The Palace Yard.

Noise and tumult within. Enter Porter and his Man.

Port. You'll leave your noise anon, ye rascals; Do you take the court for Paris-garden! ye rude slaves, leave your gapig. [Larder.]

[Within.] Good master porter, I belong to the Port. Belong to the gallows, and be hanged, you rogue: Is this a place to roar in?—Fetch me a dozen crab-tree slaves, and strong ones; these are but switches to them.—I'll scratch your heads: You must be seeing christenings! Do you look for ale and cakes here, you rade rascals? [siblo

Man. Pray, sir, be patient; 'tis as much impos-

(Unless we sweep them from the door with cannons.) To scatter them, as 'tis to make them sleep

On May-day morning; which will never be:

We may as well push against Paul's, as stir them

Port. I'll have them in; be you there. [siblo

Man. Alas, I know not; How gets the tidein?

As much as one sound cudgel of four foot

(You see the poor remainder) could distribute,

I made no spare, sir.

Port. You did nothing, sir.

Man. I am not Samson, nor sir Guy, nor Colbrand, to do you and my master before me: but, if I spared and that had a head to hit, either young or old, lie or she, cuckold or cuckold-maker, let me never hope to see a chine again; and that I would not for a cow, God save her.

Port. I shall be with you presently, good master puppy.—Keep the door close, sirrah.

Man. What would you have me do?

Port. What should you do, but knock them down by the dozens! Is this Moorfields to mister in? or have we some strange Indian with the great tool come to court, the women so besiege us? Bless me, what a fryr of fornication is at door! On my christian conscience, there be no christening, but I cannot refuse; hence will be the father, godfather, and all together.

Man. The spoons will be the bigger, sir. There is a fellow somewhat near the door, he should be arazier by his face, for, o' my conscience, twenty of the dog-days now rega in's nose; all that stand about him are under the line, they need no other penance: That fire-drake did I hit three times on the head, and three times was his nose discharged against me; he stands there, like a mortar-piece, to blow us. There was a haberdasher's wife of small wit near him, that railed upon me till her pink'd porringer fell off her head, for kindsling such a combustion in the state. I miss'd the meteor once, and hit that woman, who cried out, cielo! when I might see from far some forty trenchescreers draw to her succour, which were the hope of the Strand, where she was quartered. They fell on: I made good my place; at length they came to the broomstaff with me, I defended them still; when suddenly a file of boys behind them, loose shot, delivered such a shower of pebbles, that I was fain to do my utmost he could not get but the work: The devil was amongst them, I think, surely.

Port. These are the youths that thunder at a playhouse, and fight for bitten apples; that no audience, but the Tribulation of Tower-hill, or the limbs of Limehouse, their dear brothers, are able to endure. I have some of them in Limbo Patrum, and there they are like to dance these three days; besides the running banquet of two beadle, that is to come.

Enter the Lord Chamberlain.

Cham. Mercy o' me, what a multitude are here! They grow still too, from all parts they are coming, As if we kept a fair here! Where are these porters, These lazy knaves? Ye have made a fine hand, fel-

There's a trim rabble let in: Are all these flows. Your faithfull friends o' the suburbs? We shall have Great store of room, no doubt, left for the ladies, When they pass back from the christening.

Port. An' please your honour

We are but men; and what so many may do,

Not being torn a pieces, we have done:

An army cannot rule them.

Cham. As I live,

If the king blame me for't, I'll lay ye all

By the heels, and suddenly; and on your heads

Chap round fines, for neglect: You are lazy knaves,

And here ye lie baiting of bumbards, when

Ye should do service, Hark, the trumpets sound;

They are come already from the christening:

Go, break among the press, and find a way out

To let the troop pass fairly; or I'll find

A Marshalsea, shall hold you play these two months.

Port. Make way there for the princess.

Man. You great fellow, stand close up, or I'll make your head ake.

Port. You'lt the camlet, get up o' the rail: I'll pick you o'er the pales else. [Exeunt.

SCENE IV.—The Palace.

Enter trumpets, sounding; then Two Aldermen, Lord

Mayor, Garter, Cranmer, Duke of Norfolk, with his marshal's staff; Duke of Suffolk, Two

Norfolk, with great standing-bows for the christening gifts; then Four Noblemen bearing great standing-bows for the christening gifts; then Four Noblemen bearing a canopy, under which the DUCHESS OF NORFOLK, godmother, bearing the child richly habited in a mantle,

&c. Train borne by a Lady: then follow the Mancinnors of Donset, the other godmother, and La-thieves. The troop pass once about the stage, and Garter speaks.

Gast. Heaven from thy endless goodness, send prosperous life, long, and ever happy, to the high and mighty princess of England, Elizabeth!

Flourish. Enter King and Train.

Cran. [Knocking.] And to your royal grace, and the good queen,

My noble partners, and myself, thus pray:—

All comfort, joy, in this most gracious lady,

Heaven ever laid up to make parents happy,

May hourly fall upon ye!

K. Hen. Thank you, good lord archbishop,

What is her name?

Cran. Elizabeth.

K. Hen. Stand up, lord. [The King kisses the child.

With this kiss take my blessing: God protect thee!

Into whose hands I give thy life.

Cran. Amen.

K. Hen. My noble gossips, ye have been too pro-

I thank ye heartily; so shall this lady.

[Digal.

When she has so much English.

Cran. Let me speak, sir

For heaven now bids me; and the words I utter

Let none think flattery, for they'll find them truth.
KING HENRY VIII.

This royal infant, (heaven still move about her!) Though in her cradle, yet now promises Upon this land a thousand thousand blessings, Which time shall bring to ripeness: She shall be But few now living can behold that goodness, A pattern to all princes living with her, And all that shall succeed: Sheba was never More covetous of wisdom, and fair virtue, Than this pure soul shall be: all princely graces, That mould up such a mighty piece as this is, With all the virtues that attend the good, Shall still be doubled on her: truth shall nurse her, Holy and heavenly thoughts still counsel her: She shall be lov'd, and fear'd: Her own shall bless her: Her foes shake like a field of beaten corn, And hang their heads with sorrow: Good grows with In her days every man shall eat in safety [her: Under his own vine, what he plants; and sing The merry songs of peace to all his neighbours: God shall be truly known; and those about her From her shall read the perfect ways of honour, And by those claim their greatness, not by blood. [Nor shall this peace sleep with her: But as when The bird of wonder dies, the maiden phoenix, Her ashes new create another heir, As great in admiration as herself; So shall she leave her blessedness to one, (When heaven shall call her from this cloud of dark- Who, from the sacred ashes of her honour, [ness,) Shall star-like rise, as great in fame as she was, And so stand fix'd: Peace, plenty, love, truth, terror, That were the servants to this chosen infant, Shall then be his, and like a vine grow to him; Wherever the bright sun of heaven shall shine, His honour, and the greatness of his name Shall be, and make new nations: He shall flourish, And, like a mountain cedar, reach his branches To all the plains about him:—Our children's child—Shall see this, and bless heaven. [dren

The play of Henry the Eighth is one of those which still keeps possession of the stage by the splendour of its pagentry. The coronation, about forty years ago, drew the people together in multitudes for the great part of the winter. Yet pomp is not the only merit of this play. The most sorrowful and various distress of Katharine have furnished some scenes, which may beчисуе новохоронное место в трагедии; но столь же отлично как и в изящный портрет Королевы Катарин. It has been sup- posed, that the epilogue and prologue, and a few incidental pas- sages, were added by Ben Jonson, on the revival of this play. 1613. This opinion was entertained by Stevens, Malone, Dr. Farmer, and Dr. Johnson, partly on the grounds of Shakespeare's absence from London, and partly on an imaginary detection of Jonson's style and manner. To demonstrate the vanity of all such actual speculations, it is now certain, that they were done probably from the pen of Shakespeare, who was still in London; and that, at all events, they could not have been written by Ben Jonson, for he was not even in England.

K. Hen. Thou speakst wonders. Cran. She shall be, to the happiness of England, An aged princess; many days shall see her, And yet no day without a deed to crown it. Would I had known no more! but she must die, She must, the saints must have her; yet a virgin, A most unspotted lily shall she pass To the ground, and all the world shall mourn her. K. Hen. O lord archbishop, Thou hast made me now a man; never, before This happy child, did I get any thing: This oracle of comfort has so pleas'd me, That, when I am in heaven, I shall desire To see what this child does, and praise my Maker. I thank ye all,—To you, my good lord mayor, And your good brethren, I am much beholden; I have receiv'd much honour by your presence, And ye shall find me thankfull. Lead the way lords; Ye must all see the queen, and she must thank ye, She will be sick else. This day, no man think He has business at his house; for all shall stay, This little one shall make it holiday. [Exeunt.

EPILOGUE.

Tis ten to one, this play can never please All that are here: Some come to take their ease, And sleep an act or two; but those, we fear, We have frighted with our trumpets; so, 'tis clear They'll say its naught: others, to hear the city Abus'd extremely, and to cry,—that's witty! Which we have not done neither: that, I fear, All the expected good we are like to hear For this play at this time, is only in The merciful construction of good women; For such a one we shew'd 'em; if they smile, And say, 'twill do, I know, within a while All the best men are ours; for 'tis ill hap, If they hold, when their ladies bid them clap.
TROILUS AND CRESSIDA.

This play was entered at Stationers' Hall, Feb. 1602-3, under the title of The Books of Troilus and Cressida; and was therefore probably written in 1602. It was not acted till 1669; when it was pressed by an advertisement of the editor, stating that "it had never been staged with the stage, never clasp-clawed with the palms of the vulgar." Yet, as the tragedy was entered in 1602-3, as acted by my lord Chamberlain's men; we must suppose that the editor's words do not mean that it had never been presented at all, but only at court, and not on the public stage.

There was a play upon this subject written by Dekker and Chettle, in 1593; the original story of Troilus and Cressida was the work of Lollius, a historian of Urbin, in Italy. It was, according to Dryden, written in Latin verse, and translated by Chancer. Shakespeare received the greater part of his materials from the Troy Books of Lydgate; and the romance of The Three Destinations of Troy.

PROLOGUE.

To Troy, there lies the scene. From isles of Greece
The princes orgulous, their high blood chaf'd,
Have to the port of Athens sent their ships,
Fraught with the ministers and instruments
Of cruel war: Sixty and nine, that wore
Their emblems regal, from the Athenian bay
Put forth toward Phrygia: and their vow is made,
To ransack Troy: within whose strong immures
The ravish'd Helen, Menelaus' queen,
With wanton Paris sleeps; and that's the quarell
To Tenedos they come;

And the deep-drawing barks do there diggorge
Their warlike fraughtage: Now on Dardan plains
The fresh and yet unbruised Greeks do pitch
Their brave pavilions: Priam's six-gated city,
Dardan, and Tymbria, Iliss, Chetas, Trojaan,
And Antenorides, with massey staples,
And corressive and fulfilling bolts,
Sperr up the sons of Troy:

Now expectation, ticking skittish spirits,
On one and other side, Trojan and Greek,
Sets all on bazzard:—And hither am I come
A prologue arm'd,—but not in confidence
Of author's pen, or actor voice: but suited
To like conditions as our argument,—

To tell you, fair beholders, that our play
Leaps o'er the vaunt and findings of those broils
Grown o'er in the middle, starting thence away
To what may be digested in a play.

Like, or find fault; do as your pleasures are;
Now good, or bad, 'tis but the chance of war.

ACT I.

SCENE 1.—Troy. Before Priam's Palace.

Enter Troilus armed, and Pandarbus.

Tro. Call here my valet, I'll unarm again:
Why should I war without the walls of Troy,
That find such cruel battle here within?

Each Trojan, that is master of his heart,
Let him to field; Troilus, alas! hath none.

Pan. Will this geoer ne'er be mended? [strength.

Tro. The Greeks are strong, and skilful to their Field to their skill, and to their formess valiant;
But I am weaker than a woman's tear.

Pan. Have I not married?

Tro. Ay, the grinding; but you must marry the bolting.

Pan. Have I not married?

Tro. Ay, the bolting: but you must marry the levening.

Tro. Still have I married.

Pan. Ay, to the levening: but here's yet in the word—hereafter, the kneading, the making of the cake, the heating of the oven, and the baking:
ay, you must stay the cooling too, or you may chance to burn your lips.

Pan. Patience herself, what goddesse e'er she be,
Dodh less than bird at sufficiency than I do.
At Priam's royal table do I sit;

And when fair Cressid comes into my thoughts,—
So, traitor! when she comes!—When is she thence?

Pan. Well, she looked yesternight fairer than ever
I saw her look, or any woman else.

Tro. I was about to tell thee,—When my heart,
As wedged with a sigh, would rive in twain;

Lost Hector or my father should perceive me.

I have (as when the sun doth light a storm.)

Bury'd this sigh in wink of a smile:

But sorrow, that is coach'd in seeming gladness,
Is like that mirth fate turns to sudden sadness.

Pan. An her hair were not somewhat darker than Helen's, (well, go to,) there were no more comparis son between the women.—But, for my part, she is my kinswoman; I would not, as they term it, praise her,—But I would somebody had heard her talk yesternight, as I did. I will not dispraise your sister Cas andra's wit; but—

Tro. O, Pandarbus! I tell thee, Pandarbus,—

When I tell thee, there my hopes lie drown'd,
Reply not in how many fathom deep
They lie indrench'd. I tell thee, I am mad
In Cressid's love: Thou answer'st, She is fair;
Pour'st in the open ulcer of my heart
Her eyes, her hair, her cheek, her gait, her voice;
Handfast in thy discourse, O, that her hand,
In whose comparison all whites are ink,
Writting their own reproach; To whose soft seizure
The cygnet's down is harsh, and spirit of sense,
Hard as the palm of ploughman! This thou'st tell'st me.
As true thou'st tell'st me, when I say—I love her;
But, saying thus, instead of oil and balm,
Thou lay'st in every gash that love hath given me
The knife that made it.
  Pan. I speak no more than truth.
  Tro. Thou dost not speak so much.
  Pan. Truth, I'll not meddle in't. Let her be as she is:
  If she be fair, 'tis the better for her; an she be not, she has the mends in her own hands.
  Tro. Good Pandarus! How now, Pandarus?
  Pan. I have had my labour for my travel; ill-thought on of her, and ill-thought en of you: gone between and between, but small thanks for my labour.
  Tro. What, art thou angry, Pandarus? what, with me?
  Pan. Because she is kin to me, therefore she's not so fair as Helen: as she were not kin to me, she would be as fair on Friday, as Helen is on Sunday.
  But, what care I? I care not, an she were a black-a-moor; 'tis all one to me.
  Tro. Say I, she is not fair?
  Pan. I do not care whether you do or no. She's a fool to stay behind her father; let her to the Greeks; and so I'll tell her the next time I see her: for my part, I'll meddle nor make no more in the matter.
  Tro. Pandarus,—
  Pan. Not I.
  Tro. Sweet Pandarus,—
  Pan. Pray you, speak no more to me; I will leave all as I found it, and there an end. [Exit Pandarus.
  An onarum.
  Tro. Peace, you ungracious clamours! peace, rude sounds!
Fools on both sides! Helen must needs be fair,
When with your blood you daily paint her thus.
I cannot fight upon this argument;
It is too star'd a subject for my sword.
Is Pandarus—O gods, how do you plague me!
I cannot come to Cressid, but by Pandar;
And he's as tetchy to be woo'd to woo,
As she is stubborn-chaste against all suit.
Tell me, Apollo, for thy Daphne's love,
What Cressid is, what Pandar, and what we?
Her bed is India; there she lies, a pearl:
Between our Ilium, and where she resides,
Let it be call'd the wild and wandering flood;
Ourselves, the merchant; and this sailing Pandar,
Our doubtful hope, our convoy, and our bark.

Alarums. Enter Aneas.

Aen. How now, prince Troilus! wherefore not afraid?
  Tro. Because notthere; This woman's answer sorts,
  For womanish it is to be from thee.
  What news, Aneas, from the field to-day?
  Aen. That Paris is return'd home, and hurt.
  Tro. By whom, Aneas?
  Aen. Troilus, by Menelaus.
  Tro. Let Paris bleed: 'tis but a scar to scar;
  Paris is gird with Menelaus' horn.
  Aen. Hark! what good sport is out of town to-day?
  Tro. Better at home, if 'would I might, were may.—
  But, to the sport abroad;—Are you bound thither?
  Aen. In all swift haste.
  Tro. Come, go we then together. [Exeunt.
ACT I.—SCENE II.

Cres. Ay; if I ever saw him before, and knew him.

Pan. Well, I say, Troilus is Troilus.

Cres. Then you say as I say; for, I am sure, he is not Hector.

Pan. No, nor Hector is not Troilus, in some degrees.

Cres. 'Tis just to each of them; he is himself.

Pan. Himself? Alas, poor Troilus! I would, he were,—

Cres. So he is.

Pan. Think, Condition, I had gone bare-foot to India.

Cres. He is not Hector.

Pan. Himself? no, he's not himself.—'Would 'a were himself! Well, the gods are above; Time must friend, or end: Well, Troilus, well,—I would, my heart were in her body!—No, Hector is not a better man than Troilus.

Cres. Excuse me.

Pan. He is elder.

Cres. Pardon me, pardon me.

Pan. The other's not come to 't; you shall tell me another tale, when the other's come to 't. Hector shall not have his wit this year.

Cres. He shall not need it, if he have his own.

Pan. Nor his qualities;——

Cres. No matter.

Pan. Nor his beauty.

Cres. 'Twould not become him, his own's better.

Pan. You have no judgment, niece: Helen herself swore the other day, that Troilus, for a brown favour,

(for so 'tis, I must confess,)—Not brown neither.

Cres. No, but brown.

Pan. To say truth; brown and not brown.

Cres. To say the truth, true and not true.

Pan. She prais'd his complexion above Paris.

Cres. Why, Paris hath colour enough.

Pan. So he has.

Cres. Then, Troilus should have too much: if she praised him above, his complexion is higher than his;

he having colour enough, and the other higher, is too flaming; a praise for a good complexion. I had as lief, Helen's golden tongue had commended Troilus for a copper nose.

Pan. I swear to you, I think, Helen loves him better than Paris.

Cres. Then she's a merry Greek, indeed.

Pan. Nay, she loves what she does. She came to him the other day in the compassed window,—and, you know, he has not past three or four hairs on his chin.

Cres. Indeed, a tapster's arithmetic may soon bring his particulars therein to a total.

Pan. Why, he is very young; and yet will he,

within three pound, lift as much as his brother Hector.

Cres. Is he so young a man, and so old a lifter?

Pan. Why, to prove to you that Helen loves him;

—she came, and puts me her white hand to his cloven

chin,—

Cres. Juno have mercy!—How came it cloven?

Pan. Why, you know, 'tis dimpled: I think, his smiling becomes him better than any man in all

Phrygia.

Cres. O, he smiles valiantly.

Pan. Does he not?

Cres. O yes, an 'twere a cloud in autumn.

Pan. Why, go to then;—But to prove to you that

Helen loves Troilus,—

Cres. Troilus will stand to the proof, if you'll prove it so.

Pan. Troilus? why, he esteems her no more than

I esteem an addle egg.

Pan. If you love an addle egg as well as you love an idle head, you would eat chickens i' the shell.

Pan. I cannot choose but laugh, to think how she tickled his chin!—Indeed, she has a marvellous white hand, I must needs confess.

Cres. Without the rack.

Pan. And she takes upon her to spy a white hair on his chin.

Cres. Alas, poor chin! many a wart is riper.

Pan. But, there was such laughing;—Queen He-cuba laughed, that her eyes ran o'er.

Cres. With mill-stones.

Pan. And Cassandra laughed.

Cres. But there was a more temperate fire under the pot of her eyes;—Did her eyes run o'er too?

Pan. And Hector laughed.

Cres. At what was all this laughing?

Pan. Marry, at the white hair that Helen spied on Troilus' chin.

Cres. An't had been a green hair, I should have laughed too.

Pan. They laughed not so much at the hair, as at his pretty answer.

Cres. What was his answer?

Pan. Quoth she, Here's but one and fifty hairs on your chin, and one of them is white.

Cres. This is her question.

Pan. That's true: there is no question of that. One and fifty hairs, quoth he, and one white: That white hair is my father, and all the rest are his sons. Jupiter!

quoth she; which of these hairs is Paris my husband?

The forked one, quoth he, pluck it out, and give it him.

But, there was such laughing! and Helen so blushed and Paris so chafed, and all the rest so laughed, that it passed.

Cres. So let it now; for it has been a great while going by.

Pan. Well, cousin, I told you a thing yesterday;

think on't.

Cres. So I do.

Pan. I'll be sworn 'tis true; he will weep you, an'

'twere a man born in April.

Cres. And I'll spring up in his tears, an 'twere a nettle against May.

Pan. Hark, they are coming from the field: Shall we stand up here, and see them, as they pass toward

Hiium? good niece, do; sweet niece Cressida.

Cres. At your pleasure.

Pan. Here, here, he's an excellent place; here we may see most bravely: I'll tell you them all by their names, as they pass by; but mark Troilus above the rest.

Æneas passes over the Stage.

Cres. Speak not so loud.

Pan. That's 'Æneas; is not that a brave man?

he's one of the flowers of Troy, I can tell you; but mark Troilus; you shall see anon.

Cres. Who's that?

Antenor passes over.

Pan. That's Antenor; he has a shrewd wit, I can tell you; and he's a good man enough: he's one o'the soundest judgments in Troy, whoever, and a proper man of person:—When comes Troilus?—I'll shew you Troilus anon; if he be me, you shall see him nod at me.

Cres. Will he give you the nod?

Pan. You shall see.

Cres. If he do, the rich shall have more.

Hector passes over.

Pan. That's Hector, that, that, look you, that;

There's a fellow!—Go thy way, Hector!—There's a brave man, niece.—O brave Hector!—Look, how he looks! there's a countenance: Is not a brave man?

TROILUS AND CRESSIDA.

Cres. O, a brave man!

Pan. Is 'a not? It does a man's heart good—Look you what hacks are on his helmet? look you yonder, do you see; look you there! there's no jesting; there's laying on; tak' off who will, as they say; there be hacks!

Cres. Be those with swords?

Pan. Swords? any thing, he cares not; an the devil come to him, it's all one: By god's lid, it does one's heart good:—Yonder comes Paris, yonder comes Paris: look ye yonder, niece; Is't not a gallant man too, is't not?—Why, this is brave now.—

Who said, he came hurt home to-day? he's not hurt; why, this will do Helen's heart good now. Ha! would I could see Troilus now!—you shall see Troilus anon.

Cres. Who's that?

Helen's passes over.

Pan. That's Helenus,—I marvel, where Troilus is:—That's Helenus;—I think he went not forth to-day:—That's Helenus.

Cres. Can Helenus fight, uncle?

Pan. Helenus? no;—yes, he'll fight indifferent well:—I marvel, where Troilus is!—Hark; do you not hear the people cry, Troilus?—Helenus is a priest.

Cres. What sneaking fellow comes yonder?

Troilus passes over.

Cres. Peace, for shame, peace!

Pan. Mark him: note him:—O brave Troilus!—look well upon him, niece; look you, how his sword is bloodied, and his helm more hacked than Hector's; And how he looks, and how he goes!—O admirable youth! he ne'er saw three and twenty. Go thy way, Troilus, go thy way; had I a sister were a grace, or a daughter a goddess, he should take his choice. O admirable man! Paris!—Paris is dirt to him; and, I warrant, Helen, to change, would give an eye to boot.

Forces pass over the stage.

Cres. Here come more.

Pan. Asses, fools, dolt! chaff and bran, chaff and bran! porridge after meat! I could live and die in the eyes of Troilus. Ne'er look, ne'er look: the eagles are gone; crows and daws, crows and daws! I had rather be such a man as Troilus, than Agamemnon and all Greece.

Cres. There is among the Greeks, Achilles; a better man than Troilus.

Pan. Achilles? a dryman, a porter, a very camel.

Cres. Well, well.

Pan. Well, well?—Why, have you any discretion? have you any eyes? Do you know what a man is? Is not birth, beauty, good shape, discourse, manhood, learning, gentleness, virtue, youth, liberality, and such like, the sprite, and salt that season a man?—

Cres. Ay, a miniced man: and then to be baked with no date in the pye,—for then the man's date is out.

Pan. You are such a woman! one knows not at what ward you lie.

Cres. Upon my back, to defend my belly; upon my wit, to defend my wiles; upon my secrecy, to defend mine honesty; my majesty, to defend my beauty; and you, to defend all these: and at all these wards I lie, at a thousand watches.

Pan. Say one of your watches.

Cres. Nay, I'll watch you for that; and that's one of the chiefest of them too; if I cannot ward what I would not have hit, I can watch you for telling how I took the blow; unless it swell past立项, and then it is past watching.

Pan. You are such another!

Enter Troilus' Boy.

Boy. Sir, my lord would instantly spew with you.

Pan. Where?

Boy. At your own house; there he unmans him.

Pan. Good boy, tell him I come: [Exit Boy.

I doubt, he be hurt.—Fare ye well, good niece.

Cres. Aileu, uncle.

Pan. I'll be with you, niece, by and by.

Cres. To bring, uncle.

Pan. Ay, a token from Troilus.

Cres. By the same token—you are a bawd.

[Exit Pandarus.]

Words, vows, griefs, tears, and love's full sacrifice, He offers in another's enterprise:

But more in Troilus thousand fold I see Than in the glass of Pandar's praise may be; Yet hold I off. Women are angels, woeing: Things won are done, joy's soul lies in the doing: That she belov'd knews nought, that knows not this,— Men prize the thing ungain'd more than it is: That she was never yet, that ever knew

Love got so sweet, as when desire did sue; Therefore this maxim out of love I teach.

Achievement is command; ungain'd, besides:— Then though my heart's content firm love doth bear, Nothing of that shall from mine eyes appear. [Exit.

SCENE III.

Trumpets. Enter Agamemnon, Nestor, Ulysses, Menelaus, and others.

Agam. Princes, What grief hath set the juadice on your cheeks? The ample proposition, that hope makes in all designs begun on earth below, Fails in the promis'd largeness: checks and disasters Grow in the vein of actions highest rear'd; As by the conflux of meetings, Infect the sound pine, and divert his grain Tortive and errant from his course of growth. Nor, princes, it is matter new to us, That we come short of our purpose so far, That, after seven years' siege, yet Troy walls stand; Yet every action that hath gone before, Whereof we have record, trial did draw Bliss and thwert, not answering the aim, And that unboiled figure of the thought That gave'st surprised shape. Why then, you princes, Do you with cheeks abash'd behold our works; And think them shames, which are, indeed, noth But the protractive trials of great Jove, [else To find persistive constancy in men? The fineness of which metal is not found In fortune's love: for them, the bold and coward, The wise and fool, the artist and unskil The hard and soft, seem all affi'd and kin:— But, in the wind and tempest of her frown, Distinct, with a broad and powerful fan, Pufing at all, winnows the light away; And what hath mass, or matter, by itself Lies, in riches in virtue, and unmingled.

Nest. With due observance of thy godlike seat, Great Agamemnon, Nestor shall apply Thy latest words. In the reproof of chance Lies the true proof of men: the sea being smooth, PANDARUS O brave Troilus!—look well upon him, my lord.

Act I. Sc. 2.
ACT I. - SCENE III.

581

How many shallow bauble boats dare sail
Upon her patient breast, making their way
With those of nobler bulk?
But let the ruffian Boreas once enrage
The gentle Thetis, and, anon, behold
The strong-ribbed bark through liquid mountains cut,
Booming between the two moist elements,
Like Perses' horse: Where then the stately boat
Whose weak untimber'd sides but even now
Co-rival'd greatness! either to harbour fled,
Or made a toast for Neptune. Even so
Both valour's show, and valour's worth, divide,
In storms of fortune: For, in her ray and brightness,
The herd faint more annoyance by the brine,
This enterprise! faint when the westly wind
Makes flexible the knees of knotted oaks, [rage.
And flies fled under shade, Why, then, the thing of cou-
As rous'd with rage, with rage doth sympathize,
And, with an accent too'd in self-same key,
Returns to chiding fortune.

Uliss. Agamemnon,—
That great commander, nervous and bone of Greece,
Heart of our numbers, soul and empire's spirit,
In whom the temper and the minds of all
Should be shut up,—hear what Ulysses speaks.
Besides the applause and approbation
The which,—most mighty for thy place and sway,—
[To Agamemnon.

And thou most reverend for thy stretch'd-out life,—
[To Nestor.

I give to both your speeches,—which were such,
As Agamemnon and the hand of Greece
Should hold up high in brass; and such again,
As venerable Nestor, batch'd in silver,
Should have a bond of sir (strong as the axletree
On which heaven rides,) knit all the Greekish ears
That hear the tale, and the tang when left is clear both,
Thou great,—and wise,—to hear Ulysses speak.

Agem. Speak, prince of Ithaca; and be't of less
That matter needless, of importless burden, [expect
Divide thy lips; than we are confident,
When rank Thersites open his mastiff jaws,
We shall hear music, wit, and oracle.
For Troy is ne't upon his basis, had been down,
And the great Hector's sword had lack'd a master,
But for these instances.

The specialty of rule hath been neglected:
And, look, how many Grecian touts do stand
Hollow upon this plain, so many hollow factions.
When that the general is not like the hive,
To whom the foragers shall all repair,
What honey is expected! Degree being vizarded,
The unworthiest shows as fairly in the mask.
The heavens themselves, the planets and this centre,
Observe degree, priority, and place,
Insinuate, course, proportion, season, form,
Office, and custom, in all line of order:
And therefore is the glorious planet, Sol,
In noble eminence enthron'd without rival.
Amidst the other; whose med'cinal eye
Corrects the ill aspects of planets evil,
And posts, like the commandment of a king,
Sans check, to good and bad: But, when the planets,
In evil mixture, to disorder wander,
What plagues, and what portents? what mutiny?
What raging, of the world? Where's any earth?
Commotion in the winds? frights, changes, horrors
Divert and crack, rend and deracinate
The unity and married calm of states
Quite from their fixture? O, when degree is shak'd,
Which is the ladder of all high designs,
The enterprise is sick! How could communities,

Degrees in schools, and brotherhoods in cities,
Peaceful commerce from dividable shores,
The primogenitive and due of birth,
Prerogative of age, crowns, scepters, laurels,
But by degree, stand in authentic place?
Take but degree away, untune that string,
And hark, what discord follows! each thing meets
In mere superfluity. The bounded
Should lift their bosoms higher than the shores,
And make a sop of all this solid globe:
Strength should be lord of imbecility,
And the rude son should strike his father dead:
Force should be right: or, rather, right and wrong,
(Between whose endless jar justice resides.)
Should be right: or, rather, right and wrong.
Then every thing includes itself in power,
Power into will, will into appetite;
And appetite, an universal wolf,
So doubly seconded with will and power,
Must make perforce an universal prey,
And, last, eat up himself. Great Agamemnon,
This chaos, when degree is suffocated,
Follows the choking.
And this neglect of degree it is,
That by a pace goes backward, with a purpose
It hath to climb. The general's disdain'd
By him one step below; he, by the next;
That next, by him beneath: so every step,
Example of the first pace that is sick
Of his superiority, grows to an envious fever
Of pale and bloodless emulation:
And 'tis this fever that keeps Troy on foot,
Not her own sinews. To end a tale of length,
Troy in our weakness stands, not in her strength.

Nest. Most wisely hath Ulysses here discover'd
The fever whereof all our power is sick.
Agam. The nature of the sickness found, Ulysses,
What is the remedy?

Uliss. The great Achilles,—whom opinion crowns
The sinew and the forefront of our host,—
Having his ear full of his airy dance,
Grows dainty of his worth, and in his tent
Lies mocking our designs: With him, Patroclus,
Upon a hiveloy day breaks scurril jests;
And with ridiculous and awkward action
(Which, slanderer, he imitation calls,) He pageants us. Sometime, great Agamemnon, Thy topleas deputation he puts on;
And, like a strutting player,—whose conceit
Lies in his own string, and doth think it rich
To hear the wooden dialogue and sound
Twist his stretch'd footling and the scaffoldage,—
Such to-be-pitted and o'er-wrested seeming
He acts thy greatness in: and when he speaks,
'Tis like a chime a mending; with terms unsopor'd,
Which, from the tongue of roaring Typhon dropp'd
Would seem hyperboles. At this nasty stuff,
The large and mischiefs, like a beev'd dog,
From his deep chest laughs out a loud applause;
Cries—Excellent!—[To Agamemnon just.

Now play me Nestor;—hem, and stroke thy beard,
As he, being 'drest to some oration.
That's done;—as near as the extremest ends
Of parallels: as like as Vulcan and his wife:
Yet good Achilles, still cries—Excellent:
'Tis Nestor right! Now play him me, Patroclus, Arming to answer in a night alarm.
And then, foresight, the faint defects of age
Must be the scope of mirth; to cough, and spit,
And with a palsy-fumbling on his gorge.
Shake in and out the rivet;—And at this sport,
Sir Valour dies; cries, O!—enough, Patroclus;—
Or grant me rid’s of steel! I shall split all
In pleasure of my spleen. And in this fashion,
All our abilities, gifts, natures, shapes,
Several and generals of grace exact,
Achievements, plots, orders, preventions,
Excitements to the field, or speech for trace,
Success, or loss, what is, or is not, serves!
As stuff for these two to make paradoxes.

Yet, in the imitation of these twain
(Whom, as Ulysses says, opinion crowns
With an imperial voice,) many are infect.
Ajax is grown self-will’d; and bears his head
In such a rein, in full as prond a place
As broad Achilles; keeps his tent like him;
Makes factions feast; rails on our state of war,
Bold as an oracle; and sets Thersites
(A slave, whose gall comes sanders like a mint,
To match us in comparisons with dirt;
To weaken and discredit our exposure,
How rank soever rounded in with danger.

Ulyss. They tax our policy, and call it cowardice;
Count wisdom as no member of the war;
Forestall preface, and esteem no act
But that of hand: the still and mental parts,—
That do contrive how many hands shall strike,
When Eness calls them on; and know, by measure
Of their observant toil, the enemies’ weight,—
Why, this hath not a finger’s dignity:
They call this—bed-work, mappery, closet-war:—
So that the ram, that bathers down the wall,
For the great swing and rudeness of his poise,
They place before his hand that made the engine;
Or those, that with the fineness of their souls
By reason go to his execution.

Yet, let this be granted, and Achilles’ horse
Makes many Thetis’ sons.

Trumpet sounds.

AEGAM. What trumpet! look, Meneclans.

Enter ENEAS.

Men. From Troy.

Aegam. What would you fore our tent?

Men. Is this Great Agamennon’s tent, I pray?

Aegam. Even this.

Men. May one, that is a herald, and a prince,
Do a fair message to his kingly ears?

Aegam. With surety stronger than Achilles’ arm
Fore all the Grecian heads, which with one voice
Call Agamennon head and general.

ENEA. Fair leave, and large security. How may
A stranger to those most imperial looks
Know them from the eyes of other mortals?

Aegam. How?

ENEA. Ay; I ask, that I might waken reverence,
And bid the cheek be ready with a blush
More as a morning when she coldly eyes
The youthful Phoebus:—
Which is that god in office, guiding men?
Which is the high and mighty Agamennon?

Aegam. This Trojan scorns us; or the men of Troy
Are ceremonious courtiers.

ENEA. Courtiers as free, as debonair, unarm’d,
As boding angels; that’s their fame in peace:
But when they would seem soldiers, they have galls,
Good arms, strong joints, true swords; and Jove’s ac-
Nothing so full of heart. But peace, Eneas, [cord,
Peace, Trojan; lay thy finger on thy lips!
The worthiness of praise distains his worth,
If that the praised himself bring the praise forth:
But what the repining enemy commends,

That breath fame blows; that praise, sole pure, transcends.

Aegam. Sir, you of Troy, call you yourself Eneas?

ENEA. Ay, Greek, that is my name.

Aegam. What’s your affair, I pray you?

ENEA. Sir, pardon; ’tis for Agamennon’s ears.

Aegam. He bears oughtprivately, that comes from Troy.

ENEA. Nor I from Troy come not to whisper him:
I bring a trumpet to awake his ear;
To set his sense on the attentive bent,
In tune to speak.

Aegam. Speak frankly as the wind;
It is not Agamennon’s sleeping hour:
That thou shalt know, Trojan, he is awake,
He tells thee so himself.

ENEA. Trumpet, blow loud.

Send thy brass voice through all these lazy tents;—
And every Greek of mettle, let him know,
What Troy means fairly, shall be spoke aloud.

Trumpet sounds.

We have, great Agamennon, here in Troy
A prince call’d Hector, (Priam is his father,) Who in this dull and long-continued truce
Is rusty grown; he bade me take a trumpet,
And to this purpose speak. Kings, princes, lords,
If these mists, these clouds, these heavy veils,
That holds his honour higher than his ease;
That seeks his praise more than he fears his peril;
That knows his valour, and knows not his fear.
That loves his mistress more than in confession,
(With truant vows to her own lips he loves,) And dare avow her beauty and her worth.
In other arms the thoughtless—him this challenge.
Hector, in view of Trojans and of Greeks,
Shall make it good, or do his best to do it.
He hath a lady, wiser, fairer, truer,
Than ever Greek did compass in his arms;
And will to-morrow with his trumpet call,
Midway between your tents and walls of Troy.

To rouse a Grecian that is true in love:
When it comes, Hector shall honour him;
If none, he’ll say in Troy, when he retires,
The Grecian danae are sun-burn’d, and not worth
The splinter of a lance. Even so much.

Aegam. This shall be told our lovers, lord Eneas;
If none of them have soul in such a kind,
We left them all at home: But we are soldiers;
And may that soldier a mere recreant prove,
That means not, hath not, or is not in love!
If then one is, or hath, or means to be,
That one meets Hector; if none else, I am he.

Nest. Tell him of Nestor, one that was a man
When Hector’s grandsire suck’d; he is old now;
But, if there be not in our Grecian host
One noble man, that hath one spark of fire
To answer for his love, Tell him from me,—
I’ll hide my silver heard in a gold beaver,
And to my vantage put this wither’d brawn;
And meeting him, will tell him, that my lady
Was fairer than his grandam, and as chaste
As may be in the world; his youth in flood,
I’ll prove this truth with my three drops of blood.

ENEA. Now heavens forbid such scarcity of youth!

Ulyss. Fair lord Eneas, let me touch your hand;
To our pavilion shall I lead you, sir,
Achilles shall have word of this intent;
So shall each lord of Greece, from tent to tent:
Youself shall feast with us before you go,
And find the welcome of a noble foe.

ENEA. All but Ulysses and Nestor.
ACT II.—SCENE I.

Ulysses, Nestor,—

Nest. What says Ulysses?

Ulyss. I have a young conception in my brain,

But I'll press you up to voices;

Yet go we under our opinion still

That we have better men.

Well, hit or miss,

Our project's life this shape of sense assumes,—

Ajax, employ'd, puckers down Achilles' plumes.

Nest. Ulysses,

Now I begin to relish thy advice;

And I will give a taste of it forthwith

To Agamemnon: go we to him straight.

Two cures shall tame each other; Pride alone

Must tarre the mastiffs on, as 'twere their bone. [Ex.

ACT II.

SCENE I.—Another part of the Grecian Camp.

Enter Ajax and Thersites.

Ajax. Therites,—

Thers. Agamemnon—how if he had boils? full, all over, generally!

Ajax. That's all very well, I'll agree; but—

Thers. And those boils did run?—Say so,—did not the general run then? were not that a botchy core?

Ajax. Dog,—

Thers. Then would come some matter from him; I see none now.

Ajax. Thou hitch-well's son, canst thou not hear? Feel then,—[Strikes him]

Thers. The plague of Greece upon thee, thou mongrel beef-witted lord!

Ajax. Speak then, thou unsalted leaven, speak; I will beat thee into handsomeness.

Thers. I shall sooner raiL thee into wit and holiness: but, I think, thy horse will sooner con an oration, than thou learn a prayer without book. Thou canst strike, canst thou? a red murraun o' thy jade's tricks!

Ajax. Toads-stool, learn me the proclamation!

Thers. Dost thou think, I have no sense, thou strikest me thus?

Ajax. The proclamation,—

Thers. Thou art proclaim'd a fool, I think.

Ajax. Do not, porcupine, do not; my fingers itch.

Thers. Then use that itch from head to foot.

Axij. And I had the scratching of thee; I would make thee the loathsome scab in Greece. When thou art forth in the incursions, thou strikest as slow as another.

Ajax. I say, the proclamation,—

Thers. Thou grumblest and railest every hour on Achilles; and thou art as full of envy at his greatness, as Scyllerus is at Proserpina's beauty, ay, that thou bastkest at him.

Ajax. Mistress Thersites!

Thers. Thou shouldst strike least.

Ajax. Cobloaf!

Thers. He would pun thee into shivers with his fist, as a sailor breaks a biscuit.

Thers. Do, do.

Ajax. Thou stool for a witch!

Thers. Ay, do, do; thou sodden-witted lord! thou hast no more brain than I have in mine elbows; an assinego may tutor thee: Thou scurrily valiant ass! thou art one to put to thrash Trojans; and thou art bought and sold among those of any wit, like a Barbary slave. If thou use to beat me, I will begin at thy heel, and tell what thou art by inches, thou thing of no bowels, thou!

Ajax. Yen dog!

Thers. You scurrily lord, His crest, that prouder than blue Iris bends.

If the dull brainless Ajax come safe off,

We'll press him up to voices: the fail,

And I will give a taste of it forthwith

To Agamemnon: go we to him straight.

Two cures shall tame each other; Pride alone

Must tarre the mastiffs on, as 'twere their bone. [Ex.
Ajax. You cur!

Ther. Mars his idiot! do, rudeness; do, cemel; do, do.

Enter Achilles and Patroclus.

Achil. Why, how now, Ajax? whereto do you thus? How now, Theristes? what's the matter, man?

Ther. You see him there, do you?

Achil. Ay; what's the matter?

Ther. Nay, look upon him.

Achil. So I do; what's the matter?

Ther. Nay, but regard him well.

Achil. Well, why I do so.

Ther. But yet you look not well upon him: for, whossoever you take him to be, he is Ajax.

Achil. I know that, fool.

Ther. Ay, but that fool knows not himself.

Ajax. Therefore I beat thee.

Ther. Lo, lo, lo, what medicums of wit he utter's! his evasions have ears thus loud. I have bobbed his brain, more than he has beat my bones: I will buy his sparring for a penny, and his pia matter is not worth the ninth part of a sparrow. This lord, Achilles, Ajax,—who wears his wit in his belly, and his guts in his head,—I'll tell you what I say of him.

Achil. What?

Ther. I say, this Ajax—

Ajax. Nay, good Ajax.

[Ajax offers to strike him, Achilles interposes.

Ther. Has not so much wit—

Achil. Nay, I must hold you.

Ther. As will stop the eye of Helen's needle, for whom he comes to fight.

Achil. Peace, fool!

Ther. I would have peace and quietness, but the fool will not: he there; that he; look you there.

Ajax. O thou damned eur! I shall—

Achil. Will you set your wit to a fool's?

Ther. No, I warrant you; for a fool's will shame it.

Patr. Good words, Theristes.

Achil. What's the quarrel?

Ajax. I bade the vile owl, go learn me the tenour of the proclamation, and he rails upon me.

Ther. I serve thee not.

Ajax. Well, go to, go to.

Ther. I serve here voluntary.

Achil. Your last service was suffrance, 'twas not voluntary; no man is beaten voluntary; Ajax was here the voluntary, and you as under an impress.

Ther. Even so!—a great deal of your wit too lies in your sinews, or else there be liars. Hector shall have a great catch, if he knock out either of your brains; 'a were as good crack a rusty nut with no kernel.

Achil. What, with me too, Theristes?

Ther. There's Ulysses and old Nestor,—whose wit was mously ere your grandfathers had nails on their toes,—yoke you like draught oxen, and make you plough up the wars.

Achil. What, what?

Ther. Ye, good sooth; To, Achilles! to, Ajax! to!

Ajax. I shall cut out your tongue.

Ther. 'Tis no matter; I shall speak as much as thou, afterwards.

Patr. No more words, Theristes; peace.

Ther. I will hold my peace when Achilles' brach bids me, shall I?

Achil. There's for you, Patroclus.

Ther. I will see you hanged, like clotpoles, ere I come any more to your tents; I will keep where there is wit stirring, and leave the faction of fools. [Erit.

Patr. A good riddance.

Achil. Marry, this, sir, is proclaimed through all our That Hector, by the first hour of the sun, [host;

Will, with a trumpet, 'twixt our tents and Troy, To-morrow morning call some knight to arms, That hath a stomach; and such a one, that dare Maketrim— I know not what; 'tis trash: Farewell. Ajax. Farewell. Who shall answer him?

Achil. I know not, it is put to lottery; otherwise, He knew his man.

Ajax. O, meaning you:—'I'll go learn more of it. [Eactnt.

SCENE II.—Troy. A Room in Priam's Palace.

Enter Priam, Hector, Troilus, Paris, and Helenus.

Pri. After so many hours, lives, speeches spent, Thus once again says Nestor from the Greeks;

Deliver Helen, and all damage else—

As honour, loss of time, travel, expense, Wounds, friends, and what else dear that is consum'd

In hot digestion of this constant war,—

Shall be struck off.—Hector, what say you to't?

Hecr. Though no man lesser fears the Greeks than I, As far as toucheth my particular, yet, Drear Priam,

There is no lady of more softer bowels, More spunky to suck in the sense of fear.

More ready to cry out—'I know what follows? Than Hector is: 'Tis the wound of peace is surety,

Surety seeking; but modest doubt is call'd;

The beacon of the wise, the tent that searches To the bottom of the worst. Let Helen go:

Since the first sword was drawn about this question, Every tithe soul, 'mongst many thousand dismes, Hath been as dear as Helen, I mean of ours: If we have lost so many tenth's of ours:

To guard a thing not ours; not worth to us, Had it our name, the value of one ten; What merit's in that reason, which dedies The yielding of her up?

Tro. Fye, fye, my brother! Weigh you the worth and honour of a king,

So great as our dread father, in a scale Of common ounces! will you with counters sum The last proportion of his infinite?

And buckler a waist most fathomless, With spans and inches so diminutive As fears and reasons! fye, for godly shame!

Hel. No marvel, though you bite so sharpart reasons, You are so empty of them. Should not our father Bear the great sway of his affairs with reasons, Because your speech hath none, that tells him so?

Tro. You are for dreams and slumbers, brother priest, You fur your gloves with reason. Here are your You know, an enemy intends you harm; [reasons: You know, a sword employ'd is perilous, And reason flies the object of all harm:

Who marvels then, when Helenus beholds A Grocan and his sword, if he do set A many wings of reason to his heels; And fly like children Mercury from Jove, Or like a star disord'—Nay, if we talk of reason, Let's shut our gates, and sleep: Manhood and honour Should have heart hearts, would they but fat their thoughts With this crann'mg reason; reason and respect Make livers pale, and lusthhood deceit.

Hect. Brother she is not worth what she doth cost The holding.

Tro. What is aught, but as 'tis valued! [Hect. But value dwells not in particular will; It holds his estimate and dignity
As well wherein 'tis precious of itself
As in the pricer: 'tis mad idolatry,
To make the service greater than the god;
And the will dothes, that is adhesive
To what infestiously itself affects,
Without some image of the affected merit.

Tro. 'Tis a happy woman; and my election
Is led on in the conduct of my will;
My will enkindled by many eyes and ears,
Two traded pilots 'twixt the dangerous shores
Of will and judgment: Hecules may I avoid,
Although my will distaste what is elected,
The wife I chose? there can be no evasion
To sneke from this, and to stand firm by honour:
We turn not back the silks upon the merchant,
When we have soil'd them: nor the remainder viands:
We do not throw in unrespective siere,
Because we wish to part. It was thought meet,
Paris should do some vengeance on the Greeks:
Your breath with full consent bellied his sails;
The seas and winds (old wranglers) took a truce,
And did him service: he touch'd the ports desired:
And, for an old aunt, whom the Greeks held captive,
He brought a Grecian queen, whose youth and fresh-
Wrinkles Apollo's, and makes pale the morning.
Why keep we her? the Grecians keep our aunt:
Is she worth keeping? why, she is a pearl,
Whose price hath launch'd above a thousand ships,
And turn'd crown'd kings to merchants,
If you 'll avouch, 'twas wisdom Paris went,
(As you must needs, for you all cry—Go, go.)
If he 'll confess, he hath a right home noble prize,
(As you must needs, for you all clapp'd your hands,
And cry'd—Inestimable!) why do you now
The issue of your proper wisdom rate;
And do a deed that fortune never did,
Beggar the estimation which you priz'd
Richer than sea and land? O theft most base;
That we have stolen what we do fear to keep!
But, thieves, unworthy of a thing so stolen,
That in their country did them that disgrace,
We fear to warrant in our native place!
Cas. [Within.] Cry, Trojans, cry! Pri.

‘Twixt what noise! what shriek is this?
Tro. 'Tis our mad sister. I do know her voice.
Cas. [Within.] Oh, Trojans! Hecet. It is Cassandra.

Enter Cassandra, raging.
Cas. Cry, Trojans, cry! lend me ten thousand eyes,
And I will fill them with prophetic tears.
Hecet. Peace, peace, sister, peace.
Cas. Virgin and have, mid-age and wrinkled elders,
Soft infantry, that nothing canst but cry,
Add to my clamours! let us pay betimes
A moiety of that mass of more to come.
Cry, Trojans, cry! practise your eyes with tears!
Troy must not be, nor goodwill Lydon stand;
Our fire-brand brother, Paris, burns us all.
Cry, Trojans, cry! a Helen, and a woe:
Cry, cry! Troy burns, or else let Helen go. [Exit.
Hecet. Now, youthful Troilus, do not these high
Of divination in our sister work
Strains
Some touches of remorse? or is your blood
So madly hot, that so discourse of reason,
Nor fear of bad success in a bad cause,
Can qualify the same?

Tro. Why, brother Hector,
We may not think the justness of each act
Such and no other than event doth form it;
Nor once deject the courage of our minds,
Because Cassandra's mad; her brain-sick raptures
Cannot distaste the goodness of a quarrel,
Which hath our several honours all engag'd
To make us gracious. For my part,
I am no more touch'd than all Priam's sons:
And Jove forbid, there should be done amongst
Such things as might offend the weakest spleen.
To fight for and maintain!

Par. Else might the world convince of levity
As well my undertakings as your counsels.
But I attack the gods; your full consent
Gave wings to my propension, and cut off
All fears attending on to dire a project.
For what, alas, can these my single arms?
What propagation is in one man's valour,
To stand the push and enmity of those
This quarrel would excite! Yet, I protest,
Were I his country's subject, then, I say,
And had as ample power as I have will,
Paris should ne'er retract what he hath done,
Nor faint in the pursuit.

Pri. Paris, you speak
Like one besotted on your sweet delights:
You have the honey still, but these the gall;
So to be valiant, is no praise.

Par. Sir, I propose not merely to myself
The pleasures such a beauty brings with it;
But I would have the soil of her fair rape
Wip'd off, in honourable keeping her,
What treason were it to the raasack'd queen,
Disgrace to yeer great, worthy, and shame to me,
Now to deliver her possession whole,
On terms of base compulsion? Can it be,
That so degenerate a strain as this,
Should once set footing in your generous bosoms?
There's not the meanest spirit on our party,
Without a heart to dare, or sword to draw,
When Helen is defended; nor none so noble,
Whose life were ill betow'd, or death unform'd,
Were Helen is the subject; then, I say,
Well may we fight for her, whom, we know well,
The world's large spaces cannot parallel.

Hecet. Paris, and Troilus, you have both said well;
And on the cause and question now in hand
Have gloz'd,—but superciliously; not much
Unlike young men, whom Aristotle thought
Unfit to hear moral philosophy.
The reasons you allege, do more conclude
To the hot passion of distemper'd blood,
Than to make up a free determination
'Twixt right and wrong; for pleasure, and revenge,
Have ears more deaf than adders to the voice
Of any true decision. Nature craves,
All must be render'd to their owners; Now
What nearer debt in all humanity.
Than wife is to the husband? if this law
Of nature be corrupted through affection;
And that great minds, of partial indulgence
To their benumbed wills, resist the same;
There is a law in each well order'd nation,
To curb these raging appetites that are
Most dissolute and refractory.
If Helen then be wife to Sperms's king,—
As it is known she is,—these moral laws
Of nature, and of nations, speak aloud
To have her back return'd: Thus to persist
In doing wrong, extenuates not wrong;
But makes it much more heinous.
Hector's opinion
Is this, in way of truth: yet, ne'ertheless,
My spriety brethren, I propound to you
In resolution to keep Helen still;
For 'tis a cause that hath no mean dependance,
TROILUS AND CRESSIDA.

Upon our joint and several dignities.

Tro. Why, there you touch’d the life of our design:
Wear it not glory that we more affected
Than the performance of our heaving spleens,
I would not wish a drop of Trojan blood
Spent more in her defence. But, worthy Hector,
She is in thame of honour and renown;
A spur to valiant and magnanimous deeds;
Whose present courage may beat down our foes,
And fame, in time to come, cananize us:
For, I presume, brave Hector would not lose
So rich advantage of a promis’d glory,
As smiles upon the forehead of this action,
For the wide world’s revenue.

Hec. I am yours,
You valiant offspring of great Parmis.—
I have a roisting challenge sent amongst
The dull and factious nobles of the Greeks,
Will strike amazement to their drowsy spirits:
I was advertis’d, their great general slept,
Whilst emulation in the army crept;
This, I presume, will wake him. [Exeunt.

SCENE III.

The Grecian Camp,—Before Achilles’ Tent.

Enter Thersites.

Ther. How now, Thersites? what, lost in the labyrinth of thy fury? Shall the elephant Ajax carry it thus? he beats me, and I rail at him: O worthy satisfaction! would it were otherwise, that I could beat him, whilst he raised at me: ’Sfoot. I’ll learn to conjure and raise devils, but I’ll see some issue of my spiteful executions. Then there’s Achilles,—a rare engineer. If Trojans be not taken till these two undermine it, the walls shall stand till they fall of themselves. O thou great thunder-darter of Olympus, forget that thou art Jove the king of gods; and, Mercury, lose all the serpentine craft of thy Caeceus; if ye take not that little little less-than-little wit from them that they have! which short-armed ignorance itself knows is so abundant scarce, it will not be in circuit of honour for Trojans to deliver a fly from a spider, without drawing their massive irons, and cutting the web. After this, the vengeance on the whole camp! or, rather, the bone-ache! for that, methinks, is the curse dependant on those that war for a placquet. I have said my prayers; and devil, envy, say Amen. What, ho! my lord Achilles!

Enter Patroclus.

Ther. If I could have remembered a gilt counterfeit, thou wouldst not have slipped out of my contemplation: but it is no matter; Thyself upon thyself! The common curse of mankind, folly and ignorance, be thine in great revenue! heaven bless thee from a tutor, and discipline come not near thee! Let thy blood be thy dire sky to death; then if she, that lays thee out, says — thou art a fair corse, I’ll be sworn and sworn upon’t; she never shrouded any but lizards. Amen. Where’s Achilles?

Patr. What, art thou devout! wast thou in prayer? Ther. Ay; the heavens hear me!

Enter Achilles.

Achil. Who’s there?

Patr. Thersites, my lord.

Achil. Where, where? — Art thou come? Why, my cheese, my digestion, why hast thou not served thyself in to my table so many meals? Come; what’s Agamemnon?

Ther. Thy commander, Achilles; — Then tell me, Patroclus, what’s Achilles?

Patr. Thy lord, Thersites: Then tell me, I pray thee, what’s thyself?

Ther. Thy knowest, Patroclus; Then tell me, Patroclus, what art thou?

Patr. Thou mayest tell, that knowest.

Achil. O tell, tell.

Ther. I’ll decline the whole question. Agamemnon commands Achilles; Achilles is my lord; I am Patroclus’ knower; and Patroclus is a fool.

Patr. You raise me. Ther. Peace, fool; I have not done. Achil. He is a privileged man.—Proceed, Thersites.

Ther. Agamemnon is a fool; Achilles is a fool; Thersites is a fool; and, as aforesaid, Patroclus is a fool.

Achil. Derive this; come.

Ther. Agamemnon is a fool to offer to command Achilles, Achilles to be a fool to be commanded of Agamemnon; Thersites is a fool to serve such a fool: and Patroclus is a fool positive.

Patr. Why am I a fool?

Ther. Make that demand of the prover. — It sufficeth me, thou art. Look you, who comes here?

Enter Agamemnon, Ulysses, Nestor, Diomedes, and Ajax.

Achil. Patroclus, I’ll speak with nobody.—Come in with me, Thersites. [Exit. Ther. Here is such patchery, such juggling, and such knavery! all the argument is, a cuckold, and a whore: A good quarrel to draw emulous factions, and in several places. Now the dry seigio on the subject! and war, and lechery, confound all! [Exit. Agam. Where is Achilles? Patr. Within his tent; but ill-dispos’d, my lord. Agam. Let it be known to him, that we are here. He shent our messengers, and we lay by our apperceptions, visiting of him: Let him be told so; lest, perchance, he think We dare not move the question of our desire, Or know not what we are.

Patr. I shall say so to him. [Exit. Ulyss. We saw him at the opening of his tent; He is not sick.

Ajax. Yes, lion-sick, sick of proud heart: you may call it melancholy, if you will favour the man; but, by my head, ’tis pride: But why, why? let him show us a cause.—A word, my lord.

Nest. What moves Ajax thus to bay at him?

Ulyss. Achilles hath inveigled his foal from him.

Nest. Who? Thersites?

Ulyss. He.

Nest. Then will Ajax lack matter, if he have lost his argument.

Ulyss. No; you see, he is his argument, that has his argument; Achilles.

Nest. All the better; their fraction is more our wish, than their faction: But it was a strong composition, a fool could disunite.

Ulyss. The unity, that wisdom knits not, folly may easily unite. Here comes Patroclus.

Re-enter Patroclus.

Nest. No Achilles with him.

Ulyss. The elephant hath joints, but none for courtesy: his legs are legs for necessity, not for flexure.

Patr. Achilles bids me say—he is much sorry,
If any thing more than your sport and pleasure
Did move your greatness, and this noble state,
To call upon him; he hopes, it is no other,
But, pass your health and your digestion sake,
An after-dinner's breath.
Agam.

Hear you, Patroclus;—
We are too well acquainted with these answers:
But his evasion, wing'd thus swift with scorn,
Cannot Outly our apprehensions.
Moreacute he hath; and much the reason
Why we ascribe to him: yet all his virtues—
Not virtuously on his own part beheld,—
Do, in our eyes, begin to lose their gloss;
Yea, like fair fruit in an unwelcome dish,
Are like to rot untasted. Go and tell him,
We come to speak with him: And you shall not sin,
If you do say—we think him over-proud,
And under-honest; in self-assumption greater,
Than in the note of judgment; and worthier than him.
Here tend the savage strangeness he puts on; [self
Disguise the holy strength of their command,
And undervise in an observing kind
His humorous predominance; yea, watch
His wanton lusts in his eyes, his flows, as if
The passage and whole carriage of this action
Rode on his tide. Go, tell him this; and add,
That, if he overhold his price too much,
We'll none of him; but let him, like an engine
Not portable, lie under this report—
Bring action hither, this cannot go to war:
A stirring dwarf we do allow you
Before a sleeping giant:—Tell him so.
Patr. I shall; and bring his answer presently.

[Exit.
Agam. In second voice we'll not be satisfied,
We come to speak with him.—Ulysses, enter.

[Exit Ulysses.

Ajer. What is he more than another?
Agam. No more than what he thinks he is.
Ajer. Is he so much! Do you not think, he thinks himself a better man than I am?
Agam. No question.
Ajer. Will you subscribe his thought, and say—
he is?
Agam. No, noble Ajax: you are as strong, as valant, as wise, no less noble, much more gentle, and altogether more tractable.
Ajer. Why should a man be proud? How doth pride grow? I know not what pride is.
Agam. Your mind's the clearer, Ajax, and your virtues the fairer. He that is proud, eats up himsclf: pride is his own glass, his own trumpet, his own chronicle: and whatever praises itself but in the deed, devours the deed in the praise.
Ajer. I do hate a proud man, as I hate the engen-dering of toads.
Nest. And yet he loves himself: Is it not strange?

[Aside.

Re-enter Ulysses.
Ulyss. Achilles will not to the field to-morrow.
Agam. What's his excuse?
Ulyss. He doth rely on none;
But carries on the stream of his dispose,
Without observance or respect of any,
In will peculiar and in self-admission.
Agam. Why will he not, upon our fair request,
Uttent his person, and share the air with us? [only,
Ulyss. Things small as nothing, for request's sake
He makes important: Possess'd he is with greatness;
And speaks not to himself, but with a pride
That quarrels at self-breath: imagin'd worth
Holds in his blood such swoon and hot discourse,
That, 'twixt his mental and his active parts,
Kings and Achilles in confusion rages
And hatters down himself: What should I say?
He is so plagy proud, that the death-tokens of it
Cry—No recovery.
Agam.

Let Ajax go to him.—
Dear lord, go you and greet him in his tent;
Tis said, he holds you well; and will be led,
At your request, a little from himself.
Ulyss. O Agamemnon, let it not be so!
We'll consecrate the steps that Ajax makes
When they go from Achilles: Shall the proud lord,
That bastis his arrogance with his own seam;
And never suffers matter of the world
Enter his thoughts,—save such as do resolve
And ruminate himself,—shall he be worship'd
Of that we hold an idol more than he?
No, this thrice worthy and right valiant lord
Must not so state his palm, nobly acquire d;
Nor, by my will, subjugate his merit,
As amply titled as Achilles is,
By going to Achilles:
That we do not outstrip his seat of fat,-already pride;
And add more coals to Cancer, when he burns
With entertaining great Hyperion.
This lord go to him! Jupiter forbid;
And say in thunder—Achilles go to him.
Nest. O, this is well; he rubs the veil of him.

Dia. And how his silence drips up this applauded!

[Aside.

Ajer. If I go to him, with my arm'd fist I'll pash him
Over the face.
Agam. O, no, you shall not go.
Ajer. An he be proud with me, I'll pheeze his pride.
Let me go to him.
Ulyss. Not for the worth that hangs upon our quarrel
Ajer. A paltry, insolent fellow!
Nest. How he describes Himself!
Ajer. Can he not be sociable?
Ulyss. The raven
Chides blackness.
Ajer. I will let his humours blood.
Agam. He'll be a physician, that should be the patient.

Ajer. An all men
Were o'my mind,——
Ulyss. Wit would be out of fashion.
[Aside.

Ajer. He should not bear it so,
He should eat swords first: Shall pride carry it?
Nest. An 'twould, you'd carry half.
[Aside.

Ulyss. He'd have ten shares.
[Aside.

Ajer. I'll knead him, I will make him supple:—— Nest. He's not yet thorough warm: force him with praises;
Pour in, pour in; his ambition is dry.
[Aside.

Ulyss. My lord, you feed too much on this dislike.
To Agamemnon.
Nest. O noble general, do not do so.
Dia. You must prepare to fight without Achilles.
Ulyss. Why, 'tis this naming of him does him harm.
Here is a man—but 'tis before his face;
I will be silent.
Nest. Wherefore should you so!
He is not envious, as Achilles is.
Ulyss. Know the whole world, he is as valiant.
Ajer. A whoreson dog, that shall palter thus with us
I would, he were a Trojan!
Nest.

Were it in Ajax now——
What a vice
ACT III.

SCENE I.—Troy. A Room in Priam's Palace.

Enter Pandarus and a Servant.

Pan. Friend! you! pray you, a word: Do not you follow the young lord Paris?

Serv. Ay, sir, when he goes before me.

Pan. You do depend upon him, I mean?

Serv. Sir, I do depend upon the lord.

Pan. You do depend upon a noble gentleman; I must needs praise him.

Serv. The lord be praised!

Pan. You know me, do you not?

Serv. Faith, sir, superficially.

Pan. Friend, know me better; I am the lord Pandarus.

Serv. I hope, I shall know your honour better.

Pan. I do desire it.

Serv. You are in the state of grace. [Music within.

Pan. Grace! not so, friend; honour and lordship are my titles,—What music is this?

Serv. I do but partly know, sir; it is music in parts.

Pan. Know you the musicians?

Serv. Wholly, sir.

Pan. Who play they to?

Serv. To the hearers, sir.

Pan. At whose pleasure, friend?

Serv. At mine, sir, and theirs that love music.

Serv. Who shall I command, sir?

Pan. Friend, we understand not one another; I am too courtly, and thou art too cunning: At whose request do these men play?

Pan. That's to't, indeed; sir: Marry, sir, at the request of Paris my lord, who is there in person; with him the mortal Venus, the heart-blood of beauty, love's invisible soul,—

Pan. Who, my cousin Cressida?

Serv. No, sir, Helen; Could you not find out that by her attributes?

Pan. It should seem, fellow, that thou hast not seen the lady Cressida. I come to speak with Paris from the prince Troilus: I will make a compliment to assaul upon him, for my business seeth.

Serv. Sudden business! there's a stewed phrase, indeed!

Enter Parts and Helen, attended.

Pan. Fair be to you, my lord, and to all this fair company! fair desires, in all fair measure, fairly guide them! especially to you, fair queen! fair thoughts be your fair pillow!

Helen. Dear lord, you are full of fair words.

Pan. You speak your fair pleasure, sweet queen.—

Fair queen, here is good broken music.

Pan. You well said, my lord! well, you say so in fits.

Pan. I have business to my lord, dear queen:—

My lord, will you vouchsafe me a word?

Helen. Nay, this shall not hedge us out: we'll bear you sung, certainly.

Pan. Well, sweet queen, you are pleasant with me.—But (marry) thus, my lord,—My dear lord, and most esteemed friend, your brother Troilus—

Helen. My lord Pandarus; honey-sweet lord,—

Pan. Go to, sweet queen, go to:—commends himself most affectionately to you.

Helen. You shall not bob us out of our melody, if you do, our melancholy upon your head!

Pan. Sweet queen, sweet queen; that's a sweet queen, i'faith.

Helen. And to make a sweet lady sad, is a sour offence.

Pan. Nay, that shall not serve your turn; that shall not it, in truth, la. Nay, I care not for such words: no, no.—And, my lord, he desires you, that, if the king call for him at supper, you will make his excuse.

Helen. My lord Pandarus,—

Pan. What says my sweet queen,—my very very sweet queen?

Pan. What exploit's in hand? where sups he to night?

Helen. Nay, but my lord,—

Pan. What says my sweet queen?—My cousin will fall out with you. You must not know where he sups.

Pan. I'll lay my life, with my dispose Cressida.

Pan. No, no, no such matter, you are wide; come, your dispose is sick.

Pan. Well, I'll make excuse.

Pan. Ay, good my lord, Why should you say—

Cressida! no, your poor dispose's sick.

Pan. I spy.

Pan. You spy! what do you spy?—Come, give me an instrument.—Now, sweet queen.

Helen. Why, this is kindly done.

Pan. My niece is horribly in love with a thing you have, sweet queen.

[Exeunt.]
ACT III.—SCENE II. 539

Helen. She shall have it, my lord, if it be not my lord, Paris.

Pan. He! no, she'll none of him; they two are twain.

Helen. Falling in, after falling out, may make them three.

Pan. Come, come, I'll bear no more of this; I'll sing you a song now.

Helen. Ay, ay, 'twere now. By my troth, sweet lord, thou hast a fine forehead.

Pan. Ay, you may, you may.

Helen. Let thy song be love; this love will undo us all. O, Cupid, Cupid, Cupid! Pan. Love! ay, that it shall, I'll faith.

Pan. Ay, good now, love, love, nothing but love.

Pan. In good troth, it begins so:

Love, love, nothing but love, still more!
Far, oh, love's bow
Shoots buck and doe:
The shaft confounds,
Not that it wounds,
But tickles still the sore.

These lovers cry—Oh! oh! they die!
Yet that which seems the wound to kill,
Doth turn oh! oh! to ha! ha! he!
So dying love lives still:
Oh! oh! a while, but ha! ha! ha!
Oh! oh! groans out for ha! ha! ha!

Hey ho!

Helen. In love, i'faith, to the very tip of the nose.

Par. He eats nottling but doves, love; and that breeds hot blood, and hot blood begets hot thoughts, and hot thoughts beget hot deeds, and hot deeds is love.

Pan. Is this the generation of love? hot blood, hot thoughts, and hot deeds?—Why, they are vipers: Is love a generation of vipers? Sweet lord, who's afraid to-day?

Par. Hector, Deiphobus, Helenus, Antonor, and all the gallantry of Troy: I would fain have armed to-night, but my Neil would not have it so. How chance my brother Troilus went not?

Helen. He hangs the lip at something;—you know all, lord Pandarbus.

Pan. Not I, honey-sweet queen.—I long to hear how they sped to-night.—You'll remember your brother's excuse?

Par. To a hair.

Pan. Farewell, sweet queen.

Helen. Command me to your niece.

Pan. I will, sweet queen. [Exit.

A retreat sounded.

Par. They are come from field: let us to Priam's hall,
To greet the warriors. Sweet Helen, I must woot you To help unravel our Hector: his stubborn buckles,
With these your white enchanting fingers touch'd,
Shall more obey, than to the edge of steel,
Or force of Grecian sinews; you shall do more Than all the island kings, disarranged great Hector

Helen. Twill make us proud to be his servant, Paris: Yea, what he shall receive of us in duty,
Give us more palm in beauty than we have;
Yea, overshines ourself.

Par. Sweet, above thought I love thee. [Exit.

SCENE II.—The same. Pandarbus' Orchard.

Enter Pandarbus and a Servant meeting.

Par. How now? where's thy master? at my cousin Cressida's?

Serv. No, sir; he stays for you to conduct him thither.

Enter Troilus.

Pan. O, here be comes.—How now, how now?

Tro. Sirrah, walk off. [Exit Servant.

Pan. Have you seen my cousin?

Tro. No, Pandarbus: I talk about her door,
Like a strange soul upon the Stygian banks
Staying for waftage. O, be thou my Charon,
And give me swift transportance to those fields,
Where I may wallow in the lily beds
Propost'd for the deserver! O gentle Pandarbus,
From Cupid's shoulder pluck his painted wings,
And fly with me to Cressid!—

Tro. Walk here! the orchard, I'll bring her straight. [Exit Pandarbus.

Tro. I am giddy; expectation whirls me round.
The imaginary relish is so sweet.

That it enchaunts my sense; What will it be,
When that the watry palatse tastes indeed
Love's thrice-reputed nectar! death, I fear me;
Swooning destruction; or some joy too fine,
Too subtle-potent, tun'd too sharp in sweetness,
For the capacity of my ruder powers:
I fear it much; and I do fear besides,
That I shall lose distinction in my joys;
As doth a battle, when they charge on beaps
The enemy flying.

Re-enter Pandarbus.

Pan. She makes her ready, she'll come straight you must be witty now. She does so blush, and fetches her wind so short, as if she were frayed with a sprite; I'll fetch her. It is the prettiest villain:—she fetches her breath as short as a new-ta'en swallow.

[Exit. Pandarbus.

Tro. Even such a passion doth embrace my bosom:
My heart beats thicker than a feverous pulse;
And all my powers do their bestowing lose,
Like vassalage at unaware's encounter,
The eye of majesty.

Enter Pandarbus and Cressida.

Pan. Come, come, what need you blush? shame's a baby.—Here she is now: swear the oaths now to her, that you have sworn to me.—What, are you gone again? you must be watched ere you be made tame, must you? Come your ways, come your ways; an you draw backward, we'll put you into the fields.—Why do you not speak to her!—Come, draw this curtain, and let's see your picture. Alas the day, how loath you are to offend daylight! an 'twere dark, you'd close sooner. So, so; rub on, and kiss the mistress. How now, a kiss in fee-farm! build there, carpenter; the air is sweet. Nay, you shall fight your hearts out ere I part you. The falcon is the tercel, for all the ducks I the river: go, go, go.

Tro. You have herefet me of all words, lady.

Pan. Words pay no debts, give her deeds: but she'll bereave you of the deeds too, if she call your activity in question. What, billing again? Here's—In witness whereof of the parties interchangeably.—Come in, come in; I'll go get a fire. [Exit Pandarbus.

Cres. Will you walk in, my lord?

Tro. O Cressida, how often have I wished me thus?
Cres. Wished, my lord?—The gods grant!—O my lord!

Tro. What should they grant? what makes this pretty abolition? What too curious drag espy my sweet lady in the fountain of our love!

Cres. More drags than water, if my fears have eyes.

Tro. Fears make devils cherubins; they never see truly.

Cres. Blind fear, that seeing reason leads, finds safer footing than blind reason stumbling without fear: To fear the worst, oft cures the worst.
Tro. O, let my lady apprehend no fear: in all Cid's pageant there is presented no monster.
Cres. Nor nothing monstrous neither?
Tro. Nothing, but our undertakings: when we vow to weep seas, live in fire, eat rocks, tame tigers; thinking it harder for our mistress to devise imposition enough, than for us to undergo any difficulty imposed.
This is the moost rustiness in love, lady,—that the will is infinite, and the execution confined; that the desire is boundless, and the act a slave to limit.
Cres. They say, all lovers swear more performance than they are able, and yet reserve an ability that they never perform; vowing more than the perfection of ten, and discharging less than the tenth part of one. They that have the voice of lions, and the act of hares, are they not monsters?
Tro. Are there such? such are not we: Praise as we are tasted, allow us as we prove; our head shall go bare, till merit crown it: no perfection in reversion shall have a praise in present: we will not name desert, before his birth; and, being born, his addition shall be humble. Few words to fair faith: Troilus shall be such to Cressid, as what envy can say worst, shall be a mock for his truth; and what truth can speak truest, not truer than Troilus.
Cres. Will you walk in, my lord?
Re-enter Pandarus.
Pan. What, blushing still? have you not done talking yet?
Cres. Well, uncle, what folly I commit, I dedicate to you.
Pan. I thank you for that; if my lord get a boy of you, you'll give him me: Be true to my lord: if he flinch, chide me for it.
Tro. You know now your hostages; your uncle's word, and my firm faith.
Pan. Nay, I'll give my word for her too; our kindred, though they be long ere they are wooed, they are constant, being won: they are burs, I can tell you, they'll stick where they are thrown.
Cres. Boldness comes to me now, and brings me heart:
Prince Troilus, I have lov'd you night and day,
For many weary months.
Tro. Why was my Cressid then so hard to win?
Cres. Hard to seem won; but I was won, my lord,
With the first glance that did—a—Pardon me;—
If I confess much, you will play the tyrant.
I love you now; but not, till now, so much.
But I must master it:—in faith, I lie;
My thoughts were like unbridled children, grown
Too headstrong for their mother: See, we fools!
Why have I blab'd! who shall be true to us,
When we are so unsecret to ourselves?
But, though I lov'd you well, I wed you not;
And yet, good faith, I wish'd myself a man;
Or that we women had men's privilege
Of speaking first. Sweet, bid me hold my tongue; For, in this rapture, I shall surely speak
The thing I shall repent. See, see, your silence,
Cunning in dumbness, from my weakness draws
My very soul of counsel: Stop my mouth.
Tro. And shall, albeit sweet music issues thereon.
Pan. Pretty, I faith.
Cres. My lord, I do beseech you, pardon me:
'Twas not my purpose, thus to beg a kiss: I am ashamed;—O heavens! what have I done?—
For this time will I take my leave, my lord.
Tro. Your leave, sweet Cressid?
of your pretty encounters, press it to death: away.
And Cupid grant all tongue-tied maidens here,
Bed, chamber, Pandar to provide this gear!

[Exeunt.

SCENE III.—The Grecian Camp.
Enter Agamemnon, Ulysses, Diomedes, Nestor,
Ajax, Menelaus, and Calcites.

Cal. Now, princes, for the service I have done you,
The advantage of the time prompts me aloud
To call for recompense. Appar it to your mind,
That, through the sight I bear in things, to Jove
I have abandon’d Troy, let my possession,
Incurs’d a traitor’s name; exposs’d myself,
From certain and possess’d conveniences,
To doubtful fortunes; sçquêting from me all
That time, acquaintance, custom, and condition,
Made tame and most familiar to my nature;
And here, to do you service, am become
As new into the world, strange, unacquainted:
I do beseech you, as in way of taste,
To give me now a little bánc.
Out of those many register’d in promise,
Which, you say, live to come in my behalf. [mand.

Agam. What wouldst thou of us, Trojan? make de-
Cal. You have a Trojan prisoner, call’d Antenor,
Yesterday took; Troy holds him very dear.
Oft have you, (often have you, thanks therefore,) Desir’d my Cressid in right great exchange,
Whom Troy hath still denied: But this Antenor,
I know, is such a wrest in their affairs,
That their negotiations all must slack,
Wanting his manage; and they will almost
Give us a prince of blood, a son of Priam,
In change of him: let him be sent, great princes,
And he shall boy my daughter; and her presence
Shall quite strike off all service I have done,
In most accepted pain.

Agam. Let Diomedes bear him,
And bring us Cressid hither; Calchas shall have
What he requests of us.—Good Diomed,
Furnish you fairly for this interchange:
Withal, bring word,—if Hector will no-morrow
Be answer’d in his challenge; Ajax is ready.

Dio. This shall I undertake; and ’tis a burden
Which I am proud to bear.

[Exeunt Diomedes and Calchas.

Enter Achilles and Patroclus, before their tent.

Ulyss. Achilles stands’t the entrance of his tent:—
Please it our general to pass strangely by him,
As if he were forgot; and, princes all,
Lay negligent and loose regard upon him:
I will come last: ’Tis like, he’ll question me,
Why such unpleasing words are bent, why turn’d on him:
If so, I have disposal cimbale,
To use between your strangeness and his pride,
Which his own will shall have desire to drink;
It may do good: pride hath no other glass
To shew itself, but pride: for suppil knees
Feed arrogance, and are the proud man’s feet.

Agam. We’ll execute your purpose, and put on
A form of strangeness as we pass along;—
So do each lord; and either gêet him not,
Or else disdainfully, which shall shake him more
Than if not look’d on. I will lead the way.

Achl. What, comes the general to speak with me?
You know my mind, I’ll fight no more ’gainst Troy.
Agam. What says Achilles? would he quit with us?
Neat. Would you, my lord, aught with the general?
Achl. No.

Agam. The better. [Exeunt Agamemnon and Nestor.

Achl. Good day, good day.

Men. How do you? how do you?

[Exeunt Menelaus.

Achl. What, does the cuckold scorn me?

Ajax. How now, Patroclus?

Achl. Good morrow, Ajax.

Ajax. Ha?

Achl. Good morrow. Ajax.

Ajax. Ay, and good next day too. [Exit Ajax.

Achl. What mean these fellows? Know they not Achilles’ Pat’r. They pass strangely: they were us’d to bend,
To send their smiles before them to Achilles,
To come as humbly, as they us’d to creep
To holy altars.

Achl. What, am I poor of late?
’Tis certain, greatness, once fallen out with fortune,
Must fall out with men too: What the declin’d is,
He shall see anon read in the eyes of others,
As feel in his own fall: for men, like butterflies,
Shew not their mealy wings, but to the summer;
And not a man, for being simply man,
Hath any honour: but honour for those honour
That are without him, as place, riches, favour
Prices of accident as oft as merit.
Which when he fall, as being slippery standers,
The love that lean’d on them as slippery too,
Do one pluck down another, and together
Die in the fall. But ’tis not so with me:
Fortune and I are friends; I do enjoy
At ample point all that I did possess,
Save these men’s looks; who do, methinks, find out
Something not worth in me such rich beholding
As they have often given. Here is Ulysses;
I’ll interrupt his reading.—

How now, Ulysses?

Ulyss. Now, great Thetis’ son?

Achl. What are you reading?

Ulyss. A strange fellow here

Writes me, That man—how dearly ever parted,
How much in having, or without, or in,
Cannot make boast to have that which he hath,
Nor feels not what he owes, but by reflection,
As when his virtues shining upon others
Blest them, and they return that heat again
To the first giver.

Achl. This is not strange, Ulysses.

The beauty that is borne here in the face
The bearer knows not, but commends itself
To others’ eyes; nor doth the eye itself
(That most pure spirit of sense,) behold itself,
Not going from itself; but eye to eye oppos’d
Salutes each other with each other’s form.
For speculation turns not to itself,
Till it hath travell’d, and is married there
Where it may see itself; this is not strange at all.

Ulyss. I do not strain at the position,
It is familiar; but at the author’s drift:
Who, in his circumspection, expressly proves—
That no man is the lord of any thing,
(Though in and of him there be much constituting,)
Till he communicate his parts to others:
Nor doth he of himself know them for aught
Till he behold them form’d in the applause
Where they are extended; which, like an arch, rever-
The voice again; or like a gate of steel [barres
Fronting the sun, receives and renders back
His figure and his heat, as that which rap’d in this;
And apprehended here immediately

The unknown Ajax.
Thou, is that a wonder? The Providence that's in a watchful state. Knows almost even grain of Plutus' gold; Finds bottom in the uncomprehensive deeps; Keeps pace with thought and almost, like the gods Does thoughts unveil in their dumb cradles. There is a mystery with whom relation Must never meddle in the soul of state; Whose, hath an operation more divine, Than breath, or pen, can give expression to. All the commerce that you have with Troy, As perfectly ours, as yours, we hold; And after world! when Achilles, whom, To throw down Hector, than Polyxena. But it must grieve you: Thyrrobus now at home. When fame shall is of islands sound her trump. And all the Greekish girls shall trippling sing,— Great Hector's sister spin Achilles win; But our great Ajax bravely beat down him. Farewell, my lord! As your lover spoke The first choice of the see that you should break. [Ex. Part. To this effect, Achilles, have I mov'd you: A woman impatient; and mankind grown Is not more leath'd than an effeminat man. In time of action, I stand commend'd for this; They think, my little stomach to the war, And your great love to me, restrains you thus: Sweet, rouse yourself; and the weak wanton Capri Shall from your neck unloose the arrow's fold, And, like a dew-drop from the lady's mane, Be shook to air. Achilles! Shall Ajax fight with Hector! Priam, Ay: and, perhaps, receive much honour by this. I see, my reputation is at stake. [Exeunt. My name is shrewdly gird'd. farewell. O. then beware! Those wounds heal ill, that men do give themselves: Omission to do what is necessary Seals a commission to a blank of danger; And danger, like an ague, softly takes. Even then when we sit idly in the sun. Achilles! Go call Thersites hither, sweet Patroclus: I'll send the feel to Ajax, and desire him To cancel the Trojan words after the combat. To see us here unarmed: I have a woman's longing, An appetite that I am sick withal, To see great Hector in his weeds of peace; To talk with him, and to behold his visage, Even to my full of view. A labour saved! Enter Thersites. There. A wonder! Achilles! What? There. Ajax goes up and down the field, asking for himself. Ajax! How so? There. He must fight singly to-morrow with Hector; nor when his courage's bravest and most proud of his herculean condensation, that he ravishes, saving nothing. Achilles, How can that be? There. Why, he stalks up and down like a peacock, a strife, and a stand: reminiscences, like an hostess, that hath no antithese but her brain to set down her reckoning; bites his lip with a politic regard, as who should say—there were wit in this head, an 'twould be so, and so there is; but it lies as coldly in him as fire in a flint, which will not shew without knocking. The man's undone for ever: for if Hector break not his neck in the combat, he'll break it himself in vainglory. He knows not me: I said, Good-morrow, Ajax: and he replies, Thanks, Agamemnon. What think you of this man, that takes me for the general?
He is grown a very land fish, languageless, a monster. A playmate of opinion! a man may wear it on both sides, like a leather jerkin.

Achil. Thou must be my ambassador to him, Thersites.

Thers. Who, I, why, he'll answer nobody; he professes not aswering; speaking is for beggars: he wears his tongue in his arms. I will put on his presence: let Patroclus make demands to me, you shall see the pageant of Ajax.

Achil. To him, Patroclus! Tell him,—I humbly desire the valiant Ajax, to invite the most valorous Hector to come unarmed to my tent; and to procure safe conduct for his person, of the magnanimous, and most illustrious, six-or-seven-times-honoured captain-general of the Grecian army, Agamemnon. Do this.

Patr. Jove bless great Ajax.

Thers. Humph!

Patr. I come from the worthy Achilles, —

Thers. Ha! —

Patr. Who most humbly desires you, to invite Hector to his tent more —

Thers. Humph!—

Patr. And to procure safe conduct from Agamemnon.

Thers. Agamemnon?

Patr. Ay, my lord.

Thers. Ha!

Patr. What say you 'tis?

Thers. God be wi' you, with all my heart.

Patr. Your answer, sir.

Thers. If to-morrow be a fair day, by eleven o'clock it will go one way or other; howsoever, he shall pay for me ere he las me.

Patr. Your answer, sir.

Thers. Fare you well, with all my heart.

Achil. Why, but he is not in this tune, is he?

Thers. No, but he's out o'tune thus. What music will be in him when Hector has knocked out his brains, I know not: But, I am sure, none; unless the fiddler Apollo get his sinews to make catings on.

Achil. Come, thou shalt hear a letter to him straight.

Thers. Let me hear another to his horse; for that's the more capable creature.

Achil. My mind is troubled, like a fountain stirr'd; and I myself see not the bottom of it.

[Exit Achil, and Patroclus.

Thers. Would the fountain of your mind were clear again, that I might water an ass at it! I had rather be a tick in a sheep, than such a valiant ignorance.

ACT IV. —SCENE I. — Troy. — A Street.

Enter, at one side, Ajax, and a Servant with a torch; at the other, Paris, Diomed, Antenor, Diomede, and others, with torches.

Par. See, ho! who's that there?

Dio. 'Tis the lord. —

Par. Is the prince there in person?

Had I so good occasion to lie long, As you, prince Paris, nothing but heavenly business Should rob my bed-mate of my company. —

Dio. That's my mind too.—Good morrow, lord. —

Par. A valiant Greek, Ajax; take his hand: Witness the process of your speech, wherein You told—how Diomed, a whole week by days, Did haunt you in the field.

Dio. Health to you, valiant sir, During all question of the gentle truce; But when I meet you arm'd, as black defiance, As heart can think, or courage execute.

Par. The one and other Diomed embraces. Our bloods are now in calm; and, so long, health. But when contention and occasion meet, By Jove, I'll play the hunter for thy life, With all my force, pursuit, and policy.

Dio. And thou shalt hunt a lion, that will fly With his face backward. —In humane gentleness, Welcome to Troy! now, by Anchise's life, Welcome, indeed! By Venus' hand I swear, No man alive can love, in such a sort. The thing he means to kill, more excellently. We sympathize. —Jove, let Eneas live, If to my sword his fate be not the glory, A thousand complete courses of the sun! But, in mine emulous honour, let him die, With every joint a wound; and that to-morrow! —

Ene. We know each other well.

Par. Do we do; and long to know each other worse.

Dio. This is the most grateful, gentle greeting, The noblest hateful love, that e'er I heard of. —

What business, lord, so early?

Ene. I was sent for to the king; but why, I know not.

Par. His purpose meets you; 'Twas to bring this To Calchas' house; and there to render him, [Greek For the Trojans. ]

Par. Troy! and the fair fair creature. —

Let's have your company; or, if you please, Haste there before us: I constantly do think, (Or, rather, call my thought a certain knowledge,) My brother Troilus lodges there to-night; Rouse him, and give him note of our approach With the whole quality wherefore; I fear, We shall be much unwelcome. That I assure you;

Troilus had rather Troy were borne to Greece, Than Cressid borne from Troy.

Par. There is no help.

Par. The bitter disposition of the time Will have it so. On, lord; we'll follow you.

Ene. All will be well to-morrow; —

[Exit. Par. And tell me, noble Diomed; faith, tell me true, Even in the soul of sound good-fellowship,—] —

Who, in your thoughts, merits fair Helen best, Myself or Menelaus?

Dio. Both alike:

He merits well to have her, that doth seek her (Not making any scruple of her solitude,) With such a hell of pain, and world of charge; And you as well to keep her, that defend her (Not palating the taste of her dishonour,) With such a costly loss of wealth and friends: He, like a puling cuckold, would drink up The leaves and dregs of a flat tamed piece; You, like a Lecher, out of whom wants lobs Are pleasd to breed out your inferior; Both merits pois'd, each weighs nor less nor more; But he as he, the heavier for a whore.

Par. You are too bitter to your countrywoman.

Dio. She's bitter to her country: Hear me, Paris,— —

For every false drop in her bawdy veins A Grecian's life hath sunk; for every scruple Of her contaminated carrion inheritors, A Trojan hath been slain; since she could speak, She hath not given so many good words breath, As for her Greeks and Trojauns suffer'd death.

Par. Fair Diomed, you do as chapmen do, Dispirit the thing that you desire to buy: But we in silence hold this virtue well,
We'll not commend what we intend to sell,
Here let us way. [Exeunt.]

SCENE II.

The same.—Court before the House of Pandarus.

Enter Troilus and Cressida.

Tro. Dear, trouble not yourself; the morn is cold.

Cres. Then, sweet my lord, I'll call mine uncle
He shall unbolt the gates. [down;]

Tro. Trouble him not;
To bed, to bed: Sleep kill those pretty eyes,
And give as soft attachment to thy senses,
As infants' empty of all thought?

Cres. Good morrow then.

Tro. Pr'ythee now, to bed.

Cres. Are you aware of me?

Tro. O Cressida! but that the busy day,
Wak'd by the lark, hath rous'd the ribald crow's,
And dreaming night will hide our joys no longer,
I would not from thee.

Cres. Night hath been too brief.

Tro. Beshrew the witch! with venomous wights
she stays,
As tidiously as hell; but flies the graps of love,
With wings more momentary-swift than thought.
You will catch cold, and curse me.

Cres. Pr'ythee, tarry;—
You men will never tarry,—
O foolish Cressid!—I might have still held off,
And then you would have tarried. Hark! there's one up.

Pan. [Within.] What are all the doors open here?

Tro. It is your uncle.

Enter Pandarus.

Cres. A pestilence on him! now will he be mocking:
I shall have such a life,—

Pan. How now, how now? how go maidenheads?
—Here, you maid! where's your cousin, Cressid!

Cres. Go haug yourself, you naughty mocking uncle!
You bring me to do, and then you flout me too.

Pan. To do what! to do what?—let him say what:
what have I brought you to do?

Cres. Come, come; beshrew your heart: you'll ne'er
Nor suffer others.

Pan. Ha, ha! Alas, poor wretch! a poor capocchia!
Hast not slept to-night? would he not, a naughty man, let it sleep: a bugbear take him!

[Knocking.]Cres. Did not I tell you—would he were knock'd o'the head!—

Who's that at door! good uncle, go and see,—
My lord, come you again into my chamber:
You solici, and mock me, as if I meant naughtily.

Tro. Ha! ha!

Cres. Come, you are deceiv'd, I think of no such ing—[Knocking;]
How earnestly they knock! pray you, come in;
I would not for half Troy have you seen here.

[Exeunt Troilus and Cressida.]

Pan. [Going to the door.] Who's there? what's the matter? will you beat down the door? How now?
what's the matter?

Enter Enneas.

En. Good-morrow, lord, good-morrow.

Pan. Who's there? my lord. En. By my troth,
I knew you not: what news with you so early?

En. Is not prince Troilus here?

Pan. Here! what should he be here?

En. Come, he is here, my lord, do not deny him;

It doth import him much, to speak with me.

Pan. 15 he here, say you! 'tis more than I know,
I'll be sworn:—For my own part, I came in late;
What should he do here?

En. Who!—say, then:—
Come, come, you'll do him wrong ere you are 'ware:
You'll be so true to him, to be false to him:
Do not you know of him, yet go fetch him hither:—

As Pandarus is going out, enter Troilus.

Tro. How now! what's the matter?

En. My lord, I scarce have leisure to salute you,
My matter is so rash: There is at hand
Paris your brother, and Diophilus,
The Grecian Diones, and our Antenor
Deliver'd to us; and for him forthwith,
Ere the first sacrifice, within this hour,
We must give up to Diomedes' hand
The lady Cressida.

Tro. Is it so concluded?

En. By Priam, and the general state of Troy:
They are at hand, and ready to effect it.

Tro. How my achievements mock me!
I will go meet them: and, my lord. En. We Met by chance; you did not find me here.

En. Good, good, my lord; the secrets of nature
Have not more gift in taciturnity. [Ex. Trojan. En.

Is't possible! no sooner got, but lost!—
The devil take Antenor! the young prince will go mad.
A plague upon Antenor! I would, they had broke's neck!

Enter Cressida.

Cres. How now! what is the matter? Who was

Pan. Ah, ah! [here?]

Cres. Why sigh you so profoundly? where's my Tell me, sweet uncle, what's the matter? [laid gone

Pan. I would I were as deep under the earth as I am above!

Cres. O the gods!—what's the matter?

Pan. Pr'ythee, get thee in; 'Would thou hadst ne'er been born! I knew, thou wouldst he his death:

—O poor gentleman! A plague upon Antenor!

Cres. Good uncle, I beseech you on my knees,
I beseech you, what's the matter?

Pan. Thou must be gone, wench, thou must be gone; thou art changed for Antenor: thou must to thine father, and be gone from Troilus; 'twill be his death: 'twill be his bane: he cannot hear it.

Cres. O you immortal gods!—I will not go.

Pan. Thou must.

Cres. I will not, uncle: I have forgot my father;
I know no touch of consanguinity;
No kin, no love, no blood, no soul so near me,
As the sweet Troilus.—O you gods divine!
Make Cressid's name the very crown of falsehood,
If ever she leave Troilus! Time, force, and death,
Dq to this body what extremes you can:
But the strong base and building of my love
Is as the very center of the earth,
Drawing all things to it.—I'll go in, and weep;—

[Pan. Do, do. [cheeks;

Cres. Tear my bright hair, and scratch my praised
Crack my clear voice with sobs. and break my heart
With sounding Troilus. I will not go from Troy. [Ex.

SCENE III. The same. Before Pandarus' House

Enter Paris, Troilus, Enneas, Diophilus, Antenor, and Diomedes.

Par. It is great morning; and the hour prefixed
Of her delivery to this valiant Greek
ACT IV.—SCENE IV.

Comes fast upon:—Good my brother Troilus, Tell you the lady what she is to, And haste her to the purpose.
Tro. Walk into her house;
I'll bring her to the Grecian presently:
And to his hand when I deliver her,
Think it an altar; and thy brother Troilus
A priest, there offering to it his own heart. [Exit.
Par. I know what 'tis to love;
And 'would, as I shall pity, I could help!—
Please you, walk in, my lords.
[Exit.]

SCENE IV.—The same. A Room in Pandarus' House.
Enter Pandarus and Cressida.
Pon. Be moderate, be moderate,
Cres. Why tell you me of moderation?
The grief is fine, full, perfect, that I taste,
And violenteth in a sense so strong
As that which causeth it: How can I moderate it?
If I could temperize with my affection,
Or brew it to a weak and colder palate,
The like allayment could I give my grief:
My love admits no qualifying dross:
No more my grief, in such a precious loss,
Enter Troilus.
Pon. Here, here, here he comes.—Ah, sweet ducks!
Cres. O Troilus! Troilus!
[Embracing him.
Pon. What a pair of spectacles is here! Let me embrace too:—O heart,—as the goodly saying is,— —O heart, o heavy heart,
Why sigh'st thou without breaking?
where he answers again,
Because thou cou'st not ease thy smart,
By friendship, nor by speaking.
There never was a truer rhyme. Let us cast away nothing, for we may live to have need of such a verse;
we see it, we see it.—How now, lambs?
Tro. Cressid, I love thee in so straited a purity,
That the blest gods—as angry with my fancy,
More bright in zeal than the devotion which
Cold lips blow to their deities,—take thee from me.
Cres. Have the gods envy!
Par. Nay, ay, ay, it is too plain a case.
Cres. And is it true, that I must go from Troy?
Tro. A hateful truth.
Cres.
What, and from Troilus too?
Tro. From Troy, and Troilus.
Cres.
Is it possible?
Tro. And suddenly; whose injury of chance
Puts back leave-taking, justles roughly by
All time of pause, rudely beguines our lips of all joindure, forcibly prevents
Our lock'd embrasures, strangles our dear vows
Even in the birth of own labouring breath:
We two, that with so many thousand sighs
Did buy each other, must poorly sell ourselves
With the rude brevity and discharge of one.
Injurious time now, with a robber's haste,
Crams his rich thievry up, he knows not how:
As many farewells as be stars in heaven,
With distinct breath and consign'd kisses to them,
He fumbles up into a loose adieu;
And snares us with a single famish'd kiss,
Durstated with the salt of broken tears.
Æneas. [Within.] My lord! is the lady ready?
Tro. Hark! you are call'd: Same say, the Genius so
Cries, Come! to him that instantly must die.—
Bid them have patience; she shall come anon.
Pon. Where are my tears! rain, to lay this wind, or my heart will be blown up by the root!
[Exit Pandarus.
Cres. I must then to the Greeks?
Tro. No remedy.
Cres. A woeful Cressid 'mongst the merry Greeks!
When shall we see again?
[Heart,—
Tro. Hear me, my love: Be thou but true of Cres. I true! how now? what wicked deem is this?
Tro. Nay, we must use expostulation kindly,
For it is parting from us:
I speak not, be thou true, as fearing thee;
For I will throw my glove to death himself,
That there's no maculation in thy heart:
But, be thou true, say I, to fashion in
My segment protestation; be thou true,
And I will see thee.
Cres. O, you shall be expos'd, my lord, to dangers
As infinite as imminent! but, I'll be true.
Tro. And I'll grow friend with danger. Wear this sleeve.
Cres. And you this glove. When shall I see you?
Tro. I will corrupt the Grecian sentinels,
To give thee nightly visitation.
But yet, be true.
Cres. O heavens!—be true, again,
Tro. Hear why I speak it, love;
The Grecian youths are full of quality;
They're loving, well compos'd, with gifts of nature
And swelling o'er with arts and exercise; [Flowing,
How novelty may move, and parts with person,
Alas, a kind of godly jealousy
(A which, I beseech you, call a virtuous sin,)
Makes me afraid.
Cres. O heavens! you love me not.
Tro. Die I a villain then!
In this I do not call your faith in question,
So mainly as my merit: I cannot sing,
Nor heed the high fav'rt, nor sweeten talk,
Nor play at subtle games; fair virtues all,
To which the Grecians are most prompt and pregnant:
But I can tell, that in each grace of these
There lurks a still and dumb-discourseful devil,
That tempts most cunningly: but be not tempted.
Cres. Do you think, I will?
Tro. Nay.
But something may be done, that we will not:
And sometimes we are devils to ourselves,
When we will tempt the frailty of our powers,
Presuming on their changeful potency.
Æneas. [Within.] Nay, good my lord,—
Tro. Come, kiss; and let us part.
Par. [Within.] Brother Troilus!
Tro. Good brother, come you hither;
And bring Æneas, and the Grecian with you.
Cres. My lord, will you be true?
Tro. Who! alas, it is my vice, my fault;
While others fish with craft for great opinion,
I with great truth catch mere simplicity:
Whilst some with cunning gild their copper crowns
With truth and plainness I do wear mine bare.
 Fear not my truth; the moral of my wit is—plain, and true,—there's all the reach of it.

Enter Æneas, Paris, Antenor, Deiphobus, and Diomedes.
Welcome, sir Diomed! here is the lady,
Which for Antenor we deliver you:
At the port, lord, I'll give her to thy hand;
And, by the way, possess thee what she is.
Entreat her fair; and, by my soul, fair Greek,
If e'er thou stand at mercy of my sword,
Name Cressid, and thy life shall be as safe
As Priam is in Ilium.

Diom. Fair lady Cressid, 2 P 2
TROILUS AND CRESSIDA.

So please you, save the thanks this prince expects:
The lustre in your eye, heaven in your cheek,
Pleads your fair usage; and to Diomed
You shall be mistress, and command him wholly.

Tro. Grecian, thou dost not use me courteously,
To shame the real of my petition to thee.
In praising her: I tell thee, lord of Greece,
She is as far high-soaring o'er thy praises,
As thou unworthy to be call'd her servant.
I charge thee use her well, even for my charge;
For, by the dreadful Pluto, if thou dost not,
Though the great bulk Achilles be thy guard,
I'll cut thy throat.

Diom. O, be not mov'd, prince Troilus:
Let me be privil'g'd by my place, and message,
To be a speaker free; when I am hence,
I'll answer to my lust: And know you, lord,
I'll nothing do on charge: To her own worth
She shall be priz'd; but that you say—be't so,
I'll speak it in my spirit and honour.

Tro. Come, to the post.—I'll tell thee, Diomed,
This brave shall oft make thee to hide thy head.
Lady, give me your hand; and, as we walk,
To our own selves bend we our needful talk.
[Exeunt Troilus, Cressida, and Diomed.

[Trumpet heard.]

Par. Hark! Hector's trumpet.

Enters Hector.

Par. How have we spent this morning?
The prince must think me tardy and remiss,
That swore to ride before him to the field.
Par. 'Tis Troilus' fault: Come, come, to field with Diom. Let us make ready straight.

Enters Diomed.

Diom. Yea, with a bridegroom's fresh alacritity,
Let us address to tend on Hector's heels:
The glory of our Troy doth this day lie
On his fair worth, and single chivalry.

[Exeunt.]

Enter Ajax, armed: Adamasleon, Achilles, Patroclus, Menelaeus, Ulysses, Nestor, and others.

Agam. Here art thou in appointment fresh and fair,
Anticipating time with starting courage,
Our trumpets to the sound a loud note to Troy,
Thou dreadful Ajax; that the appalled air
May pierce the head of the great combatant,
And hale him hither.

Ajax. Thou, trumpet, there's my purse.
Now crack thy lungs, and split thy brazen pipe:
Blow, villain, till thy spher'd basch cheek
Out-swell the colic of fatal Aëtion:
Come, stretch thy chest, and let thy eyes spout blood;
Thou blow'st for Hector. [Trumpet sounds.]

Ulyss. No trumpet answers.

Achill. 'Tis but early days.

Agam. Is not you Diomed, with Calchas' daughter?

Ulyss. 'Tis he, I ken the manner of his gait;
He rises on his toe: that spirit of his
In aspiration lifts him from the earth.

Enter Diomed with Cressida.

Agam. Is this the lady Cressid? Divo. Even she.

Agam. Most dearly welcome to the Greeks, sweet

Nest. Our general doth salute you with a kiss.

Ulyss. Yet is the kindness but particular;
'Twere better, she were kiss'd in general.

Nest. And very courteously: I'll begin.—
So much for Nestor.

Achill. I'll take that winter from your lips, fair lady:
Achilles bids you welcome.

Men. I had good argument for kissing once.

Parl. But that's no argument for kissing now:
For thus popp'd Paris in his hardiment;
And parted thus you and your argument.

Ulyss. O deadly gall, and theme of all our scorns!
For which we lose our heads, to gird his horns.

Parl. The first was Menelaeus' kiss;—this, mine:
Patroclus kiss'd you.

Men. O, this is trim!

Nest. I'll have my kiss, sir:—Lady, by your leave

Cress. In kissing, do you render or receive?

Parl. Both take and give.

Cress. I'll make my match to live,
The kiss you take is better than you give;
Therefore no kiss.

Men. I'll give you boot, I'll give you three for one.

Cress. You're an odd man; give even or give none.

Men. An odd man, lady? every man is odd.

Cress. No, Paris is not; for, you know, 'tis true,
That you are old, and he is even with you.

Men. You flipp'd me o' the head.

Cress. No, I'll be sworn.

Ulyss. It were no match, your nailing against May I, sweet lady, beg a kiss of you? [horn—

Cress. You may.

Ulyss. I do desire it.

Cress. Why, beg then.

Ulyss. Why then, for Venus' sake, give me a kiss,
When Helen is a maid again, and his.

Cres. I am your debtor, claim it when 'tis due.

Ulyss. Never's my day, and then a kiss of you.

Dio. Lady, a word:—I'll bring you to your father.

Nest. A woman of quick sense.

Ulyss. Eye, fy'e upon her! There's language in her eye, her cheek, her lip,
Nay, her foot speaks; her wanton spirits look out
At every joint and motive of her body.
O, these eauconquaters, so glib of tongue,
That give a coating welcome ere it comes,
And wide unclasp the tables of their thoughts
To every ticklish reader: set them down
For slutish spoils of opportunity,
And dethroners of the game. [Trumpet within.

All. The Trojans' trumpet.

Agam. Yonder comes the troop.

Enter Hector, armed: Eneas, Troilus, and other

Trojans, with Attendants.

Eneas. Hail, all the state of Greece! what shall be done
To him that victory commands? or do you purpose
A victor shall be known! will you, the knights
Shall to the edge of all extremity
Pursue each other: or shall they be divided
By any voice or order of the field?

Hector bate ask.

Agam. Which way would Hector have it?

Eneas. He cares not, he'll obey conditions.

Achill. 'Tis done like Hector; but securely done,
A little proudly, and great deal mistracing
The knight oppos'd.

Eneas. If not Achilles, sir,
What is your name?

Achill. If not Achilles, nothing.

Eneas. Therefore Achilles: But, whence, know
In the extremity of great and little,

Valour and pride excel themselves in Hector;
The one almost as infinite as all,
The other blank as nothing. Weigh him well,
And that, which looks like pride, is courtesy.

This Ajax is half made of Hector's blood.
ACT IV.—SCENE V.

In love whereof, half Hector stays at home;
Half heart, half hand, half Hector comes to seek
This blended knight, half Trojan, and half Greek.
 Achill, A maiden battle then!—O, I perceive you.

Re-enter Diomed.

Agam. Here is sir Diomed:—Go, gentle knight,
Stand by our Ajax: as you and lord Eneas
Consent upon the order of their fight,
So be it; either to the uttermost,
Or else a breath: the combatants being kin,
Half slants their stiffe before their strokes begin.

[Ajax and Hector enter the lists.

Ulyss. They are oppos'd already.

Agam. What Trojan is that same that looks so heavy?

Ulyss. The youngest son of Priam, a true knight;
Yet not mature, yet matchless: firm of word;
Speaking in deeds, and needless in his tongue;
Not soon provok'd, nor, being provok'd, soon calm'd:
His heart and hand both open, and both free;
For what he has, he gives; what thinks, he shews;
Yet gives he not till judgment guide his bounty,
Nor dignifies an imparl thought with breath:
Manly as Hector, but more dangerous;
For Hector, in his blaze of wrath, subscribes
To tender objects; but he, in heat of action,
Is more vindicative than jealous love:
They call him Troilus; and on him erect
A second hope; as fairly built as Hector.
Thus says—Eneas; one that knows the youth
Even to his inches, and, with private soul,
Did in great Ilion thus translate him to me.

[Alarum. Hector and Ajax fight.

Agam. They are in action.

Nest. Now, Ajax, hold thine own!

To. Hector, thou sleep'st!

Awake thee! Agam. His blows are well dispos'd:—there, Ajax! Diol. You must no more. [Trumpets cease.

Eue. Princes, enough, so please you.

Ajax. I am not warm yet, let us fight again.

Diol. As Hector pleases.

Hect. Why then, will I no more— Thou art, great lord, my father's sister's son,
A cousin-german to great Priam's seed;
The obligation of our blood forbids
A gory emulation twixt us twain:
Were thy commixtion Greek and Trojan so,
That thou couldst say—This hand is Greekian all,
And this is Trojan; the sinews of this leg,
All Greek, and this all Trojan; my mother's blood
Runs on the dexter cheek, and this sinister
Bounds-in my father's by Jove multiportus,
Thou should'st not bear from me a Greekish member
Wherein my sword had not impressure made
Of our rank feud: But the just gods gainsay,
That any drop thou borrow'st from thy mother,
My sacred aunt, should by my mortal sword
Be drain'd! Let me embrace thee:
By hini that thunders, thou hast lusty arms;
Hector would have them fall upon him thus:
Cousin, all honour to thee!

I thank thee, Hector:
Thou art too gentle, and too free a man:
I came to kill thee, cousin, and hear hence
A great addition earned in thy death.

Hect. Not Neoptolemus so mirable
(On whose bright crest Fame with her loud'st O yes cries, This is he,) could promise to himself
A thought of added honour torn from Hector.

Eue. There is expectation here from both the sides,
What further you will do.

Hect. We'll answer it;
The issue is embraces:—Ajax, farewell.

Ajax. If I might in enterprizes find success,
(As self? I have the chance,) I would desire
My famous covenant to our Grecian tents.

Diol. 'Tis Agamemnon's wish, and great Achilles
Doth long to see unarmed the valiant Hector.

Hect. Eneas, call my brother Troilus to me:
And signify this loving interview
To the expectors of our Trojan part;
Desire them home.—Give me thy hand, my cousin;
I will go see with thee, and see your knights,
Ajax. Great Agamemnon comes to meet us here.
Hect. The worthiest of them tell me, by name:
But for Achilles, my own searching eye
Shall find him by his large and portly size.

Agam. Worthy of arms! as welcome as to one
That could be rid of such an enemy;
But that ranks of Gome: understand more clear
What's past, and what remains; I'm strew'd with husks
And formless ruin of oblivion:
But in this extant moment, faith, and troth,
Strain'd purely from all hollow bias-drawing,
Bids thee, with most divine integrity,
From heart of very heart, great Hector, welcome.

Hect. I thank thee, most imperious Agamemnon.

Agam. My well-fam'd lord of Troy, no less to you.

Men. Let me confirm thy princely brother's greet-

Brave of warlike brothers, welcome hither. [ing

Hect. Whom must we answer?

Men. The noble Menelaus,

Hect. O you, my lord! by Mars his gauntlet,
Mock not, that I fall the untrade oath: [thanks.
Your quondam wife swears still by Venus' grace;
She's well, but bade me not come hither to you.

Men. Name her not now, sir; she's a deadly theme.

Hect. O, pardon; I offend.

Nest. I have, thou gallant Trojan, seen thee oft,
Labouring for destiny, make cruel way
Through ranks of Greekish youth: and I have seen
As hot as Perseus, spurr thy Phrygian steed, [thee,
Despising many forfcets and sublimenents,
When thou hast hung thy advanced sword i' the air,
Not letting it decline on the declin'd;
That I have said to some my standers-by,
Lest Jupiter be gourmand, dealing life!
And have seen thee chase, and take thy breath,
When that a ring of Greeks have hemm'd thee in,
Like an Olympian wrestling: This have I seen;
But this thy countenance, still lock'd in steel,
I never saw till now. I knew thy grandire,
And once fought with him: he was a soldier good;
But, by great Mars, the captain of us all,
Never like thee: Let an old man embrace thee;
And, worthy warrior, welcome to our tents.

Eue. 'Tis the old Nestor.

Hect. Let me embrace thee, good old chronicle,
Thou hast so long walk'd hand in hand with time.—
Most revered Nestor, I am glad to claspe thee.

Nest. I hold, my arms could match thee in com-
As they contended with thee in courtesy. [tuation, Hect. I would they could.

Nest! Ha!

By this white beard, I'd fight with thee to-morrow.
Well, welcome, welcome! I have seen the time—

Ulyss. I wonder now how yonder city stands.
When we have her base and pillar by us.

Hect. I knew your favour, lord Ulysses, well.
Ah, sir, there's many a Greek and Trojan dead,
Since first I saw yourself and Diomed
In Ilion, on your Grecian embassy.
Troilus. Sir, I foretold you then what would ensue: My prophecy is but half his journey yet; For yonder walls, that partly front your town, Your towers, whose wanton tops do buss the clouds, Must kiss their own feet.

Hect. I must not believe you: There they stand yet; and modestly I think, The fall of every Phrygian stone will cost A drop of Grecian blood: The end crowns all; And that old common arbitrator, time, Will one day end it.

Ulyss. So to him we leave it. Most gentle, and most valiant Hector, welcome; After the general, I beseech you next To feast with me, and see me at my tent.

Achil. I shall forestall thee, lord Ulysses, thou!—

Now, Hector, I have fed nine eyes on thee: I have with exact view perus'd thee, Hector, And quoted joint by joint.

Hect. Is this Achilles?

Achil. I am Achilles.

Hect. Stand fair, I pray thee: let me look on thee.

Achil. Behold thy fell.

Hect. Nay, I have done already.

Achil. Thou art too brief; I will the second time, As I would buy thee, view thee limb by limb. Hect. O, like a book of sport thou'lt read me o'er; But there's more in me, than thou understand'st. Why dost thou so oppress me with thine eye? [body Achil. Tell me, if thou hast seen, in what part of his I shall destroy him? whether there, there, or there? That I may give the local wound a name; And make distinct the very breach whereon Hector's great spirit flew: Answer me, heavens!

Hect. It would discredit the bless'd gods, proud man, To answer such a question: Stand again: Think'rt thou to catch my life so pleasantly, As to prenominiate in nice conjecture, Where thou wilt have me dead?

Achil. I tell thee, yea.

Hect. Wert thou an oracle to tell me so, I'd not believe thee. Henceforth guard thee well; For I'll not kill thee there, nor there, nor there; But, by the forge that stove Mars his helm, I'll send thee everywhere, yea, nay, and ever.— Thou wisest Grecians, pardon me this brag, His insolence draws folly from my lips; But I'll endeavour deeds to match these words, Or may I never—

Ajax. Do not chafe thee, cousin;—

And you Achilles, let these threats alone, Till accident, or purpose, bring you thither: You may have every day enough of Hector. If you have stomach; the general state I fear, Can scarce entreat you to be odd with him.

Hect. I pray you, let us see you to the field; We have had pelting wars, since you refus'd The Grecians' cause.

Achil. Dost thou entreat me, Hector? Tomorrow, do me meet, fell as death; To-night, all friends.

Thy hand upon that match.

Agam. First, all you peers of Greece, go to my tent; There in the full convive we: afterwards, As Hector's leisure, and your bounties shall Concur together, severally entreat him.— But loud the tabouries, let the trumpets blow, That this great soldier may his welcome know.

[Entreat all but Troilus and Ulysses.

Tro. My lord Ulysses, tell me, I beseech you, In what place of the field doth Calchas keep?

Ulyss. At Menelaus' tent, most princely Troilus: There Diomed doth feast with him to-night; Who neither looks upon the heaven, nor earth, But gives all gaze and bent of amorous view On the fair Cressida.

Tro. Shall I, sweet lord, be bound to you so much? After we part from Agamemnon's tent, To bring me thither?

Ulyss. You shall command me, sir, As gentle tell me, of what honour was This Cressida in Troy? Had she no lover there, That wails her absence!

Tro. O, sir, to such as boasting shew their scars, A mock in due. Will you walk out, my lord? She was belov'd, she lov'd; she is, and doth: But, still, sweet love is food for fortune's tooth.

[Exeunt.

ACT V.

SCENE I.

The Grecian Camp.—Before Achilles' Tent.

Enter Achilles and Patroclus.

Achil. I'll heat his blood with Grecish wine to-night; Which with my scimitar I'll cool to-morrow.— Patroclus, let us feast him to the height.

Patr. Here comes Thersites.

Enter Thersites.

Achil. How now, thou core of envy? Thou crusty batch of nature, what's the news?

Ther. Why, thou picture of what thou seest, and idol of idiot worshippers, here's a letter for thee.

Achil. From whence, fragment?

Ther. Why, thou full dish of fool, from Troy.

Patr. Who keeps the tent now?

Ther. The surgeon's box, or the patient's wound.

Patr. Well said, Adversity! and what need these tricks?

Ther. Prythee be silent, boy; I profit not by thy talk: thou art thought to be Achilles' male varlet.

Patr. Male varlet, you rogue! what's that?

Ther. Why, his masculine whore. Now the rotten diseases of the south, the gout, gripings, r uptures, catarrhs, loads o'gravel i'the back, jethargies, cold o' sileys, raw eyes, dirt-rotten livers, wheezing lungs, bladders full of imposthum, sciatics, lime-kills i'the palm, in curable bone-ach, and the rivelled fee-simple of the tetter, take and take again such preposterous discoveries!

Patr. Why thou damnable box of envy, thou, what meanest thou to curse thus?

Ther. Do I curse thee?

Patr. Why, no, thou ruinous butt; you wheretoe indistinguishable cur, no.

Ther. No? why art thou then exasperate, thou idle immaterial skein of sivile silk, thou green saracen flap for a sore eye, thou tassel of prodigal's purse, thou? Ah, how the poor world is pestered with such water-fies; diminutives of nature?

Patr. Out, gull!

Ther. Finch egg!

Achil. My sweet Patroclus, I am thwarted quite

From my great purpose in to-morrow's battle. Here is a letter from queen Hecuba: A token from her daughter, my fair love; Both taxing me, and gaging me to keep An oath that I have sworn. I will not break it:

Fall. Greeks: fall, fame: honour, or go, or stay; My major vow lies here, this I'll obey.

Come, come, Thersites, help to trim my tent;
This night in banqueting must all be spent.—
Away, Patroclus. [Exit Achilles and Patroclus.]
Ther. With too much blood, and too little brain, these two may run mad; but if with too much brain, and too little blood, they do, I'll be a curator of madmen. Here's Agamemnon,—an honest fellow enough, and one that loves quills; but he has not so much brain as ear wax: And the godly transformation of Jupiter, there, his brother, the bull,—the primitive statue, and oblique memorial of cuckold: a thirsty shoeing-horn in a chain, hanging at his brother's leg,—to what form, but that he is, should wit lard with malice, and malice forced with wit, turn him to? To an ass, were nothing; he is both ass and ox: to an ox were nothing; he is both ox and ass. To be a dog, a mule, a cat, a fitchew, a toad, a lizard, an owl, a puttock, or a herring without a roe, I would not care: but to be Menelaus,—I would conspire against destiny. Ask me not what I would be, if I were not Thersites; for I care not to be the house of a lazar, so I were not Menelaus.—Hey-dey! spirits and fires!

Enter Hector, Troilus, Ajax, Agamemnon, Ulysses, Nestor, Menelaus, and Diomed, with lights.

Agam. We go wrong, we go wrong.

Hec. No, not a whit.

Ulys. Here comes himself to guide you.

Achil. Welcome, brave Hector; welcome, princes all. [night.

Agam. So now, fair prince of Troy, I bid good

Ajax commands the guard to tend on you.

Hec. Thanks, and good night, to the Greeks, general.

Men. Good night, my lord.

Hec. Good night, sweet Menelaus.

Ther. Sweet draught: Sweet, quoth 'a! sweet sink, sweet sewer.

Achil. Good night, and welcome, both to those that go, or tarry.

Keep Hector company an hour or two.

Dio. I cannot, lord; I have important business,
The tide whereof is now—Good night, great Hector.

Hec. Give me your hand.

Ulys. Follow his torch, he goes To Calchas' tent; I'll keep you company.

[Aside to Troilus.

Tro. Sweet sir, you honour me.

Hec. And so good night.

[Exit Diomed; Ulyss. and Tro. following.

Achil. Come, come, enter my tent.

[Exeunt Achil, Hector, Ajax, and Nest.

Ther. That same Diomed's a false-hearted rogue, a most unjust knave: I will no more trust him when he leers, than I will a serpent when he hisses: he will spend his mouth, and promise, like Drabler the hound; but when he performs, astronomers foretell it; it is prodigious, there will come some change; the sun burrows of the moon, when Diomed keeps his word. I will rather leave to see Hector, than not to dog him: they say, he keeps a Trojan drab, and uses the traitor Calchas' tent: I'll after.—Nothing but lechery! all incontinent varlets! [Exit.

SCENE II.—The same. Before Calchas' Tent.

Enter Diomedes.

Dio. Wha., are you up here, ho? speak.

Cal. [Within.] Who calls?

Dio. Diomed.—Calchas, I think.—Where's your daughter?

Cal. [Within] She comes to you.

Enter TROILUS and ULYSSES, at a distance; after them Thersites.

Ulys. Stand where the torch may not discover us.

Enter Cressida.

Tro. Cressid, come forth to him!

Tro. Yea, so familiar! Ulys. She will sing any man at first sight. Thers. And any man may sing her, if he can take her eiffi; she's noted.

Dio. Will you remember?

Dio. Nay, but do then, and let your mind be coupled with your words.

Tro. What should she remember?

Ulys. List!

Cres. Sweet honey Greek, tempt me no more to folly. Thers. Roguery!

Dio. Nay, then,—

Cres. I'll tell you what:

Dio. Pho! pho! come, tell a pin: You are forsworn. [me do!

Cres. In faith, I cannot: What would you have Ther. A juggling trick, to be—secretly open.

Dio. What did you swear you would bestow on me? Cres. I pr'ythee, do not hold me mine oath; Bid me do any thing but that, sweet Greek.

Dio. Good night.

Ulys. Hold, patience! how now, Trojan?

Cres. Diomed.—

Dio. No, no, good night: I'll be your fool no more. Tro. Thy better must.

Cres. Hark! one word in your ear.

Tro. O plague and madness!

Ulys. You are now'd, prince; let us depart. I pray Lost your displeasure should enlarge itself [you. To wrathful terms; this place is dangerous; The time right deadly; I beseech you, go.

Tro. Behold, I pray you!

Ulys. Now, good my lord, go off: You flow to great destruction; come, my lord.

Tro. I pr'ythee, stay; You have not patience; come. Tro. I pray you, stay; by hell, and all hell's torments, I will not speak a word.

Dio. And so good night.

Cres. Nay, but you part in anger.

Tro. Doth that grieve thee?

Ulys. O wittier'd truth! Why, how now, lord? Cres. I will be patient.

Dio. In faith, I do not; come hither once again. Ulys. You shake, my lord, at something; will you You will break out.

Cres. [By Jove, She strokes his cheek! too]

Ulys. Come, come.

Tro. Nay, stay; by Jove, I will not speak a word: There is between my will and all offences A guard of patience:—stay a little while Thers. How the devil luxury, with his fat rump, and potatoe anger, tickles these together! Fry, lecher, fry!
TROILUS AND CRESSIDA.

Tro. But will you then?

Cres. In faith, I will, la: never trust me else.

Tro. Give me some token for the surety of it.

Cres. I'll fetch you one. [Exit.

Ulyss. You have sworn patience.

Tro. Fear me not, my lord; I will not be myself, nor have cognition Of what I feel; I am all patience.

Re-enter Cressida.

Ther. Now the pledge; now, now, now, now!

Cres. Here, Diomed, keep this sleeve.

Tro. O beauty! Where's th' faith?

Ulyss. My lord,—

Tro. I will be patient; outwardly I will.

Cres. You look upon that sleeve: Behold it well.

He lov'd me—O false wench!—Give it me again.

Tro. Whose was it?

Cres. No matter, now I have it again.

I will not meet with you to-morrow night:

I pr'ythee, Diomed, visit me no more.

Ther. Now she sharpens:—Well said, whetstone.

Tro. I shall have it.

Cres. What, this?

Tro. Cres., O, all you gods!—O pretty pretty pledge! Thy master now lies thinking in his bed Of thee, and me; and sighs, and takes my glove, And gives memorial dainty kisses to it, As I kiss thee.—Nay, do not snatch it from me; He, that takes that, must take my heart withal.

Tro. I had your heart before, this follows it.

Cres. You shall not have it, Diomed: faith you shall have something else.

Tro. I shall have this; Whose was it?

Cres. Tis no matter.

Tro. Come, tell me whose it was.

Cres. 'Twas one's that loved me better than you will.

But, now you have it, take it.

Diomed. Whose was it?

Tro. By all Diana's waiting-women, yonder, And by herself, I will not tell you whose.

Diomed. To-morrow will I wear it on my helm;

And grieve his spirit, that dares not challenge it.

Ther. Wert thou the devil, and wost it on thy horn, It should be challeng'd.

Cres. Well, well, 'tis done, 'tis past;—And yet it will not keep my word. [Is not;

Tro. Why then, farewell;

Thou never shall mock Diomed again.

Cres. You shall not go:—One cannot speak a word, But it straight starts you.

Tro. I do not like this fooling.

Ther. Nor I, by Pluto: but that that likes not you, pleases me best.

Tro. What shall I come? the hour?

Cres. Ay, come:—O Jove!—

Tro. Do come:—I shall be plagu'd.

Farewell till then.

Ther. Good night. I pr'ythee, come.—

[Exit Diomedes.

Troilus, farewell! one eye yet looks on thee;

But with my heart the other eye doth see.

Ah! poor use! this fault to us I find, The error of our eye directs our mind:

What error leads, must err; O then conclude,

Minds, sway'd by eyes, are full of turpitude.

[Exit Cressida.

Ther. A proof of strength she could not publish more.

Unless she said, My mind is now turn'd where Ulyss. All's done, my lord.

Tro. It is.

Ulyss. Why stay we then?

Tro. To make a reconation to my soul

Of every syllable that here was spoke.

But, if I tell how these two did coajet, I call not lie in publishing a truth.

Sith yet there is a credence in my heart,

As esperance so obstinately strong,

That doth invert the attest of eyes and ears;

As if those organs had deceptions functions,

Created only to calummate.

Was Cressid here!

Ulyss. I cannot conjure, Trojan.

Ther. She was not, sure.

Ulyss. Must sure she was.

Tro. Why, my negociation hath no taste of madness.

Ulyss. Nor mine, my lord; Cressid was here but now.

Tro. Let it not be believ'd for womanhood!

Think, we had mothers; do not give advantage To stubborn critics; apt, without a theme, For propagation,—to square the general sex

By Cressid's rule: rather think this not Cressid.

Ulyss. What hath she done, prince, that can sour four sisters of mothers?

Tro. Nothing at all, unless that this were she.

Ther. Will he stagger himself out on 's own eyes?

Tro. This she now, this is Diomed's Cressida:

If beauty have a soul, this is not she;

If souls guide vows, if vows be sanctimony,

If sanctimony be the gods' delight,

If there be rule in unity itself,

This was not she. O madness of discourse,

That cause sets up with and against itself!

Bi-fold authority! where reason can revolt

Without perturbation, and less assume all reason

Without revolt: this is, and is not, Cressid!

Within my soul there doth commence a fight

Of this strange nature, that a thing inseparable

Divides more wider than the sky and earth;

And yet the spacious breadth of this division

Admits no orice for a point, as subtle.

As is Arachne's broken web, to enter,

Instance, O instance! strong as Pluto's gate;

Cressid is shine, tied with the bonds of heaven:

Instance, O instance! strong as heaven itself;

The bonds of heaven are shipp'd, dissolv'd, and loosed,

And with another knot, five-finger-tied,

The fractions of her faith, ours of her love,

The fragments, scraps, the bits, and greasy reliques

Of her o'er-eaten faith, are bound to Diomed.

Ulyss. May worthy Troilus be half attach'd

With which which here his passion doth express?

Tro. Ay, Greek; and that shall be divalged well

In characters as red as Mars his heart

Infam'd with Venus: never did young mao fancy

With so eternal and so fix'd a soul.

Hark, Greek: As much as I do Cressid love,

So much by weight hate I her Diomed:

That sleeve is mine, that he 'll bear on his helm;

Were it a casque compass'd by Vulcan's skill,

My sword should bite it: not the dreadful spout.

Which shipmen do the hurricano call

Coursting'd in mass by the allmighty sun,

Shall dizzzy with more clamour Neptune's ear

In his descent, than shall my prompted sword

Falling Diomed.

Ther. He'll tickle it for his concen'y

Tro. O Cressid! O false Cressid! false, false, false,

Let all untruths stand by thy stained name,
And they'll seem glorious.

Ulyss. O, contain yourself; Your passion draws ears hither.

Enter ENEAES.

ENEAS. I have been seeking you this hour, my lord: Hector, by this, is arming him in Troy; Ajax, your guard, stays to conduct you home.

TRO. Have with you, prince:—My courteous lord, adieu:—

Farewell, revoluted fair!—and, Diomed, Stand fast, and wear a castle on thy head! Ulyss. I'll bring you to the gates.

TRO. Accept distracted thanks. [Exeunt TROILUS, ENEAES, and ULYSSES.

THER. 'Would, I could meet that rogue Diomed! I would croak like a raven; I would hodge, I would bode. Patroclus will give me any thing for the intelligence of this where: the parrot will not do more for an almond, than he for a commodious drab. Lecbery, lecery; still, wars and lechery; nothing else holds fashion: A burning devil take them. [Exit.

SCENE III.—TROY. Before Priam's Palace.

Enter HECTOR and ANDROMACHE.

And. When was my lord so much ungently temper'd, To stop his ears against such mangled talk? Unarm, unarm, and do not fight to-day. HECT. You train me to offend you, get you in: By all the everlasting gods, I'll go. AND. My dreams will, sure, prove ominous to the Hect. No more, I say. [Exit.

Enter CASSANDRA.

CAS. Where is my brother Hector? And. Here, sister; arm'd, and bloody in intent. Consort with me in loud and dear petition, Pursue we him on knees; for I have dream'd Of bloody turbulence, and this whole night Hath nothing been but shapes and forms of slaughter. CAS. O, it is true.

HECT. Ho! bid my trumpet sound! CAS. No notes of sally, for the heavens, sweet brother.

HECT. Begone, I say; the gods have heard me swear. CAS. The gods are deaf to hot and peevish vows; They are polluted offerings, more abhor'd Than spotted livers in the sacrifice. And. O! be persuaded: Do not count it holy To hurt by being just: it is as lawful, For we would give much, to use violent thefts, And rob in the behalf of charity. CAS. It is the purpose, that makes strong the vow: But vows to every purpose must not hold: Unarm, sweet Hector.

HECT. Hold you still, I say; Mine honour keeps the weather of my fate: Life every man holds dear; but the dear man Holds honour far more precious dear than life.—

Enter TROILUS.

How now, young man? mean'st thou to fight to-day? And. Cassandra, call my father to persuade.

HECT. No, 'faith, young Troilus; doff thy harness, I am to-day I' the vein of chivalry: youth, Let grow thy sinews till their knots be strong, And tempt not yet the brushes of the war. Unarm thee, go; and doubt thou not, brave boy, I'll stand to-day, for thee, and me, and Troy.

TRO. Brother, you have a vice of mercy in you, Which better fits a lion, than a man.

HECT. What vice is that, good Troilus? chide me for it.

TRO. When many times the captive Grecians fall, Even in the fan and wind of your fair sword, You bid them rise and live.

HECT. O, 'tis fair play.

TRO. Fool's play, by heaven, Hector. HECT. How now! how now!

TRO. For the love of all the gods, Let's leave the hermit pity with our mother; And when we have our armours buckled on, The venom'd vengeance ride upon our swords; Spur them to ruthless work, rein them from ruth.

HECT. Fye, savage, fye!

TRO. Hector, then 'tis wars.

HECT. Troilus, I would not have you fight to-day. TRO. Who should withhold me? Not fate, obedience, nor the hand of Mars Beckoning with fiery trocheon my retire; Not Priamus, and Hecuba on knees, Their eyes o'ergalled with recourse of tears; Nor you, my brother, with your true sword drawn, Oppo'd to hinder me, should stop my way, But by my turn.

Re-enter CASSANDRA, with PRIAM.

CAS. Lay hold upon him, Priam, bold him fast: He is thy crutch; now if thou lose thy stay, Thou on him leaning, and all Troy on thee, Fall all together.

PRI. Come, Hector, come, go back: Thy wife hath dream'd; thy mother bath'd visions; Cassandra doth foresee; and I myself Am like a prophet suddenly enrap't, To tell thee—that this day is ominous: Therefore, come back.

HECT. Eneas is a-field; And I do stand engag'd to many Greeks, Even to the faith of valor, to appear This morning to them.

PRI. But thou shalt not go. HECT. I must not break my faith. You know me dutiful; therefore, dear sir, Let me not shame respect; but give me leave To take that course by your consent and voice, Which you do here forbid me, royal Priam.

CAS. O Priam, yield not to him.

PRI. Do not, dear father.

HECT. Andromache, I am offended with you: Upon the love you bear me, get you in.

TRO. This foolish, dreaming, superstitious girl Makes all these bodements.

CAS. O farewell, dear Hector. Look, look, how thou diest! look, how thy eyes turn pale! Look, how thy wounds do bleed at many vents! Har! how Troy roars! how Hecuba cries out! How poor Andromache shrills her dolorous forth! Behold, destruction, frenzy, and amazement, Like witless antics, one another meet; And all cry,—Hector! Hector's dead! O Hector! TRO. Away! Away! CAS. Farewell.—Yet, soft,—Hector, I take my leave:

TRO. Thou dost thyself, and all our Troy deceive. [Exit. HECT. You are amaz'd, my liege, at her exclam: Go in, and cheer the town, we 'll forth, and fight; Do deeds worth praise, and tell you them at night. PRI. Farewell: the gods with safety stand about thee! [Exeunt severally PRIAM and HECTOR. AIAURAS. TRO. They are at it; hark! Proud Diomed, believe, I come to lose my arm, or win my sleeve.
As Troilus is going out, enter, from the other side, Panthous.

Pan. Do you hear, my lord! do you hear?
Tro. What now?
Pan. Here’s a letter from you' poor girl.
Tro. Let me read.
Pan. A whorson ptisic, a whorson rascally ptisie so troubles me, and the foolish fortune of this girl;
and what one thing, what another, that I shall leave you one o’ these days: And I have a rhum in mine eyes too; and such an ache in my bones, that, unless a man were cursed, I cannot tell what to think on’t.
—What says she there?
Troc. Words, words, mere words, no matter from the heart; [Tearing the letter.
The effect doth operate another way,—
Go, wind, to wind, there turn and change together.—
My love with words and errors still she feeds:
But edifies another with her deeds. [Exeunt severally.

SCENE IV.—Between Troy and the Grecian Camp.

Alarums: Excursions. Enter Thersites.

Thers. Now they are clapper-clawing one another;
I’ll go look on. That disseminating abominable varet, Diomed, has got that same scrawny, self-loving young knave’s sleeve of Troy there in his helm: I would fain see them meet; that that same young Trojan ass, that loves the whole there, might send that Greekish wheemasterly villain, with the sleeve, back to the disseminating luxurious drab, on a sleeveless errand. O the other side, The policy of those crafty s’wearling rascals,—that stale old mouse-eaten dry cheese, Nestor; and that same dog-fox, Ulysses, is not proved worth a blackberry:—They set me up in policy, that mongrel cur, Ajax, against that dog of as bad a kind, Achilles: and now is the cur
Ajax prouder than the cur Achilles, and will not arm to-day; whereupon the Grecians begin to proclaim barbarism, and policy grows into an ill opinion.
Soft! here come sleeve, and ’t other.

Enter Diomedes, Troilus following.

Troc. Fly not; for, shouldst thou take the river Styx,
I would swim after.

Dio. Thou dost miscall retire—
Do not fly; but advantageous care
Withdraw me from the odds of multitude:
Have at thee!
Thers. Hold thy whole, Grecian!—now for thy where, Trojan!—now the sleeve, now the sleeve!
[Enter TROILUS and DIOMEDES, fighting.

Enter Hector.

Hec. What art thou, Greek, art thou for Hector’s
Art thou of blood, and honour? [match?
Thers. No, no: — I am a rascal; a scurvy raving knave; a very filthy rogue.
Hec. Do I believe thee?—live.
[Exit.
Thers. God-a-mercy, that thou wilt believe me;
But a plague break thy neck, for frightening me.
What’s become of the wenchling rogues? I think they have swallowed one another: I would laugh at that miracle. Yet, in a sort, lechery eats itself. I’ll seek them.

SCENE V.—The same.

Enter Diomedes and a Servant.

Dio. Go, go, my servant, take thou Troilus’ horse;
Present the fair steed to my lady Cressida:
Fellow, commend my service to her beauty;
Tell her, I have chastis’d the amorous Trojan,
And am her knight by proof.
Serv. I go, my lord. [Exit Servant.

Enter Agamemnon.

Agam. Renew, renew! the fierce Polydamus
Hath beat down Menon: bastard Margaroleon
Hath Doreus prisoner;
And stands colossus-wise, waving his beam,
Upon the passed hordes of the kings
Epipolus and Codius: Polixenes is slain;
Amphilacus, and Thos, deadly hurt;
Patroclus taken, or slain; and Palamedes
Sure hurt and bruist: the dreadful Sagittary
Appals our numbers; haste we, Diomed,
To reinforcement, or we perish all.

Enter Nestor.

Nest. Go, bear Patroclus’ body to Achilles;
And bid the snail-paced Ajax arm for shame.
There is a thousand Hector’s in the field:
Now here he fights on Galate her horse,
And there lacks work; anon, he there afoot,
And there they fly, or die, like scaled sculls
Before the beelching whale; then is he yonder,
And there the straawy Greeks, ripe for his edge,
Fall down before him, like the mower’s swath:
Here, thou, and every where, he leaves, and takes;
Dexterity so obeying appetite.
That what he will, he does; and does so much,
That proof is call’d impossibility.

Enter Ulysses.

Ulys. O courage, courage, princes! great Achilles
Is waning, weeping, cursing, vowing vengeance;
Patroclus’ wounds have rouse’d his drowsy blood,
Together with his mangled Myrmidons,
That noseless, handless, hack’d and chipp’d, do come
To crying on Hector. Ajax hath lost a friend, [him,
And foams at mouth, and he is arm’d, and at it,
Roaring for Troilus; who hath done to-day
Mad and fantastic execution:
Engaging and redeeming of himself,
With such a careless force, and forceless care,
As if that luck, in very spite of cunning,
Bade him win all.

Enter Ajax.

Ajax. Troilus, thou coward Troilus! [ Exit.
Dio. Ay, there, there.
Nest. So, so, we draw together.

Enter Achilles.

Achil. Where is this Hector? Come, come, thou boy-queller, shew thy face;
Know what it is to meet Achilles angry.
Hector! where’s Hector? I will none but Hector. [Exit.

SCENE VI.—Another Part of the Field.

Enter Ajax.

Ajax. Troilus, thou coward Troilus, shew thy head.

Enter Diomedes.

Dio. Troilus, I say! where’s Troilus?
Ajax. Were I the general, thou shouldst have my Ere that correction—Troilus, I say! what, Troilus?

Enter Troilus.

Troc. O traitor Diomed!—turn thy false face, thou traitor,
ACT V.—SCENE XI.

And pay thy life thou ow'est me for my horse!

Dio. Ha! art thou there?

Ajax. I'll fight with him alone: stand, Diomed.

Dio. He is my prize, I will not look upon.

Troy. Come both, you cowering Greeks; have at you both. [Exeunt fighting.

Enter Hector.

Hect. Yea, Troilus? O well fought, my youngest brother!

Enter Achilles.

Achill. Now do I see thee—Ha!—Have at thee, Hector. Pause, if thou wilt.

[Exeunt.

Hect. Fare thee well;—I would have been much more a fresher man, if I had expected thee—How now, my brother?

· Re-enter Troilus.

Tro. Ajax hath taken Æneas; Shall it be? No, by the flame of yonder glorious heaven, He shall not carry him; I'll be taken too, Or bring him off—Fate, hear me what I say, I reck not though I end my life to-day. [Exit.

Hect. Enter one in sumptuous armour.

Hect. Stand, stand, thou Greek; thou art a goodly mark:—

No! wilt thou not?—I like thy armour well; I'll crush it, and unlock the rivets all.

But I'll be master of it.—Wilt thou not, heast, abide? Why then, fly on, I'll hunt thee for thy hide. [Exeunt.

ACT VI.—The same.

Enter Achilles, with Myrmidons.

Achill. Come here about me, you my Myrmidons; Mark what I say.—Attend me where I wheel: Strike not a stroke, but keep yourselves in breath; And when I have the bloody Hector found, Empale him with your weapons round about; In fallest manner execute your arms.

Follow me, sirs, and my proceedings eye:—

It is decreed—Hector the great must die. [Exeunt.

SCENE VIII.—The same.

Enter Menelaus and Paris, fighting: then Thersites.

Enter Mardabelon.

Mar. Turn, slave, and fight.

Thers. What art thou?

Thers. I am a bastard too: I love bastards: I am a bastard begot, bastard instructed, bastard in mind, bastard in valour, in every thing illegitimate. One bear will not bite another, and wherefore should one bastard? Take heed, the quarel's most ominous to us; if the son of a whore fight for a whore, he tempts Paris, Farewell, bastard.

Mar. The devil take thee, coward! [Exeunt.

SCENE IX.—Another Part of the Field.

Enter Hector.

Hect. Most putrified core, so fair without, Thy goodly armour thus hath cost thy life.

Now is my day's work done: I'll take good breath; Rest, sword; thou hast thy fill of blood and death! [Puts off his helmet, and hangs his shield behind him.

Enter Achilles and Myrmidons.

Achill. Look, Hector, how the sun begins to set; How ugly night comes breathing at his heels: Even with the vail and dark'ning of the sun, To close the day up, Hector's life is done.

Hect. I am unarmed; forego this: vantage. Greek. Achill. Strike, fellows, strike; this is the man I seek. [Hector falls. So, lion, fall thou next; now, Troy, sink down; Here lies thy heart, thy sinews, and thy bones.—

On, Myrmidons; and cry you all amain, Achilles hath the mighty Hector slain.

Hark! a retreat upon our Grecian part.

Myr. The Trojan trumpets sound the like, my lord. Achill. The dragon wing of night o'erspreads the And, stickler-like, the armies separate. [earth, My half-suppr'd sword, that frankly would have fed, Pleas'd with this dainty bit, thus goes to bed.—

Come, tie his body to my horse's tail:— Along the field I will the Trojan trail. [Exeunt.

SCENE X.—The same.

Enter Agamemnon, Ajax, Menelaus, Nestor, Diomedes, and others, marching. Shouts within.

Agam. Hark, hark, what shout is that?

Nest. Peace, drums.

[Within. Achilles!

Achilles! Hector's slain! Achilles!

Dio. The bruit is—Hector's slain, and by Achilles. Ajax. If it be so, yet bragless let it be; Great Hector was as good a man as he.

Agam. March patiently along:—Let one be sent To pray Achilles see us at our tent.—

If in his death the gods have us befriended, Great Troy is ours, and our sharp wars are ended. [Exeunt, marching.

SCENE XI.—Another Part of the Field.

Enter Æneas and Trojans.

Æne. Stand, ho! yet are we masters of the field: Never go home; here starve we out the night.

Enter Troillus.

Troy. Hector is slain.

All. Hector!—The gods forbid!

Troy. He's dead; and at the murderer's horse's tail, In beastly sort, drag'd through the shameful field.— Frown on, you heavens, effect your rage with speed! Sit gods, upon your thrones, and smile at Troy! I say, at once, let your brief plagues be mercy, And linger not our sure destructions on! [Æne. My lord, you do discomfort all the host. Troy. You understand me not, that tell me so: I do not speak of flight, of fear, of death; But dare all immanence, that gods and men, Address their dangers in. Hector is gone! Who shall tell Priam so, or Hecuba? Let him, that will a screech-owl aye be call'd. Go in to Troy, and say there—Hector's dead:
TIMON OF ATHENS.

There is a word will Phœbus turn to stone:
Make weak and Notes of the mind and virtue,
Colds maces of the youth; and all this word.
Some put not of itself, but sense, away:
Some put not of the notion, but of hope to help,
Stay yet: You shall accomplish your task.
Thus prov’dly sight upon your Phœbus plane,
Let Than rise as early as he can,
forward
I through and through you! And then, graceaid,
No space of earth shall under our two hats;
I’l haunt these like a wander’d conscience,
That would see good enough; as merry thoughts.—
Put on a first march in safety;—with confidence:
Hope of revenge shall be our reward now.

Enter Poet, Painter, Jeweller, Merchant, and others,

Poet. O fair day, sir.

Pam. I am glad you are well,

Poet. Have not you been long, How long you been

Pam. It would cost me 5 pounds.

Poet. Nay, my boy is.

But what pone at really?

Pam. Nay, I must be.

Poet. That’s enough, sir; — as much as will bear, I hope,

Pam. I have a jewell here.

ACT II. SCENE I.—Athens. TIMON'S HALL.

Enter M.例子, the Chamberlain; the Council; and others.

M.例子. Are you ready?

Enter M.例子, with the Council.

M.例子. Call up,

Poet. I mean, sir; — as much as will bear,

M.例子. I have a jewel here.
ACT I.--SCENE I.

Poet. Nay, sir, but hear me on.

All those which were left of Fortune, but late,
(Some better than his value,) on the moment
Follow his strides, his lobbies fill with tendance
Rain sacrificial whisperings in his ear,
Make sacred even his stripp, and through him
Drink the free air.

Pain. Ay, marry, what of these?

Poet. When Fortune, in her shift and change of mood,
Sparns down her late beloved, all his dependants,
Which labour'd after him to the mountain's top,
Even on their knees and hands, let him slip down,
Not one accompanying his declining foot.

Pain. 'Tis common:
A thousand moral paintings I can shew,
That shall demonstrate these quick blows of fortune
More pregnant than words. Yet you do well,
To shew lord Timon, that mean eyes have seen
The foot above the head.

Trumpets sound. Enter Timon, attended; the Servant of Ventures talking with him.

Tim. Imprison'd is he, say you?

Ven. Serv. Ay, my good lord: five talents is his debt;
His means most short, his creditors most strait:
Your honourable letter he desires
To those have shut him up; which failing to him,
Periods his comfort.

Tim. Noble Venustius! Well;
I am not of that feather, to shake off
My friend when he must need me. I do know him
A gentleman, that well deserves a help,
Which he shall have: I'll pay the debt, and free him.

Tim. Command me to him: I will send his ransom;
And, being encir'cled, bid him come to me:—
'Tis not enough to help the freeble up,
But to support him after.—Fare you well.

Ven. Serv. All happiness to your honour! [Exit.

Enter an old Athenian.

Old Ath. Lord Timon, bear me speak.

Tim. Freely, good father.

Old Ath. Thou hast a servant nam'd Lucilius.

Tim. I have so: What of him?

Old Ath. Most noble Timon, call the man before thee.

Tim. Attends he here, or no!—Lucilius! [Enter Lucilius.

Luc. Here, at your lordship's service.

Old Ath. This fellow here, lord Timon, this thy catty
Might frequently pay my horse. I am a man [tune,
That from my first have been inclin'd to thrift;
And my estate does wax an heir more rais'd,
Than one which holds a trancher.

Tim. Well; what further?

Old Ath. One only daughter I, no kin else,
On whom I may confer what I have got:
The maid is fair, o' the youngest for a bride,
And I have lend her at my dearest cost.
In qualities of that tribe. This man of thee
Attempts her love: I pr'ythee, noble lord,
Join with me to forbid her resort;
Myself have spoke in vain.

Tim. The man is honest.

Old Ath. Therefore he will be Timon:
His honesty rewards him in itself,
It must not bear my daughter.

Tim. Does she love him?

Old Ath. She is young, and apt.
Our own precedent passions do instruct us
What levity's in youth.

Tim. [To Lucilius.] Love you the maid?
Luc. Ay, my good lord, and she accepts of it.
Old Ath. If in her marriage my consent be missing,
I call the gods to witness, I will choose
Mine heir from forth the beggars of the world,
And dispossess her all.
Tim. How shall she be endow'd,
If she be mated with an equal husband?
Old Ath. Three talents, on the present; in future, all.
Tim. This gentleman of mine hath serv'd me long;
To build his fortune I will strain a little,
For 'tis a bond in men. Give him thy daughter:
What you bestow, in him I'll counterpose,
And make him weigh with her.
Old Ath. Most noble lord,
Pawn me to this your honour, she is his.
Tim. My hand to thee; mine honour on my promise.
Luc. Humbly I thank your lordship: Never may
That state or fortune fall into my keeping,
Which is not ow'd to you! [Ex. Luc. & Old Ath.
Poet. Vouchsafe my labour, and long live your lordship!
Tim. I thank you; you shall hear from me anon:
Go not away.—What have you there, my friend?
Pain. A piece of painting, which I do beseech
Your lordship to accept.
Tim. The painting is almost the natural man;
For since dishonour traffic with man's nature,
He is but outside: These pencil'd figures are Even such as they give out. I like your work;
And you shall find, I like it: wait attendance
Till you hear further from me.
Pain. The gods preserve you!
Tim. Well fare you, gentlemen: Give me your hand:
We must needs dine together.—Sir, your jewel
 Hath suffer'd under praise.
Jew. What, my lord? dispraise?
If I should pay you for't as 'tis extoll'd,
It would unclaw me quite.
Jew. My lord, 'tis rated
As those, which sell, would give: But you well know,
Things of like value, differing in the owners,
Are prized by their masters: believe't, dear lord,
You need the jewel by wearing it.
Tim. Well mock'd.
Mer. No, my good lord; he speaks the common
Which all men speak with him. [tongue,
Tim. Look, who comes here. Will you be chid?

Enter Apemantus.

Jew. We will bear with your lordship.
Mer. He'll spare none.
Tim. Good morrow to thee, gentle Apemantus!
Aperm. Till I be gentle, stay for thy good morrow;
When thou art Timon's dog, and these knives honest,
Tim. Why dost thou call them knives? thou know'st Aperm. Are they not Athenians? [them not.
Tim. Yes,
Aperm. Then I repent not.
Jew. You know me, Apemantus.
Aperm. Thou knowest, I do; I call'd thee by thy name.
Tim. Thou art proud, Apemantus.
Aperm. Of nothing so much, as that I am not like
Timon.
Tim. Whither art going?
Aperm. To knock out an honest Athenian's brains.
Tim. That's a deed thou'lt die for.
Aperm. Right, if doing nothing be death by the law.
Tim. How likest thou this picture, Apemantus?
Aperm. The best, for the innocence.
ACT I. — SCENE II.

Aepm. The most accurs’d thou, that still omit’tst it.
2 Lord. Thou art going to lend Timon’s feast.
Aepm. Ay; to see meat fill knaves, and wine heat
2 Lord. Fare thee well, fare thee well. [fools.
Aepm. Thou art a fool, to bid me farewell twice.
2 Lord. Why, Apemantus?
Aepm. Should I have kept one to thyself, for I mean to give thee none.
1 Lord. Hang thyself.
Aepm. No, I will do nothing at thy bidding; make thy requests to thy friend.
2 Lord. Away, unpeaceable dog, or I’ll spann thee hence.
Aepm. I will fly, like a dog, the heels of an ass. [Exit.
1 Lord. He’s his opposite to humanity. Come, shall we
And taste lord Timon’s bounty? he outgoes [in,
The very heart of kindness.
2 Lord. He pours it out; Plutus, the god of gold,
Is but his steward: no meed, but he repays
Sevenfold above itself; no gift to him,
But finds the giver a return exceeding
All use of quittance.
1 Lord. The noblest mind he carries,
That ever govern’d man.
2 Lord. Long may he live in fortunes! Shall we in?
1 Lord. I’ll keep you company. [Exit.

SCENE II.
The same. — A Room of State in Timon’s House.

Hautboy playing loud music. A great banquet served in; Flavius and others attending; then enter Timon, Alcibiades, Lucius, Lucullus, Sempronius, and other Athenian Senators, with Ven- timius, and Attendants. Then comes, dropping after all, Apemantus, discontentedly.

Ves. Most honour’d Timon, ’t hath pleas’d the gods remember
My father’s age, and call him to long peace.
He is gone happy, and has left me rich:
Then, as in grateful virtue I am bound
To your free heart, I do return those talents,
Doubled, with thanks, and service, from whose help
I deriv’d liberty.
Tim. O, by no means, Honest Venitiad: you mistake my love;
I gave it freely ever; and there’s none
Can truly say, he gives, if he receives:
If our better play at that game, we must not dare
To imitate them! Faults that are rich, are fair.
Ves. A noble spirit.
[They all stand ceremoniously looking on Timon.
Tim. Nay, my lords, ceremony
Was but devis’d at first, to set a gloss
On fain’d deeds, hollow welcomes,
Recasting goodness, sorry ere ’tis shown;
But where there is true friendship, there needs none.
Pray, sit; more welcome are ye to my fortunes,
Than my fortunes to me. [They sit.
1 Lord. My Lord, we always have confess’d it.
Aepm. Ho, ho, confess’d it? hang’d it, have you not?
Tim. O, Apemantus! — you are welcome.
Aepm. No.
You shall not make me welcome:
I come to have thee thrust me out of doors. [there
Tim. Fye, thou art a churl; you have got a humour
Does not become a man, ’tis much to blame—
They say, my lords, that ira furore brevis est.
But yond’ man’s ever angry.
Go, let him have it by himself;
For he does neither affect company,
Nor is he fit for it, indeed.

Aepm. Let me stay at thine appur’l, Timon;
I come to observe; I give thee warning on’t.
Tim. I take no heed of thee; thou art an Athe- nian; therefore welcome: I myself would have no power; pr’ythee, let my meat make thee silent.
Aepm. I scorn thy meat; ’twould choke me, for I should,
Ne’er flatter thee,—O you gods! what a number
Of men eat Timon, and he sees them not!
It grieves me to see so many dip their meat
In one man’s blood; and all the madness is,
He cheers them up too.
I wonder men dare trust themselves with men:
Methinks, they should invite them without knives;
Good for their meat, and safer for their lives.
There’s much example for ’t; the fellow, that Sits next him now, parts bread with him, and pledges
The breath of him in a divided draught,
Is the readiest man to kill him: it has been prov’d.
If! Were a huge man, I should fear to drink at meals;
Lest they should spy my windpipe’s dangerous notes:
Great men should drink with harness on their throats.
Tim. My lord, in heart; and let the health go round.
2 Lord. Let it flow this way, my good lord.
Aepm. Flow this way! A brave fellow! — he keep his tides well.
Timon, These healths will make thee, and thy state look ill.
Here’s that, which is too weak to be a sinner,
Honest water, which ne’er left man? the more
This, and my food, are equals; there’s no odds.
Feasts are too proud to give thanks to the gods.

APEMANTUS’S GRACE.

Immortal gods, I crave no pelf,
I pray for no man but myself:
Grant I may never prove so fond,
To trust man on his oath or bond;
Or a harlot, for her weeping;
Or a dog, that seems a sleeping;
Or a keeper with my freedom;
Or my friends, if I should need ’em.
Amen. So fall to! —
Rich men sin, and I eat root.

Much good dished thy good heart, Apemantus! [now.
Tim. Captain Alecbiades, your heart’s in the field
Alcib. My heart is ever at your service, my lord.
Tim. You had rather be at a breakfast of enemies, than a dinner of friends.
Alcib. So they were bleeding-new, my lord, there’s no meat like them; I could wish my best friend at such a feast.
Aepm. ’Would all those flatterers were thine ene- mies then; that then thou might’st kill ’em, and bid me eat.
1 Lord. Might we but have that happiness, my lord, that you would ooeze use our hearts, whereby we might express some part of our zeal’s, we should think ourselves for ever perfect.
Tim. O no doubt, my good friends, but the gods themselves have provided that I shall have much help from you: how bad you been my friends else? why have you that charitable title from thousands, did you not chiefly belong to my heart? I have told more of you to myself, than you can with modesty speak in your own behalf; and thus far I confirm you. O, you gods, think I, what need we have any friends, if we should never have need of them? they were the most needless creatures living, should we ne’er have use for them? and would most resemble sweet in- struments hung up in cases, that keep their sounds to themselves. Why, I have often wished myself poorer, that I might come nearer to you. We are born to do benefits: what and better or proper can we call our own than the riches of our friends? O, what a precious comfort 'tis, to have so many like brothers, commanding one another's fortunes! O joy, even that by which we can be born! Mine eyes cannot hold out water, methinks; to forget their faults, I drink to you.

_Apem._ Thou wepest to make them drink, Timon.

_Lord._ Joy had the like conception in our eyes,
And, at that instant, like a babe sprung up.

_Apem._ Ho, he! I laugh to think that babe a bastard.

_Lord._ I promise you, my lord, you own'd me much.

_Apem._ Much. [Tucket sounded.]

Tim. What means that trumpet?—How now?

_Enter a Servant._

_Serv._ Please you, my lord, there are certain ladies most desirous of adittance.

Tim. _Ladies? What are their wills?_

_Serv._ There comes with them a forerunner, my lord, which bears that office, to signify their pleasures.

Tim. I pray, let them be admitted.

_Enter Cupid._

_Cup._ Hail to thee, worthy Timon;—and to all That of his bounty taste!—The five best senses Acknowledge thee their patron; and come freely To congratulate thy plentiful bosom: The ear, Taste, touch, smell, all pleas'd from thy table rise; They only now come but to feast thine eyes.

Tim. They are welcome all; let them have kind admittance.

Music, make their welcome.

1 Lord. You see, my lord, how ample you are belov'd.

Music. Re-enter Cupid, with a masque of Ladies, as Amazons, with lute in their hands, dancing, and playing.

_Apem._ Hey day, what a sweep of vanity comes this They dance! they are mad women. [way! Like madness is the glory of this life, As this pomp shews to a little oil, and root. We make ourselves fools, to disport ourselves; And spend our flatteries, to drink those men, Upon whose age we void it up again, With poisonous spite, and envy. Who lives, that's not Depraved, or depraves? who dies, that bears Not one spur to their graves of their friends' gift? I should bear, those, that dance before me now, Would one day stamp upon me: it has been done: Men shut their doors against a setting sun.

The Lords rise from table, with much adorning of Timon, and, to show their love, each single out an Amazon, and all dancer, men with women, a lofty seigneur or two to the hostlings, and cease.

Tim. You have done our pleasures much grace, fair Set a fair fashion on our entertainment. [ladies, Which was not half so beautiful and kind; You have added worth unto's, and lively lustre, And entertain'd me with mine own device; I am to thank you for it.

1 Lady. My lord, you take us even at the best.

_Apem._ Faith, for the worst is silly; and would not hold taking, I doubt not.

Tim. Ladies, there is an idle banquet Attends you: Please you to dispose yourselves.

_Ad Ad._ Most thankfully, my lord.

[Exeunt Cupid, and Ladies

Tim. Flavius,—

_Flav._ My lord.

Tim. The little casket bring me hither.

_Flav._ Yes, my lord.—More jewels yet!

There is no crossing him in his humour; [Aside. Else I should tell him.—Well,—I'll faith, I should,
When all's spent, he'd be cross'd then, an he could. 'Tis pity, bounty had not eyes behind: That man might never be wretched for his mind.

1 Lord. Where be our men?

_Serv._ Here, my lord, in readiness.

2 Lord. Our horses.

Tim. O my friends, I have one word To say to you:—Look you, my good lord, I must Entreat you, honour me so much, as to Advance this jewel; Accept it, and wear it, kind my lord.

1 Lord. I am so far already in your gifts,—

All. So are we all.

_Enter a Servant._

_Serv._ My lord, there are certain nobles of the senate Newely alighted, and come to visit you.

Tim. They are fairly welcome.

_Flav._ I beseech your honour, Vouchsafe me a word; it does concern you near.

Tim. Near; why then another time I'll hear thee:

1 pr'ythee, let us be provided To shew them entertainment.

_Flav._ I scarce know how. [Aside.

_Enter another Servant._

_Serv._ May it please your honour, the lord Lucius, Out of his free love, hath presented to you Four milk-white horses, trapped in silver.

Tim. I shall accept them fairly: let the presents be worthily entertain'd.—How now, what news?

3 Serv. Please you, my lord, that honourable gentleman, lord Lucullus, entreats your company to-morrow to hunt with him; and has sent your honour two brace of greyhounds.

Tim. I'll hunt with him; and let them be receipt'd, Yet without fair reward.

_Flav. [Aside._ What will this come to? He commands us to provide, and give great gifts, And all out of an empty coffer.— Nor will he know his purse; or yield me this, To shew him what a beggar his heart is, Deing of no power to make his wishes good; His promises fly so beyond his state. That what he speaks is all in debt, he owes For every word; he is so kind, that he now Pays interest for't; his lands put to their books. Well, 'would I were gently put out of office, Before I were fore'd out! Happier is he that has no friend to feed, Than such as do even enemies exceed.

I fear inwardly for my lord. [Exit Tim. You do yourselves Much wrong, you bate too much of your own merits: Here, my lord, a trifle of our love.

2 Lord. With more than common thanks I will re-

3 Lord. O, he is the very soul of bounty! [Grave it. Tim. And now I remember me, my lord, you gave Good words the other day of a bay courser 1 rode on: it is yours, because you lik'd it!

2 Lord. I beseech you, pardon me, my lord, in that.

Tim. You may take my word, my lord; I know no man Can justly praise, but what he does affect:
ACT II.—SCENE II.

I weigh my friend's affection with mine own; I'll tell you true. I'll call on you.

Tim. I take all and your several visitations So kind to heart, 'tis not enough to give; Methinks, I could deal kingdoms to my friends, And ne'er be weary.—Alcibiades, Thou art a soldier, therefore seldom rich, It comes in charity to thee: for all thy living Is 'mongst the dead; and all the lands thou hast Lie in a pitch'd field.

Alcib. Ay, defiled land, my lord.

Tim. We are so virtuously bound, Am I to you.

Tim. All to you.—Lights, more lights. 1 Lord. The best of happiness, Honour, and fortunes, keep with you, lord Timon! Tim. Ready for his friends.

SCENE II.—The same. A Hall in Timon's House.

Enter Flavius, with many bills in his hand.

Flav. No care, no stop! so senseless of expense, That he will neither know how to maintain it, Nor cease his flow of riot: Takes no account How things go from him; nor resumes no care Of what is to continue; Never mind Was to be so unruly, to be so kind; What shall be done! He will not hear, till feel: I must be round with him, now he comes from hunt-Fye, fye, fye, fye! [Exeunt Alcibiades, Lords, &c.

ACT II.

SCENE I.—The same. A Room in a Senator's House.

Enter a Senator, with papers in his hand.

Sen. And late, five thousand to Varro; and to Isidore He owes nine thousand; besides my former sum, Which makes it five and twenty.—Still in motion Of raging waste! It cannot hold; it will not. If I want gold, steal but a beggar's dog, And give it Timon, why, the dog coius gold: If I would sell my horse, and buy twenty more Better than he, why, give my horse to Timon, Ask nothing, give it him, it foals me, straight, And able horses! No porter at his gate; But rather one that smiles, and still invites All that pass by. It cannot hold; no reason Can find his state in safety. Caphis, ho! Caphis, I say!—

Enter Caphis.

Caph. Here, sir; What is your pleasure? Sen. Get on your cloak, and haste you to lord Ti-Importune him for my monies; be not cas'd [mon; With slight denial; nor then silene'd, when—

Commend me to your master—and the cap Plays in the right hand thus:—but tell him, sirrah, My uses cry to me, I must serve my turn Out of mine own; his days and times are past, And my reliances on his fracted dates Have smit my credit: I love, and honour him; But must not break my back, to heal his finger: Immediate are my needs; and my relief Must not be toss'd and turn'd to me in words, But find supply immediate. Get you gone: Put on a most importunate aspect, A visage of demand; for, I do fear, When every feather sticks in his own wing, Lord Timon will be left a naked guil, Which flashes now a pheuex. Get you gone. Caph. I go, sir. Sen. I go, sir—take the bonds along with you, And have the dates in compt. Caph. Sen. I will, sir. Go. [Ex.
TIMON OF ATHENS.

I'll wait upon you instantly.—Come hither, pray you,

[To Flavius.]

How goes the world, that I am thus encumber'd With clamorous demands of date-broke bonds, And the detention of long-since due debts, Against my honour? Please you, gentlemen, The time is unagreable to this business: Your importunity cease, till after dinner; That I may make his lordship understand Wherefore you are not paid.

Tim. See them well entertained. [Exit Timon. Flavius.]

Enter Apemantus and a Fool.

Coph. Stay, stay, here comes the fool with Apemantus; let's have some sport with 'em.

Var. Serv. Hang him, he'll abuse us.

Gist. Serv. A plague upon him, dog! Var. Serv. How dost, fool?

Apm. Dost dialogue with thy shadow?

Var. Serv. I speak not to thee.

Apm. No; 'tis to thyself.—Come away.

[To the Fool.

Ibid. Serv. [To Var. Serv.] There's the fool hangs on your back already.

Apm. No, thou stand'st single, thou art not on Coph. Where's the fool now? [him yet.

Apm. He last asked the question.—Poor rogues and usurers' men! bawds between gold and want!

All Serv. What are we, Apemantus?

Apm. Asses.

All Serv. Why?

Apm. That you ask me what you are, and do not know yourselves.—Speak to em, fool.

Fool. How do you, gentlemen? [mistress?]

All Serv. Gramercies, good fool: How does your Fool. She's 'e'en setting on water to scald such chickens as you are. 'Woud we could see you at Corinth.

Apm. Good! Gramercy.

Page. Look you, here comes my mistress' page.

Page. [To the Fool.] Why, how now, captain? what do you in this wise company? How dost thou, Apemantus?

Apm. 'Would I had a red in my mouth, that I might answer thee profitably.

Page. Pr'ythee, Apemantus, read me the superscription of these letters; I know not which is which.

Apm. Canst not read?

Page. No.

Page. There will little learning die then, thataday thou art hanged. This is to lord Timon; this to Alcibiades. Go; thou wast born a bastard, and thou'll die a bawd.

Page. Thou wast whelped a dog; and thou shalt famish, a dog's death. Answer not, I am gone.

Apm. Even so thou out-ran'st grace. Fool, I will go with you to lord Timon's.

Fool. Will you leave me there?

Apm. If Timon stay at home.—You three serve three usurers!

All Serv. Ay, 'twould they served us!

Apm. So would I,—as good a trick as ever hang-man served thief.

Fool. Are you three usurers' men?

All Serv. Ay, fool.

Fool. I think, no usurer but has a fool to his ser- vant: My mistress is one, and I am her fool. When men come to borrow of your masters, they approach sadly, and go away merry; but they enter my mistress' house merrily, and go away sadly: The reason of this?

Var. Serv. I could render one.

Apm. Do it then, that we may account thee a whoremaster, and a knave; which, notwithstanding, thou shalt be no less esteemed.

Var. Serv. What is a whoremaster, fool? Fool. A fool in good clothes, and something like thee. 'Tis a spirit: sometime, it appears like a lord; sometime, like a lawyer; sometime, like a philosopher, with two stones more than his artificial one: He is very often like a knight; and, generally, in all shapes, that man goes up and down in, from score to thirteen, this spirit walks in.

Var. Serv. Thou art not altogether a fool.

Fool. Nor thou altogether a wise man: as much foolery as I have, so much wit thou lackest.

Apm. That answer might have become Apemantus. All Serv. Aside, aside; here comes lord Timon.

Re-enter Timon and Flavius.

Apm. Come with me, fool, come.

Fool. I do not always follow lover, elder brother, and woman; sometime, the philosopher.

[Exeunt Apemantus and Fool.

Fla. Try o you, walk near: I'll speak with you anon.

Tim. You make me marvel: Wherefore, ere this Had you not fully laid my state before me; [time, That I might so have rated my expense, As I had leave of means!

Fla. You would not hear me, At your own pleasures I propos'd.

Tim. Go to: Perciance, some single vantages you took, When my indisposition put you back; And that unaptness made your minister, Tins to excuse yourself.

Fla. O my good lord! At many times I brought in my accounts Laid them before you; you would throw them off, And say, you found them in mine honesty, When, for some trifling present, you have bid me Return so much, I have shook my head, and wept; Yet, 'gainst the authority of manners pray'd you To hold your hand more close: I did endure Not seldom, nor no slight checks; when I have Promptured you, in the ebb of your estate, And your great flow of debts. My dear-lov'd lord, Though you hear now, (too late! ) yet now's a time, The greatest of your having lacks a half To pay your present debts.

Tim. Let all my land be sold

Fla. 'Tis all engag'd, some forfeited and gone; And what remains will hardly stop the mouth Of present dues: the future comes apace: What shall defend the interim? and at length How goes our reckoning?

Tim. To Lacedaemon did my land extend.

Fla. O my good lord, the world is but a word, Were it all yours, to give it in a breath, How quickly were it gone?

Tim. You tell me true.

Fla. If you suspect my husbandry or falsehood Call me before the exactest auditors, And set me on the proof. So the gods bless me, When all our offices have been oppress'd With riotous feeders: when our vaults have wept With drunken spilth of wine; when every room
Hath blaz'd with lights, and bray'd with ministrancy; I have retir'd me to a wasteful cock, And set mine eyes at flow.

Tim. Pr'ythee, no more.

Flav. Heavens, have I said, the bounty of this lord! How many prodigal bits have slaves, and peasants, This night engalitied! Who is not Timon's? What heart, head, sword, force, means, but is lord Great Timon, noble, worthy, royal Timon? [Timon's? Ah! when the means are gone, that buy this praise, The breath is gone whereof this praise is made: Feast-won, fast-lost; one cloud of winter showers, These flies are come'd.

Tim. Come, sermon me no further: No villainous bounty yet hath pass'd my heart; Unwise, not ignobly, have I given. Why dost thou weep? Canst thou the conscience lack, To think I shall lack friends? Secure thy heart; If I would broach the vessels of my love, And try the arguments of hearts by borrowing, Men, and men's fortunes could I frankly use, As I can bid thee speak.

Flav. Assurance bless thy thoughts!

Tim. And, in some sort, these wants of mine are found, That I account them blessings; for by these Shall I try friends: You shall perceive, how you Mistake my fortunes: I am wealthy in my friends. Within there, ho!—Flaminius! Servilius!

Enter Flaminius, Servilius, and other Servants.

Flam. My lord, my lord.

Tim. I will dispassage you severally. Go you, to Lord to lord Lucullus you; I hunted with his Honour to-day: You, to Sempronius; Command me to their loves; and, I am proud, say, That my occasions have found time to use them Toward a supply of money: let the request Be fifty talents.

Tim. As you have said my lord.

Flam. Lord Lucullus, and lord Lucullus! Humph! [Aside.]

Tim. Go you, sir, to another Serv. to the senators, (Of whom, even to the state's best health, I have Deserv'd this hearing,) bid 'em send o' the instant A thousand talents to me. I have been bold, (For that I knew it the most general way,) To them to use your signet, and your name; But they do shake their heads, and I am here No richer in return.

Tim. They answer, in a joint and corporate voice, That now they are at fall, want treasure, cannot Do what they would: are sorry—you are honourable.

But yet they could have wish'd—they know not—but Some hath been amiss—a noble nature May catch a wrench—would all were well—tis pity— And so, intending other serious matters After distasteful looks, and these hard fractions, With certain half-caps, and cold-moving nods, They froze me into silence.

Tim. You gods, reward them! I pr'ythee, man, look cheerly; These old fellows Have their ingratitude in them hereditary: This blood is cack'd, it seldom flows; 'tis lack of kindly warmth, they are not kind; And nature, as it grows again toward earth, Is fashion'd for the journey, dull and heavy. Go to Ventidius.—[To a Serv.]

Fla. Pr'ythee, [To Flavius.] be not sad, Thou art true, and honest; ingenuously I speak, No blame belongs to thee.—[To Serv.] Venetius lately Buried his father: by whose death, he's stepp'd Into a great estate: when he was poor, Imprison'd, and in scarcity of friends, I clear'd him with five talents: Greet him from me, bid him suppose, some good necessity Touches his friend, which craves to be remember'd With those five talents;—that had,—[To Flav.] give it to these fellows To whom 'tis instant due. Ne'er speak, or think, That Timo's fortune 'mong his friends can sink. Flav. I would, I could not think it; That thought is bounty's foe;

Flam. Being free itself, it thinks all others so. [Exeunt.

ACT III.

SCENE I.—The same. A Room in Lucullus's House.

Flaminius writing. Enter a Servant to him.

Serv. I have told my lord of you, he is coming down to you.

Flam. I thank you, sir. [Aside.] Enter Lucullus.

Serv. Here's my lord.

Lucull. [Aside.] One of lord Timon's men? a gift, I warrant. Why, this bits right; I dreamt of a silver basin and ever to-night. Flaminius, honest Flaminius; you are very respectively welcome, sir.—Fill me some wine.—[Exit Servant.] And how does that honourable, complete, free-hearted gentleman of Athens, thy very bountiful good lord and master? Flam. His health is well, sir.

Lucull. I am right glad that his health is well, sir: And what hast thou there under thy cloak, pretty Flaminius?

Flam. Faith, nothing but an empty box, sir; which, in my lord's behalf, I come to entreat your honour to supply; who, having great and instant occasion to use fifty talents, hath sent to your lordship to furnish him; nothing doubting your present assistance therein. Lucull. If it be so, nothing doubting, says he! alas, good lord! a noble gentleman 'tis, if he would not keep so good a house. Many a time and often I have dined with him, and told him on't; and come again to supper to him, of purpose to have him spend less: and yet he would embrace no counsel, take no warning by my coming. Every man has his fault, and honesty is his; I have told him on't, but I could never get him from it.

Re-enter Servant, with wine.

Serv. Please your lordship, here's the wine.

Lucull. Flaminius, I have noted thee always wise. Here's to thee.

Flam. Your lordship speaks your pleasure.

Lucull. I have observed thee always for a tow'rning prompt spirit, — give thee thy due, — and one that knows what belongs to reason: and cannot use the time well, if the time use thee well: good parts in thee.—Get you gone, sirrah.—[To the Servant, who goes out.]—Draw nearer, honest Flaminius. Thy lord's a bountiful gentleman; but thou art wise: and thou knowest well enough, although thou compost to me, that this is no time to lend money; especially upon bare friendship, without security. Here's three soli- daries for thee; good buy, wink at me, and say, thou saw'st me not. Fare thee well.

2QQ
Timon. Is't possible the world should so much differ; And we show that kind, that curst, that damned baseness, To him that worships thee.

[Turning the money over.]

I know. Ha! now I see, then I am a fool, and it is for the master.

[To Lucullus.]

I am. May these add to the number that may send Their other debtors to their damnum, These Thracian disease of a friended, and not himself.

This man, this friend, has long and often been. It turns it less than two nights! O yet gods, I see my master's passion. This slave, To his honour, has my lord's meat in him; Why should it thrive, and turn to extremity, When he is made a poison O, may diseases only work upon you!

And when he is sick to death, let not that part Of my lord paid for, be not your power, To expel sickness, but proving his hour.

SCENE II. — The same. A public place.

Enter TIMON and Theseus.

Theseus. Who, the lord Timon? he's my very good friend, and am honour'd greatly, generally, and all.

Lucullus. We know him for no lesse, though we are but strangers to him. But I can tell you one thing of my lord, and which I hear from common rumour, now lord Timon's men here are done and past, and his estate shews from him.

Theseus. Yet no, we do not believe it, he cannot want for money.

Lucullus. But believe you this, my lord, that not long ago, one of his men was with the lord Lucullus, to borrow so many talents: no, no, he had extented, I think, what necessity belong'd to, and yet was denied.

Theseus. How?

Lucullus. I tell you, denied, my lord.

Theseus. What a strange case was that? now, before the gods, I am ashamed on't: Denied that honourable man! there was very little honours show'd in it. For my own part, I must needs confess, I have received some small kindness from him, as money, plate, jewels, and such like trifles, nothing comparing to his; yet, had he mistook him, and sent to me, I should not have denied his occasion so many talents.

Lucullus.

Theseus. Seer, see, by good hap, you're my lord, I have sweat to see his honour.—My honoured lord.

[To Lucullus.]

Lucullus. Sir, you are kind, sir, fair that well: Command me to the honourable-virtuous lord, my very exquisite friend.

Theseus. Why it please your honour, my lord hath sent ——

Lucullus. Ha! what has he sent? I am so much endeared to that lord, he's ever seeing: How shall I thank him, thanks him? And what has he sent now?

Theseus. He has only sent his present occasion now my lord, requesting your hospitality to supply his instant use with so many talents.

Lucullus. I know, it is for my lord; but sorry with me: He cannot want fifty-five hundred talents.

Theseus. But in the mean time: he wants less, my lord.

If his occasion were not virtuous,

I should not urge it, had it so inoffensive.

Lucullus. Must then speak seriously, servitus?

Theseus. I'll put my soul in it, sir.

Lucullus. What a wretched beast was I, to discourage my self against such a good time, when I might have shown myself honourable? how unluckily it happened, that I should purchase the day before for a love of great deal of honour!—Sir, but I, how before the gods, I am not able to do; the more beast, I say: I was senting to use lord Timon myself, those good men's cause; but I would not, for the wealth of Athens, I had done it now. Command me humbly to his good lordship; and I, hope, his honour will concur the easiest of me, because I am a poor man by bond. — And tell him this from me, I count it in one of my greatest affections; say, that I cannot pleasure such an honourable gentleman. Good servitus, will you befriend me so far as to use mine own words to him?

Servitus. Yes, sir, I shall.

Theseus. Will you look out a good turn, servitus?

Servitus. Time, as you said, Timon's shrill, indeed; and he, that's once denied, will hardly speed.

[Exeunt Lucullus and Theseus.]

SCENE III. — The same. A Room in Timon's House.

Enter SIMON and a Servant of Timon's.

Servant. My lord; has he tried Lucullus?

Simon. He must; he needs try 'em yet. Humph! He may have tried Lucullus, or Lucullus; And now Vertusitus is worthy too.

Servant. My lord, whom he redeem'd from prowess: All these three owe their estates unto him.

Simon. O my lord, They have all been touch'd, and found base metal: for They have all desert him.

Servant. My lord, Have they deserv'd him? Has Vertusitus and Lucullus den'd him?

Simon. Yes, and does he send to me? Three humble ——

It shews but little love, or judgment in him.

Servant. My lord, his last refuge! His friends, like physicians Thrive, give him over. Must I take the curse upon me?

Simon. He has much exaggerate in't; I am angry at him. That may, has come his place I see no sense for; But his successes might have wounded me first.

For, in my conscience I was the first man.
ACT III.—SCENE IV.

That e'er received gift from him:
And does he think so backwardly of me now,
That I'll require it last? No; So it may prove
An argument of laughter to the rest,
And I amongst the lords he thought a fool.
I had rather than the worth of thrice the sum,
He had sent to me first, but for my mind's sake;
I had such a courage to do him good. But now return,
And with their faint reply this answer join:
Who bates mine honour, shall not know my cue.

Enter Servilius.

Tit. One of lord Timon's men.

Luc. Serv. Flaminius! sir, a word: 'Pray, is my lord ready to come forth?

Flam. No, indeed, he is not.

Tit. We attend his lordship; 'pray, signify so much.

Flam. I need not tell him that; he knows, you are too diligent.

Enter Flaminius.

Luc. Serv. Has not that his steward muffled so?
He goes away in a cloud: call him, call him.

Tit. Do you hear, sir?

Luc. Serv. By your leave, sir,

Flam. What do you ask of me, my friend?

Tit. We wait for certain money here, sir.

Flam. Ay, if money were as certain as your waiting,
'Twere sure enough. Why then pretend you not
Your sums and bills, when your false masters eat
Of my lord's meat? Then they could smile, and fawn
Upon his debts, and take down th' interest
Into their glutonous maws. You do yourselves but
To stir me up; let me pass quietly: [wrong,
Believe't, my lord and I have made an end;
I have no more to reckon, he to spend.

Luc. Serv. Ay, but this answer will not serve.

Flam. If 'twill not serve,
'Tis not so base as you; for you serve knaves.

Tit. O, here's Servilius; now we shall know

Some answer.

Serv. If I might beseech you, gentlemen,
To repair some other hour, I should much
Derive from it: for, take it on my soul,
My lord hence, would 'rously to discontent.
His comfortable temper has forsaketh him;
He is much out of health, and keeps his chamber.

Luc. Serv. Many do keep their chambers, are not
And, if he be so far beyond his health,
[ Sick: Methinks, he should the sooner pay his debts,
And make a clear way to the gods.

Serv. Good gods:

Tit. We cannot take this for an answer, sir. [lord!
Flam. [Within.]

Servilius, help!—my lord! my

Enter Timon, in a rage; Flaminius following.

Tim. What, are my doors oppos'd against my pas-
Have I been ever free, and must my house

The place, which I have feasted, does it now,
Like all mankind, shew me an iron heart?

Luc. Serv. Put in now, Titus.

Tit. My lord, here is my bill.
Luc. Serv. Here's mine.
Hor. Serv. And mine, my lord.
Both Var. Serv. And ours, my lord.
Phil. All our bills.
Tim. Knock me down with 'em: cleave me to the
Luc. Serv. Alas! my lord,— [girdle.
Tim. Cut my heart in sunder.
Tit. Mine, fifty talents.
Tim. Tell out my blood.
Luc. Serv. Five thousand crowns, my lord.
Tim. Five thousand drops pays that—

What yours!—and yours?

1 Pat. Serv. My lord.
2 Var. Serv. My lord.—
Tim. Tear me, take me, and the gods fall upon you!

Hor. 'Faith, I perceive our masters may throw their vapours at their money; these debts may well be called desperate ones, for a madman owes 'em. [Exit.

Re-enter Timon and Flavius.

Tim. They have 'en put my breath from me, the Creditors!—devils.

Flav. My dear lord,—
Tim. What if it should be so?

Flav. My lord,—
Tim. I'll have it so:—My steward!

Flav. Here, my lord.
Tim. So filly? Go, go! bid all my friends again,
Lucius, Lucullus, and Sempronius: all: I'll
O'ers a meal more taste the rascals.

Flav. O my lord,
You only speak from your distracted soul;
There is not so much left, to furnish out
A moderate table.

Tim. Be not in thy care: go,
I charge thee; invite them all: let in the tide
Of knaves once more; my cook and I'll provide.

[Exeunt.

SCENE V.—The same. The Senate House.

The Senate sitting. Enter Alcibiades, attended.

1 Sen. My lord, you have my voice to it; the fault's
Blood; 'tis necessary he should die:
Nothing emboldens sin so much as mercy.

2 Sen. Most true; the law shall bruise him.

Alcibi. Honour, health, and compassion to the senate!

1 Sen. Now, captain?

Alcibi. I am a humble suitour to your virtues;
For pity is the virtue of the law,
And none but tyrants use it cruelly,
It pleases time, and fortune, to lie heavy
Upon a friend of mine, who, in hot blood,
Thftt stepp'd into the law, which is past depth
To those that, without heed, do plunge into it.
He is a man, setting his fate aside,
Of comely virtues:
Nor did he soil the fact with cowardice;
(An honour In him, which buys out his fault.)
But, with a noble fury, and fair spirit,
Seeing his reputation touch'd to death,
He did oppose his fee:
And with such sober and unnoted passion
He did behave his anger, ere 'twas spent,
As if he had but prov'd an argument.

1 Sen. You undergo too strict a paradox,
Striving to make an ugly deed look fair:
Your words have took such pains, as if they labour'd
To bring manslaughter into form, set quarrelling
Upon the head of valor; which, indeed,
Is valor misbegot, and came into the world
When sects and factions were newly born:
He's truly valiant, that can wisely suffer
The worst that man can breathe; and make his wrongs
His outside; wear them like his raiment, carelessly;
And never prefer his injuries to his heart,
To bring it into danger.

If wrongs be evils, and enforce us kill,
What folly 'tis, to hazard life for ill?

Alcibi. My lord,—

1 Sen. You cannot make gross sins look clear;
To revenge is no value, but to bear.

Alcibi. My lords, then, under favour pardon me,
If I speak like a captor?
Why do fond men expose themselves to battle,
And not endure all threatening? sleep upon it,
And let the foes quietly cut their throats,
Without repugnancy! but if there be Such valour in the bearing, what make we Abroad! why then, women are more valiant,
That stay at home, if bearing carry it;
And th' ashes, no foester than the lion; the felon,
Loaden with irons, wiser than the judge,
If wisdom be in suffering. O my lords,
As you are great, be pitifully good:
Who cannot condemn rashness in cold blood?
To kill, 1 grant, is sin's extremest gout; but,
In defence, by mercy, 'tis must just.
To be in anger, is impotent;
Who but is man, that is not angry?
Weigh but the crime with this.

2 Sen. You breathe in vain.

Alcibi. In vain? his service done
At Lacedemon, and Byzantium,
Were a sufficient briber for his life.

1 Sen. What's that?

Alcibi. Why, I say, my lords, he'd done fair service.
And slain in fight many of your enemies:
How full of valour did he bear himself
In the last conflict, and made plenteous wounds?

2 Sen. His has made too much plenty with 'em, he Is a sworn rioter: he's a sin that often
Drown'd him, and takes his valour prisoner:
There were, no foesters, that were enough alone
To overcome him: in that beastly fury
He has been known to commit outrages,
And cherish factions: 'Tis infid'd to us,
His days are foul, and his drink dangerous.

1 Sen. He dies.

Alcibi. Hard fate! he might have died in war.
My lords, if not for any parts in him,
(Though his right arm might purchase his own time,
And be in debt to none,) yet, more to move you,
Take my deserts to his, and join them both:
And, for I know, your reverend ages love
Security, I'll paws my victories, all
My honour to you, upon his good returns,
If by this crime he owes the law his life,
Which, let the vates freely in valiant gore;
For law is strict, and war is nothing more.

1 Sen. We are for law, he dies; urge it no more,
On height of our displeasure: Friend, or brother,
He forfeits his own blood, that spills another.

Alcibi. Must it be so? it must not be. My lords,
I do beseech you, know me.

2 Sen. How?

Alcibi. Call me to your remembrances.

3 Sen. What?

Alcibi. I cannot think, but your age has forgot me;
It could not else be, I should prove so base,
To sue, and be denied such concord grace.

My wounds ache at you.

1 Sen. Do you dare our anger?
"Tis in few words, but spacious in effect;
We banish thee for ever.

_Alec._ Banish me?
Banish your dotage; banish usury,
That makes the senate ugly.

_1 Sen._ If, after two days shine, Athens contain thee, Attend our weightier judgment. And, not to swell theirs.

_Heb._ He shall be executed presently. [Execut Senators.
_Alec._ Now the gods keep you old enough; that you may live
Only in bone, that none may look on you!
I am worse than mad: I have kept back their fees,
While they have told their money, and let out
Their coin upon large interest: I myself,
Rich only in large hurts,—All those, for this!
Is this the bafism, that the usurping senate
Pours into captives' wounds? ha! banishment?
It comes not till; I hate not to be banished;
It is a cause worthy my spleen and fury,
That I may strike at Athens. I'll cheer up
My discontented troops, and lay for hearts.
This honour, with most lands to be at odds;
Soldiers should brook as little wrongs, as gods. [Exit.

SCENE VI.—A magnificent Room in Timon's House.

_Music._ Tables set out: Servants attending. Enter divers Lords, at several doors.

_1 Lord._ The good time of day to you, sir.

_2 Lord._ I also wish it to you. 'Tis think, this honourable lord did but try us this other day.

_1 Lord._ Upon that were my thoughts tiring, when we encountered: I hope it is not so low with him, as be made it seem in the trial of his several friends.

_3 Lord._ It should not be, by the persuasion of his new feasting.

_1 Lord._ I should think so: He hath sent me an earnest inviting, which many my near occasions did urge me to put off; but he hath conjured me beyond them, and I must needs appear.

_2 Lord._ In like manner was I in debt to my infortunat business, but he would not hear my excuse.
I am sorry, when he sent to borrow of me, that my provision was.

_1 Lord._ I am sick of that grief too, as I understand how all things go.

_2 Lord._ Every man here's so. What would he have borrowed of you?

_1 Lord._ A thousand pieces.

_2 Lord._ A thousand pieces?

_1 Lord._ What of you?

_3 Lord._ He sent to me, sir,—Here he comes.

_Enter Timon, and Attendants._

_Tim._ With all my heart, gentlemen both:—And how fare you?

_1 Lord._ Ever at the best, bearing well of your lordship.

_2 Lord._ The swallow follows not summer more willing, than we your lordship.

_Tim._ [Aside.] Nor more willingly leaves winter;
such summer-birds are men.—Gentlemen, our dinner will not recoupese this long stay: feast your ears with the music a while; if they will fare so harshly on the trumpet's sound: we shall to't presently.

_1 Lord._ I hope it remains not unkindly with your lordship, that I returned you an empty messenger.

_Tim._ O, sir, let it not trouble you.

_2 Lord._ My noble lord,—

_Tim._ Ah, my good friend! what cheer?

[The banquet brought in.

_2 Lord._ My most honourable lord, I am even sick of shame, that, when your lordship this other day sent to me, I was so unfortunate a beggar

_Tim._ Think not on't, sir.

_2 Lord._ If you had sent but two hours before,—

_Tim._ Let it not cumber your better remembrance.

—Come, bring in all together.

_2 Lord._ All covered dishes! 1 Lord. Royal cheer, I warrant you.

_3 Lord._ Doubt not that, if money, and the season, can yield it.

_1 Lord._ How do you? What's the news?

_3 Lord._ Alcibiades is banished: Hear you it?

_1 & 2 Lord._ Alcibiades banished!

_3 Lord._ 'Tis so, be sure of it.

_1 Lord._ How? how?

_2 Lord._ I pray you upon what?

_Tim._ My worthy friends, will you draw near?

_3 Lord._ I'll tell you more anon. Here's a noble feast toward.

_2 Lord._ This 's the old man still.

_3 Lord._ Will 't hold, will 't hold?

_2 Lord._ Who doth in such time will—and so—

_3 Lord._ I do conceive.

_Tim._ Each man to his stool, with that spurs as he would to the lip of his mistress: your diet shall be in all places alike. Make not a city feast of it, to let the meat cool ere we can agree upon the first place:
Sit, sit. The gods require our thanks.

You great benefactors, sprinkle our society with thankfulness. For your own gifts, make yourselves praised; but reserve still to give, lest your desires be despised. Lend to each man enough, that one need not lend to another; for, were your godheads to borrow of men, men would forsake the gods. Make the meat be belored, more than the man that gives it. Let no assembly of twenty be without a score of villains: If there sit twelve women at the table, let a dozen of them be—as they are.—The rest of your fees, O gods,—the senators of Athens, together with the common lag of people,—what is unis in them, you gods, make suitable for destruction. For these my present friends,—as they are to me nothing, so in nothing bless them, and to nothing they are welcome.

Uncover, dogs, and lap.

Some speak. What does his lordship mean?
Some other. I know not.

_Tim._ May you a better feast never behold.

_You._ You knot of mouth-friends! smoke, and luke-warm
Is your perfection. This is Timon's last—

_Water._ Who stuck and spangled you with matters,
Washes it off, and sprinkles in your faces.

_Your._ Reeking villany. Live boath'd, and long.
Most smiling, smooth, detested parasites,
Courteous destroyers, affable wolves, meek bears.

_You._ You fools in motion; treacher-friends, time's flies,
Cap and knee slavours, vapours, and minute-jacks;
Of man, and beast, the infinite malady
Crust you quite o'er—What, dost thou go?

_Soft._ Take thy physic first—thou too,—and thou:—

_Stay._ I will lend thee money, borrow none.—

_You._ But in infinite motion! Henceforth be no feast.
Whereat a villain's not a welcome guest.

_Burn._ house: sink, Athens! henceforth hated be
Of Timon, man, and all humanity. [Exit.

Re-enter the Lords, with other Lords and Senators.

_1 Lord._ How now, my lords?

_2 Lord._ Know you the quality of lord Timon's fury?
3 Lord. Fish. did you see my cap?
4 Lord. I have lost my gown.
3 Lord. He's but a mad lord, and sought but humour sways him. He gave me a jewel the other day, and now he has beat it out of my hat. - Did you see my jewel?

4 Lord. Did you see my cap?
2 Lord. Here 'tis.
4 Lord. Hero lies my gown.
1 Lord. Let's make no stay.
2 Lord. Lord Timon's mad.
3 Lord. I feel it upon my bones.
4 Lord. One day he gives us diamonds, next day stones. [Exeunt.

ACT IV.

SCENE I.—Without the Walls of Athens.

Enter Timon.
Tim. Let me look back upon thee, O thou wall,
That girdlest in those wolves! Dive in the earth,
And hence not Athens! Matrons turn incourtant;
Observance fall in children! slaves, and fools.
Pluck the grave wrinkled senate from the bench,
And minister in their steads! to general fihls
Convert o' the instant, green virginity!
Do't in your parent's eyes! bankrupts, hold fast;
Rather than render back, out with your knives,
And cut your trusters' throats! bound servants, steal!
Large-handed robbers your grave masters are,
And pill by law! maid, to thy master's bed;
Thy mistress o' the brothel! son of sixteen,
Pluck the fin'd crutch from the old limping sire,
With it beat out his brains! piteous and fear,
Religion to the gods, peace, justice, truth,
Domestic awe, right-est, and neighborhood,
Instruction, manners, mysteries, and trades,
Degrees, observances, customs, and laws,
Decline to your confounding contraries,
And yet confusion live!—Plagues, incident to men,
Your potent and infectious fevers heap
On Athens, ripe for stroke! thou cold sciatrica,
Cripple our senators, that their limbs may halt
As lamely as their manners! lust and liberty
Creep in the minds and marrows of our youth;
The world against the stream of virtue they may strive,
And drown themselves in riot! tches, blains,
Sow all the Athenian bosoms; and their crop
Be general leprous! breath infect breath;
That their society, as their friendship, may
Be merely poison! Nothing I'll bear from thee,
But nakedness, thou detestable town!
Take thou that too, with multiplying banns!
Timon will to the woods; where he shall find
The unkindest beast more kinder than mankind.
The gods confound (hear me, you good gods all),
The Athenians both within and out that wall!
And grant, as Timon grows, his hate may grow
To the whole race of mankind, high and low!
Amen. [Exit.

Enter Flavus, with Two or Three Servants.
1 Serv. Hear you, master steward, where's our master?
Are we undone? cast off? nothing remaining?
Flav. Alack, my fellows, what should I say to you?
Let me be recorded by the righteous gods,
I am as poor as you.
1 Serv. Such a house broke!

So noble a master fallen! All gone! and not
One friend to take his fortune by the arm,
And go along with him?
2 Serv. As we do turn our backs
From our companion, thrown into his grave;
So his familiar to his buried fortunes
Slink all away; leave their false vows with him,
Like empty purses pick'd; and his poor self,
A dedicated beggar to the air,
With his disease of all-shun'd poverty,
Walks, like contempt, alone.—Mere of our fellows.

Enter other Servants.
Flav. All broken implements of a rich' house.
3 Serv. Yet do our hearts wear Timon's livery,
That see I by our faces; we are fellows still,
Serving alike in sorrow: Leal'd is our bark;
And we, poor mates, stand on the dying deck,
Hearing the surges threat: we must all part
Into this sea of air.

Flav. Good fellows all,
The latest of my wealth I'll share amongst you.
Wherever we shall meet, for Timon's sake,
Let's yet be fellows; let's shake our heads, and say,
As 'twere a knoll unto our master's fortunes,
We have seen better days. Let each to fortune;
|Giving them money. Nay, put out all your hands. Not one word more:
Thus part we rich in sorrow, parting poor.

[Exeunt Servants.

O, the fierce wretchedness that glory brings us!
Who would not wish to be from wealth exempt,
Since riches point to misery and contempt?
Who'd be so mock'd with glory? or to live
But in a dream of friendship?
To have his pomp, and all what state compounds,
But only painted, like his varnish'd friends?
Poor honest lord, brought low by his own heart;
Undone by goodness! Strange, unusual blood,
When man's worst sin is, he does too much good!
With plenty to be left half so kind again?
For bounty, that makes gods, does still mar men.
My dearest lord,—bless'd, to be most accur'd,
Rich, only to be wretched—thy great fortunes
Are made thy chief affections. Alas, kind lord!
He's flung in rage from this ungrateful seat
Of monstrous friends: nor has he with to Supply his life, or that which can command it.
I'll show me, and forgive him out; I'll ever serve his mind with my best will;
Whilst I have gold, I'll be his steward still. [Exit.

SCENE III.—The Woods.

Enter Timon.
Tim. O blessed bleeding sun, draw from the earth
Rotten humidity; below thy sister's orb
Infect the air! Twins'd brothers of one womb,—
Whose procreation, residence, and birth,
Spare is dividant,—touch them with several fortunes;
The greater scorns the lesser: Not nature,
To whom all sores lay siege, can bear great fortune,
But by contempt of nature.
Raise me this beggar, and denude that lord:
The senator shall bear contempt hereditary,
The beggar native honour.
It is the pasture lards the browser's sides,
The want that makes him lean. Who dares, who dares,
In purity of manhood stand upright,
And say, This man's a flatterer? if one be,
So are they all; for every grize of it
Is smooth'd by that below: the learned pate
Ducks to the golden foot; All is oblique; There's nothing level in our cursed natures, I must call villany. Therefore, be abhor'd All feasts, societies, and throngs of men! His semblable, yea, himself, Timon disdain'd; Destruction fang mankind!—Earth, yield me roots!

Who seeks for better of thee, sauce his palate With thy most operant poison: What is here? Gold! yellow, glittering, precious gold! No gods, I am no idle votarist. Roots, you clear heavens! Thus much of this, will make black, white; foul, fair; Wrong; right; base, noble; old, young; coward, valiant.

Ha, you gods! why this? What this, you gods? Why Will lug your priests and servants from your sides; Pluck stout men's pillows from below their heads:

This yellow slave Will knit and break religions; bless the accurs'd; Make the bear leprosy ador'd; place thieves, And give them title, knee, and approbation, With senators on the bench: this is it; That makes the wapp'd widow wed again: Save them from the spinal-house, and ulcerous sores Would cast the gorge at, this embalm's and spices To the April day again. Come, damned earth. Then common whereof mankind, that put'st odds Among the rout of nations, I will make thee Do thy right nature.—[March afar off.]—Ha! a drum!—Thou'rt quick.

But yet I'll lurry thee: Thou'lt go, strong thief, When gouty keepers of thee cannot stand:— Nay, stay thou out for earnest. [Keeping some gold.

Enter Alcibiades, with drum and fifes, in warlike manner: Phrynia and Timandra.

Tim. A beast, as thou art. The canker gnaw thy For shewing me again, the eyes of man! [heart, Alcib. What is thy name? Is man so hateful to thee, That art thyself a man?

Tim. I am misanthropos, and hate mankind. For why, I do wish thou wert a dog, That I might love thee sometimes.

I know thee well; But in thy fortunes am unluck'd and strange. Tim. I know thee too; and more, than that I know not desire to know. Follow thy drum; [thee, With man's blood paint the ground, gules, gules: Religious canons, civil laws are cruel; Then what should war be? This fell whore of thine hath in her more destruction than thy sword, For all her churubin look.

Phry. Thy lips rot off! Tim. I will not kiss thee; then the rot returns To thine own lips again.

Alcib. How came the noble Timon to this change? Tim. As the moon does, by wanting light to give: But then renew I could not, like the moon; There were no suns to borrow of.

Noble Timon, What friendship may I do thee? Tim. Maintain my opinion.

Alcib. What is it, Timon? Tim. Promise me friendship, but perform none: If Thou wilt not promise, the gods plague thee, for Thou art a man! if thou dost perform, confound thee, For thou'rt a man!

I have heard in some sort of thy miseries. Tim. Thou saw'st them, when I had prosperity.

Alcib. I see them now; then was a blessed time. Tim. I sigh, as thou now, held with a brace of harlots. Timon. This is the Athenian minnow, whom the world Voic'd so regardfully?

Tim. Art thou Timandra?

Timon. Yes, Tim. Be a whore still! they love thee not, that use Give them diseases, leaving with thee their lust. Make use of thy salt hours: season the slaves For tubs, and baths; bring down rose-check'd youth To the tub-fast, and the diet.

Hang thee, monster! Alcib. Pardon him, sweet Timandra; for his wits Are drown'd and lost in his calamities.— I have but little gold of late, brave Timon, The want whereof doth daily make revolt In my penurious hand; I have heard, and grief'd, How cursed Athens, mindless of thy worth, Forgetting thy great deeds, when neighbour states, But for thy sword and fortune, trod upon them,— Tim. I pr'ythee, beat thy drum, and get thee gone. Alcib. I am thy friend, and pity thee, dear Timon. How dost thou pity him, whom thou dost I had rather be alone. [Trouble? Alcib. Why, fare thee well:

Here's some gold for thee. Tim. Keep't, I cannot eat it.

Alcib. When I have laid proud Athens on a heap,— Tim. Warr'st thou 'gainst Athens? Alcib. For Timon, and all thy cause. Tim. The gods confound the most of all thy conquests: Thee after, when thou hast conquer'd!

Alcib. Why me, Timon? Tim. That, By killing villains, thou wast born to conquer My country.

Put up thy gold: Go on,—here's gold,—go on; Be as a planetary plague, when Love Will o'er some high-vict'd city hang his poison In the sick air: Let not thy sword skip one: Pity not honour'd age for his white beard, He's an usurer: Strike me the counterfeit matron; It is her habit only that is honest, Herself a bawd: Let not the virgin's cheek Make soft, nor the merchant sword, for those milk-paps, That through the window-bars bore at men's eyes, Are not within the leaf of witty pay, Set them down horrible traitors: Spare not the babe, Whose hid smil'ded smiles from fools exhaust their mercy; Think it a bastard, whom the oracle Hath doubtfully pronounc'd thy throat shall cut, And moisture it runs remorse: Swear against objects; Put armour on thine eyes, and on thine eyes; Whose proofs, nor yells of mothers, maid's, nor babes, Nor sight of priests in holy vestments bleeding, Shall pierce a jot. There's gold to pay thy soldiers; Make large confusion: and, thy fury spent, Confound be thyself! Speak not, be gone. Alcib. Hast thou gold yet? I'll take the gold thou Not all thy counsel. [givst me, Tim. Dowst thou, or dost thou not, heaven's curse upon thee! Plur. & Timon. Give us some gold, good Timon; Hast thou more?

Tim. Enough to make a whore forswear her trade, And to make thieves a law. Hold up, ye sluts, Your aprons mountant: You are not oathable.— Although, I know, you'll swear, terribly swear, Into strong shudders, and to heavenly aghes, The immortal gods that hear you,—spare your oaths, I'll trust to your conditions: Be whores still; And be who's pious breath seeks to covert you,
TIMON OF ATHENS.

Be strong in where, allure him, burn him up; Let your close fire predominate his smoke, And be not outcoats: Yet may your pains, six months, Be quite contrary: And that the sharp rich thorns With burdens of the dead;—some that were hung'd, No matter:—wear them, betray with them: where Paint till a horse may mire upon your face: [still; A pox of wrinkles!

Phr. & Timan. Well, more gold;—What then?— Believe 't, that we'll do any thing for gold.

Tim. Consumptions sow In hollow bones of man; strike their sharp shafts, And make men's spurring. Crack the lawyer's voice. That be may never more false title plead, Nor sound his quillets shrilly: hear the flam: That sends against the quality of heat, And not believes himself: down with the nose, Down with it flat: take the bridge quite away Of him, that his particular to foresee, [fans bald; Smells from the general weal: make curl'd pate ruf, And let the unscarr'd brigants of the war Derive some pain from you: Plague all; That your activity may defeat and quell The source of all temporal live in all the sprite:— Do you damn others, and let this damn you, And ditches grave you all! [bounteous Timon.

Phr. & Timan. More counsel with more money, Tim. More where, more mischief first: I have given you earnest. [well, Timon;

Alec. Strike up the drum towards Athens. Farewell. If I thrive well, I'll visit thee again. Tim. If I hope well, I'll never see thee more. Alec. I never did thee harm.

Tim. Yes, thou spok'st well of me. Alec. Call'st thou that harm? Tim. Men daily find it such. Get thee away, And take thy barges with thee. Alec. We but offend him.

Strike.

Tim. That nature, being sick of man's unkindness, Should yet be hungry!—Common mother, thou, [Digging. Whose womb unmeasurable, and infinite breath, Teems, and feeds all; whose self-same mettle. Whereof thy proud child, arrogant man, is pull'd; Engines the black toad, and elder blue, The gilded newt, and eyeless venom'd worm, With all the abhorred births below crisp heaven Whereon 1)yperion's quickening fire doth shine; Yield him, who all thy human sons doth hate, From forth thy plenteous bosom, one poor root! Ensare thy fertile and concepions womb; Let it no more bring out ungrateful man; Go great with tigers, dragons, wolves, and bears; Teen with new monsters, whom thy upward face Hath to the marbled mansion all above Never presented?—O, a root;—Dear thanks! Dry up thy marrows, vines, and plough-torn leas; Whereof ingratitude man, with licensor droughts, And morsels unctuous, greases his pure mind, That from it all consideration slips!

Enter Apemantus.

More man? Plague! plague! plague!

Apem. I was directed hitter: Men report, Thou dost affect my manners, and dost use them.

Tim. 'Tis then, because thou dost not keep a dog

Whom I would imitate: Consumption catch thee! Apem. This is in thee a most heinous affect

A most cunningly melancholy, sprung From change of fortune. Why this spade? this place?

This slave-like habit? and these looks of care? Thy flatt'ners yet wear silk, drink wine, lie soft; Hug their disca'd perfumes, and have forgot That ever Timon was. Shame not these woods, By putting on the cunning of a carper. Be thou a flatt'ner now, and seek to thrive By that which has undone thee; hie thy knave, And let his very breath, whom thou dost observe, Blow off thy cap: praise his most vicious strain, And call it excellent: Thou wast told thus: Thou gav'st thin ears, like tapsters, that bid welcome, To knives, and all approaches: 'Tis most just, That thou turn rascel; hadst thou wealth again. Rascals should have't. Do not assume my likeness.

Tim. Were I like thee, I'd throw away myself. Apem. Thou hast cast away thyself, being like thy A madman so long, now a fool: What, think'st self; That the bleak air, thy boisterous chamberlain, Will put thy shirt on warm? Will these moss't trees, That have out-liv'd the eagle, page thy heels, And skip when thou point'st out? Will the chold brook, Caedid with ice, caedid thy morning taste, The fury o'er-night surfet! call the creatures,— Wherein naked nature live in all the sprite, Of weakful heaven; whose bare unhoused trunks, To the conflicting elements exposed, Answer mere nature.—bid them flatt're thee; O! thou shalt find—

Tim. A fool of thee: Depart.

Apem. I love thee better now than e'er I did. Tim. I hate thee worse.

Apem. Why?

Tim. Thou flatt'rer'st misery. Apem. I flatt'rer not; but say, thou art a cutiff. Tim. Why dost thou seek me out?

Apem. To vex thee.

Tim. Always a villain's office, or a fool's. Dost please thyself in 't?

Apem. Ay.

Tim. What! a knave too?

Apem. If thou didst put this sour-cold habit on To castigate thy pride, 'twere well: but thou Dost it enforcedly; thou'dst curier be again, Wert thou not heagger. Wiling misry

Outlives incertain pomp, is crown'd before: The one is filling still, never complete; That other, at high wish, best: for wantless, Hath a distracted and most wretched being, Worse than the worst, content.

Thou should'st desire to die, being miserable.

Tim. Not by his breath, that is more miserable. Thou art a slave, whom Fortune's tender arm With favour never clasped; but bred a dog. Hadst thou, like us, from our first swath, proceeded The sweet degrees that this brief world affords To such as may the passive drugs of it Freely cennand, thou wouldst have plund'g thyself In general riot; melted down thy youth In different beds of lust; and never learn'd The icy precepts of respect, but follow'd The sugar'd game before thee. But myself, Who had the world as my confectionary; The mouths of songs, the tongues, the eyes, and hearts of men At duty, more than I could frame employment; That numberless upon me stuck, as leaves Anon dry up, as very brief, whose th'colour, Do on the oak, have with one winter's brush Fell from their boughs, and left me open, bare For every storm that blows;—I, to bear this, That never knew but better, is some burden; Thyself did complete in sufferance, time men! Hath made thee hard in't. Why should'st thou hate They never flatt'rer'd thee: What hast thou given?
If thou wilt curse,—thy father, that poor rag,
Must be thy subject; who, in spite, put stuff
To saucy she beggar, and compounded thee
Poor rogue hereditary. Hence! be gone!—
If thou hast not been born the worst of men,
Thou hadst been a knave, and flatterer.

_Apem._ Art thou proud yet?
_Tim._ Ay, that I am not thee.

_Apem._ No prodigal.

_Tim._ I, that I am one now;
Were all the wealth I have, shut up in thee,
I'd give thee leave to hang it. Get thee gone.—
That the whole life of Athenians were to this!
Thus would I eat it.

_Offering it something._

_Apem._ First mend my company, take away thyself.

_So I shall mend mine own, by the lack of Thine._

_Tim._ 'Tis not well mended so, it is but botch'd;
If not, I would it were.

_Apem._ What would'st thou have to Athens?

_Tim._ Thee thither in a whirlwind. If thou wilt,
Tell them there I have gold; look, so I have.

_Apem._ Here is no use for gold.

_Tim._ The best, and truest:
For here it sleeps, and does no hired harm.

_Apem._ Where ly'st o' nights, Timon?

_Tim._ Under that's above me.
Where feed'st thou o' days, Apemantus?

_Apem._ Where my stomach finds meat; or, rather,
where I eat it.

_Tim._ 'Wold poison were obedient, and knew my mind!'

_Apem._ Where would'st thou send it?

_Tim._ To sauce thy dishes.

_Apem._ The middle of humanity thou never knewest, but the extremity of both ends: When thou wast in thy gilt, and thy perfume, they mocked thee for too much curiosity; in thy rags thou knewest none, but art despised for the contrary. There's a medlar for thee, eat it.

_Tim._ Do what I hate, I feed not.

_Apem._ Dost hate a medlar?

_Tim._ Ay, though it look like thee.

_Apem._ An thou hadst hated medlars sooner, thou should'st have loved thyself better now. What man didst thou ever know untruth, that was belied after his means?

_Tim._ Who, without those means thou talkest of,
didst thou ever know beloved?

_Apem._ Myself.

_Tim._ I understand thee; thou hadst some means to keep a dog.

_Apem._ What things in the world canst thou nearest come to thy flatterers?

_Tim._ Women nearest; but men, men are the thongs of thee. What would'st thou do with the world, Apemantus, if it lay in thy power?

_Apem._ Give it the beasts, to be rid of the men.

_Tim._ Would'st thou have thyself fall in the confusion of men, and remain a beast with the beasts?

_Apem._ Ay, Timon.

_Tim._ A beastly ambition, which the gods grant thee to attain to! If thou wert the lion, the fox would beguile thee: if thou wert the lamb, the fox would eat thee: if thou wert the wolf, the lion would suspect thee, when, peradventure, thou wert accused by the ass: if thou wert the ass, thy dulness would tor-mend thou; and still thou livest but as a breakfast to the wolf: if thou wert the wolf, thy greediness would affect thee, and oft thou should'st hazard thy life for thy dinner: wert thou the unicorn, pride and wrath would confound thee, and make thine own self the quest of thy fury: wert thou a bear, thou would'st be killed by the horse: wert thou a horse, thou would'st be seized by the leopard; wert thou a leopard, thou wert german to the lich, and the spots of thy kindred were jurors on thy life: all thy safety were remotion; and thy defence, absence. What beast could'st thou be, that were not subject to a beast? and what a beast art thou already, that seest not thy loss in transformation?

_Apem._ If thou could'st please me with speaking to me, thou might'st have hit upon it here: The commonwealth of Athens is become a forest of beasts.

_Tim._ How has the ass broke the wall, that thou art out of the city?

_Apem._ Yonder comes a poet, and a painter: The plague of company light upon thee! I will fear to catch it, and give way: When I know not what else to do, I'll see thee again.

_Tim._ When there is nothing living but thee, thou shalt see me. Am I a beggar's dog, than Apemantus?

_Apem._ Thou art the cop of all the fools alive.

_Tim._ Would thou wert clean enough to spit upon.

_Apem._ A plague on thee, thou art too bad to curse.

_Tim._ All villains, that do stand by thee, are pure.

_Apem._ There is no leprosy, but what thou speak'st.

_Tim._ Well, I'll beat thee,—but I should infect my hands.
_Apem._ I would, my tongue could rot them off!

_Tim._ Away thou issue of a mangy dog!

_Choler does kill me, that thou art alive;
I swoon to see thee.

_Apem._ Would thou would'st burst!

_Tim._ Away.

_Tim._ Thou tedious rogue! I am sorry, I shall lose
A stone by thee.

_Apem._ Beast!

_Tim._ Slave!

_Apem._ Toad!

_Tim._ Rogue, rogue, rogue!

_Apemantus retreats backward, as going.

I am sick of this false world; and it is too louse mought But even the mere necessities upon it.
Then, Timon, presently prepare thy grave;
Lie where the light foams of the sea may beat
Thy grave-stone daily: make thine epitaph,
That death in me at others' lives may laugh.
O thou sweet king-killer, and dear divorce

[Looking on the gold.

_Tim._ Twixt natural son and sire! thine bright defiler
Of Hymen's purest bed! thou valiant Mars!
Thou ever young; fresh, lov'd, and delicate woorer,
Whose blush doth thaw the consecrated snow
That lies on Dian's lap! thou visible god,
That solder'st close impossibilities,
And mak'st them kind! that speak'st with every tongue,
To every purpose! O thou touch of hearts!
Thouk, thy slave man rebels; and by thy virtue
Set them into confounding oaths, that beasts
May have the world in empire!

_Apem._ Would 'twere so;—
But not till I am dead!—I'll say thou hast gold:
Thou wilt be throng'd to shortly.

_Tim._ Throng'd to?

_Apem._ Ay.

_Tim._ Thy back, I pr'ythee.

_Apem._ Live, and love thy misery;

_Tim._ Long live so, and so die!—I am quits.

[Exit Apemantus.
More things like men!—Eat, Timon, and abhor them.

Enter Thieves.

1 Thie. Where should he have this gold? It is some poor fragment, some slender o'er of his remainder:

The mere want of gold, and the falling-from of his friends, drove him into this melancholy thought.

2 Thie. 'Tis noised, he hath a mass of treasure.

3 Thie. Let us make the assay upon him; if he care not for't, he will supply us easily: If he covetously reserve it, how shall's get it?

2 Thie. True: for he hears not about him, 'tis hid.

1 Thie. Is not this he?

Thieves. Where?

2 Thie. 'Tis his description.

3 Thie. He; I know him.

Thieves. Save thee, Timon.

Tim. Now, thieves?

Thieves. Soldiers, not thieves.

Tim. Both too; and women's sons. [Want.]

We are not thieves, but men that much do Tim. Your greatest want, you want not wealth, the earth hath roots: Why should you want what the earth hath? Within this mile break forth a hundred springs: The oaks bear mast, the briars scarlet hips; The bounteous homewife, nature, on each bush Lays her full mess before you. Want! why want?

1 Thie. We cannot live on grass, on berries, water, as beasts, and birds, and fishes.

Tim. Nor on the beasts themselves, the birds, and you must eat men. Yet thanks I must you con,

That you are thieves professed; that you work out, In holier shapes: for there is boundless theft To limited professions. Rascal thieves, Here's gold: go suck the subtle blood of the grape, Till the high fever seeth your blood to froth, And so 'scape hanging; trust not the physician; His antidotes are poison, and he slays

More than you rob: take wealth and lives together;

Do villainy, do, since you profess to do't,

Like workmen. I'll example you with thievry:

The sun's a thief, and with his great attraction Robs the vast sea: the moon an arrant thief, And her pale fire she snatches from the sun:

The sea's a thief, whose liquid surge resolves The moon into salt tears: the earth's a thief, That feeds and breeds by a copustule stolen

From general excrement: each thing's a thief;

The laws, your curb and whip, in their rough power Have uncheck'd theft. Love not yourselves; away;

Rob one another. There's more gold; Cut throats;

All that you meet are thieves: To Athens, go,

Break open shops: nothing can you steal,

But thieves do lose it: Steal not for this,

I give you; and gold confound you howsoever!

Amen.

TIMON retires to his cave.

Enter Thieves.

Flavius. O you gods!

Is von despis'd and ruinous man my lord?

Full of decay and falling? O monument

Of good and wonders evilly bestow'd!

What an alteration of honour has

Desperate want made!

What viler thing upon the earth, than friends,

Who can bring noblest minds to basest ends!

How rarely does it meet with this time's guile,

When man was wish'd to love his enemies:

Grant, I may ever love, and rather woo

Those that would mischief me, than those that do!

He has caught me in his eyes: I will present

My honest grief unto him; and, as my lord,

Still serve him with my life.—My dearest master!

TIMON comes forward from his cave.

Tim. Away! what art thou?

Flav. Have you forgotten me, sir?

Tim. Why dost ask that? I have forgot all men;

Then, if thou grant'st thou art man, I have forgot thee.

Flav. An honest poor servant of yours.

Then I know thee not: I ne'er had honest man

About me, I; all that I kept were knaves,

To serve in meet to villains.

Flav. The gods are witness,

Ne'er did poor steward wear a truer grief;

For his undone lord, than mine eye sees you.

Tim. What, dost thou weep?—Come nearer—

then I love thee,

Because thou art a woman, and disdain'st

Flinty mankind; whose eyes do never give,

But thorough lust, and laughter. Petty's sleeping:

Strange times, that weep with laughing, not with weeping!

Flav. I beg you to know me, good my lord,

To accept my grief, and, whilst this poor wealth lasts,

To entertain me as your steward still.

Tim. Had I a steward so true, so just, and now

So comfortable! It almost turns

My dangerous nature wild. Let me behold

Thy face.—Surely, this man was born of woman.—

Forgive my general, and exceptless rashness,

Perpetual-stabler gods! I do proclaim

One honest man, who mistake me not,—but one;

No more, I pray,—and he is a steward.—

How far would I have hated all mankind,

And thou redeem'st thyself: But all, save thee,

I fell with curses.

Methinks, thou art more honest now, than wise;

For, by oppression and betraying me,

They hast have sooner got another service:

For many so arrive at second masters,

Upon their first lord's neck. But tell me true,

(For I must ever doubt, though ne'er so sure,)

Is not thy kindness subtle, covetous,

It not a wearing kindness; and as rich men deal gifts,

Expecting in return twenty for one?

Flav. No, my most worthy master, in whose breast

Doubt and suspect, alas, are plac'd too late;

You should have fear'd false times, when you did feast;

Suspect still comes where an estate is least.

That which I shew, heaven knows, is merely love,

Duty and zeal to your unmatch'd mind.

Care of your food and living: and, believe it,

My most honour'd lord,

The only benefit that wants to me,

Either in hope, or present, I'd exchange

For this one wish, That you had power and wealth

To requite me, by making rich yourself.

Tim. Look thee, 'tis so! Thou singly honest man,

Here, take:—the gods out of my mind;

Have sent thee treasure. Go, live rich, and happy:

But thus condition'd: Thou shalt build from me;

Hate all, curse all: shew charity to none;

But let the famish'd flesh slide from the bone,

Ere thou reliefe the beggar: give to dogs
TIMON OF AThENS.

FLAVIUS. And whilst this poor wealth lasts.

Act IV. Sc. 3.
ACT V.—SCENE I.

What thou deny'st to men; let prisons swallow them,
Debts wither them: Be men like blasted woods,
And may diseases lick up their false bloods!
And, as a vulture, fare, and thrive.

Flav. O, let me stay,
And comfort you, my master.

Tim. If thou bat'st
Curses, stay not; dy, whilst thou'rst bless'd and free:
Ne'er see thou man, and let me ne'er see thee. [Exit severally.

ACT V.

SCENE I.—The same. Before Timon’s Cate.

Enter Poet and Painter; Timon, behind, unseen.

Poet. What is't to be thought of him? Does the rumour
Hold true for him, that he is so full of gold?

Tim. Certain: Acheiobides reports it! Phrynia and Timandra had gold of him: he likewise enriched poor Straggling soldiers with great quantity: 'Tis said, he gave the poor a sum, so as to reward a mighty sun.

Poet. Then this breaking of his has been but a try for his friends.

Tim. Nothing else: you shall see him a palm in Athens again, and flourish with the highest.
Therefore, 'tis not amiss, we tender our love to him,
in this supposed distress of his: it will shew honestly in us; and is very likely to lead our purposes with what they travel for, if it be a just and true report that goes of his having.

Poet. What have you now to present unto him?

Tim. Nothing at this time but my visitation:
only I will promise him an excellent piece.

Poet. I must serve him so too; tell him of an intent that's coming toward him.

Tim. Good as the best. Promising is the very air of the time; it opens the eyes of expectation: per-fomance is ever the durer for his act; and, but in the plainer and simpler kind of people, the deed of saying is quite out of use. To promise is most courteously and fashionably: performance is a kind of will, or testament, which argues a great sickness in his judgment that makes it true.

Tim. Excellent workman! Thou canst not paint a man so bad as is thyself.

Poet. I am thinking, what I shall say I have provided for him: it must be a personating of himself:
a satire against the softness of prosperity: with a discovery of the infinite variabilities, that follow youth and osplendour.

Tim. Must thouneeds stand for a villain in thine own work? Wilt thou whip thine own faults in other men? Do so, I have gold for thee.

Poet. Nay, let's seek him:
Then do we sin against our own estate,
When we may profit meet, and come too late.

Tim. True.

Poet. When the day serves, before black-corner'd night,
Find what thou want'st by free and offer'd light.
Come.

Tim. I'll meet you at the turn. What a god's gold,
That is the worship'd in a baser temple,
Than where swine feed!

Tiss thou that rigg'st the bark, and plough'st the foam;
Settled admired reverence in a slave:
To thee be worship! and thy saints for aye
Be crown'd with plagues, and thee alone obey!
'Fit I do meet them. [Advancing.

Poet. Hail, worthy Timon!

Tim. Have I once liv'd to see two honest men?

Poet. Sir,
Having of your open bounty tasted,
Hearing you were retir'd, your friends fall'n off,
Whose thankless natures—O abhorred spirits!
Not all the whips of heaven are large enough—
What! to you!
Whose star-like nobleness gave life and influence
To their whole being! I'm rapt, and cannot cover
The monstrous bulk of this ingratitude
With any size of words.
Tim. Let it go naked, men may see 'tis the better:
You, that are honest, by being what you are,
Make them best seen, and known.

Tim. He, and myself,
Have travel'd in the great shower of your gifts,
And sweetly felt it.

Tim. Ay, you are honest men.

Poet. We are hither come to offer you our service.
Tim. Most honest men! Why, how shall I requite
Can you eat roots, and drink cold water? no. [you
Both. What we can do, we'll do, to you service.
Tim. You, my true honest men: You have heard that I have gold;
I am sure, you have: speak truth: you are honest men.
Tim. So it is said, my noble lord: but therefore Came not my friend, nor I.
Tim. Good honest men: Thoudraw'st a counterfeit
Best in all Athens: thou art, indeed, the best;
Counterfeit'st so most lively.

Tim. So, so, my lord.

Tim. Even so, sir, as I say:—And, for thy fiction,
[to the Poet.

Why, thy verse swells with stuff so fine and smooth,
That thou art even natural in thine art.
But, for all this, my honest-natur'd friends,
I must needs say, you have a little fault:
Marry, 'tis not monstrous in you; neither wish I,
You take such pains to mend.

Both. Beseech your honour,
To make it known to us.
Tim. You'll take it ill.

Both. Most thankfully my lord.

Tim. Will you, indeed?
Both. Doubt it not, worthy lord.

Tim. There's ne'er a one of you but trusts a knife,
That mightily deceives you.

Both.
Do we, my lord?
Tim. Ay, and you hear him cog, see him assemble,
Know his gross patchery, love him, feed him,
Keep in your bosom: yet remain assur'd,
That he's a made-up villain.

Both.
I know none such, my lord.

Poet. Nor 1.

Tim. Look you, I love you well; I'll give you gold,
Kill me these villains from your companies:
Hang them, or stab them, drawn them in a draught
Confound them by some course, and come to me,
I'll give you gold enough.

Both. Name them, my lord, let's know them.
Tim. You that way, and you this, but two in com-
Each man apart, all single and alone, ye—
Yet an arch-villain keeps him company:
If where thou art, two villains shall not be.

Both.
Come not near him.—If thou wouldst not reside
[to the Poet.
But where one villain is, then him abandon.

Hence! pack! there's gold, ye came for gold, ye slaves:
You have done work for me, there's payment: Hence!
You are an alchymist, make gold of that:
Out, rascal dogs! [Exit, beating and driving them out.]

SCENE II.—The same.

Enter Flavius and Two Senators.

Flavius. Timon, he is in vain that you would speak with Timon;
For he is set so only to himself,
That nothing but himself, which looks like man,
Is friendly with him.

Sen. Bring us to his cave:
It is our part, and promise to the Athenians
To speak with Timon.

2 Sen. At all times alike
Men do not still the same: 'Twas time, and griefs,
That fram'd him thus: time, with his fair hand,
Offering the fortunes of his former days,
The former man may make him: Bring us to him,
And chance it as it may.

Flavius. Here is his cave.—
Peace and content be here! Lord Timon! Timon!
Look out, and speak to friends: The Athenians,
By two of their most reverend senate, greet thee:
Speak to them, noble Timon.

Enter Timon.

Timon. Thou sun, that comfort'st, burn!—Speak, and be hang'd; for each true word, a blister! and each false
Be as a caustic to the root of the tongue,
Consuming it with speaking!

1 Sen. Worthy Timon.—

Timon. Of none but such as you, and you of Timon.

2 Sen. The senators of Athens greet thee, Timon.
Timon. I thank them; and would send them back the Cord, but catch it for them.

Flavius. O, forget
What we are sorry for ourselves in thee.
The senators, with one consent of love,
Entreat thee back to Athens; who have thought
On special dignities, which vacant lie
For thy best use and wearing.

2 Sen. They confess,
Toward thee, forgetfulness too general, gross:
Which now the public body,—which doth seldom
Play the recantor,—feeling in itself
A lack of Timon's aid, hath sense withal
Of its own fall, restraining aid to Timon;
And send forth us, to make their sorrowed render,
Together with a recom pense more fruitful
Than their offence can weigh down by the drain;
Ay, even such heaps and sums of love and wealth,
As shall to thee blot out what wrongs were theirs.
And write in thee the figures of their love,
Ever to read them thine.

Timon. You witch me in it;
Surprise me to the very brink of tears:
Lend me a fool's heart, and a woman's eyes,
And I'll bewitch these comforts, worthy senators.

1 Sen. Therefore, so please thee to return with us,
And of our Athens (thine, and ours,) to take
The captainship, thou shalt be met with thanks,
Allow'd with absolute power, and thy good name
Live with authority:—so soon we shall drive back
Of Alcibiades the approaches wild;
Who, like a bear too savage, doth root up
His country's peace.

2 Sen. And shakes his threatening sword
Against the walls of Athens.

Timon. Therefore, Timon,—

Tim. Well, sir, I will; therefore, I will, sir; Thus,—

1 If Alcibiades kill my countrymen,
Let Alcibiades know this of Timon,
That—Timon cares not. But if he sack fair Athens,
And take our goodly aged men by the beards,
Giving our holy virgins to the stain
Of contumelious, beastly, mad-brain'd war;
Then, let him know, and tell him, Timon speaks it,
In pity of our aged, and our youth,
I cannot choose but tell him, that,—I care not,
And let him tak't at worst: for their knives care not,
While you have threats to answer: for myself,
There's not a whistle in the unruly camp,
But I do prize it at my love, before
The reverend'st throat in Athens. So I leave you
To the protection of the prosperous gods,
As thieves to keepers.

Flavius. Stay not, all's in vain.

Timon. Why, I was writing of my epitaph,
It will be seen to-morrow: My long sickness
Of health, and living, now begins to mend,
And nothing brings me all things. Go, live still,
Be Alcibiades your plague, you his,
And last so long enough!

1 Sen. We speak in vain.
Timon. But yet I love my country, and am not
One that rejoices in the common wreck,
As common bruit doth put it.

2 Sen. That's well spoke.

Timon. Commend me to my loving countrymen,—

1 Sen. These words become your lips as they pass Through them.

2 Sen. And enter in our ears, like great trium phers
In their applauding gates.

Timon. Commend me to them;
And tell them, that, to ease them of their griefs,
Their fears of hostile strokes, their aches, losses,
Their pangs of love, with other incident throes
That nature's fragile vessel doth sustain.

2 Sen. I like this well, he will return again
Timon. I have a tree, which grows here in my close,
That mine own use invites me to cut down,
And shortly must I fell it; Tell my friends,
Tell Athens, in the sequence of degree,
From high to low throughout, that whose please
To stop affliction, let him take his haste,
Come hither, ere my tree hath felt the axe,
And hang himself?—I pray you, do my greeting.

Flavius. Trouble him no further, thus you shall still find him.

Timon. Come not to me again: but say to Athens,
Timon hath made his everlasting mansion
Upon the beached verge of the salt flood;
Which once a day with his embossed froth
The turbulent surge shall cover; thither come,
And let my grave-stone be your oracle.—
Lips, let your words go by, and language end:
What is amiss, plague and infection mend!
Graves, only be men's works; and death, their gain!
Sun, hide thy beams! Timon hath done his reign.

[Exit Timon.

1 Sen. His discontent is unremovably
Coupled to nature.

2 Sen. Our hope in him is dead: let us return,
And shew what other means is left unto us
In our dear peril.

1 Sen. It requires swift foot. [Exeunt

SCENE III.—The Walls of Athens.

Enter Two Senators, and a Messenger.

1 Sen. Thou hast painfully discover'd; are his files
As full as thy report.
ACT V.—SCENE V.

Mess.  I have spoke the least;
Besides, his expedition promises
Present approach.

[Timon:
2 Sen.  We stand much hazard, if they bring not Mess. I met a courier, or mine ancient friend;
Whom, though disappointed in the part we were opp'd;
Yet our old love made a particular force,
And made us speak like friends:—this man was riding
From Alcibiades to Timon's cave,
With letters of entreaty, which imported
His fellowship & the cause against your city,
In part for his sake mov'd.

Enter Senators from Timon.

3 Sen.  Here come our brothers.
3 Sen. No talk of Timon, nothing of him expect;
The enemies' drum is heard, and fearful scaring
DOTH choke the air with dust: In, and prepare;
Ours is the fall, I fear; our foes the soare.  [Exit.

SCENE IV.—The Woods.  Timon's Cave, and a Tomb-stone seen.

Enter a Soldier, seeking Timon.
Sold. By all description this should be the place.
Who's here? speak, ho!—No answer?:—What is this?
Timon is dead, who hath outstretch'd his span;
Some beast rear'd this; there does not live a man.
Dead, sure; and this his grave.—
What's on this tomb I cannot read; the character
I'll take with wax:
Our captain hath in every figure skill;
An aged interpreter, though young in days:
Before proud Athens he's set down by this,
Whose fall the mark of his ambition is.
[Exit.

SCENE V.—Before the walls of Athens.
Trumpets sound.  Enter Alcibiades and Forces.
Alec. Sound to this coward and lascivious town
Our terrible approach.  [A parley sounded.

Enter Senators on the walls.

Till now you have gone on, and fill'd the time
With all licentious measure, making your wills.
The scope of justice; till now, myself, and such
As slept within the shadow of your power;
Have wander'd with our traver'd arms, and breath'd
Our sufferance vainly: Now the time is flush,
When crouching narrow, in the bearer strong,
Cries, of itself, No more: now breathless wrong
Shall sit and pant in your great chairs of ease;
And purdy insolence shall break his wind,
With fear, and horrid flight.

1 Sen.  Noble and young,
When thy first griefs were but a mere conceit,
Ere thou hadst power, or we had cause of fear,
We sent to thee; to give thy rage balm,
To wipe out our ingratitude with loves
Above their quantity.

2 Sen.  So did we woo
Transformed Timon to our city's love,
By humble message, and by promises;
We were not all unkind, nor all deserve
The common stroke of war.

1 Sen.  These walls of ours
Were not erected by their hands, from whom
You have deriv'd your griefs; nor are they such
That these great towers, trophies, and schools should
For private faults in them.

2 Sen.  Nor are they living,
Who were the motives that you first went out;
Shame that they wanted cunning, in excess
Hath broke their hearts.  March, noble lord,
Into our city with thy banners spread:
By destruction, and a tifted death,
(If thy revenges hunger for that food,
Which nature loaths,) take thou the destin'd tenth;
And by the hazard of the spotted die,
Let die the spotted.

1 Sen.  All have not offended;
For those that were, it is not square, to take.
On those that are, revenges: crimes, like lands,
Are not inherited. Thou, dear countryman,
Bring in thy ranks, but leave without thy rage:
Spare thy Athenian cradle, and those kin,
Which, in the bluster of thy wrath, must fall
With those that have offended: like a shepherd,
Approach the fold, and cull the infected forth,
But kill not all together.

2 Sen.  What thou wills,
Thou rather shall enforce it with thy smile,
Than hew to't with thy sword.

1 Sen.  Set but thy foot
Against our rampir'd gates, and they shall ope;
So thou wilt send thy gentle heart before,
To see thou'lt enter friendly.

2 Sen.  Throw thy glove;
Or any token of thine honour else,
That thou wilt use the wars as thy redress,
And not as our confusión, all thy powers
Shall make their harbour in our town, till we Have seal'd thy full desire.

Alec.  They there's my glove;
Descend, and open your uncharged ports;
Those enemies of Timon's, and mine own,
Whom you yourselves shall set out for reproof,
Fall, and no more: and, to atone your tears
With my more noble meaning, not a man
Shall pass his quarter, or offend the stream
Of regular justice in your city's bounds,
And shall be remedied, to your public laws,
At heaviest answer.

Both.  'Tis most nobly spoken.
Alec. Descend, and keep your words.

The Senators descend, and open the gates.

Enter a Soldier.

Sol. My noble general, Timon is dead;
Entombed upon the very hem of the sea;
And, on his grave-stone, this inscription; which
With wax I brought away, whose soft impression
Interprets for my poor ignorance.

Alec. [Reads.] Here lies a wretched corse, of Wretched soul bereft:
[Exit.
Seek not my name: A plague consume you wicked wretches!
Here lie I Timon; who, alive, all living men did hate:
Pass by, and curse thy fill; but pass and stay not here
These well express in thee thy latter spirits: Thy guilt.
Though thou abhorrest us in our human grieves,
Scorn'st our brain's flowing, and those our droplets which
From nigard nature fall, yet rich conceit
Taught thee to make vast Neptune weep for aye
On thy low grave, on faults forgiven.
Dead is noble Timon; of whose memory
Hereafter more.—Bring me into your city,
And I will use the olive with my sword:
Make war breed peace; make peace stout war;
Make Prescriber to other, as each other's leech.
Teach Let our drums strike.
[Exit.]

This play of Timon is a domestic tragedy, and therefore strongly fastens on the attention of the reader. In the plan there is no such art as the incidents are natural, and the characters various and exact, the catastrophe offers a very powerful warning against that ostentatious liberality, which scatters bounty, but confers no benefits, and buys history, but not friendship.—JOHNSON.
CORIOLANUS

This inimitable play was neither entered at Stationers' Hall, nor printed, till 1623. It was probably written in 1608, or 1609, and had been performed of long before the date of the dedication with the accession to the Roman Sacred of the year of Rome 1607, and ending with the death of Coriolanus, A. D. 266.

ACT I.

SCENE I.—Rome. A Street.

Enter a company of mutinous Citizens, with staves, clubs, and other weapons.

1 Cit. Before we proceed any further, hear me speak.
Cit. Speak, speak. [Several speaking at once.] 1 Cit. You are all resolved rather to die, than to

2 Cit. Consider you what services he has done for
Cit. Very well; and could be content to give him a good report for't, but he pays himself with being proud.
2 Cit. Nay, but speak not maliciously.
1 Cit. I say unto you, what he hath done famously, he did it to that end; though soft conscien't 'd men can be content to say, it was for his country, he did it to please his mother, and to be partly proud; which he is, even to the altitude of his virtue.
2 Cit. What he cannot help in his nature, you account a vice in him: You must in no way say, he is covetous.
1 Cit. If I must not, I need not be barren of accusations; he hath faults, with surplus, to tire in repetition. [Shouts within.] What shouts are these? The other side o' the city is risen: Why stay we prating here? to the Capitol.
1 Cit. Come, come.
1 Cit. Soft; who comes here?

Enter MENENIUS AGrippa.

2 Cit. Worthy Menenius Agrippa; one that hath always loved the people.
1 Cit. He's one honest enough; 'Would, all the rest were so!
Men. What work's, my countrymen, in hand? Where go you
With bats and clubs! The matter? Speak, I pray you.
1 Cit. Our business is not unknown to the senate; they have had inkling, this fortnight, what we intend to do, which now we'sh'll 'em in deeds. They say, poor suitors have strong breaths; they shall know, we have strong arms too.
Men. Why, masters, my good friends, mine honest
Will you undo yourselves? [neighbours]
1 Cit. We cannot, sir, we are undone already.
2 Cit. Tell your suitors, ill tell you, friends, must charitable care
Have the patricians of you. For your wants,
Your suffering in this dearth, you may as well
Strike at the heaven with your staves, as lift them
Against the Roman state; whose course will on
The way it takes, cracking ten thousand curbs
Of more strong link asunder, than can ever
Appear in your imposition: For the dearth,
The gods, not the patricians, make it; and
Your knees to them, not arms, must help. Alack,
You are transported by calamity
Thither where attends you; and you slander
The helms o' the state, who care for you like fathers,
When you curse them as enemies.
1 Cit. Care for us!—True, indeed!—They ne'er cared for us yet. Suffer us to famine, and their store-houses crammed with grain; make edicts for usury, to support usurers: replen daily any wholesome set established against the rich; and provide more piercing statutes daily, to chain up and restrain the poor.
If the wars eat us not up, they will; and there's all the love they bear us.
Men. Either you must ACT I.—SCENE 1.

Confess yourselves wondrous malicious,
Or be accus’d of folly. I shall tell you
And do you tell the tale, you have heard it;
But, since it serves my purpose, I will venture
To stale 't a little more.

1 Ct. Well, I’ll hear it, sir; yet you must not think to foal off our disgrace with a tale: but, an’t please you, deliver.

Men. There was a time, when all the body’s members
Rebel’d against the belly; thus accus’d it:—
That only like a gulf it did remain
’I the midst of the body, idle and inactive.
Still eurbounding the visard, never bearing
Like labour with the rest; where the other instruments
Did see, and hear, devise, instruct, walk, feed,
And, mutually participate, did minister
Unto the appetite and affection common
Of the whole body. The belly answered,—

1 Ct. Well, sir, what answer made the belly?

Men. Sir, I shall tell you.—With a kind of smile,
Which ne’er came from the hags, but even thus,
(For look, you, I may make the belly smile,
As well as speak,) it tamtingly replied
The discontented members and various parts
That envied his receipt; even so most fitly
As you malign our senators, for that
They are not such as you.

1 Ct. Your belly’s answer: What?

The kingly-crowned head, the vigilant eye,
The counsellor heart, the arm our soldier,
The deep-throated, the tongue our trumpeter,
With other muniments and petty helps
In this our fabric, if that they—

Men. — What then?

Fore me, this fellow speaks!—what then! what then?

1 Ct. Should by the coromant belly be restrain’d,
Who is the sink of the body, —

Men. — Well, what then?

1 Ct. The former agents, if they did complain,
What could the belly answer?

Men. — I will tell you;

If you’ll bestow a small (of what you have little.)
Patience, a while, you’ll hear the belly’s answers.

1 Ct. You are long about it.

Men. — I shall make me this, good friend;
Your most grave belly was deliberate,
Not rash like his ascensrs, and thus answer’d;

True is it, my incorporate friends, quoth he,
That I receive the general food at first,
Which you do live upon; and it is so;
Because I am the storehouse, and the shop
Of the whole body: But if you do remember,
I send it through the rivers of your blood,
Even to the heart, the seat of the brain:
And, through the cranks and offices of man,
The strongest nerves, and small inferior veins,
From me receive that natural competency
Whereby they live; And though that all at once,
You, my good friends, (this is the belly), mark me,—

Men. — Ay, sir; well, well.

Men. Though all at once cannot
See what I do deliver out to each;
Yet I can make my audit up, that all
From me do both receive the flower of all,
And leave me but the brain. What say you to’t?

1 Ct. It was my answer: How apply you this?

Men. The senators of Rome are this good belly,
And you the mutinous members: For examine
Their counsels, and their cares; digest things rightly,
Touching the weal of the common; you shall find,
No public benefit, which you receive,
But it proceeds, or comes, from them to you,

And no way from yourselves.—What do you think?
You, the great toe of this assembly?—

1 Ct. If the great toe is your question, why,

Men. For that I bring one of the lowest, basest, poorest,
Of this most wise rebellion, thou go’st foremost:
Thou rascal, that art worst in blood, to run
Lead’s first, to win some vantage.—

But make you ready your stiff bats and clubs;
Rome and her rats are at the point of battle,
The one side must have bale.—Hail, noble Marcus!

Enter Marcus Aurelius.

Mar. Thanks.—What’s the matter, you dissentious rogues,
That rubbing the poor itch of your opinion,
Make yourselves seals?

1 Ct. He that will give good words to thee, will flatter
Beneath abhorring.—What would you have, you curst,
That like nor peace, nor war! the one affrights you,
The other makes you proud. He that trusts you,
Where he should find you lying, finds you hares;
Where foxes, geese: You are no surer, no,
Then is the end of fire upon the ground.
Or hailstone in the sun. Your virtue is,
To make him worthy, whose offence sublimes him,
And curse that justice did it. Who deserves great,
Deserves your hate: and your affections are [mess,
A sick man’s appetite, who desires most
Which would increase his evil. He that depends Upon your favours, swims with fasts of lead,
And hows down oaks with rushes. Hang ye! Trust
With every minute you do change a mind: [ye!
And call him noble, that was now your hate.
Him vile, that was your garland. What’s the matter,
That in these several places of the city
You cry against the noble senator, who,
Under the gods, keep you in awe, which else
Would feed on one another?—What’s their seeking?
Men. For corn at their own rates; whereof, they say,
The city is well stor’d.

Mar. Hang ’em! Say they? They’ll sit by the fire, and presume to know
What’s done! the Capitol: who’s like to rise,
Who their borders, and who declines: side factions, and Give out
Conjectural marriages; making parties strong,
And feebling such as stand not in their liking.
Below their cobbled shoes. They say, they’re grain
Would the nobility lay aside their ruth. [enough!
And let me use my sword, I’d make a quarry
With thousands of these quarter’d slaves, as high
As I could pick my lance.

Men. Nay, these are almost thoroughly persuaded:
For though abundantly they lack discretion,
Yet are they passing cowardly. But, I beseech you.
What says the other troop? Mar. They are dissolved: Hang ’em!
They said, they were an-hungry: sight’d forth proverbs:
That, hunger broke stone walls; that, dogs must eat;
That, meat was made for mouths; that the gods
Sent not
Corn for the rich men only:—With these shrills
They vented their complaints, which being answer’d,
And a petition granted them, a strange one:
To break the heart of generosity,
And make bold power look pale, They threw their caps
As they would hang them on the horns of the moon,
Shouting their emulation.

Men. What is granted them?
In whom already he is so well grace'd,—cannot Better be held, nor more attain'd, than by
A place below the first: for what miscarries
Shall be the general fault, though he perform
To the utmost of a man; and giddy censure
Will then ery out of Marcus, O, if he Hath borne the business!

Sen. Besides, if things go well
Opinion, that so sticks on Marcus, shall
Of his demerits rob Cominius.

Come:
Half all Cominius' honours are to Marcus,
Though Marcus earn'd them not; and all his faults
To Marcus shall be honours, though, indeed,
In aught he merit not.

Sir. Let's hence, and hear
How the despatch is made; and in what fashion,
More than in singularity, he goes
Upon his present action.

Bru. Let's along. [Exit.]

SCENE II.—Corioli.—The Senate-House.

Enter Tullus Aufidius, and certain Senators.

1 Sen. So, your opinion is, Aufidius,
That they of Rome are enter'd in our councils,
And know how we proceed.

Auf. Is it not yours?
What ever hath been thought on in this state,
That could be brought to boilily not ere Rome
Had circumspection? 'Tis not four days gone,
Since I heard thence; these are the words: I think,
I have the letter here; yes, here it is: [Reads.
They have press'd a power, but it is not known
Whether for east, or west: The death is great;
The people mutinous: and it is rumour'd,
Cominius, Marcus your old enemy,
(Who is of Rome worse hated than of you,)
And Titus Lartius, a most exultant Roman,
These three lead on this preparation.
Whether 'tis bent: most likely, 'tis for you:
Consider of it.

1 Sen. Our army's in the field:
We never yet made doubt but Rome was ready
To answer us.

Auf. Nor did you think it folly,
To keep your great pretences veild, till when They need must shew themselves; which in the hatching,
It seem'd, appear'd to Rome. By the discovery,
We shall be shorten'd in our aim; which was,
To take in many towns, ere, almost, Rome
Should know we were afoot.

2 Sen. Noble Aufidius.
Take your commission: lie you to your bands:
Let us alone to guard Corioli:
If they set down before us, for the remove Bring up your army; but, I think, you'll find
They have not prepar'd for us.

Auf. O, doubt not that;
I speak from certainties. Nay, more,
Some parcels of their powers are forth already,
And only bitherward. I leave your honours.
If we and Caius Marcus chance to meet,
'Tis sworn between us, we shall never strike
Till one can do no more.

All. The gods assist you!

Auf. And keep your honours safe!

[Exit.

Farewell. [Exit.
SCENE III.

Rome.—An Apartment in Marcus' House.

Enter Volumnia and Virgilia: They sit down on two low stools, and sew.

Vol. I pray you, daughter, sing; or express yourself in a more comfortable sort: If my son were my husband, I should freer rejoice in that absence wherein he won honour, than in the embraces of his bed, where he would shew most love. When yet he was but tender-bodied, and the only son of my womb; when youth with comeliness plucked all gaze his way; when, for a day of kings' entertainments, a mother should not sell him an hour from her beholding; I, considering how honour would become such a person; that it was no better than picture-like to hang by the wall, if renown made it not stir,—was pleased to let him seek danger where he was like to find fame. To a cruel war I sent him; from whence he returned, his brows bound with oak. I tell thee, daughter,—I sprang not more in joy at first hearing he was a man-child, than now in first seeng he had proved himself a man.

Vir. But had he died in the business, madam? how then?

Vol. Then his good report should have been my son; I therein would have found issue. 'Hear me profess sincerely:—Had I a dozen sons,—Each in my love alike, and none less dear than thine and my good Marcus,—I had rather had eleven die nobly for their country, than one voluptuously surfeit out of action.

Enter a Gentlewoman.

Gent. Madam, the lady Valeria is come to visit you. Vir. 'Tis seech you, give me leave to retire myself. Vol. Indeed, you shall not. Metheinks, I hear hither your husband's drum; See him pluck Aufidius down by the hair; As children from a bear, the Voiles shunning him: Metheinks, I see him stamp thus, and call thus.—Come on, you cowards, you were got in fear, Though you were born in Rome: His bloody brow With his mail'd hand then weapons, forth he goes; Like to a harvest-man, that task's to mow Or all, or lose his hire.

Vir. His bloody brow! O, Jupiter, no blood! Vol. Away, you fool! it more becomes a man, Than gild his triumph: The breasts of Hecuba, When she did stoke Hector, look'd not lover Than Hector's forehead, when it spirt forth blood At Grecian swords' contending.—Tell Valeria, We are fit to bid her welcome. [Exit. Gent. Vir. Heavens bless my lord from fell Aufidius! Vol. He'll beat Aufidius head below his knee, And tread upon his neck.

Re-enter Gentlewoman, with Valeria and her Usher.

Vol. My ladies both, good day to you. Vir. Sweet madam,—Vol. I am glad to see your ladyship. How do you both? you are manifest housekeepers. What, are you sewing here? a fine spot in good faith.—How does your little son?

Vir. I thank your ladyship; well, good madam. Vol. He had rather see the swords, and hear a drum, than look upon his school-master.

Vol. O my word, the father's son: I'll swear, 'tis a very pretty boy. O my troth, I looked upon him o' Wednesday half an hour together: he has such a confirmed countenance. I saw him run after a gilded butterfly; and when he caught it, he let it go again; and after it again; and over and over he comes, and up again; catched it again: or whether his fall enraged him, or how 'twas set, yet he did so set his teeth, and tear it: O, I warrant, how he manmackled it!

Vol. One of his father's moods.

Vir. Indeed, la, 'tis a noble child. Vir. A crack, madam.

Vol. Come lay aside your stitches: I must have you play the idle huswife with me this afternoon. Vir. Madam, I will not out of doors. Vol. Not out of doors! Vir. She shall, she shall. Vir. Indeed, no, by your patience: I will not over the threshold, till my lord returns from the wars. Vol. Fye, you confine yourself most unreasonably; Come, you must go visit the good lady that lies in. Vir. I will wish her speedy strength, and visit her with my prayers; but I cannot go thither.

Vol. Why, I pray you?

Vir. 'Tis not to save labour, nor that I want love. Vol. You would be another Penelope: yet, they say, all the yarn she spun, in Ulysses' absence, did but fill lathca full of moths. Come; I would, your chambermaid let you your finger, that you might leave picking it for pity. Come, you shall go with us.

Vir. No, good madam, pardon me; indeed, I will not forth.

Vol. In truth, la, go with me; and I'll tell you excellent news of your husband.

Vir. O, good madam, there can be none yet. Vol. Verily, I do not jest with you; there came news from him last night.

Vir. Indeed, madam?

Vir. In earnest, it's true; I heard a senator speak it. Thus it is:—The Volces have an army forth; against whom Cominius the general is gone, with one part of our Roman power: your lord, and Titus Larti,us, are set down before their city Corioli; they nothing but prevailing, and to make it brief war. This is true, on mine honour; and so, I pray go with us.

Vir. Give me excuse, good madam; I will obey you in every thing hereafter.

Vol. Let her alone, lady; as she is now, she will but disease our better mirth.

Vir. In troth, I think, she would:—Fare you well then,—Fare you well, lady.—Prythee, Valeria, turn thy solemnness out o' door, and go along with us.

Vir. No: at a word, madam; indeed, I must not.

I wish you much mirth.

Vol. Well, then farewell. [Exeunt.

SCENE IV.—Before Corioli.

Enter, with drums and colours, Marcus, Titus Lartius, Officers, and Soldiers. To them a Messenger.

Mar. Yonder comes news:—A wager, they have Lart. My horse to yours, no. [met. Mar. Lart. Agreed. Mar. Say, has our general met the enemy? Mess. They lie in view; but have not spoke as yet. Lart. So, the good horse is mine. Mar. I'll buy him of you. Lart. No, I'll nor sell, nor give him: lead you from him, I will.

For half a hundred years,—Summon the town. Mar. How far off be these armies? Mess. Within this mile and a half. Mar. Then shall we hear their laram and they ours. Now, Mars, I pr'ythee, make us quick in work; That we with smoking swords may march from hence, To help our fielded friends!—Come, blow thy blast. 2 R 3
They sound a parley. Enter, on the walls, some Senators, and others.

Tullus Aufidius, is he within your walls?

1 Sen. No, nor a man that fears you less than he,
That's lesser than a little. Hark, our drums

[Abramus afar off.]

Are bringing forth our youth: We'll break our walls,
Rather than they shall bound us up: Our gates,
Which yet seem shut, we have but pinn'd with rushes;
They'll open of themselves. Hark you, afar off;

[Other alarms.]

There is Aufidius; list, what work he makes Amongst your cloven army.

Mar. O, they are at it! The Voices enter, and pass over the stage.

Mar. They fear us not, but issue forth their city.
Now put your shields before your hearts, and fight
With hearts more proof than shields. — Advance, brave Titus:
They do disdain us much beyond our thoughts,
Which makes me sweat with wrath. — Come on, my
He that retires, I'll take him for a Voice, [fellows; And he shall feel mine edge.

Abramus, and excent Romans and Voices, fighting. The Romans are beaten back to their trenches. Re-enter Marcus.

Mar. All the prettage of the south light on you.
You shames of Rome! — you herd of — Boils and Plaster you o'er; that you may be abhorred [plagues
Furtier than seen, and one infect another
Against the wind a mile! You souls of geese,
That bear the shapes of men, how have you run
From slaves that apes would beat? Pluto and hell!
All hurt behind; books red, and faces pale
With flight and agued fear! Mend, and charge home,
Or, by the fires of heaven, I'll leave the foe,
And make my wars on yon: look to't: Come on;
If you'll stand fast, we'll beat them to their wives,
As they us to our trenches followed.

Another alarum. The Voices and Romans re-enter, and the fight is renewed. The Voices retire into Corioli, and Marcus follows them to the gates.

So, now the gates are ope: — Now prove good seconds:
'Tis for the followers fortunate widens them,
Not for the fliers: mark me, and do the like.

[He enters the gates, and is shut in.]

1 Sol. Fool-hardiness; not I. 2 Sol. Nor I. 3 Sol. See, they Have shut him in. [Abramus continues.]

All. To the pot, I warrant him. Enter Titus Lartius.

Lart. What is become of Marcus?

All. Slain, sir, doubtless.

1 Sol. Following the fliers at the very heels,
With them he enters: who, upon the sudden,
Clapp'd-to their gates; he is himself alone,
To answer all the city.

Lart. O noble fellow! Who, sensible, outdres his senseless sword,
And, when it bows, stands up! Thou art left, Mar-
A carbuncle entire, as big as thou art, [cias:
Were not so rich a jewel. Thou wast a soldier
Even to Cato's wish, not fierce and terrible
Only in stakes; but, with thy grim looks, and
The thunder-like percussion of thy sounds,
Thou mad'st thine enemies shake, as if the world
Were feverous, and did tremble.

Re-enter Marcus, bleeding, assaulted by the enemy.

1 Sol. Look, sir. Lart. 'Tis Marcus: Let's fetch him off, or make remain alike. [They fight, and all enter the city.]

SCENE V.—Within the Town. A Street.

Enter certain Romans with spoils.

1 Rom. This will I carry to Rome.
2 Rom. And I this.
3 Rom. A marrain on't! I took this for silver.

[Abramus continues still afar off.]

Enter Marcus and Titus Lartius, with a trumpet.

Mar. See here these movers, that do prize their hours,
At a crack'd drachm! Cushions, leaden spoons,
Irons of a doz., doubtlets that hangmen would
Bury with those that wore them, these base slaves,
Ere yet the fight be done, pack up: Down with them,—
And hark, what noise the general makes! — To him:—
There is the man of my soul's hate, Aufidius, Fiercing our Romans: Then, valiant Titus, take Convenient numbers to make good the city:
Whilst I, with those that have the spirit, will haste
To help Cominius.

Lart. Worthy sir, thou bleed'st;
Thy exercise hath been too violent for
A second course of fight.

Mar. Sir, praise me not: My work hath yet not warned me: Fare you well.
The blood I drop is rather physical Than dangerous to me: To Aufidius thus
I will appear, and fight.

Lart. Now the fair goddess, Fortune,
Fall deep in love with thee; and her great charms
Misguide thy opponents' swords! Bold gentleman, Prosperity be thy page!

Thy friend no less Than those she placeth highest!—So, farewell.

Lart. Thou worthiest Marcus! — [Ex. Marcus. Go, sound thy trumpet in the market-place; Call shitter all the officers of the town,
Where they shall know our mind: Away. [Exeunt.]

SCENE VI.—Near the Camp of Cominius.

Enter Cominius and Forces, retreating.

Com. Breathe you, my friends; well fought: we are come off
Like Romans, neither foolish in our stands,
Nor cowardly in retire: believe me, sir,
We shall be charg'd again. Whiles we have struck,
By interums, and conveying gusts, we have heard
The charges of our friends: — The Roman gods,
Lead their successes as we wish our own; [ing,
That both our powers, with smiling frown's encounter-

Enter a Messenger.

May give you thankful sacrifice! — Thy news? Miss. The citizens of Corioli have issued,
And given to Lartius and to Marcus battle:
I saw our party to their trenches driven,
And then I came away.

Com. Though thou speakest true, Methinks, thou speakest not well. How long ist
Miss. Above an hour, my lord. [since?

Com. 'Tis not a mile; briefly we heard their drums:
How could'st thou in a mile confound an hour,
ACT I.—SCENE IX.

And bring thy news so late?

[Enter Marcius.]

Who's thonder?

That doth appear as he were flay'd? O gods!

He has the stamp of Marcius; and I have

Before-time seen him thus.

Marcius.

Come I too late?

The shepherd knows not thunder from a taber.

More than I know the sound of Marcius tongue

From every maner man.

[Enter Marcius, Ay, if you come not in the blood of others,

But mantled in your own.

O! let me clip you

In arms as sound, as when I wou'd: in heart

As merry, as when our nuptial day was done,

And tapers burn'd to bedward.

[Flower of warriors,

How 'st with Titus Lartius?

As with a man busied about decrees;

Condemning some to death, and some to exile;

Ransoming him; or pitying, threat'ning the other;

Holding Corioili in the name of Rome.

Even like a fawny greyhound in the leah,

To let him slip at will.

[Where is that slave,

Which told me they had beat you to your treecles?

Where is he? Call him hither.

Let him alone.

He did inform the truth: But for our gentlemen,

The common file, (A plague!—Tribunes for them!)

The mouse ne'er shun'd the cat, as they did budge

From rascals worse than they.

But how prevail'd you?

Will the time serve to tell? I do not think—

Where is the enemy? Are you lords o' the field?

If not, why cease you till you are so?

Marcius.

We have at disadvantage fought, and did

Retire, to win our purpose.

How lies their battle? Know you on which

They plac'd their men of trust?

[As I guess, Marcius,

Their hands in the vaward are the Antiates,

Of their best trust; o'er them Aundius,

Their very heart of hope.

Marcius.

I do beseech you,

By all the battles wherein we have fought,

By the blood we have shed together, by the vows

We have made to endure friends, that you directly

Set me against Aundius, and his Antiates:

And that you not delay the present: but,

Filling the air with swords advance'd, and darts,

We prove this very hour.

Though I could wish

You were conducted to a gentle bath,

And bains applied to you, yet dare I never

Deny your asking; take your choice of those

That best can aid your action.

[Wave thus, [shaking his hand] to express his dispa-
And follow Marcius.

[They all shout, and wave their swords; take him up in their arms, and cast up their cups.

O me, alone! Make you a sword of me!

If these shows be not outward, which of you

And four shall quickly draw out my command,

Which men are best inci'd.

March on, my fellows:

Make good this ostentation, and you shall

Divide in all with us.]

[Exit.]

SCENE VII.—The Gates of Corioli.

Titus Lartius, having set a guard upon Corioli,

Going with a drum and a trumpet toward Cominius

And Caius Marcius, enters with a Lieutenant, a party of Soldiers, and a Scout.

Lurt. So, let the ports be guarded; keep your duties,

As I have set them down. If I do send, despatch

These centuries to our aid; the rest will serve

For a short holding; If we lose the field,

We cannot keep the town.

Lurt. Fear not our care, sir.

Lurt. Hence, and shut your gates upon us—

Our guider, come; to the Roman camp conduct us.

[Exit.]

SCENE VIII.—A Field of Battle between the Roman and the Volscian Camps.

[Alarum. Enter Marcius and Aundius.

Mar. I'll fight with none but thee; for I do hate

Worse than a promise-breaker. [thee

We hate alike;

Not Afric owes a serpent, I abhor

More than thy shame and envy: Fix thy foot.

Mar. Let the first bloody die the other's slave,

And the gods doom him after!

[If I fly, Marcius,

Hallow me like a bare.

Mar. Within these three hours, Tullius,

Alone I fought in your Corioli walls,

And made what work I pleas'd; 'Tis not my blood,

Whereeto thou seest me mask'd: for thy revenge,

Wrench up thy power to the highest.

Wert thou the Hector,

That was the whip of your bragg'd progeny,

Should'rt not seape me here.—

Officious, and not valiant—you have sham'd me

In your condemned seconds.

SCENE IX.—The Roman Camp.

[Alarum. A retreat is sounded. Flourish. Enter at one side, Cominius, and Romans; at the other side,

Marcii, with his arm in a scarf, and other Romans.

Com. If I should tell thee o'er this thy day's work,

Thou'lt not believe thy deeds: but I'll report it,

Where senators shall mingle tears with smiles;

Where great patricians shall attend, and shrug,

The end, admire; where ladies shall be frighted,
And, gladly quak'd, hear more; where the dull Tribunes. That, with the lusty plebeians, hate thine honours, Shall say, against their hearts,—We thank the gods, Our Rome hath such a soldier!— Yet can'st thou to a morsel of this feast, Having fully dined before.

Enter Titus Lartius, with his power, from the pursuit.

Lart. O general, Here is the steed, we the caparison: Has not your beloved—

Mar. Pray now, no more: my mother, Who has a charter to extol her blood, When she does praise me, grieves me. I have done, As you have done: that's what I can; induc'd As you have been: that's for my country. He, that has but effect'd his good will Hath overtak'en mine act.

Cor. You shall not be The grave of your deserving: Rome must know The value of her own: 'twere a concealment Worse than a theft, no less than a traducement, To hide your doings; and to silence that, Which, to the spire and top of praises vouch'd, Would seem but modest. Therefore, I beseech you, (In sign of what we are, not to reward What you have done,) before our army hear me. Mar. I have some wounds upon me, and they smart To hear themselves remember'd.

Cor. Should they not, Well might they fester "gainst ingratitude, And tent themselves with death. Of all the horses, (Whereof we have ta'en good, and good store,)jof all The treasure, in this field achieve'd, and city, We render you the tenth: to be ta'en forth, Before the common distribution, at Your only choice.

Mar. I thank you, general; But cannot make my heart consent to take A bribe to pay my sword: I do refuse it; And stand upon my common part with those That have beheld the doing.

[Long flourish. They all cry, Marcius! Marcius! cast up their caps and laurels: COMINUS and LARTIUS stand bare. May these same instruments, which you profane, Never sound more! When drums and trumpets shall P' the field prove flatt'aters, let courts and cities be Made all of false-fae'd soothing: When steel grows Soft as the parasite's silk, let him be made An overture for the war! No more, I say; For that I have not wash'd my nose thatbled, Or folid some debile wretch,—without note, Here's many else have done,—you shou't me forth To acclaim'ship hyperbolical; As if I loved my little should be dieted In praises sauc'd with lies.

Cor. Too modest are you; More cruel to your good report, than grateful To us that give you truly: by your patience, If 'gainst yourself you be incens'd, we'll put you (Like one that means his proper harm,) in manacles, Then reason safely with you. Therefore, be't known, As to us, to all the world, that Caius Marcius Wears this war's garland: in token of the which My noble steed, known to the camp, I give him, With all his trim belonging; and, from this time, For what he did before Coriolli, call him, With all the applause and clamour of the host, CAIUS MARCIUS CORIOLANUS.

Bear the addition nobly ever! [Flourish. Trumpets sound, and drums. All. Caius Marcius Coriolanus! Cor. I will go wash; And when my face is fair, you shall perceive Whether I blush, or no: Howbeit, I thank you:— I mean to stride your steed; and, at all times, To undercres't your good addition. To the fairness of my power.

Cor. Where, ere we do repose us, we will write To Rome of our success,—You, Titus Lartius, Must to Coriolli back: send us to Rome The best, with whom we may articulate, For their own good, and ours.

Lart. I shall, my lord.

Cor. The gods begin to mock me. I that now Refus'd most princely gifts, am bound to beg Of my lord general.

Com. Take it: 'tis yours—What is't?

Com. I sometimes lay, here in Corinoli, At a poor man's house; he us'd me kindly: He cried to me; I saw him prisoner; But then Aulidius was within my view, And wrath o'erwhelm'd my pity: I request You to give my poor host freedom.

Cor. O, well begg'd! Wherefore the butcher of my son, he should Bear arms, as is the wind. Deliver him, Titus.

Lart. Marcius, his name?

Com. By Jupiter, forgot:— I am weary; yea, my memory is tir'd.— Have we no wine here?

Com. Go we to our tent.

The blood upon your visage dries: 'tis time It should be look'd too; come. [Exeunt.

SCENE X.—The Camp of the Voices.

A flourish. Cornets. Enter TULLUS AULIUS, bloody, with Two or Three Soldiers.

Aul. The town is taken!

Sol. 'Twill be deliver'd back on good condition.

Aul. Condition?— I would, I were a Roman; for I cannot, Being a Voice, be that I am.—Condition! What good condition can a treaty find I the part that is at mercy? Five times, Marcius, I have fought with them; so often hast thou beat me; And would'st do so, I think, should we encounter As often as we eat.—By the elements, If ever again I meet him heard to beard, He is mine, or I am his: Mine emulation Hath not that honour in't, it had: for where I thought to crush him in an equal force, (True sword to sword,) I'll potch him at some way: Or wrath, or craft, may get him. I sol. He's the devil.

Aul. Bolder, though not so subtile: My valour's point With only suffering stain by him; for him [so'd, Shall fly out of itself: nor sleep, nor sanctify, Being naked, sick: nor fane, nor Capitol, The prayers of priests, nor times of sacrifice, Embraquements all of fury, shall lift up Their rotten privilege, and custom 'gainst My hate to Marcius: where I find him, were it At home, upon my brother's guard, even there Against the hospitable canon, would I Wash my fierce hand in his heart. Go you to the city, Learn, how 'tis held; and what they are, that must Be hostages for Rome. I sol. Will not you go?
ACT II.—SCENE I.

SCENE I.—Rome. A public Place.

Enter MENENIUS, SCINCIUS, and BRUTUS.

Men. The augurer tells me, we shall have news to-night.

Bru. Good, or bad?

Men. Not according to the prayer of the people, for they love not Marcus.

Sic. Nature teaches beasts to know their friends. Men. Pray you, who does the wolf love?

Sir. The lamb.

Men. Ay, to devour him; as the hungry plebeians would devour Marcus.

Bru. He’s a lamb indeed, that baaes like a bear.

Men. He’s a bear, indeed, that lives like a lamb.

You two are old men; tell me one thing that I shall ask you.

Both Trib. Well, sir.

Men. In what enormity is Marcus poor, that you two have not in abundance?

Bru. He’s poor in no one fault, but stored with all.

Sic. Especially, in pride.

Bru. And topping all others in boasting.

Men. This is strange now: Do you two know how you are censured here in the city, I mean of us, the right hand file? Do you?

Both Trib. Why, how are we censured?

Men. Because you talk of pride now.—Will you not be angry?

Both Trib. Well, well, sir, well.

Men. Why, ‘tis no great matter: for a very little thief of occasion will rob you of a great deal of patience: give your disposition the reins, and be angry at the least, if you take it as a pleasure to you, in being so. You blame Marcus for being proud!

Bru. We do it not alone, sir.

Men. I know you can do very little alone; for your help are many; or else your actions would grow wonders single: your abilities are too infinite, like, for doing much alone. You talk of pride: O, that you could turn your eyes towards the oapses of your necks, and make but an interior survey of your good selves! O, that you could!

Bru. What then, sir?

Men. Why, then you should discover a brace of uncharacter, proud, violent, testy magistrates, (alias fools,) and any in Rome.

Sic. Menenius, you are known well enough too.

Men. I am known to be a humorous patrician, and one that loves a cup of hot wine with not a drop of allaying Tyber in’t; said to be somwhat imperfect, in favouring the first complaint. hasty, and tinderlike, upon too trivial motion: one that converses more with the buttoc of the night, than with the forehead of the morning. What I think, I utter; and spend my malice in my breath: Meeting two such weakmen as you are, (I cannot call you Lycarguses) if the drink you give me, touch my palate adversely, I make a crooked face at it. I cannot say, your worshipshas have delivered the matter well, when I find the ass in compound with the major part of your syllables: and though I must be content to bear with those that say you are reverence grave men; yet they lie deadly, that tell, you have good faces. If you see this in the map of my microcosm, follows it, that I am known well enough too? What harm can your bisson con- spectuities glean out of this character, if I be known well enough too?

Bru. Come, sir, come, we know you well enough.

Men. You know neither me, yourselves nor anything. You are ambitions for poor kneaves’ caps and legs; you wear out a good wholesome forenoon, in hearing a cause between an orange-wiffe and a fooster-seller; and then rejoin the controversy of three-pence to a second day of audience.—When you are hearing a matter between party and party, if you chance to be pinched with the chole, you make faces like mummers; set up the bloody flag against all patience; and, in roaring for a chamber-pot, dismiss the controversy bleeding, the more entangled by your hearing: all the peace you make in their cause, is, calling both the parties, kneaves: You are a pair of strange gents.

Bru. Come, come, you are well understood to be a perfecker giber for the table, than a necessary bencher in the Capitol.

Men. Our very priests must become mockers, if they shall encounter such ridiculous subjects as you are. When you speak best unto the purpose, it is not worth the wagging of your beard; and your beards do serve nor as a trine to your faces, to stuff a botcher’s cushion, or to be entombed in an ass’s pack-saddle. Yet you must be saying, Marcus is proud; who, in a cheap estimation, is worth all your predecessors, since Deculation: though, peradventure, some of the best of them were hereditary hangmen. Good e’en to your worshipfulls; more of your conversation would infect my brain, being the herdmen of the beastly plebeians: I will be bold to take my leave of you.

[BRUTUS and SCINCIUS return to the back of the scene.]

Enter Volumnia, Virgilia, and Valeria, &c.

Now how, my as fair as noble ladies, (and the moon, were she earthly, no nobler,) whether do you follow your eyes so fast?

Vol. Honourable Menenius, my boy Marcus approaches: for the love of Juno, let’s go.

Men. Ha! Marcus coming home?

Vol. Ay, worthy Menenius; and with most prosperous approbation.

Men. Take my cap, Jupiter, and I thank thee:—

Hoo! Marcus coming home?

Two Ladies. Nay, ’tis true.

Vol. Look, here’s a letter from him; the state hath another, his wife another; and, I think, there’s one at home for you.

Men. I will make my very house reel to-night:—

A letter for me?

Vir. Yes, certain, there’s a letter for you; I saw it.

Men. A letter for me! It gives me an estate of seven years’ health; in which time I will make a lip at the physician: the most sovereign prescription in Galen is but empiricall, and, to this preservative, of no better report than a horse-drench: Is he not wounded? he was wont to come home wounded.

Vir. O, no, no, no.

Vol. O, he is wounded, I thank the gods for’t.

Men. So do I too, if it be not too much:—Brings a victory in his pocket!—The wounds become him.

Vol. Oah’s brows, Menenius: he comes the third time home with the oaken garland.

Men. Has he disciplined Autolus soundly?
CORIOLANUS.

Thus Latins are wretches— they sought together,
But none could ever find the end to it. We were sent out to search for us. What the gods may have done,
I never could guess. The chair of Consul was a good seat. In the senate possessed of it,
Good speeches, we say— Yes, yes, you must. It was a very good seat in general with me,
But not as it was at the present time. I could see more of the way than I could hear. The chair of Consul was a good seat in general.

There is a good seat, a very good seat.

Go in, go in, go in. Good seats—

That Rome should dance on, yet, by the teeth of men,
We are men enough, the beasts are not.

You may take the right, yet, we are wretches.

They are the nobles, they are the wise.

Without any power, a very good seat.

You have been a good brother to me,
For my prosperity.

He still had held them, that, to his power, he would have made them meet, silenced their plaudits, and dispersed their freedoms: holding them, his human action and capacity.

Of no more soul, nor power for the world;

Than cannon in their war, who have their profound

Oaths for bearing honours, and their blows

I am writing under them.

Sec. This as you say, suggested

At some time when his warring insolence

This to the people, (which time shall not want, if

He be put upon, and that’s as easy,

As to set dogs on them, y will be his fire

To kindle their dry standards, and their blaze

shall deck him for ever.

Enter a Messenger.

Bras. What’s the matter?

Mess. You are sent for to the Capitol. In thought, That Marcus shall be even: I have seen

The dumb men throng to see him, and the blind

To stand upon their toes. We do expect your ease,

Ladies and maidens start: and handcuffs

Upon him as he pass’d: the nobles headed,

As to Jove’s statue, and the commons made

A shower, and thunder, with their caps, and shout: I never saw the like.

Sec. Let’s to the Capitol;

And carry with us our ears and eyes for the time,

But hearts for the event.

Sec. Have with you. [Exeunt.

SCENE II.—The same. The Capitol.

Enter Two Officers, to lay cushions.

1 Off. Coniun, come, they are almost here: How many stand for consults?

2 Off. Three, they say: but it’s thought of every one,

Cornelius will carry it.

1 Off. That’s a brave fellow; but he’s a vengeance proof and loves not the common people.

2 Off. He’s a man, that have been many great men that have flattered the people, who never loved them;

and there be many that they have loved, they know not wherefore: so that, if they love they know why, they hate upon no better a ground: Therefore, for Cornelius neither to care whether they love, or hate him, manifests the true knowledge he has in their diverse form, and out of his noble carriage, let’s them

prune not yet.

1 Off. If he did not care whether he had their love, or no, he wavier indifferently twixt doing them neither good, nor harm; but he seeks their hate with greater devotion than they can render it him; and leaves nothing undone, that may fully discover him

then opposed. Now, to seem to affect the malice and displeasure of the people, is as bad as that which he dullest, to flatter them for their love.

2 Off. He hath deserved worthily of his country:

And his accout is not by such easy degrees as those,

who, having been supplie and courtshous to the people,

honourted, without any further deed to leave them at all into their estimation and report: but he hath so planted his honours in their eyes, and his actions in their hearts, that for their tongues to be silent,

and not confess so much, were a kind of ingratitude injury, to report otherwise, were a malice, that, giving itself the lie, would place reproach and relevance

every car that bore it.

1 Off. No more of him: he is a worthy man: Make way, they are coming.

The bristled lips before him: he bestrid
An o'er press'd Roman, and i'the consul's view
Slew three opposers: Tarquin's self he met,
And struck him on his knee: in that day's feats,
When he might act the woman in the scene,
He prov'd best man i' the field, and for his need
Was bow-bound with the oak. His pupil age
Man-enter'd thus, he waved like a sea;
And, in the brunt of seventeen battles since,
He lurch'd all swords o' the garland. For this last,
Before and in Coriol, let me say,
I cannot speak him home: He stopp'd the fliers;
And, by his rare example, made the coward
Turn terror into sport: as waves before
A vessel under sail, so men obey'd,
And fell below his stem: his sword (death's stamp)
Where it did mark, it took; from face to foot
He was a thing of blood, whose every motion
Was timed with dying cries: alone he enter'd
The mortal gait o' the city, which he painted
With shunless destiny, adress came off,
And with a sudden re-enforcement struck
Coriol, like a planet: Now all's his:
When by and by the din of war 'gan pierce
His ready sense: then straight his doubled spirit
Re-quicken'd what in flesh was fatigue,
And to the battle came he; where he did
Run reeking o'er the lives of men, as if Twere a perpetual spell: and, till we call'd
Both field and city ours, he never stood
To ease his breast with panting.

Men. Worthy man!
1 Sen. He cannot but with measure fit the honours
Which we devise him.

Con. Our spoils he kick'd at; and Look'd upon things precious, as they were
The common muck o' the world; he covets less
Than misery itself would give; rewards
His deeds with doing them; and is content
To spend the time, to end it.

Men. He's right noble;
Let him be call'd for.
1 Sen. Call for Coriolanus.

Off. He doth appear.

Re-enter CORIOLANUS.

Men. The senate, Coriolanus, are well pleas'd
To make thee consul.

Cor. I do owe them still
My life, and services.

Men. It then remains,
That you do speak to the people.

Cor. I do beseech you,
Let me o'erleap that custom; for I cannot
Put on the gown, stand naked, and entreat them,
Formy wounds' sake, to give their suffrage: please you,
That I may pass this doing.

Sir. The people
Must have their voices; neither will they bate
One jot of ceremony.

Men. Put them not to 't:—
Pray you, go fit you to the custom; and Take to you, as your predecessors have,
Your honour with your form.

Cor. It is a part
That I shall blush in acting, and might well
Be taken from the people.

Men. Mark you that?
Cor. To brag unto them.—Thus I did, and thus:—
Shew them the wak'ning scars which I should hide,
As if I had receiv'd them for the hire
Of their breath only:
My tongue to such a pace:—Look, sir,—my wounds; I got them in my country's service, when some certain of your brethren roard, and ran From the noise of our own drums.

Men. O me, the gods! You must not speak of that: you must desire them To think upon you.

Cor. Think upon me? Hang 'em! I would they would forget me, like the virtues Which our divines lose by them.

Men. You'll mar all; I'll leave you: Pray you, speak to them, I pray you, To wholesome manner.

Enter two Citizens.

Cor. Bid them wash their faces, And keep their teeth clean.—So, here comes a brace, You know the cause, sir, of my standing here.

1 Cit. We do, sir; tell us what hath brought you
Cor. Mine own desert. [Exeunt.

2 Cit. Your own desert?

Cor. Mine own desire.

1 Cit. How! not your own desire?

Cor. No, sir: 'Twas never my desire yet, To trouble the poor with begging.

1 Cit. You must think, if we give you any thing, We hope to gain by you.

Cor. Well then, I pray, your price o'the consulship?

1 Cit. The price is, sir, to ask it kindly.

Cor. Kindly!

Sir, I pray, let me ha't: I have wounds to shew you, Which shall be yours in private.—Your good voice, What say you? [sir

2 Cit. You shall have it, worthy sir.

Cor. A match, sir:— There is in all two worthy voices begg'd:— I have your alms; adieu.

1 Cit. But this is something odd.

2 Cit. An 'twere to give again,—But 'tis no matter. [Exeunt two Citizens.

Enter two other Citizens.

Cor. Pray you now, if it may stand with the tune of your voices, that I may be consul, I have here the customary gown.

3 Cit. You have deserved nobly of your country, and you have not deserved nobly.

Cor. Your enigma!

3 Cit. You have been a scourge to her enemies, you have been a rod to her friends; you have not, indeed, loved the common people.

Cor. You should account me the more virtuous, that I have not been common in my love. I will, sir, flatter my sworn brother the people, to earn a dearer estimation of them; 'tis a condition they account gentle; and since the wisdom of their choice is rather to have my hat than my heart, I will practise the insinuating nod, and be off to them most counterfeity: that is, sir, I will counterfeite the bewitchment of some popular man, and give it bountifully to the desirers. Therefore, beseech you, I may be consul.

4 Cit. We hope to find you our friend; and therefore give you our voices heartily.

3 Cit. You have received many wounds for your country.

Cor. I will not seal your knowledge with shewing them. I will make much of your voices, and so trouble you no further.

Both Cit. The gods give you joy, sir, heartily! [Exeunt.

Cor. Most sweet voices!— Better it is to die, better to have, Than crave the hie which first we do deserve. Why in this wolfish gown should I stand here, To beg of Hob and Dick, that do appear, Their needless vouches? Custom calls me to't:— What custom wills, in all things should we do', The dust on antique time would lie unswept, And mountinous error be too highly heap'd For truth to over-peer.—Rather than foil it so, Let the high office and the honour go To one that would do thus,—I am half through; The one part suffer'd, the other will I do.

Enter three other Citizens.

Here come more voices,— Your voices: for your voices I have sought; Watch'd for your voices; for your voices, bear Of wounds two dozen odd, battles three six I have seen and heard of; for your voices, have Done many things, some less, some more your voices Indeed, I would be consul.

5 Cit. He has done nobly, and cannot go without any honest man's voice.

6 Cit. Therefore let him be consul: The gods give him joy, and make him good friend to the people! All. Amen, amen.—

God save thee, noble consul! [Exit Citizens.

Cor. Worthy voices!

Re-enter MENENIUS, with Brutus and Sicinius.

Men. You have stood your limitation; and the tribunes Endue you with the people's voice: Remains, That, in the official marks invested, you Anon do meet the senate.

Cor. Is this done?

Sic. The custom of request you have discharge'd: The people do admit you; and are summon'd To meet anon, upon your approbation.

Cor. Where! at the senate house!

Sic. Cor. May I then change these garments?

Sic. You may, sir.

Cor. That I'll straight do; and, knowing myself Repair to the senate-house. [again.

Men. I'll keep you company.—Will you alung? Brut. We stay here for the people.

Sic. Fare you well. [Exit. Control and Menen. He has it now; and by his looks, methinks, 'Tis warm at his heart.

Brut. With a proud heart he wore His humble weeds: Will you dismiss the people?

Re-enter Citizens.

Sic. How now, my masters? have you chose this
1 Cit. He has our voices, sir. [man?

Brut. We pray the gods, he may deserve your voices.

2 Cit. Amen, sir: To my poor unworthy notice, He mock'd us, when he begg'd our voices.

3 Cit. Certainly, he flout't us down-right. [us.

1 Cit. No, 'tis his kind of speech, he did not mock
2 Cit. Not one amongst us, save yourself, but says, He us'd us scornfully: he should have shew'd us His marks of merit, wounds receiv'd for his country.

Sic. Why, so he did, I am sure.

Cit. No; no man saw 'em. [Several speak.

3 Cit. He said, he had wounds, which he could shew in private; And with his hat, thus waving it in scorn I would be consul, says he: aged custom, But by your voices, will not so permit me,
CORIOLANUS.

Your voices therefore: When we granted that, Here was,—I thank you for your voices,—thank you,— Your most sweet voices:—now you have left your voices, I have no further with you.—Was not this mockery? Sic. Why, either, were you ignorant to see it? Or, seeing it, of such childish friendliness To yield your voices?

Bru. Could you not have told him, As you were lesson'd.—When he had no power, But was a petty servant to the state, He was your enemy; ever spake against Your liberties, and the charters that you bear: The body of the whole: and now, arising A place of potency, and sway o' the state, If he should still malignantly remain Fast foe to the piebœ, your voices might Be curses to yourselves? You should have said, That, as his worthy deeds did claim no less Than what he stood for; so his gracious nature Would think upon you for your voices, and Translate his malice towards you into love, Studding your friendly lord. Sic. Thus to have said, As you were fore-advise'd, had touch'd his spirit, And try'd his inclination; from him pluck'd Either his gracious promise, which you might, As cause had call'd you up, have held him to; Or else it would have call'd his early nature, Which easily endures not article Tying him to aught; so, putting him to rage, You should have ta'en the advantage of his choler, And pass'd him unelected. Bru. Did you perceive, He did solicit you in free contemp, When he did need your loves; and do you think, That his contempt shall not be bruising to you, When he hath power to crush? Why, had your bodies No heart among you? Or had you tongues, to cry Against the rectorship of judgment? Sic. Have you, Ere now, deny'd the asker? and, now again, On him, that did not ask, but mock, bestow Your voice, for tongues?

1 Cor. He's not confirm'd, we may deny him yet. 2 Cor. And will deny him: I'll have five hundred voices of that sound. 1 Cor. I twice fifty hundred, and their friends to piece 'em. [Friends,— Bru. Get you hence instantly; and tell those They have chose a consul, that will from them take Their liberties; make them of no more voice Than dogs, that are as often beat for barking, As therefore keep to do so. Sic. Let them assemble; And, on a safter judgment, all revoke Your ignoraat election: Enforce his pride, And his old hate unto you: besides, forget not What vast contempt we wore the humble weed How in his suit he scorn'd you: but your loves, Thinking upon his services, took from you The apprehension of his present portance, Which gibingly ungravely, he did fashion After the inveterate hate he bears you. Bru. Lay A fault on us, your tribunes; that we labour'd (No impediment between) but that you must Cast your election on him. Sic. Say, you chose him More after our commandment, than as guided By your own true affections; and that, your minds Pre-occupied with what you rather must do Than what you should, made you against the grain To voice him consul: Lay the fault on us. Bru. Ay, spare us not. Say, we read lectures to How youngly he began to serve his country, [you, How long continued: and what stock he springs of, The noble house o' the Marcius; from whence came That Ancus Marcius, Numna's daughter's son, Who, after great Hostilius, here was king: Of the same house Publius and Quintus were, That our best water brought by conduits hither; And Censorinus, darling of the people, And nobly nam'd so, being censor twice, Was his great ancestor. One thus descended, That hath beside well in his person wrought To be set high in place, we did command To your remembrances: but you have found, Scaling his present bearing with his past, That he's your fixed enemy, and revoke Your sudden approbation. Sic. Say, you ne'er done it, (Harsh on that still,) but by our putting on: And presently, when you have drawn your number, Repair to the Capitol. Cit. We will so: almost all. Several speak. Repent in their election. [Exeunt Citizens. Bru. Let them go on; This mutiny were better put in hazard, To pacify their past doubt, for greater: If, as his nature is, he fall in rage With their refusal, both observe and answer The vantage of his anger. Sic. To the Capitol: Come; we'll be there before the stream o' the people; And this shall seem, as partly 'tis their own, Which we have goaded onward. [Exeunt.

ACT III.

SCENE I.—The same. A Street.

Cornets. Enter CORIOLANUS, MENENIUS, COMMINES, TITIUS LARTIUS, Senators, and Patricians. Cor. Tullius Aufidius then had made new head? Lart. He had, my lord; and that it was, which Our swifter composition. [caus'd Cor. So then the Volscs stand but as at first; Ready, when time shall prompt them, to make road Upon us again.

Com. They are worn, lord consul, so, That we shall hardly in our ages see Their banners wave again. Cor. Saw you Aufidius? Lart. On safe-guard he came to me; and did curse Against the Volscs, for they had so vilely Yielded the town: he is retir'd to Antium. Cor. Spoke be of me? Lart. He did, my lord. Cor. How? what? Lart. How often he had met you, sword to sword: That, of all things upon the earth, he hated Your person most: that he would pawn his fortunes To hopeless restitution, so he might Be call'd your vanquisher.

Cor. At Antium lives he? Lart. At Antium. Cor. I wish I had a cause to seek him there, To oppose his hatred fully.—Welcome home. [To LARTIUS Enter SERGIUS und BRUTUS. Behold! these are the tribunes of the people,
As for my country I have shed my blood,
Not fearing outward force, so shall my lungs
Coin words till their decay, against those meazels,
Which we disdain should terror us, yet sought
The very way to catch them.

Bru. You speak 'o the people.
As if you were a god to punish, not
A man of their infirmity.

Sir. "Trew well,
We let the people know't.

Men. What, what? his choicer?

Cor. Choler!
Were I as patient as the midnight sleep,
By Jove, 'twould be my mind.

Sir. It is a mind,
That shall remain a poison where it is,
Not poison any further.

Cor. Shall remain!—
Hear you this Triton of the minnows! mark you
His absolute shall;

Com. 'Twas from the canon.

Cor. Shall!
O good, but most unwise patricians, why,
You grave, but reckless senators, have you thus
Given them help to choose their own masters?
That with his peremptory shall, being but
The horn and noise 'o the monsters, wants not spirit
To say, he'll turn your current in a ditch,
And make your channel his? if he have power,
Then vail your ignorance: if none, awake
Your dangerous lenity. If you are learned,
Be not as common fools: if you are not,
Let them have cushions by you. You are plebeians,
If they be senators: and they are no less,
When both your voices blended, the greatest taste
Most palates theirs. They choose their magistrate;
And such a one as he, who puts his shall,
His popular shall, against a graver bench.
Than ever sworn'd in Greece I by Jove himself,
It makes the counsels base: and my soul akes,
To know, when two authorities are up,
Neither supreme, how soon confusion
May enter 'twixt the gap of both, and take
The one by the other.

Com. Well—on to the market-place.

Cor. Whoever gave the counsel to give back
The corn o' the store house gratis, as 'twas us'd
Sometime in Greece,

Men. Well, well, no more of that.

Cor. (Though there the people had more absolute
I say, they nourish'd disobedience, fed [power,]
The ruin of the state.

Bru. Why, shall the people give
One, that speaks thus, their voice?

Cor. I'll give my reasons,
More worthier than their voices. They know, the corn
Was not our recompense; resting well assur'd
They 'er'd service for't: Being press'd to the war,
Even when the navel of the state was touch'd
They would not thread the gate: this kind of service
Did not deserve corn grants: being 't the war,
Their mutinies and revolts, wherein they shew'd
Most valour, spoke not for them: The accusation
Which they have often made against the senate,
All cause unborn, could ever be the native
Of our so frank donation. Well, what then?
How shall this bosom multiplied digest
The senate's courtesy? Let deject express
What's like to be their words:—We did request it;
We are the greater poll, and in true fear
They gave us our demands:—Thus we debase
The nature of our seats, and make the rabble

The tongues o'the common mouth. I do despise them;
For they do prank them in authority,
Against all noble sufferece.

Sir. Pass no further.

Cor. Ha! what is that?

Bru. Go on; no further.

Cor. What makes this change?

Men. The matter?

Com. Hath he not pass'd the nobles, and the com-
Bru. Common, no. [Power,]

Cor. Have I had children's voices? [Place.

1 Sen. Tribunes, give way; she shall to the market-

Bru. The people are incens'd against him.

Sir. Stop.

Or all will fall in broil.

Cor. Are these your hands?—
Must these have voices, that can yield them now,
And straight disclaim their tongues?—What are your offices?
You being their mouths, why rule you not their teeth?
Have you not set them on?

Men. Be calm, be calm.

Cor. It is a purpos'd thing, and grows by plot,
To be no noble by nobility:
Suffer it, and live with such as cannot rule,
Nor ever will be rul'd.

Bru. Call 't not a plot:
The people cry, you mock'd them; and, of late,
When corn was given them gratis, you repin'd;
Scandal'd the supplicants for the people; call'd them
Time-pleasers, fatterers, foes to nobleness.

Cor. Why, this was known before.

Bru. Not to them all.

Cor. Have you inform'd them since?

Bru. How! I inform them!

Cor. You are like to do such business.

Bru. Not unlike.

Each way, to better yours.

Cor. Why then should I be consul? By you clouds,
Let me deserve so ill as you, and make me
Your fellow tribune.

Sir. You shew too much of that,
For which the people stir. If you will pass
To where you are bound, you must inquire your way,
Which you are out of, with a gentler spirit;
Or ever be so noble as a consul,
Nor yoke with him for tribune.

Men. The people are abus'd.—Set on.—This pat'r-
Becomes not Rome; nor has Coriolanus [ing
Deserv'd this so dishonour'd rub, laid falsely
'I the plain way of his merit.

Cor. Tell me of corn!

This was my speech, and I will speak again;—

Men. Not now, not now.

1 Sen. Not in this heat, sir, now.

Cor. Now, as I live, I will.—My nobler friends,
I crave their pardons:—
For the mutable, rank-scented many, let them
Regard me as I do not flatter, and Therein behold themselves: I say again,
In soothing them, we nourish 'gainst our senate
The cockpit of rebellion, insolence, sedition,
Which we ourselves have plough'd for, sow'd and scatter'd,
By mingling them with us, the honon't number;
Who hot not virtue, no, nor power, but that
Which they have given to beggars.

Men. Well, no more.

1 Sen. No more words, we beseech you.

Cor. How? no more?

ACT III.—SCENE I.
Call our cares, fears: which will in time break ope The locks o'the senate, and bring in the crows To peck the eagles—

Men. Come, enough.

Bru. Enough, with over-measure.

Cor. No, take more:

What may be sworn by, both divine and human. Seal what I end withal!—This double worship,— Where one part does disdain with cause, the other Inward, without all reason; where gentility, title, wisdom Cannot conclude, but by the yea and nay Of general ignorance,—it must omit Real necessities, and give way the while To unstable slightness: purpose so barr'd, it follows, Nothing is done to purpose: Therefore, beseech you,— You that will be less fearful than discreet; That love the fundamental part of state, More than you doubt the off'ring; that prefer A noble life before a long, and wish To jump a body with a dangerous physic That's sure of death without it,—at once pluck out The mutitudinous tongue, let them not lick The sweet which is their poison: your dishonour Mingles true judgment, and beares the state Of that integrity which should become it; Not having the power to do the good it would, For the ill which doth control it.

Bru. He has said enough.

Sic. He has spoken like a traitor, and shall answer As traitors do.

Cor. Thou wretch! despite o'erthief thee!— What should the people do with these bald tribunes? On whom depending, their obedience fails To the greater bench: In a rebellion, When what's not meet, but what must be, was law, Then were they chosen; in a better hour, Let what is meet, be said, it must be meet, And throw their power 't the dust.

Bru. Manifest treason.

Sic. This a consul? no.

Bru. The Ædiles, ho!'—Let him be apprehended.

Sic. Go, call the people; [Exit BRUCC.] in whose name, myself

Attach thee, as a traitorous innovator, A foe to the public weal: Obey, I charge thee, And follow to thine answer.

Cor. Hence, old goat!

Sen. & Pot. We'll surely him.

Cor. Aged sir, hands off.

Cor. Hence rotten thing, or I shall shake thy bones Out of thine garments.

Re-enter BRUVUS, with the Ædiles, and a rabble of Citizens.

Men. One both sides more respect.

Sic. Here's he, that would Take from you all your power.

Bru. Seize him, Ædiles.

Cor. Down with him, down with him!

2 Sen. Weapons, weapons, weapons! [They all battle about Coriolanus.

Tribunes, patriots, citizens!—what bo!

Sicinius, Brutus, Coriolanus, citizens!

Men. What is about to be!—I am out of breath; Confusion's near: I cannot speak:—You, tribunes To the people,—Coriolanus, patience:—

Speak, good Sicinius.

Sic. Hear me, people;—Peace.

[Speak.

Sic. Let's hear our tribune:—Peace. Speak, speak,

Sic. You are at point to lose your liberties: Marcus would have all from you; Marcus, Whom late you have nam'd for consul.

Men. Fye, fye, fye!

This is the way to kindle, not to quench.

1 Sen. To unbuild the city, and to lay all flat.

Sic. What is the city, but the people!

Cit. True, The people are the city.

Cor. By the consent of all, we were establish'd

The people's magistrates.

Cit. You so remain.

Men. And so are like to do.

Cor. This is the way to lay the city flat;

To bring the roof to the foundation;

And bury all, which yet distinctly ranges,

In heaps and piles of ruin.

Sic. This deserves death.

Bru. Or let us stand to our authority,

Or let us lose it:—We do here pronounce,

Upon the part o'the people, in whose power

We were elected their's, Marcus is worthy

Of present death.

Sic. Therefore, lay hold of him;

Bear him to the rock Tarpeian, and from thence

Into destruction cast him.

Bru. Ædiles, seize him.

Cit. Yield, Marcus, yield.

Men. Hear me one word.

Beseech you, tribunes, bear me but a word.

Æd. Peace, peace.

Men. Be that you seem, truly, your country's friend, And temperately proceed to what you would Thus violently redress.

Bru. Sir, those cold ways, That seem like prudent helps, are very poisonous Where the disease is violent:—Lay hands upon him, And bear him to the rock.

Cor. No; I'll die here. [Drawing his sword.

There's some among you have beheld me fighting; Come, try upon yourselves what you have seen me.

Men. Down with that sword:—Tribunes, withdraw

Bru. Lay hands upon him.

[While.

Men. Help, help Marcus! help,

You that be noble: help him, young and old!

Cit. Down with him, down with him!

[In this muting, the Tribunes, the Ædiles, and these people, are all beat in.

Men. Go, get you to your house; be gone, away,

All will be naught else.

2 Sen. Get you gone.

Cor. Stand fast;

We have as many friends as enemies.

Men. Shall it be put to that?

1 Sen. The gods forbid!

Livythee, noble friend, home to thy house;

Leave us to cure this cause.

Men. For 'tis a sore upon us,

You cannot tent yourself: Begone, 'beseech you.

Com. Come, sir, along with us.

Cor. I would they were barbarians, (as they are, Though in Rome hiter'd,) not Romans, (as they are) Through calf'd t' the porch o' the Capitol, [not, Be gone;

Put not your worthy rage into your tongue;

One time will owe another.

Cor. On fair ground,

I could beat forty of them.

Men. I could myself

Take up a brace of the best of them; yea, the two tri-

Com. But now 'tis odds beyond arithmetic;

And mankind is called folly, when it stands
Act III.—Scene II.

Against a falling fabric.—Will you hence, Before the tag return? whose rage doth rend Like interrupted waters, and o'erbear What they are used to bear.

Men. Pray you, be gone: I'll try whether my old wit be in request With those that have but little; this must be patch'd With cloth of any colour.

Coes. Nay, come away. [Exeunt Coriolanus, Cominius, and others.]

1 Pat. This man has mark'd his fortune. Men. His nature is too noble for the world: He would not flatter Neptune for his trident, [mouth: Or Jove for his power to thunder. His heart's his What his breast forges, that his tongue must vent; And, being angry, does forget that ever He heard the name of death. [A noise within. Here's good work!]

2 Pat. I would they were a-bed! Men. I would they were in Tyber! — What, the Could he not speak them fair? [vengeance.

Re-enter Brutus and Senius, with the rabble.

Sc. Where is this viper, That would depopulate the city, and Be every man himself? Men. You worthy tribunes. Sc. He shall be thrown down the Tarpeian rock With rigorous hands; he hath resisted law, And therefore law shall scorn him further trial Than the severity of the public power, Which he so sets at nought.

Brut. He shall well know, The noble tribunes are the people's mouths, And we their hands.

Cit. He shall, sure on't. [Several speak together.

Men. Sir,—

Sc. Peace.

Men. Do not cry, havoc, where you should but hunt With modest warrant.

Sc. Sir, how comes it, that you Have help to make this rescue?

Men. As I do know the consul's worthiness, So can I name his faults:—

Sc. Consul!—what consul?

Men. The consul Coriolanus.

Brut. He a consul!

Cit. No, no, no, oo, no, no.

Men. If, by the tribunes' leave, and yours, good I may be heard, I'd crave a word or two; [people, The which shall turn you to no further harm, Than so much loss of time.

Sc. Speak briefly then; For we are peremptory, to despatch This vipers' traitor: to eject him hence, Were but one danger; and, to keep him here, Our certain death; therefore it is decreed, He dies to-night.

Men. Now the good gods forbid, That our renowned Rome, whose gratitude Towards her deserved children is enrol'd In Jove's own book, like an unnatural dam Should now eat up her own!

Sc. He's a disease, that must be cut away. Men. O, he's a limb, that has but a disease; Mortal, to cut it off; to cure it, easy. What has he done to Rome, that's worthy death? Engaging our enemies? The blood he hath lost, (Which, I dare vouch, is more than that he hath, By many an ounce,) he dropp'd it for his country: And, what is left, to lose it by his country,

We were to all, that do't, and suffer it, A brand to the end o' the world.

Sic. This is clean kam.

Brut. Merely airy: When he did love his country, It honour'd him.

Men. The service of the foot Being once gangre'n'd, is not then respected For what before it was?

Brut. We'll hear no more:— Pursue him to his house, and pluck him thence; Lest his infection, being of catching nature, Spread further.

Men. One word more, one word. This tiger-footed rage, when it shall find The harm of uncas'd swiftness, will, too late, Tie leaden pounds to his heels. Proceed by process; Last parties (as he is belov'd) break out, And sack great Rome with Romans.

Brut. If it were so,—

Sc. What do ye talk? Have we not had a taste of his obedience? Our .Ediles smote? ourselves resisted?—Come:— Men. Consider this;—He has been bred 'i the wars Since he could draw a sword, and is ill school'd In bountiful language; meal and bran together He throws without distinction. Give me leave, I'll go to him, and undertake to bring him Where he shall answer, by a lawful form, (In peace) to his utmost peril.

1 Sen. Noble tribunes, It is the humane way: the other course Will prove too bloody; and the end of it Unknown to the beginning.

Sc. Noble Menenius, Be you then as the people's officer:— Masters, lay down your weapons.

Brut. Go not home.

Sc. Meet on the market-place: — We 'll attend You there:

Where, if you bring not Marcius, we'll proceed In our first way.

Men. I'll bring him to you —

Let me desire your company. [To the Senators.] He must come, Or what is worst will follow.

1 Sen. Pray you, let's to him. [Exeunt.

Scene II.—A Room in Coriolanus's House.

Enter Coriolanus and Patricians.

Cor. Let them pull all about mine ears; present me Death on the wheel, or at wild horses' heels; Or pile ten hills on the Tarpeian rock, That the precipitation might down stretch Below the beam of sight, yet will I still Be thus to them.

Enter Volumnia.

1 Pat. You do the nobler.

Cor. I muse, my mother Does not approve me further, who was wont To call them woolen vassals, things created To buy and sell with griefs, to shew bare heads In congregations, to yaw, be still, and wonder, When one but of my ordinance stood up To speak of peace, or war, I talk of you; [To Volumnia. Why did you wish me milder? Would you have me False to my nature? Rather say, I play The man I am.

Vol. O, sir, sir, sir, I would have had you put your power well on, Before you had worn it out.

Cor. Let go.
Vol. You might have been enough the man you are, With striving less to be so: Lesser had been The thwartings of your dispositions, if You had not shew'd them how you were dispos'd Ere they lack'd power to cross you. Let them hang.

Men. Come, come, you have been too rough, something too rough: You must return and mend it. I saw There's no remedy; Unless, by not so doing, our good city Cleave in the midst, and perish.

Vol. Pray be counsel'd: I have a heart as little apt as yours. But yet a brain, that leads my use of anger, To better vantage.

Men. Well said, noble woman: Before he should thus stoop to the herd, but that The violent foot o'the time craves it as physick For the whole state, I would put mine armour on, Which I can scarcely bear.

Cor. What must I do? Men. Return to the tribunes. Cor. What then? what then?

Men. Repeat what you have spoke. Cor. For them? I cannot do it to the gods; Must I then do't to them?

Vol. You are too absolute; Though therein you can never be too noble, But when extremes speak. I have heard you say, Honour and policy, like unsever'd friends, That war do grow companions. Grant that, and tell me, In peace, what each of them by th'other lose, That they combine not there.

Cor. Tush, tush! Men. A good demand.

Vol. If it be honour, in your wars, to seem The same you are not, (which, for your best ends, You adopt your policy,) how is it less, or worse, That it shall bols companionship in peace With honour, as in war; since that to both It stands in like request? Cor. Why force you this?

Vol. Because that now it lies you on to speak To the people; not by your own instruction, Nor by the matter which your heart prompts you to; But with such words that are but roted in Your tongue, though but baubards, and syllables Of no allowance, to your bosom's truth. Now, this no more dishonours you at all, Than to take in a town with gentle words, Which else would put you to your fortune, and The hazard of much blood.

I would ensemble with my nature, where My fortunes, and my friends, at stake, requir'd, I should so do in honour: I am in this, Your wife, your son, these senators, the nobles; And you will rather show our general lows How you can frown, than spend a fawn upon them, For the inheritance of their loves, and safeguard Of what that want might ruin.

Men. Noble lady!— Come, go with us; speak fair: you may salve so, Not what is dangerous present, but the loss Of what is past.

Vol. I pr'ythee now, my son, Go to them, with this bonnet in thy hand; And thus far having stretch'd it, (here be with them,) Thy knee bussing the stones, (for in such business Action is eloquence, and the eyes of the ignorant More learned than the ears,) wav'ing thy head. Which often, thus, correcting thy stout heart. Now humble, as the ripest mulberry, That will not hold the handling: Or, say to them, Thou art their soldier, and being bred in broils, Hast not the soft way, which, thou dost confess, Were fit for thee to use, as they to claim, In asking their good loves; but thou wilt frame Thyself, forsooth, hereafter theirs, so far As thou hast power, and person.

Men. This but done, Even as she speaks, why, all their hearts were yours: For they have pardons, being ask'd, as free As words to little purpose.

Vol. Go, and berul'd: although, I know, thou hadst rather Follow thine enemy in a hery gulf, Than flatter him in a bower. Here is Cominius.

Enter Cominius.

Cor. I have been the market-place: and, sir, tis fit You make strong party, or defend yourself By calmness, or by absence; all's in anger. Men. Only fair speech.

Cor. I think, 'twill serve, if he Can make photon frame his spirit.

Vol. He must, and will:—

Pr'ythee now, say, you will, and go about it. Cor. Must I go shew them my unbarl'd scone? Must I With my base tongue, give to my noble heart A lie, that it must bear? Well, I will do't; Yet were there but this single plot to lose, This world of Marcuses, they to dist should grind it. And throw it against the wind. To the market-place: You have put me now to such a part, which never I shall discharge to the life.

Cor. Come, come, we'll prompt you.

Vol. I pr'ythee now, sweet son; as thou hast said, My praises made thee first a soldier, so, To have my praise for this, perform a part That thou hast not done before.

Cor. Well, I must do't: Away, my disposition, and possess me Some harlot's spirit! My throat of war be turn'd, Which quired with my drum, into a pipe Small as an eunuch, or the virgin voice That babbles asleep! The smiles of knaves Tost in my cheeks; and schoolboys' tears take up The glasses of my sight! A beggar's tongue Make motion through my lips; and my arm'd knees, Who bend but in my striop, bend like his That hath receiv'd an alms!—I will not do't Let me sue to honour mine own truth, And, by my body's action, teach my mind A most inhereat baseness.

Cor. At thy choice then:

Vol. To beg of thee, is my more dishonour, Than thou of them. Come all to ruin; let Thy mother rather feel thy pride, than fear Thy dangerous stoutness; for I mock at death With as big heart as thou. Do as thou list. Thy valiantness was none, thou suck'dst it from me; But now thy pride thyself.

Cor. Pray, be content; Mother, I am going to the market-place; Chide me no more. I'll mountebank their loves, Cog their hearts from them, and come home belov'd Of all the trades in Rome. Look, I am going: I shall return consul;
ACT III.—SCENE III.

Or never trust to what my tongue can do
I' the way of flattery, further.

Ved.

Cor. Away, the tribunes do attend you: arm yourself:
To answer mildly; for they are prepar'd [self
With accusations, as I hear, more strong
Than are upon you yet.

Cor. The word is mildly:—Pray you, let us go:
Let them accuse me by invention, I
Will answer in mine honour.

Men. Ay, but mildly.
Cor. Well, mildly be it then; mildly. [Exeunt.

SCENE III.—The same. The Forum.

Enter Senucius and Brutus.

Brut. In this point charge him home, that he affects Tyrannical power: If he evade us these,
Enforce him with his envy to the people?
And that the spoil, got on the Aniates,
Was 'e'er distributed.—

Enter an Edile.

What, will he come? [Ed.

With old Menenius, and those senators
That always favour'd him.

Sic. Have you a catalogue
Of all the voices that we have procur'd,
Set down by the poll? [Ed.

I have; 'tis ready, here. [Ed.

Sic. Have you collected them by tribes? [Ed.

I have.

Sic. Assembly presently the people hither:
And when they hear me say, It shall be so
I' the right and strength of the commons, he it either
For death, for fine, or punishment, then let them,
If I say, fine, cry just: if death, cry death;
Insisting on the old prerogative
And power 'tis the truth o' the cause.

I shall inform them. [Ed.

Brut. And when such time they have begun to cry,
Let them not cease, but with a din continu'd
Enforce the present execution
Of what we chance to sentence. [Ed.

Very well.

Sic. Make them be strong, and ready for this hint,
When we shall hap to give't them.

Go about it.— [Exit Edile.

Put him to cholter straight: He hath been us'd
Ever to conquer, and to have his worth
Of contradiction: Being once chaf'd, he cannot Be rein'd again to temperance: then he speaks
What's in his heart: and that is there, which Looks with us to break his neck.

Enter Corduliens, Menenius, Cominius, Senators, and Patricians.

Sic. Well, here he comes.

Men. Calmly, I do beseech you.

Cor. Ay, as an ostler, that for the poorest piece
Will bear the knife by the volume.—The honour'd
Keep your man in safety, and the chair of justice [god's Supplied with worthy men! plant love amongst us! Throng
Our large temples with the shows of peace.
And not our streets with war! [Sen.

A noble wish.

Re-enter Edile, with Citizens.

Sic. Draw near, ye people.

Ed. List to your tribunes; audience: Peace, I say.

Cor. First, hear me speak.

Both Tri. Well, say.—Peace, ho,
Cor. Shall I be charg'd no further than this present?
Must all determine here?

Sic. I do demand,
If you submit to the people's voices,
Allow their officers, and are content
To suffer lawful censure for such faults
As shall be prov'd upon you?

Cor. Sic. I am content.

Men. To citizens, he says, he is content:
The warlike service he has done, consider;
Think on the wounds his body bears, which shew
Like graves i' the holy churchyard.

Cor. Scratches with briers, scars to move laughter only.

Men. Consider further,
That when he speaks not like a citizen,
You find him like a soldier: Do not take
His rougher accents for malicious sounds,
But, as I say, such as become a soldier,
Rather than envy you.

Cor. Sic. Well, well, no more.
Cor. What is the matter,
That being pass'd for coronal with full voice,
I so dishonest'd, that the very hour
You take it off again? [Sic.

Cor. Sic. Answer to us.

Cor. Say then; 'tis true, I ought so.
Sic. We charge you, that you have contriv'd to take
From Rome all season'd office, and to wind
Yourself into a power tyrannical;
For which you are a traitor to the people,
Cor. How! traitor! [Men.

Men. Nay; temperately; your promise.

Cor. Sic. The first's the lowest hell fold in the people! Call me their traitor!—Thou injurious tribute! Within thine eyes sat twenty thousand deaths,
In thy hands cutched as many millions, in Thy lying tongue both numbers, I would say,
Thou liest, unto thee with a voice as free As I do pray the gods.

Sic. Mark you this, people?
Cor. Sic. To the rock with him; to the rock with him!
Sic. Peace.

We need not put new matter to his charge:
What you have seen him do, and heard him speak,
Beating your officers, cursing yourselves,
Opposing laws with strokes, and here defying
Those whose great power must try him; even this,
So criminal, and in such capital kind,
Deserves the extremest death.

Cor. But since he hath Serv'd well for Rome,—

Cor. What, do you prate of service?

Men. I talk of that, that know it.

Cor. You?

Men. Is this
The promise that you made your mother?

Cor. Know, I pray you,—

Cor. I'll know no further: Let them pronounce the steep Tarpeian death,
Vagabond exile, slaying: Pest to finger
But with a grain a day, I would not buy
Their mercy at the price of one fair word;
Nor check my courage for what they can give,
To have't with saying, Good morrow.

Sic. For that he has
(As much as in him lies) from time to time
Envied against the people, seeking means
To pluck away their powers; as now at last
Given hostile strokes, and that not in the presence
Of dreadful justice, but on the ministers
That do distribute it: In the name of the people,
And in the power of us the tribunes, we,
Even from this instant, banish him our city;
In peril of precipitation
From off the rock Tarpeian, never more
To enter our Rome gates: 't he people's name,
I say, it shall be so.

Cit. It shall be so,
It shall be so; let him away: he's banish'd,
And so it shall be.

Com. Hear me, my masters, and my common
friends:
Sic. He's sentence'd; no more hearing.

Com. Let me speak:
I have been consul, and can shew from Rome,
Her enemies' marks upon me. I do love
My country's good with a respect more tender,
More holy and profound, than mine own life,
My dear wife's estimate, her womb's increase,
And treasure of my joys, then if I would Speak that—

Sic. We know your drift: Speak what?

Bra. There's no more to be said, but he is banish'd,
As enemy to the people, and his country:
It shall be so.

Cit. It shall be so, it shall be so.

Cor. You common cry of e'irs! whose breath I hate
As red as the rotten lenses, whose love I prize
As the dead carcasses of unburied men
That do corrupt my air, I banish you;
And here remain with your uncertainty!
Let every feeble rumour shake your hearts!
Your enemies, with nodding of their plumes,
Fan you into despair! Have the power still
To banish your defenders; till, at length,
Your ignorance, (which finds not, till it feels,)—
Making not reservation of yourselves,
(Still your own foes,) deliver you as most Abated captives, to some nation
That won you without blows! Despising,
For you, the city, thus I turn my back:
There is a world elsewhere.

[Exeunt Coriolanus, Cominius, Menenius, Senators, and Patricians.

Ed. The people's enemy is gone, is gone!

Cit. Our enemy's banish'd! he is gone! Hoo! hoo!

[The people shout, and throw up their caps.

Sic. Go, see him out at gates, and follow him,
As he hath follow'd you, with all despite;
Give him deserv'd vexation. Let a guard
Attend us through the city.

Cit. Come, come, let us see him out at gates; come—
The gods preserve our noble tribunes!—Come.

[Exeunt.

ACT IV.

SCENE I.—The same. Before a Gate of the City.

Enter Coriolanus, Volumnia, Virgilia, Menenia,
Cominius, and several young Patricians.

Cor. Come, leave your tears; a brief farewell—
the beast
With many heads butts me away.—Nay, mother,
Where is your ancient courage? you were us'd
To say, extremity was the trial of spirits;
That common chances common men could bear;
That, when the sea was calm, all boats alike
Shew'd mastership in floating: fortune's blows,
When most struck home, being gentle wounded, crave
A noble cunning: you were us'd to load me
With precepts, that would make invincible
The heart that cou'd them.

Vir. O heavens! O heavens!

Cor. Nay, I pr'ythee, woman,—

Vir. Now the red pestilence strike all trades in Rome,
And occupations perish!

Cor. What, what, what!
I shall be lov'd, when I am lack'd. Nay, mother,
Resume that spirit, when you were wont to say,
If you had been the wife of Hercules,
Six of his labours you'd have done, and sav'd
Your husband so much sweat.—Cominius,
Drop not; adieu—Farewell, my wife! my mother!
I'll do well yet.—Thou old and true Menenius,
Thy tears are saltier than a younger man's,
Apd venomous to thine eyes.—My sometime general
I have seen thee stern, and thou hast oft beheld
Heart-hard'ning spectacles; tell these sad women,
Tie fond to wall inevitable strokes,
And let them laugh at them.—My mother, you wot well
My hazards still have been your solace: and Believe not lightly, (though I go alone,
Like to a lonely dragon, that his fen
Makes fear'd, and talk'd of more than seen,) your son
Will, or exceed the common, or be caught
With cautious baits and practice.

Ed. My first son, whatever wilt thou go? Take good Cominius.
With thee a while: Determine on some course,
More than a wild exposure to each chance
That starts i' the way before thee.

Cor. The gods! O the gods!

Com. I'll follow thee a month, devise with thee
Where thou shalt rest, that thou may'st hear of us,
And we of thee: so if the time thrust forth
A cause for thy repeal, we shall not send O'er the vast world, to seek a single man;
And lose advantage, which doth ever cool
I' the absence of the needer.

Cor. Fare ye well:—

Thou hast years upon thee; and thou art too full
Of the wars' surfeits, to go rove with one
That's yet unbrush'd—bring me but out at gate.—
Come, my sweet wife, my dearest mother, and
My friends of noble touch, when I am forth,
Bid me farewell, and smile. I pray you, come,
While I remain above the ground, you shall Hear from me still; and never of me aught
But what is like me formerly.

Men. That's worthily
As any ear can hear.—Com'e, let's not weep—
If I could shake off but one seven years
From these old arms and legs, by the good gods,
I'd with thee every foot.

Cor. Give me thy hand:

Come.

[Exeunt.

SCENE II.—The same. A Street near the Gate.

Enter Sicinius, Brutus, and an Edile.

Sic. Bid them all home; he's gone, and we'll no further.—

The nobility are vex'd, who, we see, have sided
In his behalf.

Brut. Now we have shewn our power,
Let us seem humbler after it is done,
Than when it was a doing.

Sic. Bid them home:
Say, their great enemy is gone, and they
Stand in their ancient strength.

Brut. Dismiss them home. [Exit Edile.
Enter Volumnia, Virginia, and Menenius.

Here comes his mother.

Sir. Let's not meet her.

Brut. Why?

Sir. They say, she's mad.

Brut. They have ta'en note of us:
Keep on your way,
Vol. I, you're well met; the hoarded plague o' the gods
Requite your love!

Men. Peace, peace; be not so loud.
Vol. If that I could for weeping, you should hear,—
Nay, and you shall hear some.—Will you be gone!
[To Brutus.]
Vir. You shall stay too: [To Scin.] I would, I had the power
To say so to my husband.

Sir. Are you mankind?

Vol. Ay, fool; Is that a shame?—Note but this
Was not a man my father. Hadst thou fowship
To banish him that struck more blows for Rome,
Than thou hast spoken words?

Sir. O blessed heavens!
Vol. More noble blows, than ever thou wise words;
And for Rome's good.—I'll tell thee what, —Yet go!
Nay, but thou shalt stay too: —I would my son
Were in Arabia, and thy tribe before him,
His good sword in his hand.

Sir. What then?
Vir. He'd make an end of thy posterity.

Vol. Bastards, and all.—

Good man, the wounds that he does bear for Rome!
Men. Come, come, peace.

Sir. I would he had continu'd to his country,
As he began; and not unknit himself
The noble knot he made.

Brut. I would he had! 'Twas you incess'd the Cats, that can judge as fitly of his worth, [rabble;
As I can of those mysteries which heaven
Will not have earth to know.

Brut. Pray, let us go.

Vol. Now, pray, sir, get you gone:
You have done a brave deed. Eee you go, hear this;
As far as doth the Capitol exceed
The meanest house in Rome: so far, my son,
(This lady's husband here, this, do you see,)
Whom you have banish'd, does exceed you all.
Brut. Well, well, we'll leave you.

Sir. Why stay we to be baited
With one that wants her wits?

Vol. Take my prayers with you,—
I would the gods had nothing wise to do.

[Exit. Tribunes.]

But to confirm my causes! Could I meet them
But once a day, it would unclasp my heart
Of what lies heavy to't.

Men. You have told them home,
And, by my troth, you have cause. You'll sup with
Vol. Anger's my meat; I sup upon myself, [me;
And so shall starve with feeding.—Come, let's go:
Leave this faint paling, and lament as I do,
In anger, Jove-like.

Come, come, come.

Men. You, you, you!

SCENE III.
A Highway between Rome and Antium.

Enter a Roman and a Volece, meeting.

Rom. I know you well, sir, and you know me; your name, I think, is Adrian.

Vol. It is so, sir: truly, I have forgot you.

Rom. I am a Roman; and my services are, as you are, against them: Know you me yet?

Rom. The same, sir.

Vol. You had more beard, when I last saw you; but your favour is well appeared by your tongue.
What's the news in Rome? I have a note from the Volscian state, to find you out there; You have well saved me a day's journey.

Rom. There hath been in Rome strange insurrection: the people against the senators, patricians, and nobles.

Vol. Hath been! Is it ceded then? Our state thinks not so; they are in a most warlike preparation, and hope to come upon them in the heat of their division.

Rom. The main blaze of it is past, but a small thing would make it flame again. For the nobles receive so to heart the banishment of that worthy Coriolanus, that they are in a ripe aptness, to take all power over the people, and to pluck from them their tribunes for ever. This is the gloving, I can tell you, and is almost mature for the violent breaking out.

Vol. Coriolanus banished?

Rom. Banished, sir.

Vol. You will be welcome with this intelligence.

Rom. The day servis well for them now. I have heard it said, The finest time to corrupt a man's wife, is when she's fallen out with her husband. Your noble Tullus Aufidius will appear well in these wars, his great opposer, Coriolanus, being now in no request of his country.

Vol. He cannot choose. I am most fortunate, thus accidentally to encounter you: You have ended my business, and I will hereupon accompany you home.

Rom. I shall, between this and supper, tell you most strange things from Rome; all tending to the good of their adversaries. Have you an army ready, say you?

Vol. A most royal one: the centurions, and their charges, distinctly billeted, already in the entertainment, and to be on foot at an hour's warning.

Rom. I am joyful to hear of their readiness, and am the man, I think, that shall set them in present action. So, sir, heartily well met, and most glad of your company.

Vol. You take my part from me, sir; I have the most cause to be glad of yours.

Rom. Well, let us go together.

[Exeunt.]

Enter Coriolanus, in mean apparel, disguised and muffled.

Cor. A goodly city is this Antium: City,
'Tis I that made thy widows: many an heir
Of these fair edifices fore my wars.
Have I heard groan, and drop: then know me not,
Lest that thy wives with spits, and boys with stones,

Enter a Citizen.

In puny battle slay me.—Save you, sir.

Cit. And you.

Cor. Direct me, if it be your will,
Where great Aufidius lies: Is he in Antium?

Cit. He is, and feasts the nobles of the state.

At his house this night.

Cor. Which is his house, 'beecheech you? [Exit Citizen.]

Cit. This, here, before you.

Cor. Thank you, sir; farewell.
Whose hours, whose bed, whose meal, and exercise,
Are still together, who twin, as 'twere, in love
Unseparable, shall within this hour,
On a dissertation of a doot, break out
To bitterest enmity: So, fittest foes,
Whose passions and whose plots have broke their sleep
To take the one the other, by some chance,
Some trick not worth an egg, shall grow dear friends,
And interjoin their issues. So with us—
My birth-place hate I, and my love's upon
This enemy town,—I'll enter: if he slay me,
He does fair justice; if he give me way,
I'll do his country service.

[Exit.

SCENE V.—The same. A Hall in Aufidius's House.

Music within. Enter a Servant.

1 Serv. Wine, wine, wine! What service is here!
1 I think our fellows are asleep. [Exit.

Enter another Servant.

2 Serv. Where's Coton? my master calls for him.
Coton! [Exit.

Enter Coriolanus.

Cor. A goodly house: The feast smells well: but I
Appear not like a guest.

Re-enter the first Servant.

1 Serv. What would you have, friend? Whence are you? Here's no place for you: Pray, go to the door.
Cor. I have deserv'd no better entertainment,
In being Coriolanus.

Re-enter second Servant.

2 Serv. Whence are you, sir? Has the porter his eyes in his head, that he gives entrance to such companions?
Pray, get you out.
Cor. Away!

2 Serv. Away! Get you away.
Cor. Now thou art troublesome. [with anon.
And I shall.

Enter a third Servant. The first meets him.

3 Serv. What fellow's this?
1 Serv. A strange one as ever I looked on: I cannot get him out o' the house: Pr'ythee, call my master to him.
3 Serv. What have you to do here, fellow? Pray you, avoid the house.
Cor. Let me but stand; I will not hurt your heart.
3 Serv. What are you?
Cor. A gentleman.
3 Serv. A marvellous poor one.
Cor. True, so I am.
3 Serv. Pray you, poor gentleman, take up some other station; here's no place for you: pray you,
Cor. Follow your function, go! [avoid: come.
And batten on cold bits. [Pushes him away.

3 Serv. What, will you not? Pr'ythee, tell my master what a strange guest he has here.

2 Serv. Methinks I shall.
3 Serv. Where dwellest thou?
Cor. Under the canopy.

3 Serv. Under the canopy?
Cor. Ay.

3 Serv. Where's that?
Cor. 'Tis the city of Kittes and crows.
3 Serv. 'Tis the city of Kittes and crows?—What an ans it is!—Then thou dwellest with daws too!
Cor. No, I serve not thy master.

3 Serv. How, sir! Do you meddle with my master?
CORIOLANUS

CORIOLANUS My name is Caius Marius
Act IV, Sc. 9.
As holly and as nobly with thy love,
As ever in ambitious strength I did
Contend against thy valour. Know thou first,
I lov'd the maid I married; never man
Sigh'd truer breath; but that I see thee here,
Thou noble thing! more dances myapt heart,
Thou when I first my wedded mistress saw
Bestride my threshold. Why, thou Mars! I tell thee,
We have a power on foot; and I had purpose
Once more to bew thy target from thy brawn,
Or lose mine arm for't: Thou hast beat me out
Twelve several times, and I have nightly since
Dreamt of encounters twixt thyself and me;
We have been down together in my sleep,
Unbuckling helms, lashing each other's throat,
And writ'd half dead with nothing. Worthy Marcianus,
Had we no quarter else to Rome, but that Thou art thence banish'd, we would mustcr all
From twelve to seventy; and, pouring war
Into the bowls of ingrateful Rome,
Like a bold flood o'er beat. O, come, go in,
And take our friendly senators by the hands;
Who now are here, taking their leaves of me,
Who am prepar'd against your territories,
Though not for Rome itself.

O, ne'er, ne'er, ne'er, ne'er, ne'er, ne'er, ne'er,
You bless me, gods. Auz. Therefore, most absolute sir, if thou wilt have
The leading of thine own revenge take,
The one half of my commission; and set down,—
As best thou art experience'd, since thou know'st
Thy country's strength and weakness,—thine own
Whether to knock against the gates of Rome, [ways:
Or rudely visit them in parts remote,
To fright them, ere destroy. But come in:
Let me command thee first to those, that shall Say, yes, to thy desires. A thousand welcomes!
And more a friend than o'er an enemy;
Yet, Marcians that was much. Your hand! Most welcome! [Exeunt CORIOLANUS and AURIGENS.

1 Serv. [Advancing.] Here's a strange alteration!
2 Serv. By my hand, I had thought to have stricken him with a cudgel; and yet my hand gave me,
his clothes made a false report of him.

1 Serv. What an arm he has! He turned me about with his finger and his thumb, as one would set up a top.

2 Serv. Nay, I knew by his face that there was something in him: he had, sir, a kind of face, methought,—I cannot toll low terms.

1 Serv. He had so; looking as it were —'Would I were hanged, but I thought there was more in him than I could think.

2 Serv. So did I, I'll be sworn; he is simply the rarest man the world.

1 Serv. I think he is: but a greater soldier than he, ye won't one.

2 Serv. Who, my master?

1 Serv. Nay, it's no matter for that.

2 Serv. Worth six of him,

1 Serv. Nay, not so neither; but I take him to be the greater soldier.

2 Serv. 'Faith, look you, one cannot tell how to say that: for the defence of a town, our general is excellent.

1 Serv. Ay, and for an assault too.

Re-enter third Servant.

3 Serv. O, slaves, I can tell you news; news, you rascals.

3 Serv. I would not be a Roman, of all nations;
I had as lieve be a condemned man.

1. 2. Serv. Wherefore? wherefore?

3 Serv. Why, because that he was wont to thwack our general—Caenis Marcianus.

1 Serv. Why do you say, thwack our general?

3 Serv. I do not say thwack our general: but he was always good enough for him.

2 Serv. Come, we are fellows, and friends: he was ever too hard for him; I have heard him say so himself.

1 Serv. He was too hard for him directly, to say the truth on't: before Coriolanus he scotched him and notched him like a carbouado.

2 Serv. An he had been canniballicly given, he might have brodled and eaten him too.

1 Serv. But, more of thy news!

3 Serv. Why, he is so made on here within, as if he were son and heir to Mars: set at upper end o'the
table; no question asked him by any of the senators, but they stand bale before him: Our general himself makes a mistress of him; sanctifies himself with his hand, and turns up the white o' the eye to his discours.
But the bottom of the news is, our general is cut; some middle, and but one half of what he was yesterday; for the other has half, by the entreaty and grant of the whole table. He'll go, others says, and sover the porter of Rome gate by the ears:
He will show down all before him, and leave his passage pulled.

2 Serv. And he's as like to do', as any man I can imagine.

3 Serv. Don't he will do'; For look, you sir, he has as many friends as enemies: which friends, sir, (as it were,) durst not (look you, sir,) show themselves (as we term it,) his friends, whilst he's in indirectitude.

1 Serv. Directitude! what's that?

2 Serv. But when they shall see, sir, his crest up again, and the man in blood, they will out of their burrows, like cones after rain, and revel all with him.

1 Serv. But when goes this forward?

3 Serv. To-morrow; to-day; presently. You shall have the drum struck up this afternoon: 'tis, as it were, a parcel of their feast, and to be executed ere they wipe their lips.

2 Serv. When then we shall have a stirring world again. This peace is nothing, but to rust iron, increase tailors, and breed ballad-makers.

1 Serv. Let me have war, say I; it exceeds peace, as far as day does night; it's spirited, waking, audible, and full of vent. Peace is a very apoplexy, lethargy;
maid, death, sleep, insensible; a getter of more hazardous children, than wars a destroyer of men.

2 Serv. 'Tis so, and as wars, in some sort, may be said to be a ravisher; so it cannot be denied, but peace is a great maker of cuckolds.

1 Serv. Ay, and it makes men hate one another.

3 Serv. Reason; because they then less need one another. The wars, for my money, I hope to see Romans as chief as Volscians. They are rising, they are rising.

[Exeunt.

SCENE VI.—Rome. A public Place.

Enter Servilius and Burrus.

Sir. We hear not of him, neither need we fear him
His remedies are tame i' the present peace
And quietness o the people, which before
Were in wild hurry. Here do we see his friends
Blush, that the world goes well; who rather had,
Though they themselves did suffer by't, beheld
Dissentient numbers pestering the streets, than see
Our trademans singing in their shops, and going
About their functions friendly.

615
Enter Menenius.

Bru. We stood 'till in good time. Is this Menenius? Sic. 'Tis he, 'tis he: O he is grown most kind
Of Inte.—Hail, sir!

Men. Hail to you both!

Sic. Your Coriolanus, sir, is not much miss'd,
But with his friends; the common-wealth doth stand;
And so would do, were he more angry at it.

Men. All's well; and might have been much better, if
He could have temporiz'd.

Sic. Where is he, hear you? Men. Nay, I hear nothing; his mother and his wife
Hear nothing from him.

Enter Three or Four Citizens.

Cit. The gods preserve you both!

Sic. Good-c'ee, our neighbours.

Bru. Good c'en to you all, good c'en to you all.

1 Cit. Ourselves, our wives, and children, on our
Are bound to pray for you both. [Knees, Sic.

Bru. Farewell, kind neighbours: We wish'd Co-
Had lov'd you as we did.

[riolanus Cit. Now the gods keep you!

Both Tri. Farewell, farewell.

[Executive Citizens. Sic. This is a happier and more comely time,
Than when these fellows ran about the streets,
Crying, Confusion.

Bru. Caius Marcius was
A worthy officer i' the war; but insolent,
O'ercome with pride, ambitious past all thinking,
Self-loving,—

Sir. And affecting one sole throne,
Without assistance.

Men. I think not so.

Sic. We should by this, to all our lamentation,
If he had gone forth consil, found it so.

Bru. The gods have well prevented it, and Rome
Sits safe and still without him.

Enter Adile.

Ed. Worthy tribunes,
There is a slave, whom we have put in prison,
Reports,—the Volsces with two several powers
Are enter'd in the Roman territories;
And with the deepest malice of the war
Destroy what lives before them.

Men. 'Tis Aufidius,
Who, hearing of our Marcus's banishment,
Thrusts forth his horns again into the world;
Which were insheld, when Marcus stood for Rome,
And durst not once peep out.

Sic. Come, what talk you
Of Marcus?

Bru. Go see this rumourer whipp'd.—It cannot be,
The Volsces dare break with us.

Men. Cannot be!

We have record, that very well it can;
And three examples of the like have been Within my age. But reason with the fellow,
Before you punish him, where he heard this:
Lest you shall chance to whip your information,
And beat the messenger who bids beware
Of what is to be dreaded.

Sir. Tell not me.

I know, this cannot be.

Bru. Not possible.

Enter a Messenger.

Men. The nobles, in great earnestness, are going
All to the senate-house; some news is come,
That turns their countenances.

Sic. 'Tis this slave:—
Go whip him 'fore the people's eyes:—his raising
Nothing but his report!

Mrs. Yes, worthy sir,
The slave's report is seconded; and more,
More fearful, is deliver'd.

Sic. What more fearful?

Mrs. It is spoke freely out of many mouths,
(How probable, I do not know,) that Marcus,
Join'd with Aufidius, leads a power against Rome;
And vows revenge as spacious, as between
The young'st and oldest thing.

Sic. This is most likely!

Bru. Rais'd only, that the weaker sort may wish
Good Marcus home again.

Sic. This is unlikely: He and Aufidius can no more alone,
Than violetest contrariety.

Enter another Messenger.

Men. You are sent for to the senate;
A fearful army, led by Caius Marcius,
Associated with Aufidius, raging
Up our territories; and have already,
O'erthrown their way; consumes with fire, and took
What lay before them.

Enter Caius.

Com. O, you have made good work!

Men. What news? what news?

Com. You have hap to ravish your own daughters.
To tell the city leads upon your pates; and
To see your wives dishonour'd to your noses:

Men. What's the news? what's the news?

Com. Your temples burnt in their cement; and
Your fringes, whereon you stood, confined
Into an auger's bore.

Men. Pray now, your news?—

You have made fair work, I fear not.—Pray your news?
If Marcius should be join'd with Volscius,

Com. If he is their god; he leads them like a thing
Made by some other deity than nature,
That shapes man better: and they follow him,
Against us brats, with no less confidence,
Than boys pursuing summer butterflies,
Our elders' killing biers.

Men. You have made good work.
You, and your apen men; you that stood so much
Upon the voice of occupation, and
The breath of garlic-eaters!

Com. He will shake
Your Rome about your ears.

As Hercules
Did shake down mellow fruit: You have made fair
Bru. But is this true, sir? [swear

Com. Ay; and you'll lock pale
Before you find it other. All the regions
Do smingly revolt: and, who resist,
Are only mock'd for valiant ignorance,
And perish constant fools. Who is't can blame him?
Your enemies, and his, find something in him.

Men. We are all undone, unless
The noble man have mercy.

Com. Who shall ask it?

The tribunes cannot do for shame: the people
Deserve such pity of him, as the wolf
Does of the shepherds: for his best friends, if they Should say, Be good to Rome, they charg'd him even
As those should do that had deserv'd his hate,
And therein shou'd like enemies.
ACT V.—SCENE I.

When first I did embrace him: Yet his nature
In that's no changing; and I must excuse
What cannot be amended.

Liaus.

Yet I wish, sir,
(I mean, for your particular,) you had not
Join'd in commission with him; but either
Had borne the action of yourself, or else
To him had left it solely.

Ausp. I understand thee well; and be thou sure,
When he shall come to his account, he knows not What I can urge against him. Although it seems,
And so he thinks, and is no less apparent
To the vulgar eye, that he bears all things fairly,
And shews good husbandry for the Volscian state;
Fights dragon-like, and does achieve as soon
As draw his sword: yet he hath left undone
That, which shall break his neck, or hazard mine,
Whene'er we come to our account.

Liaus. Sir, I beseech you, think you he'll carry Rome?

Ausp. All places yield to him ere he sits down:
And the nobility of Rome are his:
The senators, and patricians, love him too:
The traitors are no soldiers; and his people
Will be as rash in the repeal, as hasty
To expel him thence. I think, he'll be to Rome,
As is the osprey to the fish, which takes it
By sovereignty of nature. First he was
A noble servant to them; but he could not Carry his honours even: whether 'twas prude,
Which would not boldly forgive the want
The happy man; whether defect of judgment,
To fail in the disposing of those chances
Which he was lord of; or whether nature,
Not to be other than one thing, not moving
From the casque to the cushion, but commanding peace
Even with the same austerity and gabardine
As he controll'd the war; but, one of these,
(As he hath spies of them all, not all,
For I dare so far free him,) made him fear'd,
So hated, and so banish'd: But he has a merit,
To choke it in the utterance. So our virtues
Lie in the interpretation of the time:
And power, unto itself most commendable,
Hath not a tomb so evident as a chair
To extoll what it hath done.
One fire drives out one fire; one nail, one nail;
Rights by rights founder, strengths by strengths do fail.
Come, let's away. When, Caesar, Rome is thine,
Thou art poorest of all; then shortly art thou mine.

[Exeunt.

ACT V.

SCENE I.—Rome. A public Place.

Enter MENENIUS, COMINUS, SICINIUS, BRUTUS,
and others.

Men. No, I'll not go: you hear, what be hath said,
Which was sometime his general; who lov'd him
In a most dear particular. He call'd me, father:
But what o' that? Go, you that banish'd him,
A mile before his tent fall down, and kneel
The way into his mercy: Nay, if he coy'd
To hear Cominius speak, I'll keep at home.

Com. He would not seem to know me.

Men. Do you hear!?

Com. Yet one time he did call me by my name:
I urg'd our old acquaintance, and the drops
That we have bled together. Coriolanus
He would not answer to; forbade all names;
He was a kind of nothing, titleless,
Till he had forg'd himself a name I the fire
Of burning Rome.

Men. Why so? you have made good work:
A pair of tribunes that have rack'd for Rome,
To make coals cheap: A noble memory!

Com. I minded him, how royal 'twas to pardon
When it was less expected: He replied,
It was a bare petition of a state
To whom they had punished.

Men. Very well;
Could he say less!

Com. I offer'd to awaken his regard
For his private friends: His answer to me was,
He could not stay to pick them in a pile
Of insolent musty chaff: He said, 'twas folly,
For one poor grain or two, to leave unburnt,
And still to lose the offence.

Men. For one poor grain
Or two? I am one of those; his mother, wife,
His child, and this brave fellow too, we are the grains:
You are the musty chaff: and you are suet
Above the moon: We must be burnt for you.

Sir. Nay, pray be patient: If you refuse your aid
In this so needful help, yet do not Unharm us with our distress. But, sure, if you
Would be your country's pleader, your good tongue
More than the instant army we can make,
Might stop our countryman.

Men. No; I'll not meddle.

Sir. I pray you, go to him.

Men. Only make trial what your love can do
For Rome, towards Marcus.

Men. Well, and say that Marcus
Return me, as Cominius is return'd
Unheard: what then?—
But as a disconsol'd friend, grief-shot:
With his unkindness? Say 'tis so so?

Sir. Yet your good will Must have that thanks from Rome, after the measure
As you intended well.

Men. I'll undertake it:
I think, he'll hear me. Yet to bite his lip,
And hum at good Cominius, much unhearts me.
He was not taken well: he had not din'd:
The veins unstild, our blood is cold; and then
We pout upon the morning, are unapt,
To bear a malice, if we have been staid
These pipes, and these conveyances of our blood
With wine and feeding, we have supper souls
Than in our priest-like fasts: therefore I'll watch him
Till he be diett'd to my request,
And then I'll set upon him.

Bru. You know the very road into his kindness,
And cannot lose your way.

Men. Good faith, I'll prove him,
Speed how it will. I shall ere long have knowledge
Of my success.

[Exit.]

Com. He'll never hear him.

Sir. Not!

Com. I tell you, he does sit in gold; his eye
Red as 'twould burn Rome; and his injury
The gazer to his pity. I kneel'd before him;
'Twas very faintly he said, Rise: dismiss'd me
Thus with his speechless band: What he would do,
He sent in writing after me; what he would not,
Bound with an oath, to yield to his conditions;
So, that all hope is vain,
Unless his noble mother, and his wife;
Who, as I hear, mean to solicit him
For mercy to his country. Therefore, let's hence.
And with our fair entreaties haste them on. [Exit.]

SCENE II.—An advanced Post of the Vulcanii Camp
Before Rome. The Guard at their stations.

Enter to them MENENIUS.

1 G. Stay: Whence are you?

2 G. Stand, and go back.
Men. You guard like men: 'tis well: But, by your
I am an officer of state, and come [leave,
To speak with Coriolanus.

1 G. From whence?

Men. From Rome.

1 G. You may not pass, you must return: our gene-
Will no more hear from thence.

Sir. You'll see your Rome embrac'd with fire, before
You'll speak with Coriolanus.

Men. Good my friends,
If you have heard your general talk of Rome,
And of his friends there, it is but to blanks.
My name hath touched your ears: it is Menenius.

1 G. Be it so; go back: the virtue of your name
Is not more passable.

Men. I tell thee, fellow.

Thy general is my lover: I have been
The book of his good acts, whence men have read
His fame unparalleled, haply, ampli'd;
For I have ever vouched my friends,
(Of whom he's chief, with all the size that vutility
With without lapsing suffer: nay, sometimes,
Like to a bowl upon a subtle ground,
I have tumbled past the throw: and in his praise
Have, almost, stamp'd the leasing: therefore, fellow,
I must have leave to pass.

1 G. 'Faith, sir, if you have told as many lies in his behall as you have uttered words in your own,
You shall not pass here: no, though it were as ven-
Iious to be, as to live chastely. Therefore, go back.

Men. Pr'ythee, fellow, remember my name is Me-lius, always factionary on the party of your general.

2 G. Howsoever you have been his liar, (as you say,
Have, I am one that, telling true under him,
Must say, you cannot pass. Therefore, go back.

Men. Has he dined, canst thou tell? for I would not speak with him till after dinner.

1 G. You are a Roman, are you?

Men. I am as thy general is.

1 G. Then you should hate Rome, as he does. Can you, when you have push'd out your gates the very defender of them, and in a violent popular ignorance, given your enemy your shield, think to fret his revenge? Sir the old, stoops or old women, the vir-ginal palms of your daughters, or with the palsied intercession of such a decay'd dotant as you seem to be?
Can you think to blow out the intended fire your city is ready to flame in, with such weak breath as this? No, you are deceived; therefore, back to Rome, and prepare for your execution; you are condemned, your general has sworn you out of reprove and pardon.

Men. If thy captain knew I were here, he would use me with estimation.

2 G. Come, my captain knows you not.

Men. I mean, thy general.

1 G. My general cares not for you. Back, I say;
go, lest I lost your half pint of blood;—back,— that's the utmost of your having:—back.

Men. Nay, but fellow, fellow,—

Enter CORIOLANUS and AURINUS.

Cor. What's the matter?

Men. Now, you companion, I'll say an errand for you;
you shall know now, that I am in estimation;
you shall perceive that a jack guardant cannot office
me from my son Coriolanus: guess, but by my entertainment with him, if thou stand'st not in the state
Enter, in mourning habits, VIRGILIA, VOLUNIA, leading young MARCIUS, VALERIA, and Attendants.

My wife comes foremost; then the honour’d maid
Wherein this trunk was fram’d, and in her hand
The grand-child to her blood. But, out, affection!
All bond and privilege of nature break!
Let it be virtuous, to be obstinate.

What is that curr’st worth? or those doves’ eyes,
Which can make gods forsworn?—I melt, and am not
Of stronger earth than others.—My mother bows;
As if Olympus to a molehill should
In supplication nod: and my young boy
Hath an aspect of intercession, which
Great nature eries, Deo nob. —Let the Voices
Pough Rome, and harrow Italy: I’ll never
Be such a groaning to obey instinct: but stood,
As if a man were author of himself,
And knew no other kin.

VIR. My lord and husband!
Cor. These eyes are not the same I wore in Rome.
VIR. The sorrow, that delivers us thus chang’d,
Makes you think so.

Cor. Like a dull actor now, I have forgot my part, and I am out,
Even to a full disgrace. Best of my flesh, I forgive my tyranny; but do not say,
For that, Forgive our Romans. —O, a kiss
Long as my exile, sweet as my revenge;
Now by the jealous queen of heaven, that kiss
I carried from thee, dear; and my true lip
Hath vird it e’er since.—You gods! I praise,
And the most noble mother of the world
Leave unslated: Siuk, my knee, & the earth; [Kneels.
Of thy deep duty more impressio shew
Than that of common sons.

VOL. O, stand up bless’d! Whilst,
With so no softer cushion than the flint,
I kneel before thee; and improperly
Show duty, as mistaken all the while
Between the child and parent. [Kneels.

Cor. What is this?

VOL. Your knees to me? to your corrected son?

Cor. The noble sister of Publius.

VOL. The moon of Rome; chaste as the icle.
That’s cur’d by the frost from purest snow,
And hangs on Dian’s temple: Dear Valeria!

VOL. This is a poor epitome of yours,
Which by the interpretation of full time
May shew like all yourself.

Cor. The god of soldiers,
With the consent of supreme Jove, inform
Thy thoughts with nobleness; that thou may’st prove
To shame unavoidable, and stick ’t the wars
Like a great sea mark, standing every flaw,
And saving those that eye thee!

VOL. Your knee, sirrah.

Cor. That’s my brave boy.

VOL. Even he, your wife, this lady, and myself,
Are suitors to you.

Cor. I beseech you, peace: Or, if you’d ask, remember this before:
The things, I have forsworn to grant, may never
Be held by your denials. Do not bid me
Dismiss my soldiers, or capitulate
Again with Rome’s mechanics: —Tell me not Wherein I seem unnatural: Desire not

SCENE III.—The Tent of Coriolanus.

Enter Coriolanus, Aufidius, and others.

Cor. We will before the walls of Rome to-morrow
Set down our host.—My partner in this action,
You must report to the Volscian lords, how plainly
I have borne this business.

AUF. Only their ends
You have respected; stopp’d your ears against
The general suit of Rome; never admitted
A private whisper, no, not with such friends
That thought them sure of you.

Cor. This last old man,
Whom with a crack’d heart I have sent to Rome,
Look’d me above the measure of a father;
Nay, godded me, indeed. Their latest refuge
Was to send him; for whose old love, I have (Though I show’d sporting to him,) once more offer’d
The first conditions, which they did refuse,
And cannot now accept, to grace him only,
That thought he could do more; a very little
I have yielded too: Fresh embassies, and suits,
Nor from the state, nor private friends, hereafter
Will I lend ear to.—Ha! what shout is this? [Shout within.

Shall I be tempted to infringe my vow
In the same time ‘tis made? I will not.—
CORIOLANUS.

To allay my rages and revenges, with
Your colder reasons.

Vol. 1. O, no more, no more! You have said, you will not grant us any thing; For we have nothing else to ask, but that Which you deny already: Yet we will ask; That, if you fail in our request, the blame May hang upon your hardness; therefore hear us.

Cor. Aufidius, and you Volces, mark; for we'll have bought from Rome in private.—Your request.

Vol. Should we be silent and not speak, our raincoat, And state of bodies would bewray what life We have led since thy exile. Think with thyself, How more unfortunate than all living women Are we come hither: since that thy sight, which should Make our eyes flow with joy, hearts dance with comfort, Constrains them weep, and share with fear and sorrow; Making the mother, wife, and child, to see The son, the husband, and the father, tearing His country’s bowels out. And to poor we, Thine eminence’s most capital: thou bastarre Our prayers to the gods, which is a comfort That all but we enjoy: For how can we, Alas! how can we for our country pray, Wheroeto we are bound; together with thy victory, Whose rack is it? Abeck! one must lose the country, our dear nurse; or else thy person, Our comfort in the country. We must find An evident calamity, though we had Our wish, which side should win: for either thou Must, as a foreign recreant, be led With manacles through our streets, or else Triumphantly tread on thy country’s ruin; And bear the palm, for having bravely shed Thy wife and children’s blood. For myself, son, I purpose not to wait on fortune, till These wars determine: if I cannot persuade thee Rather to shew a noble grace to both parts, Than seek the end of one, thou shalt no sooner March to assault thy country, than to tread (Trust to, thou shalt not,) on thy mother’s womb, That brought thee to this world.

Vir. Ay, and on mine.

That brought you forth this boy, to keep your name Living to time. Boy.

He shall not tread on me; I’ll run away till I am bigger, but then I’ll fight. These are not of a woman’s tenderness to be Requires nor child nor woman’s face to see. I have sat too long. [Rising.]

Vol. Nay, go not from us thus. If it were so, that our request did tend To save the Romans, thereby to destroy The Volces whom you serve, you might condemn us, As poisonous of your honour: No; our suit Is, that you reconcile them; while the Volces May say, This mercy we have shewed; the Romans, This we received; and each in either side Give the all-hail to thee, and cry Be bless’d For making up this peace! Thou know’st great son, The end of war’s uncertain; but this certain, That, if thou comper Rome, the benefit Which thou shalt thereby reap, by a name, Whose repetition will be dog’d with curses; Whose chronicle thus writ.—The man was noble, But with his last attempt he wip’d it out; Destroy’d his country; and his name remains To the ensuing age, abhor’d. Speak to me, sou: Thou hast affected the fine strains of honour, The shame of the gods, and the gods to tear with thunder the wide cheeks o’ the air, And yet to charge thy sulphur with a bolt That should but rive an oak. Why dost not speak?

Thinkst thou it honourable for a noble man Still to remember wrongs?—Daughter, speak you. He cares not for your weeping. Speak thou, boy: Perhaps, thy childliness will move him more Than can our reasons. There is no man in the world More bound to his mother; yet here he lets me prate, Like one i the stocks. Thou hast never in thy life Show’d thy dear mother any courtesy; When she, (poor he!) fond of no second brood, Has chass’d thee to the war, and safely borne, Lament in honour. Say, my request’s unjust, And spars me back: But, if it be not so, Thou art not honest; and the gods will plague thee, That thou restrain’st from me the duty, which To a mother’s part belongs.—He turns away:

Down, ladies; let us shame him with our knees. To his surname Coriolius longs more pride, Than pity to our prayers. Down; An end: This is the last; So we will home to Rome, And die among our neighbours.—Nay, behold us; This boy, that cannot tell what he would have, But kneels, and holds up hands, for fellowship, Does reason our petition with more strength Than thou hast to deny.—Come, let us go: This fellow had a Volcean to his mother; His wife is in a Coriolius, and his child Like him by chance:—Yet give us our despatch: I am hush’d until our city be afeare, And then I’ll speak a little.

Cor. O mother, mother! [Holding VOLUMINA by the hands, silent,] What have you done? Behold, the heavens do ape, The gods look down, and our enmity’s done. They laugh at. O my mother, mother! O! You have won a happy victory to Rome: But, for your son,—believe it, O, believe it, Most dangerously you have with him prevail’d, If not most mortal to him. But, let it come;— Aufidius, though I cannot make true wars, I’ll frame convenioace peace. Now, good Aufidius, Were you in my stead, say, would you have heard A mother less? or granted less, Aufidius? Auf. I was mov’d withal.

Cor. I dare be sure, you were: And, sir, it is no little thing, to make Mine eyes to sweat compassion. But, good sir, What peace you’ll make, advise me: for my part, The gods, I know, will stand with you, and pray you, Stand to me in this cause.—O mother! wife! Auf. I am glad, thou hast set thy mercy and thy hope At difference in thee: out of that I’ll work [pour Myself a former fortune. [Aside.

The Ladies make signs to Coriolius.

Cor. Ay, by and by; [To VOLUMINA, VENDILLA, &c. But we will drink together; and you shall bear A better witness back than words, which we, On like conditions, will have counter-seal’d. Come, enter with us. Ladies, you deserve To have a temple built you: all the swords In Italy, and her confederate arms, Could not have made this peace. [Exeunt.

SCENE IV.—Rome. A public Place.

Enter MENENIUS and SCINCIUS.

Men. See you yond coign o’ the Capitol; yond’ corner-stone?

Sic. Why, what of that?

Men. If it be possible for you to dispute it with your master, there is some hope the ladies of Rome, especially his mother, may prevail with him. But I say, there is no hope in’t; our threats are sentenced, and stay upon execution.
ACT V.—SCENE V.

Sir, Is't possible, that so short a time can alter the condition of a man?

Men. There is difference between a grub, and a butterfly; yet your butterfly was a grub. This Marcius is grown from man to dragon: he has wings; he's more than a creeping thing.

Sir. He loved his mother dearly.

Men. So did he me: and he no more remembers his mother now, than an eight-year old horse. The tartness of his factorours tip grapes. When he walks, he moves like an engine, and the ground shrinks before his treading. He is able to pierce a corset with his eye; talks like a knoll, and his arm is a battery. He sits in his state, as a thing made for Alexander. What he bids be done, is finished with his bidding. He wants nothing of a god, but eternity, and a heaven to throne it.

Sir. Yes, mercy, if you report him truly.

Men. I paint him in the character. Mark what mercy his mother shall bring from him: There is no more mercy in him, than there is milk in a male tiger; that shall our poor city find: and all this's long of you.

Sir. The gods be good unto us!

Men. No, in such a case the gods will not be good unto us. When we banished him, we respected not them: and, he returning, to break our necks, they respect not us.

Enter a Messenger.

Mess. Sir, if you save your life, fly to your house; The plebeians have got your fellow-tribune; And hale him up and all taking, if The Roman ladies bring not comfort home, They'll give him death by inches.

Enter another Messenger.

Sir. What's the news? [prevail'd,

Mess. Good news, good news.—The ladies have The Voices are disdol'd, and Marcius gone: A merrier day did never yet greet Rome, No, not the expulsion of the Tarquins.

Sir. Friend, Art thou certain this is true? Is it most certain?

Mess. As certain, as I know the sun is fire: Where have you lurk'd, that you make doubt of it? Ne'er through an arch so hurried the blown tide, As the recorder thrusteth the great cipher you; [Trumpets and hunters sounded, and drums booted, all together. Shouting also within. The trumpets, sackbutts, psalteries, and ﬁfes, Tabors, and cymbals, and the shouting Romains, Make the sun dance. Hark you! [Shouting again.

Men. This is good news: I will go meet the ladies. This Voluima Is worth of consuls, senators, patriaans, A city full; of tribunes, such as you, A sea and land full: You have pray'd well to-day; This morning, for ten thousand of your throats I'd not have given a doit. Hark, how they joy! [Shouting and music.

Sir. First, the gods bless you for their tidings: next, Accept my thankfulness.

Mess. Sir, we have all

Great cause to give great thanks.

Sir. They are near the city?

Mess. Almost at point to enter.

Sir. We will meet them, And help the joy. [Going.

Enter the Ladies, accompanied by Senators, Patriaans, and People. They pass over the Stage.

1 Sen. Behold our patroness, the life of Rome:

Call all your tribes together, praise the gods. And make triumphant ares; strew flowers before them; Unshout the noise that banish'd Marcius; Repeal him with the welcome of his mother; Cry,—Welcome, ladies, welcome!—

All. Welcome, ladies! Welcome! [A flourish with drums and trumpets.

[Exeunt.

SCENE V.—Anauim. A public Place.

Enter Tullius Auntilus, with Attendants.

Auf. Go tell the lords of the city, I am here: Deliver them this paper: having read it, Bid them repair to the market-place; where I, Even in their ears and in the common's ears, Will vouch the truth of it. Him I accuse, The city ports by this hath enter'd, and Intends to appear before the people, hoping To purge himself with words: Dispatch.

[Exeunt Attendants.

Enter Three or Four Conspirators of Ausidius's faction.

Most welcome!

1 Con. How is it with our general?

Auf. Even so, As with a man by his own alms empress'd, And with his charity slain.

2 Con. Most noble sir, If you do hold the same intent wherein You wish'd us parties, we'll deliver you Of your great danger.

Auf. Sir, I cannot tell; We must proceed, as we do find the people.

3 Con. The people will remain uncertain, whilst 'Twixt you there's difference; but the fall of either Makes the survivor heir of all.

Auf. I know it; And my pretext to strike at him admits A good construction. I rais'd him, and I pawn'd Mine honour for his truth: Who being so highten'd, He water'd his new plants with dews of flattery, Seducing so my friends: and, to this end, He bow'd his nature, never known before But to be rough, unwavable, and free.

3 Con. Sir, his stoutness, When he did stand for consul, which he lost By lack of stooping—

Auf. That I would have spoke of: Being banish'd for't, he came unto my hearth; Presented to my knife his throat: I took him; Made him joint servant with me; gave him way In all his own desires; nay, let him choose Out of his ﬂies, his projects to accomplish, My best and freshest men; serv'd his designs In mine own person; help to reap the fame, Which he did end all his; and took some pride To do myself this wrong: till, at the last, I seem'd his follower, not partner; and He wag'd me with his countenance, as if I had been mercenary.

1 Con. So he did, my lord: The army marvell'd at it. And, in the last, When he had carried Rome; and that we look'd For no less spoil, than glory.—

Auf. There was it;— For which my sinews shall be stretch'd upon him. At a few drops of women's rheum, which are As cheap as lies, he sold the blood and labour Of our great action; heark'ne thereon and die, And I'll renew me in his fall. But, hark! [Drums and trumpets sound, with great shouts of the people.
Coriolanus.

1 Coriolanus. Your native town you entered like a post, and had no welcomes home, but he returns, splitting the air with noise.

2 Coriolanus. And patient feels.

Whose children he hath slain, their base threats treat With giving him glory.

S Coriolanus. Therefore, at your vantage. Ere he expressed himself, or move the people With what he would say, let him feel your sword, Which we will second. When he was along, After your way his tale pronounced shall bury His reasons with his body.

Coriolanus. Say no more: Here come the lords.

Enter the Lords of the state.

Lords. You are most welcome home.

Coriolanus. I have not deserved it; But, worthy lords, have you with heed perused What I have written to you?

Lords. We have.

Coriolanus. And grieve to hear it.

What faults he made before the last, I think, Might have found easy ones: but there to end, Where he was to begin, and get out, The benefit of our homes, answering us With our own charges, making a treatise, Where there was a yielding: This admits no offence.

Coriolanus. He approaches, you shall hear him.

Enter Coriolanus, with drums and colours; a crowd of Citizens with him.

Coriolanus. Hail, lords! I am return'd? your soldier; No more infected with my country's love, Than when I parted hence, but still subsisting Under your great command. You are to know, That prospect I have attempted, and With bloody passage, led your wars, even to The gates of Rome. Our spoils we have brought home, Do more than counterpoise, a full third part, The charges of the action. We have made peace, With no less honour to the Antiques, Than shame to the Romans: and we here deliver, Subscribed by the consuls and patricians, Together with the seal of the senate, what We have compounded on.

Coriolanus. Read it not, noble lords; But tell the traitor, in the highest degree He hath abused your powers.

Coriolanus. Traitor!—How now?

Coriolanus. Ay, traitor, Marcus.

Coriolanus. Ay, Marcus. Caius Marcus! Post thou then think I'll grace thee with that robbery, thy stiff name Coriolanus in Corioli?

You lords and heads of the state, peradventure He has betray'd your business, and given up, For certain drops of salt, your city Rome (I say, your city,) to his wife and mother: Breaking his oath and resolution. Like A twist of rotten silk; never admiring The benefit of our homes, but at his nurse's tears He whin'd and roar'd away his victory; That pages blush'd at him, and men of heart Look'd wondering each at other.

Coriolanus. Hear'st thou, Mars?

Coriolanus. Name not the god, thou boy of tears—

Coriolanus. Ha!
JULIUS CAESAR.

ACT I.

SCENE I.—Rome. A Street.

Enter Flavius, Marullus, and a rabble of Citizens.

Flavius. Hence; home, ye idle creatures, get ye home! Is this a holiday? What! know you not, ye scum of an ordinary creature, what a man your master is? What a man himself is? What a man his father was? What a man his grandfather was? What a man his great grandfather was? Be not idle, feckless fellows! For heaven's sake, do your business! Marullus. Where is thy leather apron, and thy rule? What dost thou with thy best apparel on?—

You, sir; what trade are you?—

Flavius. Truly, sir, in respect of a fine workman, I am at hand, as you would say, a cobbler.

Mar. But who be your trade amongst? Answer me directly. Flavius. A trade, sir, that, I hope, I may use with a safe conscience; which is, indeed, sir, a member of bad seeds.

Mar. What trade, thou knave, thou naughty knave, what trade?

Flavius. Nay, I beseech you, sir, be not out with me yet; if you be not, sir, I can mend you. Mar. What means this thou by that? Mend me, thou savage fellow?

Flavius. Why, sir, cobble you. Flavius. Thou art a cobbler, art thou?

PERSONS REPRESENTED.

JULIUS CAESAR.

Octavius Caesar.

Marcus Antonius.

Flavia Popiliana, Popiliana Leila; senators.

Marcus Brutus, Cassius.

Cassius, Tribunus.

Dictator Brutus, Ligarius.

Maelinia Cibber, Cinna.

Flavius and Marullus, tribunes.

Antisthenes, a sophist of Chios.

A Sabinian, Cinna, a poet. Another Poet.

Lictor, Tribunus, Messala, young Cato, and VolFastus.

Varro, Cicero, Claudius, Brutus, Lucius, Barbanius; senators to Brutus.

Pindarius, servant to Cassius.

Calphurnia, wife to Cassius.

Porcia, wife to Brutus.

Senators, Citizens, Guards, Attendants, &c.

SCENE,—during a great part of the Play, at Rome; afterwards at Sardis, and near Philippi.
SCENE II.—The same. A public Place.

Enter, in procession, with music, CAESAR: ANTONY, for the towers: CALPURNIA, PORTIA, Decius, Cicero, Brutus, Cassius, and Caesar, a great crowd following: among them a Soothsayer.

CAES. Calpurnia.

CAES. Calpurnia.

CAES. Here, my lord.

CAES. I stood you directly in Antonius' way.

When he doth run his course.—Antonius.

ANT. Caesar, my lord.

ANT. Forget not, in your speed, Antonius,

To touch Calpurnia: for our elders say,

The barren, touched in this holy chase,

Shake off their strict curv.'

ANT. I shall remember:

When Caesar says, Do thus, it is perform'd.

CAES. Set me, and leave no ceremony out. [Music.

Sooth. Caesar.

CAES. Ha! Who calls?

CAES. Bid every noise be still:—Peace yet again.

CAES. Who is it in the press, that calls on me?

I hear a tongue, shriller than all the music.

CAES. Caesar: Speak: Caesar is turn'd to hear.

Sooth. Beware the sides of March.

CAES. What man is that?

BRU. A soothsayer, bids you beware the sides of March.

CAES. Set him before me, let me see his face.

CAES. Fellow, come from the throne: Look upon Caesar.

CAES. What say'st thou to me now? Speak once again.

Sooth. Beware the sides of March.

CAES. He is a dreamer: let us leave him:—pass.

[SECRET. Exeunt all but Brutus, and CAES.

CAES. Will you go see the order of the course?

BRU. Not I.

CAES. I pray you, do.

CAES. I am not gamesome: I do lack some part

Of that quick spirit: that is in Antony.

Let me not hinder, Cassius, your desires;

I'll leave you.

CAES. Brutus, I do observe you now of late:

I have not from your eyes that gentleness,

And show of love, as I was wont to have:

You bear too stubborn and too strange a hand

Over your friend that loves you.

BRU. Cassius,

Be not desir'd: If I have well'd my look,

I turn the trouble of my countenance

Merely upon myself. Vexed I am,

Of lane, with passions of some difference,

Conceptions only proper to myself,

Which give some self, perhaps, to my behaviours:

But let not therefore my good friends be grieved; (Among which number, Cassius, be you one:) Not construe any further my neglect,

Than that poor Brutus, with himself at war,

Forgets the shows of love to other men.

[i. ionought;

CAES. Then, Brutus, I have much mistook your pass,

By means whereof, this breast of mine hath buried

Thoughts of great value, worthy considerations.

Tell me, good Brutus, can you see your face?

BRU. No, Cassius: for the eye sees not itself,

But by reflection, by some other things.

CAES. Tis just:

And it is very much lamented, Brutus,

That you have no such mirrors, as will turn

Your hidden worthiness into your eye.

That you might see your shadow, I have heard,

Where many of the best respect in Rome,

Except immortal Caesar, speaking of Brutus.

And groaning underneath this age's yoke,

Have wish'd that noble Brutus had his eyes.

Shri'n unto what doxers would you lead me, Cassius,

That you would have me seek into myself

For that which is not in me!

CAES. Therefore, good Brutus, be prepar'd to hear:

And, since you know you cannot see yourself

As well as by reflection, I, your glass,

Will moderately discover to yourself

That of yourself which you yet know not of.

And be not jealous of me, gentle Brutus,

Were I a common laughter, or did use

To stale with ordinary ouches my love

To every new processor; if you know

That I do favor on men, and hush them hard,

And after scandal them: or if you know

That I profess myself in banqueting

To all the rout, then hold me dangerous.

CAES. What means this shouting? I do fear, the Choose Cassius for their king.

CAES. Ay, do you fear it?

BRU. I must think you would not have it so.

BRU. Would not, Cassius: yet I love him well—

But wherefore do you hold me here so long?

What is it that you would impart to me?

If it be aught toward the general good,

Set honour in one eye, and death in the other,

And I will look on both indifferently:

For, let the gods so speed me, as I love

My country more than honour. More than I love death.

CAES. I know that virtue to be in you, Brutus,

As well as I do know your outward favour.

Well, honour is the subject of my story—

I cannot tell, what you and other men

Think of this life: but, for my single self,

I had as lief be not, as live to be

In name of such a thing as I myself.

I was born free as Caesar: so were you:

We both have fed as well; and we can both

Endure the winter's cold, as well as be.

For once, upon a raw and gusty day,

The troubled Tyber chafing with her shores,

Caesar said to me, Brutus is chow, Cassius, now

Leap in with me into this angry flood.

And thus to gender our fate:—Upon the word,

Accouter'd as I was, I plunged in.

And bade him follow: so, indeed, he did.

The torrent roar'd: and we did buffet it

With lusty sinews, throwing it aside

And stemming it with hearts of controversy.

But ere we could arrive the point propos'd,

Cassius cry'd, Help me, Cassius, or I sink.

I, as I found, our great ancestor,

Did from the flames of Troy upon his shoulder

The old Archilles bear, so, from the waves of Tyber

Did I the tid'd Caesar: And this man

Is now become a god: and Cassius is

A wretched creature, and must bend his body,

If Caesar carelessly but nod on him.

He had a fever when he was in Spain.

And, when the fit was on him, I did mark

How he did shake: 'tis true, this god did shake.

His coward lips did from their colour fly

And that same eye, whose bend doth awe the world,

Did lose his lustre: I did hear him groan:

Ay, and that tongue of his, that bade the Romans

Mark him, and write his speeches in their books,

And 'tis cried: Give me some drink, Titinius,

As a sick god. Ye gods, it doth amaze me,

A man of such a feeble temper should
ACT I.—SCENE II.

So get the start of the majestical world,
And bear the limb alone. [Shout. Flourish.

Bru. Another general shout!

I do believe, that these applauses are
For some new honours that are heap'd on Caesar.

Cas. Why, man, lie doth be-tręd the narrow world,
Like a Colossus; and we petty men
Walk under his huge legs, and peep about
To find ourselves dishonourable graves.

Men at some time are masters of their fates:
The fault, dear Brutus, is not in our stars,
But in ourselves, that we are underlings.

Brutus, and Caesar: What should be in us that Caesar?
Why should that name be sounded more than yours?

Write them together, yours is as fair a name;
Sound them, it doth become the mouth as well;
Weigh them, it is as heavy; conjure with them,
Brutus will start a spirit as soon as Caesar. [Shout.

Now in the names of all the gods at once,
Upon what meat doth this our Caesar feed,
That he is grown so great? Age, thou art shadm:
Rome, thou hast lost the breed of noble bloods!
When was there a time when the great flood
But it was fam'd with more than with one man;
When could they say, till now, that talk'd of Rome,
That her wide walks encompass'd but one man?
Now is it Rome indeed, and room enough,
When there is in it but one only man.
O! you and I have heard our fathers say,
That one Brutus, a Brute, could have brook'd
The eternal devil to keep his state in Rome,
As easily as a king.

Bru. That you do love me, I am nothing jealous;
What you would work to, I have some aim;
How I have thought of this, and of these times,
I shall recount hereafter; for this present,
I would not, so with love I might entreat you,
Be any further mov'd. What you have said,
I will consider; what you have to say,
I will with patience hear: and find a time
Both meet to hear, and answer, such high things.
Till then. my noble friend, chew upon this;
Brutus had rather be a calver.
When Calphumia's eyes are pale, and Cicer,
Under these hard conditions as this time
Is like to lay upon us.

Cas. I am glad, that my weak words
Have struck but thus much show of fire from Brutus.

Recentor Caesar, and his Train.

Bru. The games are done, and Caesar is returning,
Cas. As they pass by, pluck Casca by the sleeve;
And he will, after his sour fashion, tell you
What hath proceeded, worthy note, to-day.

Bru. I will do so. But, look you, Cassius,
The angry spot doth glow on Caesar's brow,
And all the rest look like a chidden train:
Calphumia's cheek is pale; and Cicer
Looks with such ferret and such fiery eyes,
As we have seen him in the Capitol,
Being cross'd in conference by some senators.

Cas. Cassa will tell us what the matter is.

Cass. Antonius.

Ant. Caesar.

Cas. Let me have men about me that are fat;
Sleek-headed meu, and such as sleep o' nights:
Yond' Cassius has a lean and hungry look;
He thinks too much: such men are dangerous.

Ant. Fear him not, Caesar, he's not dangerous;
He is a noble Roman, and well given.

Cas. Would he be fatter. — But I fear him not:
Yet if my name were liable to fear,
If he had done, or said, any thing amiss, he desired their worship to think it was his infirmity. Three or four weepers, where I stood, cried, Alas, good soul!—and forgave him with all their hearts: but there's no heed to be taken of them; if Caesar had stabb'd their mothers, they would have done no less.

\textit{Bru. And after that, he came, thus sad, away!}
\textit{Casca. Ay.}
\textit{Cas. Did Cicero say anything?}

\textit{Casca. Ay, he spoke Greek.}
\textit{Cas. To what effect?}

\textit{Casca. Nay, an I tell you that, I'll ne'er look you in the face again; that understood him, smiled at one another, and shook their heads: but, for mine own part, it was Greek to me. I could tell you more news too: Marullus and Flavius, for pulling scarfs off Caesar's images, are put to silence.
Fare you well. There was more foolery yet, if I could remember it.}

\textit{Cas. Will you sup with me to-night, Casca?}
\textit{Casca. No, I am promised forth.}

\textit{Cas. Will you dine with me to-morrow?}
\textit{Casca. Ay, if I be alive, and your mind hold, your dinner worth the eating.}

\textit{Cas. Good; I will expect you.}
\textit{Casca. Do so: Farewell, both. [Exit Casca.]}
\textit{Bru. What a blunt fellow is this grown to be!}
\textit{He was quick mettle, when he went to school.}
\textit{Cas. So is he now, in execution.}
\textit{Of any hold or noble enterprise,}
\textit{However he puts on this tardy form.}
\textit{This rudeness is a sauce to his good wit,}
\textit{Which gives men stomach to digest his words}
\textit{With better appetite.}

\textit{Bru. And so it is: For this time I will leave you:
To morrow, if you please to speak with me,} \textit{i will come home to you; or, if you will,} \textit{Come come to me, and I will wait for you.}
\textit{Cas. I will do so: till then, think of the world.
[Exit Brutus.}

Well Brutus, thou art noble; yet, I see,
Thy honorable metal may be wrought
From that it is depol'd: Therefore, 'tis meet
The noble minds keep ever with their likes:
\textit{For who so firm, that cannot be seduce'd?}
\textit{Caesar doth bear me hard: But he loves Brutus:}
If I were Brutus now, and he were Cassius,
He should not humour me. I will this night,
In several hands, in his windows throw,
\textit{As if they came from several citizens,}
\textit{Writings, all tending to the great opinion}
That Rome holds of his name; whereby certainly Caesar's ambition shall be glace'd at:
And, after this, let Caesar seat him sure;
For we will shake him, or worse days endure. [Exit.}

SCENE III.—The same. A Street.

\textit{Thunder and lightning. Enter, from opposite sides:}
\textit{Casca, with his sword drawn, and Cicero.}

\textit{Cic. Good even, Casca: Brought you Caesar home?}
\textit{Why are you breathless? and why scare you so?}
\textit{Casca. Are not you mov'd, when all the sway of Shakes, like a thing uniform? O Cicero, earth}
\textit{I have seen tempests, when the scolding winds
Have ri'd the knotty oaks; and I have seen
The ambitious ocean swell, and rage, and foam,
To be exalted with the threatening clouds:
But never till to-night, never till now.
Did I go through a tempest dropping fire.
Neither there is a civil strife in heaven;
Or else the world, too saucy with the gods,
Incense them to send destruction.}

\textit{Cir. Why, saw you any thing more wonderful?}
\textit{Casca. A common slave (you know him well by sight,)
Held up his left hand, which did flame, and burn
Like twenty torches join'd; and yet his hand,
Not sensible of fire, remain'd unscorch'd.}
\textit{Besides, (I have not since put up my sword,)
Against the Capitol I met a lion,}
\textit{Who glair'd upon me, and went surly by,
Without annoying me: and there were drawn
Upon a heap a hundred gally women,
Transform'd with their fear; who swore, they saw
Men, all in fire, walk up and down the streets.
Even at noon-day, upon the market-place,
Hooting, and shrieking. When these prodigies
Do so conjointly meet, let not men say,
\textit{These are their reasons.—They are natural;}
\textit{For, I believe, they are portentous things}
Unto the climate that they point upon.
\textit{Cir. Indeed, it is a strange-disposed time:}
\textit{But it may not overstay, things after their fashion,}
\textit{Clean from the purpose of the things themselves.}
\textit{Comes Caesar to the Capitol to-morrow?}
\textit{Casca. He doth; for he did Antonius}
\textit{Send word to you, he would be there to-morrow.}
\textit{Cir. Good night then, Casca: this disturbed sky
Is not to walk in.}

\textit{Casca. Farewell, Cicero. [Exit Cicero.}
\textit{Enter Cassius.}

\textit{Cas. Who's there?}
\textit{Casca. A Roman.}

\textit{Cas. Cassca, by your voice.}
\textit{Casca. Your ear is good. Cassius, what night is this?}
\textit{Casca. A very pleasing night to honest men.}
\textit{Cas. Who ever knew the heavens menace so?}
\textit{Casca. Those that have known the earth so full of faults.
For my part, I have walk'd about the streets,
Submitting me unto the perilous night;}
\textit{And, thus unbru'd, Casca, as you see,
Have bar'd my bosom to the thunder-stone:}
\textit{And, when the cross-blue lightning seem'd to open
The very best of heaven, I did present myself
Even in the aim and very flash of it.}
\textit{Casca. But wherefore did you so much tempt the
It is the part of men to fear and tremble, [heavens]
When the most mighty gods, by tokens, send Such dreadful heralds to astonish us.}
\textit{Casca. You are dull, Cassius; and those sparks of life
That should be in a Roman, you do not put;
Or else you use not: You look pale, and gaze,
And put on fear, and cast yourself in wonder,
To see the strange impatience of the heavens:
But if you would consider the true cause,
Why all these fires, why all these gliding ghosts,
Why birds and beasts, from quality and kind;
Why old men, fools, and children calculate;
And see these things elin'd, from their ordinance,
Their natures, and pre-formed faculties,
To monstrous quality; why, you shall find,
That heaven hath infused them with these spirits,
To make them instruments of fear, and warning,
Unto some monstrous state. Now could I, Cassia,
Name to thee a man most like this dreadful night;
That thunder, lighten's, opens graves, and roasts
As doth the lion in the Capitol:
A man no mightier than thyself, or me,
In personal action; yet prodigious grown,
And fearful, as these strange eruptions are.
\textit{Casca. This Caesar that you mean: Is it not, Cassius?}
\textit{Cas. Let it be who it is: for Romans now
Have thewes and limbs like to their ancestors;
ACT II.—SCENE I.

But, woe the while! our fathers' minds are dead, And we are governed with our mothers' spirits; Our yoke and suffrance shew us womanish.

Cas. Indeed, they say, the senators to-morrow Mean to establish Caesar as a king: And he shall wear his crown by sea and land, In every place, save here in Italy.

Cas. I know where I will wear this dagger then; Cassius from bondage will deliver Cassius: Therein, ye gods, you make the weak most strong; Therein, ye gods, you tyrants do defeat: Nor stony tower, nor walls of beaten brass, Nor airless dungeon, nor strong links of iron, Can be retentive to the strength of spirit: But life, being weary of these worldly bars, Never locks power to dismiss itself.

If I know this, know all the world besides, That part of tyranny, that I do bear, I can shake off at pleasure.

Cass. So can I:
So every bondman in his own hand bears The power to cancel his captivity.

Cas. And why should Caesar be a tyrant then? Poor man! I know, he would not be a wolf, But that he sees, the Romans are but sheep; He were no lion, were not Romans hind. Therein, with haste will my heart make fire. Begin it with weak straws: What trash is Rome, What rubbish, and what offal, when it serves For the base matter to illuminate So vile a thing as Caesar? But, O grief! Where hast thou led me? I, perhaps, speak this Before a willing bondman: then I know My power must be made: But I am arm'd, And dangers are to me indifferent.

Cass. You speak to Cassia; and to such a man, That is no fleering tell-tale. Hold my hand: Be factions for redress of all these griefs; And I will set this foot of mine as far, As who goes farthest.

Cas. There's a bargain made, Now know you, Cassia, I have mov'd already Some certain of the noblest-minded Romans, To undergo with me an enterprise Of honourable-dangerous consequence; And I do know by this, they stay for me In Pompey's porch: For now, this fearful night, These furnish'd words walk in the streets; And the complexion of the elements Is favour'd, like the work we have in hand, Most bloody, fiery, and most terrible.

Enter Cinna.

Cas. Stand close awhile, for here comes one in haste.

Cas. 'Tis Cinna, I do know him by his gait; He is a friend.—Cinna, where hast thou so? Cin. To find out you: Who's that? Metellus Timber? Cas. No, it is Cassia: one incorporate To our attacks. Am I not staid for, Cinna? Cin. I am glad on't. What a fearful night this is! There's two or three of us have seen strange sights. Cas. Am I not staid for, Cinna? Tell me.

Cin. Yes, you are. O, Cassius, if you could but win The noble Brutus to our party—

Cas. He ye content: Good Cinna, take this paper, And look you, lay it in the praetor's chair. Where Brutus may but find it; and throw this In at his window: set this up with wax Upon old Brutus' statue: all this done, Repair to Pompey's porch, where you shall find us. Is Decius Brutus, and Trebonius, there?

Cin. All but Metellus Timber; and he's gone To seek you at your house. Well, I will hie, And so bestow these papers as you bade me. Cas. That done, repair to Pompey's theatre. [Exit Cinna.

Come, Cassa, you and I will, yet, ere day, See Brutus at his house: three parts of him Is ours already; and the man entire, Upon the next encounter, yields him ours.

Cas. O, he sits high, in all the people's hearts: And that which would appear offence in us, His countenance, like richest alebrynh, Will change to virtue, and to worthiness.

Cas. Illin, and his worth, and our great need of him, You have right well conceived. Let us go, For it is after midnight; and, ere day, We will awake him, and be sure of him. [Exeunt.
PER. The exclamation, starting in the air,
Could so much effect, that I may read by them.
Brutus, that they did, worthy, and as true,
See here, my lord. Speak, speak, speak, speak.
Brutus, that they did, worthy, and as true.
Such instruments have been often seen.
Where I have such men as these.
Sext. I'll keep him thus. Thus must I pause a while:
Nile some bond, and understand one man name that Rome's
My cousin's death, from the hand of Brutus.
The brother in arms, when he was but 16, a boy.
Speak, speak, speak, speak, and I increased them.
To speak, and speak, O friends, I make them promises.
If he swears with his fingers, there proceeds
They till peasants, at the hands of Brutus.

Exeunt Brutus.

Lad. No, March is wanted fourteen days.

Exeunt.

SCENE II.

Since Caesar's death, and what our courage Caesar I have a long pause.
Between the meaning of a distinguished thing And the first motion in the motion Of this great hour, in a most important dream: The genius and the mortal instruments Are tied in crows' necks, and the state in men,
As a little kingdom, suffers then The nature of an instrument.

Exeunt.

Lad. No, we do our brother Caesar at the door,
What shall such forces as you see.

Sext. Be in, as I am.
Lad. No, act, there are many with him.

Sext. Do you know them?
Lad. No, my dear; there have appeared it of their ears.
And half these forces trained in our colors,
And by their means I may discern them.

Sext. Let them come.

Exeunt.

They are the forces. O Cassandra.

Sext. I am here to show to them dangerous from now on,
When wild are more free. O, thou, there.
Tell them how thou, and thy friends, and my lord himself
To make the monstrous vision. Such mean presumptions in our hands, and soldiers. (Exit)

Sext. Could not have neither that our soldiers
Not be burnt one day enough.
To keep them thus prevented.

Enter Catiline, Cassius, Brutus, Caesar, Metellus, Centurion, and Messenger.

Cat. I think we are too bold upon your ears.
Good morning, Brutus. Let we take care.

Sext. I have been of this money awhile. in might.
Know them, then, that come about you.
Cat. Yes, every man of them, and no man here.
But an answer shall every one be so wise.
Yet had but that opinion of yourself.
Which every subtle Roman ears of.
This is Tribulation.

Sext. He is welcome here.
Cat. Thus, Decius Brutus, you.

Sext. Thus, Cassius, thus Cassius.
Cass. This Cassius, thus Cassius.
Cat. And thus, Metellus Cassius.
Cass. They are all welcome.
What wonderful ears do you?—pass yourselves.
Preserve your eyes and ears.

Cat. Shall I entertain a word? (They whisper.

Dram. Here lies the end. This is not the day break.
Cat. No.

Sext. It is not the day break.

Dram. The sun is up, and your prey arises.
Thus, the sun is up, and your prey arises.

Cat. You shall perceive, that you are both deceived.
Here is peace, peace, peace, and the sun arises;
Which is a great way growing in the south.
Weariness the youth's season of the year.
Some two months hence, and again toward the north
The beast presents his face, and the high east;
So let us keep the party, indeed, and here.

Cat. Give me your hands all over, one by one.
Cat. And let us swear our resolution.

Sext. No, not in that. If we do the face of men.
The substance of our souls, the name's abase.—
If these do move with heat. heat off becomes,
And every minute more of this kind.
So let us high, such temper, range on.

Each man keep by his sector. But of these.
As I am sure they all, near dry enough.
We handle overhand and to a stand with valour.
The moving spirits of woman, their coyness,
What need we say any, but our own cause?
To speak incoherent, I what can bold.
This secret Romans, that have broke the word.
That this alone, and. what was spake.
That incoherence is honor.
This shall be, as we will call for it.
Sweat secondly, and yourselves.

Cat. Look we after Cassius, at our performance.
That need no oaks, where every spray of sand.
That every Roman boy, and every bear,
Is wary of a several baseness.

Cat. To be but the smallest particle.
Of any promise that hath pleased 2 from him.
Cat. But what of Cassius? Shall we sound him?
I think, he will stand very strong with us.
Cat. Let us not leave him out.
Cat. No. by no means.

Sext. O let us have faith, for his never hate
Will purchase us a good opinion.
And thy men's voices to commend our deeds:
It shall be said, His judgment saved our hands.
And thou art the best, and the fairest, as it appears.
But I be bound in his society.
Sext. O, name him not, never, never been with him.
For he will never follow any thing.

Cat. Such other men began.

Cat. Then leave him out.

Cat. Indeed, he is not fit.

Cat. We shall like man that he would be: only Cassius.

Cat. Go, Cassius, go, Cassius, and keep off.
I think it is not meet.

Mark Antony, so well, heark, of Cassius.

Sext. So we call him Cassius: We shall find of him
A sacred confidence; and, you, know this means.
If he improve them, may well stretch so far,
As to enjoy us all: which is provence.

Lad. Antony, and Caesar shall keep.
Cat. (To Antony)

Lad. To keep the land off, and then knock the limbs.
Like wrath in death, and every afterwards:
For Antony is but a lamb of Cassius.

Cat. To be the butcher, and to knock the limbs.
Like wrath in death, and every afterwards:
For Antony is but a lamb of Cassius.

Cat. Let us sacrifice, but no butcher, Cassius.
We shall stand up against the spirit of Cassius:
And in the spirit of men there is no bond.
Oh, that we there could come by Cassius's spirit.
And not likewise Cassius! But, Cassius.
ACT II.—SCENE I.

Cæsar must bleed for it! And, gentle friends, Let us be civil, though we may be brief; Let us be kind though we must be severe; Let us be larger than our acts appear: For in the ungrateful love he bears to Cæsar. But, oh! good Cæsar, do not think of him! If he love Cæsar, all that he can do Is to himself; take thought, and die for Cæsar: And that were much he should, for he is given To sports, to widows, and much company. Troil. There is no fear in him; let him not die; For he will live, and laugh at this betimes! [Clock strikes.]

Bru. Peace, count the clock.

Cas. The clock hath stricken three.

Bru. Troilus is time to part.

Cas. But it is doubtful yet.

What if Cæsar will come forth to-day, or so: For he is superstitious grown of late.

What does Brute mean?

Quite from the main opinion he held once

Of fantasy, of dreams, and ceremonials:

It may be, these apparent prodigies,

The unaccounted terror of this night,

And the persuasion of his augurers,

May hold him from the Capitol to-day.

Her. Never fear that: If he be so resolv'd,

I can over-rule him: for he loves to hear,

That unicorn may be betray'd with trees,

And bears with glaze, elephants with holes,

Lions with toads, and men with flatterers:

But, when I tell him, he hates flatterers.

He says, he loves, being then most flattered.

I won't pay for it;

For I can give his humour the true bent;

And I will bring him to the Capitol.

Cas. Nay, we will all of us be there to fetch him.

Bru. By the eighth hour: Is that the uttermost?

Cas. Be that the uttermost, and fail not then.

Met. Cæsar has earnestly desired Cæsar hard,

Who rated him for speaking well of Pompey;

I wonder, none of you have thought of him.

Bru. Now, good Metellus, go along by him:

He loves me well, and I have given him reasons;

Send him but hither, and I'll fashion him.

Cas. The morning comes upon us: We'll leave you, Brutes.

And friends, dispose yourselves: but all remember: What you have said, and shew yourselves true Romans.

Bru. Good gentlemen, look fresh and merrily:

Let not our looks put on our purposes:

But bear it as our Roman actors do,

With outward spirits, and formal constancy:

And so, good-morrow to you every one.

[Exeunt all but Brutes.

Boy! Lucius!—Fast asleep! It is no matter;

Enjoy the honey-heavy dew of slumber:

Thou hast no figures, nor any fantasies,

Which busy care draws in the brains of men:

Therefore thou sleepest so sound.

Enter Portia.

Bru. Portia, what mean you? Wherefore rise you

It is not for your health, that I am come [now:

Your wearied condition to the raw-cold morning.

Por. Nor for your better. You have ungently, Brute,

Slept from your bed: And freed-night, at supper,

You entered wrong, and, to the wrong manner,

Making, and asking, with your stare across:

And when I saw you, that the matter was,

You stand'd upon me with sullen looks:

I pray'd you further, that you searched your head;

And too impatiently stood on your feet:

Yet I accused, yet you answered not;

But, with an angry manner of your head,

Gave way for me to have you, but I did;

Fearing to strengthen that impossession,

Which seemed too much established; and, within,

Hoping it was but an effect of anger,

Which sometimes hath his head in every man:

It will not let you eat not talk, not sleep;

And, as it work to much upon your shape,

As at the first your body was in your condition,

I could not know you, Brute. Dear, my lord,

Make me acquainted with your cause of grief.

Brut. I am not well in heart, and that is all.

Por. Brute, in true, and, were he not in health,

He would embrace the means to come by it.

Bru. Why, so I do.

Por. If the cause were true, and had a reason?

To walk unhearsed, and work up the humours

Of the dark morning? What, it Brute wake,

And will be steal out of his wholesome bed,

To dare the vile contagion of the night?

And tempt the rheumy and unpurged air

To add unto his sickness? No, my Brute:

You have some seat within your mind,

Which, by the right and virtue of my place,

I ought to know of: And, upon my knees,

I charm you, by my once commended beauty,

By all your vows of love, and that great vow

Which did incorporate and make us one,

That you unfold to me, yourself, your half,

Why you are heavy, and why you are light,

Have had resort to you: for here have been

Some six or seven, who did hide their faces

Even from darkness.

Bru. Kneel not, gentle Portia.

Por. I should exceed, if you were gentle Brute.

Within the bond of marriage, tell me, Brute,

Is it neglected, I should know no secrets

That appertain to you? Am I yourself,

But, as it were, in sort, or limitation;

To keep with you at meals, comfort your bed,

And talk to you sometimes? I dwell but little in the nobility of your pleasure? If it be no more, [Bru. Portia is Brute's harlot, not his wife; As dear to me as are the ruddy drops

That visit my sad heart.

Por. If this were true, then should I know this secret:

I grant, I am a woman; but, withal, [curt.

A woman that lord Brutus took to wife:

I grant, I am a woman; but, withal,

A woman well reputed: Cæsar's daughter.

I think you, I am no stronger than my sex,

Being so father'd, and so husband'd:

Tell me your counsel, I will not close them:

I have made strong proof of my constancy,

Giving myself a voluntary wound

Here, in the thigh: Can I bear that with patience,

And not my husband's secrets?

Bru. O ye gods,
Julius Caesar

What says the epigraphe?

"Hiatus doloribus has dedicavit."
ACT III.

SCENE I.

In which we see selling Roman ballad, ignites that from you great Rome shall cord believe between, and that great women shall press for time's titles, status, relics, and elegances. This by Calphurnia's dream is signified.

Coe: And this way have you well explored it.

Coe. I have, when you have heard what I can say:

And know it now; the senate has concluded To give this day, a grown to great you, Coe. If you shall read them wrong, you shall not come.

There minds may change. Besides, it's a mood. A part to be yielded for, someone to say.

Break up the senate till another time.

When Cesar's wife shall meet with better dream. If Caesar hide himself, shall they not whisper, Oh, Caesar is afraid!

Pardon me, Cesar; for my dear, dear love.

To your proceeding bids me tell you they.

And reason to my love is liable.

Coe. Now bookish do you hear your seem now, Calphur. I am ashamed I did yield to them.

Give me my robe, for I will go—

Enter Fulvia, Brutus, Metellus, Metellus, Caesa, Metellus, and Caesa.

And look where Fulvia is come to fetch me.

Pub. Good morrow, Cesar.

Coe. Welcome, Fulvia—

What, first? are you stir'd so early too?

Good morrow, Cesar—Casa, Cesar Ligarius, Cesar needn't to hear your enemy,

As that same mind which hath made you lean—

What is to clock?

Pub. Cesar, six strokes eight.

Coe. I thank you for your pains and courtesy.

Enter Antony.

Coe. See! Antony, that revels long, o' nights, Is notwithstanding up—

Good morrow, Antony.

Ant. So to most noble Cesar.

Coe. Bid them prepare within:—

I am to blame to be thus waited for—

Now, Coes. —Now, Metellus—What, Trebonius! I have an hour's talk in store for you.

Remember that you call on me to days:

Be near me, that I may remember you.

Tell, Cesar, I will—

And so ever will I do. [Aside.

That your best friends shall wish I had been farther.

Coe. Good friends, go in, and taste some wine with me;

And we, live friends, will straightway go together.

Brut. That every like is not the same, O Cesar,
The heart of Brutus yearns to think upon! [Exit.

SCENE III.—The same. A Street near the Capitol.

Enter Antemoritus, reading a paper.

Ant. Cesar, because of Brutus; take heed of Cassius; come not near Cæsara; have an eye to Cæsara; trust not Trebonius; mark well Metellus Girber: Decius Brutus loves the not, that hurt wronged, Cæsara Ligarius. There is but one mind in all these men, and it is bent against Cæsara. If thus be not immortal, look about you; security gone is way to conspiracy. The mighty gods defend thee! Thy lover, Antemoritus.

Here I will stand, till Cæsara pass along.

And as a senator will I give him this.

My heart laments, that virtue cannot live Out at the teeth of emulation.

If thou read this, O Cæsara, thou may'st live;

If not, the fate with traitors do continue. [Exit.

SCENE IV.—The same. Another part of the same street, before the House of Brutus.

Enter Brutus and Lucius.

Luc. For I presume, boy, run to the senator's house; Stay not to answer me, but get thee gone:

Why dost thou stay?

Luc. To know my grand, madam.

Ces. For, I would make one and there be here and again, Luc. I can weary you, what shall I do to thee?

Do customly be strong upon my side:

Let a huge mountain I seen your heart and tongue.

I have a man, and a woman's might

How hard it is for women to keep counsel—

Art thou here yet?

Luc. Madam, what should I do?

Ces. Run to the Capitol, and with thy wife,

And so return to you, and nothing else.

Luc. Yes, bring me word boy, if they hard look well,

For we went never forth. And take good note,

What Cæsara doth, what writers press to him.

Hast, boy! what is this thing?

Luc. I hear some, madam.

Ces. It's o'er, listen well:

I heard a passing rumour, they fear,

And the wind brings me from the Capitol.

Luc. South, madam, I hear nothing.

Enter Soothsay.

Luc. Some hisser, follow:

What may haste thee been?

Sooth. At mine own house, good lady.

Luc. What is't o' clock?

South. About the ninth hour, lady.

Luc. For Cæsara yet gone to the Capitol:

Sooth. What, southward, not yet, I go to take my stand,

To see him pass on to the Capitol.

Luc. That is, lady; if it will please Cæsara

To be so good to Cæsara, as to hear me,

I shall beseech him to bestow himself on me.

Luc. Why, know't the most harm's intended to

With such voice?

South. None, I know, but that I let it

Greed morrow to you. Here the street is narrow.

The throng that follows Cæsara to the halls,

Of senators, of prorogues, of common visitors,

Will crowd a feasible man almost to death:

I'll get me to a place more void, and there

Speak to great Cæsara as he comes along.

[Exit.

Luc. I must go in.—Ah me! how weak a thing

The heard of woman is! O Brutus!

The heavens send thee in thine enterprise!

Sure, the boy heard me; Brutus hath a suit,

That Cæsara will not grant.—O, I grow faint

Jun, Lucius, and commend me to my lord;

Sooth. I am merry; come to me again,

And bring me word what he doth say to thee. [Exit.

ACT III.

SCENE i.

The same.—The Capitol; the Senate sitting.

A crowd of people in the street leading to the Capitol, among them, Antemoritus, and the Soothsay. Flourish. Enter Cæsara, Brutus, Caesa, Metellus, Metellus, Trebonius, Caesa, Antony, Lepidus, Pompeius, Public. and others.

Ces. The idea of March are come.

South. Ay, Cæsara; but not gone.
But there's but one in all doth hold his place
So, in the world. The furnished I was with men,
And men were decked and mould and approved
Yet, in the number. I know not one
That看了一目 then holds his rank.
Unshak'd in motion and that I am be.
Let me a little know, even in,
That I was constant, Cæsar should be banned,
And constant to remain in keep his art.

Quin. 3. Cæsar, Memory. Will they all up Olympus?
Cæs. Great Cæsar. Cow. Do not bring bookless there?
Cæs. Speak, hands, for me.
Cæs. Cæsar, Cæsar. Cow. This looks more Cæsar than the Cæsar.
Cæs. They are thrust by whom shall it be conformed, and at most by Mark's Emotions.

Quin. 4. Cæsar! Then fall Cæsar.
Cæs. The senators may send return in composition.
Din. Liberty Freedom Tyranny is dead—
Keep peace, proceed cry it about the streets.
Cæs. Some in the common people, and cry out,

ACT III.—SCENE I.

Enter a Servant.

Ser. Then, Brutus, did my master bid me know:
Thy soul did Mark Antony bid me fall down:

Bru. And, being prostrate, thus he bade me say:

Ser. Brutos is noble, wise, valiant, and honest:
Cæsar was mighty, bold, royal, and loving:

Bru. I loved Brutus, and I honoured him:

Ser. I heard Cæsar, honour'd him, and lov'd him:
If Brutus will vanquish, that Antony
May safely come to him, and be well
How Cæsar didth wish, be he'd to be in death,
Mark Antony shall not love Cæsar dead
So well as Brutus living: but will to fall
The fortunes and affairs of noble Brutus,
Though in the hazards of this untender state,
With all true faith. So says my master Antony.

Bru. Thy master is wise and valiant Roman:
I never thought him worse.

Tell him, so please him come unto this place,
He shall be satisfied; and, by my honour,
Depart untouch'd.

Ser. I'll fetch him presently. [Exit Servant.

Bru. I know that we shall have him well to friend.

Can. I wish, we may: but yet have I a mind,
That bears him much; and my misgiving still dalls shrewdly to the purpose.

Re-enter Antony.

Bru. But here comes Antony.—Welcome, Mark Antony.

Ant. Omityth Cæsar! dost thou live so low?
Are thy comports, glories, triumphs, spoil,
Shrink to this little measure?—Far be these well.

I know not, gentleman, what you intend.
Who else must be let blood, who else is rank:
If I myself, there is no hour so fit
As Cæsar's death's hour; nor any instrument
Of half that worth, as those your swords, made rich
With the most noble blood of all the world.
I do beseech thee, if you bear me hard,
Now, whilst your rippled hands do reach and smoke,
I shall enjoy your pleasure.

Can. Live a thousand years,
I shall not find myself so apt to die:
No place will please me so, no mean of death,
As here by Cæsar, and by you cut off,
The choice and master spirits of this age.

Ant. Brutus! beg of thee the sight of your death of us,
Though now we must appear bloody and cruc'd,
As, by your hands, and this our present act,
You see we do; yet see you but our hands,
And this the bleeding business they have done:
Our hearts you see not, they are pitiful;
And pity to the general wrong of Rome
(As the sun drives out fire, so pity, pity,) Hath done this deed on Cæsar. For your part,
To your swords have laden points, Mark Antony:
Our arms, in strength of malice, and our hearts,
Of brothers' temper, do receive you in
With all kind love, good thoughts, and reverence.
Can. Your voice shall be as strong as any man's,
In the deserving of new dignities.

Ant. Only be patient, till we have appear'd
The multitude, beside themselves with tear,
And then we will deliver you the cause,
Why I, that did love Cæsar when I struck him,
Have thus proceeded.

Ser. I doubt not of your wisdom,
Let each man render me his bloody hand:
First, Marcus Brutus, will I shake with you:
Next, Cælius Cassius, do I take your hand;
Now, Decius Brutus, yours;—now yours Metellus;
JULIUS CAESAR.

Ant. O, pardon me, thou piece of bleeding earth, that I am mock and gentle with these butchers! Thou art the ruins of the noblest man, that ever lived in the tide of times. Woe to the hand that shed this costly blood! Over thy wounds now do I prophesy,—Which, like dumb mouths, do ope their ruby lips, to leg the voice and utterance of my tongue;—A curse shall light upon the limbs of men; Domestic fury, and fierce civil strife, shallumber all the parts of Italy; Blood and destruction shall be so in use, and dreadful objects so familiar, that mothers shall but smile, when they behold their infants quarter'd with the hands of war; All pity chok'd with custom of fell deeds: And Caesar's spirit, ranging for revenge, With Até by his side, doth hot from hell, Shall in these confines, with a monarch's voice, Cry Havoc, and let slip the dogs of war; That this foul deed shall smell above the earth With carrion men greening for burial.

Enter a Servant.

You serve Octavius Caesar, do you not? Serv. I do, Mark Antony. Ant. Caesar did write for him, to come to Rome. Serv. He did receive his letters, and is coming; and bid me say to you by word of mouth,—O Caesar!—[Seeing the body. Ant. Thy heart is big, get thee apart and weep. Passion, I see is catching: for mine eyes, Seeing those beads of sorrow stand in thine, Began to water. Is thy master coming? Serv. He lies to-night within seven leagues of Rome. Ant. Post back with speed, and tell him what hath chan'd:—Here is a mourning Rome, a dangerous Rome, No Rome of safety for Octavius yet; He hence, and tell him so. Yet, stay a while; Thou shalt not back, till I have borne this corse Into the market-place: there shall I try, In my oration, how the people take The cruel issue of these bloody men; According to the which, thou shalt discourse To young Octavius of the state policies, And lend me your hand. [Exit, with Caesar's body.

SCENE II.—The same. The Forum.

Enter Brutus and Cassius, and a throng of Citizens.

Cit. We will be satisfied; let us be satisfied. Brut. Then follow me, and give me audience, Cassius, go you into the other street, [friends.—And part the numbers.—Those that will hear me speak, let them stay here; Those that will follow Cassius, go with him; And public reasons shall be rendered Of Caesar's death.

1 Cit. I will hear Brutus speak.

2 Cit. I will hear Cassius; and compare their reasons, When severally we hear them rendered.

3 Cit. The noble Brutus is ascended: Silence! Brut. Be patient till the last. Romans, countrymen, and lovers! hear me for my cause; and be silent, that you may hear: believe me for mine honour, and have respect to mine honour, that you may believe: censure me in your wisdom, and awake your senses, that you may the better judge. If there be any in this assembly, any dear friend of Caesar's, to him I say, that Brutus' love to Caesar was no less than his. If then that friend demand, why Brutus rose against Caesar, this is my answer.—Not that I loved Caesar less, but that I loved Rome more. Had you rather Caesar were living, and die all slaves; than that Caesar were dead, to live all free men? As Caesar loved me, I weep for him; as he was fortunate, I rejoice at it; as he was valiant, I honour him: but, as he was ambitious, I slew him: There is tears, for his love; joy, for his fortune; honour, for his valour, and death, for his ambition. Who is here so base, that would be a bondman? If any, speak; for him have I offended. Who is here so rude, that would not be a Roman? If any, speak; for him have I offended. Who is here so vile, that will not love his country? If any, speak; for him have I offended. I pause for a reply.

Cit. None, Brutus, none. [Several speaking at once. Brut. Then none have I offended. I have done no more to Caesar, than you should do to Brutus. The question of his death is enrolled in the Capitol; his glory not extenuated, wherein he was worthy; nor his offences enforced, for which he suffered death.

Enter Antony and others, with Caesar's body.

Here comes his body, mourn'd by Mark Antonio; who, though he had not heard his death, shall receive the benefit of his dying, a place in the commonwealth; As which of you shall not? With this I depart; That, as I slew my best lover for the good of Rome, I have the same dagger for myself, when it shall please my country to need my death.

Cit. Live, Brutus, live! live! 1 Cit. Bring him with triumph home unto his house. 2 Cit. Give him a statue with his ancestors. 3 Cit. Let him be Caesar. 4 Cit. Caesar's better parts Shall now be crown'd in Brutus.

1 Cit. We'll bring him to his house with shouts and Brut. My countrymen,—[clamours. 2 Cit. Peace; silence! Brutus speaks. 3 Cit. Peace, ho! Brut. Good countrymen, let me depart alone, And, for my sake, stay here with Antony: Do grace to Caesar's corpse, and grace his speech Tending to Caesar's glories; which Mark Antony, By our permission, is allow'd to make. I do entreat you, not a man depart. Save I alone, till Antony have spoke. [Exit. 1 Cit. Sees, ho! and let us hear Mark Antony. 3 Cit. Let him go up into the public chair; We'll hear him: Noble Antony, go up. Ant. For Brutus' sake, I am beholden to you. 4 Cit. What does he say of Brutus? 3 Cit. He says, for Brutus' sake, he finds himself beholden to us all. 2 Cit. We hear he speak no harm of Brutus here. 1 Cit. This Caesar was a tyrant. 3 Cit. Nay, that's certain: We are bless'd, that Rome is rid of him. 2 Cit. Peace; let us hear what Antony can say. Ant. You gentle Romans,— 3 Cit. Peace, ho! let us hear him. 4 Cit. Friends, Romans, countrymen, lend me your I come to bury Caesar, not to praise him. [tears, The evil that men do, lives after them; The good is oft interred with their bones; So let it be with Caesar. The noble Brutus Hath told you, Caesar was ambitious: If it were so, it was a grievous fault; And grievously hath Caesar answer'd it. Here, under leave of Brutus, and the rest, (For Brutus is an honourable man;
So are they all, all honourable men.

Cim. I come to speak in Caesar's funeral.

He was my friend, faithful and just to me:

But Brutus says, he was ambitious;

And Brutus is an honourable man.

He hath brought many captives home to Rome,

Whose ransoms did the general coffers fill.

Did this in Caesar seem ambitious?
The question is: What's past is prologue.

Ambition should be made of sterner stuff:

Yet Brutus says, he was ambitious;

And Brutus is an honourable man.

You all did see, that on the Capitol,

I thrice presented him a kingly crown,

Which he did thrice refuse. Was this ambition?

Yet Brutus says, he was ambitious;

And, sure, he is an honourable man.

I speak not to disprove what Brutus spoke,

But here I am to speak what I do know.

You all did love him once, not without cause;

What cause withholds you then to mourn for him?

O judgment, thou art fitter for these duties

Than any man alive. Be not afeard; let men

Here have their mirth, and crowned. The poor has

My heart is in the coffin there with Caesar,

And I must pause till it come back to me.

1 Cit. Methinks, there is much reason in his sayings.

2 Cit. If thou consider rightly of the matter,

Caesar has had great wrong.

3 Cit. Brutus, has he, masters?

I feard there will a worse come in his place.

4 Cit. Mark! 'tis ye words! He would not take the crown:

Therefore, 'tis certain, he was not ambitious.

1 Cit. If it he found so, some will dear abide it.

2 Cit. Poor soul! his eyes are red as fire with weeping.

[Antony

3 Cit. There's not a nobler man in Rome, than

4 Cit. Now mark him, he begins again to speak.

Ant. But yesterday, the word of Caesar might have stood against the world: now lies he there,

And none so poor to do him reverence.

O masters! if I were dispos'd to stir

Your hearts and minds to mutiny and rage,

I thought of Brutus was wrong, and Cassius wrong.

Who, you all know, are honourable men:

I do not wish them wrong: I rather choose

To wrong the dead, to wrong myself, and you,

Than I will wrong such honourable men.

But here's a parchment, with the seal of Caesar, I found it in his closet, 'tis his will:

Let but the common hear this testament.

(Which pardon me, I do not mean to read,) And they would go and kiss dead Caesar's wounds, And dip their napkins in his sacred blood;

Yea, beg a hair of him for memory,

And, dying, mention it within their wills,

Pleasing death, as a rich legacy,

Unto their name.

4 Cit. We'll hear the will: Read it, Mark Antony.

Cim. The will, the will; we will hear Caesar's will.

Ant. Have patience, gentle friends, I must not read

It is not meet you know how Caesar lov'd you. [it; You are not wood, you are not stones, but men;

And, being men, hearing the will of Caesar, It will inflame you, it will make you mad:

'Tis good you know not that you are his heirs;

For if you should, O, what would come of it?

4 Cit. Read the will; we will hear it, Antony;

You shall read us the will; Caesar's will.

Ant. Will you be patient? Will you stay a while? I have offended myself, to offend on it.

I fear I wrong the honourable men,

Whose daggers have stabb'd Caesar: I do fear it.

4 Cit. They were traitors: Honourable men!

Cim. The will! the testament!

2 Cit. They were villains, murderers: The will,

read the will!

Ant. You will compel me then to read the will?

Then make a ring about the corpse of Caesar,

And let me shew you him that made the will.

Shall I descend? And will you give me leave?

Cim. Come down.

2 Cit. Descend. [He comes down from the pulpit.

3 Cit. You shall have leave.

4 Cit. A ring; stand round.

1 Cit. Stand from the hearse, stand from the body.

2 Cit. Room for Antony—unto you.

Ant. Nay, press not so upon me; stand far off.

Cim. Stand back! room! hear back!

Ant. If you have tears, prepare to shed them now.

You all do know this mantle: I remember

The first time ever Caesar put it on;

Twas on a summer's evening, in his tent;

That day he overcame and beat the enemy.

Look! in this place, ran Cassius' dagger through:

See, what a rent the envious Casca made.

Through this, the well-beloved Brutus stabbed;

And, as he pluck'd his cursed steel away,

Mark how the blood of Caesar follow'd it;

As rushing out of doors, to be resolved.

If Brutus then to unkindness would proceed,

For Brutus, as you know, was Caesar's angel:

Judge, O you gods, how dearly Caesar lov'd him!

This was the most unkindest cut of all:

For when the noble Caesar saw him stab,

Ingratitude, more strong than traitors' arms,

Quite vanquish'd him: then burst his mighty heart;

And, in the very midst of样ing up his face,

Even at the base of Pompey's statue,

Which all the while ran blood, great Caesar fell.

O, what a fall was there my countrymen!

Then I, and you, and all of us fell down,

Whilst bloody treason flourish'd over us.

O, now you weep; and, I perceive, you feel

The dint of pity: these are gracious drops.

Kind souls, when we our measure give away

Our Caesar's vesture wounded! Look you here.

Here is himself, man'd, as you see, with traitors.

1 Cit. O piteous spectacle!

2 Cit. O noble Caesar!

3 Cit. O woful day!

4 Cit. O traitors, villains!

1 Cit. O most bloody sight!

2 Cit. We will be revenged: revenge; about,— seek,—burn,—fire,—kill,—slay!—let not a traitor live.

Ant. Stay, countrymen.

1 Cit. Peace there:—Hear the noble Antony.

2 Cit. We'll hear him, we'll follow him, we'll die with him.

Ant. Good friends, sweet friends, let me not stir you

To such a sudden flood of mutiny.

[up They, that have done this deed, are honourable;

What private griefs they have, alas, I know not,

That made them do't; they are wise and honourable,

And will, go doubt, with reasons answer you.

I come not, friends, to steal away your hearts;

I am no orator, as Brutus is:

But as you know me all, a plain blunt man,

That love my friend; and that they know full well

That gave me public leave to speak of him.

For I have neither wit, nor words, nor worth.

Action, not oration, now is the power of speech;

To stir men's blood: I only speak right on;
ACT IV.

SCENE I.—The same. A Room in Antony's House.

ANTONY, OCTAVIUS, and LEPIDUS, seated at a table.

ANT. These many then shall die: their names are pick'd.

OCT. Your brother too must die; Consent you, I e-

LEP. I do consent. [pudis?]

OCT. Prick him down, Antony.

LEP. Upon condition Publius shall not live.

ANT. He shall not live; look, with a spot I damn
But, Lepidus, go you to Caesar's house:

LEP. Fetch the will hither, and we will determine
How to cut off some charge in legacies.

LEP. What, shall I and you here?

ANT. Or here, or at The Capitol.

[Enter Lepidus.]

LEP. At this a slight unremittable man,
Meet to be sent on errands: Is it fit
The three-fold world divided, he should stand
One of the three to share it?

ANT. So thou thought him;

And took his voice who should be pick'd to die,
In our black sentence and proscription.

ANT. Octavius, I have seen more days than you;
And though we lay these honours on this man,
To ease ourselves of divers slanderous loads,
He shall but bear them as the ass bears gold,
To groan and sweat under the business.
Either led or driven, as we point the way;
And having brought our treasure where we will,
Then take we down his load, and turn him off,
Like the empty ass, to shake his ears,
And graze in commons.

ANT. You may do your will;

But he's a tried and valiant soldier.

ANT. So is my horse, Octavius: and, for that,
I do appoint him store of provender.

ANT. It is a creature that I teach to fight,
To wind, to stop, to run directly on;
His corporal motion govern'd by my spirit.

And, in some taste, is Lepidus but so;
He must be taught, and train'd, and bid go forth: A barren-spirited fellow; one that feeds On objects, art, and imitations; Which, out of use, and said by other men, Begin his fashion. Do not talk of him, But as a property. And now, Octavius, List great things.—Brutus and Cassius Are levying powers: we must straight make head: Therefore, let our alliance be combin'd. Our best friends made, and our best means stretch'd: And let us presently sit in council, How covert matters may be best dis-clos'd, And open perils surest answered. Out. Let us do so: for we are at the stake, And haldy about with many enemies; And some, that smile, have in their hearts, I fear, Millions of mischief. [Exeunt.]

SCENE II.

Before Brutus' Tent, in the Camp near Sardis.

Enter Brutus, Lucilius, Lucius, and Soldiers: Tiarenus and Pindarus meeting them.

Brut. Stand here.

Luc. Give the word, ho! and stand.

Brut. What now, Lucilius? Is Cassius near?

Luc. He is at hand; and Pindarus is come To do you salutation from his master.

[Exeunt Lucilius and Pindarus.]

Brut. He greets me well.—Your master, Pindarus, In his own change, or by ill soldiers, Hath given me some worthy cause to wish Things done, undone: but, if he be at hand, I shall be satisfied.

Pind. I do not doubt, But that my noble master will appear Such as he is, full of regard, and honour.

Brut. He is not doubled:—A word, Lucilius; How he receiv'd you, let me be resolv'd.

Luc. With courtesy, and with respect enough; But not with such familiar instances, Nor with such free and friendly conference, As he hath used of old.

Brut. Thou hast describ'd a hot friend coming: Ever mine, Lucilius, When love begins to sicken and decay, It useth an enforced ceremony. There are no tricks in plain and simple faith: But hollow men, like horses hot at hand, Make gallant show and promise of their mettle; But when they should endure the bloody spur, They fall their erects, and, like deceitful jades, Sink in the trial. Comes his army on! Luc. They mean this night in Sardis to be quarter'd; The greater part, the horse in general, Are come with Cassius. [March within. Brut. Hark, he is arriv'd:—March gently on to meet him.]

Enter Cassius and Soldiers.

Cass. Stand, ho!

Brut. Stand, ho! Speak the word along.

Within. Stand.

Within. Stand.

Within. Stand.

Cass. Most noble brother, you have done me wrong. Brut. Judge me, you gods! Wrong I mine enemies! And, if not so, how should I wrong a brother! Cass. Brutus, this sober form of yours hides wrongs; And when you do them—Brut. Cassius be content. Speak your griefs softly, I do know you well:—Before the eyes of both our armies here, Which should perceive nothing of our love from us, Let us not wrangle: Bid them move away; Then in my tent, Cassius, enlarge your griefs, And I will give you audience. Cass. Pindarus, Did our commanders lead their charges off A little from this ground? Brut. Lucilius do you the like; and let no man Come to our tent, till we have done our conference. Let Lucius and Titinius guard our door. [Exeunt.]

SCENE III.—Within the Tent of Brutus.

Lucius and Titinius at some distance from it.

Enter Brutus and Cassius.

Cass. That you have wrong'd me doth appear in this: You have condemn'd and noted Lucius Pella, For taking bribes here of the Sardians; Wherein, my letters, praying on his side, Because I knew the man, were slighted off. Brut. You wrong'd yourself, to write in such a case. Cass. In such a time as this, it is not meet That every nice offence should bear its comment. Brut. Let me tell you, Cassius, you yourself Are much condemn'd to have an itching palm; To sell and mart your offices for gold, To underservers.

Cass. I am an itching palm? You know, that you are Brutus that speak this, Or, by the gods, this speech were as your last, Brut. The name of Cassius honour's this corruption, And chastisement doth therefore hide his head. Cass. Affrightment! Brut. Remember March, the ides of March remem-Did not great Julius bleed for justice' sake? [Bur! What villain touch'd his body, that did stab, And not for justice? What, shall one of us, That struck the foremost man of all this world, But for supporting robbers; shall we now Contaminate our fingers with base bribes? And sell the mighty spacious of our large honours, For so much trash, as may be grasped thus— I had rather be a dog, and bay the moon, Than such a Roman.

Brut. Brutes, bay not me, I'll not endure it: you forget yourself, To hedge me in: I am a soldier, I, Older in practice, abler than yourself To make conditions. Cass. Do you go to; you're not, Cassius. Brut. I am.

Cass. I say, you are not.

Brut. Urge me no more, I shall forget myself: Have mind upon your health, tempt me no further. Cass. Away, slight man! Can't I speak?

Brut. Hear me, for I will speak. Must I give way and room to your rash cholrer! Shall I be frighted, when a madman stirs? Cass. O gods! ye gods! Must I endure this? Brut. All this? ay, and more: Fret till your proud heart break. Go, show your slaves how choleric you are, And make your bondmen tremble. Must I judge? Must I observe you? Must I stand and crouch Under your testy humour? By the gods, You shall digest the venom of your spleen, Though it do split you: for, from this day forth, I'll use you for my mirth, yea, for my laughter, When you are warish.
Julius Caesar.

Cas. Is it come to this?

Bru. You say, you are a better soldier: Let it appear so; make your vaunting true, And it shall please me well: For mine own part, I shall be glad to learn of noble men.

Cas. You wrong me every way; you wrong me, I said, an elder soldier; not a better: [Brutus; Did I say, better?]

Bru. If you did, I care not. [Cas. When Caesar liv'd, he durst not think he mov'd Peace, peace; you durst not so have tempted Cas. I durst not? [him.

Bru. No.

Cas. What? durst not tempt him?

Bru. For your life, you durst not.

Cas. Do not presume too much upon my love, I may do that I shall be sorry for.

Bru. You have done that you should be sorry for.

There is no terror, Cassius, in your threats; For I am arm'd so strong in honesty, That they pass by me as the idle wind, Which I respect not. I did send to you For certain sums of gold, which you deny'd me;— For I can raise no money by vile means: By heaven, I had rather coin my heart, And drop my blood for drachmas, than to wring From the hard hands of peasants their vile trash, By any indiscretion. I did send To you for gold to pay my legions, Which you deny'd me: Was that done like Cassius? Should I have answer'd Cais Scaucus so! When Marcus Brutus grows so covetous, To lock such rascal counters from his friends, Be ready, gods, with all your thunderbolts, Dash him to pieces!

Cas. I denied you not.

Bru. You did.

Cas. I did not:—he was but a fool, That brought my answer back.—Brutus hath riv'd my A friend should bear his friend's infirmities; [heart; But Brutus makes mine greater than they are. Bru. I do not, till you practise them on me.

Cas. You love me not.

Bru. I do not like your faults.

Cas. A friendly eye could never see such faults.

Bru. A flatterer's would not, though they do appear As high as high Olympus.

Cas. Come, Antony, and young Octavius, come, Revenge yourselves alone on Cassius, For Cassius is aweary of the world: Hated by one he loves; brav'd by his brother; Check'd like a houndman; all his faults observ'd, Set in a note-book, learn'd and conn'd by rote, To cast into my teeth. O, I could weep My spirit from mine eyes!—There is my dagger, And here my naked breast; within, a heart Dearer than Brutus' mine, richer than gold: If that thou be'st a Roman, take it forth; I, that denied thee gold, will give my heart: Suck, as thou didst at Cassar; for, I know, When thou didst hate him worst, thou lov'dst him better Than ever thou lov'dst Cassius.

Bru. Sheath your dagger: Be angry when you will, it shall have scope; Do what you will, dishonour shall be honour. O Cassius, you are yoked with a lamb That carries anger, as the flint bears fire; Who, much enforced, shows a hasty spark, And straight is cold again.

Cas. Hath Cassius liv'd To be but mirth and laughter to his Brutus, When grief, and blood ill-temper'd vexed him?

Bru. When I spoke that, I was ill-temper'd too.

Cas. Do you confess so much? Give me your hand.

Bru. And my heart too.

Cas. O Brutus!—

Bru. What's the matter?

Cas. Have you not love enough to bear with me, When that rash humour, which my mother gave me, Makes me forgetful?

Bru. Yes, Cassius: and, hecquothorth, When you are over-earnest with your Brutus, He'll think your mother chides, and leave you so. [Noise within.

Poi. [Within.] Let me go in to see the generals; There is some grudge between them, 'tis not meet They be alone.

Luc. [Within.] You shall not come to them.

Poi. [Within.] Nothing but death shall stay me.

Enter Poet.

Enter Lucilius and Titinius.

Bru. Luciliius and Titinius, bid the commanders Prepare to lodge their companies to-night. [You Can and come yourselves, and bring Messala with Immediately to us. [Exeunt Lucillius and Titinius.

Bru. Lucius, a bowl of wine.

Cas. I did not think, you could have been so angry. Bru. O Cassius, I am sick of many griefs.

Cas. Of your philosophy you make no use, If you give place to accidental evils.

Bru. No man bears sorrow better:—Portia is dead.

Cas. Ha! Portia?

Bru. She is dead.

Cas. How escap'd I killing, when I cross'd you so?— O insupportable and touching loss!—

Upon what sickness?

Cas. I am impatient of my absence; And grief, that young Octavius with Mark Antony Have made themselves so strong:—for with her death That tidings came:—With this she fell distracted, And, her attendants absent, swallow'd fire.

Cas. And died so?

Bru. Even so.

Cas. O ye immortal gods!

Enter Lucius, with wine and tapes.

Bru. Speak no more of her. Give me a bowl of wine: In this I bury all unkindness, Cassius. [Drinks.

Cas. My heart is thristy for that noble pledge:— Fill, Lucius, till the wine o'erflow the cup; I cannot drink too much of Brutus' love. [Drinks.

Re-enter Titinius with Messala.

Bru. Come in, Titinius.—Welcome, good Messala Now sit we close about this taper here, And call in question our necessities.

Cas. Portia, art thou gone?

Bru. No more, I pray you—Messala, I have here received letters, That young Octavius, and Mark Antony, Come down upon us with a mighty power, Bending their expedition toward Philippi.
Mes. Myself have letters of the self-same tenour.

Bru. With what addition?

Mes. That by prescription, and bills of outlawry,
Octavius, Antony, and Lepidus,
Have put to death an hundred senators;
Mine speak of seventy senators that died,
By their prescriptions, Cicero being one.

Cas. Cicero one?

Mes. Ay, Cicero is dead,
And by that order of prescription.—
Had you your letters from your wife, my lord?

Bru. No, Messala.

Mes. Nor nothing in your letters writ of her?

Mes. That, methinks, is strange.

Bry. Why ask you? Henry augur'd of her in yours?

Mes. No, my lord.

Bru. Now, as you are a Roman, tell me true.

Mes. Then like a Roman bear the truth I tell:
For certain she is dead, and by strange manner.

Bru. Why, farewell, Portia.—We must die, Messala:
With meditating that she must die once,
I have the patience to endure it now.

Mes. Even so great men great losses should endure.

Cas. I have as much of this in art as you,
But yet my store could not bear it so.

Bru. Well, to our work alive. What do you think
Of marching to Philippus presently?

Cas. I do not think it good.

Bru. Your reason?

Cas. This it is:
'Tis better, that the enemy seek us:
So shall be waste his means, weary his soldiers,
Doing himself offence; whilst we, lying still,
Are full of rest, defence, and nimbleness.

Bru. Good reasons must, of force, give place to better.
The people, twist Philippus and this ground, [ter,
Do stand but in a fore'd affection;
For they have grudg'd us contribution:
The enemy, marching along by them,
By them shall make a fuller number up,
Come on refresh'd, new-added, and encourag'd;
From which advantage shall we cut him off,
If at Philippus we do face him there,
These people at our back.

Cas. Hear me, good brother.

Bru. Under your pardon. — You must note beside,
That we have try'd the utmost of our friends,
Our legions are brim-full, our cause is riпе:
The enemy increaseth every day,
We, at the height, are ready to decline.
There is a tide in the affairs of men,
Which, taken at the flood, leads on to fortune; Omitted, all the voyage of their life Is bound in shallows, and in miseries On such a full sea are we now afloat, And we must take the current when it serves, Or lose our ventures.

Cas. Then, with your will, go on:
We'll along ourselves, and meet them at Philipp.
Bru. The deep of night is great upon our talk,
And nature must obey necessity;
Which we will niggard with a little rest.
There is no more to say?

Cas. No more. Good night;
Early to-morrow will we rise, and hence.

Bru. Lucius, my gown. [Exit Lucius.] Farewell, good Messala; Good night, Titius.—Noble, noble Cassius,
Good night, and good repose.

Cos. O my dear brother!

This was an ill beginning of the night:
Never come such division 'ween our souls!
Let it not, Brutus.

Bru. Every thing is well.

Cas. Good night, my lord.

Bru. Good night, good brother.

Tit. Mrs. Good night, lord Brutus.

Bru. Farewell, every one.

Enter Cas. Tit. and Mrs.

Re-enter Lucius, with the gown.

Give me the gown. Where is thy instrument?

LUC. Here in the tent.

Bru. What, thou speakest drowsily?

Poor knave, I blame thee not; thou art o'er-watch'd.

Call Claudius, and some other of my men;
I'll have them sleep on cushions in my tent.

Luc. Varro, and Claudius!

Enter Varro and Claudius.

Ver. Calls my lord?

Bru. I pray you, sirs, lie in my tent, and sleep;
It may be, I shall raise you by and by.

On business to my brother Cassius. [pleasure.

Var. So please you, we will stand, and watch your

Bru. I will not have it so; lie down, good sirs;
It may be, I shall otherwise think me.

Look, Lucius, here's the book I sought for so:
I put it in the pocket of my gown. [Servants lie down.

Luc. I was sure, your lordship did not give it me.

Bru. Bear with me, good boy, I am much forgetful.
Canst thou hold up thy heavy eyes awhile,
And touch thy instrument a strain or two?

Luc. Ay, my lord, an it please you.

Bru. It does, my boy.

I trouble thee too much, but thou art willing.

Luc. It is my duty, sir.

Bru. I should not urge thy duty past thy might;

I know, young bloods look for a time of rest.

Luc. I have slept, my lord, already.

Bru. It is well done; and thou shalt sleep again;
I will not hold thee long: if I do live,
I will be good to thee. [Music, and a song.

This is a sleepy tune:—O murd'rous slumber!

Lay'st thou thy leaden lance upon my boy,
That plays thee music?—Gentle knave, good night;
I will not do thee so much wrong to wake thee.
If thou dost not, thou breakest thy instrument;
I'll take it from thee: and, good boy, good night.
Let me see, let me see:—Is not the leaf turn'd down,
Where I left reading! Here it is, I think.

Enter the Ghost of Caesar.

How ill this taper burns!—Ha! who comes here?
I think, it is the weakness of mine eyes,
That shapes this monstrous apparition.
It comes upon me:—Art thou any thing?
Art thou some god, some angel, or some devil,
That mak'st my blood cold, and my hair to stare?
Speak to me, what thou art.

Ghost. Thy evil spirit, Brutus.

Bru. Why com'st thou?

Ghost. To tell thee, thou shalt see me at Philippi.

Bru. Well;

Then I shall see thee again?

Ghost. Ay, at Philippi. [Ghost vanishes

Bru. Why, I will see thee at Philippi then—

Now I have taken heart, thou vanishest;
Ill spirit, I would hold more talk with thee—

Boy! Lucius!—Varro! Claudius! Sirs, awake!—

Claudius!
LUC. The things, my lord, are false.

BRU. He thinks, he still is at his instrument.

LUC. My lord? [out!]

BRU. The sooner I dream, Lucius, that thou so cry not
LUC. My lord, I do not know that I do cry.

BRU. Yes, though hast first: Didst thou see anything?

LUC. Nothing, my lord.

BRU. Sleep again, Lucius—Sicilia, Claudius!

Follow them: [awake.]

LUC. My lord.

BRU. My lord.

LUC. Why dost thou so cry out, sir, in your sleep?

BRU. Come, Did we, my lord.

LUC. Ay: Saw you any thing?

BRU. No, my lord, I saw nothing.

LUC. Nor I, my lord.

BRU. Go, and commend me to my brother Cassius
LUC. And I am set on this purpose certain before,
And we will follow.

LUC. Come. It must be done, my lord. [Exeunt.]

ACT V.

SCENE I.—The Plains of Philippi.

Enter Octavius, Antony, and their Army.

Cen. New Antony, our hopes are answered.

You said, the enemy would not come down.

We keep the land: and upper part as
Is prov'd not to our enemies are at hand;
They mean as well as us at Philippi here.
Answering before we do demand of them.

Ant. Even. I know that presently, but I know
Wherefore they do so: they could be content
To raise other places: and come down
When several breezes wind in by this side.

To battle in our absence that they have courage;
But 'tis not so.

Enter a Messenger.

Mes. The enemy comes in plain view:
Their bloody signs of battle being on,
And something of the same importation.

Ant. Octavius bear your battle with you, sir.
Upon the salt bank of the even dance.

Gent. Upon the right hand, I keep there the left.

Ant. Then in your vases are in that exigency.

Oct. I do not mean you, you will not do. [March.]

Enter Brutus, Cassius, and their Army,
Learners, Varrius, Massilia, and divers.

Cen. They stand and would have parley.

Ant. Speak, Marsilius, speak: I am not so much as talk.

Mars. Antony, what do you wish in parley?

Ant. Marsilius, our common cause is theirs.

Maxes. O, Brutus, we stand not on such worth.

Ant. O, Brutus, we do not stand on that.

Maxes. We have worse cause to talk than meet.

Ant. Old Cassius still.

Come, Antony; away.

Octavius, senators, and their Army.

We will know how now; we will know, and soon,
The storm is up, and all is on the hazard. [Exeunt.]

Luc. [Aside.] As Caesar said to me, he will come.

Mes. [Aside.] What says my general?

Mes. This is my birthday, as this very day
Was Cassius born. Give me thy hand, Malesuada.
Be she thy woman: that, against my will,
As Pompey was, am I content to set
Upon one notable all our liberties.
I know that I held Epirus strong,
And his opinion; now I change my mind,
And partly from things that do presage
Coming from Brutus on our former enemy.
Our two gray eagles left: and there they perish'd.
Grasping and bearing from our victorious' hands;
As in Philippi now conceived us:
Thus morning are they fled away and gone:
And in their steps, the currents, crowns, and wars,
Fly to our heads, and downward we are:
As we were once proud: they shadow'd seem
A canopy most dark, which our army lies ready to give up the ghost.

Mes. Believe me not.

Cen. I am very happy, I am happy:
For I am fresh of spirit, and reserved.
To meet the perils very differently.

Ant. Even so, Lucius.

Mes. Now, most noble Brutus,
The gods to-day grant friendship: that we may.
Lovers in peace: beat our arms into plowshares:
But since the effects of man rest still uncertain,
Let's reason with the wits that they believe.
ACT V.—SCENE III

If we do lose this battle, then is this
The very last time we shall speak together:
What are you then determined to do?

Eum. Even by the rule of that philosophic
Way in which I have given him—I know not how,
But I do determine—
For I have no thought in this to prevent;
For I will not weep, but go to present
The time of life—assuming myself with patience,
To stay the prevalence of some high powers,
That govern us below.

Cas. Then, if we lose this battle.

You are contented to be led in triumph
Though to the streets of Rome.

Eum. Casus, my lord, meek and humble Roman.
That ever Brutus will go bound to Rome:
He has not good to make this day a man.
And whether we shall meet again I know not.
There are our everlasting dear well-ta.
For ever, and for ever, farewell, Casus.
If we do not meet again, why write we?
If not, why then this parting was well made.
Cas. For ever, and for ever, farewell, Brutus! If we do meet again, we'll smile indeed.

Eum. Why then listen.—O, that being only know
The end of this day's business, ere it come
But it is sufficient, that the day will come.
And then the end is known.—Come, let us away! [Exeunt.

SCENE III.—The same. Another Part of the Field of Battle.

Enter Cassius and Titius.

Cas. O, look, Titinius, look, the villagers fly!
Myself have to mine own turn'd enemy
This saying here of mine was turning back;
I saw the coward, and did make it known:
But Cassus, Brutus gave the word too early:
Who having some advantage on Octavius,
Took it too eagerly: his soldiers feel to spoil,
While we by Antony are all confederate.

Eum. Cassius is no more, in sitting and standing.

Cas. Fly further off, my lord; fly further off; Mark Antony is in your tents, my lord.

Eum. Therefore advise Cassus, my lord.

Cas. This shall make it enough. Look, look, Titinius:—Are those my tents, where I perceive the fire?

Eum. They are, my lord.

Cas. Titinius, if thou livest at all,
Moist dye this my horse, and hide my spurs in him.
Tell them to bring me thither to-morrow-morning, and
And here again to-morrow, and on the morrow,
Whether youv troops are friends or enemy.

Tit. I will be here again, even with a thought. [Exeunt.

Cas. Go, Pandarcs, get a porter on that:—
My sight was ever thence: regard Titinius,
And tell me what thou hast not of the field.—

[Exit Pandarus.

This day I brood with drear: time is come round,
And where I sit and stand, there shall I end;
My life is run his compass.—Sicani, what news?

Pox. [Below] O my lord!

Cas. What news?

Pox. Titinius is Enclosed round about with horsemen; that Make too bold, and come on—now, now. They are,
Now at the same, and now, now, Titinius.—
Now some slight:—O, be soft upon't: he's taken;
—and dark! [Shuts.

They show too few rejoic.

Cas. Come, down, behold no more.—
O, coward, that I am so to love nothing!
To see my best friend in an enemy's face!—

Enter Pindarus.

Come hither, sirrah.

In Pidarus did I take them from me,
And then I was too weak to save my life,
That whatsoever I saw, I could not do.
There can no attempt be made now, keep tales on
Now be a freemam, and write true reports:
That run there: O Cassus's house, search the house,
What The manuscripts: Here, take them and give them:
And when my mind is covered as his now.

Gentle the servant—Cassus there are revenge'd.
Even with the sword that took them.

Pox. So, I am free; yet would not so have been.
Durst I have done my will?—O Cassus,
For from that country Pindarus was sent,
Where never Roman sail, and none of mine. [Exeunt.

Enter Trebellius and Maelia.

Mrs. It is but change, Titinius; for Octavius
Is overthrow'd by mine own brood power,
As Cassius' legions are by Antony.

V. His tidings well will make comfort Cassus.

Mae. Where are you, poor friend?

Tit. My son, Pindarus his bondsman, is in this.
Mrs. Is it not true of that lies upon the ground?
Tit. He does not make the spring. O my heart,
Mrs. Is not this so?

Tit. No, this was he, Maelia,
But Cassus is no more, in sitting and standing.
As in thy red rays thou dost shine to-morrow,
So in this red-browed Cassius' day is set.
The sun of Rome is set. Our day is gone
Clouds, storms, and dangers come; our needs are done.
Maelia. And these of my ambassadors into that
Mrs. Many of good success have been done this day,
A broad night opens, midnight's child!

V. How dost thou now upon the thoughts of men,
The things that are not? O, come, come consider,
I have never could imagine a happy heart.

But whilst the morn is so-peaceful the other.

V. What, Pindarus! Where art thou, Pindarus?
Mrs. Seek him, Trebellius; I will go to meet
The noble Maelia in the town in safety,
Into his ears: I may say, treasonous it.
For gossiping still. This bears a wen and wearmad.
Shall be as welcome to the ears of Brutus,
Asplings of this night.

Tit. This you, Maelia.

And I will seek for Pindarus the while. [Exit Maela.

When does he not write to Cassus? Did he not meet thy friends? have they spoke to you,

Mae. This night, my lord, then not before their
But this last, I cannot answer every thing. [Shuts.
But hold thee, take this charmed on this bow.
Tit. Do us but good, to the ears, and I
Will do his bidding.—Cassus, come peace,
And see how I regarded Caius Cassius.—

By your leave, gods:—This is a Roman's part:

Come, Cassius' sword, and find Titinius' heart. [Dies.]

Alarum. Re-enter MESSALA, with BRUTUS, young CATO, STRATO, VOLUMNIUS, and LUCILIUS.

BRUTUS. Where, where, Messalla, doth his body lie?

MESSALLA. Lo, yonder; and Titinius mourning it.

BRUTUS. Titinius' face is upward.

CATO. He is slain.

BRUTUS. O Julius Cassar, thou art mighty yet! Thy spirit walks abroad, and turns our swords in our own proper entrails. [Low alarums.

Cato. Brave Titinius!

Look where he has not crown'd dead Cassius!

BRUTUS. Are yet two Romans living such as these?—

The last of all the Romans, fare thee well!

It is impossible, that ever Rome should breed thy foes. —Friends, I owe more tears To this dead man, than you shall see me pay. —

I shall find time, Cassius, I shall find time. —

Come, therefore, and to Thassos send his body;
His funeral shall not be in our camp,
Lest it discomfort us. —Lucilius, come; —

And come, young Cato; let us to the field —

And charge Flavius, set our battles on: —
'Tis three o'clock; and, Romans, yet ere night
We shall try fortune in a second fight. [Exit.]

SCENE IV.—Another Part of the Field.

Alarum. Enter fighting, Soldiers of both Armies; then BRUTUS, CATO, LUCILIUS, and others.

BRUTUS. Yet, countrymen, O, yet hold up your heads!

CATO. What bastard doth not! Who will go with me?

I will proclaim my name about the field: —

I am the son of Marcus Cato, ho! —

BRUTUS. And I am Brutus, Marcus Brutus, I;

BRUTUS. My country's friend; know me for Brutus.

[Exit, charging the enemy. CATO is overpowered, and falls.]

LUCIL. O young and noble Cato, art thou down?

Why, now thou hast as bravely as Titinius;
And may'st be honour'd being Cato's son.

Sold. Yield, or thou diest.

LUCIL. Only I yield to die.

There is so much, that thou wilt kill me straight;

[Offering money.]

Kill Brutus, and be honour'd in his death.

Sold. We must not. — A noble prisoner.

Sold. Room, ho! Tell Antony, Brutus is ta'en.

Sold. I'll tell the news. — Here comes the general:—

Enter ANTONY.

BRUTUS is ta'en, Brutus is ta'en, my lord.

ANTONY. Where is he?

LUCIL. Safe, Antony; Brutus is safe enough;

I dare assure thee, that no enemy

Shall ever take alive the noble Brutus:

The gods defend him from so great a shame!

When you do find him, or alive, or dead,

He will be found like Brutus, like himself.

This is not Brutus, friend; but, I assure you,

A prize no less in worth: keep this man safe,

Give him all kindness: I bad rather

Such men my friends, than enemies. Go on,

And see where Brutus be alive, or dead:

And bring us word, unto Octavius' teat,

How every thing is chance'd. [Exit.]

SCENE V.—Another Part of the Field.

Enter BRUTUS, DARDANIIUS, CLITUS, STRATO, and VOLUMNIUS.

BRUTUS. Come, poor remains of friends, rest on this rock.

DARDANIIUS. Statilius shew'd the torch-light; but, my lord,
He came not back; he is or ta'en, or slain.

STRATO. Sit thee down, Clitus: Saying is the word;

It is a deed in fashion. Hark thee, Clitus. —

DARDAN. I'll rather kill myself.

DARD. Hark thee, Dardanius!

CLITUS. What ill request did Brutus make to thee?

DARDAN. To kill him, Clitus; Look, he meditates.

DARDAN. Now that noble vessel full of grief,

That it runs over even at his eyes.

BRUTUS. Come hither, good Volumnius: list a word.

VOLUMNIUS. What says my lord?

BRUTUS. Why, this, Volumnius:

The ghost of Cæsar hath appeared to me

Two several times by night: at Sardis, once;

And, this last night, here in Philippi fields. I know, my hour is come.

VOLUMNIUS. Not so, my lord.

BRUTUS. Nay, I am sure it is, Volumnius. Thou seest the world, Volumnius, how it goes;

Our enemies have beat us to the pit:

It is more worthy, to leap in ourselves,

Than tarry till they push us. Good Volumnius,

You know'st that we two went to school together;

Even for that our love of old, I pray thee,

Hold thou my sword-hilts, whilst I run on it.

VOLUMNIUS. That's not an office for a friend.

[Alarum still,

CLITUS. Fly, fly, my lord; there is no tarrying here.

BRUTUS. Farewell to you— and you; and you, Volumnius, thou hast been all this while asleep; [Alarum.

Farewell to thee too, Strato. Countrymen,

My heart doth joy, that yet, in all my life,

I found no man, but he was true to me.

I shall have glory by this losing day.

More than Octavius, and Mark Antony,

By this vile conquest shall attain unto,

So fare you well at once; for Brutus' tongue

Hath almost ended his life's history:

Night hangs upon mine eyes; my bones would rest,

That have but labour'd to attain this hour.

ALARUM. Cry within; FLY, fly, fly,

CLITUS. Fly, my lord, fly;

BRUTUS. Hence; I will follow thee.

[Exeunt CLITUS, DARDANIIUS, and VOLUMNIUS.

I pr'ythee, Strato, stay thou by thy lord:

Thou art a fellow of a good respect;

Thy life hath lost some smatch of honour in it:

Hold then my sword, and turn away thy face,

While I do run upon it. Will thou, Strato!

STRA. Give me your hand first: Fare you well, my lord.

BRUTUS. Farewell, good Strato. — Caesar, now be still:

I'll kill not thee with half so good a will.

ALARUM. Retreat. Enter OCTAVIUS, ANTONY, MESSALA, LUCILIUS, and their army.

OFT. What man is that?

MESSAL. My master's man— Strato, where is thy master?

STRA. Free from the bondage you are in, Messala;

The conquerors can but make a fire of him;
ACT V.—SCENE V.

For Brutus only overcome himself,
And no man else hath honour by his death.

Luc. So Brutus should be found.—I thank thee,
That thou hast prov'd Lucullus' saying true. [Brutus, Oct. All that serv'd Brutus, I will entertain them.
Fellow, wilt thou bestow thy time with me?
Str. Ay, if Messala will prefer me to you.
Oct. Do so, good Messala.
Mes. How died my master, Strato?
Str. I held the sword, and he did run on it.
Mes. Octavius, then take him to follow thee,
That did the last service to my master.
Ant. This was the noblest Roman of them all:
All the conspirators, save only he,
Did that they did in envy of great Caesar;
He, only, in a general honest thought,
And common good to all, made one of them.
His life was gentle; and the elements
So mix'd in him, that Nature might stand up,
And say to all the world, This was a man!
Oct. According to his virtue let us use him,
With all respect, and rites of burial.
Within my tent his bones to-night shall lie,
Most like a soldier, order'd honourably.—
So, call the field to rest: and let's away,
To part the glories of this happy day. [Exeunt.

OF this tragedy many particular passages deserve regard, and the concurrence and reconciliation of Brutus and Cassius is universally celebrated; but I have never been strongly satisfied in perusing it, and think it somewhat cold and uninteresting, compared with some other of Shakespeare's plays: his adherence to the real story, and to Roman manners, seems to have impeded the natural vigour of his genius.—J ohnson.

ANTONY AND CLEOPATRA.

This play was entered in the Stationers' books, May 2, 1608; and was, according to the conjecture of Malone, composed in the same year. It was not, however, printed till the folio of 1623. The subject is taken from Plutarch's Life of Antony, which has been closely followed.

ACT I.

SCENE I.

Alexandria.—A Room in Cleopatra's Palace.

Enter Demetrius and Philo.

Phl. Nay, but this dotage of our general's Overflows the measure: those his goodly eyes,
That o'er the files and muster of the war
Have glowed like plated Mars, now bend, now turn,
The office and devotion of their view
Upon a tawny front: his captain's heart,
Which in the scuffles of great fights hath burst
The buckles on his breast, renews all temper;
And is become the bellows and the fan,
To cool a gipsy's lust. Look, where they come!

Flourish. Enter Antony and Cleopatra, with their Trains; Eunuchs fanning her.

Take but good note, and you shall see in him
The triple pillar of the world transform'd
Into a strapett's fool: behold and see.

Cleo. If he be love indeed, tell me how much.
Ant. There's beggary in the love that can be reckon'd.
Cleo. I'll set a hour's how far to be belov'd.
Ant. Then must thou needs find out new heaven, new earth.

Enter an Attendant.

Att. News, my good lord, from Rome.

Ant. Grates me:—The sum.

Cleo. Nay, hear them, Antony:
Fulvia, perchance, is angry; Or, who knows
If the scarce-bearded Caesar have not sent
His powerful mandate to you, Do this, or this;
Take in that kingdom, and enfranchise that;
Perform'st, or else we damn thee.

Ant. How, my love!

Cleo. Perchance,—nay, and most like,
You must not stay here longer, your dismission
Is come from Caesar; therefore hear it, Antony.

Where's Fulvia's process? Caesar's, I would say!—

Both?—

Call in the messengers.—As I am Egypt's queen,
Thou bluesth, Antony; and that blood of thine
Is Caesar's homager: else so the cheek pays shame,
When shrill-tongued Fulvia scolds.—The messengers.

Ant. Let Rome in Tyber melt! and the wide arch
Of the rang'd empire fall! Here is my space;
Kingdoms are clay: our dunghy earth alike
Feeds beasts as man: the nobleness of life
Is, to do thus; when such a mutual pair, [Embracing
And such a twain can do, in which, I bind
On pain of punishment, the world to weet,
We stand up peeress.

Cleo. Excellent falsehood!

Why did she marry Fulvia, and not love her?—
I'll seem the fool I am not; Antony
Will be himself.

Ant. But stir'd by Cleopatra.—
Now, for the love of Love, and her soft hours,
2 U
Let's not confound the time with conference harsh:
There's not a minute of our lives should stretch
Without some pleasure now: What sport to-night?

Cleo. Hear the ambassadors.

Ant. Fye, wrangling queen! Whom every thing becomes, to chide, to laugh,
To weep; whose every passion fully strives
To make itself, in thee, fair and admir'd!
No messenger; but thine and all alone,
To-night, we'll wander through the streets, and note
The qualities of people. Come, my queen;
Last night you did desire it:—Speak not to us.

[Exeunt Ant. and Cleop. with their Train.

Dem. Is Caesar with Antonius priz'd so slight?

Phi. Sir, sometimes, when he is not Antony,
He comes too short of that great property
Which still should go with Antony.

Dem. I'm full sorry,
That he approves the common liar, who
Thus speaks of him at Rome: But I will hope
Of better deeds to-morrow. Rest you happy! [Ex.

SCENE II. THE same. Another Room.

Enter CHAMMAN, IRIs, AlexaS, and a Soothsayer.

Char. Lord Alexas, sweet Alexas, most any thing Alexas, almost most absolute Alexas, where's the soothsayer that you praised so to the queen? O, that I knew this husband, which, you say, must change his horns with garlands!

Alex. Soothsayer.

Soth. Your will?

Char. Is this the man?—Is't you, sir, that know
Soth. In nature's infinite book of secrecy, [things]
A little I can read.

Aler. Shew him your hand.

Enter ENOBARBUS.

Eno. Bring in the banquet quickly; wine enough,
Cleopatra's health to drink.

Char. Good sir, give me good fortune.

Soth. I make not, but foresee.

Char. Pray then, foresee me one.

Soth. You shall be yet far fairer than you are.

Char. He means, in flesh.

Iras. No, you shall paint when you are old.

Char. Wrinkles forbid!

Alex. Vex not his prescience; be attentive.

Char. Hush! Soth. You shall be more observing, than beloved.

Char. I had rather heat my liver with drinking.

Alex. Nay, hear him.

Char. Good now, some excellent fortune! Let me be married to three kings in a forenoon, and widow them all: let me have a child at fifty, to whom Herod of Jewry may do homage: find me to marry me with Octavius Caesar, and companion me with my mistress.

Soth. You shall outline the lady whom you serre.

Char. O excellent! I love long life better than figs.

Soth. You have seen and proved a fairer former
Than that which is to approach. [fortune

Char. Then, belike my children shall have no names: Pr'ythee, how many boys and wenches must
I have?

Soth. If every of your wishes had a womb,
And fertile every wish, a million.

Char. Out, fool! I forgive thee for a witch.

Alex. You think, none but your sheets are privy to Char. Nay, come, tell Irais hers. [your wishes.

Alex. We'll know all our fortunes.

Ero. Mine, and most of our fortunes, to-night, shall be—drunk to bed.

Iras. There's a palm presages chastity, if nothing else.

Char. Even as the o'erflowing Nils presages floods.

Iras. Go, you wild bedfellow, you cannot soothsay.

Char. Nay, if an oily palm be not a fruitful prognostication, I cannot scratch wine ear.—Pr'ythee, tell her but a workaday fortune.

Soth. Your fortunes are alike.

Iras. But low, but how? give me particulars.

Soth. I have said.

Iras. Am I not an inch of fortune better than she?
Char. Well, if you were but an inch of fortune better than I, where would you choose it?

Iras. Not in my husband's nose.

Char. Our worser thoughts heaves mend! Alex-as,—come, his fortune, his fortune.—O, let him marry a woman that cannot go, sweet Isis, I beseech thee! And let her die too, and give him a worse and let worse follow worse, till the worst of all follow him laughing to his grave, fifty-fold a cuckold!

Good Isis, hear me this prayer, though thou deny me
a matter of more weight; good Isis, I beseech thee!

Iras. Amen. Dear goddess, hear that prayer of the people! for, as it is a heart-breaking to see a handsome man lose-wived, so it is a deadly sorrow for a woman to have uncheek'd: Therefore, dear
Isis, keep decorum, and fortune him accordingly!

Char. Amen.

Aler. Lo, now! if it lay in their hands to make me a cuckold, they would make themselves whores, but they'd don't.

Char. Not he, the queen.

Enter CLEOPATRA.

Cleo. Saw you my lord?

Eno. No, lady.

Cleo. Was he not here?

Char. No, madam.

Cleo. He was and did to them; but on the sudden
A Roman thought hath struck him. —Enobarbus,—

Eno. Madam.

Cleo. Seek him, and bring him hither. Where's Alexas?

Aler. Here, madam, at your service.—My lord ap-

Enter Antony, with a Messenger and Attendants.

Cleo. We will not look upon him: Go with us.

[Exeunt Cleopatra, Enobarbus, Alexas, Irais, Char-

MAN, Soothsayer, and Attendants: MESS, Fulvius thy wife first came into the held.

Ant. Against my brother Lucius?

Mess. Ay:

But soon that war had end, and the time's state
Made friends of them, joining their force against Whose better issue in the war, from Italy, [Caesar;
Upon the first encounter, drove them.

Ant. What worst?

Mess. The nature of bad news infects the teller.

Ant. When it concerns the fool, or coward. —On:

Things, that are past, are done with me.—'Tis thus:
When who tells me true, though in his tale lie death,
I hear him as he blatt'd.

Mess. Labienus

(This is stiff news) hath, with his Parthian force,
Extended Asia from Euphrates;

His conquering banner shook, from Syria
To Lydia, and to Ionia;

Whilst—

Ant. Antony, thou would'st say—

Mess. O, my lord!
Ant. Speak to me home, mince not the general
Name Cleopatra as she's call'd in Rome: [tongue]
Rail thou in Fulvia's phrase; and taunt my faults
With such full licence, as both truth and malice
Have power to utter. O, then we bring forth weeds,
When our quick minds he still; and our ill told us,
Is as our eating. Fare thee well a while.
[Exit.]
Ant. From Sicyon how the news? Speak there.
1 Att. The man from Sicyon.—Is there such an
2 Att. He stays upon your will. [One
Ant. Let him appear.—
These strong Egyptian letters I must break,
Enter another Messenger.
Or lose myself in dotage.—What are you?
2 Mess. Fulvia thy wife is dead.
Ant. Where died she?
[Exit Messenger.]
2 Mess. In Sicyon:
Her length of sickness, with what else more serious
Importeth thee to know, this bears. [Gives a letter.
Ant. Forbear me.—
[Exit Messenger.]
There's a great spirit gone! Thus did I desire it:
What our contemporists do often hurt from us,
We wish it ours again; the present pleasure,
By revolution lowering, does become.
The opposite of itself: she's good, being gone;
The hand could pluck her back, that she'd her on.
I must from this enchanting queen break off;
Ten thousand harms, more than the ills I know,
My idleness doth hatch.—How now! Enobarbus!
Enter Enobarbus.
Eno. What's your pleasure, sir? [sir
Ant. I must with haste from hence.
Eno. Why, sir, we know all our women: We see how mortal an unkindness is to them; if they suffer our depauperation, death's th' word.
Ant. I must be gone.
Eno. Under a compelling occasion, let women die:
It were pity to cast them away for nothing; though,
Between them and a great cause, they should be esteemed.
Cleopatra, catching but the least noise of this,
Dies instantly: I have seen her die twenty times upon far poorer moment: I do think, there is mettle in death, which commits some loving act upon her, she hath such a celerity in dying.
Ant. She is cunning past man's thought.
Eno. Alack, sir, no; her passions are made of another but the finest part of pure love: We cannot call her winds and waters, sighs and tears; they are greater storms and tempests than almanacks can report: this cannot be cunning in her; if it be, she makes a shower of rain as well as Jove.
Ant. 'Would I had never seen her!
Eno. O, sir, you had then left unseen a wonderful pleasant work; which not to have been blessed withal, would have discredited your travel.
Ant. Fulvia is dead.
Eno. Sir!
Ant. Fulvia is dead.
Eno. Fulvia? [Ant.
Ant. Dead.
Eno. Whipp'd sir, give the gods a thankful sacrifice.
When it pleaseth their deities to take the wife of a man from him, it shews to man the tailors of the earth; comforting therein, that when old robes are worn out, there are members to make new. If there were no more women but Fulvia, then had you indeed a cut, and the case to be lamented; this grief is crowned with consolation; your old smock brings forth a new petticoat:—and, indeed, the tears live in an onion, that should water this sorrow.
Ant. The business she hath broached in the state,
Cannot endure my absence.
Fno. And the business you have broached here cannot be without you; especially that of Cleopatra's, which wholly depends upon your abode.
Ant. No more light answers. Let our officers Have notice what we purpose. I shall break
The cause of our expedition to the queen,
And get her leave to part. For not alone
The death of Fulvia, with more urgent touches,
Do strongly speak to us; but the letters too
Of many of our countriving friends in Rome
Petition us at home: Sextus Pompeius
Hath given the dare to Caesar, and commands
The empire of the sea: our slippery people (Whose love is never link'd to the deserver,
Till his deserts are past,) begin to throw
Pompey the great, and all his dignities,
Upon his son; who, high in name and power,
Higher than both in blood and life, stands up
For the native soldier; whose quality's springing on.
The sides o'the world may danger: Much is broiling,
Which, like the courseur's hair, hath yet but life,
And not a serpent's poison. Say, our pleasure, to such whose place is under us, requires
Our quick remove from hence.
Eno. I shall do't. [Exit.

SCENE III.

Enter Cleopatra, Charmian, Iras, and Alexas.
Cleo. Where is he?
Char. Cleo. See where he is, who's with him, what he did not send you;—if you find him sad, [does: — Say, I am dancing; if in mirth, report That I am suddenly sick; Quick, and return.
[Exit Ar.tx
Char. Madam, methinks, if you did love him dearly,
You do not hold the method to enforce
The like from him.
Cleo. What should I do, I do not? [thing,
Char. In each thing give him way, cross him in to.
Cleo. Thou teachest like a fool: the way to lose him.
Char. Tempt him not so too far: I wish, forbear;
In time we hate that which we often fear.
Enter Antony.
But here comes Antony.
Cleo. I am sick, and sullen.
Ant. I am sorry to give breathing to my purpose;—
Cleo. Help me away, dear Charmian, I shall fall;
It cannot be thus long, the sides of nature
Will not sustain it.
Ant. Now, my dearest queen, —
Cleo. Pray you, stand further from me.
Ant. What's the matter?
Cleo. I know, by that same eye, there's some good
What says the married woman?—You may go; [news.
'Would, she had never given you leave to come!
Let her not say, 'tis I that keep you here,
I have no power upon you; hark you are.
Ant. The gods best know, —
Cleo. O, never was there queen
So mightily betray'd! Yet, at the first,
I saw the treasurers planted.
Cleo. Why should I think, you can be mine and Though you in swearitng shake the throned gods,
Who have been false to Fulvia? Riotous madness,
To be entangled with those mouth-made vows,
Which break themselves in swearing!
Ave.

Co. Nay pray ye, my Lord, no more about your peace.

But let me know when you shall be happy.

Then was the time for work; I beg you then,— most happy was in your life, and yours.

'Know that our enemies' best, and one part so good,

But was a race of heaven: They are so still,

Or most the greater name of the work,

And art the greatest for love.

ACT I—SCENE V.

Go to, and back, lashing the varying tide,
To set itself with motion.

MESSIAH. O Charman.
Where think'st thou he is now? Stands he before or set he?
Or does he want, or is he on his horse?
O happy horse, to bear the weight of Anthony!
Do heavily bear the weight of Antony, then meet at
The theme of Anthony, the arm
And help him up. He's speaking now.

MENÆA. O Charman.
For so he can see. Now I feed myself
With most delicious potion:—Think on me,
That arm with Phæbus' nimous quaffs back,
And wrinkled deep in time. Heavily-looked Caesar,
Whose face was once above the ground, I was
A messenger so high, that what I would have spoke
Would stand, and make my eyes grow many bow.
There would be another his aspect, and the
With looking on his life.

EMILIA ANTAN.

AEGYPT.

Soverange of Egypt, hail.

CAESAR. How much unkind yet to the Mark Antony?

CLARENCE. Yet, coming from him, that great meditated hatch
With his thought girded thee—

CAESAR. How goes it with my heavy Mark Antony?

CLARENCE. Well, I think he did, dear queen.

CAESAR. And, tell me, if I be right, kiss'd
The last of many deserved woes.

CLARENCE. He swears, and says he has
The present piece:—His speech sticks in my heart.

CAESAR. Mine ear must plung't in twenty

CLARENCE. He's drunk, and, quoth he,
Say, The firm Romans to great Egypt send
The treasure of my country; at whose knee
The more we speak, I think, the more
Mercurius that to Egypt, of the last,
Say then, shall we more marse. So he nodded,
And so, he don't the mount a magnificent steed,
Which noble I would have spoke
Was clearly done by him.

CAESAR. What, was he sad or merry?

CLARENCE. Like to the time of the year between the equinoxes
Of heat and cold, he was not sad nor merry.

CAESAR. O Clarence, signed disposition—Note him.

CLARENCE. Note his, my good Charman, that becomes,
He was not sad, nor he would show it there.
That made then by his, he was not merry.
Which seem'd to show the, his face became lay.
And I egmont in his joy but between heat.
O heavenly joy!—Bes't thou sad, or merry.

CLARENCE. The vision strikes, and then becomes,
And, doth no man else, nor me, my poor,
My madam, twenty several messages
Why do you send so much?

CAESAR. Whom's been that day
When I forget to send to Antony.

CAESAR. The day before a beggar. Ink and paper Charman.

CLARENCE. A better, and a good one.

O Charman, ever say

CAESAR. O that brave Caesar!

CAESAR. He should'd with such another:—emphatically Say, the brave Antony.

CAESAR. The valiant Caesar!

CAESAR. By law, I will give thee beauteous youth,

CLARENCE. The madam's paragon again
My man of men,

CLARENCE. By your most gracious pardon
I may, but after you.

CAESAR. My salut days.

CAESAR. When I was green in judgement, Cole in blood
To say as I had done. But, come away
Give me the paper, he shall have every say a day several greeting, or I will say people Egypt.
ANTONY AND CLEOPATRA.

ACT II.

SCENE I.—Messina. A Room in Pompey’s House.

Enter Pompey, Menenrates, and Menas.

Pom. If the great gods be just, they shall assist
The deeds of justest men.

Men. Know, worthy Pompey, That what they do delay, they not deny.

Pom. Whiles we are suitors to their throne, decays
The thing we sue for.

Men. We, ignorant of ourselves,
Beg often our own harms, which the wise powers
Deny as for our good; so find we profit,
By losing of our prayers.

Pom. I shall do well:
The people love me, and the sea is mine;
My power’s a crescent, and my suiting hope
Says, it will come to the full. Mark Antony
In Egypt sits at dinner, and will make
No wars without doors: Caesar gets money, where He loses hearts: Lepidus flatters both,
Of both is flatter’d; but he neither loves,
Nor either cares for him.

Men. Caesar and Lepidus Are the field; a mighty strength they carry.

Pom. Where have you this? ’tis false.

Men. From Silvius, sir. [Gather.

Pom. He dreams; I know, they are in Rome to—
Looking for Antony: But all charms of love,
Salt Cleopatra, soften thy wand’s lip!
Let witchcraft join with beauty, lust with both!
Tie up the libertine in a field of feast;
Keep his brain fuming; Epicurean cooks,
Sharpen with cloysless sauce his appetite;
That sleep and feeding may pro rogue his honour,
Even till a Lethal’d dulness.—How now, Varrius?

Enter Varrius.

Var. This is most certain that I shall deliver:
Mark Antony is every hour in Rome
Expected; since he went from Egypt, ’tis
A space for further travel.

Pom. I could have given less matter
A better ear.—Menas, I did not think,
This amorous surfeiter would have don’d his helm
For such a petty war: his soldiership
Is twice the other twin: But let us rear
The higher brain fuming; Epicurean cooks,
Can from the lap of Egypt’s widow pluck
The ne’er lust-wearied Antony.

Men. I cannot hope,
Cesar and Antony shall well meet together:
His wife, that’s dead, did trespasses to Caesar;
His brother war’d upon him; although, I think,
Not mov’d by Antony.

Pom. I know not, Menas,
How lesser enmities may give way to greater.
Were ‘t not that we stand up against them all,
’Twere pregnant they should square between them—
For they have entertained cause enough [selves;
To draw their swords; but how the fear of us
May cement their divisions, and bind up
These petty differences, we yet not know.
Be it as our gods will have it! It only stands
Our lives upon, to use our strongest hands.

Come, Menas. [Exeunt.

SCENE II.

Rome.—A Room in the House of Lepidus.

Enter Endoresanus and Lepidus.

Lep. Good Endobarbus, ’tis a worthy deed,
And shall become you well, to entreat your captain
To soft and gentle speech.

End. I shall entreat him to answer like himself: if Caesar move him,
Let Antony look over Caesar’s head,
And speak as loud as Mars. By Jupiter,
Were I the wener of Antonius’ beard,
I would not shave ’t to day.

Lep. ’Tis not a time
For private stomaching.

End. Every time
Serves for the matter that is then born in it.
Lep. But small to greater matters must give way.
End. Not if the small come first.
Lep. Your speech is passion:
But, pray you, stir no embers up. Here comes
The noble Antony.

Enter Antony and Ventidius.

End. And yonder Caesar.

Enter Caesar, Mecenas, and Agrippa.

Ant. If we compose well here, to Parthia:
Hark you, Ventidius.

Cas. I do not know, Mecenas; ask Agrippa.

Lep. Noble friends, That which combined us was most great, and let not
A leaner action rend us. What’s amiss,
May it be gently heard: When we debate
Our trivial difference loud, we do commit
Murder in healing wounds? Then, noble partners,
(The rather, for I earnestly beech,) Touch you the sorest points with sweetest terms,
Nor carress grow to the matter.

Ant. ’Tis spoken well:
Were we before our armies, and to fight,
I should do thus.

Cas. Welcome to Rome.

Ant. Thank you.

Cas. Sit, sir!

Ant. Nay,

Then—

Ant. I learn, you take things ill, which are not so;
Or, being, concern you not.

Cas. I must be laugh’d at,
If, or for nothing, or a little, I
Should say myself offended; and with you
Chide you the world: more laugh’d at, that I should Once name you derogately, when to sound your name
It not concern’d me.

Ant. My being in Egypt, Caesar,
What was ’t to you?

Cas. No more than my residing here at Rome
Might be to you in Egypt: Yet if you there
Did practise on my state, your being in Egypt
Might be my question.

How intend you, practis’d?

Cas. You may be pleas’d to catch at mine intent,
By what did hence befal me. Your wife, and brother,
Made wars upon me; and their contentation
Was theme for you, you were the word of war.

Ant. You do mistake your business; my brother
Did urge me in his act: I did enquire it; [never
And have my learning from some true reports,
That drew their swords with you. Did he not rather Discredit my authority with yours;
And make the wars alike against my stomach,
Having alike your cause? Of this, my letters,
Before did satisfy you. If you’ll patch a quartet,
As matter whole you have not to make it with,
ACT II.—SCENE II. 679

It must not be with this.
Cas.
You praise yourself
By laying defences of judgment to me; but
You patch'd up your excuses.
Ant.
Not so, not so; I know you could not lack, I am certain on't, Very necessity of this thought, that I,
Your partner in the cause 'gainst which he fought,
Could not with graceful eyes attend those wars
Which 'touched mine own peace. As for my wife,
I would she had her spirit in such another:
The third of the world is yours; which with a snaffle
You may pace easy, but not such a wife.
Eno. 'Would we had we all such wives, that the men might go to wars with the women!
Ant. So much incurable, her garbolus, Caesar,
Made out of her impatience, (which not wanted
Shrewdness of policy too,) I grieving grant,
Did you too much disquiet: for that, you must
But say, I could not help it.
Cas. I wrote to you,
When rioting in Alexandria; you
Did pocket up my letters, and with taunts
Did give my missive out of audience.
Ant. He fell upon me, ere admitted; then
The see kings I had newly feasted, and did want
Of what I was I 'twas the morrow, next day,
I told him of myself; which was as much
As to have ask'd him pardon: Let this fellow
Be nothing of our strife; if we contend,
Out of our question wipe him.
Cas. You have broken
The article of your oath; which you shall never Have tongue to charge me with.

Lep. Soft, Caesar.
Ant. No, Lepidus, let him speak;
The honour's sacred which he talks on now,
Supposing that I lack'd it: But oo, Caesar,
The article of my oath,—
Cas. To lend me arms, and aid, and when I requir'd
The which you both owed. [them,
Ant. Neglected, rather; and
Then, when poison'd hours had bound me up
From mine own knowledge. As nearly as I may,
I'll play the penitent to you: but mine honesty
Shall not make poor my greatness, nor my power
Work without it: Truth is, that Pulvia,
To save me out of Caesar's dark wars here;
For which myself, the ignorant motive, do
So far ask pardon, as befits mine honour
To stoop in such a case.

Lep. 'Tis nobly spoken.
Mec. If it might please you, to enforce no further
The griefs between ye: to forget them quite,
We're to remember that the present need
Speaks to atone you.

Lep. Worthily spoke, Mecanias.

Eno. Or, if you borrow one another's love for the instant, you may, when you hear no more words of Pompey, return it again: you shall have time to wrangle in, when you have nothing else to do.
Ant. Then act the soldier only: speak no more.
Eno. That truth should be silent, I had almost forgot. Ant. You wrong this presence, therefore speak no more.
Eno. Go to then; your considerate stone. [more,
Cas. I do not much dislike the matter, but, The manner of his speech: For it cannot be, We shall remain in friendship, our conditions So differing in their acts. Yet, if I knew What hoop should hold us staunch, from edge to edge O'the world I would pursue it.

Agr. Give me leave, Caesar,—
Cas. Speak, Agrippa.
Agr. Thou hast a sister by the mother's side,
Admir'd Octavia: great Mark Antony
Is now a widower.
Cas. Say not so, Agrippa;
If Cleopatra heard you, your reproof
Were well deserv'd of rashness.
Ant. I am not married, Caesar: let me hear
Agrippa futher speak
Agr. To hold you in perpetual amity,
To make you brothers, and to knit your hearts
With an unslipping knot, take Antony
Octavia to his wife: whose beauty claims
No worse a husband than the best of men;
Whose virtue, and whose general graces, speak
That which none else can utter. By this marriage,
All little jealousies, which now seem great,
And all great fears, which now import their dangers,
Would then be nothing: truths would be but tales,
Where now half tall tales be truths: her love to both,
Would, each to other, and all loves to both,
Draw after her. Pardon what I have spoke:
For 'tis a studied, not a present thought,
By duty ruminated.
Ant. Will Caesar speak?
Cas. Not till he hears how Antony is touch'd
With what is spoke already.
Ant. What power is in Agrippa,
If I would say, Agrippa, be it so,
To make this good?
Cas. The power of Caesar, and
His power unto Octavia.
Ant. May I never
To this good purpose, that so fairly shews,
Dream of impediment!—Let me have thy hand—
Further this act of grace; and, from this hour,
The heart of brothers govern in our loves,
And sway our great designs!
Cas. There is my hand.
A sister I bequeath you, whom no brother
Did ever love so dearly: Let her live
To join our kindoms, and our hearts; and never Fly off our loves again!

Lep. Happily, amen! [pey; Ant. I did not think to draw my sword 'gainst Pomp—
For he hath laid strange courtesies, and great,
Of late upon me: I must thank him only,
Lest my remembrance suffer ill report;
At heel of that, defy him.
Lep. Time calls upon us:
Of us must Pompey presently be sought,
Or else he seeks us out.
Ant. And where lies he?
Cas. About the mount Misenum.
Ant. What's his strength
By land?
Cas. Great, and increasing; but by sea
He is an absolute master.

Ant. So is the fame.
'Would, we had spoke together! Ha' we for it:
Yet, ere we put ourselves in arms, deeppatch we The business we have talk'd of.
Cas. With most gladness;
And do invite you to my sister's view,
Whither straight I will lead you.
Let us, Lepidus,
Not lack your company.

Lep. Noble Antony,
Cas. Not sickness should detain me.

Mec. Welcome from Egypt, sir.
Antony. Have the hasten thank I pray. Say Humbly, and if she thereupon, is this true? Eno. This was but as a fly by an eagle; we had much more monstrous matter of feasts, which worthy deserved noting. Mrs. She's a most triumphant lady, if report he square to her. Eno. When she first met Mark Antony, she purred up his heart, upon the river of Cydnus. Agr. There she appeared indeed; or my reporter devis'd well for her. Eno. I will tell you: The harge she sat in, like a burnish'd throne, Burn'd on the water: the poop was beaten gold; Purple the sails, and so perfumed, that [silier: The winds were love-sick with them: the oars were Which to the tune of thutes kept stroke, and made The water, which they beat, to follow faster, As amorous of their strokes. For her own person, It beggar'd all description: she did lie In her pavilion. (cloth of gold, of tissue.) O'er-picturing that Venus, where we see, The fancy out-work nature: on each side her, Stood pretty dimpled boys, like smiling Cupids, With divers-colour'd fans, whose wind did seem To blow the delicate cheeks, which they did cool; And what they uv'd, did. Agr. O, rare for Antony! Eno. Her gentlemens, like the Nereides, So many mermaids, tended her; the eyes, And made their heads adornings: at the helm A seeming mermaid sisses; the silken tackle Swell with the touches of those flower-soft hands, That rarely frame the office. From the barge A strange invisible perfume hits the sense Of the adjacent wharfis. The city east Her people out upon her; and Antony, Enbroid'd in the market-place, did sit alone. Whistling to the air; which, but for vacancy, Had gone to gaze on Cleopatra too, And made a gap in nature. Agr. Rare Egyptian! Eno. Upon her landing, Antony sent to her, Invited her to supper: she replied, It should be better, he became her guest; Which she entreated: Our courteous Antony, Whom ne'er the word of No woman heard speak, Being barb'd ten times o'er, goes to the feast; And, for his ordinary, pays his heart, For what his eyes eat only. Agr. Royal wench! She made great Caesar lay his sword to bed; He plough'd her, and she crupp'd. Eno. I saw her once Hop forty paces through the public street: And having lost her breath, she spoke, and pant'd, That she did make defect, perfection, And, breathless, power breathe forth. Agr. Now Antony must leave her utterly. Eno. Never; he will not; Age cannot wither her, nor custom stale Her infinite variety: Other women Cloy th' appetites they feed; but she makes hungry, Where most she satisfies. For vilest things Become themselves in her; that the holy priests Bless her, when she is riggish. Mrs. If beauty, wisdom, meecy, can settle The heart of Antony, Octavia is A blessed lottery to him. Agr. Let us go.— Good Enoabarbus make myself your guest, Whilst you abide here. Eno. Humbly, sir, I thank you. [Exeunt. SCENE III. — The same. A Room in Caesar's House. Enter Caesar, Antony, Octavia between them, Attendants, and a Soothsayer. Ant. The world, and my great office, will sometimes Divide me from your bosom. Oct. All which time Before the gods my knee shall bow my prayers To them for you. Ant. Good night, sir.—My Octavia, Read not my blinmishes in the world's report: I have not kept my square; but that to come Shall all be done by the rule. Good night, dear lady.— Oct. Good night, sir. Cas. Good night. [Exeunt Caesar and Octavia. Ant. Now, sirrah! do you wish yourself in Egypt? Sooth. 'Wold I had never come from thence, o'ryg! Thither! Ant. If you can, your reason? Sooth. My motion, have it not in my tongue: But yet Hie you again to Egypt. Ant. Say to me. Whose fortunes shall rise higher, Caesar's, or mine? Sooth. Caesar's. Therefore, O Antony, stay not by his side: Thy damon, that's thy spirit which keeps thee, is Noble, courageous, high, unmatchable, Where Caesar's is not; but, near him, thy angel Becomes a Fear, as being o'erpowered; therefore Make space enough between you. Ant. Speak this no more. Sooth. To none but thee; no more, but when to thee. If thou dost play with him at any game, Thou art sure to lose; and, of that natural luck, He beats thee 'gainst the odds; thy lustre thickens, When he shines by: I say again, thy spirit Is all afraid to govern thee near him; But, he away, 'ts noble. Ant. Get thee gone: Say to Ventidius, I would speak with him— [Exit Soothsayer. He shall to Parthia.—Be it art, or hap. He hath spoken true: The very dice obey him; And, in our sports, my better cunning fainst Under his chance: if we draw lots, he speeds: His cocks do win the battle still of mine, When it is all to nought; and his quails ever Beat mine, in hooping, at odds. I will to Egypt: And though I make this marriage for my peace, Enter Ventidius. I'the east my pleasure lies:—O, come, Ventidius, You must to Parthia; your commission's ready: Follow me, and receive it. [Exeunt. SCENE IV. — The same. A Street. Enter Lepidus, Mecenas, and Agrrippa. Lep. Trouble yourselves no further: pray you, Your generals after. [hasten Lep. Sir, Mark Antony Will e'en but kiss Octavia, and we'll follow. Lep. Till I shall see you in your soldier's dress, Which will become you both, farewell.
ACT II.—SCENE V.

SCENE V.—Alexandria.  A Room in the Palace.

Enter Cleopatra, Charmian, Iras, and Alexas.

Cleo. Give me some music; music, moody food

Of us that trade in love.

Attend.

The music, ho!

Enter Mardian.

Cleo. Let it alone; let us to billiards:

Come, Charmian.

Charm. My arm is sore, best play with Mardian.

Cleo. As well a woman with an unmatch play'd,

As with a woman;—Come, you'll play with me, sir.

Mard. As well as I can, madam.  [too short.

Cleo. And when good will is show'd, though it come

The actor may plead pardon.  I'll none now:

Give me mine angle.—We'll to the river there,

My house playing far off, I will betray

Tawny-lint'd fishes; my bended hook shall pierce

Their slender jaws; and, as I draw them up,

I'll think them every one an Antony,

And say, Ah, ha! you're caught.

Charm. 'Twas merry, when

You wager'd on your angling; when your diver

Drew up a salt-bish on his hook, which he

With fervency drew up.

Cleo. That time!—O times!—

I laugh'd him out of patience; and that night

I laugh'd him into patience; and next morn,

Ere the ninth hour, I drunk him to his bed;

Then put my tires and mantles on him, whilst

I wore his sword Phillipan.  O! from Italy;

Enter a Messenger.

Ram thou thy fruitful tidings in mine ears,

That long time have been barren.

Mess. Madam, madam,—

Cleo. Antony's dead?—

If thou say so, villain, thou kill'st thy mistress:

But well and free,

If thou so yield him, there is gold, and here

My bluest veins to kiss; a hand, that kings

Have lipp'd, and trembled kissing.

Mess. First, madam, he's well.

Cleo. Why, there's more gold.

But, sirrah, mark,

To say, the deal are well; bring it to that, [we use

The gold I give thee, will I melt, and pour

Down thy illuttering throat.

Mess. Good madam, hear me.

Cleo. Well, go to, I will;

But there's no goodness in thy face: If Antony

Be free, and healthy,—why so tart a favour

To trumpet such good tidings? If not well,

Thou should'st come like a fury crown'd with snakes,

Not like a formal man.

Mess. Will't please you, hear me?

Cleo. I have a mind to strike thee, ere thou speak'st:

Yet, if thou say, Antony lives, is well,

Or friends with Caesar, or not captiv'd to him,

I'll set thee in a shower of gold, and hail

Rich pearls upon thee.

Mess. Madam, he's well.

Cleo. Well said.

Mess. And friends with Caesar.

Cleo. Thou'rt an honest man.

Mess. Caesar and he are greater friends than ever.

Cleo. Make thee a fortune from me.

Mess. I do not like but yet, madam.

The good precedence; fye upon but yet.

But yet is as a gagler to bring forth

Some monstrous malefactor.  Pr'ythee, friend,

Pour out the pack of matter to mine ear,

The good and bad together: He's friends with Caesar;

In state of health, thou say'st; and, thou say'st, free.

Mess. Free, madam! so, I made do such report:

He's bound unto Octavia.

Cleo. For what good turn?

Mess. For the best turn 't the bed.

Mess. Madam, he's married to Octavia.

Cleo. The most infections pestilence upon thee!

Mess. Good madam, patience.

Cleo. What say you?—Hence, [Strikes him down.

Mess. Good madam, patience.

Cleo. What say you?—Horrible villain! or I'll spurn thine eyes

Like balls before me; I'll unhair thy head;

[She hales him up and down.

Thou shalt be whip'd with wire, and stew'd in brine,

Swarting in 'ring' pickles.

Mess. Gracious madam, I, that do bring the news, made not the match.

Cleo. Say, 'tis not so, a province I will give thee,

And make thy fortunes proud: the blow thou hast

Shall make thy peace, for moving me to rage;

And I will boot thee with what gift besides

Thy modesty can beg.

Mess. He's married, madam.

Cleo. Rogue, thou hast liv'd too long.

Mess. Nay, then I'll run:

What mean you, madam? I have made no fault.  [Exit.

Charm. Good madam, keep yourself within yourself;
The man is innocent.

Cleo. Some innocents' escape not the thunderbolt—

Melt Egypt into Nile! and kindly creatures

Turn all to serpents!—Call the slave again;

Though I am mad, I will not bite him—Call.

Charm. He is afraid to come.

Cleo. Hands ever will not hurt him.

These hands do lack nobility, that they strike

A meaner than myself; since I myself

Have given myself the cause.—Come hither, sir.

Re-enter Messenger.

Though it be honest, it is never good

To bring bad news: Give to a gracious message

An host of tongues; but let ill tidings tell

Themselves, when they be felt.

Mess. I have done my duty

Cleo. Is he married?

I cannot hate thee worse than I do,

If thou again say, Yes.

Mess. He is married, madam.

Cleo. The gods confound thee! dost thou hold there

Mess. Should I lie, madam?  [still?

Cleo. O, I would, thou didst;

So half my Egypt were submerg'd, and made

A cistern for scald's snakes! Go, get thee hence:

Hadst thou Narcissus in thy face, to me

Thou would'st appear more ugly. He is married?

Mess. I crave your highness' pardon.

Cleo. He is married?

Mess. Take no offence, that I would not offend you:

To punish me for what you make me do,
Seems much unequal: He is married to Octavia.
Cleo. O, that his fault should make a knife of thee,
That art not!—What? thou'ret sure of it!—Get thee hence;
The merchandise which thou hast brought from Rome,
Are all too dear for me; He they upon thy hand,
And be undone by 'em!—[Exit Messenger.]
Char. Good your highness, patience.
Cleo. In praising Antony, I have disgraced Cæsar.
Char. Many times, madam.
Cleo. I am paid for't now.

Lead me from hence, I faint: O Iras, Charmian,—Tis no matter:
Go to the fellow, good Alexas; bid him Report the feature of Octavia, her years,
Her inclination; let him not leave out
The colour of her hair:—bring me word quickly.—
Exit Alexas.

Let him for ever go:—Let him not—Charmian,
Though he he painted one way like a Gorgon,
'Tother way he's a Mars:—Did you Alexas
To MARIAN.
Bring me word, how tall she is.—Pity me, Charmian,
But do not speak to me.—Lead me to my chamber.
[Exeunt.]

SCENE VI.—Now Misenum.

Enter Pompey and Menas, at one side, with drum and trumpet: at another, Caesar, Lepidus, Antony, Enobarbus, Micanas, with Soldiers marching.
Pom. Your hostages I have, so have you mine;
And we shall talk before we fight.
Ces. Most meet,
That first we come to words; and therefore have we
Our written purposes before us sent;
Which, if thou hast consider'd, let us know
If'twill tie up thy discontented sword.
And carry back to Sicily much tall youth,
That else must perish here.
Pom. To you all three,
The senators alone of this great world,
Chief factors for the gods,—I do not know,
Wherefore my father should reverences want,
Having a son, and friends; since Julius Cæsar,
When Lucius Philippi the good Brutus ghosted,
There saw you labouring for him. What was it,
That mov'd pale Cassius to conspire? And what
Made the all-honour'd, honest Roman Brutus,
With the arm'd rest, courtiers of beauteous freedom,
To drench the Capitol; but that they would
Have one man but a man? And that is it,
Hath made me rig my navy; at whose burden
The anger'd ocean foams; with which I meant
To scourge the ingratitude that despiteful Rome
Cast on my noble father.
Ces. Take your time.
Ant. Thou canst not fear us, Pompey, with thy sails,
We'll speak with thee at sea: at land, thou know'st
How much we do o'er-count thee.
Pom. At land, indeed,
Thou dost o'er-count me of my father's house;
But, since the cuckoo builds not for himself,
Remain in't, as thou may'st.
Lep. Be pleas'd to tell us,
(For this is from the present,) how you take
The offers we have sent you.
Ces. There's the point.
Ant. Which do not be entreated to, but weigh
What it is worth embrac'd.
Ces. And what may follow,
To try a larger fortune.
Pom. You have made me offer
Of Sicily, Sardinia; and I must Rid all the sea of pirates; then, to send Measures of wheat to Rome: This 'greed upon,
To part with unback'd edges, and bear back
Our large undinted.
Ces. Ant. Lep. That's our offer.
Pom.
Know then,
I came before you here, a man prepar'd
To take this offer: But Mark Antony
Put me to some impatience:—Though I lose
The praise of it by telling, You must know,
When Cæsar and your brothers were at blows,
Your mother came to Sicily, and did find
Her friend so friendly.
Ant. I have heard it, Pompey;
And am well studied for a liberal thanks,
Which I do owe you.
Pom. Let me have your hand:
I did not think, sir, to have met you here.
Ant. The beds! these cast are soft; and thanks to you;
That call'd me, timelier than my purpose, hither;
For I have gain'd by it.
Ces. Since I saw you last,
There is a change upon you.
Pom. Well, I know not
What counts harsh fortune casts upon my face;
But in my bosom shall she never come,
To make my heart her vassal.
Lep. Well met here.
Pom. I hope so, Lepidus. Thus we are agreed:
I crave, our composition may be written,
And seal'd between us.
Ces. That's the next to do.
Pom. We'll feast each other, crewe part; and let us
Draw lots, who shall begin.
Ant. That will I, Pompey.
Pom. No, Antony, take the lots: but, first,
O' last, your fine Egyptian cookery
Shall have the fame. I have heard, that Julius Cæsar
Grew fat with feasting there.
Ant. You have heard much.
Pom. I have fair meanings, sir.
Ant. And fair words to them.
Pom. Then so much have I heard:—
And I have heard, Apollodorus carried.
Eno. No more of that:—He did so.
Pom. What, I pray you?
Eno. A certain queen to Cæsar in a mattress.
Pom. I know thee now; How far'st thou, soldier?
Eno. Well;
And well am I like to do; for, I perceive,
Four feasts are toward.
Pom. Let me shake thy hand;
I never hated thee: I have seen thee fight,
When I have envied thy behaviour.
Eno. Sir,
I never lov'd you much; but I have prais'd you,
When you have well deserv'd ten times as much
As have said you did.
Pom. Enjoy thy plainness,
It nothing ill becomes thee.
Abroad my galley, I invite you all:
Will you lead, lords?
Ces. Ant. Lep. Shew us the way, sir.
Pom. [Exeunt Pompey, Caesar, Antony, Lepidus, Soldiers, and Attendants.

Men. Thy father, Pompey, would ne'er have made this treaty.—[Aside.]—You and I have known, sir.
Eno. At sea, I think.
Men. We have, sir.
Eno. You have done well by water.
ACT II.—SCENE VII.

68:: Pompey have we Octavia could is, they will reconcile this. I come, will you he reconciled to Cleopatra? Eos. Caesar’s sister is called Octavia. Men. True, sir; she was the wife of Caius Marcellus. Eos. But she is now the wife of Marcus Antonius. Men. Pray you, sir! Eos. ’Tis true. Men. Then is Caesar, and he, for ever knit together. Eos. If I were bound to divine of this unity, I would not prophesy so. Men. I think, the policy of that purpose made more in the marriage, than the love of the parties. Eos. I think so too. But you shall find, the hand that seems to tie their friendship together, will be the very strength of their animosity: Octavia is of a holy, cold, and still conversation. Men. Who would not have his wife so? Eos. Not he, that himself is not so; which is Mark Antony. He will to his Egyptian dish again: than shall the sighs of Octavia blow the fire up in Caesar; and, as I said before, that which is the strength of their animity, shall prove the immediate author of their variance. Antony will use his affection where it is; he married but his occasion here. Men. And thus it may be. Come, sir, will you abroad? I have a health for you. Eos. I shall take it, sir: we have used our throats in Egypt. Men. Come; let’s away. [Exeunt.

SCENE VII.

On board Pompey’s Galley, lying near Misenum.

Music. Enter Two or Three Servants, with a banquet.

1 Serv. Here they’ll be, man; Some o’ their plants are ill-rooted already, the least wind i’ the world will blow them down.

2 Serv. Lepidus is high-coloured.

3 Serv. They have made him drink alms-drink.

4 Serv. As they pinch another by the disposition, he cries out, no more; reproaches him to his entourage, and himself to the drink.

5 Serv. But it raises the greater war between him and his discretion.

6 Serv. Why, this it is to have a name in great men’s fellowship: I had as lief have a redcal that will do me no service, as a partisan I could not love.

7 Serv. To be called into a huge sphere, and not to be seen to move in’t, are the holes where eyes should be, which pitifully disaster the checks.

A senet sounded. Enter Caesar, Antony, Pompey Lepidus, Agrippa, Mecenas, Enobarbus, Menas, with other captives.

Ant. Thus do they, sir: [To Caesar.] They take the flow of the Nile By certain marks; the pyramid; they know, By the height, the lowness, or the mean, if deart, Or foison, follow: The higher Nilus swells, The more it promises: as it ebbs, the seedman Upon the slime and ooze scatters his grain, And shortly comes to harvest.

Lep. You have strange serpents there.

Ant. Ay, Lepidus.

Lep. Your serpent of Egypt is bred now of your mud by the operation of your sun: so is your crocodile.

Lep. They are so.

Pom. Sit,—and some wine.—A health to Lepidus.

Lep. I am not so well as I should be, but I’ll ne’er out.

Eos. Not till you have slept; I fear me, you’ll be in, till then.

Lep. Nay, certainly, I have heard, the Ptolemies’ pyramids are very goodly things; without contradiction, I have heard that.

Men. Pompey, a word.

Pom. Forbear me till anon.—This wine for Lepidus.

Lep. What manner o’ thing is your crocodile? Ant. It is shaped, sir, like itself; and it is as broad as it hath breadth: It is just so high as it is, and moves with its own organs: it lives by that which nourisheth it: and the elements once out of it, it transmigrates.

Lep. What colour is it of? Ant. Of its own colour too.

Lep. ’Tis a strange serpent.

Ant. ’Tis so. And the tears of it are wet. Cas. Will this description satisfy him? Ant. With the health that Pompey gives him, else he is a very epicure.

Pom. [To Menas aside.] Go, hang, sir, hang! Tell me of that? away!

Do as I bid you.—Where’s this cup I call’d for? Men. If for the sake of merit thou wilt hear me, Rise from thy stool.

[Aside. Pom. I think, thou’rt mad. The matter!

Rises, and walks aside.

Men. I have ever held my cap off to thy fortunes.

Pom. Thou hast serv’d me with much faith: What’s be jolly, lords, else to say? Ant. These quick-sands, Lepidus, Keep off them, for you sink.

Pom. Hast thou drunk well?

Men. No, Pompey, I have kept me from the cup. Thou art, if thou dar’st be, the earthly Jove: Whatever the ocean pales, or sky inclips, Is thing, if thou wilt have’t.

Pom. Show me which way.

Men. These three world-sharers, these competitors,
Are in thy vessel: Let me cut the cable; And, when we are put off, fall to their throats; All there is thine.

Pom. Ah, this thou should'st have done, And not have spoken o' t's! In me, 'tis villany In thee, it had been good service. Thou must know, 'Tis not my profit that does lead mine honour; Mine honour, it. Repent, that e'er thy tongue Hath so betray'd thine act: Being done unknown, I should have found it afterwards well done; But must condemn it now. Desist, and drink. Men. For this, [aside. I'll never follow thy pall'd fortunes more. Who seeks, and will not take, when once 'tis offer'd, Shall never find it more.

Pom. This health to Lepidus.

Ant. Bear him ashore.—I'll pledge it for him.

Men. Here's to thee, Menas. [Pompey. Enobarbus, welcome.

Pom. Fill, till the cup be hid.

Men. There's a strong fellow, Menas. [Pointing to the Attendant who carries off LEPIDUS. Pom. Why?

Men. He bears The third part of the world, man; See'st not! Men. The third part then is drunk: Would it were That it might go on wheels! [call. Enob. Drink thou; increase the reels.

Men. Come, Pom. This is not yet an Alexandrian feast. Ant. It ripens towards it.—Strike the vessels, ho! Here is to Caesar.

Cas. I could well forbear it. It's monstrous honour, when I wash my brain, And it grows touter.

Ant. Be a child o' the time. [fast Cas. Possess it, I'll make answer: but I had rather From all four days, than drink so much in one.

Men. Ha, my brave emperor! [To Antony, Shall we dance now the Egyptian Bacchanals, And celebrate our drink?

Ant. Let's ha', good soldier. Men. Come, let us all take hands;

Till that the conquering wine hath steep'd our sense In soft and delicate Letho.

Men. All take hands.— Make battery to our ears with the loud music:— The while, I'll place you: Then the boy shall sing; The holding every man shall bear, as loud As his strong sides can volley.

[Music plays. ENOBARBUS places them hand in hand.}

SONG.—Come, thou monarch of the vine, Plump'd Bacchus, with pink eyes; In thy vats our cares be drunk'd; With thy grapes our hair be crown'd; Cup us, till the world go round; Cup us, till the world go round! Cas. What would you more?—Pompey, good night. Good brother, Let me request you off: our graver business Frowns at this levity.—Gentle lords, let's part: You see, we have burnt our cheeks; strong Enobarbus Is weaker than the wine; and mine own tongue Splits what it speaks: the wild disguise hath almost Antick'd us all. What needs more words? Good Good Antony, your hand. [night. Pom. I'll try you o' the shore. Ant. And shall, sir: give's your hand.

Pom. O, Antony, You have my father's house.—But what? we are Come, down into the boat. [friends; ACT III.—SCENE III.

Agr. * 'Tis a noble Lepidus.
Eto. A very fine one: O, how he loves Caesar!
Agr. Nay, but how dearly he adores Mark Antony!
Eto. Would you praise Caesar, say,—Caesar;—go no further. [Praises.
Agr. Indeed, he ply'd them both with excellent
Eto. But he loves Caesar best; Ye the loves Antony:
Hot hearts, tongues, figures, scribes, bard, poets,
Think, speak, cast, write, sing, number, ho, his love
To Antony. But as for Caesar,
Knelt down, knelt down, and wonder.
Agr. Both he loves.
Eto. They are his shards, and he their beetle. So,— [Trumpets. This is to horse.—Adieu, noble Agrippa.
Agr. Good fortune, worthy soldier; and farewell.
Enter Caesar, Antony, Lepidus, and Octavius.
Ant. No further, sir.
Cae. You take from me a great part of myself;
Use me well in it.—Sister, prove such a wife
As my thoughts make thee, and as my furthest band
Shall pass on thy approbation.—Most noble Antony,
Let not the piece of virtue, which is set
Betwixt us, as the cement of our love,
To keep it builded, be the ram, to batter
The fortress of it: for better might we
Have loved without this mean, it on both parts
This be not cherished.'
Ant. Make me not offended
In your distrust.
Cae. I have said.
Ant. You shall not find,
Though you be therein curious, the least cause
For what you seem to fear: So the gods keep you,
And make the hearts of Romans serve your ends!
We will here part.
Cae. Farewell, my dearest sister, fare thee well;
The elements be kind to thee, and make
Thy spirits all comfort! fare thee well.
Oct. My noble brother!—
Ant. The April's in her eyes: It is love's spring,
And these the showers to bring it on.—Be cheerful.
Oct. Sir, look well to my husband's house; and—
Cae. What, Octavius?
Oct. I'll tell you in your ear.
Ant. Her tongue will not love her heart, nor can
Her heart inform her tongue: the swain's down feather,
That stands upon the swell at full of tide,
And neither way inclines.
Eto. Will Caesar weep? [Aside to Agrippa.
Agr. He has a cloud in his face.
Eto. He were the worse for that, were he a horse;
So is he, being a man.
Why, Enobarbus?
When Antony found Julius Caesar dead,
He cried almost to roaring: and he wept,
When at Philippi he found Brutus slain.
Eto. That year, indeed, he was troubled with a
What willingly he did confound, he wail'd at [rheum;
Believe it, till I weep too.
Cae. No, sweet Octavia,
You shall hear from me still; the time shall not
Out-go my thinking on you.
Ant. Come, sir, come;
I'll wrestle with you in my strength of love:
Look, here I have you; thus I let you go,
And give you to the gods.
Cas. Adieu; be happy!
Lep. Let all the number of the stars give light.
To thy fair way!—
Cas. Farewell, farewell! [Kisses Octavia.
Ant. Farewell! [Trumpets sound. Exeunt.

SCENE III.—Alexandria. A Room in the Palace.
Enter Cleopatra, Charmian, Iras, and Alexas.
Cleo. Where is the fellow?
Alex. Half a circuit to come.
Cleo. Go to, go to:—Come hither, sir.
Enter a Messenger.
Alex. Good majesty,
Herod of Jewry dare not look upon you,
But when you are well pleas'd,
Cleo. That Herod's head
I'll have: But how? when Antony is gone
Through whom I might command it.—Come, thou near.
Mess. Most gracious majesty,—
Cleo. Didst thou behold
Octavius?
Mess. Ay, dread queen.
Cleo. Where?
Mess. Madam, in Rome
I look'd her in the face: and saw her led Between her brother and Mark Antony.
Cleo. Is she as tall as me?
Mess. She is not, madam.
Cleo. Didst hear her speak? Is she shrill-tongu'd,
Mess. Madam, I heard her speak; she is low-voic'd.
Cleo. That's not so good: he cannot like her long.
Char. Like her? O isis! 'tis impossible.
Cleo. I think so, Charmian: Dull of tongue, and dwarfish!—
What majesty is in her gait? Remember,
If e'er thou look'dst on majesty.
Mess. She creeps,
Her motion and her station are as one;
She shews a body rather than a life;
A statute, than a breather.
Cleo. Is this certain?
Mess. Or I have no observance.
Char. Three in Egypt
Cannot make better note.
Cleo. He's very knowing,
I do perceiv't:—'There's nothing in her yet:—
The fellow has good judgment.
Char. Excellent.
Cleo. Guess at her years, I pr'ythee.
Mess. Madam,
She was a widow.
Cleo. Widow?—Charmian, hark.
Mess. And I do think, she's thirty.
Cleo. Bear'st thou her face in mind? is it long, or Mess. Round, even to faultiness. [round!
Cleo. For the most part too,
Ant. They are foolish that are so.—Her hair, what colour?
Mess. Brown, madam; and her forehead is as low
As she would wish it.
Cleo. There is gold for thee.
Thou must not take my former sharpness ill:—
I will employ thee back again; I find thee
Most fit for business: Go, make thee ready;
Our letters are prepar'd.
Char. A proper man.
Cleo. Indeed, he is so: I repent me much,
That so I harry'd him. Why, methinks, by him,
This creature's no such thing.
Scene IV.—Athens. A Room in Antony's House.

Enter Antony and Octavia.

Ant. Nay, nay, Octavia, not only that,—
That were excusable, that, and thousands more Of semblable import,—but he hath wagg'd New wars 'gainst Pompey; made his will, and read it To public ear:
Spoke scantily of me: when performe he could not But pay me terms of honour, cold and sickly He vented them; most narrow measure lent me: When the best hint was given him, he not took't, Or did it from his teeth.

Oct. O my good lord,
Believe not all; or, if you must believe, See both not all. A more unhappy lady, If this division chance, ne'er stood between, Praying for both parts:
And the good gods will mock me presently, When I shall pray, O, bless my lord and husband! Undo that prayer, by crying out as loud, O, bless my brother! Husband win, win brother, Prays, and destroys the prayer; no midway Twixt these extremes at all.

Ant. Gentle Octavia,
Let your best love draw to that point, which seeks Best to preserve it: If I lose mine honour, I lose myself: better I were not yours, Than yours so branchless. But, as you requested, Yourself shall go between us: The mean tyme, lady, I'll raise the preparation of a war Shall stain your brother; Make your nearest haste; So your desires are yours.

Oct. Thanks to my lord.
The Jove of power make me most weak, most weak, Your reconciler! Wars 'twixt you twain would be As if the world should cleave, and that slain men Should solder up the rift.

Ant. What if it appears to you where this begins, Turn your displeasure that way; for our faults Can never be so equal, that your love Can equally move with them. Provide your going; Choose your own company, and command what cost Your heart has mind to.

[Exit.

Scene V.—The same. Another Room in the same.

Enter Enobarbus and Eros, meeting.

End. How now, friend Eros?
Eros. There's strange news come, sir.
End. What, man?
Eros. Caesar and Lepidus have made wars upon Pompey.

End. This is old; What is the success?
Eros. Caesar, having made use of him in the wars 'gainst Pompey, presently denied him rivalry; would not let him partake in the glory of the action: and not resting here, accuses him of letters he had formerly wrote to Pompey; upon his own appeal, seizes him; So the poor third is up, till death enlarge his confines.

End. Then, world, thou hast a pair of chaps, no more; And throw between them all the food thou hast, They'll grind the one the other. Where's Antony?
Eros. He's walking in the garden—thus; and spairns The rush that lies before him; cries, Foot, Lepidus! And threats the throat of that his officer,
That murder'd Pompey.

End. Our great navy's rigg'd.
Eros. For Italy, and Caesar. More, Domitius; My lord, desires you presently: my news I might have told betacfter.
End. Twill be naught:
But let it be.—Bring me to Antony.
Eros. Come, sir.

[Exit.

Scene VI.—Rome. A Room in Caesar's House.

Enter Caesar, Agrippa, and Mecenas.

Caes. Contemplating Rome, he has done all this: And In Alexandria—here's the manner of it,— [more; I'the market-place, on a tribunal silver'd, Cleopatra and himself in chairs of gold Were publicly enthron'd: at the seats, sat Cesarion, whom they call my father's son; And all the unlawful issue, that their lust Since then hath made between them. Unto her He gave the establishment of Egypt; made her Of its own, Syria, Cyprus, Lydia, Absolute queen.

Mec. This in the public eye?
Caes. 'tis the common show-place, where they exercise.
His sons he there proclaim'd, The kings of kings: Great Media, Parthia, and Armenia.
He gave to Alexander; to Poleney he assign'd Syria, Cilicia, and Phœnicia: She
In the habiliments of the goddess Isis
That day appear'd; and oft before gave audience As 'tis reported, so.

M. c. Let Rome be thus Informed.

Aggr. Who, quesyous with his insolence
Already, will their good thoughts call from him.
Caes. The people know it; and have now receiv'd His accusations.

Aggr. Whom does he accuse?
Caes. Caesar: and that, having in Sicily Sextus Pompeius spoil'd, we had not rated him His part o' the isle: then does he say, he lent me Some shipping unresort'd: lastly, he frets, and the arms amirurate
Should be depose'd: and, being, that we detain All his revenue.

Aggr. Sir, this should be answer'd.
Caes. 'Tis done already, and the messenger gone. I have told him, Lepidus was grown too cruel; That he his high authority abus'd, And did deserve his change; for what I have con- grant him part; but then, in his Armenia, I quar'd, And other of his conquer'd kingdoms, I Demand the like.

Mec. He'll never yield to that.
Caes. Nor must not then be yielded to in this.

[Exit Octavia.

Oct. Halt, Caesar, and my lord! hail, most dear Caesar! Caes. That ever I should call thee, cast-away! Oct. You have not call'd me so, nor have you cause. Caes. Why have you stoll'n upon us thus? You come Like Caesar's sister: The wife of Antony [not Should have an army for an usher, and The neighs of horse to tell of her approach, Long ere she did appear; the trees by the way, Should have borne men: and expectation faint'd, Longing for what it had not: nay, the dust
ACT III.—SCENE VII.

If we should serve with horse and mares together,
The horse were merely lost; the mares would bear A soldier, and his horse.

Cleo. What is't ye say?

Eun. Your presence needs must puzzle Antony,
Take from his heart, take from his brain, from his time,
What should not then be spared. He is already Traded for levity; and 'tis said in Rome,
That Phocinus an enuich, and your maids.

Manage this war.

Cleo. Sink Rome; and their tongues rot,
That speak against us! A charge we bear i' the war,
And, as the president of my kingdom, will Appear there for a man. Speak not against it;
I will not stay behind.

Eun. Nay, I have done.

Here comes the emperor.

Enter Antony and Caiusius.

Ant. Is't not strange, Caiusius,
That from Tarentum, and Brandusium,
He could so quickly cut the Ionian sea,
And take in Tornye!—You have heard on't, sweet?
Cleo. Celerity is never more admire,
Than by the negligent.

Ant. A good rebuke,
Which might have well becon'd the best of men,
To taunt at slackness.—Caiusius, we
Will fight with him by sea.

Cleo. By sea! What else?

Caius. Why will my lord do so?

Ant. For that he dares us to't.

Eun. So hath my lord da'd him to single fight.

Caius. Ay, and to wage this battle at Pharsalia,
Where Cesar fought with Pompey: But these offers,
Which serve not for his vantage, he shakes off;
And so should you.

Eun. Your ships are not well man'd:
Your mariners are muleteers, reapers, people
Ingress'd by swift impress; in Cesar's fleet
Are those, that often have 'gainst Pompey fought;
Their ships are rare: yours, heavy; No disgrace
Shall fall you for refusing him at sea,
Being prepar'd for land.

Ant. By sea, by sea.

Eun. Most worthy sir, you therein throw away
The absolute soldiery you have by land;
Distract your army, which doth most consist
Of war-mark'd footmen; leave unexecuted
Your own renowned knowledge; quite foresore
The way which promises assurance; and Give up yourself merely to chance and hazard,
From firm security.

Ant. I'll fight at sea.

Cleo. I have sixty sail, Caesar none better.

Ant. Our overplus of shipping will we burn;
And, with the rest full man'd, from the head of Actium
Beat the approaching Caesar. But if we fail,

Enter a Messenger.

We then can do by land.—Thy business?

Mess. The news is true, my lord; he is descried;
Cesar has taken Tornye.

Ant. Can he be there in person? 'tis impossible;
Strange, that his power should be. Caiusius,
Our nineteen legions then shall hold by hand,
And our twelve thousand horse.—We'll to our ship;

Enter a Soldier.

Away, my Theisis!—How now, worthy soldier?
Sold. O noble emperor, do not fight by sea;
Trust not to rotten planks: Do you misdoubt
This sword, and these my wounds? Let the Egyptians,
And the Phœnicians, go a ducking; we
Have used to conquer, standing on the earth,
And fighting foot to foot.

Ant. Well, well, away.

Sold. By Hercules, I think, I am 't the right.

Can. Soldier, thou art: but his whole action grows
Not in the power on't: So our leader's led,
And we are women's men.

Sold. You keep by land
Thelegious and the horse whole, do you not?

Can. Marcus Octavius, Marcus Justeius,
Publicola, and Calcius, are for sea:
But we keep whole by land. This speed of Caesar's
Carries beyond belief.

Sold. While he was yet in Rome,
His power went out in such distractions, as Beguill'd all spies.

Can. Who's his lieutenant, hear you?

Sold. They say, one Taurus.

Can. Well, I know the man.

Enter a Messenger.

Mess. The emperor calls for Cædianus. [forth,
Can. With news the time's with labour; and threes
Each minute, some. [Exeunt.

SCENE VIII.—A Plain near Actium.

Enter Cæs ar, Taurus, Officers, and others.

Cæs. Taurus,—
Taur. My lord.

Cæs. Strike not by land; keep whole;
Provoke not battle, till we have done at sea.
Do not exceed the precept of this scroll:
Our fortune lies upon this jump. [Exeunt.

Enter Antony and Enobarbus.

Ant. Set we our squadrons on your side o' the hill,
In eye of Caesar's battle; from which place
We may the number of the ships behold,
And so proceed accordingly. [Exeunt.

Enter Cædianus, marching with his land Army one way over the stage; and Taurus the Lieutenant of Cæsar, the other way. After their going in, is heard the noise of a sea-fight.

Alcmen. Re-enter Enobarbus.

Eno. Naught, naught, all naught! I can behold no
The Antoniad, the Egyptian admiral, [longer:
With all their sixty, fly, and turn the rudder;
To see't, nine eyes are blasted.

Enter Scærus.

Scær. Gods, and goddesses,
All the whole synod of them!

Eno. What's thy passion?

Scær. The greater cattle of the world is lost
With very ignorance; we have kiss'd away
Kingdoms and provinces.

Eno. How appears the fight?

Scær. On our side like the token d pestilence,
Where death is sure. 'Yon' ribandaged hag of Egypt,
Whom leprosy o'ertake! 'Tis the midst o' the fight,—
When vantage like a pair of twins appear'd,
Both as the same, or rather ours the elder,
The brace upon her, like a cow in June,
Hoists sails, and flies.

Eno. That I beheld: mine eyes
Did sicken at the sight on't, and could not Endure a further view.

Scær. She once being loof'd,
The noble ruin of her magic, Antony,
Claps on his sea-wing, and like a doing millard,
Leaving the fight in height, flies after her:
I never saw an action of such shame;
Experience, manhood, honour, ne'er before
Did violate so itself.

Eno. Alack, alack!

Enter Cædianus.

Can. Our fortune on the sea is out of breath,
And sinks most lamentably. Had our general
Been what he knew himself, it had gone well:
O, he has given example for our flight,
Most grossly, by his own. [night
Eno. Ay, are you thereabouts? Why then, good
Indeed. Can. Towards Peloponnesus are they fled.
Scær. 'Tis easy to't; and there I will attend
What further comes.

Can. To Caesar will I render
My legions, and my horse; six kings already
Shew me the way of yielding.

Eno. I'll yet follow
The wounded chance of Antony, though my reason
Sits in the wind against me. [Exeunt.

SCENE IX.—Alexandria. A Room in the Palace.

Enter Antony and Attendants.

Ant. Hark, the land bids me tread no more upon't,
It isasham'd to bear me!—Friends, come hither,
I am so lated in the world, that I
Have lost my way for ever.—I have a ship
Laid on with gold; take that, divide it, fly,
And make your peace with Caesar.

Att. Fly! not we.

Ant. I have fled myself; and have instructedowards
To run, and shew their shoulders.—Friends, be gone;
I have myself resolv'd upon a course,
Which has no need of you; be gone:
My treasure's in the harbour, take it.—O,
I follow'd that I blush to look upon
My very hairs do mutiny; for the white
Reprove the brown for rashness, and they them
For fear and doting.—Friends, be gone; you shall Have letters from me to some friends, that will Sweep your way for you. Pray you, look not sad,
Nor make replies of loathness: take the hint
Which my despair proclaims; let that be left
Which leaves itself: to the sea-side straightway.
I will possess you of that ship and treasure.
Leave me, I pray, a little: 'pray you now—
Nay, do so; for, indeed, I have lost command,
Therefore I pray you—'I'll see you by and by.

[Sits down.]

Enter Eros and Cleopatra, led by Charmian and Iris.

Eros. Nay, gentle madam, to him:—Comfort him.
Iras. Do, most dear queen.
Char. Do! Why, what else?
Cleo. Let me sit down. O Juno!
Ant. No, no, no, no, no.
Eros. See you here, sir?
Ant. O yfe, yfe, yfe.
Char. Madam?
Iras. Madam; O good empress!—
Eros. Sir, sir,—
Ant. Yes, my lord, yes;—He, at Philippi, kept
His sword even like a dancer; while I struck
The lean and wrinkled Cassius; and 'twas I,
ANTONY AND CLEOPATRA.

IRAS Go to him, madam, speak to him

Act III Sc. 9
ACT III.—SCENE XI.

That the mad Brutus ended,—he alone
Deatb on lieutenancy, and no practice had
In the brave squares of war: Yet now—No matter.
Ces. Ah, stand by.
Brut. The queen: my lord, the queen.
Ces. Go to him, madam, speak to him; He is unqualified with such shame.
Brut. Well then,—sustain me,—O !
Ces. Most noble to arise; the queen approaches; Her head demands ; and death will seize her; but Your comfort makes the rescue.
Ces. I have offended reputation;
A most unwise swerving.
Brut. Sir, the queen.
Ces. O, whither hast thou led me, Egypt? See, How I convey my shame out of mine eyes By looking back on what I have left behind;
Struck in distraction.
Ces. O my lord, my lord! Forgive my fearful sake! I little thought, You would have followed.
Brut. Egypt, thou know'st too well, Most drear, to thy remembrance; And thou should'st stow me after: O'er my spirit Thy full supremacy thou know'st; and that Thy book might from the building of the gods Command me.
Ces. O, my pardon.
Brut. New must To the young man send humble treaties, dodge And pairer in the shits of lowness; who 's 'th out the half the world played as I pleaded,
Making, and marrying fortunes. You did know, How much you were my conqueror: and that My sword, made weak by my infection, would Obey it on all cause.
Ces. O, pardon, pardon.
Brut. Fall not a tear, I say; one of them rates All that is won and lost: Give me a kiss; Even this repays me.—We sent our schoolmaster, Is he come back?—Love, I am full of head:— Some wine, within there; and our vardo:—Forlorn knows,
We scorn her most, when most she offers blows. [Ex.

SCENE XI.—Alexander. A Room in the Palace.

Enter Cleopatra, Enobarbus, Chamalyn, and Lalias.

Ces. Is Antony, or we, in fault? Let us know.
Eno. Antony only, that would make his will Lord of his reason. What though you die From that great face of war, whose several ranges Frighted each other? why should he follow? The nob of his affection should not them Have none of his eminence: it is such a point. When half to half the world opposes & he being The mered question: Twas a shame no less Than was his loss, to course your friendly dogs, And leave his navy pining.
Ces. Pr'ythee, peace.

Enter Antony, with Ephebontus.

Ant. The queen Shall then have courtesy, so she will yield Us up.
Eno. He says so.
Ant. Let her know it.—
To the boy Caesar send this-girted head. A he will fill the wealthy to the brim With princely parts.
Eno. That head, my lord! Ant. To him again: Tell him, he wears the rose Of youth upon him from which the world should note Something particular: his count, steps, legens. May be a comrade, whose misteries would prevail Under the service of a child, as you Art of the command of Caesar: I draw him therefore Today has gay comparisons apart.
Eno. And answer me demand, swear against sword, Ourselves alone? I'll write it: follow me.

[Exit Antony and Ephebontus.

Eno. Yes, like enough, high-banished Caesar will Unstate his happiness, and of the show, Ayros: a world,—I see, men's judgments are A parcel of his fortunes: and things outward Do draw the inward quality after them.
To suffer an exile: That he should dream, Knowing all measures, the first Caesar will Answer his emptiness!—Caesar thou hast sub'd His judgment too.
Antony and Cleopatra

Enter an Attendant.

Att. A messenger from Caesar.

Cleo, What, no more ceremony!—See, my women—
Against the blown rose may they stop their nose,
That is with this, and to the bud. —Admit him, sir.

Cleo. Mine honesty, and I, begin to square. [Aside.]
The loyalty, well held to fools, does make
Our faith more tody; —yet he, that can endure
To follow with allegiance a fallen lord,
Does conquer him that did his master conquer
And earns a place i’ the story.

Enter Tybervs.

Cleo. Caesar’s will?

Thyr. Hear it apart.

Cleo. None but friends; say boldly,

Thyr. So, haply, are they friends to Antony.

Eno. He needs as many, sir, as Caesar has;
Or needs not us. If Caesar please, our master
Will leap to be his friend: For us, you know,
Whose he is, we are; and that is Caesar’s.

Thyr. So —
Thus then, thou most renown’d; Caesar entreats,
Not to consider in what case thou stand’st,
Further than he is Caesar.

Cleo. Thyr. Go on: Right royal.

Thyr. He knows, that you embrace not Antony
As you did love, but as you fear’d him.

Cleo.

Thyr. The scars upon your honour, therefore, he Does pity, as constrained blemishes,
Not as deserv’d.

Cleo. He is a god, and knows
What is most right: Mine honour was not yielded,
But conquer’d merely.

Eno. To be sure of that. [Aside.]
I will ask Antony. —Sir, sir, thou’rt so leaky,
That we must leave thee to thy sinking, for Thy dearest quit thee.

[Exit ENOHRANUS.

Thyr. Shall I say to Caesar
What you require of him? for he partly begs
To be desir’d to give. It much would please him,
That of his fortunes you should make a staff
To lean upon: but it would warm his spirits,
To hear from me you had left Antony,
And put yourself under his shroud,
The universal landlord.

Cleo. What’s your name?

Thyr. My name is Tyverns.

Cleo. Most kind messenger, say to great Caesar this, in deputation
I kiss his conquering hand: tell him, I am prompt
To lay my crown at his feet, and there to kneel:
Tell him, from his all-obeying breath I hear
The doom of Egypt.

Thyr. To your noblest course.
Wise and fortune combaiting together,
If that the former dare but what it can,
No chance may shake it. Give me grace to lay
My duty on your hand.

Cleo. Your Caesar’s father
Oft, when he hath mus’d of taking kingdoms in,
Bestow’d his lips on that unworthy place,
As it rain’d kisses.

[Re-enter Antony and ENOHRANUS.

Ant. Favourites, by Jove that theunders!—

What art thou, fellow? —

Thyr. One, that but performs
The boding of the fullest man, and worthiest
To have command they’d.

Eno. You will be whipping'd.

Ant. Approach, there: — Ay, you kite! — Now
Gods and devils!

Authority melts from my arms. Of late, when I cried, ho!
Like boys unto a noise, kings would start forth,
And cry, Your will? Have you no ears? I am

Enter Attendants.

Antony yet. Take hence this Jack, and whip him.

Eno. 'Tis better playing with a lion’s whelp,
Than with an old one dying.

Ant. Moon and stars!

Whom?—Were’t twenty of the greatest tributaries
That do acknowledge Caesar, should I find them
So saucy with the hand of she here, (What’s her name
Since she was Cleopatra?) — Whip him, fellows,
Till, like a boy, you see him cringe his face,
And whine alond for mercy: Take him hence.

Thyr. Mark Antony,

Ant. Thag him away: being whip’d,
Bring him again: This Jack of Caesar’s shall Bear us an errand to him.—

[Exit Attend. with TyVERVS.

You were half blast'd ere I knew you: — Ha!
I have my pillow left unpress’d in Rome,
Forborne the getting of a lawful race,
And by a gem of women, to be abus’d
By one that looks on feeders?

Cleo. Good my lord,—

Ant. You have been a boggler ever:

But when we in our viciousness grow hard,
(O misery on ‘t!) the wise gods seal our eyes:
In our own flight drop our clear judgments: make us
Adore our errors; laugh at us, while we strait
Thee in confusion.

Ant. O, is it come to this?

Ant. I found you as a morsel, cold upon
The meat of Caesar’s trencher; nay, you were a fragment
Of Cæsars Pompeys: besides what hotter hours,
Unregister’d in vulgar fame, you have
Lazily pick’d out: For, I am sure,
Though you can guess what temperance should be,
You know not what it is.

Cleo. Wherefore is this?

Ant. To let a fellow that will take rewards,
And say, God quit you! be familiar with
My playfellow, your hand: this kingly seal,
And plighter of high hearts! — O, that I were
Upon the hill of Bassan, to roar
The helmed herd! for I have savage cause:
And to proclaim it civilly, were but
A halter’d neck, which does the hangman thank
For being yare about him. — Is he whip’d?

[Re-enter Attendants, with TyVERVS.

1 Ant. Soundly, my lord.

Ant. Cried he? and begg’d he pardon?

1 Ant. He did ask favour.

Ant. If that thy father live, let him repent
Thou wast not made his daughter; and be thou sorry
To follow Caesar in his triumph, since
Thou hast been whip’d for following him: hence
The white hand of a lady never thin.
[Exeunt them back to Caesar;
Tell him thy entertainment: Look, thou say, —
He makes me angry with him: for he seems
Proud and disdainful; harping on what I am;
Not what he knew I was: He makes me angry;
And at this time most easy ‘tis to do’t. —
When my good stars, that were now former guides,
Have empty left their orbs, and shot their fires
Into the abysm of hell. If he mislike
My speech, and what is done; tell him, he has
ACT IV.—SCENE II.

Hipparchus, my enfranchis'd bondman, whom
He may at pleasure whip, or hang, or torture,
As he shall like, to quit me: Urge it thou:
Hence, with thy stripes, begone. [Exit PHILOP.]
Cle. Have you done yet?
Alack, our terrene moon
Is now eclips'd; and it portends alone
The fall of Antony!

Cle. I must stay his time.
Ant. To flatter Caesar, would you mingle eyes
With one that uses his points?

Cle. Not know me yet?
Ant. Cold-hearted toward me?

Cle. Ah, dear, if I be so,
From my cold heart let heaven engender hail,
And poison in the source; and the first stone
Drop in my neck; as it determines, so
Dissolve my life! The next Cassarian smile!
Till, by degrees, the memory of my womb,
Together with my brave Egyptians all,
By the disdaining of this polleted storm.
Lie graveless; till the flies and gnats of Nile
Have buried them for prey!

Ant. I am satisfied.

Cæsar sits down in Alexandria; where
I will oppose his fate. Our force by land
Had nobly held: our sev'rd navy too
Have knitt again, and fleet, threat'ning most sealeike.
Where hast thou been, my heart?—Dost thou hear,
If from the field I shall return once more [Lady? To kiss these lips, I will appear in blood;
I and my sword will earn our chronicle;
There is hope in it yet.

Cle. That's my brave lord!

Ant. I will be treble-sinew'd, hearted, breath'd,
And fight maliciously: for when mine hours
Were nice and lucky, men did ransome lives
Of me for jests; but now, I'll set my teeth,
And send to darkness all that stop me.—Come,
Let's have one other gaudy night: call to me
All my sad captains, fill our bowls; once more
Let's mock the midnight bell.

Cle. It is my birth-day:
I had thought, to have held it poor: but, since my
Is Antony again, I will be Cleopatra. [lord,

Ant. We'll yet do well.
Cle. Call all his noble captains to my lord.

Ant. Do so, we'll speak to them; and to-night I'll force
The wine peep through their scars. —Come on, my There's sap in't yet. The next time I do fight,
I'll make death love me; for I will contend
Even with his pestilent sycke.

[Enter Antony, Cleopatra, and Attendants.

Eno. Now he'll outstraine the lightings. To be fa-
rious,
Is, to be frighted out of fear; and in that mood,
The dove will peck the estridge; and I see still,
A diminution in our captain's brain.
Restores his heart: When valour presys on reason.
It eats the sword it fights with. I will seek
Some way to leave him. [Exit.]

ACT IV.

SCENE I.—Caesar's Camp at Alexandria.

Enter Caesar, reading a letter; Achippa, Mecenas, and others.

Ces. He calls me boy; and chides, as he had power
To beat me out of Egypt: my messenger
He hath whipp'd with rods; dares me to personal com-
Cesar to Antony: Let the old rufian know, [bat,
He hath many other ways to die; mean time,
Laugh at his challenge.

Mer. Caesar must think,
When one so great begins to rage, he's haulted,
Even to falling. Give him no breath, but now
Make boot of his distraction: Never anger
Made good guard for itself.

Cas. Let our best heads
Know, that to-morrow the last of many battles
We mean to fight:—Within our files there are
Of those that serv'd mark Antony but late,
Enough to fetch him in. See it be done;
And least the army: we have store to do 't,
And they have earn'd the waste. Poor Antony!

[Exit.

SCENE II.—Alexandria. A Room in the Palace.

Enter Antony, Cleopatra, Enochus, Charmian,
Iras, Alexas, and others.

Ant. He will not fight with me, Domitius.

Eno. No.

Ant. Why should he not?

Eno. He thinks, being twenty times of better for-
He is twenty men to one.

[Enter, Tune, etc.

Ant. To-morrow, soldier,
By sea and land I'll fight: or I will live,
Or bathe my dying honour in the blood
Shall make it live again. Woot thou fight well?
Eno. I'll strike; and cry, Take all.

Ant. Well said; come on,—
Call forth my household servants; let's to-night

[Enter Servants.

De bounteous at our meal.—Give me thy hand,
Thou hast been rightly honest:—so hast thou;—
And thou, and thon,—and thon:—you have serv'd
And kings have been your fellow too;
What means this?

Eno. 'Tis one of those odd trucks, which sorrow
Shoots
[Aside.

Out of the mind.

Ant. And thon art honest too.

I wish, I could be made so many men;
Which clayd 'p together in
An Antony: that I might do you service,
So good as you have done.

Serv. The gods forbid!

Ant. Well, my good fellows, wait on me to-night:
Scant not my cups; and make as much of me,
As when mine empire was your fellow too,
And suffered my command.

Ant. What does he mean?

Eno To make his followers weep.

Ant. Tend me to-night;
May be, it is the period of your duty:
Haply, you shall not see me more; or if
A mangled shadow: perchance, to-morrow
You'll serve another master. I look on you,
As one that takes his leave. Mine honest friends,
I turn you not away: but, like a master
Married to your good service, stay till death:
Tend me to night two hours. I ask no more,
And the gods yield you fort.

Eno. What mean you, sir,
To give them this di-comfort? Look, they weep;
And I, an ass, an onion-eyed; for shame,
Transform us not to women.

Ant. Ho, ho, ho!

Now the witch take me, if I meant it thus!

2 X 2
Grace grow where those drops fall! My hearty friends,
You take me in too dolorous a sense;
I spoke to you for your comfort: did you see;
To burn this night with torches: know, my hearts,
I hope well of to-morrow: and will lead you,
Where rather I'll expect victorious life,
Than death and honour. Let's to supper; come,
And drown consideration. [Exeunt.]

SCENE III.—The same. Before the Palace.
   Enter Two Soldiers, to their Guard.
1 Sold. Brother, good night: to-morrow is the day.
2 Sold. It will determine one way: fare you well.
Heard you of nothing strange about the streets?
1 Sold. Nothing: What news?
2 Sold. Belfike, 'tis but a rumour:
Good night to you.
1 Sold. Well, sir, good night.
   Enter Two other Soldiers.
2 Sold. Soldiers, Have careful watch.
3 Sold. And you: Good night, good night.
[The first two place themselves at their posts.
4 Sold. Here we: they take their posts:] and to—
   Our navy thrive, I have an absolute hope [morrow]
   Our landmen shall stand up.
3 Sold. 'Tis a brave army,
And full of purpose.
   [Music of hautboys under the stage.
   Peace, what noise?
1 Sold. List, List!
2 Sold. Hark!
1 Sold. Music 'tis the air.
3 Sold. Under the earth.
4 Sold. It signs well,
Does't not?
3 Sold. No.
1 Sold. Peace, I say. What should this mean?
2 Sold. 'Tis the god Hercules, whom Antony lov'd,
Now leaves him.
1 Sold. Walk; let's see if other watchmen
Doe hear what we do. [They advance to another post.
2 Sold. How now, masters?
Sold. How now?
11ow now? do you hear this?
   [Several speaking together.
1 Sold. Ay; is't not strange?
3 Sold. Do you hear, masters? do you hear?
1 Sold. Follow the noise so far as we have quarter;
Let's see how't will give off.
   Sold. [Several speaking.] Content: 'Tis strange.
   [Exeunt.]

SCENE IV.—The same. A Room in the Palace.
   Enter Antony and Cleopatra; Charmian, and others attending.
Ant. Eros! mine armour, Eros!
Cleo. Sleep a little. [Eros!
Ant. No, my chuck—Eros, come; mine armour,
   Enter Eros, with armour.
Come, my good fellow, put thine iron on:—
If fortune be not ours to-day, it is Because we brave her.—Come.
Cleo. Nay, I'll help too.
What's this for?
   Ant. Ah, let be, let be! thou art
   The armourer of my heart;—False, false; this, this.

CLEOPATRA.
Cleo. Sooth, sa, I'll help: Thus it must be.
   Ant. Well, well;
We shall thrive now.—Seest thou, my good fellow?
Go, put on thy defences.
Eros. Briefly, sir.
Cleo. Is not this buckled well?
   Ant. Rarely, rarely: He that unbars this, till we do please.
   To do't for our repose, shall hear a storm.—
Thou fumest, Eros; and my queen's a square
More tight at this, than thou: Despatch.—O love,
That thou could'st see my wars to-day, and knew'st
The royal occupation! thou should'st see
   Enter an Officer, armed.
A workman in't.—Good morrow to thee; welcome:
Thou look'st like him that knows a warlike charge:
To business that we love, we rise betime,
And go to it with delight.
1 Off. A thousand, sir,
Early though it be, have on their riveted trim,
And at the port expect you.
   [Shouts. Trumpets. Flourish.]
   Enter other Officers, and Soldiers.
2 Off. The mora is fair.—Good morrow, general.
All. Good morrow, general.
Ant. 'Tis well blown, lads.
This morning, like the spirit of a youth
That means to be of note, begins betimes.—
So, so; come, give me that: this way; well said.
Fare thee well, dame, what'er becomes of me:
This is a soldier's kiss: rethankable,
Kisses her.
And worthy shameful check it were, to stand
On more mechanic compliment; I'll leave thee
Now, like a man of steel.—You, that will fight,
Follow me close; I'll bring you to't.—Adieu.
[Exeunt Antony, Eros, Officers, and Soldiers.
Char. Please you, retire to your chamber!
Cleo. Lead me.
He goes forth gallantly. That he and Caesar might Determine this great war in single fight!
Then, Antony,—But now,—Well, on.
[Exeunt.]

SCENE V.—Antony's Camp near Alexandria.
   Trumpets sound. Enter Antony and Eros;
   a Soldier meeting them.
   Sold. The gods make this a happy day to Antony!
   Ant. 'Would, thou and those thy scars had once
To make me fight at land! [prevail'd
Sold. Had'st thou done so,
The kings that have revolted, and the soldier
That has this morning left thee, would have still Follow'd thy heels.
Ant. Who's gone this morning?
Sold. Who?
   One over near thee: Call for Enoeburus,
He shall not hear thee; or from Caesar's camp
Say, I am none of thine.
   Ant. What say'st thou?
   Sold. Sir,
He is with Caesar.
Eros. Sir, his chest's and treasure
He has not with him.
   Ant. Is he gone?
   Sold. Most certain.
   Ant. Go, Eros, send his treasure after; do it;
Detain no jot, I charge thee: write to him
(1 will subscribe) gentle adieux, and greetings:
Say, that I wish he never find more cause
ACT IV.—SCENE IX.

693

To change a master.—O, my fortunes have Corrupted honest men.—[Ere, despatch. [Exit.

SCENE VI.—Caesar's Camp before Alexandria.

Flourish. Enter Ceasar, with Agrippa, Enobarbus,
and others.

Caes. Go forth. Agrippa, and begin the fight,
Our will is, Antony be alive;
Make it so known.

Agri. Caesar, I shall. [Exit Agrippa.

Ceas. The time of universal peace is near:
Prove this a prosperous day, the three-noon'd world
Shall bear the olive freely.

Enter a Messenger.

Mess. Antony

Is come into the field.

Caes. Plant those that have revolted in the van,
That Antony may seem to spend his fury
Upon himself. [Exit Ceasar and his Train.

Eno. Alexaus did revolt; and went to Jewry,
On affairs of Antony: there did persuade
Great Herod to incline himself to Caesar,
And leave his master Antony: for this pains,
Caesar hath hang'd him. Cædus, and the rest
That fell away, have entertainment, but
No honourable trust. I have done ill;
Of which I do accuse myself so sorely,
That I will joy no more.

Enter a Soldier of Caesar's.

Sold. Enobarbus, Antony

Hath after thee sent all thy treasure, with
His bounty overplus: The messenger
Came on my guard; and at thy tent is now,
Unloading of his mules.

Eno. I give it you.

Sold. Mock me not, Enobarbus.

I tell you true: Best that you said the bighter
Out of the host; I must attend mine office,
Or would have done myself. Your emperor
Continues still a Jove. [Exit Soldier.

Eno. I am alone the villain of the earth,
And feel I am so most. O Antony,
Thou mine of bounty, how would'st thou have paid
My better service, when my turpitude
Thou dost so crown with gold! This blows my heart:
If swift thought break it not, a swifter mean
Shall outstrike thought: but thought will do't, I feel,
I fight against thee!—No: I will go seek
Some ditch, wherein to die; the soul'st best fits
My latter part of life. [Exit.

SCENE VII.—Field of Battle between the Camps.

Alarum. Drums and Trumpets. Enter Agrippa,
and others.

Agri. Retire, we have engag'd ourselves too far:
Caesar himself has work, and our oppression
Exceeds what we expected. [Exit.

Alarum. Enter Antony and Scarsus, wounded.

Scar. O my brave emperor, this is fought indeed!
Had we done so at first, we had driven them home
With clouts about their heads.

Ant. Thou bleed'st apace.

Scar. I had a wound here that was like a T,
But now 'tis made an H.

Ant. They do retire.

Scar. We'll beat 'em into bench-holes; I have yet
Room for six scotches more.

Enter Enos.

Enos. They are beaten, sir; and our advantage serves
For a fair victory.

Scar. Let us score their backs,
And snatch 'em up, as we take lances, behind;
'Tis sport to mall a runner.

Ant. I will reward thee
Once for thy spritely comfort, and ten-fold
For thy good valour. Come thee on.

Scar. I'll halt after. [Exit.

SCENE VIII.—Under the Walls of Alexandria.

Alarum. Enter Antony, marching; Scarsus, and Forces.

Ant. We have beat him to his camp;—Run one Before,
And let the queen know of our guests.—To-morrow,
Before the sun shall see us, we'll spill the blood
That has to-day escap'd. I thank you all;
For doughty-handed are you; and have fought
Not as you serv'd the cause, but as it had been
Each man's like mine; you have shown all Hectors.
Enter the city, clip your wives, your friends,
Tell them your feats; whilst they with joyful tears
Wash the congealment from your wounds, and kiss
The honour'd gashes whole.—Give me thy hand.

[To Scarsus, attended.

Enter Cleopatra, attended.

To this great fairy I'll commend thy acts,
Make her thanks bless thee.—O thou day of the world,
Chain mine arm's neck; leap thou, attire and all,
Through proof of harness to my heart, and there
Ride on the pants triumphing.

Cleo. Lord of lords! O infinite virtue! com'st thou smiling from
The world's great snare uncaught?

Ant. My nightingale,
We have beat them to their beds. What, girl! though
Do something mingle with our brown; yet have we
A brain that nourishes our nerves, and can Get goal for goal of youth. Behold this man;
Command unto his lips thy favouring hand—
Kiss it, my warrior:—He hath fought to-day,
As if a god, in hate of mankind, had
Destroy'd in such a shape.

Cleo. I'll give thee, friend,
An armour all of gold; it was a kioig's.

Ant. He has deserv'd it, were it carbuncled
Like holy Phoebus' car.—Give me thy hand;
Through Alexandria make a jolly march;
Bear our hack'd targets like the men that owe them:
Had our great palace the capacity
To camp this host, we all would sup together;
And drink carouses to the next day's fate,
Which promises royal peril.—Trumpeters,
With brazen din blast you the city's ear;
Make mingle with our rattling tabourines; [gather
That heaven and earth may strike their sounds to—
Appraising our approache.

[Exit.

SCENE IX.—Caesar's Camp.

Sentinels on their post. Enter Enobarbus.

1 Sold. If we be not reliev'd within this hour,
We must return to the court of guard: The night
Is shiny; and, they say, we shall embattle
By the second hour i' th' morn.

2 Sold. This last day was
A shrewd one to us.
Antony and Cleopatra.

Enter. O, hear me witness, night,—
3 Sold. What man is this?
2 Sold. Be witness to me, O than blessed moon,
When men revolted shall upon record
Bear hateful memory, poor Enobarbus did
Before thy face repent!—
1 Sold. Enobarbus!
3 Sold. Peace; Hark further.

Eno. O sovereign mistress of true melancholy,
The pernicious damp of night dispounge upon me;
That life, a very rebel to my will,
May hang no longer on me: Throw my heart
Against the flint and hardness of my fault;
Which, being dried with grief, will break to powder,
And finish all foul thoughts. O Antony,
Nobler than my revolt is infamous,
Forgive me in thine own particular;
But let the world rank me in register
A master-leaver, and a fugitive:
O Antony! O Antony!
Let's speak To him.
1 Sold. Let's hear him, for the things he speaks
May concern Caesar.
3 Sold. Let's do so. But he sleeps.
3 Sold. Sworns rather; for so bad a prayer as his
Was never yet for sleeping.
2 Sold. Go we to him.
3 Sold. Awake, awake, sir; speak to us.
2 Sold. Hear you, sir?
1 Sold. The hand of death hath rauth him. Hark, the drums [Drums after off].
Demurely wake the sleepers. Let us hear him
To the court of guard; he is of note: our hour
Is fully out.
3 Sold. Come on, then; He may recover yet. [Exeunt with the body.

Scene X.—Between the two Camps.

Enter Antony and Scærus, with Forces marching.

Ant. Their preparation is to-day by sea;
We please them not by land.
Scær. For both, my lord.
Ant. I would, they'd fight i' the fire, or in the air;
We'd fight there too. But this it is; Our foot
Upon the hills adjoining to the city,
Shall stay with us: order for sea is given;
They have put forth the haven; Further on,
Where their appointment we may best discover.
And look on their endeavour. [Exeunt.

Enter Cassar, and his Forces marching.

Cæs. But, being charg'd, we will be still by land,
Which, as I tak't, we shall; for his best force
Is forth to man his galleys. To the vales,
And hold our best advantage. [Exeunt.

Re-enter Antony and Scærus.

Ant. Yet they're not jo' id; Where yonder pine does stand,
I shall discover all: I'll bring thee word
Straight, how 'tis like to go. [Exit
Scær. Swallows have built
In Cleopatra's sails their nests: the augurs
Say, they know not,—they cannot tell;—look grimly,
And dare not speak their knowledge. Antony
Is valiant and dejected; and, by starts,
His fretted fortunes give him hope, and fear,
Of what he has, and has not.

Alarum off after, as at a sea-fight.

Re-enter Antony.

Ant. All is lost;
This foul Egyptian hath betray'd me:
My fleet hath yielded to the foe; and yonder
They cast their caps up, and carouse together
Like friends long lost.—Triple-turn'd whate'ru's! 'tis thou
Hast sold me to this novice; and my heart
Makes only wars on war; no heart to fly.
But when I am reveng'd upon my charm,
I have done all.—Bid them all fly, be gone.

[Exit Scærus.

O sun, thy uprise shall I see no more:
Fortune and Antony part here; even here
Do we shake hands.—All come to this!—The hearts
That spaniel'd me at heels, to whom I gave
Their wishes, do disdain, melt their sweets
On blossoming Caesar; and this pine is bark'd,
That overtopp'd them all. Betray'd I am:
O this false soul of Egypt! this grave charm,
Whose eye beck'd forth my wars, and call'd them
Whose bosom was my crownet, my chief end, [home;
Like a right gipsy, hath, at fast and loose,
Beguil'd me to the very heart of loss.—

What, Eros, Eros!

Enter Cleopatra.

Ah, thou spell! Avaunt. Cleo. Why is my lord enrag'd against his love?
Ant. Vanish; or I shall give thee thy deserving,
And blemish Caesar's triumph. Let him take thee,
And hoist thee up to the shouting plebeians:
Follow his chariot, like the greatest spot
Of all thy sex; most monster-like, be shewn
For poor'st diminutives, to doles; and let Patient Octavia plough thy visage up
With her prepared nails. [Exit Cleo.] 'Tis well
They're not gone,
If it be well to live: But better twere
Thou fell'st into my fury, for one death
Might have prevented many.—Eros, ho!
The shirt of Nessus is upon me: Teach me,
Alcides, thou mine ancestor, thy rage;
Let me load Lichas on the horns of the moon;
And with those hands that grasp'd the heaviest club,
Subdue my worthiest self. The witch shall die;
To the Roman boy she hath sold me, and I fall
Under this plot: she dies for't.—Eros, ho! [Exit.

Scene XI.—Alexandria. A Room in the Palace.

Enter Cleopatra, Charmian, Iras, and Mardian.

Cleo. Help me, my women! O, he is more mad
Than Telamon for his shield; the roar of Thessaly
Was never so emboss'd. [Char.
To the monument:
There lock yourself, and send him word you are dead.
The soul and body rice not more in parting,
Than greatness going off.

Cleo. To the monument:
Mardian, go tell him I have slain myself;
Say that the last I spoke was, Antony,
And word it pr'ythee, piteously: Hence,
Mardian; and bring me how he takes my death.—

To the monument. [Exeunt.

Scene XII.—The same. Another Room.

Enter Antony and Eros.

Ant. Eros, thou yet behold'st me?

Eros. Ay, noble lord.

Ant. Sometimes we see a cloud that's dragonish:
A vapour, sometime, like a bear, or lion,
A lover'd citadel, a pendant rock,
A forked mountain, or blue promontory
With trees upon't, that nod unto the world,
And mock our eyes with airs: thou hast seen these
They are black vesper's pages. [signs;]

Ant. That which is now a horse, even with a thought,
The rack disillusion'd: and makes it indistinct,
As water is in water.

Eros. It does, my lord.

Ant. My good knave, Eros, now thy captain is Even such a body: here I am Antony;
Yet cannot hold this visible shape, my knave.
I made these wars for Egypt; and the queen,—
Whose heart, I thought, I had, for she had mine;
Which, whilst it was mine, had annex'd unto't
A million more, now lost.—she, Eros, has Pack'd cards with Caesar, and false play'd my glory
Unto an enemy's triumph.—
Nay, weep not, gentle Eros; there is left us
Ourselves to outwit ourselves.—O, thy vile lady!

Enter MARSDIAN.
She has rob'd me of my sword.

Mar. No, Antony; My mistress lov'd thee, and her fortunes mingles
With thine entirely.

Ant. Hence, saucy envious; peace; She hath betray'd me, and shall die the death.

Mar. Death of one person can be paid but once;
And that she has discharge'd: What thou would'st do
Is done unto thy hand; the last she spake
Was, Antony! most noble Antony! Then in the midst a tearing groan did break
The name of Antony; it was divided Between her heart and lips; she render'd life,
Thy name so burn'd in her.

Ant. Dead then?—Dead.

Eros. unarmed; the long day's task is done,
And we must sleep:—That thou depart'st hence safe,
Does pay thy labour richly; Go,—off, pack off;—

[Exit Marsidian.

Ant. The seven-fold shield of Ajax cannot keep
The battery from my heart. O, cleave, my sides! Heart, once be stronger than thy continent.
Crack thy frail case!—Apate, Eros, apace.—
No more a soldier:—Bruised pieces, go;
You have been nobly borne.—From me a while.—

[Exit Eros.

I will o'ertake thee, Cleopatra, and Weep for my pardon. So it must be, for now
All length is torture:—Since the torch is out,
Lies down, and stray no further: Now all labour
Mars what it does; yes, very force entangles
Itself with strength: Seal then, and all is done.—
Eros!—I come, my queen,—Eros!—Stay for me: Where souls do couch on flowers, we'll hand in hand, And with our sprightly part, make the ghosts gaze: Dido and her .Eroses shall want troops, And all the haunt be ours. —Come, Eros, Eros! Re-enter Eros.

Eros. What would my lord?

Ant. Since Cleopatra died, I have liv'd in such dishonest, that the gods
Detest my baseness. I, that with my sword
Quarter'd the world, and o'er green Neptune's back
With ships made cities, condemn myself, to lack
The courage of a woman; less noble mood
Than she, which, by her death, our Caesar tells,
I am conqueror of myself. Thou art sworn, Eros,
That, when the exigent should come, (which now
Is come, indeed,) when I should see behind me
The inevitable prosecution of Disgrace, and horror, that, on my command,
Then thou'ldst kill me: do't; the time is come:
Thou strik'st not me, 'tis Caesar thou defeat'st.
Put colour in thy cheek.

Eros. The gods withhold me! Shall I do that, which all the Parthian darts,
Though enemy, lost aim, and could not?

Ant. Eros
Would'st thou be window'd in great Rome, and see
 Thy master thus with pleas'd arms, bending down
His corrigible neck, his face sublime
To penetrative shame; whilst the wheel's seat
Of fortunate Caesar, drawn before him, branded
His baseness that ensued?

Eros. I would not see't.

Ant. Come then; for with a warrant I must be cur'd.
Draw that thy honest sword, which thou hast worn
Most useful for thy country.

Eros. O, sir, pardon me.

Ant. When I did make thee free, sword'ost thou not To do this when I bade thee? Do it at once; [then
Or thy precedent services are all
But accidents unpurpos'd. Draw, and come.
Eros. Turn from me then that noble countenance,
Wherein the worship of the whole world lies.

Ant. Look thee. [Turning from him.

Eros. My sword is drawn.

Ant. Then let it do at once
The thing why thou hast drawn it.

Eros. My dear master,
My captain, and my emperor; let me say,
Before I strike this bloody stroke, farewell.

Ant. 'Tis said, man;—and farewell.

Eros. Farewell, great chief. Shall I strike now?

Ant. Now, Eros.

Eros. Why, there then:—[Falls on his sword.]

Thus do I escape the sorrow
Of Antony's death.

[Die.

Ant. Thrice nobler than myself!

Thou teachest me, O valiant Eros, what
I should, and thou could'st not. My queen and Eros
Hath by their brave instruction, got upon me
A nobleness in record: But I will be A bridgework in my death, and run into
As to a lover's bed. Come then; and, Eros,
Thy master dies thy scholar; to do thus [falling on his sword.

I learn'd of thee. How! not yet dead? not dead?
The guard!—ho!—O, despatch me.

Enter DERCETAS and Guard.

1 Guard. What's the noise?

Ant. I have done my work ill, friends; O, make
Of what I have begun. [an end

2 Guard. The star is fallen.

1 Guard. And time is at his period.

2 Guard. Alas, and woe?

Ant. Let him, that loves me, strike me dead.

1 Guard. Not I.

2 Guard. Nor I.

3 Guard. Nor any one. [Exit Guard.

Derr. Thy death and fortunes bid thy followers fly.

This sword but shown to Caesar, with the tidings,
Shall enter me with him.

Enter Diomedes.

Derr. Where's Antony?

Diom. There, Diomed, there.

Derr. Lives he?

Wilt thou not answer, man? [Exit Dercetas.
Antony and Cleopatra.

Ant. Art thou there, Diomed? Draw thy sword, and suffering strokes for death. [Gives me a dirk.]
Dio. Most absolute lord, my mistress Cleopatra sent me to thee.
Ant. When did she send thee?
Dio. Now my lord.
Ant. Where is she?
Dio. Lock'd in her monument. She had a prophecy of what hath come to pass: for when she saw (which never shall be found,) thou didst suspect she was disposed with Caesar, and that your rage would not be purg'd, she sent you word she was dead; but, fearing since how it might work, hath sent me to proclaim the truth; and I am come, I dread, too late.
Ant. Too late, good Diomed: Call my guard, I Dio. What, ho! the emperor's guard! The guard, come, your lord calls. [Exit, bearing Antony.

SCENE XIII.—The same. A Monument.

Enter above, Cleopatra, Charmian, and Iras.
Cleo. O Charmian, I will never go from hence. Charm. Be comforted, dear madam.
Cleo. No, I will not.
All. All strangers and terrible events are welcome, but comforts we despise; our size of sorrow, proportion'd to our cause, must be as great.
Enter Diomedes.
As that which makes it—How now? is he dead?
Dio. His death's upon him, but not dead. Look out of the other side your monument, His guard have brought him thither.
Enter Antony, borne by the Guard.
Cleo. O thou sun, burn the great sphere thou mov'st in!—darkest standing The varying shore o' the world!—O Antony! Antony, Antony!—Charmian, help; help, Iras; help, friends below; let's draw him hither.
Ant. Peace: Not Caesar's valour hath o'erthrown Antony, but Antony's hath triumphed on itself. Cleo. So it should be, that none but Antony Should conquer Antony; but woe 'tis so! Ant. I am dying, Egypt, dying; only I here importune death a while, until Of many thousand kisses the poor last I lay upon thy lips.—
Cleo. I dare not, dear, (Dear lord my lord, pard'on.) I dare not,
Lest I be taken; not the imperious show Of the full-fortun'd Caesar ever shall
Be brooch'd with me; if knife, drugs, serpents, have Edge, sting, or operation, I am safe: Your wife Octavia, with her modest eyes, And still conclusion, shall acquire no honour Done; I was rid with Chalda, and that your rage Help me, my women, we must draw thee up;— Assist, good friends.

Ant. O, quick, or I am gone.
Cleo. Here's sport, indeed!—How heavy weighs my Our strength is all gone into heaviness. [Lord! That makes the weight: Had I great Juno's power, The strong-wing'd Mercury should fetch thee up, And set thee by Jove's side. Yet come a little,— Wishes were ever fools;—O, come, come, come; [They draw Antony up.
And welcome, welcome! die, where thou hast liv'd: Quicken with kissing; had my lips that power, That I would I wear them out.
All. A heavy sight!
Ant. I am dying, Egypt, dying:
Give me some wine, and let me speak a little.
Cleo. No, let me speak; and let me rail so high, That the false housewife Fortune break her wheel, Provok'd by my offence.

One word, sweet queen:
Of Caesar seek your honour, with your safety. —O! Cleo. They do not go together.
Ant. Gentle, hear me!
None about Caesar trust, but Proculeius.
Cleo. My resolution, and my hands, I shall trust;
None about Caesar. Ant. The memorable change now at my end, Laughter not sorrow at: but please your thoughts, To feeding them with those my former fortunes Wherein I liv'd, the greatest prince o' the world, The noblest: and do now not basely die, Nor cowardly; put off my helmet to My countryman, a Roman, by a Roman Valiantly vanish'd. Now, my spirit is going; I live no more. [Dies.
Cleo. Noblest of men, woc't die? Hast thou no care of me? shall I abide In this dull world, which in thy absence is No better than a sty?—O, see my women, The crown o' the earth doth melt.—My lord!— Ant. O, witter'd is the garland of the war, The soldier's pole is fallen; young boys, and girls, Are level now with men: the odds is gone, And there is nothing left remarkable Beneath the visiting moon. [She faints.
Char. O, quietness, lady! Iras. She is dead too, our sovereign. Char. Lady,— Iras. Cleo. O madam, madam, madam! Royal Egypt:
Empress! [Char. Peace, peace, peace, Iras.
Cleo. No more, but e'en a woman; and commanded By such poor passion as the maid that milks, And does the meanest chores.—It were for me To throw my scepter at the injurious gods; To tell them, that this world did equal theirs, Till they had stolen our jewel. All's but nought; Patience is sottish; and impatience does Become a dog that's mad: Then is it sin, To rush into the secret house of death, Ere death dare come to us?—How do you women? What, what? good cheer! Why, how now, Charmian? My noble girls!—Ah, women, women! lock Our lamp's spent, it's out—Good sirs, take heart: [To the Guard below.
We'll bury him: and then, what's brave, what's noble: Let's do it after the high Roman fashion, And make death proud to take us. Come, away: This case of that huge spirit now is cold. Ah! women, come; we have no friend But resolution, and the briefest end.

[Exeunt; those above bearing off Antony's body.
ACT V.

SCENE I.—Cæsar's Camp before Alexandria.

Enter Cæsar, Agrippa, Dolabella, Mecenas, Gallus, Proculeius, and others.

Cæs. Go to him, Dolabella, bid him yield;
Being so, frustrate, tell him, he mocks us by
The pains that he makes.

Dol. Cæsar, I shall.

[Exit Dolabella.

Enter Dercetas, with the sword of Antony.

Cæs. Wherefore is that? and what art thou, that dar'st
Appear thus to us?

Derc. I am call'd Dercetas;
Mark Antony I serv'd, who best was worthy
Best to be serv'd: whilst he stood up, and spoke,
He was my master: and I wore my life,
To spend upon his haters: If thou please
To take me to thee, as I was to him,
I'll be to Cæsar; if thou pleasest not,
I yield thee up my life.

Cæs. What is't thou say'st?

Derc. I say, O Cæsar, Antony is dead.

Cæs. The breaking of so great a thing should make
A greater crack: The round world should shock
Lions into civil streets, And citizens to their dens:—The death of Antony
Is not a single aim; in the name lay
A moiety of the world.

Cæs. He is dead, Cæsar;
Not by a public minister of justice,
Nor by a hired knife; but that self hand,
Which writ his honour in the acts he did.
Hath, with the courage which the heart did lend it,
Splitted the heart.—This is his sword;
I robb'd his wound of it; behold it stain'd
With his most noble blood.

Ces. Look you sad, friends?
The gods rebuke me, but it is a tidings
To wash the eyes of kings,
That nature must compel us to lament
Our most persist'd deeds.

Men. His taints and honours
Waged equal with him.

Agr. A rarer spirit never Did steer humanity: but you, gods, will give us
Some faults to make us men. Cæsar is touch'd.

Men. When such a spacious mirror's set before him,
He needs must see himself.

Cæs. O Antony! I have follow'd thee to this:—But we do lance
Diseases in our bodies: I must perfirce
Have shewn to thee such a declining day,
Or look on thing; we could not stall together
In the whole world: But yet let me lament,
With tears as sovereign as the blood of hearts,
That thou, my brother, my competitor
In top of all design, my mate in empire,
Friend and companion in the front of war,
The arm of mine own body, and the heart
Where mine his thoughts did kindle,—that our stars
Unreconciliable, should divide
Our equalness to this.—Hear me, good friends,—
But I will tell you at some meeter season;

Enter a Messenger.

The business of this man looks out of him,
We'll hear him what he says. —Whence are you?

Mess. A poor Egyptian yet. The queen my mistres,
Confir'd in all she has, her monument,
Of thy intents desires instruction;
That she preparedly may frame herself
To way she's forced to.

Cæs. Bid her have good heart;
She soon shall know of us, by some of ours,
How honourable and how kindly we Determine for her: for Cæsar cannot live
To be ungentle.

Mess. So the gods preserve thee! [Exit.

Cæs. Come hither, Proculeius; Go, and say,
We purpose her no shame: give her what comforts
The quality of her passion shall require:
Lest, in her greatness, by some mortal stroke
She do defeat us: for her life in Rome
Would be eternal in our triumph: Go,
And, with your speediest, bring us what she says,
And how you find of her.

Pro. Cæsar, I shall. [Exit Proculeius.

Cæs. Gallus, go you along.—Where's Dolabella,
To second Proculeius? [Exit Gallus.

Agr. Mess. Dolabella!

Cæs. Let him alone, for I remember now
How he's employed; he shall in time be ready.
Go with me to my tent: where you shall see
How hardly I was drawn into this war;
How calm and gentle I proceeded still
In all my writings; Go with me, and see
What I can shew in this.

SCENE II.—Alexandria. A Room in the Monument.

Enter Cleopatra, Charmian, and Iras.

Cleo. My desolation does begin to make
A better life: 'Tis paltry to be Cæsar;
Not being fortune, he's but fortune's knave.
A minister of her will; And it is great
To do that thing that ends all other deeds:
Which shaketh accidents, and bolts up change;
Which sleeps, and never palates more the dung,
The beggar's nurse and Cæsar's.

Enter to the gates of the Monument, Proculeius,
Gallus, and Soldiers.

Pro. Cæsar sends greeting to the queen of Egypt;
And bids thee study on what fair demands
Thou mean'st to have him grant thee.

Cleo. [Within.] What's thy name?

Pro. My name is Proculeius.

Cleo. [Within.] Antony Did tell me of you, bade me trust you; but I do not greatly care to be deceiv'd
That have no use for trusting. If your master
Would have a queen his beggar, you must tell him,
That majesty, to keep decorum, must
No less beg than a kingdom: if he please
To give me conquer'd Egypt for my son,
He gives me so much of mine own, as I
Will kneel to him with thanks.

Pro. Be of good cheer; You are fallen into a princely hand, fear nothing:
Make your full reference freely to my lord,
Who is so full of grace, that it flows over
On all that need: Let me report to him
Your sweet dependancy: and you shall find
A conqueror, that will pray in aid for kindness,
Where he for grace is kneel'd to.

Clo. [Within.] Pray you, tell him
I am his fortune's vassal, and I send him
The greatness he has got. I hourly learn
A doctrine of obedience: and would gladly
Look him in the face.

Pro. This I'll report, dear lady.
Have comfort: for, I know, your plight is pitied
Of him that caus'd it.

Cleo. You see how easily she may be surpriz'd;
[Here Proculeius, and two of the Guard, ascend the Monument by a ladder placed against a window,]
ANTONY AND CLEOPATRA.

and having descended, came behind CLEOPATRA.
Some of the Guard usher and open the gate.
Cleopat/. Shall Caesar come.

	now the Royal queen!

Cleop. O Cleopatra! thou art taken, queen!— Cleop. Quick, quick, good hands! Draw up a dagger.

Pros. Hold, worthy lady, hold! [Cesar's dismount.

Do not yourself such wrong, who are in this Relief'd, but not betray'd.

Cle. What, but of death too
That rides our dogs of langoust?

Pros. Cleopatra,

Do not abuse our master's bounty.
The nothing of yourself; let the world see
His nobleness as well acted, which your death
Will never let come forth.

Cle. Where art thou, death?

Come hither, come! come, come, and take a queen
Worthy many babes and beggars!

Pros. Cleo. Sir, I will eat no meat. I'll not drink, sir;—
If I am talk, once come be necessary.
I will not sleep neither: This mortal house I'll ruin.
Do Caesar what he can. Know, sir, that I
Will not wait pinion'd at your master's court;
Not once be chains'd with the sober eye
Of dull Octavia. Shall they moist me up,
And show me to the shunting variety
Of censoring Rome? Rather a ditch in Egypt:
Be gentle grave to me! rather on Nubis' sand
Lay me stark naked, and let the water dies.
Blow me into shunting rather make
My country's high pyramids my globe,
And hang me up in comfort.

Pros. You do extend
These thoughts of horror farther than you shall Find cause in Caesar.

Enter DOLOBILLA.

Dol. Proculus,
What thou hast done thy master Caesar knows,
And be it hard, yet for thee; as for the queen,
I'll take her to my guard.

Cleo. So, Dolobilla.
It shall content me best: be gentle to her.—
To Caesar I will speak what you shall please,
If you'll employ me to him. [To CLEOPATRA.

Cleo. Say, I would die. [Exeunt PROCOLES and SOLDIERS.

Dol. Most noble empress, you have heard of me! Cleo. I cannot tell.

Dol. Assuredly, you know me.
Cleo. No matter, sir, what I have heard, or known.
You range, when boys, or women; tell their dreams;
Is't not your trick?

Dol. I understand not, madam.
Cleo. I dream'd, there was an emperor Antony;—
O, such another sleep, that I might see
Bet with another man!

Dol. If it might please you.—
Cleo. His face was as the heaven's, and therein stuck
A sun and moon, which kept their course, and lighted
The little O, the earth.

Dol. Most sovereign creature.
Cleo. His legs beswung the ocean: his rear'd arm
Crewed the world: his voice was proportion'd
As all the tuned spheres, and that to friends:
But when he mean'd to quell and shake the orb,
He was as rattling thunder. For his bounty,
There was no winter's; an eternal thaw,
That grew the more by repayings: His desires
Were help'd:—ye; they shew'd o' his back above
The element they liv'd in: in his livery
Walk'd crowns, and crownets; realms and islands
As plates dropp'd from his pocket.

Cleo. Think you, there was, or might be, such a man
As this I dream'd of?

Cleo. Gentile madam, no.
Cleo. You lie, up to the hearing of the gods.

But, if there be, or ever were one such,
It's past the size of dreaming: Nature wants stuff
To vie strange forms with fancy; yet, to imagine
An Antony, were nature's piece 'gainst fancy,
Condemning shadows quite.

Dol. Hear me, good madam:
Your loss is as yourself, great; and you bear it
As answering to the weight: 'Would I might never Overtake pursu'd success, but I do feel,
By the rebound of yours, a grief that shoots
My very heart at root.

Cleo. I thank you, sir.

Know you, what Caesar means to do with me?

Dol. I am loath to tell you what I would you knew.

Cleo. Nay, pray you, sir.

Dol. Though be he honourable,—
Cleo. He'll lead me then in triumph?

Dol. Medam, be will;

I know it.

Hushes. Make way there,—Cesar.

Enter Cesar, GALLUS, PROCOLES, MACENAS, SELUCEUS, and ATTENDANTS.

Cesar. Which is the queen

Of Egypt?

Cesar. Tis the emperor, madam. [CLEOPATRA kneels.

Cesar. Arise,
You shall not kneel:—

I pray you, rise; rise, Egypt.

Cleo. Sir, the gods
Will have it thus: my master and my lord
I must obey.

Cesar. Take to you so hard thoughts:
The record of what injures you did us,
Though written in our flesh, we shall remember
As things but done by chance.

Dol. Sele so sir o' the world,
I cannot project mine own cause so well
To make it clear: but do confess, I have Been laden with like frailties, which before
Have often shamed our sex.

Cesar. Cleopatra, know,
We'll extenuate rather than enforce:
If you apply yourself to our interest,
Which towards you are most gentle, you shall find
A means in this change; but if you seek
To lay on me a cruelty, by taking
Antony's course, you shall bereave yourself
Of my good purposes, and put your children
To that destruction which I'll guard them from,
If thereto you rely. I'll take my leave. [and we Clear all through all the world: 'tis yours;
Your scratch'd-out, and your signs of conquest shall Hang in what place you please. Here, my good lord.
Cesar. You shall advise me in all for Cleopatra.

Cesar. This is the brief of money, plate, and jewels,
I am possess'd of: 'tis in exact value:
Not petty things admitted.—Where's Sceucus?

Sel. Here, madam.

Cesar. This is my treasure: let him speak, my lord.
Upon his peril, that I have reserv'd
To myself nothing. Speak the truth, Sceucus.

Sel. Madam,
I had rather see my lips, than, to my peril,
Speak that which is not.

Cleo. What have I kept back?
ACT V—SCENE II.

Sci. Enough to purchase what you have made known.

Caes. Nay, blush not, Cleopatra: I approve Your wisdom in the deed.

Cleo. See, Caesar! O, behold,
How pomp is follow'd! mine will now be yours;
And, should we shift certain, yours would be mine.
The ingratitude of this Seleucus does
Even make me wild: O slave, of no more trust:
Than love that's hier'd!—What, guest thou back? Thou shalt
Go back, I warrant thee: I'll catch thine eyes,
Though they had wings: Slave, soul-less villain, dog!
O rarey base?

Cleo. Good queen, let us entreat you.

Cleo. O Caesar, what a wounding shame is this;
That thou, touching here to visit me,
Duing the honour of thy lordliness
To one so meek, that mine own servant should Parel the sum of my disgraces by Addition of his envy! Say, good Caesar,
That I some lady trikes have reserv'd,
Immonent things, things of such dignity
As we greet modern friends withal; and say,
Some noble token I have kept apart
For Livia, and Octavia, to induce
Their mediation; must I be unfolded
With words that I have bred? This gods! It smites me
Beneath the fall I have. Pr'ythee, go hence;
Or I shall shew the end of my spirits [To Seleucus]
Through the ashes of my chance:—Wert thou a man,
Thou would'st have mercy on me.

Cleo. Forbear, Seleucus. [Exit Seleucus.]

Cleo. Be it known, that we, the greatest, are mis-
Forbearances that others do; and, when we fall, [thought
We answer others' merits in our name,
Are therefore to be pitied.

Cleo. Cleopatra,
Not what you have reserv'd, nor what you acknowledg'd,
Put me the roll of conquest: still be it yours,
Bestow it at your pleasure; and believe,
Caesar's no merchant, to make prize with you
Of things that merchants sold. Therefore be cheerd;
Make not your thoughts your prisoners: no, dear queen.
For we intend so to dispose you, as Yourself shall give us counsel.

Cleo. O, my mistress, and my lord!

Cleo. Not so: Adieu. [Exit Caesar, and his Train.]

Cleo. He words me, girls, he words me, that I should Be noble to myself: but bark thee, Charmian, not [Whispers Charmian.]

Ires. Finish, good lady: the bright day is done.
And we are for the dark.

Cleo. Hie thee again: I have spoke already, and it is provided;
Go, put it to the haste.

Clown. Madam, I will.

Re-enter Dolabella.

Dol. Where is the queen?

Cleo. Behold, sir. [Exit Charmian, Dolabella!]

Dol. Madam, is therto sworn by your command,
Which my love makes religion to obey.
Tell you this: Caesar through Syria
Intends his journey; and, within three days,
You with your children will be send before:
Make your best use of this: I have performed
Your pleasure, and my promise.

Cleo. I shall remain your debtor.

Dol. I your servant.

Adieu, good queen: I must attend on Caesar.

Cleo. Farewell, and thanks. [Exit Dol.] Now,
Ires, what think'st thou?

Thou, an Egyptian puppet, shalt be shown
In Rome, as well as if a mechanic slave.
With greedy apons, rules, and hammers, shall Uplift us to the view: in their thick breathes,
Rank of gross dirt, shall we be enclosed,
And forc'd to drink their vapours.

Ires. The gods forbid!

Cleo. Nay, 'tis most certain, Ires: Sausy factors
Will catch at us, like strumpets: and would thumpers
Ballad us out o'tunes: the quick comedians
Extemporally will stage us, and present:
Our Alexandrian revels: Antony
Shall be brought drunkent forth, and I shall see
Some squeezing Cleopatra boy my greatness
I' th' posture of a whore.

Ires. O the good gods!

Cleo. Nay, that is certain.

Ires. I'll never see it: for, I am sure, my nails
Are stronger than mine eyes.

Cleo. Why, that's the way
To fool their preparation, and to conquer
Their most absurd intents.—Now, Charmian!—

Enter the Guard.

Guard. Here is a rural fellow,
That will not be denied your highness' presence;
He brings you figs.

Cleo. Let him come in. How poor an instrument [Exit Guard.

Cleo. May do a noble deed! he brings me liberty.
My resolution's plac'd: and I have nothing
Of woman in me: Now from head to foot
I am marble-construst: now the fleeting moon
No planet is of mine.

Re-enter Guard, with a Clown bringing a basket.

Guard. This is the man.

Cleo. Avoid, and leave him. [Exit Guard.

Bask. Thou the pretty worm of Niles there,
That kills and parns not!

Clown. Truly I have him: but I would not be the party
That should desire you to touch him, for his biting
Is merciless; those, that do the of it, do seldom
Or never recover.

Cleo. Remember'st thou any that have die'd on't?

Clown. Very many, men and women too. I heard
One of them no longer than yesterday: a very honest
Woman, but something given to lie: as a woman
Should not do, but in the way of honesty: how she cried of the biting of it, what pain she felt.—Truly, she makes a very good report of the worm: But he
That will believe all that they say, shall never be saved
By half that they do: But this is most certain,
The worm's an odd worm.

Cleo. Get thee hence; farewell.

Clown. I wish you all joy of the worm.

Cleo. Farewell. [Drown sets down the basket.

Clown. You must think this: look you, that the worm will do his kind.

Cleo. Ay, ay; farewell.

Clown. Look you, the worm is not to be trusted, but in the keeping of wise people: for, indeed, there is no goodness in the worm.

Cleo. Take thou no care; it shall be heeded.

Clown. Very good: give it nothing, I pray you, for it is not worth the feeding.

Cleo. Will it eat me?

Clown. You must not think I am so simple, but I know the devil himself will not eat a woman: I know, that a woman is a dish for the gods, if the devil dress her not. But, truly, these same whoreous devils do the gods great harm in their women; for in every ten that they make, the devils mar five.

Cleo. Well, get thee gone: farewell.

Clown. Yes, forsooth; I wish you joy of the worm.

Enter the Guard, rushing in.

1 Guard. Where is the queen?

Char. Speak softly, wake her not.

1 Guard. Cesar hath sent—

Char. Too slow a messenger. [Applies the asp.

O, come; pace, despatch; I partly feel thee.

1 Guard. Approach, ho! All's not well; Cesar's gogal'd, I'll call him.

2 Guard. Here's Dolabella sent from Cesar;—

1 Guard. What work is here?—Charman, is this well done?

Char. It is well done, and fitting for a princess
Descended of so many royal kings.

Ah, soldier! [Exit.

Enter Dolabella.

Dol. How goes it here?

2 Guard. All dead.

Dol. Cesar, thy thoughts
Touch their effects in this: Thyself art coming
To see perform'd the dreaded act, which thou
So sought'st to hinder.

Within.

A way there, a way for Cesar.

Dol. Enter Cesar, and Attendants.

Dol. O, sir, you are too sure an augurer;
That you did fear, is done.

Ces. Bravest at the last:
She levell'd at our purposes, and being royal,
Took her own way.—The manner of their deaths?
I must see them blest.

Dol. Who was last with them?

1 Guard. A simple countryman, that brought her
This was his basket. [Fig.

Ces. Poison'd then.

1 Guard. This is an aspick's trail: and these figs—
Have slime upon them, such as the aspick leaves
Upon the coves of Nile.

Ces. O noble weakness!—
If they had swallow'd poison, 'twould appear
By external swallowing: but she looks like sleep,
As she would catch another Antony
In her strong toil of grace.

Dol. Here, on her breast,
There is a vent of blood, and something blown:
The like is on her arm. [Leaves

1 Guard. This is an aspick's trail: and these figs—
Have slime upon them, such as the aspick leaves
Upon the coves of Nile.

Ces. Most probable,
That she is dead: for her physician tells me,
She hath pursu'd conclusions infinite
Of easy ways to die.—Take up her bed;

And bear her women from the monument:—
She shall be buried by her Antony;
No grave upon the earth shall clip it in
A pair so famous. High events as these Strike those that make them; and their story is Not less in pity, than his glory, which Brought them to be lamented. Our army shall,
In solemn show, attend this funeral;
And then to Rome.—Come, Dolabella, see
High order in this great solemnity. [Exeunt.

This play keeps curiosity always busy, and the passions at all times interested. The continual hurry of the action, the variety of incidents, and the quick succession of the personages to another, call the mind forward without intermission from the first act to the last. But the power of deluging is derived principally from the frequent changes of the scene: for, except the feminine arts, some of which are too low, which distinguish Cleopatra, no character is very strongly discriminated.
Cato, who did not easily miss what he desired to find, has discovered that the language of Antony is, with great skill and system, made pompous and superb, according to his real practice, but I think his diadems not distinguishable from that of others: the most tunid speech in the play is that which Cesar makes to Octavia.

The events of which the principal are described according to history, are produced without any art of connexion or care of disposition.—Johnson.
Cymbeline.

This exquisite and romantic drama was not entered in the Stationers' books, nor printed, till 1673. It was probably written in about 1609. The plot is in a great degree taken from the Irish Novel of the Second Day of the Decameron of Boccaccio, of which a deformed and interpolated translation had appeared as early as 1581; and an imitation, in an old story-book, entitled Hemsted for Smolet, was printed in 1603.

Cymbeline, the king from whom the play takes its title, began his reign, according to Holinshed, in the nineteenth year of the reign of Augustus Caesar; and the play commences in or about the twenty-fourth year of Cymbeline's reign, which was the forty-second year of the reign of Augustus, and the sixteenth of the Christian era, now representing which, Shakespeare has peopled Rome with modern Italians: Philario, Iachimo, &c. Cymbeline is said to have reigned thirty-five years, leaving at his death two sons, Guiderius and Arviragus.

SCENE I.—Britain.

The Garden behind Cymbeline's Palace.

Enter Two Gentlemen.

1 Gent. You do not meet a man but frowns; our bloods No more obey the heavens, than our courtiers; Still seem, as does the king's.

2 Gent. But what's the matter?

1 Gent. His daughter, and the heir of his kingdom, whom He purpos'd to his wife's sole son, (a widow, That late he married,) hath refer'd herself Unto a poor, but worthy, gentleman: She's wedded; Her husband banish'd; she imprison'd: all Is outward sorrow; though, I think, the king Be touch'd at very heart.

2 Gent. None but the king?

1 Gent. He, that hath lost her, too; so is the queen, That most desir'd the match: but not a courtier, Although they wear their faces to the bent Of the king's looks, hath a heart that is not Glad at the thing they scowl at.

2 Gent. And why so?

1 Gent. He hath, hath miss'd the princess, is a thing Too bad for bad report: and he that hath her,
SCENE II.—The same.

Enter the Queen, Posthumus, and Imogen.

Queen. No, be assur’d, you shall not find me. After the slander of most step-mothers, [daughter, Evil-ey’d unto you: you are my prisoner, but Your gaoler shall deliver you the keys That lock up your restraint. For you, Posthumus, So soon as I can win the offended king, I will be known your advocate: marry, yet That anger of rage is in him: and ‘twere good, You lean’d unto his sentence, with what patience Your wisdom may inform you.

Post. Please your highness, I will from hence to-day.

Queen. You know the peril:
I’ll fetch a turn about the garden, pitying The pangs of bard’d affection; though the king Hath charg’d you should not speak together.

Imo. O, [Exit Queen.

Dissembling courtesy! How fine this tyrant Can tinkle where she wounds!—My dearest husband, I something fear my father’s wrath; but nothing, (Always reserv’d my holy duty,) what His rage can do on me: You must be gone;
And I shall here abide the hourly shot Of angry eyes; not comforted to live, But that there is this jewel in the world, That I may see again.

Post. My queen! my mistress! O, lady, weep so more: lest I give cause To be suspected of more tenderness Than doth become a man! I will remain The loyal husband that did ere plight troth. My residence in Rome, at one Philario’s; Who to my father was a friend, to me Known but by letter: thither write, my queen, And with mine eyes I’ll drink the words you send, Though ink be made of gall.

Re-enter Queen.

Queen. Be brief, I pray you: If the king come, I shall invent I know not How much of his displeasure: Yet I’ll move him To walk this way: I never do him wrong. [Aside. But he does buy my injuries, to be friends; For fear for my off-sprung. [Exit.

Post. Should we be taking leave As long a term as yet we have to live, The loathness to depart would grow: Adieu! Imo. Nay, stay a little: Were you but riding forth to air yourself, Such parting were too petty. Look here, love; This diamond was my mother’s; take it, heart; But keep it till you woo another wife, When Imogen is dead.

Post. How! how! another?— You gentle gods, give me this I have, And sear up my embracements from a next With bonds of death!—Remain thou here [Putting on the ring.

While sense can keep it upon! And sweetest, fairest, As I may poor self did exchange for you. To your infinite loss; so in our trysts I still win of you: for my sake, wear this; It is a manacle of love; I’ll place it Upon this fairest prisoner.

[Putting a bracelet on her arm. O, the gods!

Imo. When shall we see again?

Enter Cymbeline and Lords.

Post. Alack, the king!

Cym. Thou basest thing, avoid! hence, from my If, after this command, thou franght the court [sight! With thy unworthiness, thou diest: Away! Thou art poison to my blood.

Post. The gods protect you! And bless the good remainders of the court! I am gone.

[Exit. Cym. There cannot be a pinch in death More sharp than this is.

Cym. O disloyal thing, That shouldst repair my youth; thou hasten most A year’s age on me!

Imo. I beseech you, sin, Harm not yourself with your vexation; I Am senseless of your wrath; a touch more rare Subdnes all pangs, all fears.

Cym. That might’st have had the sole son of my Imo. O bless’d, that I might not! I choose an eagle, And did afford a puttock.

Cym. Thou took’st a beggar; wouldst have made A seat for baseness. [my throne

Imo. No; I rather added A lustre to it.

Cym. O, thou vile one! Imo. Sir, It is your fault that I have lov’d Posthumus: You bred him as my playfellow; and he Is a man, worth any woman; overbuys me Almost the sum he pays.

Cym. What!—art thou mad? Imo. Almost, sir: Heaven restore me!—Would I A neat-herd’s daughter! and my Leonatus Were our neighbour shepherd’s son!

Re-enter Queen.

Cym. Thou foolish thing!— They were again together: you have done [To the Queen.

Not after our command. Away with her, And pen her up. Queen. Bewitch your patience!—Peace, Dear lady daughter, peace;—Sweet sovereign, Leave us to ourselves: and make yourself some comfort Out of your best advice. [fort Cym. Nay, let her languish A drop of blood a day; and, being aged, Die of this folly! [Exit.

Enter Phoebus.

Queen. Fye!—you must give way: Here is your servant.—How now, sir? What news? Pis. My lord your son drew on my master, Queen. Ha! No harm, I trust, is done? Pis. There might have been, But that my master rather play’d than fought, And had no help of anger: they were parted By gentlemen at hand.

Queen. I am very glad on’s, Imo. Your son’s my father’s friend; he takes his To draw upon an exile!—O brave sir!— [part.— I would they were in Afric both together; Myself by with a needle, that I might prick The goer back.—Why cause you from your master? Pis. On his command: He would not suffer me To bring him to the haven: left these notes Of what commands I should be subject to, When it pleas’d you to employ me.

Queen. This hath been
Your faithful servant; I dare lay mine honour, He will remain so.

_Pis._ I humbly thank your highness. _Queen._ Pray, walk a while.

_Ino._ About some half hour hence, I pray you, speak with me; you shall, at least. Go see my lord abroad: for this time, leave me. [Ex._

_SCENE III.—A public Place._

_Enter Cloten and Two Lords._

_1 Lord._ Sir, I would advise you to shift a shirt; the violence of action hath made you reek as a sacrifice: Where air comes out, air comes in; there's none abroad to wholesome as that you want. _Clo._ If my shirt were bloody, then to shift it—

_Have I hurt him?

_2 Lord._ No, faith; not so much as his patience. [Aside._

_1 Lord._ Hurt him! his body's a passable carcasse, if he be not hurt: it is a thoroughfare for steel, if it be not hurt.

_2 Lord._ His steel was in debt: it went o' the back side the town.

_Clo._ The villain would not stand me.

_2 Lord._ No; but he fled forward still, toward your face.

_1 Lord._ Stand you! You have land enough of your own; but he added to your having; gave you some ground.

_2 Lord._ As many inches as you have oceans: Puppies! _Clo._ I would, they had not come between us.

_2 Lord._ So would I, till you had measured how long a fool you were upon the ground. _Clo._ And that she should love this fellow, and refuse me! _1 Lord._ If he be a sin to make a true election, she is damned. [Aside._

_1 Lord._ Sir, as I told you always, her beauty and her brain go not together: She's a good sign, but I have seen small reflection of her wit.

_2 Lord._ She shines not upon fools, lest the reflection should hurt her. _Clo._ Come, I'll to my chamber: 'Would there had been some hurt done!'

_2 Lord._ I wish not so; unless it had been the fall of an ass, which is no great hurt. _Clo._ You'll go with me?

_1 Lord._ I'll attend your lordship. _Clo._ Nay, come, let's go together.

_2 Lord._ Well, my lord. [Exit._

_SCENE IV.—A Room in Cymbeline's Palace._

_Enter Imogen and Pisanio._

_Ino._ I would then grew'st unto the shores o' the haven, And question'd every sail: if he should write, And I not have it, 'twere a paper lost, As offer'd mercy is. What was the last That he spake to thee?

_Pis._ 'Twas, _His queen_, his _queen_!

_Ino._ Then wav'd his handkerchief? _Pis._ And kiss'd it, madam. _Ino._ Senseless linen! happier therein than I— And that was all?

_Pis._ No, madam; for so long As he could make me with my eye or ear Distinguish him from others, he did keep The deck, with glove, or hat, or handkerchief, Still waiting, as the fits and stirs of his mind Could best express how slow his soul sail'd on, How swift his ship.

_Ino._ Thou shouldst have made him As little as a crow, or less, ere left To after eye him.

_Pis._ Madam, so I did. _Ino._ I would have broke mine eye-strings; erack'd To look upon him; till the diminution Of space had pointed him sharp as my needle: Nay, follow'd him, till he had melted from The smallness of a gust to air; and then Have turn'd mine eye, and went. — But, good Pisanio, When shall we hear from him?

_Pis._ Be assur'd, madam, With his next vantage.

_Ino._ I did not take my leave of him, but had Most pretty things to say: ere I could tell him, How I would think on him, at certain hours, Such thoughts, and such; or I could make him swear The shes of Italy should not betow Mine interest, and his honour; or have charg'd him, At the sixth hour of morn, at noon, at midnight, To encounter me with orisons, for then I am in heaven for him; or ere I could Give him that parting kiss, which I had set Betwixt too charming words, comes in my father, And, like the tyrannous breathing of the north Shakes all our buds from growing.

_Enter a Lady._

_Lady._ The queen, madam, Desires your highness' company.

_Ino._ Those things I bid you do, get them done. I will attend the queen. [Spar'ch'd._

_Pis._ Madam, I shall. [Exeunt._

_SCENE V._

_Rome.—An Apartment in Philiario's House._

_Enter Philiario, Iachimo, a Frenchman, a Dutchman, and a Spaniard._

_Iach._ Believe it, sir: I have seen him in Britain: he was then of a crescent note; expected to prove so worthy as since he hath been allowed the name of; but I could then have looked on him without the help of admiration; though the catalogue of his downswells had been tabled by his side, and I to peruse him by items.

_Fili._ You speak of him when he was less furnished, than now he is, with that which makes him both without and within.

_French._ I have seen him in France: we had very many there, could behold the sun with as firm eyes as he.

_Iach._ This matter of marrying his king's daughter, (wherein he must be weighed rather by her value, than his own,) words him, I doubt not, a great deal from the matter.

_French._ And then his banishment:—

_Iach._ Ay, and the approbation of those, that weep this lamen'table divorce, under her colours, are wonderfully to extend him; be it but to fortify her judgment, which else an easy battery might lay flat, for taking a beggar without more quality. But how comes it, he is to sojourn with you? How creeps acquaintance?

_Fili._ His father and I were soldiers together; to whom I have often been bound for no less than my life:—

_Enter Posthumus._

Here comes the Briton: let him be so entertained amongst you, as suits, with gentlemen of your knowing, to a stranger of his quality.—I beseech you all,
be better known to this gentleman; whom I commend to you, as a noble friend of mine: How worthy he is, I will leave to appear hereafter, rather than store him in his own hearing.

French. Sir, we have known together in Orleans.

Post. Since when I have been debtor to you for courtesies, which I will ever to pay, and yet pay still.

French. Sir, you o'er-rate my poor kindness: I was glad I did atone my countryman and you; it had been pity, you should have been put together with so mortal a purpose, as then each bore, upon importunity of so slight and trivial a nature.

Post. By your pardon, sir, I was then a young traveller: rather shunned to go even with what I heard, than in my every action to be guided by others' experiences: but, upon my mended judgment, (if I offend not to say it is mended,) my quarrel was not altogether slight.

French. 'Tis faith, yes, to be put to the arbitrement of swords; and by such two, that would, by all likelihood, have confounded one the other, or have fallen both.

Iach. Can we, with manners, ask what was the difference?

French. Safely, I think: 'twas a contention in public, which may, without contradiction, suffer the report, like a spark like an argument that fell out last night, where each of us fell in praise of our country mistresses: This gentleman at that time vouching, (and upon warrant of bloody affirmation,) his to be more fair, virtuous, wise, chaste, constant-qualified, and less attemptible, than any the rarest of our ladies in France.

Iach. That lady is not now living; or this gentleman's opinion, by this, worn out.

Post. She holds her virtue still, and I my mind.

Iach. You must not so far prefer her 'fore ours of Italy.

Post. Being so far provoked as I was in France, I would abate her nothing; though I profess myself her adorer, not her friend.

Iach. As fair, and as good, (a kind of hand-in-hand comparison,) had been something too fair, and too good, for any lady in Britain. If she went before others I have seen, as that diamond of yours outlustres many I have beheld, I could not but believe she excelled many: but I have not seen the most precious diamond that is, nor you the lady.

Post. I praised her as I rated her: so do I my stone.

Iach. What do you esteem it at?

Post. More than the world enjoys.

Iach. Either your unparagoned mistress is dead, or she's outprized by a trifle.

Post. You are mistaken: the one may be sold, or given; if there were wealth enough for the purchase, or merit for the gift: the other is not a thing for sale, and only the gift of the gods.

Iach. Which the gods have given you?

Post. Which, by their graces, I will keep.

Iach. You may wear her in title years: but, you know, strange foul light upon neighbouring bourgeois. Your ring may be stolen too: so, of your brace of unprizeable estimations, the one is but frail, and the other casual; a cunning thief, or a that-way-accomplished courier, would hazard the winning both of first and last.

Post. Your Italy contains none so accomplished a courier, to convince the honour of my mistress: if, in the holding or loss of that, you term her frail, I do nothing doubt, you have store of thieves; not withstanding I fear not my ring.

Pho. Let us leave here, gentlemen.

Post. Sir, with all my heart. This worthy signior, I thank him, makes no stranger of me; we are familiar at first.

Iach. With five times so much conversation, I should get ground of your fair mistress: make her go back, even to the yielding; had I admittance and opportunity to friend.

Post. No, no.

Iach. I dare, thereupon, pawn the moiety of my estate to your ring; which, in my opinion, o'er-values it something: but I make my wager rather to your estimate, than her reputation: and, to bar your offence herein too, I durst attempt it against any lady in the world.

Pho. You are a great deal abused in too bold a persuasion; and I doubt not you sustain what you're worthy of, by your attempt.

Iach. What's that?

Post. A repulse: Though your attempt, as you call it, deserve more; a punishment too.

Pho. Gentlemen, enough of this: it came in too suddenly; let it die as it was born, and I pray you, be better acquainted.

Iach. Would I had put my estate, and my neighbour's, on the approbation of what I have spoke.

Post. What lady would you choose to assail?

Iach. You yourself. Your constancy, you think, stands so safe. I will lay you ten thousand ducats to your ring, that, commend me to the court where your lady is, with no more advantage than the opportunity of a second conference, and I will bring from thence that honour of hers, which you imagine so reserved.

Post. I will wage against your gold, gold to it: may I hold dear as my finger; 'tis part of it.

Iach. You are a friend, and therein the wiser. If you buy ladies' flesh at a million a dram, you cannot preserve it from tainting; But, I see you have some religion in you, that you fear.

Post. This is but a custom in your tongue; you bear a graver purpose, I hope.

Iach. I am the master of my speeches; and would you had spoken, I swear.

Post. Will you then?—I shall but lend my diamond till your return:—Let there be covenants drawn between us: My mistress exceeds in goodness the hugginess of your unworthy thinking: I dare you to this match: here's my ring.

Pho. I will have it no lay.

Iach. By the gods it is one: —If I bring you no sufficient testimony that I have enjoyed the dearest bodily part of your mistress, my ten thousand ducats are yours; so is your diamond too. If I come off, and leave her in such honour as you have trust in, she your jewel, this your jewel, and my gold are yours:—provided, I have your commendation, for my more than entertainment. I embrace these conditions; let us have articles betwixt us:—only, thus far you shall answer. If you make your voyage upon her, and give me directly to understand you have prevailed, I am no further your enemy, she is not worth our debate: if she remain unseduced, (you not making it appear otherwise,) for your ill opinion, and the assault you have made to her chastity, you shall answer me with your sword.

Iach. Your hand; a covenant: We will have these things set down by lawful counsel, and straight away for Britain; lest the bargain should catch cold, and starve: I will fetch my gold, and have our two wagers recorded.

Post. Agreed. [Exeunt Posthumus and Iachimph.
ACT I.—SCENE VII.

French. Will this hold, think you?
Phi. Signior Iachimo will not from it.

Pray, let us follow em.

SCENE VI.

Britain. — A Room in Cymbeline's Palace.

Enter Queen, Ladies, and Cornelius.

Queen. Whilest ye the dew's on ground, gather those flowers.

Make haste: Who has the note of them?

1 Lady. I, madam.

Queen. Despacth. —

[Exit Ladies.

Now, master doctor; have you brought those drugs?

Cor. Pleaseth your highness, ay: here they are, madam:

But I beseech your grace, (without offence; my conscience bids me ask;) wherefore you have Commanded of me these most poisonous compounds, Which are the movers of a languishing death;

But, though slow, deadly?

Queen. I do wonder, doctor. They ask't me such a question: Have I not been Thy pupil long? Hast thou not learn'd me how To make perfumes? distill? preserve? yea, so, That our great king himself doth woo me oft.

For my confections? Having thus far proceeded, (Unless thou think'st me devilish,) Is't not meet That I did amplify my judgment in Other conclusions? I will try the forces Of these thy compouds on such creatures as 'We count not worth the hanging, (but none human,) To try the vigour of them, and apply Allayments to their act; and by them gather Their several virtues, and effects.

Cor. Your highness Shall from this practice but make hard your heart: Besides, the seeing these effects will be Both noisome and infectious.

Queen. O, content thee.—

Enter Pisanio.

Here comes a flattering rascal; upon him [Aside. Will I first work: he's for his master, And eneuy to my son.—How now, Pisanio?— Doctor, your service for this time is ended; Take your own way.

Cor. I do suspect you, madam; But you shall do no harm.

Queen. [Aside.] I do not like her. She doth think, she has Strange lingering poisons: I do know her spirit, And will not trust one of her malice with A drug of such damn'd nature: Those, she has, Will simply and dull the sense awhile; Which first, perception, she'll prove on cats, and dogs, Then afterward up higher; but there is No danger in what show of death it makes, More than the locking up the spirits a time, To be more fresh, reviving. She is fool'd With a most false effect; and I the truer, So to be false with her.

Queen. No further service, doctor, Until I send for thee.

Cor. I humbly take my leave. [Exit. Queen. Weeps she still, say'st thou? Dost thou think, in time She will not queech; and let instructions enter Where folly now possesses? Do thou work; When thou shalt bring me word, she loves my son, I'll tell thee, on the instant, thou art then At great as is thy master: greater; for His fortunes all lie speechless, and his name Is at last gasp: Retura he cannot, nor Continueth where he is: to shift his being, Is to exchange one misery with another; And every day, that comes, comes to decay A day's work in him: What shalt thou expect, To be dependor on a thing that leans? Who cannot be new built; nor has no friends.

So much as but to prop him!—Thou tak'st up Thou know'st not what; but take it for t.'y labour: It is a thing I made, which hath the king Five times redeem'd from death: I do not know What is more cordial.—Nay, I pr'ythee, take it; It is an earnest of a further good.

That I mean to thee. Tell thy mistress how The case stands with her; do't, as from thyself. Think what a chance thou changest on; but think Thou hast thy mistress still; to boot, my son, Who shall take notice of thee: I'll move the king To any shape of thy preference, such As thou wilt desire; and then myself, I chiefly That set thee on to this desert, am bound To load thy merit richly. Call my women: Think on my words. [Exit Pisanio.]—A sly and constant Not to be shak'd: the agent for his master; [knife; And the remembrance of her, to hold The hand fast to her lord.—I have given him that, Which, if he take, shall make my people her Of ligiers for her sweet; and which she, after, Except she bend her humour, shall be assured

Re-enter Pisanio and Ladies.

The taste of too.—So, so;—well done, well done: The violets, cowslips, and the primroses, Bear to my closet.—Fare thee well, Pisanio; Think on my words. [Exit Queen and Ladies. Pis. And shall do: But when to my good lord I prove untrue, I'll choke myself: there's all I'll do for you. [Exit.

SCENE VII.—Another Room in the same.

Enter Imogen.

Imo. A father cruel, and a step-dame false; A foolish suitor to a wedded lady,

That hath her husband banish'd;—O, that husband! My supreme crown of grief! and those repeated

Vexations of it! Had I been thief-stolen,

As my two brothers, happy! but most miserable Is the desire that's glorious: Blessed be those,

How mean soever, that have their honest wills,

Which seasons comfort.—Who may this be? Fye! [Exit.

Enter Pisanio and Iachimo.

Pis. Madam, a noble gentleman of Rome:

Comes from my lord with letters.

Iach. Change you, madam? The worthy Leonatus is in safety,

And greet's thy highness dearly. [Present a letter. Imo. Thanks, good sir: You are kindly welcome. Iach. All of her, that is out of door, most rich!

[Aside. If she be furnish'd with a mind so rare,

She is alone the Arabian bird: and I Have lost the wager. Boldness be my friend! Arm me, and durkly, from head to foot! Or, like the Parthian, I shall dicing fight; Rather, directly fly.

Imo. [Reads.] He is one of the noblest men, to whose 2 Y
You look on me; What reck discern you in me, Deserves your pity?

Iach. Lamentable! What! To hide me from the radiant sun, and solace I the dungeon by a snuff?

Imo. I pray you, sir, Deliver with more openness your answers To my demands. Why do you pity me?

Iach. That others do, I was about to say, enjoy your— But It is an office of the gods to venge it,

Not mine to speak on’t.

Imo. You do seem to know Something of me, or what concerns me. Pray, you, (since doubting things go ill, often hurts more Than to be sure they do: For certainties Either are past remedies; or, timely knowing, The remedy then born,) discover to me What both you spur and stop.

Iach. Had I this check,
To bathe my lips upon; this hand, whose touch, While every touch, would force the feeder’s soul To the oath of loyalty; this object, which Takes prisoner the wild motion of mine eye, Fixing it only here: should I (damn’d then,) Slaver with lips as common as the stairs That mount the Capitol; join grips with hands Made hard with hourly falsehood (falsehood, as With labour; ) then lie peeping in an eye, Base and unlastrous as the smoky light That’s fed with stinking tallow; it were fit, That all the plagues of hell should at one time Encounter such revolt.

Imo. My lord, I fear,
I have forgot Britain.

Iach. And himself. Not I,
Indur’d to this intelligence, pronounce.

The beggary of his change, but tis your graces That, from my most conscience, to my tongue, Charms this report out.

Imo. Let me hear no more.

Iach. O dearest soul! your cause doth strike my heart With pity, that doth make me sick. A lady So fair, and fasten’d to an empery,

What makes the greatest king double to be partner’ with Tomboys, hir’d with that self exhibition Which your own coiffers yield! with disenc’d ventures That play with all infinites for gold

Which rottenness can lend nature! such boil’d stuff As well might poison poison! Be reveng’d: Of she, that bore you, was no queen, and you Recover from your great stock.

Imo. Reveng’d! How should I be reveng’d? If this be true, (As I have such a heart, that both mine ears Must not in haste abuse,) if it be true How should I be reveng’d?

Iach. Should he make me
Like Diana’s priest, between cold sheets; Whiles he is vassalizing variable ranks.

In your despise, upon your purse? Revenge it; I dedicate myself to your sweet pleasure;

More noble than that runagate to your bed; And will continue fast to your affection,

Still close, as sure.

Imo. What he, Pisano!

Iach. Let me my service tend on your lips,

Imo. Away!— I do condemn mine ears, that have So long attended thee.—If thouwert honourable, Thou would’st have told this tale for virtue, not

For such an end thou seek’st; as base, as strange Thou wrong’st a gentleman, who is as far
ACT II.—SCENE I.

From thy report, as thou from honour; and Solicit'st here a lady, that disdains Thee and the devil alike.—What, ho! Pisania!—The king my father shall be made acquainted Of thy assault: if he shall think it fit, A savage stranger, in his court, to mart As in a Romish step, to and to expend His beauty's mind to us; he hath a court He little cares for, and a daughter whom He not respects at all.—What be, Pisania!—

SCENE I.—Court before Cymbeline's Palace.

Enter CLOTHEN AND Two Lords.

Clo. Was there ever man had such luck! when I kissed the jack-ass on an up-cast, to be hit away! I had a hundred pound on't; And then a whoreson jack-napes must take me up for swearing; as if I borrowed mine oaths of him, and might not spend them at my pleasure.

1 Lord. What got he by that? You have broke his fate with your bowl.

2 Lord. If his wit had been like him that broke it, it would have ran all out.

[Aside.

Clo. When a gentleman is disposed to swear, it is not for any standers by to curtail his oaths. Ha! 2 Lord. No, my lord; nor [Aside] crop the ears of them.

Clo. Whoreson dog!—I give him satisfaction?

'Would, he had been one of my rank!

2 Lord. To have smelt like a fool.

[Aside.

Clo. I am not more vexed at swearing in the earth, —A pox out! I had rather not be so noble as I am; they dare not fight with me, because of the queen my mother; every jack-slap hath his belly full of fighting, and I must go up and down like a cock that no body can match.

2 Lord. You are a cock and capon too; and you crow, cock, with your comb on.

[Aside.

Clo. Sayest thou?

1 Lord. It is not fit, your lordship should undertake any companion that you give offence to.

Clo. No, I know that; but it is fit, I should commit offence to my inferiors.

2 Lord. Ay, it is fit for your lordship only.

Clo. Why, so I say.

1 Lord. Did you hear of a stranger, that's come to court to-night?

Clo. A stranger! and I not know on't?

2 Lord. He's a strange fellow himself, and knows it not.

1 Lord. There's an Italian come; and, 'tis thought, one of Leonatus' friends.

Clo. Leonatus! a banished rascal; and he's another, whatsoever he be. Who told you of this stranger?

1 Lord. One of your lordship's pages.

Clo. Is it fit, I went to look upon him? Is there no derogation in't?

1 Lord. You cannot derogate, my lord.

Clo. Not easily, I think.

2 Lord. You are a fool granted; therefore your issues being foolish, do not derogate.

[Aside.

Clo. Come, I'll go see this Italian: What I have lost to-day at bowels, I'll win to-night of him. Come, go.

2 Lord. I'll attend your lordship.

Such that a crafty devil as is his mother Should yield the world this ass? a woman, that Bears all down with her brain; and this her son Cannot take two from twenty for his heart, And leave eighteen. Alas, poor princess, Thou divine Imogen, what thou endurest! Betwixt a father by thy step-dame governed; A mother hourly coining plots; a Moor, More hateful than the foul expulsion is Of thy dear husband, than that horrid act Of the divorce he'd make! The heavens hold firm
The walls of thy dear honour; keep unshak'd.
That temple, thy fair mind; that thou may'st stand,
To enjoy thy banish'd lord, and this great land. [Exit.]

SCENE II.

_A Bed-chamber; in one part of it a Trunk._

Imogen reading in her bed; a Lady attending.

Lady. Who's there? my woman Helen?

Imogen. Please you, madam.

Lady. What hour is it?

Imogen. Almost midnight, madam. [weak:—

Lady. I have read three hours then: mine eyes are Fold down the leaf where I have left: To bed;
Take not away the taper, leave it burning;
And if thou canst awake by four o'clock,
I pr'ythee, call me. Sbek hath seized me wholly.

[Exit Lady.]

To your protection I commend me, gods!
From fairies, and the tempters of the night,
Guard me, beauch ye?—

_Lach. The crickets sing, and man's o'er-labour'd_ Repairs itself by rest: Our Tarquin thus Did softly press the rushes, ere he waken'd
The chastity he wounded.—Cytorea,
How bravely thou becom'st thy bed! fresh lily!
And whiter than the sheets! That I might touch!
But kiss; one kiss! Rubies unparagon'd:
How dearly they do not—"Tis her breathing that Perfumes the chamber thus: The flame o'the taper
Flows toward her; and would underpeep her lids,
To see the enclosed lights, now canopied
Under these windows: White and azure, lac'd
With blue of heaven's own tint.—But my design?
To note the chamber.—I will write all down:—
Such, and such pictures:—There the window:—Such
The adornment of her bed:—The arras, figures,
Why, such and such:—And the contents o'the story,—
Ah, but some natural notes about her body,
Above ten thousand manner moveables
Would testify, to enrich mine inventory:
O sleep, thou ape of death, lie dull upon her,
And be her sense but as a monument,
Thus in a chapel lying!—Come off, come off;
_Taking off her bracelet._

As slippery, as the Gordian knot was hard!—
'Tis mine; and this will witness outwardly,
As strongly as the conscience does within,
To the madding of her lord. On her left breast
A male cinque-spotted, like the crimson drops
I the bottom of a cowslip. Here's a voucher,
Stronger than ever law could make: this secret
Will force him think I have pick'd the lock, and ta'en
The treasure of her honour. No more.—To what end?
Why should I write this down, that's rivetted,
Screwd to my memory? She hath been reading late
The tale of Tereus; here the leaf's turn'd down,
Where Philomel gave up;—I have enough:
To the trunk again, and shut the spring of it.
Swift, swift, you dragons of the night!—that dawning
May bare the rainbow's eye: I lodge in fear;
Though this a heavenly angel, hell is here.

One, two, three.—Time, time!—

[Enter Cloves and Lords.

SCENE III.

_An Ante-Chamber adjoining Imogcn's Apartment._

Lord. Your lordship is the most patient man in loss, the most coldest that ever turned up ace.

Clo. It would make any man cold to lose.

1 Lord. But not every man patient after the noble temper of your lordship: You are most hot, and furious, when you win.

Clo. Winning would put any man into courage:
If I could get this foolish Imogen, I should have gold enough: It's almost morning; 'is not I
1 Lord. Day, my lord.

Clo. I would this music would come; I am advis'd to give her music o'mornings; they say, it will petrate.

_Enter Musicians._

Come on; tune: If you can penetrate her with your fingering, so; we'll try with tongue too: if none will do, let her remain: but I'll never give o'er. First, a very excellent good-conceived thing; after, a wonderful sweet air, with admirable rich words to it,— and then let her consider.

SONG.—_Hark! hark! the lark at heaven's gate sings, And Phoebus 'gain arises._

_His steeds to water at those springs_ On chalf'd flowers that lies; _And winking Mary-buds begin To ope their golden eyes;_ With every thing that pretty bin: _My lady sweet, arise;_ _Arise, arise._

So, get you gone: If this penetrates, I will consider your music the better. If it do not, it is a vice in her ears, which horse-hairs, and cats-guts, nor the voice of unpaved eunuch to boot, can never amend.

[Exeunt Musicians.

_Enter Cymbeline and Queen._

2 Lord. Here comes the king.

Clo. I am glad, I was up so late; for that's the reason
I was up so early: He cannot choose but take this service I have done, fatherly.—Good-morrow to your majesty, and to my gracious mother.

Cym. Attend you here the door of our stern daughter? Will she not forth?

Clo. I have assailed her with music but she vouch-safes no notice.

Cym. The exile of her minion is too now;
She hath not yet forgot him: some more time
Must wear the print of his remembrance out,
And then she's yours.

Queen. You are most bound to the king; Who lets go by no vantages, that may Prefer you to his daughter; Frame yourself To orderly solicit; and be friended
With aptness of the season; make denials Increase your services; so seem, as if You were inspir'd to do those duties which
You tender to her; that you in all obey her,
Save when command to your discretion tends,
And therein you are senseless.

Clo. Senseless? not so.

_Enter a Messenger._

Mess. So like you, sir, ambassadors from Rome; The one is Caius Lucius.

Cym. A worthy fellow, Albeit he comes on angry purpose now;
But that's no fault of his: We must receive him According to the honour of his sender; And towards himself, his goodness forespent on us We must extend our notice.—Our dear son,
When you have given good morning to your mistress,
Attend the queen, and us; we shall have need
To employ you towards this Roman:—Come, our queen.

[Enter Cym. Queen, Lords, and Mess.]

Clo. If she be up, I'll speak with her; if not, Let her lie still, and dream.—By your leave, ho!—

I know her women are about her: What If I do line one of their hands! 'Tis gold Which buys admittance; oft it doth; yea, and makes Diana's rangers false themselves, yield up Their deer to the stand of the stalker; and 'tis gold Which makes the true man kill'd, and saves the thief; Though sometimes, hang'st both to the man: What Can it not do, and undo! I will make One of her women lawyer to me; for I yet not understand the case myself. By your leave.

Enter a Lady.

Enter Iosigen.

Clo. Good-morrow, fairest sister: Your sweet hand. Ios. Good-morrow, sir; You lay out too much pains For purchasing but trouble: the thank I give, Is telling you that I am poor of thanks, And scarce can spare them.

Clo. Still, I swear, I love you. Ios. If you but said so, 'twere as deep with me: If you swear still, your recompense is still That I regard it not.

Clo. This is no answer.

Ios. But that you shall not say I yield, being silent, I would not speak. I pray you, spare me: 'tis faith, I shall unfold equall discoursy To your best kindnes: one of your great knowing Should learn, being taught, forbearance.

Clo. To leave you in your madness, 'twere my sin: I will not.

Ios. Fools are not mad folks.

Clo. Do you call me fool?

Ios. As I am mad, I do: If you'll be patient, I'll no more be mad; That cues us both. I am much sorry, sir, You put me to forget a lady's manners, By being so verbal: and learn now, for all, That I, which know my heart, do here pronounce, By the very truth of it, I care not for you; And am so near the lack of charity. (To accuse myself) I hate you; which I had rather You felt, than make't my boast.

Clo. You sin against Obedience, which you owe your father. For The contract you pretend with that base wretch, (One bred of alms, and foster'd with cold dishes, With scraps o'the court,) it is no contract, none: And though it be allow'd in meaner parties, (Yet who, than he, more mean?) to knit their souls (On whom there is no more dependency. But brats and beggary) in self ligur'd knot; Yet you are cur'd from that enlargement by

The consequence o'the crown; and must not soil The precious note of it with a base slave, A bidding for a livery, a squire's cloth, A pantler, not so eminent.

Ios. Profane fellow! Wert thou the son of Jupiter, and no more, But what thou art, besides, thouwert too base To be his groom: thouwert dignified enough, Even to the point of envy, if 'twere made Comparative for your virtues, to be sty'd The under-hangman of his kingdom; and hated For being preferred so well.

Clo. The south-fog rot him! Ios. He never can meet more mischance, than come To be but nam'd of thee. His meanest garment, That ever hath but clipp'd his body, is dearer, In my respect, than all the hairs above thee, Were they all made such men.—How now, Pisario?

Enter Pisario.

Clo. His garment? Now, the devil—

Ios. To Dorothy my woman hee the presently:—

Clo. His garment?

Ios. I am spighted with a fool, Frighted, and anger'd worse:—Go, bid my woman Search for a gown, that is too large. I hath left nine sune; it was thy master's: 'shrew me, If I would lose it for a revenue Of any king's in Europe. I do think, I saw't this morning: confident I am, Last night twas on mine arm; I kiss'd it: I hope, it be not gone, to tell my lord That I kiss'd but he. Pis. Twill not be lost. Ios. I hope so: go, and search. [Exit Pis. Clo. You have absus'd me:—

His meanest garment?

Ios. Ay; I said so, sir. If you will make't an action, call witness to't. Clo. I will inform your father.

Ios. Your mother too: She's my good lady: and will conceive, I hope, But the worst of me. So I leave you, sir, To the worst of discontent. [Exit. Clo. I'll be reveag'd:—

His meanest garment?—Well. [Exit.

SCENE IV.

Rome.—An Apartment in Philiaro's House.

Enter Posthumus and Philario.

Post. Fear it not, sir; I would I were so sure To win the king, as I am bold, her honour Will tennacio hers.

Phi. What means do you make to him? Post. Not any; but shibe the change of time; Quake in the present winter's state, and wish That warmer days would come: In these fear'd hopes, I barely gratify your love; they failing, I must die much your debtor.

Phi. Your very goodness, and your company, Overpays all I can do. By this, your king Hath heard of great Augustus; Calus Locus Will do his commission throughly: And, I think, He'll grant the tribute, send the areearages, Or look upon our Romans, whose remembrance Is yet fresh in their grief.

Post. I do believe, (Statist though I am none, nor like to be,) That this will prove a toy; and you shall hear The legions, now in Gallia, sooner landed In our not-fearing Britain, than have tidings

ACT II.—SCENE IV.
Of any penny tribute paid. Our countrymen
Are men more order'd, than when Julius Caesar
Smil'd at their lack of skill, but found their courage
Worthy his bowing at: Their discipline
(Now mingled with their courages) will make known
To their approvers, they are people, such
That mend upon the world.

Enter Iachimo.

Phi. See! Iachimo?
Post. The swiftest harts have posted you by land:
And winds of all the corners kiss'd your sails,
To make your vessel nimble.

Phi. Welcome, sir.
Post. I hope, the briefness of your answer made
The speediness of your return.

Iach. Your lady
Is one the fairest that I have look'd upon.
Post. And therewithal, the best: or let her beauty
Look through a casement to allure false hearts,
And be false with them.

Iach. Here are letters for you.
Post. Their tenour good, I trust.

Phi. Was Cains Lucas in the Britain court,
When you were there?

Iach. He was expected then,
But not approach'd.

Post. Sparkles this stone as it was wont? or is't not Too dull for your good wearing?

Iach. If I have lost it,
I should have lost the worth of it in gold.
I'll make a journey twice as far, to enjoy
A second night of such sweet Shortness, which
Was mine in Britain; for the ring is won.
Post. The stone's too hard to come by.

Iach. Not a whit,
Your lady being so easy.
Post. Make not, sir,
Your loss your sport: I hope, you know that we Must not continue friends.

Iach. Good sir, we must,
If you keep covenant: Had I not brought
The knowledge of your mistress home, I grant
We were to question further: but I now
Profess myself the winner of her honour,
Together with your ring; and not the wronger
Of her, or you, having proceeded but
By both your wills.

Post. If you can make't apparent
That you have tasted her in bed, my hand,
And ring, is yours: if not, the foul opinion
You had of her pure honour, gains, or losses,
Your sword, or mine; or masterless leaves both
To who shall find them.

Iach. Sir, my circumstances,
Being so near the truth, as I will make them,
Must first induce you to believe: whose strength
I will confirm with oath; which, I doubt not,
You'll give me leave to spare, when you shall find
You need it not.

Post. Proceed.

Iach. First, her bed-chamber,
(Where, I confess, I slept not; but, profess,
Had that was well worth watching,) It was hang'd
With tapestry of silk and silver; the story
Prowad Cleopatra, when she met her Roman,
And Cydnus swell'd above the banks, or for
The press of boats, or pride: A piece of work
So bravely done, so rich, that it did thrive
In workmanship, and value; which I wonder'd,
Could be so rarely and exactly wrought,
Since the true life on't was—

Post. This is true;
And this you might have heard of here, by me,
Or by some other.

Iach. More particulars
Must justify my knowledge.

Post. So they must,
Or all your honour injured.

Iach. The chyminey
Is south the chamber; and the chimney-piece,
Chaste Dian, bathing: never saw I figures
So likely to report themselves: the cutter
Was as another nature, dumb; ouwent her,
Motion and breath left out.
Post. This is a thing,
Which you might from relation likewise reap.
Being, as it is, much spoke of.

Iach. The roof o'the chamber
With golden cherubins is frett'd: Her auditories
(I had forgot them,) were two winking Cupids
Of silver, each on one foot standing, nicely
Depending on their brands.

Post. This is her honour!—
Let it be granted, you have seen all this, (and praise
Be given to your remembrance) the description
Of what is in her chamber, nothing saves
The wager you have laid.

Iach. Then if you can, (Pulling out the bracelet
To pale; I beg but leave to air this jewel: See)—
And now 'tis up again: it must be married
To that your diamond, I'll keep them.
Post. O, love!—
Once more let me behold it: Is it that
Which I left with her?

Iach. Sir, (I thank her:) that
She stripp'd it from her arm; I see her yet;
Her pretty action did outsell her gift,
And yet enrich'd it too: She gave it me, and said,
She griz'd it once.

Post. May be, she pluck'd it off,
To send it me.

Iach. She writes so to you? doth she?
Post. O, no, no, no; 'tis true. Here, take this too.

It is a basilik unto mine eye,
Kills me to look on't:—Let there be no honour,
Who know not beauty; truth, where semblance; love
Where there's another man: The vows of woman
Of no more bondage be, to where they are made,
Than they are to their virtues; which is nothing:
O, above measure false!

Phi. Have patience, sir,
And take your ring again; 'tis not yet won:
It may be probable, she lost it; or,
Who knows if one of her women, being corrupted,
Hath stolen it from her?

Post. Very true;
And so, I hope, he came by't:—Back my ring;—
Render to me some corporeal sign about her,
More evident than this; for this was stolen.

Iach. By Jupiter, I had it from her arm.
Post. Hark you, he swears; by Jupiter he swears.
'Tis true;—say, keep the ring—'tis true, I am sure,
She would not lose it: her attendants are
All sworn, and honourable: They induc'd to steal it!
And by a stranger!—No, he hath enjoy'd her:
The cognizance of her incontinency
Is this,—she hath bought the name of whore thus
There, take thy hire; and all the feuds of hell
Divide themselves between you!
ACT III.—SCENE I. 711

ACT III.

SCENE I.—Britain.

A Room of State in Cymbeline's Palace.

Enter CYMBELINE, QUEEN, CLOTHEN, and Lords, at one door; and at another, CAIUS CURTIUS and Attendants.

Cym. Now say, what would Augustus Caesar with us?
Luc. When Julius Caesar (whose remembrance yet lives in men's eyes; and will to ears, and tongues, Be thence, and hearing ever,) was in this Britain, And conquer'd it, Cassibelen, thine uncle, (Famous in Caesar's praises, no whit less Than in his feats deserving,) for him, And his succession, granted Rome a tribute, Yearly three thousand pounds; which by thee lately Is left untender'd.

Queen. And, to kill the marvel, Shall be so ever.

Clo. There be many Caesars, Ere such another Julius. Britain is A world by itself; and we will nothing pay, For wearing our own noses.

Queen. That opportunity, Which then they had to take from us, to resume We have again.—Remember, sir, my liege, The kings your ancestors; together with The natural bravery of your isle; which stands As Neptune's park, ribbed and paled in With rocks unscalable, and roaring waters; With saods, that will not bear your enemies' boats, But sink them up to the top mast. A kind of conquest Caesar made here; but made not here his brag Of came, and sore, and overcome: with shame (The first that ever touch't him,) he was carried From off our coast, twice beaten; and his shipping (Poor ignorant babblers!) on our terrible seas, Like egg-shells mov'd upon their surges, crack'd As easily 'gainst our rocks; for joy whereof, The fam'd Cassibelen, who was once at point (O, gay and fortunate!) to master Caesar's sword, Made Lud's town with rejoicing fires bright, And Britons strut with courage.

Clo. Come, there's no more tribute to be paid: Our kingdom is stronger than it was at that time; and, as I said, there is no more such Caesars: other of them may have crooked noses; but, to one such straight arms, none.

Cym. Son, let your mother end.

Clo. We have yet many among us can gripe as hard as Cassibelen: I do not say, I am one; but I have a hand.—What tribute? why should we pay tribute? If Caesar can hide the sun from us with a blanket, or put the moon in his pocket, we will pay him tribute for light; else, sir, no more tribute, pray you now.

Cym. You must know, Till the injurious Remains did extort This tribute from us, we were free: Caesar's ambition, (Which swell'd so much that it did almost stretch The sides o' the world,) against all colour, here Did put the yoke upon us; which to shake off, Becomes a warlike people, whom we reckon Ourselves to be. We do say then to Caesar, Our ancestor was that Mulinatus, which Ordain'd our laws; (whose use the sword of Caesar Hath too much mangled; whose repair, and franchise, Shall, by the power we hold, be our good deed, Though Rome be therefore angry;) Mulinatus, Who was the first of Britain, which did put His brows within a golden crown, and call'd Himself a king.

Luc. I am sorry, Cymbeline,
That I am pronounced Augustus after Cæsar (Cæsar, that hath more kings his servants, than Thyself domestic officers,) thine enemy:
Receive it from me, then:—War, and confusion,
In Cæsar's name pronounce I 'gainst thee: look
For fury not to be resisted:—Thus defied,
I thank thee for myself.

Cym. Thou art welcome, Cains. Thy master knighted me; my youth I spent Much under him; of him I gather'd honour;
Which he to seek of me again, perficre,
Behoves me keep at utterance; I am perfect,
That the Pannonians and Dalmatians, for
Their liberties, are now in arms: a precedent
Which, not to read, would shew the Britons cold:
So Cesar shall not find them.

Luc. Let proof speak.

Clo. His majesty bids you welcome. Make pastime with us a day, or two, longer: If you seek us after wards in other terms, you shall find us in our saltwater girdle: if you beat us out of it, it is yours; if you fall in the adventure, our crows shall fare the better for you; and there's an end.

Luc. So, sir.

Cym. I know your master's pleasure, and he mine:
All the remain is, welcome. [Exeunt.

SCENE II.—Another Room in the same.

Enter Pisano.

Pis. How! of adultery? Wherefore write you not What monster's her accuser?—Leonatus! O, master! what a strange infection
Is fallen into thy ear! What false Italian
(As poisonous tongue'd, as hander,) hath prevail'd
On thy too ready hearing?—Disloyal! No:
She's punish'd for her truth; and undergoes,
More goddess-like than wife-like, such assaults
As would take in some virtue.—O, my master!
Thy mind to her is now as low, as were
Thy fortunes.—How! that I should murder her?
Upon the love, and truth, and vows, which I
Have made to thy command?—I, her?—her blood?
If it be so to do service, better, I pr'ythee;
Let me be counted serviceable.
How long I,
That I should seem to lack humanity,
So much as this fact comes too? Do't: The letter [Reads.

That I have sent her, by her own command
Shall give thee opportunity:—O damn'd paper!
Black as the ink that's on thee! Senseless bauble,
Art thou a feodary for this act, and look'st
So virgin-like without? Lo, here she comes.

Enter Imogen.

I am ignorant in what I am commanded.

Imo. How now, Pisano?

Pis. Madam, here is a letter from my lord.

Imo. Who? thy lord? that is my lord? Leonatus?
O, learn'd indeed were that astronomer,
That knew the stars, as I his characters;
He'd lay the future open.—You good gods,
Let what is here contain'd relish of love,
Of my lord's health, of his content,—yet not,
That we two are asunder, let that grieve him,—
(Some griefs are med'cicable;) that is one of them,
For it doth physical love;—of his content,
All in that!—Good way, thy leave:—Bless'd be,
You bees, that make these locks of counsel! Lovers,
And men in dangerous bonds, pray not alike;

Though forfeiters you cast in prison, yet
You clasp young Cupid's tables.—Good news, gods! [Reads.

Justice, and your father's wrath, should be taken in his dominion, could not be so cruel to us, as you.
O the dearest of creatures, would not even renew me with your eyes. Take notice, that I am in Cambria, at Milford-Haven: What your own love will, out of this, advise you, follow. So he wishes you all happiness, that remains loyal to his vow, and your, increasing in love, Leontus Posthumus.

O, for a horse with wings!—Hearst thou, Pisano! He is at Milford-Haven: Read, and tell me
How far 'tis thither. If one of man's affairs
May pled in a week, why may not I
Glide thither in a day?—Then, true Pisano,
(Who long'st, like me, to see thy lord; whom long'st,—
O, let me 'bate,—But not like me:—yet long'st,—
But in a fainter kind:—O, not like me;
For mine's beyond my beyond.) say, and speak thick, (love's counsellor should fill the bores of hearing,
To the smothering of the sense,) how far it is
To bring me back at Milford:—And, in the way,
Tell me how Wales was made so happy, as
To inherit such a haven: But, first of all,
How we may steal from hence; and, for the gap
That we shall make in time, from our hence-going,
And our return, to excuse:—but first, how get hence:
Why should excuse be born or e'er begot?
We'll talk of that hereafter. Pr'ythee, speak,
How many score of miles may we well ride
'Twixt hour and hour? [Pis.

Pis. One score, 'twixt sun and sun,
Madam, 's enough for you; and too much too.

Imo. Why, one that rode to his execution, man,
Could never so slosh: I have heard of riding wagers,
Where horses have been number'd than the sands
That run 't the clock's behalf:—But this is folly:
Go, bid my woman feign a sickness: say
She'll home to her father: and provide me, presently,
A riding suit; no costlier than would fit
A franklin's housewife.

Pis. Madam, you're best consider.

Imo. I see before me, man, for here, here, here,
Nor what ensues: but have a log in them.
That he cannot look through. Away, I pr'ythee;
Do as I bid thee: There's no more to say!
Accessible is none but Milford way. [Exeunt.

SCENE III.

Wales.—A mountainous Country, with a Cave.

Enter Belarius, Guiderius, and Arturus.

Bel. A goodly day not to keep house, with such Whose roof's as low as ours! Stoop, boys: This gate
Instructs you how to adore the heavens; and bow's you
To morning's holy office: The gates of monarchs
Are arch'd so high, that giants may jet through
And keep their impious turbands on, without
Good morrow to the sun.—Hail, thou fair heaven!
We house the rock, yet use thee not so hardly
As pronder livers do.

Art. Hail, heaven! [Bel.

Hail, heaven! Bel. Now for our mountain sport: Up to your hill,
Your legs are young; I'll tread these flats. Consider,
When you above perceive me like a crow.
That it is place, which lessens, and sets off.
And you may then revolve what tales I have told you
Of courts, of princes, of the tricks in war:
This service is not service, so being done,
ACT III.—SCENE IV.

But being so allow'd: To apprehend thus, Draws us a profit from all things we see: And often, to our comfort, shall we find The sharded beetle in a safer hold Than is the full-wing'd eagle. O, this life Is nobler, than attending for a check; Richer than doing nothing for a babe; Foundr, than rustling in unpaid for silk: Such gain the cap of him, that makes them fine, Yet keeps his book uncross'd: no life to ours. Out. Out of your proof you speak! we, poor unfledged, Have never wing'd from view o' the nest; nor know What air's from home. Haply, this life is best, [not If quiet life be best! sweeter to you, That has a sharper known; well corresponding With your stiff age: but, unto us, it is A cell of ignorance; travelling abed; A prison for a debtor, that not dares To stride a limit.

Bel. What should we speak of, When we are old as you? when we shall hear The rain and wind beat dark December, how, In this our piping cage, shall we discourse The freezing hours away! We have seen nothing: We are beastly; subtle as the fox, for prey; Like warlike as the wolf, for what we eat: Our valour is, to chase what flies; our cage We make a quire, as doth the prison'd bird, And sing our bondage freely. How you speak! Did you but know the city's usuries, And felt them knowingly: the art o' the court, As hard to have, as keep; whose top to climb Is certain failing, or so slippery, that The fear's as bad as falling: the toil of the war, A pain that only seems to seek out danger I name of fame, and honour; which dies the search; And hath as oft a slanderous epilogue, As record of fair act; nay, many times, Doth ill deserve by doing well; what's worse, Must court'sey at the censure:—O, boys, this story The world may read in me: My body's mark'd With Rich in success: and my report was once First with the best of note: Cymbeline lov'd me; And when a soldier was the theme, my name Was not far nigh: Than was I as a tree, Whose boughs did bend with fruit: but, in one night, A storm, or robbery, call it what you will, Shook down my mellow hangings, nay, my leaves, And left me bare to weather.

Ot. Uncertain favour! What boldness!

Bel. But my fault being nothing (as I have told you oft,) But that two villains, whose false oaths prevail'd Before my perfect honour, swore to Cymbeline, I was confederate with the Romans: so, Follow'd my banishment; and, this twenty years, This rock, and those desmesnes, have been my world: Where I have liv'd at honest freedom; paid More pious debts to heaven, than all The fore-end of my time.—But, up to the mountains; This is not huetor's language:—He, that strikes The venison first, shall be the lord o' the feast; To him the other two shall minister; And we will fear no poison, which attains A place of greater state. I'll meet you in the valleys.

[Exit Bel. and Ot.] How hard it is, to hide the sparks of nature! These boys know little, they are sons to the king: Nor Cymbeline dreams that they are alive. I meanly think, they are mine: and, though train'd up thus 'theeware, when to their bow, their thoughts do hit The roofs of palaces; and nature prompts them, In simple and low things, to prince it, much Beyond the trick of others.

This Polydore—
The heir of Cymbeline and Brittain, whom The king his father call'd Guiderius,—Jove! When on my three-foot stand I sit, and tell The warlike feats I have done, his spirits fly out Into my story:—say,—Thus mine enemy fell; And thus I set my foot on his neck; even then The princely blood flows in his cheek, he sweats, Strains his young nerves, and puts himself in posture That acts my words. The younger brother, Cadwal, (Once Arviragus,) in as like a figure, Strikes life into my speech, and shows much more His own conceiving. Hark! the game is routs!— O Cymbeline! heaven, and my conscience, knows Thou didst unjustly banish me: whereon, At three, and two years old, I stole these babies; Thinking to bar thee of succession, as Thou rest't me of my lands. Euriphile, Thou wast their nurse; they took thee for their mother, And every day do honour to her grave;

Myself, Belarius, that am Morgan call'd, They take for natural father. The game is up.

SCENE IV.—Near Milford-Haven.

Enter Pisanio and Imogen.

Imo. Thou told'st me, when we came from horse, the place Was ne'er at hand:—Ne er long'd my mother so To see me first, as I have now:—Pisanio! Man! Where is Posthumus? What is in thy mind, That makes thee so heavy?—Wherefore breaks this sigh From the inward of thee? One, but painted thus, Would be interpreted a thing perplex'd Beyond self-explication: Put thyself Into a havour of less fear, ere wildness Vanquish my staidness: Sait what this is! Why tender'st thou that paper to me, with A look untendered? If it be summer news, Smile to't before; if winterly, thou need'st But keep that constenance still.—My husband's hand! That drug damn'd Italy hath out-cry'd him, And he's at some hard post. Speak, man; thy tongue May take off some extremity, which to read Would be even mortal to me.

Pis. Please you, read; And you shall find me, wretched man, a thing The most disdain'd of fortune.

Imo. [Reads.]—The mistress, Pisanio, hath plaid the strumpet in my bed; the testimonies whereof lie bleeding in me. I speak not out of weak surmise; but from proof as strong as my grief, and as certain as I expect my revenge. That part, thou, Pisanio, must act for me, if thou thy faith be not taizd with the breach of hers. Let thine own hands take away her life: I shall give thee opportunities at Milford-Haven:— she hath my letter for that purpose: Where, if thou fear to strike, and to make me certain it is done, thou art the punisher to her dishonour, and equally to me disloyal.

Pis. What shall I need to draw my sword? the paper Hath cut her throat already — No, 'tis slander: Whose edge is sharper than the sword; whose tongue Outvenoms all the worms of Nilo; whose breath Rides on the pestilential winds, and doth belie All corners of the world: kings, queens, and states, Maids, matrons, say, the secrets of the grave This venomous slander enters. — What e'er, madam?

Imo. False to his bed! What is it, to be false? To lie in watch there, and to think on him? To weep 'twixt clock and clock, if sleep charge nature,
To break it with a fearful dream of him,
And cry myself awake? that's false to his bed?
Is it?

Pis. Also, good lady!

Imo. I false? Thy conscience witness:—lachimo,
Thou didst accuse him of incontinency;
Thou then look'dst like a villain; now, methinks,
Thy favour's good enough.—Some jay of Italy,
Whose mother was her painting, hath betray'd him:
Poor I am stale, a garment out of fashion;
And, for I am richer than to hang by the walls,
I must beripp'd:—to pieces with me!—O,
Men's words are women's traitors! All good seeming,
By thy revolt, O husband, shall be thought
Put on for villany; not born, where't grows;
But worn, a bait for ladies.

Pis. Good madam, hear me.

Imo. True honest men being heard, like false. Eneas,
Were, in his time, thought false: and Simon's weeping
Did scandal many a holy tear; took pity
From most true wretchedness: So, thou, Posthumus,
Wilt lay the heaven on all proper men;
Goodly, and gallant, shall be false, and perjur'd,
From thy great fail.—Come, fellow, be thou honest:
Do thou thy master's bidding: When thou see'st him,
A little witness my obedience: Look!
I draw the sword myself: take it; and hit
The innocent mansion of my love, my heart:
Fear not; 'tis empty of all things, but grief;
Thy master is not there; who was, indeed,
The riches of it: Do his bidding; strike.

Thou may'st be valiant in a better cause;
But now thou seem'st a coward.

Pis. Hence, vile instrument!
Thou shalt not damn my hand.

Imo. Why, I must die;
And if I do not by thy hand, thou art
No servant of thy master's: Against self-slaughter
There is a prohibition so divine,
That craves my weak hand. Come, here's my heart;
Something's a'fore:—Soft, soft; we'll no defence
Obedient as the scabbard.—What is here!
The scriptures of the loyal Leonatus,
And that, which he saith to heresy: Away, away,
Corrupters of my faith, thou shall no more
Be stomachers to my heart! Thus may poor fools
Believe false teachers: Though those that are betray'd
Do feel the treason sharply, yet the traitor
Stands in worse case of woe.
And thou, Posthumus, thou that didst set up
My disobedience 'gainst the king my father,
And make me put into contempt the suits
Of princely fellows, shalt hereafter find
It is no act of common passage, but
A strain of rareness: and I grieve myself,
To think, when thou shalt be disgrac'd by her
That now thou stir'st on, how thy memory
Will then be pang'd by me.—Pr'ythee, despatch:
The lamb entreats the butcher: Where's thy knife?
Thou art too slow to do thy master's bidding,
When I desire it too.

Pis. O gracious lady,
Since I receiv'd command to do this business,
I have not slept one wink.

Imo. Do't, and to bed then.

Pis. I'll wake mine eye-balls blind first.

Imo. Wherfore then
Debt undertake it? Why hast thou alius'd
So many miles, with a pretence? this place?
Mine action, and thine own? our horses' labour?
The time inviting thee? the perturb'd court,
For my being absent; whereunto I never Purpose to return? Why hast thou gone so far,
To be unbet, when thou hast ta'en thy stand,
The elected deer before thee?

Imo. But to win time
To lose so bad employment: in the which
I have consider'd of a course; Good lady,
Hear me with patience.

Imo. I talk thy tongue weary; speak:
I have heard, I am a strumpet; and mine ear,
Theroin false struck, can take no greater wound,
Nor tent, to bottom that. But speak.

Pis. Then, madam,
I thought you would not back again.

Imo. Most like;
Bringing me here to kill me.

Pis. Not so, neither:
But if I were as wise as honest, then
My purpose would prove well. It cannot be,
But that my master is abus'd:
Some villain, ay, and singular in his art:
Hath done you both this cursed injury.

Imo. Some Roman courtesan.

Pis. No, on my life,
I'll give but notice you are dead, and send him
Some bloody sign of it: for 'tis commanded
I should do so: You shall be miss'd at court,
And that will well confirm it.

Imo. Why, good fellow,
What shall I do the while? Where hide? How live?
Or in my life what comfort, when I am
Dead to my husband?

Pis. If you'll back to the court,—
Imo. No court, no father; nor no more ado
With that harsh, noble, simple, nothing:
That Cloun, whose love-suit hath been to me
As harmful as a siege.

Pis. If not at court,
Then not in Britain must you hide.

Imo. Where then?
Hath Britain all the sun that shines? Day, night,
Are they not but in Britain? I the world's volume
Our Britain seems as of it, but not in it;
In a great pool, a swain's nest; Pr'ythee, think
That' s rivers out of Britain.

Pis. I am most glad
You think of other place. The ambassador,
Lucius the Roman, comes to Milford Haven
To-morrow; Now, if you could wear a mind
Dark as your fortune is; and but disguise
That, which, to appear itself, must not yet be,
But by self-danger; you should tread a course
Pretty, and full of view: yea, haply near
The residence of Posthumus: so nigh, at least,
That though his actions were not visible, yet
Report should render him hourly to your ear,
As truly as he moves.

Imo. O, for such means!

Imo. Though peril to my modesty, not death on t',
I would adventure.

Pis. Well then, here's the point:
You must forget to be a woman; change
Command into obedience; fear, and niceness,
(Th' handmaids of all women, or, more truly,
Woman its pretty self,) into a waggish courage;
Ready in giles, quick-answer'd, saucy, and
As quarrellous as the wasp; nay, you must Forget that rarest treasure of your cheek,
Exposing it (but, O, the harder heart!
Alack no remedy!) to the greedy touch
Of common-kissing Titan: and forget
Your laboursome and dainty trims, wherein
You made great Jono angry.
I'mo. Nay, be brief; I see into thy end, and am almost A man already.

Pis. First, make yourself but like one. For-thinking this, I have already fit, (Tis in my cloak bag;) doublet, hat, hose, all That answer to them: Would you, in their serving, And with what imitation you can borrow, From youth of such a season, 'fore noble Lucius Present yourself, desire his service, tell him Wherein you are happy, (which you'll make him know, If that his head have ear in music,) doubtless With joy he will embrace you; for he's honourable, And, doubled that, most holy. Your means abroad You have me, rich; and I will never fail Beginning, nor supply it. I'mo. Thou art all the comfort The gods will diet me with. Privy-way, away; There's more to be considered: but we'll even All that good time will give us: This attempt I'm soldier to, and will abide it with A prince's courage. Away, I can proceed. Pis. Well, madam, we must take a short farewell; Lest, being mis'd, be suspected of Your carriage from the court. My noble mistress, Here is a box: I had it from the queen; What's in't is precious; if you are sick at sea, Our reach-qualm'd at land, a dram of this Will drive away distemper.—To some shade, And fit you to your madhoud:—May the gods Direct you to the best! I'mo. Amen: I thank thee. [Exit.]

SCENE V.—A Room in Cymbeline’s Palace.

Enter Cymbeline, Queen, Cloten, Lucius, and Lords, Cym. Thus far; and so farewell.

Luc. Thanks, royal sir. My emperor hath wrote; I must from hence; And am right sorry, that I must report ye My master's enemy.

Cym. Our subjects, sir, Will not endure his yoke; and for ourselves To shew less sovereignty than they, must needs Appear unlike.

Luc. So, sir, I desire of you A conduct over land, to Milford-Haven.— Madam, all joy beaf your grace, and you! Cym. My lords, you are appointed for that office; The due of honour in no point omit:— So, farewell, noble Lucius.

Luc. Your hand, my lord, Clo. Receive it friendly; but from this time forth I wear it as your enemy.

Luc. Sir, the event Is set to name the winner: Fare you well. Cym. Leave not the worthy Lucius, good my lords, Till he have cross'd the Severn.—Happiness! [Exit Lucius and Lords. Cym. Queen. He goes hence frowning: but it honours us, That we have given him cause.

Clo. 'Tis all the better; Your valiant Britons have their wishes in it. Cym. Lucius hath wrote already to the emperor How it goes here. It fits us therefore, rigidly, Our chariots and our horsemen be in readiness: The powers that he already hath in Gallia Will soon be drawn to head, from whence he moves His war for Britain. Cym. Queen. 'Tis not sleepy business; But must be look'd to speedily, and strongly. Cym. Our expectation that it would be thus, Hath made us forward. But, my gentle queen, Where is our daughter? She hath not appear'd Before the Roman, nor to us hath teeter'd The duty of the day: She looks us like A thing more made of malmce, than of duty, We have noted it.—Call her before us: for We have been too slight in sufferrance. [Exit an Attendant. Cym. Queen. Royal sir, Since the exile of Posthumus, most retir'd Hath her life been; the eure whereof, my lord, 'Tis time must do. 'Rseeech your majesty, Forbear sharp speeches to her: She's a lady So tender of rebukes, that words are strokes, And strokes death to her.

Re-enter an Attendant.

Cym. Where is she, sir? How Can her contempt be answer'd?

Att. Please you, sir, Her chambers are all lock'd; and there's no answer That will be given to the loud'st of sounds we make. Queen. My lord, when last I went to visit her, She pray'd me to excuse her keeping close; Whereaso constrain'd by her infininity, She should that duty leave unpaid, to you, Which daily she was bound to proffer: this She wish'd me to make known: but our great court Made me to blame in memory. Cym. Her doors lock'd? Not seen of late? Great, heavens, that, which I fear, Prove false! [Exit. Queen. Son, I say, follow the king.

Clo. That man of hers, Pisania, her old servant, I have not seen these two days.

Cym. Queen. Go, look after. [Exit Cloten. Pisania, thou that stand'st so for Posthumus!— He hath a drug of mine: I pray, his absence Proceed by swallowing that; for he believes It is a thing most precious. But for her, Where is she gone? Happy, despair hath seiz'd her Or, wing'd with fervour of her love, she's flown To her desir'd Posthumus: Gone she is To death, or to dishonour; and my end Can make good use of either: She being down, I have the placing of the British crown.

Re-enter Cloten. How now, my son! Clo. 'Tis certain, she is fled Go in, and cheer the king; he rages; none Dare come about him. Queen. All the better: May This night forestall him of the coming day! [Exit Queen. Clo. I love, and hate her: for she's fair and royal; And that she hath all courteously parts more exquisit Than lady, ladies, woman; from every one The best she hath, and she, of all compounded, Outsells them all: I love her therefore; But, Disclaiming me, and throwing favours on The low Posthumus, slanders to her judgment, That what's else rare, is chock'd; and, in that point, I will conclude to hate her, nay, indeed, To be reveng'd upon her. For, when fools

Enter Pisania. Shall—who is here? What are you packing, sirrah? Come hither: Ah, you precious pander! Villain, Where is thy lady? In a word; or else Thou art straightway with the feuds. Pis. O, good my lord! Clo. Where is thy lady? or, by Jupiter I will not ask again. Close villain.
CYMBELINE.

I'll have this secret from thy heart, or rip Thy heart to find it. Is she with Posthumus? From whose so many weights of baseness cannot A dram of worth be drawn.

Pis. Aias, my lord, How can she be with him? When was she miss'd? He is in Rome.

Clo. Where is she, sir? Come nearer; No further halting: satisfy me home, What has become of her?

Pis. O, my all-worthy lord! Discover where thy mistress is, at once, At the next word,—No more of worthy lord,— Speak, or thy silence on the instant Is Thy condemnation and thy death.

Pi. Then, sir, This paper is the history of my knowledge Touching her flight. [Presenting a letter to Clo.]

Clo. Let's see't:—I will pursue her Even to Augustus' throne. Pis. [Aside.] Or this, or perish. She's far enough; and what he learns by this, May prove his travel, not her danger. Clo. O, Humph! Pis. I'll write to my lord she's dead. O Imogen, Safe may't thou wander, safe return again! [Aside. Clo. Sirrah, is this letter true?

Pis. Sir, as I think. Clo. It is Posthumus' hand; I know't.—Sirrah, if thou would'st not be a villain, but do me true service; undergo those employments, wherein I have cause to use thee, with a serious industry,— that is, what villany see I, let thee do, to perform it, directly and truly.—I would think thee an honest man; thou should'st neither want my means for thy relief, nor my voice for thy preferment. Pis. Well, my good lord. Clo. Wilt thou serve me? For since patiently and constantly thou hast stuck to the base fortune of that beggar Posthumus, thou cou'st not in the course of gratitude but be a diligent follower of mine. Wilt thou serve me?

Pis. Sir, I will. Clo. Give me thy hand, here's my purse. Hast any of thy late master's garments in thy possession? Pis. I have, my lord, at my lodging, the same suit he wore when he took leave of my lady and mistress. Clo. The first service thou dost me, fetch that suit hither: let it be thy first service; go.

Pis. I shall, my lord. [Exit. Clo. Meet thee at Milford-Haven:—I forgot to ask him one thing; I'll remember anon:—Even there thou villain, Posthumus, will I kill thee.—I would, these garments were come. She said upon a time, (the bitterness of it now belch from my heart,) that she held the very garment of Posthumus in more respect than my noble and natural person, together with the adornment of my qualities. With that suit upon my back, will I ravish her: First kill him, and in her eyes: there shall she see my valour, which will then be a torment to her contempt. He on the ground, my speech of insultment ended on his dead body,— and then my last hath diued, (which, as I say, to vex her, I will execute in the clothes that she so prized,) to the court I'll knock her back, foot her home again. She hath despised me rejoicingly, and I'll be merry in my revenge.

Re-enter Pisanio, with the clothes.

Be those the garments?

Pis. Ay, my noble lord.

Clo. How long is's since she went to Milford-Haven?

Pis. She was a week before she gave me parole.

Clo. Bring this apparel to my chamber; that is the second thing that I have commanded thee: the third is, that thou wilt be a voluntary mate to my design. Be but duteous, and true preferment shall tender it self to thee.—My revenge is now at Milford; 'Would I had wings to follow it.—Come, and be true. [Exit.

Pis. Thou bidd'st me to my loss: for, true to thee, To prove false, which I will never be, To him that is most true. To Milford go, And find not her whom pursu'd. Flow, flow, You heavenly blessings, on her! This fool's speed Be cross'd with slowness; labour be his need! [Exit.

SCENE VI.—Before the Castle of Belarius.

Enter Imogen, in boy's clothes.

Imo. I see a man's life is a tedious one: I have tir'd myself; and for two nights together Have made the ground my bed. I should be sick, But that my resolution helps me.—Milford, When from the mountain-top Pisanio shew'd thee, Thou was within a ken. O love, I think, Foundations fly the wretched: such, I mean, Where they should be relev'd. Two beggars told me I could not miss my way: will poor folks lie, That have afflictions on them; knowing 'tis A punishment, or trial? Yes; no wonder, When rich ones scarce tell true: To lapes in fulness To some is more than to lie for the; and falsehood Is worse in kings than beggars.—My dear lord! Thou art one o'the false ones: Now I think on thee, My hunger's gone; but even before, I was At point to sink for food.—But what is this? Here is a path to it: 'tis some savage hold: I was best not call; I dare not call; yet famine, Eve clean it o'erthrow nature, makes it valliant. Plenty, and peace, breeds Cowards; hardness ever Of hardness is mother.—Ho! who's here? If any thing that's civil, speak; if savage, Take, or lend.—Ho!—No answer? then I'll enter. Best draw my sword; and if mine enemy But fear the sword like me, he'll scarcely look on. Such a foe, good heaven! [She goes into the cave.

Enter Belarius, Guiderius, and Arviragus.

Bel. You, Polydore, have prov'd best woodman, and are master of the feast; Cadwal, and I, Will play the cook, and servant; 'tis our match: The sweat of industry would dry, and die, But for the end it works to. Come; our stomachs Will make what's homely, savoury; Weariness Can snore upon the fliet, when restive sloth Finds the down pillow hard.—Now, peace be here, Poor house, that keep'st thyself!

Gui. I am thoroughly weary.

Arv. I am weak with toil, yet strong in appetite.

Gui. There is cold meat i'the cave; we'll knowe on that, Whil'st what we have, kill'd be cook'd.

Bel. Stay; come not in: [Looking in.

But that it eats our victuals, I should think Here were a fairy.

Gui. What's the matter, sir? Bel. By Jupiter, an angel! or, if not, An earthly paragon!—Belch divine vassalism No older than a bay! [Exit Imogen.

Enter Imogen.

Ino. Good masters, harm me not:

Before I enter'd here, I call'd: and thought [troth, To have blegg'd, or bought what I have took: Good
CYMBELINE.

IMOGEN Oh! no answer? then I'll enter.

Act III. Sc. 6.
ACT IV.—SCENE II.

I have stolen nought; nor would out, though I had found
Gold strew'd o'er the floor. Here's money for my meat:
I would have left it on the board, so soon
As I had made my meal; and parted
With prayers for the provider.

Gru. Money, youth?
Arc. All gold and silver rather turn'd to dirt!
As 'tis no better reckôn'd, but of those
Who worship dirty gods.

Imo. I see you are angry:
Know, if you kill me for my fault, I should
Have died, had I not made it.

Bell. Whither bound?

Imo. To Milford-Haven, sir.

Bell. What is your name?

Imo. Fidele, sir: I have a kinsman, who
Is bound for Italy: he embark'd at Milford;
To whom being gone, almost speach with hunger,
I am fallen in this offence.

Bell. Pr'ythee, fair youth,
Think us no charlots; nor measure our good minds
By this rude place we live in. Well encounter'd!
'Tis almost night; you shall have better cheer
Ere you depart; and thanks, to stay and eat it.

Boys; bid him welcome.

Imo. Were you a woman, youth,
I should woo hard, but be your groom,—In honesty,
I bid for you, as I'd buy.

Arc. I'll make't my comfort,
He is a man; I'll love him as my brother:—
And such a welcome as I'd give to him,
After long absence, such as yours.—Most welcome!
Be sprightly, for you fall 'mongst friends.

Arc. If brothers?—Would it had been so, that they [Aside.
Had been my father's sons, then had my prize
Been less; and so more equal ballasting
To thee, Posthumus.

Bell. He wrings at some distress.

Arc. 'Would, I could free't!

Arc. Or I; what'er it be,
What pain it cost, what danger! Gods!

Bell. [Whispering.

Imo. Great men,
That had a court no bigger than this cave,
That did attend themselves, and had the virtue
Which their own conscience seal'd them, (laying by
That nothing gift of differing multitudes.)
Could not out-peir these twain. Pardon me, gods!
I'd change my sex to be companions with them,
Since Leontus false.

Bell. It shall be so:
Boys, we'll go dress our hunt.—Fair youth, come in:
Discourse is heavy, fasting; when we have supp'd,
We'll mannerly demand thee of thy story,
So far as thou wilt speak it.

Arc. Pray, draw near.

Arc. The night to the owl, and mourn to the lark, less

Imo. Thanks, sir.

Arc. I pray, draw near. [Exit.

SCENE VII.—Rome.

Enter Two Senators and Tribunes.

1 Sen. This is the tenour of the emperor's writ;
That since the common men are now in action
Gainst the Pannonians and Dalmatians,
And that the legions now in Gallia are Full weak to undertake our war against
The fallen-off Britons; that we do incite
The gentry to this busir 355: He creates
Lucius pro-consult: and to you the tribunes,
For this immediate levy, he commands
His absolute commission. Long live Caesar!

Tri. Is Lucius general of the forces?

2 Sen. Ay.

Tri. Remaining now in Gallia?

1 Sen. With those legions
Which I have spoke of, whereunto your levy
Must be supplyant: The words of your commission
Will tie you to the numbers, and the time
Of their despatch.

Tri. We will discharge our duty. [Exit.

ACT IV.

SCENE I.—The Forest, near the Cave.

Enter Cloten.

Cla. I am near to the place where they should meet, if Pisania have mapped it truly. How fit his garments serve me! Why should his mistress, who was made by him that made the tailor, not be fit too? the rather (saving reverence of the word) for 'tis said, a woman's fitness comes by fits. Therein I must play the workman. I dare speak it to myself, (for it is not vain-glory, for a man and his glass to compare in his own chamber, I mean,) the lines of my body are as well drawn as his; no less young, more strong, not beneath him in fortunes, beyond him in the advantage of the time, above him in birth, alike conversant in general services, and more remarkable in single operations: yet this imperseverant thing loves him in my despit. What mortality is! Posthumus, thy head, which now is growing upon thy shoulders, shall within this hour be off; thy mistress enfore'd; thy garments cut to pieces before thy face: and all this done, spurn her home to her father: who may, happily, be a little angry for my so rough usage; but my mother, having power of his testiness, shall turn all into my commendations. My horse is tied up safe: Out, sword, and to a sore purpose! Fortune, put them into my hand! This is the very description of their meeting-place; and the fellow dares not deceive me.

Exit.

SCENE II.—Before the Cave.

Enter, from the Cave, Belarius, Guidhrius, Arviragus, and Imogen.

Bel. You are not well: [To Imogen.] remain here in the cave:
We'll come to you after hunting.

Arr. Brother, stay here: [To Imogen.]

Are we not brothers?

Imo. So man and man should be;
But clay and clay differs in dignity.
Whose dust is both alike. I am very sick.

Gui. Go you to hunting, I'll abide with him.

Imo. So sick I am not;—yet I am not well:
But not so citizen a wanton, as
To seem to die, ere sick; So please you, leave me;
Stick to our journal course: the breach of custom
Is breach of all. I am sick, but your being by me
Cannot amend me: Society is no comfort.
To one not sociable: I am not very sick,
Since I can reason of it. Pray you, trust me here.
I'll rob none but myself: and let me die,
Stealing so poorly.

Gui. If you love thee; I have spoke it:
How much the quantity, the weight as much,
As I do love my father.
Thou art a robber.
A law-breaker, a villain: Yield thee, thief.
Clio. To whom? to thee? What art thou? Have not An arm as big as thine? a heart as big?
Thy words I grant, are bigger for I wear not
My dagger in my mouth: Say what thou art.
Why should I yield to thee?
Thou villain base,
Know'st me not by my clothes?
Clio. No, nor thy tailor, rascal.
Who is thy grandfather: he made those clothes,
Which, as it seems, make thee.
Thou precious varlet,
My tailor made them not.
Hence then, and thank
The man that gave them thee, thou art some fool;
I am leath to beat thee.
Clio. Then is priz'd thief,
Hear but thy name, and tremble.
Clio. What's thy name?
Clio. Cloten, thou villain.
Clio. Cloten then double villain, be thy name,
I cannot tremble at it: we're not read, or adder,
Thou wouldst move me sooner.
To thy further fear,
Nay, to thy more confusion, thou shalt know
I'm son to the queen.
Clio. I'm sorry for't; not seeming
So worthy as thy birth.
Clio. Art not afraid?
Clio. Those that I reverence those I fear: the wise;
At fools I laugh, not fear them.
Clio. Die the death:
When I have slain thee with my proper hand,
I'll follow those that even now fled hence,
And on the gates of land's town set your heads:
Yield, rustic mountaineer. [Exit, fighting..
Clio. Enter Belarius and Abstracts.
Bel. No company abroad.
Arm. None in the world: I would mistake him, sure.
Clio. I cannot tell: Long is it since I saw him,
But time hath nothing blurr'd those lines of favour
Which then he wore: the snatches in his voice,
And burst of speaking, were as his: I am absolute,
Twas very Cloten.
In this place we left them:
I wish my brother made good time with him,
You say he is so fell.
Bel. Being scarce made up,
I mean, to man, he had not apprehension
Of roasting terrors: for the effect of judgment
Is off the cause of fear: But see, thy brother.
Remember Grindells, with Cloten's head.
Clio. This Cloten was a fool: an empty purse,
There was no money in't: not Herkules
Could have knock'd out his brains, for he had none:
Yet I do not this, the fool had borne
My head, as I do his.
Bel. What hast thou done?
Clio. I am perfect, what? cut off one Cloten's head,
Son to the queen, after his own report:
Who call'd me traitor, mountaineer: and swore,
With his own single hand he'd take us in.
Displace our heads, where (thank the gods!) they
And set them on Lud's town.
Bel. What? are we all undone?
Clio. No, Why, worthy father, what have we to lose,
But, that he swore to take our lives? The law protects not us: Then why should we be tender, To let an arrogant piece of flesh thrust us; Play judge, and executioner, all himself; Or do we fear the law? What company Discover you abroad? [Bel.]

No single soul Can we set eye on, but in all safe reason, He must have some attendants. Though his humour Were nothing but mutation; ay, and that From one bad thing to worse; not frenzy, not Absolute madness could so far have rav'd, To bring him here alone: Although, perhaps, It may be heard at court, that such as we Cave here, hunt here, are outlawis, and in time May make some stronger head: the which he hearing, (As it is like him,) might break out, and swear He'd fetch us to; yet it's not probable To come alone, either he so undertaking, Or they so suffering: then on good ground we fear, If we do fear this body hath a tail More perilous than the head. [Bel.]

Let ordinance Come as the gods foresay it: howsoe'er, My brother hath done well. [Bel.]

I had no mind To hunt this day: the boy Fidele's sickness Did not give me my long way forth. [Gui.]

With his own sword, Which he did wave against my throat, I have ta'en His head from him: I'll throw't into the creek Behind our rock; and let it to the sea, And tell the fishes, he's the queen's son, Cloten: That's all I reck. [Exit.]

Bel. I fear, 'twill be reveng'd: Would Polydore, thou had'st not done't; though Becomes thee well enough. [Bel.]

So the revenge alone pursued me!—Polydore, I love thee brotherly; but envy much, Thou hast robb'd me of this deed: I would, revenges, The possible strong might meet, would seek us And put us to our answer. [Bel.]

Well, 'tis done: We'll hunt no more to-day, nor seek for danger Where there's no profit. I pr'ythee, to our rock; You and Fidele play the cooks: I'll stay Till hasty Polydore return, and bring him Together presently. [Bel.]

As. Poor sick Fidele! I'll willingly to him: To gain his colour, I'd let a parish of such Cloten's blood, And praise myself for charity. [Exit.]

Bel. O thou goddess, Thou divine nature, how thyself thou blazon'st In these two princely boys! They are as gentle As zephyrs, blowing below the violet, Not wagging his sweet head: and yet as rough, Their royal blood enchaf'd, as the rudest wind, That by the top doth take the mountain pine, And make him stoop to the vale. 'Tis wonderful, That an invisible instinct should frame them To royalty unlearn'd; honour untaught; Civility not seen from other: value That wildly grows in them, but yields a crop As if it had been sow'd! Yet still it's strange, What Cloten's being here to us portends; Or what his death will bring us.

Re-enter Guiderius. [Gui.]

Where's my brother? I have scot Cloten's cloppet down the stream, In embassy to his mother; his body's hostage For his return. [Gui.]

My ingenious instrument! Dark, Polydore, it sounds: But what occasion Hath Cadwal now to give it motion! Dark! Gui. Is he at home? [Gui.]

He went hence even now. [Bel.]

What does he mean? since death of my dear at it did not speak before. All solemn things Should answer solemn accidents. The matter? Triumphs for nothing, and lamenting toys, Is jollity for apes, and grief for boys. Is Cadwal mad?

Re-enter Arviragus, bearing Images as dead. [Bel.]

Look, here he comes, And brings the dire occasion in his arms, Of what we blame him for!

Arc. The bird is dead, That we have made so much on. I had rather Have skip'd from sixteen years of age to sixty, To have turn'd my leaping time into a crutch, Than have seen this.

Gui. O sweetest, fairest lady, My brother wears thee not one-half so well, As when thou gavest thyself.

Bel. O, melancholy! Who ever yet could sound thy bottom? Find The doze, to shew what coast thy sluggish care Might easiest harbour in?—Thou blessed thing! Jove knows what man thou might'st have made; but I, Thou diest, a most rare boy, of melancholy! How found you him?

Arc. Stark, as you see: Thus smiling, as some fly had tickled slumber, Not as death's dart, being laugh'd at: his right cheek, Reposing on a cushion.

Gui. Where?

Arc. O' the floor; His arms thus leagued: I thought, he slept; and put My clouted brogues from off my feet, whose rudeness Answer'd my steps too loud.

Gui. Why, he but sleeps: If he be gone, he'll make his grave a bed; With female fairies will his tomb be haunt'd, And worms will not come to thee.

Arc. With fairest flowers, Whilst summer lasts, and I live here, Fidele, I'll sweeten thy sad grave: Thou shalt not lack The flower, that's like thy face, pale primrose; nor The azur'd hare-bell, like thy veins; so, nor The leaf of elagantine, whom not to slander, Out-sweeten'd not thy breath: the ruddock would, With charitable bill (O bill, sore-shaming! Those rich-left heirs, that let their fathers lie Without a monument!) bring thee all this; Yea, and furr'd moss besides, when flowers are none, To winter-ground thy corse.

Gui. Pr'ythee, have done; And do not play in wench-like words with that Which is so serious. Let us bury him, And not protract with admiration what Is now due debt.—To the grave.

Arc. 'Tis so. And let us, Polydore, though now our voices Have got the mannish crack, sing him to the ground, As once our mother; use like note, and words, Save that Euriplie must be Fidele.

Gui. Cadwal, I cannot sing: I' ll weep, and word it with thee.
For notes of sorrow, out of tune, are worse
Than priests and fanes that lie.

Arr.
We'll speak it then.

Bel. Great griefs, I see, medicine the less: for Cloten
Is quite forgot. He was a queen's son, boys:
And, though he came our enemy, remember,
He was paid for that: Though mean and mighty, robbing
Together, have one dust; yet reverence
(That angel of the world,) doth make distinction
Of place 'twixt high and low. Our foe was princely;
And though you took his life, as being our foe,
Yet bury him as a prince.

Gui.
Pray you, fetch him hither.

Thierstes' body is as good as Ajax,
When neither are alive.

Arr.
If you'll go fetch him, we'll say our song the whilst.—Brother, begin.

[Exit Belarius.]

Gui. Nay, Cadwal, we must lay his head to the east:
My father hath a reason for 't.

Arr.
'Tis true.

Gui. Come on then, and remove him.

Arr.
So,—Begin.

SONG.

Gui. Fear no more the heat o' the sun
Nor the furious winter's rogue;
Thou thy worldly task hast done,
Home art gone, and taken thy wages:
Golden fods and girls all must,
As chimney-sweepers, come to dust.

Arr. Fear no more the frowns o' the great,
Thou art past the tyrant's stroke;
Care no more to clothe, and eat;
To thee the reed is as the oak:
The sceptre, learning, physic, must
All follow this, and come to dust.

Gui. Fear no more the light'ning-flash,
Arr. Nor the all-armed thunder-stone;
Gui. Fear not slander, censure rash;
Arr. Thou hast faith'd and joy'd and own:
Both. All lovers young, all lovers must Consign to thee, and come to dust.

Gui. No enemy harm thee!
Arr. Nor no witchcraft charm thee!
Gui. Ghost unlaid forbear thee!
Arr. Nothing ill come near thee!
Both. Quiet consumption have;
And renewed be thy grave!

Recentor Belarius, with the body of Cloten.

Gui. We have done our obsequies: Come, lay him down.

[more:]

Bel. Here's a few flowers; but about midnight
The herbs, that have on them cold dews o' the night,
Are strewings fitt's for graves.—Upon their faces—
You were as flowers, now winter'd: even so
These herb'lets shall, which we upon you strow—
Come on, away: apart upon our knees.
The ground, that gave them first, has them again:
Their pleasures here are past, so is their pain.

[Exit Belarius, Guidertis, and Arvagius.]

Ino. [sobbing.] Yes, sir, to Milford-Haven; Which is the way?
I thank you.—By you bush!—Pray, how far thither?
'Olds pittikins!—can it be six miles yet!—
I have gone all night.—Faith, I'll lie down and sleep.
But, soft! no bedfellow.—O, gods and goddesses!

[Seeing the body.]

These flowers are like the pleasures of the world;
This bloody man, the care on't.—I hope, I dream;

For, so, I thought I was a caw-keeper, And cook to honest creatures: But 'tis not so;
'Twas but a bolt of nothing, shot at nothing,
Which the brain makes of fumes: Our very eyes Are sometimes like our judgments, blind. Good faith, I tremble still with fear: But if there be Yet left in heaven as small a drop of pity As a ween's eye, fear'd gods, a part of it! The dream's here still: even when I wake, it Is without me, as within me; not imagin'd, felt. A headless man!—The garments of Pothosamus! I know the shape of his leg: this is his hand; His foot Mercureal: his Martial thigh;
The brawns of Hercules: but his Jovial face— Murder in heaven!—How?—'Tis gone.
Pisianio, All curses maddened Hecuba gave the Greeks, And mine to boot, be darte on thee! Thou, Conspir'd with that irreguluous devil, Cloten, Hast here cut off my lord.—To write, and read, Be henceforth treacherous!—Damn'd Pisianio Hath with his forged letters.—damn'd Pisianio— From this most bravest vessel of the world Struck the main-top!—O, Pothosamus! alas,
Where is thy head? where's that? Ah me! where's Pisianio might have kidl' tide at the heart, [that? And left this head on.—How should this be? Pisianio? 'Tis he, and Cloten: malice and lure in them Have laid this woe here. O, 'tis pregnant, pregnant! The drug he gave me, which, he said, was precious And cordial to me, have I not found it Mysterious to the senses? That confirms it home: This is Pisianio's deed, and Cloten's: O!— Give colour to my pale cheek with thy blood, That we the forrider may seem to those Which chance to find us: O, my lord, my lord!

Enter Lucres, a Captain, and other Officers, and a Soothsayer.

Cap. To them, the legions garrison'd in Gallia, After your will, have cross'd the sea; attending You here at Milford-Haven, with your ships: They are here in readiness.

Luc. But what from Rome?

Cap.
The senate hath stirr'd up the confiners, And gentlemen of Italy; most willing spirits, That promise noble service: and they come Under the conduct of bold Iachimo, Sienna's brother.

Luc. When expect you them?

Cap. With the next benefit o' the wind.

Luc.
This forwardness Makes our hopes fair. Command our present numbers Be muster'd; but the captains look to 't. Now, sir, What have you dream'd, of late, of this war's purpose?

South. Last night the very gods shew'd me a vision: (I fast, and pray'd, for their intelligence.) Thus:—
I saw Jove's bird, the Roman eagle, wing'd From the spungy south to this part of the west, There vanish'd in the sunbeams: which portends, (Unless my sins abuse my divination,) Scorn'd to the Roman host.

Luc.
Dream often so,
And never false.—Soft, ho! what trunk is here, Without his top? The ruin speaks, that sometime It was a worthy building.—How! a page!— Or dead, or sleeping on him? But dead, rather: For nature doth abhor to make his bed With the defunct, or sleep upon the dead.— Let's see the boy's face.
He is alive, my lord.

Luc. He'll then instruct us of this body.—Young Inform us of thy fortunes; for, it seem,
[one,}
They crave to be demanded: Who is this,
Thou mak'st thy bloody pillow? Or who was he,
That, otherwise than noble nature did,
 Hath alter'd that good picture? What's thy interest
In this sad wreck? How came it? Who is it?
What art thou?

Luc. I am nothing: or if not,
Nothing to be better. This was my master,
A very valiant Briton, and a good,
That here by mountaineers lies slain:—Alas!
There are no more such masters: I may wander
From east to occident, cry out for service.
Try many, all good, serve truly, never Find such another master.

Luc. 'Lack, good youth! Thon mov'st not less with thy complaining,
Thy master in bleeding; Say his name, good friend.

Luc. Richard du Champ.—If I do lie, and do
No harm by it, though the gods hear, I hope
They'll pardon it. [Aside] Say you, sir?

Luc. Thy name?

Luc. Who dost approve thyself the very same:
Thy name well fits thy faith; thy faith, thy name.
Wilt take thy chance with me? I will not say,
Thou shalt be so well master'd; but, be sure,
No less belov'd. The Roman emperor's letters,
Sent by a consul to me, should not sooner
Than thine own worth prefer thee; Go with me.

Luc. I'll follow, sir. But first, an't please the gods,
I'll hide my master from the flies, as deep
As these poor pickaxes can dig: and when
With wild wood-leaves and wood I have strew'd his
And on it said a centurion of prayers,
[grave, Such as I can, twice o'er, I'll weep, and sigh;
And, leaving so his service, follow you,
So please you entertain me.

Luc. Ay, good youth; And rather father thee, than master thee.—
My friends, The boy hath taught us many duties: Let us
Find out the prettiest daistie plot we can,
And take him with our pikes and partisans.
A grave: Come; arm him.—Boy, he is prefer'd
By thee to us; and he shall be inter'd,
As soldiers can. Be cheerful; wipe thine eyes:
Some falls are means the happier to arise. [Exeunt.

SCENE III.—A Room in Cambeline's Palace.

Enter CAMBELINE, Lords, and PISANDO.

Cym. Again; and bring me word, how 'tis with her.
A fever with the absence of her son;
A madness, of which her life's in danger:—Heavens,
How deeply you at once do touch me! Imogen,
The great part of my comfort, gone; my queen
Upon a desperate bed; and in a time
When fearful wars point at me; her son gone,
So needful for this present: It strikes me, past
The hope of comfort.—But for thee, fellow,
Who needs must know of her departure, and Dost seem so ignorant, we'll enforce it from thee
By a sharp torture.

Sir, my life is yours,
I humbly set at your will: But, for my mistress,
I nothing know where she remains, why gone,
Nor when she purposes return: 'Beseech your high-
Hold me your loyal servant. [Exeunt.

Luc. Good my liege,
The day that she was missing, he was here;
I have brought he's true, and shall perform
All parts of his subjection loyally.

For Cloten,—There wants no diligence in seeking him,
And will, no doubt, he found.

Cym. The time's troublesome:
We'll slit you for a season; but our jealousy
Does yet depend. [To Pisanio.

1 Lord. So please your majesty,
The Roman legions, all from Gallia drawn,
Are landed on your coast; with a supply
Of Roman gentlemen, by the senate sent.

Cym. Now for the counsel of my son, and queen! Is
I am amaz'd with matter.

1 Lord. Good my liege,
Your preparations can afford no less
[ready Than what you hear of Cloten more; for more you re
The want is, but to put those powers in motion,
That long to move.

Cym. I thank you: Let's withdraw:
And meet the time, as it seeks us. We fear not What can from Italy annoy us; but
We grieve at chances here.—Away. [Exeunt.

Pis. I heard no letter from my master, since
I wrote him, Imogen was slain: 'Tis strange!
Nor hear I from my mistress, who did promise
To yield me often tidings: Neither know I
What is betid to Cloten: but remain
Perplex'd in all. The heavens still must work:
Wherein I am false, I am honest; not true, to be true.
These present wars shall find I love my country,
Even to the note of the king, or I'll fall in them.
All other doubts, by time let them be clear'd:
Fortune brings in some boats, that are not steer'd. [Ex."

SCENE IV.—Before the Court.

Enter BELARIUS, GUIDERIUS, and ABIRACUS.

Gui. The noise is round about us.

Bel. Let us from it.

Arr. What pleasure, sir, find we in life, to lock it
From action and adventure?

Gui. Nay, what hope
Have we in hiding us? this way, the Romans
Must or for Britons slay us; or receive us
For barbarous and unnatural revolt.
During their use, and slay us after.

Bel. Sons,
We'll higher to the mountains: there secure us.
To the king's party there's no going: newness
Of Cloten's death (we being not known, not muster'd Among the bands) may drive us to a render
Where we have liv'd; and so extort from us
That which we've done, whose answer would be death
Drawn on with torture.

Gui. This is, sir, a doubt,
In such a time, nothing becoming you,
Nor satisfying us.

Arr. It is not likely,
That when they hear the Roman horses neigh,
Behold their quarter'd fires, have both their eyes
And ears so cloy'd importantly as now,
That they will waste their time upon our note,
To know from whence we are.

Bel. O, I am known
Of many in the army: many years,
Though Cloten then but young, you see, not wore him
From my remembrance. And, besides, the king
Hath not deserv'd my service, nor your loves;
Who find in my exile the want of breeding,
The certainty of this hard life: aye hopeless
To have the courtesy your cradle promis'd,
But to be still hot summer's tanlings, and
The shrinking slaves of winter.

42
ACT V.

SCENE I.—A Field between the British and Roman Camps.

Enter Posthumus, with a bloody handkerchief.

Post. Yea, bloody cloth, I’ll keep thee; for I wish’d
Then shouldst be colour’d thus. You married ones,
If each of you would take this course, how many
Must murder wives much better than themselves,
For wrying but a little?—O, Pisanio!
Every good servant does not all commands;
No heed, but to do just ones. Gods! if you Should have taken vengeance on my faults, I never Had wish’d to put on this: so had you saved
The noble Imogen to repent; and struck
Me, wretch, more worth your vengeance. But, slack,
You snatch some hence for little faults; that’s love,
To have them fall no more: you some permit
To second ills with ills, each elder worse;
And make them dread to elye! I am brought hither
Among the Italian gentry, and to fight.
Against my lady’s kingdom: ’Tis enough
That, Britain, I have kill’d thy mistress; peace!
I’ll give no wound to thee. Therefore, good heavens,
Hear patiently my purpose: I’ll disrobe me
Of these Italian weeds, and suit myself
As does a Briton peasant: so I’ll fight
Against the part I come with; so I’ll die
For thee, O Imogen, even for whom my life
Is, every breath, a death: and thus, unknown,
Pitied nor hated, to the face of peril
Myself I’ll dedicate. Let me make men know
More value in me, than my habits shew,
Gods, put the strength of the Leonati in me!
To shame the guile o’ the world, I will begin
The fashion, less without, and more within. [Exit.

SCENE II.—The same.

Enter at one side, Lucius, Iachimo, and the Roman army; at the other side, the British army; Lucius Posthumus following it, like a poor soldier.

They march over, and go out. Actium. Then enter agens in stirrhur, Iachimo and Posthumus: he vanquisheth and disarmeth Iachimo, and then leaves him.

Iach. The heaviness and guilt within my bosom
Takes off my manhood: I have belied a lady,
The princess of this country, and the air on’t
Revealingly enfeebles me: Or, could this carl,
A very drudge of nature’s, have subdued me,
In my profession? Knighthoods and honours, borne
As I wear mine, are titles but of scorn.
If that thy country, Britain, be before
This lout, as he exceeds our lords, the odds
Is, that we scarce are men, and you are gods. [Exit.

The battle continues; the Britons fly; Cymbeline is taken; then enter, to his rescue, Belarius, Gudenius, and Arviragus.

Bel. Stand, stand! We have the advantage of the
The lane is guarded; nothing routs us, but [ground;]
The villany of our fears.

Gui. Arr. Stand, stand, and fight!

Enter Posthumus, and secunds the Britons: They resume Cymbeline, and execute. Then, enter Lucius, Iachimo, and Imogen.

Luc. Away, boy, from the troops, and save thyself:
For friends kill friends, and the disorder’s such
As war were hood-wink’d.

Iach. ’Tis their fresh supplies. Luc. It is a day turn’d strangely: Or betimes
Let’s re-enforce, or fly. [Exit

SCENE III.—Another Part of the Field.

Enter Posthumus and a British Lord.

Lord. Canst thou from where they made the stand?
Post. I did:
Though you, it seems, come from the fiers.

Lord. I did.

Post. No blame be to you, sir; for all was lost,
But that the heavens fought: The king himself
Of his wings destinate, the army broken,
And but the backs of Britons seen, all flying
Through a strait lane; the enemy full-heard,
Lolling the tongue with slaughtering, having work
More plentiful than tools to do’s, struck down
Some mortally, some slightly touch’d, some falling
Merely through fear; that the strait pass was damn’d
With dead men, hurt behind, and cowards living
To die with lengthen’d shame.

Lord. Where was this lane?

Post. Close by the battle, ditch’d, and wall’d with Which gave advantage to an ancient soldier,— [turf,
An honest one, I warrant who deserv’d
So long a breeding, as his white beard came to,
In doing this for his country;—standart the lane,
He, with two striplings, (lads more like to run
The country base, than to commit such slaughter;
With faces fit for masks, or rather fairer
Than those for preservation cas’d, or shame,) Made good the passage; cry’d to those that fled,
Our Britain’s harts die flying, not our men:
To darkness feet, souls that fly backward! Stand;
Or we are Romans, and will give you that
Like breasts, which you show hearty; and may save,
But to look back in fear: stand, stand.—These three,
Three thousand confident, in act as many,
ACT V.—SCENE IV.

For three performers are the file, when all!
The rest do nothing:) with this word, stand, stand,
Across theodated by the players. The more charming,
With their own nobleness, (which could have turned
A distaff to a lance,) gilded pale looks,
Part, shame, part, spirit renew'd; that some, turn'd
But by example (O, a sin in war, [coward Damm'd in the first beginners!) 'gan to look
The way that they did, and to grin like lions
Upon the pikes of the butlers. Then began
A stop i' the chaser, a retire; anon,
A rout, confusion thick: Forthwith, they fly
Chickens, the way which they stoo'd eagles; slaves,
The strifes they victors made: And now our cowards (like fragments in hard voyages,) became
The life o' the need; having found the back-door open
Of the unguarded hearts, Iheavens, how they wound!
Some, slain before; some, dying; some, their friends
Ere-borne (i' the former wars: ten, ch'ed by one,
Are now each one the slaughter-man of twenty:
Those, that would die or e'er resist, are grown
The mortal bugs o' the field.

Lord. This was strange chance:
A new lone! an old man.
Post. Nay, do not wonder at it: You are made
Rather to wonder at the things you hear,
Than to work any. Will you rhyme upon't,
And vent it for a mockery? Here is one:
Two boys, an old men twice a boy, a lane,
Preserv'd the Britons, was the Romans' bone.
Lord. Nay, be not angry, sir.
Post. I' the Lord, to what end?
Who dares not stand his foe. I'll be his friend:
For if he'll do as he is made to do,
I know, he'll quickly fly my friendship too.
You have put me into rhyme.

Lord. Farewell; you are angry. [Exit.
Post. Still going!—This is a lord! O noble misery!
To be i' the field, and ask, what news of me,
To-day, how many would have given their honours
To have saw'd their carcasses? took heel to do't,
And yet died too! 1, in my own woe charm'd,
Could not find death, where I did hear him groan
Norfeil him, where he struck: Being an ugly monster,
His strange, he hides him in fresh cups, soft beds,
Sweet words; or hath more ministers than we,
That draws his knives i' the war.—Well. I will find him:
For being now a favourer to the Roman,
No more a Briton, I have resume'd again
The part I came in: Fight I will no more.
But yield me to the veriest hint, that shall Once touch my shoulder. Great the slaughter is Here made by the Roman: great the answer he Britons must take; For me, my ransom's death;
On either side I come to spend my breath;
Which neither here I'll keep, nor bear again;
But end it by some means for Imogen.

Enter Two British Captains, and Soldiers.

1 Cap. Great Jupiter be praised! Lucius is taken:
'Tis thought, the old man and his sons were angels.
2 Cap. There was a fourth man, in a silly habit
That gave the affront with them.

1 Cap. So 'tis reported:
But none of them can be found.—Stand! who is Post. A Roman;
Who had not now been dropping here, if seconds
Had answer'd him.
2 Cap. Lay hands on him; a dog!
A leg of Rome shall not return to tell
What crows have peck'd them here: He brags his
As if he were of note: bring him to the king: [service

Enter Cymbeline, attended; Belarius, Guiderius, Arviragus, Pisanio, and Roman Captains. The Captains present Posthumus to Cymbeline, who delivers him over to a Gaoler: after which, all go out.

SCENE IV.—A Prison.

Enter Posthumus, and Two Gaolers.

1 Gaol. You shall not now be stolen, you have locks upon you:
So, graze, as you find pasture.
2 Gaol. Ay, or a stomach. [Exeunt Gaolers.
Post. Most welcome, Londage! for thou art a way,
I think, to liberty: Yet am I better
Than he that's sick o' the gout: since he had rather Groan so in perpetuity, than be cur'd
by the sure physician, death; who is the key [ter'd
To unbar these locks. My conscience! thou art fret-
More than my shanks, and wrists: You good gods,
The penitent instrument, to pick that bolt, [give me
Then, free for ever! Is't enough, I am sorry?
So children temporal fathers do appease;
Gods are more full of mercy. Must I repent?
I cannot do it better than in yore,
Desir'd, more than constrain'd: to satisfy,
If of my freedom 'tis the main part, take
No stricter render of me, than my all.
I know, you are more element than vile men,
Who of their broken debters take a third,
A sixth, a tenth, letting them thrive again
On their avowement: that's not my desire:
For Imogen's dear life, take mine: and thought
'Tis not so dear, yet 'tis a life; you coin'd it:
Twen man and man, they weigh not every stamp;
Though light, take pieces for the figure's sake
You rather mine, bring yours: And so, great powers,
If you will take this audit, take this life,
And cancel these cold bonds. O Imogen!
I'll speak to thee in silence.

He sleeps.

Solemn Music. Enter, as an apperition, Sicilius Leonatus, father to Posthumus, an old man, attired like a warrior; leading in his hand an ancient nucleon, his wife, and mother to Posthumus, with music before them. Then, after other music, follow the Two young Leonati, brothers to Posthumus, with wounds, as they died in the wars. They circle
Posthumus round, as he lies sleeping.

Sici. No more, thou thunder-master, show
Thy spite on mortal flies:
With Mars fall out, with Juno chide,
That thy adulteries
Rates and revenges.
Hath my poor boy done aught but well,
Whose face I never saw?
I died, whilst in the womb he stay'd
Attending Nature's law.
Whose father then (as men report,
Thou orphans' father art)
Thou should'st have been, and shielded him
From this earth-vexing smart.

Moth. Lucina lent not me her aid,
But took me in my throes:
That from me was Posthumus'right.
Came crying 'mongst his foes,
A thing of pity!

Sici. Great nature, like his ancestry,
Moulded the stuff so fair,
That he deserv'd the praise o'the world
As great Sicilius' heir.

ACT V.—SCENE V.

By medicine life may be prolong'd, yet death
Will seize the doctor too.—How ended she?

Cor. With horror, madly dying; like her life;
Which, being true to the world, concluded
Most cruel to herself. What she confess'd
I will report, so please you: These her women
Can trip me, if I err; who, with wet cheeks,
Were present when she finish'd.

Cym. Prythee, say,

Cor. First, she confess'd she never lov'd you, only Affected greatness got by you, not you
Married your royalty, was wise to your place;
Abhor'd your person.

Cym. She alone knew thee;
And, but she spoke it dying, I would not Believe her lips in opening it. Proceed
Cor. Your daughter, whom she bore in haste to love
With such integrity, she did confess
Was as a scorpion to her sight; whose life,
But that her flight prevented it, she had Tak'n off by poison.

Cym. O most delicate friend!
Who is 't can read a woman?—Is these more?
Cor. More, sir, and worse. She did confess, she had
For years, when she was a virgin;
Should by the minute feed on life, and, ling'ring,
By inches waste you: In which time she purpos'd,
By watching, weeping, tendance, kissing, to O'come you with her show: yes, and in time,
(When she had fitt'd you with her craft,) to work
Her son into the adoption of the crown.
But failing of her end by his sudden decease,
Grew shame-less desperate; open'd, in despite
Of heaven and men, her purposes; repented
The evils she hatch'd were not effect'd; so,
Despairing, died.

Cym. Heard you all this, her wonder
Lady. We did so, please your highness;

Cym. Mine eyes
Were not in fault, for she was beautiful;
Mine ears, that heard her flattery; nor my heart,
That thought her like her seeming: it had been vis-
cious,
To have mistrusted her: yet, O my daughter!
That it was fully in my, thou may'st say,
And prove it in thy feeling. Heaven mend all!

Enter Lucius, Iachimo, the Soothsayer, and other Roman prisoners, guarded; POSTHUMUS, behind, and IMOGEN.

Thou can'st not, Caius, now for tribute; that
The Britons have raz'd out, though with the loss
Of many a bold one; whose kinsmen have made suit,
That their good souls may be appeas'd with slaughter;
Of you their captives, which ourselves have granted:
So, think of your estate.

Luc. Consider, sir, the chance of war: the day
Was yours by accident; had it gone with us, [end
We should not, when the blood was cool, have threat-
Our prisoners with the sword. But since the gods
Will have it thus, that nothing but our lives
May be call'd ransom, let it come: sufficeth.
A Roman with a Roman's heart can suffer:
Augustus lives to think on 't: and so much,
For my peculiar care. This one thing only
I will entreat; My boy, a Briton born.
Let him be ransom'd: never master had
A page so kind, so true, so loyal, so diligent,
So tender over his occasions, true,
So teat, so nurse-like: let his virtue join
With my request, which, I'll make bold, your high-
Cannot deny; he hath done no Briton harm,
Though he have serv'd a Roman: save him, sir, And spare no blood beside.

Cym. I have surely seen him: His favour is familiar to me.—
Boy, thou hast look'd thyself into my grace, And art mine own.—I know not why, nor wherefore. To say, live, boy: me'er thank thy master: live, And ask of Cymbeline what thou wilt, Fitting my bounty, and thy state, I'll give it; Yea, though thou demand a prisoner, The noblest ta'en.

Luc. I humbly thank thy highness. Luc. I do not bid thee beg my life, good lad; And yet, I know, thou wilt.

Imo. No, no: slack. There's other work in hand; I see a thing Bitter to me as death: your life, good master, Must shuffle for itself.

Luc. He the disbands me, He leaves me, scorces me: Briefly die their joys That place them on the truth of girls and boys.— Why stands he so perplex'd?

Cym. What would'st thou, boy? I love thee more and more: think more and more What's best to ask. Know'st thou him look'st on? speak, Wilt have him live? Is he thy kinsman? thy friend?

Imo. He is a Roman: so more kin to me, Than I to thy highness: who, being born your vas- Am something nearer. [sal.

Cym. Wherefore ey'st him so? Imo. I'll tell you, sir, in private, if you please To give me hearing.

Cym. Ay, with all my heart, And lend my best attention. What's thy name?

Imo. Fidele, sir.

Cym. Thou art my good youth, my page; I'll be thy master: Walk with me; speak freely. [Cymbeline and Imogen converse apart.

Bel. Is not this boy reviv'd from death?

Art. One sand another
Not more resembles: That sweet rosy lad, Who died, and was Fidele:—What think you?

Giu. The same dead thing alive. {forbear.
Bel. Peace, peace! see further: he eyes us not; Creatures may be alike: were't he, I am sure He would have spoke to us.

Giu. But we saw him dead.
Bel. Be silent, let's see further.
Vis. It is my mistress. [Aside.
Since she is living, let the time run on, To good, or bad.

Cymbeline and Imogen come forward.

Cym. Come, stand thou by our side: Make thy demand aloud.—Sir, [to Iach.] step you Give answer to this boy, and do it freely; [torth, Or, by our greatness, and the grace of it, Which is our honour, bitter torture shall Winnow the truth from falsehood.—On, speak to him.

Imo. My booin, is that this gentleman may reader Of whom he had this ring.

Post. What's that to him? [Aside.

Cym. That diamond upon your finger say, How came it yours?

Iach. Thout torture me to leave unspoken that Which, to be spoke, would torture thee.

Cym. How! me? Iach. I am glad to be constrain'd to utter that which Torments me to conceal. By villany I got this ring; 'twas Leonatus' jewel: Whom thou didst banish: and (which more may grieve As it doth me,) a nobler sir ne'er liv'd [thee, 'Twixt sky and ground. Wilt thou hear more, my lord? Cym. All that belongs to this.

Iach. That paragon, thy daughter,— For whom my heart drops blood, and my false spirits Fail to remember,—Give me leave; I faint.

Cym. My daughter! what of her? Renew thy strength:
I had rather thou should'st live while nature will, Than die ere I hear more: strive, mao, and speak. Iach. Upon a time, (unhappy was the clock That struck the hour! it was in Rome, (accurs'd The mausoleum where!) 'twas at a feast, (O! would our words had been poison'd! or, at least, Those which I heard to head!) the good Posthumus, (What should I say? he was too good, to be Where ill men were: and was the best of all Amongst the rar'st of good ones,) sitting sadly, Hearing us praise our loves of Italy For beauty that made barron the swell'd boast Of that which best could speak: for feature, Junius The shade of Venus, or straight-riught Minerva, Postures beyond brief nature; for condition, A shop of all the qualities that man Loves woman for: besides, that hook of wiving, Fairness, which strikes the eye:—

Cym. I stand on fire.

Post. Come to the matter.

Iach. All too soon shall I, Unless thou would'st grieve quickly.—This Posthumus— (Most like a noble loud in love, and one [mus, That had a royal lover,) took his hint; And, not displeasing whom we pleased, (tho' He was as calm as virtue) he began His mistress' picture; which by his tongue being made, And then a mind put in't, either our brags Were crack'd of kitchen trulls, or his description Prov'd us unsparking sets.

Cym. Nay, nay, to the purpose. Iach. Your daughter's chastity.—There it begins. He spake of her, as Dian had hot dreams, And she alone were cold: Whereat, I, wretch! Made scripule of his praise; and wagg'd with him Where a bed was gold, 'gainst this which then he wore Upon his brows' blue finger, to attain To suit the place of his bed, and win this ring By hers and mine adulteray; he, true Knight, No lesser of her honour confident Than I did truly find her, stakes this ring; And would so, had it been a carbuncle Of Phoebus' wheel; and might so safely, had it Been all the worth of his car. Away to Britain Post I in this design: Well may you, sir, Remember me at court, where I was taught Of your chaste daughter the wide difference 'Twixt amorous and villainous. Being thus quench'd Of hope, not longing, mine Italian brain Gain in your droller Britain operate More likely! for my vastage, excellent; And, to be brief, my practice so prevail'd, That I return'd with similar proof enough To make the noble Leonatus mad, By wounding his belief in her renew To finish thus, and thus; averring notes Of chamber-hanging, pictures, this her bracelet, (O, cunning, how I got it!) say, some marks Of secret on her person, that he could not But think her bond of chastity quite crack'd, I having ta'en the forfeit. Whereupon,— Methinks, I see him now. [Coming forward.

Post. Ay, so thou dost. [Coming forward.

Italian fend!—Al me, most credulous fool, Egregious munder, thief, any thing
That's due to all the villains past, it being,
To come!—O, give me cord, or knife, or poison,
Some upright justice! Thou, king, send out
For torturers ingenious: it is I
That all the abhorred things o' the earth amend,
By being worse than they. I am Posthumus,
That kill'd thy daughter:—villain-like, I lie;
That case'd a lesser villain than myself,
A sacrilegious thief, to do't:— the temple
Of virtue was she; yea, and she herself.

Spit, and throw stones, cast mire upon me, set
The dogs o' the street to bay me: every villain
Be call'd, Posthumus Leonatus; and
Be villany less than 'twas!—O Imogen!
My queen, my life, my wife! O Imogen,
Imogen, Imogen!

Post. Shall I have a play of this? Thou scornful page,
There lie thy part. [Striking her: she falls.]

Pis. O, gentlemen, help, help,
Minion and your mistress:—O, my lord Posthumus! You never kill'd Imogen till now.—Help, help!—
Mine honour'd lady! [To Guinevere.]

Cym. Does the world go round?

Post. How come these staggerers on me?

Pis. Wake, my mistress!

Cym. If this be so, the gods do mean to strike me
To death with mortal joy.

Pis. How fares my mistress?

Cym. O, get thee from my sight;
They gav'st me poison: dangerous fellow, hence!
Breathe not where princes are.

Cym. The tune of Imogen.

Pis. Lady,
The gods throw stones of sulphur on me, if
That box I gave you was not thought by me
A precious thing; I had it from the queen.
Cym. New matter still?

Cym. It poison'd me.

Cor. O gods!—

I left out one thing which the queen confess'd,
She must approve thee honest: If Pisanius
Have, said she, given his mistress that confection
Which I gave him for cordial, she is serv'd
As I would serve a rat.

Cym. What's this, Corinellus?

Cor. The queen, sir, very oft importun'd me
To temper poisons for her; still pretending
The satisfaction of her knowledge only,
In killing creatures vile, as cats and dogs
Of no esteem: I, dreading that her purpose
Was of more danger, did compound for her
A certain stuff, which, being ta'en, would cease
The present power of life; but, in short time,
All offices of nature should again
Do their due functions.—Have you ta'en of it?

Imo. Most like I did, for I was dead.

Bel. My boys,

There was our error.

Gui. This is sure, Fidelia.

Imo. Why did you throw your wedded lady from Think, that you are upon a rock; and now [you
Throw me again.

Post. Hang there like fruit, my soul,
Till the tree die!

Cym. How now, my flesh, my child?
What, mak'st thou me a dastard in this act?
Will thou not speak to me?

Imo. Your blessing, sir. [Kneeling.]

Bel. Though you did love this youth, I blame ye not;
You had a motive for it. [To Guinevere.]

Cym. My tears that fall,

Prove holy water on thee! Imogen,
Thy mother's dead.

Imo. I am sorry for't, my lord.

Cym. O, she was naught; and long of her it was,
That we meet here so strangely: But her son
Is gone, we know not how, nor where.

Pis. My lord, now fear is from me, I'll speak truth. Lord Cloten,
Upon my lady's missing, came to me
With his sword drawn; foam'd at the mouth, and
If I discover'd not which way she was gone, [swore,
It was my instant death: By accident,
I had a feigned letter of my master's
Then in my pocket; which did direct me
To seek her on the mountains near to Milford;
Where, in a frenzy, in my master's garments,
Which he infor'd me from, away he posts
With unchaste purpose, and with oath to violate
My lady's honour: what became of him,
I further know not.

Gui. Let me end the story:

I slew him there.

Gui. Marry, the gods foretold!
I would not thy good deeds should from my lips
Pluck a hard sentence: 'prythee, valiant youth,
Dey not again.

Cym. He was a prince.

Gui. A most uncivil one: The wrongs he did me
Were nothing prince-like; for he did provoke me
With language that would make me spurn the sea,
If it could so roar to me: I cut off's head;
And am right glad, he is not standing here
To tell this tale of mine.

Cym. I am sorry for thee.
By thine own tongue thou art condemned, and must Endure our law: Thou art dead.

Imo. That headless man
I thought had been my lord.

Cym. Find the offender,
And take him from our presence.

Bel. Stay, sir king:
This man is better than the man he slew,
As well descended as thyself; and hath
More of thee merited, than a band of Clotens
Had ever scar.——Let his arms alone:

[To the guard.]

They were not born for bondage.

Cym. Why, old soldier,
Wilt thou undo the worth thou art unpaid for,
By tasting of our wrath? How low of descent
As good as we?

Arv. In that he spake too far.

Cym. And thou shalt die for't.

Bel. We will die all three;
But I will prove, that two of us are as good
As I have given out him——My sons, I must,
For mine own part, unfold a dangers speech,
Though, haply, well for you.

Arv. Your danger is

Ons. And our good his.

Bel. Have at it then.—By leave:——Thou hadst, great king, a subject, who Was call'd Belarius.

Cym. What of him? he is

A banish'd traitor.

Bel. He is it, that hath
Assum'd this age: indeed, a banish'd man;
I know not how, a traitor.

Cym. Take him hence; the whole world shall not save him.

TITUS ANDRONICUS.

This play was entered at Stationers' Hall, Feb. 6, 1599—16, in which year (according to Laughton, who alone appears to have seen the first edition) it was also printed. There were two editions in quarto, one in 1600, and another in 1611; but neither of these has the author's name on the title-page. The tragedy however was written several years before; as it is mentioned in the induction to Ben Jonson's Bartholomew Fair in 1614, as one that had been exhibited five-and-twenty or thirty years; which, if we take the lowest number, throws it back to the year 1589, at which time Shakspeare was but twenty-five. It was not probably written two or three years earlier, and was the first production of our author.

That it is his, there is not only the testimony of its having been pointed in the players' edition, but the authority of Meres, a contemporary author, who in a little book called Palladis Tamia, printed in 1594, enumerates this tragedy among the works of Shakspeare.

The commentators have shown themselves very desirous of discrediting the authenticity of this play; but they have nothing to oppose to the above strong evidence in its favour: but such inconclusive arguments as may be derived from the dissimilarity of its style, and the inappropriateness of its merit to the other works of our author, to which may be added, that it was a boyish production, that is, perhaps, superior to any of the plays which were most popular at the period of its composition, and which a young writer would naturally desire to imitate in the first timid experiment of his powers; and that however despising its horrors and its tragic declamation may be to us, they were particularly admired by our author's contemporaries.

Much stress has been laid by Malone on the tradition mentioned by Ravenscroft; in his preface to the alteration of this play, published as 1607, he says, "I have been told by some ancient conversant with the stage, that it was not originally Shakspeare's, but was brought to be acted, and he only gave some master touches to one or two of the principal parts or characters." This tradition, from whomsoever Ravenscroft received it, is overturned by the shakiest reference to dates. The play was produced, as we have already seen, certainly in 1599, probably as early as 1594; at this time Shakspeare was as yet unknown; a young man little more than twenty, without either literary reputation or theatrical influence, and the very last person to whom a play would be entrusted for the benefit of revision and correction. The idea, names, and characters of the play are from an old ballad, which the reader will find in the first volume of Percy's Reliques of Ancient English Poetry.

SCENE,—Rome; and the Country near it.

ACT I.

SCENE I.—Rome. Before the Capitol.

The tomb of the Andronic family appearing: the Tribunes and Senators aloft, as in the Senate. Enter, below, Saturnius and his Followers, on one side; and Bassianus and his Followers, on the other; with drum and colours.

Sat. Noble patriots, patrons of my right, Defend the justice of my cause with arms; And, countrymen, my loving followers, Plead my successful title with your swords: I endow'd you with the honourable name That were the imperial diadem of Rome; Then let my father's honours live in me, Nor wrong mine age with this indignity.

Bos. Romans,—friends, followers, favourers of If ever Bassianus, Caesar's son, by right, Were gracious in the eyes of royal Rome, Keep then this passage to the Capitol; And suffer not dishonour to approach The imperial seat, to virtue consecrate, To justice, consternation, and nobility: For let desert in our election shine.

And, Romans, fight for freedom in your choice.

Enter Marcus Andronicus, aloft, with the crown.

Mor. Princes—that strive by factions, and by Ambitiously for rule and empery,— [friends, Know, that the people of Rome, for whom we stand A special party, have, by common voice, In election for the Roman empery, Chosen Andronicus, surnamed Pius, For many good and great deserts to Rome; A nobler man, a braver warrior, Lives not this day within the city walls: He by the senate is accitied home, From weary war against the barbarous Goths; That, with his sons, a terror to our foes, Hath yoked a nation strong, trained up in arms. Ten years are spent, since first he undertook This cause of Rome, and chastised with arms Our enemies' pride: Five times he hath return'd Bleeding to Rome, bearing his valiant sons In collins from the field; And now at last, laden with honour's spoils, Returns the good Andronicus to Rome, Renowned Titus, flourishing in arms. Let us entertain.—By honour of his name, Whom, worthyly, you would have now succeed, And in the Capitol and senate's right, Whom you pretend to honour and adore,— That you withdraw you, and abate your strength; Disregard your followers, and, as suitors should, Plead your deserts in peace and humbleness.

Sat. How fair the tribune speaks to calm my thoughts!

But. Marcus Andronicus, so do I stff

In thy uprightness and integrity, And so I love and honour thee and thine, Thy nobler brother Titus, and his sons, And, to whose renown my thoughts are dumbided all, Gracious Linavia, Rome's rich ornament; That I will here dismiss my loving friends; And to my fortunes, and the people's favour, Commit my cause in balance to be weigh'd.

[Exeunt the Followers of Bassianus.]

Sat. Friends, that have been thus forward in my right
ACT I.—SCENE II.

I thank you all, and here dismiss you all; And to the love and favour of my country Commit myself, my person, and the cause. [Enter the Followers of Saturninus.

Rome, be as just and gracious unto me, As I am confident and kind to thee.— Open the gates, and let me in. [ Gus. Tribunes! and me, a poor competitor. [Sat. and Bus. go into the Capitol, and exclaim with Senators, Marcus, &c.

SCENE II.—The same. Enter a Captain and others. Cep. Romans, make way! The good Andronicus, Patron of virtue, Rome's best champion, Successful in the battles that he fights, With honour and with fortune is return'd, From where he circumscribed with his sword, And brought to yoke, the enemies of Rome. Flourish of trumpets, &c. Enter Mutius and Marcus: after them, two men bearing a coffin covered with black; then Quintus and Lucius. After them, Titus Andronicus; and then Tamora, with Alarbus, Chiron, Demetrius, Aaron, and other Goths, prisoners; Soldiers and People, following. The bearers set down the coffin, and Titus speaks. Tit. Hail, Rome, victorious in thy mourning weeds! Lo, as the dark, that hath discharge'd her fraught, Returns with precious lading to the bay, From whence at first she weigh'd her anchorage, Cometh Andronicus, bound with laurel boughs, To re-salute his country with his tears; Tears of true joy for his return to Rome.— Thou great defender of this Capitol, Stand gracious to the rites that we intend!— Romans, of five and twenty valiant sons, Half of the number that king Priam had Behold the poor remains, alive, and dead! These, that survive, let Rome reward with love; These, that I bring unto their latest home, With burial amongst their ancestors:— Here Goths have given me leave to shear my sword. Titus, unkind, and careless of thine own, Why suffer'st thou thy sons, unburied yet, To hover on the dreadful shore of Styx!— Make way to lay them by their brethren. [The tomb is opened. There greet in silence, as the dead are wont. And sleep in peace, slain in your country's wars! 0 sacred receptacle of my joys, Sweet cell of virtue and nobility, How many sons of mine hast thou in store, That thou wilt never render to me more! Luc. Give us the proudest prisoner of the Goths, That we may hew his limbs, and, on a pile, All menes fratum sacrifice his flesh, Before this earthly prison of their bones; That so the shadows be not unappeas'd. Nor we disturb'd with prodigies on earth. Tit. I give him you; the noblest that survives, The eldest son of this distracted queen. Tam. Stay, Roman brethren;—Gracious conqueror, Victorious Titus, rue the tears I shed. A mother's tears in passion for her son: And, if thy sons were ever dear to thee, O, think my son to be as dear to me. Sufieth not, that we are brought to Rome, To beautify thy triumphs, and to return, Captive to thee, and to thy Roman yoke; But must my sons be slaughtered in the streets, For valiant doings in their country's cause? O! if to fight for king and common weal Were piety in thine, it is in these. Andronicus, stain not thy tomb with blood: Wilt thou draw near the nature of the gods? Draw near them then in being merciful! Sweet mercy is nobility's true badge. Three-noble Titus, spare my first-born son. Tit. Patient yourself, madam, and pardon me. These are their brethren, whom you Goths beheld Alive, and dead; and for their brethren slain, Religiously they ask a sacrifice: To this your son is mark'd; and die he must, To appease their groaning shadows that are gone. Luc. Away with him; and make a fire straight; And let's how his limbs, till they be clean consumed. [Exeunt Lucius, Quintus, Martius, and Mutius, with Alarbus. Tam. O cruel, irreligious piety! Cit. Was ever Scythia half so barbarous? Dem. Of Greek Troy, and the victorious Rome. Alarbus goes to rest; and we survive To tremble under Titus' threatening look. Then, madam, stand resolv'd: but hope withal, The self-same gods that arm'd the queen of Troy With opportunity of sharp revenge Upon the Thracian tyrant in his tent, May favour Tamora, and spread her name wide. (When Goths were Goths, and Tamora was queen,) To quit the bloody wounds upon her face. Re-enter Lucius, Quintus, Martius, and Mutius, with their swords bloody. Luc. See, lord and father, how we have perform'd Our Roman rites: Alarbus' limbs are lopp'd, And entrails feed the sacrificing fire, Whose smoke, like incense, doth perfume the sky. Remaineth nought, but to inter our brethren, And with loud laments welcome them to Rome. Tit. Let it be so, and let Andronicus Make this his latest farewell to their souls. [Trumpets sounded, and the coffin laid in the tomb. In peace and honour rest you here, my sons; Rome's readiest champions, repose you here, Secure from worldly chances and mishaps! Here lurks no treason, here no envious swells, Here grow no damned grudges; here are no storms, No noise, but silence and eternal sleep: Enter Lavinia. In peace and honour rest you here, my sons. Luc. In peace and honour live lord Titus long! My noble lord and father, live in fame! Lo! at this tomb my tributary tears I render, for my brethren's obsequies; And at thy feet I kneel, with tears of joy Shed on the earth, for thy return to Rome: O, blest be here with me, my father's hand, Whose fortunes Rome's best citizens applaud. Tit. Kind Rome, that hast thus lovingly reserv'd The cordial of mine age to glad my heart!— Lavinia, live; outline thy father's days, And fame's eternal date, for virtue's praise! Enter Marcus Andronicus, Saturninus, Bassianus, and others. Mar. Long live lord Titus, my beloved brother, Gracious triumpther in the eyes of Rome. Tit. Thanks, gentle tribune, noble brother Marcus. Mar. And welcome, nephews, from successful wars, You that survive, and you that sleep in fame. Fair lords, your fortunes are alike in all, That in your country's service drew your swords:
But safer triumph is this funeral pomp,
That hath aspire’d to Solon’s happiness,
And triumphs over chance, in honour’s bed.—
Titus Andronicus, the people of Rome,
Whose friend in justice thou hast ever been,
Send thee by me, their tribune, and their trust,
This pannishment of white and spotless hue;
And name thee in election for the empire,
With these our late deceased emperor’s sons:
Be candidatus then, and put it on,
And help to set a head on headless Rome.

Tit. A better head her glorious body fits,
Than his, that shakes for age and weakinesse:
What! should I don this robe, and trouble you?
Be chosen with proclamations to-day;
To-morrow, yield up rule, resign my life,
And set abroad new business for you all?
Rome, I have been thy soldier forty years,
And buried one and twenty valiant sons,
Knighit’d in field, slain manfully in arms,
In right and service of their noble country:
Give me a staff of honour for mine age,
But not a sceptre to control the world:
Upright he held it, lords, that held it last.

Mar. Titus, thou shalt obtain and ask the empery.

Sat. Proud and ambitious tribune, canst thou tell me?

Tit. Patience, prince Saturnine.

Rom. Titans, do me right:—
Patricians, draw your swords, and sheath them not Till Saturnius be Rome’s emperor:—
Andronicus, would thouwert shipp’d to hell,
Rather than rob me of the people’s hearts.

Luc. Proud Saturnine, interrupter of the good
That noble-minded Titus means to thee!

Tit. Content thee, prince; I will restore to thee
Thee, but I’ll answer thee as from themselves.

Andronicus, I do not flatter thee
But honour thee, and will do till I die;
My faction if thou strengthen with thy friends,
I will most thankful be: and thanks, to men
Of noble minds, is honourable need.

Tit. People of Rome, and people’s tribunes here,
Let your voices, and your suffrages,
Will you bestow them friendly on Andronicus?—

Tit. Tribes, to gratify the good Andronicus,
And gratulate his safe return to Rome,
The people will accept whom he admits.

Tit. Tribunes, I thank you: and this suit I make,
That you create your emperor’s eldest son.

Lord Saturnine; whose virtues will, I hope,
Reflect on Rome, as Titus’s rays on earth,
And ripen justice in this common-wealth:
Then if you will elect by my advice,
Crown him, and say,—Long live our emperor!

Mar. With voices and applause of every sort,
Patricians, and plebeians, we create
Lord Saturninus, Rome’s great emperor;
And say,—Long live our emperor Saturnine!—

Sat. Titus Andronicus, for thy favours done.
To us in our election this day,
I give thee thanks in part of thy deserts,
And will with deeds requite thy gentleness:
And, for an onset, Titus, to advance
Thy name, and honourable family,
Lavinia will I make my emperor’s fit
Rome’s royal mistress, mistress of my heart,
And in the sacred Pantheon her espouse:
Tell me, Andronicus, dost this motion please thee?

Tit. It doth, my worthy lord: and, in this match,
I hold me highly honour’d of your grace:
And here, in sight of Rome, to Saturnine,—

King and commander of our common-wealth,
The wide world’s emperor,—do I consecrate
My sword, my chariot, and my prisoners;
Presents well worthy Rome’s imperial lord:
Receive them then, the tribute that I owe,
Mine honour’s ensigns humbled at thy feet.

Sat. Thanks, noble Titus, father of my life!
How proud I am of thee, and of thy gifts,
Rome shall record; and, when I do forget
The least of these unspeakable deserts,
Romans, forget your fealty to me.

Tit. New, madam, are you prisoner to an emperor?

[To TAMORA.
To him, that for your honour, and your state,
Will use you nobly, and your followers.

Sat. A goodly lady, trust me; of the hue
That I would choose, were I to choose anew.—
Clear up, fair queen, that cloudy countenance;
Though chance of war hath wrought this change
Of thou com’st not to be made a scorn in Rome: [cheer,
Princely shall he thy usage every way,
Rest on my word, and let not discontent
Daunt all your hopes; Madam, he comforts you,
Can make you greater than the queen of Goth.—
Lavinia, you are not displeas’d with this!

Luc. Not I, my lord; sith true nobility
Warrants these words in princely courtesy.

Sat. This, sweet Lavinia,—let us go;
Ransomeless here we set our prisoners free:
Proclaim our honours, lords, with trumpet and drum.

Bas. Lord Titus, by your leave, this maid is mine.

[Seizing LAVINIA.

Tit. How, sir? Are you in earnest then, my lord?
Bas. Ay, noble Titus; and resolved withal,
To do myself this reason and this right.

[To EMPIRE.
[The Emperor courts this woman in dumb show.

Mar. Swum equs is our Roman justice:
This prince in justice seizeth but his own.

Luc. And that he will, and shall, if Lucius live.

Tit. Traitors, avaunt! Where is the emperor’s guard?
Treason, my lord; Lavinia is surpriz’d.

Sat. Surpriz’d! By whom?

Bas. By him that justly may
Bear his betroth’d from all the world away.

[Exeunt MARCUS and BASILANUS, with LAVINIA.
Mut. Brothers, help to convey her hence away,
And with my sword I’ll keep this door safe.

[Exeunt LUCIUS, QUINTUS, and MARTIUS.

Tit. Follow, my lord, and I’ll soon bring her back.

Mut. My lord, you pass not here.

Tit. What, villain boy! Eear’s me my way in Rome? [Titus kills MANTICES.

Mut. Help, Lucius, help!—

Re-enter Lucius.

Luc. My lord, you are unjust; and, more than so,
In wrongful quarrel you have slain your son.

Tit. Nor thou, nor he, are any sons of mine:
My sons would never so dishonour me;
Traitor, restore Lavinia to the emperor.

Luc. Dead, if you will; but not to be his wife.
That is another’s lawful promis’d love.

[Exit.

Sat. No, Titus, no; the emperor needs her not,
Not her, nor thee, nor any of thy stock:
I’ll trust, by leisure, him that mocks me once;
Thy never, nor thy traitorous haughty sons,
Confederates all thus to dishonour me.
Was there none else in Rome to make a stale of,
But Saturnine? Full well, Andronicus,
Agree these deeds with that proud brag of thine,
That said’st, I begg’d the empire at thy hands.

Tit. O monstrous! what reproachful words are these?
ACT I.—SCENE II.

733

Sat. But go thy ways; go, give that changing piece
To him that flourish'd for her with his sword:
A valiant son—in-law thou shalt enjoy;
One fit to bandy with thy lawless sons,
To ruffle in the commonwealth of Rome.

Tit. These words are razors to my wounded heart.
Sat. And therefore, lovely Tamora, queen of Gods,
That like the stately Phoebe 'mongst her nymphs,
Dost overshine the gallant'st dames of Rome,—
If thou be pleas'd with this my sudden choice,
Behold, I choose thee, Tamora, for my bride,
And will create thee empress of Rome.

Speak, queen of Gods, dost thou applaud my choice?
And here I swear by all the Roman gods,
Sith priests and holy water are so near,
And tapers burn so bright, and every thing
In readiness for Hymeneus stand,—
I will not re-salute the streets of Rome,
Or climb my palace, till from forth this place
I lead espous'd my bride along with me.

Tam. And here, in sight of thee, my lord I swear,
If Saturnine advance the queen of Gods,
She will a handmaid be to his desires,
A loving nurse, a mother to his youth.

Sat. Ascend, fair queen Pantheon:—Lords, accomp.
Your noble emperor, and his lovely bride, [pant
Sent by the heavens for prince Saturnine.
Who will his owne heart, and her to choose,
There shall we consummate our spousal rites.

[Exeunt Saturninus, and his Followers; Tamora, and her sons; Aaron, and Gods.

Tit. I am not bid to wait upon this bride;—
Titus, when wert thou wont to walk alone,
Dishonour'd thus, and challenged of wrongs?

Re-enter Marcus, Lucius, Quintus, and Martius.

Mar. O, Titus, see, O, see, what thou hast done!
In a bad quarrel slain a virtuous son.

Tit. No, foolish tribune, no; no son of mine,—
Nor thou, nor these, confederates in the deed
That hath dishonour'd all our family; I
Unworthy brother, and unworthy sons!

Luc. But let us give him burial, as becomes,
Give Mutius burial with our brethren.

Tit. Traitors, away! he rests not in this tomb.
This monument five hundred years hath stood,
Which I have sumptuously re-edified:
Here none but soldiers, and Rome's servitors.
Bury him here; none basely slain in brawl:—
Bury him where you can show him Roman ground.

Mar. My lord, this is impiety in you:
My nephew Mutius' deeds do plead for you:
He must be buried with his brethren.

Quin. Mart. And shall, or him we will accompany.
Tit. And shall? What villain was it spoke that word?
Quin. He that would vouch not in any place but here.
Tit. What, would you bury him, in my despite;
Mar. No, noble Titus; but entreat of thee
To pardon Mutius, and to bury him.

Tit. Marcus even then hast struck upon my crest,
And, with these boys, mine honour thou hast wounded:
My foes I do repute you every one;
So trouble me no more, but get you gone.
Mar. He is not with himself, and this his配置.
Quin. Not I, till Mutius' bones be buried.

[Marcus and the sons of Titus kneel
Mar. Brother, for in that name doth nature plead.
Quin. Father, for in that name doth nature speak.
Tit. Speak thou no more, if all the rest will speed.
Quin. He renowned Titus, more than half my soul,
Luc. Dear father, if we can, we'll save of us all,—
Mar. Suffer thy brother Marcus to inter
His noble nephew here in virtue's nest,
That died in honour and Lavinia's cause.

Tut. Rise, Marcus, rise:—
The dismalst day is this, that e'er I saw,
To be dishonour'd by my sons in Rome!—
Well, bury him, and bury me the next.

[Titus is led into the tomb.

Luc. There lie thy bones, sweet Mutius, with thy Till we with trophies do adorn thy tomb!—[friends, All. No man shal shed tears for noble Mutius;
He lives in fame that died in virtue's cause.

Mar. My lord.—to stop of those dreary dumps,—
How comes it, that the subtle queen of Gods
Is of a sudden thus advanc'd in Rome?

Tit. It is, my lord, but since the news from Rome I swear,
Whether by device, or no, the heavens can tell:
Is she not then beholden to the man
That brought her for this high good turn so far?
Yes, and will nobly him remunerate.

Flourish. Re-enter at one side, Saturninus, attended;
Tamora, Chiron, Demetrius, and Aaron: At the other,
Bassianus, Lavinia, and others.

Sat. So Bassianus, you have play'd your prize;
God give you joy, sir, of your gallant bride.
But, and you of yours, my lord: I say no more,
Nor wish no less; and so I take my leave.

Sat. Traitor, if Rome have law, or we have power,
Then may she shew what right she repeat this rape.

Bass. Rape, call you it, my lord, to seize my own,
My true-betrothed love, and now my wife!
But let the laws of Rome determine all;
Mean while, I am possess'd of that is mine.

Sat. 'Tis good, sir: You are very short with us;
But, if we live, we'll be as sharp with you.

Bass. My lord, what I have done, as best I may,
Answer I must, and shall with life and soul.
Only thus much I give your grace to know,
By all the duties that I owe to Rome,
This noble gentleman, lord Titus here,
Is in opinion, and in honour, wrong'd;
That, in the rescue of Lavinia,
With my own hand did slay his youngest son,
In zeal to you, and you, and your brave people,
To be control'd in that he frankly gave:
Receive him then to favour, Saturnine;
That hath express'd himself, in all his deeds,
A father, and a friend, to thee, and Rome.

Tit. Prince Bassianus, leave to plead my deeds;
Tis thou, and those, that have dishonour'd me:
Rome and the righteous heavens be my judge,
How I have lov'd and honour'd Saturnine.

Tam. My worthy lord, if ever Tamora
Were gracious in those princely eyes of thine,
Then hear me speak indifferently for all;
And at my suit, sweet, pardon what is past.

Sat. 'What! madam! be dishonour'd openly,
And basely put it up without revenge?

Tam. No, my lord; The gods of Rome foretell,
I should be author to dishonour you!
But, on mine honour, dare I undertake
For good lord Titus' innocence in all,
Whose fury, not dissembled, speaks his griefs:
Then, at my suit, look graciously on him;
Lose not so noble laying a worm supple,
Nor with sour looks afflict his gentle heart—
ACT II.

SCENE I.—The same. Before the Palace.

Enter ANDRONICUS.

And. New-minted Titus, Alexander's top
Sent out of Rome and set afloat,

Scene a show, a pageant, a threat, a speech.

As when the poet, in his song, shrugs the moon,
And rear'd the giant in his glistening coach,

And over-sees the highest-getting hills:

So Tamora—

And the world's every honest heart

In the mantles of his envious sliders shrouds.

Thus, with the bowels of his envious sliders

Ere his eye could look on it. For his eye

To the bottom! Would ye rather be

And let him into the world of weal and woe?

A world, where in a word, ye cannot

But be bold. Are you not as wise and good,

And as you are, then know ye, as well as he,

Nay, hence, be gone, ye know I speak the truth.

And that our sweet sweet, dear should survive,

And lose my passage for a day.

We sweet, and so the way is won by grace;

And no sweet sweet, dear should survive,

To see, and to be seen, and to lose grace;

And to lose, sweet, dear should survive,

To me. Why, how now, boy? You look the scrub.

By himself, and no sweet should survive,

And I was the best of all this counsel;

And I was there, and didst not, in the main,

To have you, Victoria, in the scaffold.

Why, how now, I say. Why, how now, boy?

To have you, Victoria, in the scaffold.

Why, how now, I say. Why, how now, boy?

And so, Titus, and so, and so, and so.
I tell you, lords, you do but plot your deaths
By this device.

Chi. Aaron, a thousand deaths
Would I propose, to achieve her whom I love.

Aur. To achieve her—how?

Dem. Why makest thou it so strange?
She is a woman, therefore may be wo'd;
She is a woman, therefore must be wo'd;
She is Lavinia, therefore must be lovd;
What man! more water gushed by the mill
Than wots the miller of; and easy it is
Of a cut hole to steal a shine, we know:
Though Lavinia be the emperor's brother,
Better than he be yet worn Volumn's budge.

Aur. Ay, and as good as Saturnius may. [Aside.

Dem. Then why should be despair, that knows
With words, fair looks, and liberality! [court it
That last but not full often struck a de.
And borne her cleanly by the keeper's nose?

Aur. Why, then, it seems, some certain snatch or so
Would serve your turns.

Chi. Ay, so the turn were serv'd.

Dem. Aaron, thou hast hit it.

Aur. 'Would you had hit it too.

Then should not we be tied with this ado.
Why, bark ye, bark ye, — Are you such fools,
To square for this? Would it offend you then
That both should speed? —

Chi. 'Tis. I thank, not me.

Dem. So were one.

Aur. For shame, be friends; and join for that you
This policy and stratagem must do
That you affect; and so must you resolve;
That what you cannot, as you would, achieve,
You must perform before you as you may:
Take this of me, Lucresse was not more claste
Than this Lavinia, Rassians love.
A speedier course than lingering hangishment
Must we pursue, and I have found the path.
My lords, a solemn hunting is in hand;
There will the lovely Roman ladies troop:
The forest walks are wide and spacious;
And many unrequited spots there are,
Fitted by kind for rape and villany:
Single ye either then this dainty doe,
And strike her home by force, if not by words:
This way, or not all, stand you in hope.
Come, come, our empress, with her sacred wit,
Your majesty and vengeance; that you may,
Will we acquaint with all that we intend;
And she shall file our engines with advice,
That will not suffer you to square yourselves,
But to your wishes' height advance you both.
The emperor's court is like the house of fame,
The palace full of tongues, of eyes, of ears;
The woods are ruthless, dreadful, deaf, and doll;
There speaks and striving babbles, and lye your turns;
There serve your lust, shadow'd from heaven's eye,
And revel in Lavinia's treasury.

Chi. Thy counsel, lad, smells of no cowardice.

Dem. Sit fur aut nefiis, till I find the stream
To cool this heat, a charm to calm these fits,

SCENE II.—A forest near Rome. — A lodge seen at a distance. — Horns, and cry of Hounds heard.

Enter Titus Andronicus, with Hunters, &c. Marcus, Lucius, Quintus, and Martius.

Tit. The hunt is up, the morn is bright and grey, the fields are fragrant, and the woods are green:

The couple here, and let us make a bay,
And wake the emperor and his lovely bride,
And crown the prince; and ring a hunter's peal,
That all the court may echo with the noise.
 Sons, let it be your charge, as it is ours,
To tend the emperor's person carefully:
I have been troubled in my sleep this night,
But dawning day new comfort hath inspired.

Horns heard a peel. — Enter Saturninus, Tamora, Rassians, Lavinia, Chiron, Demetrius, and Attendants.

Tit. Many good mornings to your majesty; —
Madam, to you so many and so good,
I promised your grace a hunter's peal.
Sons. And you have rung it lustily, my lords,
Somewhat too early for new married ladies.

Dem. Lavinia, how say you?

Tar. I say, no;
I have been bred awake two hours and more.
Sons. Come on them, horse and chariot; let us have,
And to our sport. — Madam, now shew us your
Our Roman hunting. — [To TAMORA.

Mar. I have done, my lord,
Will rowe the proudest panther in the chase,
And climb the highest premontory top.
Tit. And I have horse will follow where the game
Makes every way, and run like swallows o'er the plain.

Dem. Chiron, we hunt not, we, with hounds and hound,
But hope to pluck a dainty doe to ground. — [Exit.

SCENE III.—A desert Part of the Forest.

Enter Aaron, with a bag of gold.

Aur. He that had wit, would think that I had none,
To bury so much gold under a tree,
And never after to inherit it.
Let him, that thinks of me so abjectly,
Know, that this gold must coin a stratagem;
Which, cunningly effected, will beget
A very excellent piece of villany:
And so repose, sweet gold, for their unrest.

That have their arms out of the empress' chest.

[Exit Tamora.

Tar. My lovely Aaron, wherefore look'at thou sad,
When every thing doth make a gleeful boast?
The birds chant melody on every bough;
The sea lies calmer and the cheerful sun;
The green leaves quiver with the cooling wind,
And make a chequer'd shadow on the ground;
Under their sweet shade, Aaron, let us sit,
And—whilst the babbling echo mocks the hounds,
Replying shrilly to the well-turn'd horns,
As if a double hunt were heard at once,—
Let us lay down, and mark their yelling noise.
The wandering prince of Dido once enjoy'd,
When with a happy storm they were surpris'd,
And curtail'd with a counsel-keeping cave,—
We may, each wrenched in the other's arms,
Our pastimes done, possess a golden slander;
While hounds and hounds, and hounds, and sweet melodious birds,
Be unto us as is a nurse's song.

Of lullaby, to bring her babe asleep.

Aur. Madam, though Venus govern your desires,
Saturn is dominator over mine.
What signifies my deadly-standing eye,
My silence, and my cloudy melancholy?
My fleece of woolly hair that now uncurls,
Even as an adder, when she doth unroll.
TITUS ANDRONICUS.

To do some fatal execution?
No, madam, these are no venereal signs; Vengeance is in my heart, death in my hand, Blood and revenge are hammering in my head. Hard Tamora,—the empress of my soul, Which never hopes more heaven than rest in thee,— This is the day of doom for BASSIANUS; His Philemon must lose her tongue to-day: Thy sons make pillage of her chastity, And wash their hands in Bassianus' blood. Sear thou this letter? take it up, I pray thee, And give the king this fatal-plotted scroll:— Now question me no more, we are copied; Here comes a parcel of our hopeful death, Which dreads not yet their lives' destruction. Tam. Ah, my sweet Moor, sweeter to me than life! Aar. No more, great empress, Bassianus comes: Be cross with him; and I'll go fetch thy sons To back thy quarrels, whatsoever they be. [Exit.

Enter BASSIANUS and LAVinia.

Bass. Who have we here? Rome's royal empress, Unfurnish'd of her well-seeing troop? Or is it Dian, habit like her? Who hath abandoned her holy groves, To see the general hunting in this forest? Tam. Saucy controller of our private steps! Had I the power, that, some say, Dian had, Thy temples should be planted presently With horses, as was Actaeon's, and the hounds Should drive upon thy new-transformed limbs, Unmannerly intruder as thou art! Lav. Under your patience, gentle empress, Tis thought you have a goodly gift in horning; And to be doubted, that your Moor and you Are single forth to try experiments. Jove shield your husband from his bounds to-day! 'Tis pity, they should take him for a stag.

Bass. Believe me, queen, your swarth Cimmerian Doth make your honour of his body's hue, Spotted, detested, and abominable. Why are you sequester'd from all your train? Dismounted from your snow-white goodly steed, And wande'r'd hither to an obscure plot, Accompanied with none but Basset Moor, If foul desire had not conducted you? Lav. And, being intercepted in your sport, Great reason that my noble lord be rated For sauciness.—I pray you, let us hence, And let her 'joy her raven-colour'd love; This valley fits the purpose passing well. Bar. The king, my brother, shall have note of this. Lav. Ay, for these ships have made him noted long: Good king! to be so mightily abus'd! Tam. Why have I patience to endure all this? Enter CHIRON and DEMETRIUS.

Dem. How now, dear sovereign, and our gracious mother? Why doth thy highness look so pale and wan? Tam. Have I not reason, think you, to look pale? These two have 'tie'd me hither to this place, A barren detested vale, you see, it is: The trees, though summer, yet forlorn, and lean, O'ercome with moss, and baleful mistletoe. Here never shines the sun; here nothing breeds, Unless the nightly owl, or fatal raven. And, when they she cried me this abjured pit, They told me, here, at dead time of the night, A thousand heads, a thousand hissing snakes, Ten thousand swelling toads, as manyurchins, Would make such fearful and confused cries, As any mortal body, hearing it, Should straight fall mad, or else die suddenly. No sooner had they told this hellish tale, But straight they told me, they would bind me here Unto the body of a dismal yew; And leave me to this miserable death. And then they call'd me, foul adulteress, Lascivious Goth, and all the bitterest terms That ever ear did hear to such effect, And, had you not by wondrous fortune come, This vengeance on me had they executed: Revenge it, as you love your mother's life, Or be ye not henceforth call'd my children. Dem. This is a witness that I am thy son. [Stabs BASSIANUS.

Chi. And this for me, struck home to show my strength. [Stabbing him likewise.

Lav. Ay come, Semiramis,—nay, barbarous Tarquin, No name fits thy nature but thy own! [Exit. Tam. Give me thy poniard; you shall know my boys.

Your mother's hand shall right your mother's wrong. Dem. Stay, madam, here is more belongs to her; First, thrust the corn, then after burn the straw: This mimion stood upon her chastity, Upon her nuptial vow, her loyalty, And with that painted hope brace your mightiness; And shall she carry this unto her grave? Chi. An if she do, I would I were an enunch, Drag hence her husband to some secret hole, And make his dead trunk pillow to our lust. Tam. But when you have the honey you desire, Let not this wasp outlive, us both to sting. Chi. I warrant you, madam; we will make that Come, mistress, now perforce we will enjoy [sure. That nice-preserved honesty of yours. Lav. O Tamora! thou hear'st a woman's face.— Tam. I will not hear her speak; away with her. Lav. Sweet lords, entreat her hear me but a word. Dem. Listen, fair madam: Let it be your glory To see her tears; but be your heart to them, As unrelenting flint to drops of rain. Lav. When did the tiger's young ones teach the O, do not learn her wrath; she taught it thee: [dam? The lion, when he teach'st from her den to marble: Even at thy tent thou hadst thy tyranny. Yet every mother bredns not sons alike; Do thou entreat her shew a woman pity. [To CHIRON. Chi. What! wouldst thou have me prove myself a bastard? Lav. 'Tis true; the raven doth not hatch a lark: Yet I have heard, (O could I find it now!) The lion, mov'd with pity, did endure To have his princely paws par'd all day. Some say that ravens fester forlorn children, The whilst their own birds famish in their nests: O, be to me, though thy hard heart say no; Nothing so kind, but something pitiful! Tam. I know not what it means; away with her. Lav. O, let me teach thee: for my father's sake, That gave thee life, when well he might have slain Be not obdurate, open thy deaf ears. [thee, Tam. Had thou in person ne'er offended me, Even for his sake am I pitiless:— Remember, boys, I pour'd forth tears in vain, To save your brother from the sacrifice; But fierce Andronicus would not relent. Therefore away with her, and use her as you will; The worse to her, the better lov'd of me. Lav. O Tamora, be call'd a gentle queen, And with thine own hands kill me in this place: For 'tis not life, that I have begg'd so long;
THERE AREONIOUS,

AARON Vengeance is in my heart, death in my hand

Act II. Sc. 2.
Poor I was slain, when Bassianus died, [me go.]

Tam. What beggt'st thou then? fond woman, let

Lav. 'Tis present death I beg; and one thing more,

On which thou hast staid us here too long,

O, keep me from their worse than killing lust,

For thou art here aloft, or I below.

And tumble me into some loathsome pit;

Where never man's eye may behold my body:

Do this, and be a charitable murderer.

Tam. So should I rob my sweet sons of their fee:

No, let them satisfy their lust on thee.

Dem. Away, for thou hast staid us here too long,

Lav. No grace? no womanhood? Ah, beastly crea-

The blot and enemy to our general name! [Sure!]

Confusion fall—

Chi. Nay, then I'll stop your mouth:—Bring thou her husband; [Dragg'g off Lavinia.

This is the hole where Aaron bid us hide him. [Ex.

Tam. Farewell, my sons: see, that you make her

Never let my heart know merry cheer, indeed, [Sure:

Tell all the Andronici be made away.

Now will I hence to seek my lovely Moor,

And tell my splendid sons this true defile. [Exit.

ACT II.—SCENE IV.

Enter Aaron, with Quintus and Martius.

Aar. Come on, my lords; the better foot before:

Straight will I bring you to the loathsomest pit,

Where I estoy'd the panther fast asleep.

Quin. My sight is very dull, whate'er it bodes.

Mart. And mine, I promise you; we're not for Well could I have our spears leave a legible. [Shame,

Quin. What art thou fallen? What subtle hole is this,

Whose mouth is cover'd with rude-growing briars;

Upon whose leaves are drops of new-shed blood;

As fresh as morning's dew distill'd on flowers!

A very fatal place it seems to me.—

Speak, brother, hast thou hurt thee with the fall?

Mart. O, brother, with the dimmest object

That ever eye, with sight, made heart lament.

Aar. [Aside.] Now will I fetch the king to find

That he thereby may give a likely guess, [them here;

How these were they that made away my brother.

[Exit Aaron.

Mart. Why dost not comfort me, and help me out

From this unhallowed and blood-stained hole?

Quin. I am surprised with an uncouth fear:

A chilling sweat o'er-runs my trembling joints;

My heart suspects more than mine eye can see.

Mart. To prove thou hast a true-divining heart,

Aaron and thou look down into this den,

And see a fearful sight of blood and death.

Quin. Aaron is gone; and my compassionate heart

Will not permit mine eyes once to behold

The thing, whereat it trembles by surmise:—

O, tell me how it is; for ne'er till now

Was I a child, to fear I know not what.

All on a heap, like to a slaughter'd lamb,

In this detested, dark, blood-dripping pit.

Quin. If it be dark, how dost thou know 'tis he?

Mart. Upon his bloody finger he doth wear

A precious ring, that lightens all the hole;

Was I, like a taper in some monument,

Doth shine upon the dead man's earthly cheeks,

And shews the ragged entrails of this pit:

So pale did shine the moon on Pyramus,

When he by night lay bath'd in maiden blood.

O brother, help me with thy flaming hand,—

If fear hath made thee faint, as me it hath,—

Out of this fell devouring receptacle,

As hateful as Cynicys' misty mouth.

Quin. Reach me thy hand, that I may help thee out;

Or, wanting a strength to do thee so much good,

I may be pluck'd into the swallowing womb,

Of this deep pit, poor Bassianus' grave.

I have no strength to pluck thee to the brink.

Mart. Nor I a strength to climb without thy help.

Quin. Thy hand once more; I will not lose again,

Till thou art here aloft, or I below.

Thou canst not come to me, I come to thee. [Fall in.

Enter Saturninus and Aaron.

Sat. Along with me:—I'll see what hole is here,

And what he is, that now has leap'd into it.

Say, who art thou, that lately didst descend

Into this gaping hollow of the earth?

Mart. The unhappy son of old Andronicus;

Brought hither in a most unucky hour,

To find thy brother Bassianus dead.

Sat. My brother dead? I know, thou dost but jest:

He and his lady both are at the lodge,

Upon the north side of this pleasant chase;

'Tis not an hour since I left him there.

Mart. We know not where you left him all alive,

But, out alas! here we have found him dead.

Enter Tambora, with Attendants; Titus Andronicus, and Lucius.

Tam. Where is my lord, the king?

Sat. Here, Tambora: though grieve'st with killing

That unhappy son of old Andronicus? [grief.

Sat. Now to the bottom dost thou search my wound;

Poor Bassianus here lies murdered.

Tam. Then all too late I bring this fatal writ,

The compleat of this timeless tragedy; [Giving a letter.

And wonder greatly, that man's face can fold

In pleasing smiles such murderous tyranny.

Sat. [Reads.] An if we miss to meet him handomely—

Sweet huntsman, Bassianus' 'tis, we mean,—

Do thou so much as dig the grave for him!

Then know'st thou our meaning: Look for thy reward

Among the nettles at the elder tree,

Which overshares the mouth of that same pit,

Where we decreed to bury Bassianus.

Do this, and pacify our angry friends.

O, Tambora! was ever heard the like?

This is the pit, and this the elder-tree!

Look, sirs, if you can find the huntsman out,

That should have murder'd Bassianus here.

Aar. My gracious lord, here is the bag of gold.

[Shewing it.

Sat. Two of thy whelps, [to Tit.] fell cur's of bloody

Have here before my brother of his life:— [kind,

Sirs, drag them from the pit unto the prison;

There let them bide, until we have devis'd

Some never-heard-of torturing pain for them.

Tam. What, are they in this pit; O wondrous

How easily murder is discovered! [things'!

Tit. High emperor, upon my feeble knee

I beg this boon, with tears not lightly shed,

That this fell fault of my accursed sons,

Accursed, if the fault be prov'd in them,—

Sat. If it be prov'd! you see, it is apparent—

Who found this letter? Tambora, was it you?

Tam. Andronicus himself did take it up.

Tit. Had my lord you let me be their bail;

For by my father's revenge tomb, I vow,

They shall be ready at your highness' will,

To answer their suspicion with their lives.

Sat. Thou shalt not bail them; see, thou follow me.

Some bring the murder'd body, some the murderers:

3 A
Tit. Will it come soon? let me see it then.

Mar. This is thy daughter.

Tit. Why Marcus, so late?

Luc. Ah! me! this object kills me!

Luc. How heart-broken, how lost upon her—

Speak, my hand, what seems most sore to her?

How hath she handkerchief in thy father's sight?

What foot hath watered to the sea?

Or is it, a foot, to bright-harvest, Troy?

My grief was at the height, before she came,

And now, like waves, do dishem-bounds,

Give me a sword, I'll chop off my hand, I,

For they have fought for Rome, and all in vain.

And they have a stall the wise, in feeding life,

In boors' hope, have they been held up,

And they have serve'd me to effectless use:

Now, all the service I require of them

Is, that the one will help to cut the other.—

'Tis well, Lucius: they have done me hands.

For hands, to do Rome service, are base waste.

Luc. Speak gently sister, who hath martyf'd thee?

Mar. O, that delightful engine of her thoughts,

That hath't them with such pleasing eloquence,

Is torn from forth that pretty hollow cage,

Where, like a sweet melodeon bird, it sang

Sleepless nights; what has it found of spare fault.

Luc. O, say thou for her, who hath done this deed?

Mar. O, if I found her, straying in the para,

Seeking to hide herself, as doth the deer,

That hath receive'd some uncertain wound.

Tit. It was my deer; and he that wound her,

Hath sat me more, than had he kill'd me dead:

Luc. Stay, father, I stand at no such hand of Rome,

That hath thrown down so many men.

Shall not be said my sword will serve the turn,

My youth can better spare my blood than you:

And therefore may I save my brothers lives;

Marc. Which is, whoso, was not defended Rome.

And armed able, in bloody battle; one,

Writing desolation on the enemy's castle.

Luc. none of you, nor of high descent;

My ha' been here; but I let it serve

To ransom some nephews from their death;

Then have I kept to a worse end.

Tit. Nay, come agree, whose hand she go always,

For they dare die before their pardon come.

Marc. My hand shall go.

Luc. By heaven, it was ought.

Tit. Sirs, strive no more; such wines disprove

Are meet for pecking on, and therefore mine.

Thee, fresh father, if I shall be thought thy son,

Let me redeem my brothers both from death.

Marc. And, for our father's sake, and mother's care,

Now let me show a brother's love to thee.

Tit. Agree between you; I'll spare my hand.

Luc. Then I'll go fetch an axe.

Mar. But I will use the axe.

[Enter Lucius and Marcus.]

Tit. Come hither, Aaron; I'll deceive them both;

Lead thy hand, and I will give thee mine.

[Exit Lucius, and Marcus.

[Exit Marcus and Lucius.

Tit. Now, stay your stride; what shall be, is degradation.

Good Aaron shall be thy master's hand: I spake'dd—

Tell him, it was a hand that wanted him

From thousand dangers: bid him bury it;

More bath it merit'd, that let it have.
TITUS ANDRONICUS.

As for my sons, say, I account of them
As jewels purg'd at an easy price;
And yet dear too, because I bought mine own.

Marc. Why dost thou laugh? I jests not with this hour,
Tit. Why, I have not another tear to shed:
Besides, this sorrow is an enemy,
And would usurp upon my wat'ry eyes,
And make them blind with tributary tears:
Then which way shall I find revenge's care?
For these two heads do seem to speak to me;
And threat me, I shall never come to bliss,
Till all these mischiefs be return'd again,
Even in their throats that have committed them.
Come, let me see what task I have to do.—
You heavy people, circle me about,
That I may turn to each one of you,
And swear unto my soul to right your wrongs.
The vow is made.—Come, brother, take a head;
And in this hand the other will I bear:
Lavinia, thou shalt be employed in these things;
Bear thou my hand, sweet wench, between thy teeth
As for thee, boy, go, get thee from my sight;
Let art an evil, and thou must not stay
To the Gods, and raise an army there:
And, if you love me, as I think you do,
Let's kiss and part, for we have much to do.

[Exeunt Titus, Marcus, and Lavinia.

Luc. Farewell, Andronicus, my noble father;
The woeful'st man that ever liv'd in Rome!
Farewell, proud Rome! till Lucius come again,
He leaves his pledges dearer than his life.
Farewell, Lavinia, my noble sister;
O, 'would thou wert as thou 'before hast been!
But now nor Lucius, nor Lavinia lives,
But in oblivion, and hateful griefs.
If Lucius live, he will requite your wrongs;
And make proud Saturnius and his empress
Beg at the gates, like Tarquin and his queen.
Now will I to the Gods, and raise a power,
To be reveng'd on Rome and Saturnine.

[Exeunt.

SCENE II.
A Room in Titus's House.—A Banquet set out.

Enter Titus, Marcus, Lavinia, and Young Lucius, a boy.

Tit. Thus now sit and look, you eat no more than
This will preserve your youth and health in us
As will revenge these bitter woes of ours.
Marcens, unkind it sorrow-wreathen knot;
Thy niece and I, poor creatures, want our hands,
And cannot passion our tenfold grief
With folded arms. This poor right hand of mine
Is left to tyrannize upon my breast;
And when my heart, all mad with misery,
Beats in this hollow prison of my flesh,
Then thus I thump it down.—
Thou map of woe, that thus dost talk in signs!

[To Lavinia.

When thy poor heart beats with outrageous beating,
Thou canst not strike it thus to make it still.
Wound it with sighing, girl, kill it with groans;
Or get some little knife between thy teeth,
And just against thy heart make thou a hole:
That all the tears that thy poor eyes let fall,
May run into that sink, and soaking in,
Drown the lamenting foal in sea-salt tears.

Marc. Fye, brother, fye! teach her not thus to lay
Such violent hands upon her tender life.

Tit. How now! has he now made the dose already?
Why, Marcus, no man should be mad but I.
What violent hands can she lay on her life?
Ah, wherefore dost thou urge the name of hands—
To bid Aeneas tell the tale twice o'er,
How Troy was burnt, and he made miserable?
ACT IV.—SCENE I.

O, handle not the theme, to talk of hands;
Lest we remember still, that we have none.—
Fye, fye, how franticly I square my talk!
As if we should forget we had no hands,
If Marcus did not name the word of hands!—
Come, let's fall to; and, gentle girl, eat this:—
Here is no drink! Hark, Marcus, what she says;—
I can interpret all her merry'd signs:—
She says, she drinks no other drink but tears,
Brew'd with her sorrows, mesh'd upon her cheeks:—
Speechless complainer, I will learn thy thought;
In thy dumb action will I be as perfect,
As begging hermits in their holy prayers:
Thou shalt not sigh, nor hold thy stamps to heaven,
Nor weep, nor nod, nor kneel, nor make signs;
But I, of these, will wrest an alphabet,
And, by still practice, learn to know thy meaning.

Boy. Good grandsire, leave these bitter deep laments:
Make my aunt merry with some pleasing tale.

Mar. Alas, the tender boy, in passion mov'd,
Doth weep to see his grandsire's heaviness.

Tit. Peace, tender sapling! thou art made of tears,
And tears will quickly melt thy life away.—

What dost thou strike at, Marcus, with thy knife?
Mar. At that to have kill'd, my lord; a fly.

Tit. Out on thee, murderer! thou kill'st my heart;
Mine eyes are cloy'd with view of tyranny:
A dead and death, done on the innocent.
Becomes not Titus' brother: Get thee gone;
I see, thou art not for my company.

Mar. Alas, my lord, I have but kill'd a fly.

Tit. But how, if that fly had a father and a mother?
How would he hang his slender gilded wings,
And burst lamenting doings in the air!
Poor harmless fly!
That with his pretty buzzing melody,
Came here to make us merry; and then hast kill'd him.

Mar. Pardon me, sir; 'twas a black ill-favour'd fly,
Like to the emperor Moor; therefore I kill'd him.

Tit. O, O, O,
Then pardon me for reprehending thee,
For thou hast done a charitable deed.
Give me thy knife, I will insult on him;
Flattering myself, as if it were the Moor,
Come hither purposely to poison me.—
There's for thyself, and that's for Tamora.
Ah, sirrah!

Yet I do think we are not brought so low,
But that, between us, we can kill a fly,
That comes in likeness of a coal-black Moor.

Mar. Alas, poor man! grief has so wrought on him,
He takes false shadows for true substances.

Tit. Come, take away.—Lavinia, go with me:
I'll to thy closet; and go read with thee
Sad stories, chanceed in the times of old—
Come, boy, and go with me; thy sight is young,
And thou shalt read, when mine begins to dazzle.
[Exeunt.

ACT IV.

Enter Titus and Marcus. Then enter young Lucius,
Lavinia running after him.

Boy. Help, grandsire, help! my aunt Lavinia
Follows me every where, I know not why—

Good uncle Marcus, see how swift she comes!
Alas, sweet aunt, I know not what you mean.

Mar. Stand by me, Lucius; do not fear thine aunt.

Tit. She loves thee, boy, too well to do thee harm.

Boy. Ay, when my father was in Rome, she did.

Mar. What means my niece Lavinia by these signs?

Tit. Fear her not, Lucius:—Somewhat doth she mean;

See, Lucins, see, how much she makes of thee:
Somewhither would she have thee go with her.

Ah, boy, Cornelia never with more care
Read to her sons, than she hath read to thee,
Sweet poetry, and Tully's Orator.

Canst thou not guess wherefore she plies thee thus?

Boy. My lord, I know not, I, nor can I guess,
Unless some fit or frenzy do possess her:
For I have heard my grandsire say full oft,
Extremity of griefs would make men mad;
And I have read, that Hecuba of Troy
Ran mad through sorrow: That made me to fear;
Although, my lord, I know, my noble aunt
Loves me as dear as e'er my mother did,
And would not, but in fury, fright my youth:
Which made me down to throw my books, and fly;
Causeth me to say: But such a sweet aunt!
And, madam, if my uncle Marcus go,
I will most willingly attend your ladyship.

Mar. Lucius, I will, [Lavinia turns over the books which Lucius has let fall.

Tit. How now, Lavinia? Marcus, what means this?
Some book there is that she desires to see:—
Which is it, girl, of these?—Open them, boy.
But thou art deeper read, and better skil'd;
Come, and take choice of all my library,
And so beguile thy sorrow, till the heavens
Reveal the dam'd contriver of this deed.
Why lifts she up her arms in sequence thus?
[one

Mar. I think, she means, that there was more than Confederate in the fact.—Ay, more there was:—
Or else to heaven she heaves them for revenge.

Tit. Lucius, what book is that she tosseth so?
Boy. Grand sire, 'tis Ovid's Metamorphoses;
My mother gave me.

Mar. For love of her that's gone,
Perhaps she could it from among the rest.

Tit. Soft! see, how basely she turns the leaves!
Help her:—
What would she find?—Lavinia, shall I read!
This is the tragic tale of Philomela,
And treats of Tereus's treason, and his rape;
And rape, I fear, was root of thine annoy.
[leaves.

Mar. I think, she means:—she, note, how she quotes the
Tit. Lavinia, wert thou thus surpriz'd, sweet girl,
Ravish'd, and wrong'd, as Philomela was,
Fore'd in the ruthless, vast, and gloomy woods?
See, see!
Ay, such a place there is, where we did hunt
(O, had we never, never, hunted there!)
Pattern'd by that the poet here describes,
By nature made for murders, and for rapes.
Mar. O, why should nature build so foul a den,
Unless the gods delight in tragedies!—friends,—
Tit. Give signs, sweet girl,—for here are none but What Roman lord it was durst do the deed:
Or slunk not Saturnine, as Tarquin erst,
That left the camp to sin in Laeaces' bed?
Mar. Sit down, sweet niece;—brother, sit down by Apollo, Pallas, Jove, or Mercury,
[me.
Insire me, that I may this treason find?—
My lord, look here!—Look here, Lavinia:
This sandy plot is plain; guide, if thou caust,
This after me, when I have writ my name
Without the help of any hand at all.
[He writes his name with his staff, and guides it with his feet and mouth.
CURS'D be that heart, that forc'd us to this shift!—
Write thou, good niece; and here display, at last,
What God will have discover'd for revenge;
Heaven guide thy pen to write thy sorrow plain,
That we may know the traitors, and the truth!

[She holds the staff in her mouth, and guides it with her stumps, and writes.

TIT. O, do you read, my lord, what she hath writ?

STIRRUP.—CHIRON. Demetrius.

MAR. What, what!—the lustful sons of Tamora
Performers of this heinous, bloody deed?

TIT. Mone Domator poli,
Tantalous audis sceera? tum tangus rides?

MAR. O, calm the tide! although I know,
There is enough written upon this earth,
To stir a mutiny in the mildest thoughts,
And arm the minds of infants to exclaim.

My lord, kneel down with me; Lavinia, kneel;
And kneel, sweet boy, the Roman Hesper's hope;
And swear with me,—as with the woful seer,
And, father, of that chaste dishonour'd dame,
Lord Junius Brutus swears for Lucrece's rape,—
That we will prosecute, by good advice,
Mortal revenge upon these traitorous Goths,
And see their blood, or die with this reproach.

TIT. Tis sure enough, an you know how,
But if you hurt these bear whelpes, then beware:
The dam will wake; and, if she wind you once,
She's with the lion deeply still in league.
And bolls him whilst she playeth on her back,
And, when he sleeps, will she do what she list.
You're a young huntsman, Marcus; let it alone.
And, come, I will go get a leaf of brass,
And with a gawl of steel will write these words,
And hay it by: the angry northern wind
Will drive the sands, like Sybil's prophecies, abroad,
And where's your lesson then!—Boy, what say you
Boy. I say, my lord, that if I were a man,
Their mother's bed-chamber should not be safe
For these bad-bodmen to the yoke of Rome.

MAR. Ay, that's my boy! thy father hath full oft
For this ungrateful country done the like.

Boy. And uncle, so will I, as if I live.
The soul of my father thinketh still in mine armory;
Lucius, I'll fit thee; and within, by my soul,
Shall carry from me to the empress' sons
Presents, that I intend to send them both:
Come, come; thou'dt do thy message, wilt thou not?
Boy. Ay, with my dagger in their bosoms, grandsire.

TIT. No, boy, not so; I'll teach thee another course.

LAV. come,—Marcus, look to my house;
Lucius and I'll goe brave it at the court;
Ay, marry, will we, sir; and we'll be waited on.

[Exit Titus, Lavinia, and Boy.

MAR. O heavens, can you hear a good man groan,
And not relent, or not compassion him?
Marcus, attend him in his ecstasy;
That hath more scars of sorrow in his heart,
Than thee or me can mark upon his batter'd shield:
But yet so just, that he will not revenge—
Revenge the heavens for old Andronicus!

[Exit.

SCENE II.—The same. A Room in the Palace.

ENTER AARON, CHIRON, and DEMETRIUS, at one door;
at another door, young Lucius, and an Attendant,
with a bundle of weapons, and verses writ upon them.

CHI. Demetrius, here's the son of Lucius;
He hath some message to deliver to us. [father.

AAR. Ay, some mad message from his mad grandsire.
My lords, with all the humbleness I may,
I greet your honours from Andronicus;—
And pray the Roman gods, confound you both. [Aside.

DEN. Gramercy, lovely Lucius: What's the news?
Boy. That you are both decipher'd, that's the news,
For villains mark'd with rape. [Aside. May it please
My grandsire, well advis'd, hath sent me to you,
The goodliest weapons of his armory,
To gratify your honourable youth,
The hope of Rome; for so he bade me say;
And so I do, with his gifts present
Your lordships, that whenever you have need,
You may be armed and appointed well:
And so I leave you both, [Aside. like bloody villains.

DEN. What's here? A scroll; and written round
Let's see;— [about.

Integer vita, scelerisque purum,
Non eget Musur jaculis, nee arena.

CHI. O, 'tis a verse in Horace; I know it well:
I read it in the grammar long ago.

AAR. Ay, just;—a verse in Horace;—right, you have it.

Now, what a thing it is to be an ass!
Here's no sound jest! the old man hath found their guilt;
And sends the weapons wrapp'd about with lines,
[quick.

That wound, beyond their feeling, to the
But, were our witty empress well a-late,
She would applaud Andronicus' conceit.
But let her rest in her unrest awhile.

And now, young lords, was't not a happy star
Led us to Rome, strangers, and more than so,
Captives, to be advanced to this height?
It did me good, before the palace gate
To rest the tribute of his brother's hearing.

DEN. But me more good, to see so great a lord
Basely insinuate, and send us gifts.

AAR. Had he not reason, lord Demetrius?
Did you not use his daughter very friendly?

DEN. I would, we had a thousand Roman dames
At such a boy, by turn to serve our lust.

CHI. A charitable wish, and full of love.
But here lacks but your mother fair to say amen.

CHI. And that would see for twenty thousand more.

DEN. Come, let us go; and pray to all the gods,
For our beloved mother in her pains.

AAR. Pray to the devils; the gods have given us

[Aside. Flourish.

DEN. Why do the emperor's trumpevs flourish thus?

CHI. Be like, for joy the emperor hath a son.

DEN. Soft; who comes here?

Enter a Nurse, with a bloack-a-moor child in her arms.

NUR. Good morrow, lords: O, tell me, did you see Aaron the Moor.

AAR. Well, more or less, or ne'er a whit at all, Here Aaron is; and what with Aaron now?

NUR. O gentle Aaron, we are all undone! Now help, or we beside thee evermore!

AAR. Why, what a caterwauling dost thou keep?

NUR. O, that which I would hide from heaven's eye, Our empress' shame, and statey Rome's disgrace;— She is deliver'd, lords, she is deliver'd.

AAR. To whom? I mean, she's brought to bed.

NUR. Well, God give her good rest! What hath be sent her?

AAR. A devil. [issue.

AAR. Why, then she's the devil's dam; a joyful

NUR. A joyless, dismal, black, and sorrowful issue.
ACT IV.—SCENE III.

Here is the babe, as loathsome as a toad
Amongst the fairest breeders of our clime.
The empress sends it thee, thy stamp, thy seal,
And bids thee christen it with thy dagger's point.

Aur. Out, out, you whore! is black so base a hue?
Sweet brows, you are a beauteous blossom, sure.

Dem. Villain, what hast thou done?

Aur. Done! that which thou
Canst not undo.

Chi. Thou hast undone our mother.

Aur. Villain, I have done thy mother.

Dem. And therein, hellish dog, thou hast undone.
Woe to her choice, and damn'd her loathed choice!
Accurs'd the offspring of so foul a fiend!

Chi. It shall not live.

Aur. It shall not die.

Nur. Aaron, it must: the mother wills it so.

Aur. What, must it, nurse! then let no man, but I,
Do execution on my flesh and blood.

Dem. I'll broach the tadpole on my rapier's point;
Nurse, give it me; my sword shall soon despatch it.

Aur. Sooner this sword shall plow thy bowels up,

Stabbing her.

Weke, weke!—so cries a pig, prepar'd to the spit.

Dem. What mean'st thou, Aaron? Wherefore dost

Aur. O, lord, sir, 'ts a deed of policy: [thou this?
Shall she live to betray this guilt of ours?
A long-tong'd babbling gossip! no, lords, no.
And now be it known to you my full intent
Not far, one Multus lives, my countryman,
His wife but yesternight was brought to bed;
His child is like to her, fair as you are:
Go pack with him, and give the mother gold,
And tell them both the circumstance of all;
And how by this their child shall be advance'd,
And be received for the emperor's heir,
And say the emperor kill'd him in the fields.
To calm this tempest whirling in the court;
And let the emperor dandle him for his own.

Hark ye, lords; ye see, that I have given her physic,

[Pointing to the Nurse.

And you must needs bestow her funeral;
The fields are near, and you are gallant grooms—
This done, see that you take no longer days,
But send the midwife presently to me.
The midwife, and the nurse, well made away,
Then let the ladies tattle what they please.

Chi. Aaron, I see, thou wilt not trust the air
With secrets.

Dem. For this care of Tamora,
Herself, and hers, are highly bound to thee.

[Exit Drum, and Crowd, bearing off the Nurse.

Aur. Now to the Gaths, as swift as swallow flies;
There to dispose the treasure in nine arms,
And secretly to greet the empress' friends.—
Come on, you thick lipp'd slave, I'll bear you hence:
For it is you that puts us to our shifts:
I'll make you feed on berries, and on roots,
And feed out words and honey, and suck the goat,
And cabin in a cave; and bring you up
To be a warrior, and command a camp.

[Exit.

SCENE III.—The same. A public Place.

Enter Titus, bearing arrows, with letters at the ends of them; with him Marcus, young Lucius, and other Gentlemen, with bows.

Tit. Come on, Marcus, come;—Kinsmen, this is the way:
Sir boy, now let me see your archery;
Look ye draw home enough, and 'tis there straight:
Terra Astrea religit.

Be you remember'd, Marcus, she's gone, she's fled.
Sir, take you to your tools. You, cousins, shall Go sound the ocean, and cast your nets;
Happily you may find her in the sea;
Yet there's as little justice as at land:—
No; Publius and Sempronius, you must do it;
'Tis you must dig with mattock, and with spade,
And pierce the earth's deep center of the earth:
Then, when you come to Pluto's region,
I pray you, deliver him this petition:
Tell him, it is for justice, and for aid:
And that it comes from old Andronicus,
Shaken with sorrows in ungrateful Rome—
Ah, Rome!—Well, well: I made thee miserable, What time I threw the people's suffrages On him that doth tyrannize o'er me.—
Go, get you gone; and pray be careful all, And leave you not a man of war unsearch'd;
This wicked emperor may have shipp'd her hence, And Marcus, then we may go pipe for justice. Mor. O, Publius, is not this a heavy case, To see thy noble uncle thus distracted! Pub. Therefore, my lord, it highly us concerns, By day and night to attend him carefully; And feed his humour kindly as we may, Till time beget some careful remedy. Mor. Kinsmen, his sorrows are past remedy. Join with the Goths; and with revengeful war Take wreak on Rome for this ingratitude, And vengeance on the traitor Saturnine. [What. Tit. Publius, how now? how now, my masters? Have you met with her?

Pub. No, my good lord; but Pluto sends you word If you will have revenge from hell, you shall: Marry, for Justice, she is so employ'd, He thinks, with joyful love or heavenly or, somewhere else, So that perforce you must needs stay a time. Tit. He doth me wrong, to feed me with delays. I'll dive into the burning lake below, And pull her out of Acheron by the heels.— Marcus, we are but shrubs, no cedars we; No big-bon'd men, fram'd of the Cyclops' size: But metal, Marcus, steel to the very back; Yet wrung with wrongs—more than our locks can bear; And, sith there is no justice in earth or hell, We will solicit heaven; and move the gods, To send down justice for to wreak our wrongs: Come, to this gear. You are a good archer, Marcus. [He gives them the arrows.

Ad Jaeem, that's for you:—Here, ad Apollinem:—

Ad Mortem, that's for myself:—

Here, boy, to Pallas:—Here, to Mercury:—

To Saturn, Caius, not to Saturnine,— You were as good to shoot against the wind.—
To it, boy. Marcus, loose when I bid: O my word, I have written to effect; There's not a god left unsolicited. Mor. Kinsmen, shoot all your shafts into the court: We will afflict the emperor in his pride. Tit. Nay, masters, draw. [They shoot.] O, well said. Good boy, in Virgo's lap: give it Pallas. [Lucius! Mar. My lord, I aim a mile beyond the moon; Your letter is with Jupiter by this. Tit. I t! Publius, Publius, what hast thou done! See, see, thou hast shot off one of Taurus' horns. Mor. This was the sport, my lord: when Publius shot,
The ball being gai'd, gave Arius such a knock That down fell both the ram's horns in the court; And who should find them but the empress' villain? She laugh'd, and told the Moor, he should not choose But give them to his master for a present. Tit. Why, there it goes: God give your lordship joy. Enter a Clown, with a basket, and two pigeons. News, news from heaven! Marcus, the post is come. Sirrah, what tidings, have you any letters? Shall I have justice? what says Jupiter? Clo. Ho! the gibbet maker? he says, that he hath taken them down again, for the man must not be hanged till the next week. Tit. But what says Jupiter, I ask thee? Clo. Alas, sir, I know not.—umper; I never drank with him in all my life. Tit. Why, villain, art not thou the carrier! Clo. Ay, of my pigeons, sir; nothing else. Tit. Why, didst thou not come from heaven? Clo. From heaven? alas, sir, I never came there: God forbid, I should be so bold to press to heaven In my young days. Why, I am going with my pigeons to the tribunal plebs, to take up a matter of brawl between my uncle and one of the empire's men. Mor. Why, sir, that is as fit as can be, to serve for your oration; and let him deliver the pigeons to the emperor from you. Tit. Tell me, can you deliver an oration to the emperor with a grace? Clo. Nay, truly, sir, I could never say grace in all my life. Tit. Sirrah, come hither: make no more ado, But give your pigeons to the emperor: By me thou shalt have justice at his hands. Hold, hold:—mean while, here's money for thy Give me a pen and ink.—[charges. Sirrah, can you with a grace deliver a supplication? Clo. Ay, sir. Tit. Then here is a supplication for you. And when you come to him, at the first approach, you must kneel; then kiss his foot; then deliver up your pigeons; and then look for your reward. I'll be at hand, sir; see you do it bravely. Clo. I warrant you, sir; let me alone. Tit. Sirrah, hast thou a knife? Come, let me see it. Here, Marcus, fold it in the oration; For thou hast made it like an humble suppliant;— And when thou hast given it to the emperor, Knock at my door, and tell me what he says. Clo. God be with you, sir; I will. Tit. Come, Marcus, let's go:—Publius, follow me. [Exeunt.

SCENE IV.—The same. Before the Palace.
Enter Saturninus, Tamora, Chiron, Demetrius, Lords, and others: Saturninus, with the arrows in his hand that Titus shot.

Sat. Why, lords, what wrongs are these? Was ever An emperor of Rome thus overborne, [seen Troubled, confronted thus; and, for the extent Of equal justice, was'd in such contempt? My lords, you know, as do the mighty gods, However these disturbers of our peace Then, noble people's ears, there ought hath pass'd, But even with law, against the wild sons Of old Andronicus. And what an if He has sorrows so overwhelm'd his wits, Shall we be thus afflicted in his wreaks, His fits, his frenzy, and his bitterness? And now he writes to heaven for his redress: See, here's to Jove, and this to Mercury; This to Apollo; this to the god of war: Sweet scrolls to fly about the streets of Rome! What's this, but libelling against the senate, And blazoning our injustice everywhere? A goodly humour, is it not, my lords? As who would say, in Rome no justice were. But, if I live, his feigned estatios Shall he no shelter to these outrages? But I know his shall know, that justice lives In Saturnine's health; whom, if she sleep, He'll so awake, as she in fury shall Cut off the pride'st conspirator that lives. Tam. My gracious lord, my lovely Saturnine, Lord of my life, commander of my thoughts, Calm thee, and bear the faults of Titus' age, The effects of sorrow for his valiant sons, Whose loss hath pierc'd him deep, and scar'd his heart; And rather comfort his distressed plight,
ACT V. -SCENE I.

Than prosecute the meanest, or the best,
For these contempts. Why, thus it shall become High-witted Tamora to gloze with all: [Aside.
But, Titus, I have touch'd thee to the quick.
Thy life-blood out: if Aaron now be wise,
Then is all safe, the anchor's in the port.—

Enter Clown.

How now, good fellow, would'st thou speak with us? Clo. Yes, forsooth, an your mistresship be imperial. Tam. Empress I am, but yonder sits the emperor. Clo. I have heard of a God, and said 'tis true, give ye good deal: I have brought you a letter, and a couple of pigeons here. [Sacrinius reads the letter. Sat. Go, take him away, and hang him presently. Clo. How much money must I have?

Tam. Come, sirrah, you must be hang'd.

Clo. Hang'd! By' r lady, then I have brought up a neck to a fair end. [Exit, guarded.

Sat. Despitely and intolerable wrongs!

Shall I endure this monstrous villany! I

Know from whence this same device proceeds;

May this be borne!—as if his traitorous sons,

That died by law for murder of our brother,

By my hands been butcher'd wrongfully.—

Go, drag the villain hither by the hair; Nor age, nor honour, shall shape privilege:—

For this proud mock, I'll be thy slaughter-man;

Sly frantic wretch, that holp'st to make great,

In hope thyself should govern Rome and me.

Enter Emilius.

What news with thee, Emilius? [cause!

Emil. Arm, arm, my lords; Rome never had more

The Goths have gather'd head; and with a power of high-resolv'd men bent to the spoil,

They hither march again, under conduct Of Lucius, son to old Andronicus; Who threats, in course of this revenge, to do As much as ever Coriolanus did.

Sat. Is warlike Lucius general of the Goths?

These tidings nipt me; and I hang the head.

With flowers from frost, or grass bent down with storms.

Ay, now begin our sorrows to approach; Tis he, the common people love so much; Myself hath often over-heard them say, (When I have walked like a private man,) That Lucius' banishment was wrongfully, And they have wish'd that Lucius were their emperor.

Tam. Why should they fear? is not your city strong?

Sat. Ay, but the citizens favour Lucius; And will revolt from me, to succour him.

Tam. King, be thy thoughts imperious, like thy Is the sun dimm'd, that grats do fly in it? [name, The eagle suffers little birds to sing, And is not careful what they mean thereby; Knowing that, with the shadow of his wings, He can at pleasure stint their melody; Even so may'st thou the giddy men of Rome. Then cheer thy spirit: for know, thou emperor, I will enchant the old Andronicus, With words more sweet, and yet more dangerous, Than baits to fish, or honey-stacks to sheep; Where the one is wounded with the bait, The other rotted with delicious feed.

Sat. But he will not entreat his son for us.

Tam. If Tamora eatreat him, then he will: For I can smooth, and fill his aged ear With golden promises: that were his heart Almost impregnable, his old ears deaf, And his tongue all his own, no more his tongue. — Go thou before, be our ambassador: [To Emilius. Say, that the emperor requests a parley

Of warlike Lucius, and appoint the meeting, Even at his father's house, the old Andronicus.

Sat. Emilius do this message honourably: And if he stand on hostage for his safety, Bid him demand what pledge will please him best. Emil. Your bidding shall I do effectually.

Enter Emilius.

Tam. Now will I to that old Andronicus; And temper him, with all the art I have, To pluck proud Lucius from the warlike Goths. And now, sweet emperor, be blithe again, And bury all thy fear in my devices. Sat. Then go successfully, and plead to him.

[Exeunt.

ACT V.

SCENE I.—Plains near Rome.

Enter Lucius and Goths, with drum and colours. Luc. Approved warriors, and my faithful friends, I have receiv'd letters from great Rome, Which signify, what harm they bear their emperor, And how desirous of our sight they are. Therefore, great lords, be, as your titles witness, Imperial, and impatient of your wrongs; And, wherein Rome hath done you any scath, Let him make treble satisfaction. [necus. 1 Goth. Brave ship, sprung from the great Andro- Whose name was once our terror, now our comfort; Whose high exploits, and honourable deeds, Ingrateful Rome requires with foul contempt, Be bold in us: we'll follow where thou lead'st,— Like stinging bees in hottest summer's day, Led by their master to the flower'd fields,— And be aveng'd on cursed Tamora. Goths. And, as he saith, so say we all with him. Luc. I humbly thank him, and I thank you all. But who comes here, led by a lusty Goth? Enter a Goth, leading Aanon, with his child in his arms. 2 Goth. Renowned Lucius, from our troops I stay'd, To gaze upon a ruinous monastery; And as I earnestly did fix mine eye Upon the wasted building, suddenly I heard a child cry underneath a wall: I made unto the noise; when soon I heard The crying babe control'd with this discourse: Peace, tender soul; here am I, and half thy dam! Did not thy husband breathe whose brist thou art, Had nature lent thee but thy mother's look, Villain, thou might'st have been an emperor: But where the bull and cow are both milk-white, They never do begot a coal-black calf. Peace, villain, peace!—even thus he rates the babe,— For I must bear thee to a trusty Goth; Wha, when he knows thou art the emperor's babe, Will hold thee dearly for thy mother's sake. With this, my weapon drawn, I rush'd upon him, Surpriz'd him suddenly; and brought him hither, To use as you think needful of the man. Luc. O'worthy Goth! this is the incarnate devil, That robb'd Andronicus of his good hand; This is the pearl that pleas'd your empress' eye; And here's the base fruit of his burning lust.— Say, wall-eyed! slave, whither would'st thou convey This growing image of thy fiend-like face? Why dost not speak? What! dead? No; not a word? A halter, soldier; hang him on this tree. And by his side his car draw, that receiv'd the tongue. Aar. Touch not the boy, he is of royal blood. Luc. Too like the sire for ever being good.—
TITUS ANDRONICUS.

First, hang the child, that he may see it sprawl;
A sight to vex the father's soul withal.
Get me a ladder. [A ladder brought, which Aaron is obliged to ascend.]

Aar. Lucius, save the child;
And bear it from me to the empress.
If thou do this, I'll shew thee wondrous things,
That highly may advantage thee to hear:
If thou wilt not, befall what may befall,
I'll speak no more; But vengeance rot you all!
Luc. Say on; and, if it please me which thou speakest.
Thy child shall live, and I will see it nornish'd.
Aar. An if it please thee? why, assure thee, Lucius,
'Twixt thy soul and heart, I shew what I shall speak:
For I must talk of murders, rapes, and massacres,
Acts of black night, abominable deeds,
Complots of mischief, treason; villanies
Truthful to hear, yet piously performed:
And this shall all be knifed by my death,
Unless thou swear to me, my child shall live.
Luc. Tell on thy mind; I say, thy child shall live,
Aar. Swear, that he shall, and then I will begin.
Luc. Who should I swear by! thou believest no god;
That granted, how canst thou believe an oath?
Aar. What if I do not? as, indeed, I do not:
Yet, for that thou art religious,
And hast a thing within thee, called conscience;
And twenty popish tricks and ceremonies,
Which I have seen thee careful to observe,—
Therefore I urge thy oath:—For that, I know,
An idiot holds his bavile for a god,
And keeps the oath, which by that god he swears;
To that I'll urge him.—Therefore, thou shalt vow
It was one god, which that god said,
That thou ador'st and hast in reverence,—
To save my boy, to nourish, and bring him up;
Or else I will discover nought to thee.
Luc. Even by my god, I swear to thee I will.
Aar. First, know thou, I begot him on the empress.
Luc. O most instastue, luxurious woman!
Aar. Tut, Lucius! this was but a deed of charity,
To that woman I shew thee, that I was that god,
Twas her two sons, that murder'd Bassianus:
They cut thy sister's tongue, and ravish'd her,
And cut her hands; and trimm'd her as thou saw'st.
Luc. O, detestable villain! call'st thou that trimm'd
Making, and twas
Aar. Why, she was wash'd, and cut, and trimm'd;
Trim sport for them that had the doing of it.
Luc. O, barbarous, beastly villains, like thyself!
Aar. Indeed, I was thy tutor to instruct thee:
That codding spirit had they from their mother,
As sure a card as ever won the set;
That bloody mind, I think, they learnt of me,
As true a dog as ever fought at head.
Well, let my deeds be witness of my worth.
I bring'd thy brother to that guileful hole,
Where the dead corpse of Bassianus lay:
I wrote the letter that thy father found,
And hid the gold within the letter mention'd,
Confederate with the queen, and her two sons;
And what not done, that thou hast cause to rue,
Wherein I had no stroke of mischief in it!
I play'd the cheater for thy father's hand;
And, when I had it, drew myself apart.
And almost broke my heart with extreme laughter.
I pry'd me through the crevice of a wall,
When, for his hand, he had his two sons' heads;
Beheld his tears, and laugh'd so heartily,
That both mine eyes were rainy like to his;
And when I told the empress of this sport,
She swoonded almost at my pleasing tale,
And, for my tidings, gave me twenty kisses. [foulush?
Goth. What! cannot thou say all this, and never Aar. Ay, like a black dog, as the saying is.
Luc. Art thou not sorry for these heinous deeds?
Aar. Ay, that I had not done a thousand more.
Even now I curse the day, (and yet, I think,
Few come within the compass of my curse,) Wherein I did not some notorious ill:
As kill a man, or else devise his death;
Ravish a maid, or plot the way to do it:
Accuse some innocent and forswear myself:
Set deadly enmity between two friends:
Make poor men's cattle break their necks;
Set fire on barns and hay-stacks in the night,
And bid the owners quench them with their tears.
Oft have I dugg'd up dead men from their graves,
And set them upright at their dear friends' doors,
Even when their sorrows almost were forgot;
And on their skins, as on the bark of trees,
Have with my knife carved in Roman letters,
Lut not your sorrows die, though I am dead.
Tut, I have done a thousand dreadful things,
As willingly as one would kill a fly;
And nothing grieves me heartly indeed,
But that I cannot do ten thousand more.
Luc. Bring down the devil; for he must not die
So sweet a death, as hanging presently.
Aar. If there be devils, 'twould I were a devil,
To live and burn in everlasting fire;
So I might have your company in hell.
But to torment you with my bitter tongue!
Luc. Sirs, stop his mouth, and let him speak no more.

Enter a Goth.

Goth. My lord, there is a messenger from Rome,
Desires to be admitted to your presence.
Luc. Let him come near.—

Enter Emilius.

Welcome, Emilius, what's the news from Rome?
Emil. Lord Lucius, and you, princes of the Goths.
The Roman emperor greets you all by me.
And, for he understands you are in arms,
He craves a parley at your father's house,
Will ing you to demand your hostages,
And they shall be immediately deliver'd.
1 Goth. What says our general?
Emil. Emilius, let the emperor give his pledges
Unto my father and my uncle Marcus,
And we will come,—March away. [Exeunt.]

Enter Tamora, Chiron, and Demetrius, disguised.

Tam. Thus, in this strange and sad habitation.
I will encounter with Andronicus;
And say, I am Revenge, sent from below,
To join with him, and right his heinous wrongs.
Knock at his study, where, they say, he keeps,
To ruminate strange plots of dire revenge;
Tell him, Revenge is come to join with him,
And work confusion on his enemies. [They knock.

Enter Titus, above.

Tit. Who dost molest my contemplation?
Is it your trick, to make me ope the door?
That so my sad decrees may fly away,
And all my study be to no effect?
You are deceiv'd: for what I mean to do,
See here, in bloody lines I have set down;
And what is written shall be executed.
ACT V.—SCENE II.

Tam. Titus, I am come to talk with thee.
Tit. No; not a word: How can I grace my talk,
Wanting a hand to give it action?
Thou hast the odds of me, therefore no more.
Tam. If thou didst know me, thou woul'st talk with me.
Tit. I am not mad: I know thee well enough:
Witness this wretched stamp, these crimson lines;
Witness these trenche's, made by grief and care;
Witness the tiring day, and heavy night;
Witness all sorrow, that I know thee well.
For our proud empress, mighty Tamora:—
Is not thy coming for my other hand?
Tam. Know thou, sad man, I am not Tamora;
She is thy enemy, and I thy friend:
I am Revenge; sent from the infernal kingdom,
To ease the gnawing vulture of thy mind,
By working weakful vengeance on thy foes.
Come down, and welcome me to this world's light;
Conf'er with me of murder and of death;
There's not a hollow cave, or lurking-place,
No vast obscurity, or misty vale,
Where bloody murder, or destitute rape,
Can couch for fear, but I will find them out;
And in their ears tell them my dreadful name,
Revenge, which makes the foul offender quake.
Tit. Art thou Revenge? and art thou sent to me,
To be a torment to mine enemies?
Tam. I am; therefore come down, and welcome me.
Tit. Do me some service, ere I come to thee,
Lo, by thy side where Rape, and Murder, stands;
Now give some 'surance that thou art Revenge,
Stab them, or tear them on thy chariot wheels;
And then I'll come, and be thy waggoner:
And whirl along with thee about the globes,
Provide thee proper pall'ries, black as jet,
To hale thy vengeful waggon swift away,
And find out murderers in their guilty caves:
And when thy ear is loaden with their heads,
I will dismount, and by the waggon wheel
Trot, like a servile footman, all day long;
Even from Hyperion's rising in the east,
Until his very downfall in the sea.
And day by day I'll do this heavy task,
So thou destroy Rape and Murder there.
Tam. These are my ministers, and come with me.
Tit. Art they thy ministers? what are they call'd?
Tam. Revenge, and Rapine, and Murderer,
And whirl along with thee about the globes,
Cause they take vengeance of such kind of men.
Tit. Good lord, how like the empress's sons they are!
And you, the empress! But we worldly men
Have miserable, mad, mistaking eyes.
O sweet Revenge, how do I come to thee?
And, if one arm's embracement will content thee:
I will embrace thee in my bow and bay.

Tit. This closing with him fits hisJunacy:
What'er I surge, to feed his brain-sick fits,
Do you uphold and maintain in your speeches.
For now he firmly takes me for Revenge;
And, being credulous in this mad thought,
I'll make him send for Lucius, his son;
And, whilst I at a banquet hold him sure,
I'll find some cunning practice out of hand,
To scatter and disperse the giddy Goths,
Or, at the least, make them his enemies.
See, here he comes, and I must ply my theme.

Enter Titus.

Tit. Long have I been forlorn, and all for thee.
Welcome, dread fury, to my woful house;—
Rapine, and Murder, you are welcome too:—

How like the empress and her sons you are!
Well are you fitted, had you but a Moor:—
Could not all hell afford you such a devil?
For, well I wot, the empress never wags,
But in her company there is a Moor;
And, would you represent ear queen right,
It were convenient you had such a devil!
But welcome, as you are. What shall we do?
Tam. What would'st thou have us do, Andronicus?
Dem. Show me a murderer, I'll deal with him.
Chi. Show me a villain, that hath done a rape,
And I am sent to be reveng'd on him.
Tam. Show me a thousand, that have done thee
And I will be revenged on them all.
Tit. Look round about the wicked streets of Rome;
And when thou find'st a man that's like thyself,
Good Murder, stab him; he's a murderer.—
Go thou with him; and, when it is thy hap,
To find another that is like to thee,
Good Rapine, stab him: he is a ravisher.—
Go then with this man, and in the emperor's court
There is a queen, attended by a Moor;
Well may'st thou know her by thy own proportion,
For up and down she doth resemble thee;
I pray thee, do on them some violent death,
They have been violent to me and mine.
Tam. Well hast thou lesson'st me this shall we do.
But would it please thee, good Andronicus,
To send for Lucius, thy thric'e valiant son,
Who leads towards Rome a band of warkie Goths,
And bid him come and banquet at thy house:
When he is here, even at thy solemn feast,
I will bring in the empress and her sons,
The emperor himself, and all that love him;
And at thy mercy shall they stoop and kneel,
And on them shalt thou ease thy angry heart.
What says Andronicus to this device?
Tit. Marcus, my brother!—'tis sad Titus calls.

Enter Marcus.

Go, gentle Marcus, to thy nephew Lucius;
Thou shalt inquire him out among the Goths;
Bid him repair to me, and bring with him
Some of the chiefest princes of the Goths:
Bid him encamp his soldiers where they are:
Tell him, the emperor and the empress too
Feast at my house: and he shall feast with them:
This do thou for my love's sake, and let him,
As he regards his aged father's life.
Mar. This will I do, and soon return again. [Exit.]
Tam. Now will I hence about thy business,
And take my ministers along with me.
Tit. Nay, nay, let Rape and Murder stay with me;
Or else I'll call my brother back again,
And clear to no revenge but Lucius.
Tam. What say you, boys? will you abide with him,
Whiles I go tell my lord the emperor.
How I have govern'd our determin'd jest?
Yield to his humour, smooth and speak him fair?—

[Aside.]
Tit. And tarry with him, till I come again.
Tit. I know them all, though they suppose me mad;
And will o'er-reach them in their own device.
A pair of cursed hell-hounds, and their dam. [Aside.]
Dem. Madam, depart at pleasure, leave as here.
Tam. Farewell, Andronicus: Revenge now goes To lay a complot to betray thy fees. [Exit Tamora.
Tit. I know thou dost; and, sweet Revenge, farewell.
Chi. Tell us, old man, how shall we be employ'd?
Tit. Tut, I have work enough for you to do.—
Publius, come hither, Caees, and Valentine.
Enter Publius and others.

Pub. What is your will?

Tit. Know you these two?

Pub. Th'empress' sons, I take them, Chiron and Demetrius. Tit. Fye, Publius, fye! thou art too much deceive'd; The one is Murder, Rape is the other's name: And therefore bid them, gentle Publius; Caius, and Valentine, lay hands on them:

Oft have you heard me wish for such an hour, And now I find it; therefore bind them sure; And stop their mouths, if they begin to cry.

Chs. Villains, forbear; we are the empress' sons.

Pub. And therefore do we what we are commanded. Stop close their mouths, let them not speak a word: Is he sure bound? look, that you bind them fast.

Re-enter Titus Andronicus, with Lavinia; she hearing a basoon, and he a knife.

Tit. Come, come, Lavinia: look, thy foes are bound:

Sirs, stop their mouths, let them not speak to me; But let them hear what fearful words I utter.— O villains, Chiron and Demetrius! [mad;

Heaven sends the spring whom you have stain'd with This goodly summer with your winter mix'd. You kill'd her husband; and, for that vile fault, Two of her brothers were condemn'd to death: My hand cut off, and made a merry jest: Both her sweet hands, her tongue, and that, more dear Than hands or tongue, her spotless chastity, Inhuman traitors, you constrain'd and forc'd, What would you say, if I should let you speak? Villains, for shame you could not beg for grace. Hark, wretches, how I mean to martyr you. This one hand yet is left to cut your throats; Whilst that Lavinia 'tween her stumps doth hold The basoon, that receives your guilty blood You know, yourself, Revenge, and thinks me mad,— Hark, villains; I will grill your bones to dust, And with your blood and it, I'll make a paste; And of the paste a coffin I will rear, And make two pasties of your shameful heads; And bid that strumpet, your unshallow'd dam, Like to the earth, swallow her own increase. This is the feast that I have bid her to, And this the banquet she shall surfeit on; For worse than Philomel you us'd my daughter, And worse than Progne I will be reveng'd: And now prepare your throats.—Lavinia, come, [He cuts their throats.

Receive the blood: and, when that they are dead, Let me go gring their bones to powder small, And with their hateful liquor temper it; And in that paste let their vile heads be bak'd. Come, come, be every one officious To make this banquet; which I wish may prove More stern and bloody than the Centaurs' feast. So, now bring them in, for I will play the cook, And see them ready against their mother comes. [Exeunt, bearing the dead bodies.

SCENE III.—The same. A Pavillion, with Tables, &c.

Enter Lucius, Marcus, and Goths, with Aaron, prisoner.

Luc. Uncle Marcus, since 'tis my father's mind, That I repair to Rome, I am content.

1 Goth. And ours, with thine, befall what fortune will.

Luc. Good uncle, take you in this barbarous Moor, This ravenous tiger, this accursed devil; Let him receive no sustenance, fetter him, Till he be brought unto the empress' face, For testimony of her foul proceedings: And see the ambush of our friends be strong: I fear, the emperor means no good to us. Aor. Some devil whisper curses in mine ear, And prompt me, that my tongue may utter forth That venomous noise of my swelling heart! Luc. Away, inhuman dog! unallow'd slave!— Sirs, help our uncle to convey him in— [Evans, Goths, with Aaron. Flourish. The trumpets shew, the emperor is at hand.

Enter Saturninus, and Tamora, with Tribunes, Senators, and others.

Sat. What, hath the firmament more suns than one? Luc. What boots it thee, to call thyself a sun? Mars. Rome's emperor, and nephew, break the peace; These quarrels must be quietly debated. The feast is ready, which the careful Titus Hath ordain'd to an honourable end, For peace, for love, for league, and good to Rome: Please you, therefore, draw nigh, and take your places.

Luc. Marcus, what will.

[Hautboy's sound. The company sit down at table.

Enter Titus, dressed like a cook, Lavinia, veiled, young Lucius, and others. Titus places the dishes on the table.

Tit. Welcome, my gracious lord; welcome, dear guests, Welcome ye warlike Gofs; welcome, Lucius; And welcome all; although the cheer be poor, 'Twill fill your stomachs; please you eat of it. Sat. Why art thou thusnett'd, Andronicus? Tit. Because I would be sure to have all well, To entertain your highness, and your empress. Tam. We are beholden to you, good Andronicus. Tit. An if your highness knew my heart, you were. My lord the emperor, resolve me this; Was it well done of rash Virgininius, To slay his daughter with his own right hand, Because she was enforc'd, stain'd, and deflu'd? Sat. It was, Andronicus. Tit. Your reason, mighty lord! Sat. Because the girl should not survive her shame, And by her presence still renew his sorrows. Tit. A reason mighty, strong, and effectual; A pattern, precedent, and lively warrant, For me, most wretched to perform the like;— Die, die, Lavinia, and thy shame with thee; [He kills Lavinia. And, with thy shame, thy father's sorrow die! Sat. 'Tis what hast thou done, unnatural, and unkind? Tit. Kill'd her, for whom my tears have made me As woful as Virginiius was: [blind,

And have a thousand times more cause than he To do this outrage:— and it is now done. Sat. What, was she ravish'd? tell, who did the deed. Tit. Will't please you eat? will't please your highness feed? Tam. Why hast thou slain thine only daughter thus? Tit. Not 1; 'twas Chiron, and Demetrius: They ravish'd her, and cut away her tongue, And they, 'twas they, that did her all this wrong. Sat. Go, fetch them hither to us presently. Tit. Why, they are both, baked in that pye; Whereof their mother dimity hath fed,
Luc. Can the son's eye behold his father bleed?

There's need for meed, death for a deadly deed.

[Ring! SATURNUS. A great tumult. The people in confusion disperse. MARCUS, LUCIUS, and their parts ascend the steps before TITUS's house.

Luc. You said last night, men and sons of Rome, by your sword's strength, to the skies was due,
Scatter'd by winds and high tempestuous gusts,
O, let me teach you how to knit again
This scatter'd corn into one mutual sheaf,
These broken limbs again into one body.

Sen. Let Rome herself be bane unto herself;
And she, whom mighty kingdoms court by to,
Like a forlorn and desperate cast-aways,
Do shameful execution on herself.
But if my frosty signs and chaps of age,
Grave witnesses of true experience,
Cannot induce you to attend my words,—[ancestor,
Speak, Rome's dear friend;] To Lucius as erst our
When with his solemn tongue he did discourse,
To love-sick Dido's sad attending ear,
The story of that baneful burning night,
When subtle Greeks surprise'd king Priam's Troy;
Tell us, what Sinon hath bewitch'd our ears,
Or who hath brought the fatal engine in,
That gives our Troy, our Rome, the civil wound,—
My heart is not compact of firm nor steel;
Nor can I utter all my bitter grief,
But floods of tears will drown my oratory,
And break my very utterance; even 'tis time
When it should move you to attend me most,
Lending your kind commissiath:
Here is a captain, let him tell the tale:
Your hearts will throb and weep to hear him speak.

Luc. Then, noble auditory, be it known to you,
That cursed Chiron and Demetrius
Were they that murdered our emperor's brother;
And they it were that ravished our sister:
For their fell faults our brothers were beheaded;
Our father's tears despis'd; and basely cou'd
Not stay the frenzy of these d'asquar'd out,
And sent her enemies unto the grave.
Lastly myself unkindly banish'd,
The gates shut on me, and turn'd weeping out,
To beg relief among Rome's enemies;
Who drownd' their enmity in my true tears,
And op'd their arms to embrace me as a friend;
And I am the turn'd-forth, be it known to you,
That have preserv'd her welfare in my blood;
And from her bosom took the enemy's point,
Sheathing the steel in my adventur'd body.
Ahas! you know, I am no vaunter, I;
My scars can witness, 'twixt although they are,
That my report is just, and full of truth.
But, soft; methinks I do digress too much,
Citing my worthless praise: O, pardon me;
For when no friends are by, men praise themselves.

Mar. Now is my turn to speak; Behold this child,
[Pointing to the child in the arms of an Attendan.
Of this was Tamora deliver'd:
The issue of an irreligious Moor,
Chief architect and plotter of all woe;
The villain is alive in Titus' house,
Damn'd as he is, to witness this is true.
Now judge, what cause had Titus to revenge
These wrongs unspeakable, past patience,
Or more than any living man could bear.

Now you have heard the truth, what say you, Romans?
Have we done aught amiss? Shew us wherein,
And, from the place where you behold us now
The poor rascals dead.

The poor rascals dead.
Will, hand in hand, all headlong cast us down,
And on the ragged stones beat forth our brains,
And make a mutual closure of our house,
Speak, Romans, speak; and, if you see us shall,
Lo, hand in hand, Lucius and I will fall.

Rom. Come, come, thou reverend man of Rome,
And bring our emperor gently in thy hand,
Lucius our emperor; for, well I know,
The common voice do cry, it shall be so. [temperor!
Rom. [Several speake.] Lucius, all hail: Rome's royal Lucius, &c. descend.

Mar. Go, go into old Titus' sorrowful house;
[To an Attendan.
And bide here that misbelieving Moor,
To be ajudg'd some direful slaughtering death,
As punishment for his most wicked life.

Rom. [Sever speake.] Lucius, all hail; Rome's gracious governor!

Luc. Thanks, gentle Roman; may I govern so,
to heal Rome's harms, and wipe away her woe!
But, gentle people, give me aim awhile,—
For nature puts me to a heavy task;—
Stand all aloof;—but uncle draw you near,
To shed obsequious tears upon this trunk:
O, take this warm kiss on thy pale cold lips.

[Kiss TITUS.

These sorrowful drops upon thy blood-stain'd face,
The last true duties of thy noble son!

Mar. Tear for tear, and loving kiss for kiss,
Thy brother Marcus tenders on thy lips?
O, were the sum of these that I should pay
Countless and infinite, yet would I pay them! [of us
Luc. Come hither, boy, come, and learn
To melt in showers: Thy grandsire lov'd thee well
Many a time he danc'd thee on his knee,
Sung thee asleep, his loving breast thy pillow;
Many a matter he told to thee,
Meat, and agreeing with thine infancy;
In that respect then, like a loving child,
Send you out, and seek: yet do not from thy tender spring,
Because kind nature doth require it so:
Friends should associate friends in grief and woe:
Bid him farewell; commit him to the grave;
Do him that kindness, and take leave of him.

Boy. O grandsire, grandsire! even with all my
Would I were dead, so you did live again! [heart
O lord, I cannot speak to him for weeping;
My tears will choke me, if I ope my mouth.

Enter Attendants, with AARON.

1 Rom. You sad Andronicus, have done with woes;
Give sentence on this execrable wretch,
That hath been breeder of these dire events;
Luc. Set him bread-deep in earth, and famish him;
There let him stand, and rave and cry for food:
If any one relieves or pity's him,
For the offence he dies. This is our doom.
Some stay, to see him fasten'd in the earth.

Aar. O, why should wrath be mute, and fury
Am I no baby, I, that with base prayers, [dumb?
should I repent the evil I have done?
Ten thousand, worse than ever yet I did,
Would I perform, if I might have my will;
If one good deed in all my life I did,
I do repent it from my very soul.
Luc. Some loving friends convey the emperor
And give him burial in his father's grave: [hence
PERICLES. PRINCE OF TYRE.

This play was entered at Stationers' Hall, May 2, 1608, by Edward Blount, one of the printers of the first folio edition of Shakespeare's works; but it did not appear in print till the following year, and it is known that the press was exhausted before it was published by Blount, but by Henry Gossen, who had probably anticipated the other, by getting a heavy transcript from a playhouse copy. There is no play of the author's, perhaps not in the English language, of which the text is so corrupted as that of this tragedy. The most corrupt of Shakespeare's other dramas is partly itself compared with Pericles.

The story on which this play is formed, is of great antiquity. It is found in a book, once very popular, entitled Gupta Ramayana, composed by Mr. Persicus, the learned editor of The Canterbury Tales of Chaucer, 1775, to have been written by a hundred years more. The earliest impression of that work (which I have seen) was printed in 1486; in that edition the history of Appolonia King of Tyre made the 26th chapter. It is likewise referred to by Gower in his Confessio Amantis, lib. viii. p. 172—189, edit. 1631. The Rev. Dr. Farmer has in his possession a fragment of a MS. poem on the same subject, which appears, from the hand-writing and the metre, to be more ancient than Gower. There is also an ancient Romance on this subject, called Roma Apolonia Thiere, translated from the French by Robert Copland, and printed by Weaver de Worsa in 1510. In 1576 William How had a licence for printing The most excellent, pleasant, and variable History of the most famous prince of Spain, knowne to be Pericles, Likewise his wife, and Thares his daughter. The author of Pericles having introduced Gower in his piece, it is reasonable enough to suppose that he chiefly followed the work of that poet. It is observable, that the hero of this tale is, in Gower's poem, as in the present play, called Prince of Tyre; in the Greek Romana, however, the name of Appolonia, or Gower's time, or the 16th, or 17th century, he is entitled King. Most of the incidents of the play are found in the Conf. Amantis, and a few of Gower's expressions are occasionally borrowed. However, I think it is not unlikely, that there may have been something but not much new with it, in its early French translation of this popular story from the Greek Romance, in which the name of Appolonia was changed to Pericles; so, likewise, the title of the play of this drama may have been indebted. In 1607 was published at London, by Valentine Sims, "A pattern of pleasant adventures, containing the most excellent, pleasant, and variable History of the strange Accident that befell unto Prince Appolonia, the lady Luciana his wife, and Thares his daughter, whom in the uncertainty of this world and the fickle state of man's life are lovely described, transmitting at the same time the true conduct of their lives." I have never seen the book, but it was without doubt a re-publication of that published by W. How in 1576. This play seems to have been particularly successful. In the four quarto editions it is called the "much admired" play of Pericles, prince of Tyre, and is mentioned by many ancient writers as a popular performance. Malone.

Rowe, in his first edition of Shakespeare, says, "It is owned that some part of Pericles certainly was written by him, perhaps the last act. Farmer thinks the hand of Shakespeare may be sometimes seen in the latter part of the play, but there only."

ACT I.

Enter Gower.

Before the Palace of Antioch.

To sing a song of old was sung,

From ashes ancient Gower is come;

Assuming man's infirmities,

To gild your ear, and please your eyes.

It hath been sung at festivals,

On ember-eves, and holy-ales;

And lords and ladies of their lives
Have read it for restoratives:

'Purpose to make men glorious;
Et qua antiquis, eo melius.
If you, born in these latter times,
When wit's more ripe, accept my rhymes,
And that to hear an old man sing,
May to your wishes pleasure bring,
I life would wish, and that I might
Waste it for you, like taper-light.
This city then, Antioch the great
Bolt up for his highest seat;
'At all Syria: (I tell you what mine authors say;)\nThis king unto him took a pheere,
Who died and left a female heir,
SCENE I.—Antiochus. A Room in the Palace.

Enter Antiochus, Pericles, and Attendants.

Ant. Young prince of Tyre, you have at large receiv'd the danger of the task you undertake.

Per. I have, Antiochus, and with a soul Enrich'd with the glory of her praise,

Think death no hazard, in this enterprise. [Music.

Ant. Bring in your daughter, clothed like a bride,
For the embraces even of Jove himself;
At whose conception, (till Lucia reign'd,) Nature this dewry gave, to glad her presence,
The senate-house of planets all did sit,
To knit in her their best perfections.

Enter the Daughter of Antiochus.

Per. See, where she comes, apparel'd like the spring,
Graces her subjects, and her thoughts the king
Of every virtue gives renown to men!
Her face, the book of praises, where is read
Nothing but curious pleasures, as from thence Sorrow were ever ras'd, and petty wrath
Could never he her mild companion.
Ye gods that made me man, and sway in love,
That have inflam'd desire in my breast,
To taste the fruit of your celestial tree,
Or die in the advent'rous quest of my love.
As I am son and servant to your will,
To compass such a boundless happiness!

Ant. Prince Pericles,—

Per. That would be son to great Antiochus.

Ant. Before thee stands this fair Hesperides,
With golden fruit, but dangerous to be touch'd;
For death-like dragons here affright thee hard:
Her face, like heaven, anteth thee to view
A countess glory, which desert must gain:
And which, without desert, because thine eye Presumes to reach, all thy whole heap must die.
You somet ime famous princes, like thyself, Drawn by report, adventures by desire:
Tell thee with speechless tongues, and semblance pale,
That, without covering, save ye field of stars,
They here stand martyrs, slain in Cupid's wars;
And with dead cheeks advise thee to desist,
For going on death's net, whom none resist.

Per. Antiochus, I thank thee, who hast taught My frail mortality to know itself.
And by these fearful objects, to prepare
This body, like to them, to what I must:
For death remember'd, should be like a mirror,
Who tells us, life's but breath; to trust it, error,

I'll make my will then; and as sick men do,
Who know the world, see heaven, but feeling woe,
Gripe not at earthly joys, as erst they did;
So I bequeath a happy peace to you,
And all good men, is every prince should do;
My riches to the earth from whence they came:
But my unsought fire of love to you.

[To the Daughter of Antiochus.

Thus ready for the way of life or death,
I wait the sharpest blow, Antiochus,
Scoring advice.

Ant. Read the conclusion then;
Which read and not expounded, 'tis decreed,
As these before thee, thou thyself shalt bleed.
Daught. In all, save that, may'st thou prove pros.
In all, save that, I wish thee happiness! [perous! Per. Like a bold champion, I assume the lists,
Nor ask advice of any other thought
But faithfulness, and courage.

[Here reads the Riddle.]

I am no viper, yet I feed.
On mother's flesh, which did me breed:
I sought a husband, in which labour,
I found that kindness in a father.
He's father, son, and husband mild,
I mother, wife, and yet his child.
How they may be, and yet in two.
As you will live, resolve it you.

Sharp physic is the last: but O you powers!
That give heaven countless eyes to view men's acts,
Why cloud they not their sights perpetually,
If this be true, which makes me pale to read it?
Fair glass of light, I bow'd you, and could will,
Takes hold of the hand of the Prince.
Were not these glorious casket stor'd with ill:
But I must tell you,—now, my thoughts revolt;
For he's no man on whom perfections wait.
That knowing sin within, will touch the gate.
You're a fair viol, and your sense the strings;
Who finger'd to make man his lawful music.
Would draw heaven down, and all the gods to hearten,
But, being play'd upon before your time,
Hell only dances at so harsh a chime:
Good sooth, I care not for you.

Ant. Prince Pericles, touch not upon thy life,
For that's an article within our law,
As dangerous as the rest. Our time's expir'd;
Either expound now, or receive your sentence.

Per. Great king,
Few love to hear the sins they love to act;
T'would braid yourself too near for me to tell it.
Who has a book of all that monarchs do,
He's more secure to keep it shut, than shewn;
For vice repeated, is like the wand'reng wind,
Blows dust in others' eyes, to spread itself;
And yet the end of all is bought thus dear,
The breath is gone, and the sore eyes see clear:
To stop the air would hurt them. The blind mole casts
Copp'd hills towards heaven, to tell, the earth is wrong'd.

By man's oppression; and the poor worm doth die for't.
Kings are earth's gods: in vice their law's will;
And if Jove stray, who dares say, Jove doth ill!
It is enough you know; and it is fit,
What being more known grows worse, to smother it.
All love the womb that their first beings bred,
Then give my tongue like leave to love my head.
Ant. Per. That heath object, that heath thy head! he has found the meaning:

[Tyre. But I will glove with him. [Aside.] Young prince of Though by the tenour of our strict edict,
Your exposition misinterpreting,
We might proceed to cancel of your days;
Yet hope, succeeding from so fair a tree
As your safe self, doth tune us otherwise
Fare days longer we do resist you:
If by which time our secret be undone.
This merry shower, I'll joy in such a son:
And until then, your entertain shall be,
As doth best our honour, and your worth.

[Enter Antiochus, his Daughter, and Attendants.]

Per. How courtesy would seem to cover sin?
When what is done is like an hypocrisy,
The which is good in nothing but in sight.
But is so bad that after sin's extreme fall
Then were it certain, you were not so bad,
As with foul incest to abuse your soul:
Where now you're both a father and a son,
To your untimely claspings with your child,
(Which pleasure fits an husband, not a father?)
And she an eater of her mother's sash,
By the deceiving of her parent's bed;
And both like serpent will joy in such they feel
On sweetest flowers, yet they poison breed.
Antioch, farewell! for wisdom sees, those men
Blush not in actions blacker than the night.
Will shun no course to keep them from the light.
One sin, I know, another doth provoke;
Murder's as near to lust, as flame to smoke.
Poison and treason are the hands of sin.
And the targets to put off the shame:
Then, lest my life be cropp'd to keep you clear.
By flight I'll shun the danger which I fear. [Exit.

Re-enter Antiochus.

Aur. He hath found the meaning, for the which
We mean
To have his head:
He must not live to trumpet forth my infamy,
Nor tell the world. Antiochus doth sin
In such a loathed manner:
And therefore instantly this prince must die;
For by his fall my honour must keep high.
Who attempts on us there?

Enter Thaliard.

Thal. Dost thine highness call?

Aur. Thaliard, you're of our chamber, and our mind
Partakes her private actions to your secrecy:
And for your faithfulness we will advance you.
Thaliard, behold here's poison, and here's gold:
We hate the prince of Tyre, and thou must kill him;
It fits thee not to ask the reason why,
Because we bid it. Say, is it done?

Thal. My lord,
'Tis done.

Enter a Messenger.

Aur. Enough;
Lest your breath cool yourself, telling your haste.
Mrs. My lord, prince Pericles is dead. [Exit Messenger.

Aur. Will live, by after: and, as an arrow, shot
From a well-experienced archer, hits the mark
His eye doth level at, so never return.
Unless thou say, Prince Pericles is dead.
My lord, if it
Can get him once within my pistol's length,
I'll make him sure: so farewell to your highness.

Thal. Prince Thyess, adieu! till Pericles be dead.
My heart can lend no succour to my head. [Exit.

SCENE II.—Tyre. A Room in the Palace.

Enter Pericles, Helicanus, and other Lords.

Per. Let none disturb us: Why this charge of thoughts!
The sad companion, dutty'd melancholy.
By me so unkindly is, not an hour
In the day's glorious walk, or peaceful night, [quiet!
(The tomb where grief should sleep,) can breed me
Here pleasures court mine eyes, and mine eyes shun
And danger, which I feared, is at Annoth. [them,
Whose arm seems far too short to hit me here:
Yet neither pleasure's act can joy my spirits,
Nor the other's distance comfort me.
Then it is thus: the passions of the mind,
That have their first conception by mis-dread,
Have after-nourishment and life by care:
And what was first but fear what might be done.
Grows elder now, and cares it be not done.
And so with me:—the great Antiochus
('Gainst whom I am too little to contend.
Returning is so great, can make his will act.
Will think me speaking, though I swear to silence
Nor boos it me to say, I honour him.
If he suspect I may dishonour him:
And what may make him blush in being known.
He'll stop the course by which it might be known;
With hostile forces he'll clap round the land,
And with the extent of war will look so huge,
Pursuement shall drive courage from the state:
Our men be vaugnish'd, ere they do resist,
And subjects punish'd that ne'er thought offence;
Which care of them, not pity of myself,
(Who am no more but as the tops of trees,
Which fence the roots they grow by, and defend them.)
Makes both my body pine, and soul to languish,
And punish that before, that he would punish.

1 Lord. Joy and all comfort in your sacred breast! [tongue.
? Lord. And keep your mind, till you return to us,
Peaceful and comfortable! [tongue.

Hel. Peace, peace, my lords, and give experience
They do abuse the king, that flatter him:
For flattering is the bellows blows up sin:
The thing the which is flatter'd, but a spark.
Such breaths, which aches heat and sterner glowing;
Whereas reproof, obedient, and in order.
Fits kings, as they are men, for they may err.
When signior Zoth here doth proclaims a peace,
He flatters you, makes war upon your life:
Prince, pardon me, or strike me, if you please:
I cannot be much lower than my knees.

Per. All leave us else: but let your cares o'erlook
What shipping, and what landing's in our haven,
And then return to us. [Exit Lords.] Helicanus,
Hast mov'd us: what seest thou in our looks? [thou

Hel. An angry brow, dread lord.

Per. If there be such a dart in princes' frowns,
How durst thy tongue move anger to our face?

Hel. How dare the plants look up, to heaven,
From where they have their nourishment? [whence

Per. Thou know'st I have power
To take thy life.

Hel. [Kneeling.] I have ground the axe myself;
Do you but strike the blow.

Per. Rise, pr'ythee rise;
Sit down, sit down: thou art no flatterer;
Thou art not fit for it; thou art a high heaven-wrack'd
That kings should let their ears hear their faults hid!
Fit counsellor, and servant for a prince,
Who by thy wisdom mak'st a prince thy servant,
What wouldst thou have me do?

Hel. With patience bear
Such griefs as you do lay upon yourself;
Per. Thou speak'st like a physician, Hellicanus;
Who minister'st a potion unto me,
That thou wouldst tremble to receive thyself.
Attend me then: I went to Antioch,
Whence thou know'st, against the face of death,
I sought the purchase of a glorious beauty,
From whence an issue I might propagate,
Bringing arms to princes, and to subjects joys.
Her face was to mine eye beyond all wonder;
The rest (dark in thine ear,) as black as incest;
Which by my knowledge found, the sinful father
Served not to strike, but smooth: but thou know'st
'Tis time to fear, when tyrants seem to kiss. [this,
Which fear so grew in me, I luther fled,
Under the covering of a careful night,
Who seem'd my good protector; and being here,
Bethought me what was past, what might succeed.
I knew him tyrannous; and tyrant's fears
Decrease not, but grow faster than in years;
And should he doubt it, (as no doubt I doth,) that
That I should open to the listening air,
How many worthy princes' bloods were shed,
To keep his bed of blackness unladen one,—
To top that doubt, he'll fill this land with arms,
And make pretence of wrong that I have done him,
When all, for my desire, may call offence,
Must feel war's blow, who spares not innocence:
Which love to all (of which thyself art one,
Who now reprovest me for it)—
Hel. [Aside.] Alas, sir! Per. Drew sleep out of mine eyes, blood from my Musings into my mind, a thousand doubts [cheeks,
How might I stop this, ere it came;
And finding little comfort to relieve them,
I thought it princely charity to grieve them.
Hel. Well, my lord, since you have given me leave
Freely I'll speak. Antiochus you fear; [to speak,
And justly too, I think, you fear the tyrant,
Who either by public war, or private treason,
Will take away your life.
Therefore, my lord, go travel for a while,
Till that his rage and anger be forgot,
Or Destinies do cut his thread of life.
Your rule direct to any; if to me,
Day serves not light more faithful than I'll be.
Per. I do not doubt my faith;
But should he wrong my liberties in absence—
Hel. We'll mangle bloods together in the earth,
From whence we had our being and our birth.
Per. Tyre, I now look from thee then, and to Tharsus
Intend my travel, where I'll hear from thee;
And by whose letters I'll dispose myself.
The care I had and have of subjects' good,
On thee I lay, whose wisdom's strength can bear it.
I'll take thy word for faith, not ask thine oath;
Who shuns not to break one, will sure crack both:
But in our orbs we'll live so round and safe,
That time of both this truth shall ne'er convince,
Show'dst a subject's shine, a true prince.
[Exeunt.]

SCENE III.—Tyre. An Anti-chamber in the Palace.

Enter THALIARD.

Thaliard. That. So, this is Tyre, and this is the court. Here must I kill king Pericles; and if I do not, I am sure to be hanged at home; 'tis dangerous. Well, I perceive he was a wise fellow, and had good discretion, that being bid to ask what he would of the king, desired he might know none of his secrets. Now do I see he had some reason for it: for if a king bid a man be a villain, he is bound by the indenture of his oath to be one.—Hush, here come the lords of Tyre.

Enter HELICANUS, ESCALES, and other Lords.

Hel. You shall not need, my fellow peers of Tyre, Further to question of your king's departure.
His seal'd commission, left in trust with me, Doth speak sufficiently he's gone to travel.
That. How! the king gone! [Aside. Hel. If further yet you will be satisfied,
Why, as it were unlicensed of your loves,
He would depart, I'll give some light unto you.
Being at Antioch—

That. [Aside.] What from Antioch? Hel. Royal Antiochus (on what cause I know not,) Took some displeasure at him; at least he judged so:
And doubting lest that he had err'd or sin'd,
To shew his sorrow, would correct himself;
So puts himself unto the shipman's toil,
With whom each minute threatens life or death.
That. Well, I perceive [Aside.]
I shall not be hang'd now, although I would;
But since he's gone, the king it sure must please,
He 'scap'd the land, to perish on the seas.—
But I'll present me. Peace to the lords of Tyre! Hel. Lord Thaliard from Antiochus is welcome.

That. [Aside.] With message unto princely Pericles;
But, since my landing, as I have understood Your lord has took himself to unknown travels,
My message must return from whence it came.

Hel. We have no reason to desire it, since
Commodened to our master, not to us:
Yet, ere you shall depart, this we desire,—
As friends to Antioch, we may feast in Tyre.
[Exeunt.]

SCENE IV.

Tharsus.—A Room in the Governor's House.

Enter CLEON, DIONYZA, and Attendants.

Cle. My Dionyzia, shall we rest us here,
And by relating tales of other's griefs,
See if 'twill teach us to forget our own?

Dio. That were to blow at fire, in hope to quench For who digs hills because they do aspire, [it;
Thrives to cast up a mountain to cast a higher.
O my distressed lord, even such our griefs;
Here they're but felt, and seen with misty eyes,
But like to groves, being top'd, they higher rise.

Cle. O Dionyzia,
Who wants food, and will not say he wants it,
Or can conceal his hunger, till he famish?
Our tongues and sorrows do sound deep our woes
Into the air: our eyes do weep, till lungs
Fetch breath that may proclaim them louder; that,
If heaven slumber, while their creatures want,
They may awake their helps to comfort them.
I'll then discourse our woes felt several years,
And wanting breath to speak, help me with tears.

Dio. I'll do my best, sir.

Cle. This Tharsus, o'er which I have government,
(A city, on whom plenty held full hand.)
For riches, strew'd herself even in the streets;
Whose towers bore heads so high, they kiss'd the And strangers ne'er beheld, but wonder'd at: [clouds,
Whose men and dames so jettied and ador'd, Like one brother's glass, to trim them by:
Their tables were stor'd full, to glad the sight,
And not so much to feed on, as delight;
All poverty was scorn'd, and pride so great,
The name of help grew odious to repeat.
PERICLES.

Dio. O, 'tis too true. [chagae,
Cle. But see what heaven can do! By this our
These mouths, whom but of late, earth, sea, and air,
Were all too little to content and please,
Although they gave their creatures in abundance.
As houses are deifi'd for want of use,
They are now starv'd for want of exercise;
Those palates, who not yet two summers younger,
Must have inventions to delight the taste,
Would now be glad of bread, and beg for it;
Those mothers who, to nurse up their babes,
Thought nought too curious, are ready now,
To eat those little darlings whom they lov'd.
So sharp are hunger's teeth, that man and wife
Draw lots, who first shall die to lengthen life:
Here stands a lord, and there a lady weeping;
Here many sink, yet those which see them fall,
Have scarce strength left to give them burial.
Is not this true?
Dio. Our cheeks and hollow eyes do witness it.
Cle. 0, let those cities, that of Pleurty's cup
And her prosperities so largely taste,
With their superfluous riots, hear these tears!
The misery of Tharsus may be theirs.

Enter a Lord.

Lord. Where's the lord governor?
Cle. Here.
Speak out thy sorrows which thou bring'st in haste.
For comfort is too far for us to expect.
Lord. We have deserted, upon our neighbouring
A portly sail of ships make hitherward.
[shore,
Cle. I thought as much.
One shore never comes, but brings an heir,
That may succeed as his inheritor;
And so in ours: some neighbouring nation,
Taking advantage of our misery,
Have stuff'd these hollow vessels with their power,
To beat us down, the which are down already;
And make a conquest of unhappy me,
Whereas no glory's got to overcome.
Lord. That's the least fear; for, by the semblance
Of their white flags display'd, they bring us peace,
And come to us as favourers, not as foes.
Cle. Thou speakest like him's untutor'd to repeat,
Who makes the fairest show, means most deceit.
But bring they what they will, what need we fear?
The ground's the lowest, and we are half way there.
Go tell their general, we attend him here,
To know for what he comes, and whence he comes,
And what he craves.
Lord. I go my lord. [Exit.
Cle. Welcome is peace, if he on peace consist;
If wars, we are unable to resist.

Enter PERICLES, with Attendants.

Per. Lord governor, for so we hear you are,
Let not our ships and number of our men
Be, like a beacon fire'd, to amaze your eyes.
We have heard your miseries as far as Tyre,
And seen the desolation of your streets:
Nor come we to add sorrow to your tears,
But to relieve them of their heavy load;
And these our ships you happily may think
Are, like the Trojan horse, war-stuff'd within
With bloody views, expecting overthrow.
Are stord with corn, to make your needy bread,
And give them life, who are hunger-starv'd, half dead.
All. The gods of Greece protect you!
And we'll pray for you.

Per. Rise, I pray you, rise;
We do not look for reverence, but for love,
And harbourage for ourself, our ships, and men.
Cle. The which when any shall not gratify,
Or pay you with unthankfulness in thought,
Be it our wives, our children, or ourselves,
The curse of heaven and men succeed their evils!
Till when, (the which, I hope, shall ne'er be seen,)
Your grace is welcome to our town and us. [while.
Per. Which welcome we'll accept; feast here a
Until our stars that frown, lend us a smile. [Exeunt.

AC T II.

Enter Gower.

Gow. Here have you seen a mighty king
His child, I wis, to incest bring;
A better prince, and benign lord,
Prove awful both in deed and word.
Be quiet then, as men should be,
Till he hath pass'd necessity.
I'll shew you those in troubles reign,
Losing a mite, a mountain gain.
The good in conversation
(To whom I give my benison,) I
Still at Tharsus, where each man
Thinks all is writ he spoken can:
And, to remember what he does,
Gild his state greater:
But tidings to the contrary
Are brought your eyes; what need speak I?

Dumb show.

Enter at one door PERICLES, talking with CLEON: all the Train with them. Enter at another door a Gentleman, with a letter to PERICLES; PERICLES shows the letter to CLEON; then gives the Messenger a reward, and Eights him. Leon PERICLES, CLEON, &c. several.

Gow. Good Helicane hath staid at home,
Not to eat honey like a drone,
From others' labours; forth he strive
To killen bad, keep good alive;
And, to fulfil his prince's desire,
Sends word of all that hap's in Tyre:
How Thaliard came full bent with sin,
And hid intent, to murder him;
And that in Tharsus was not best
Longer for him to make his rest:
He knowing so, put forth to seas,
Where when men been, there's seldom ease.
For now the wind begins to blow;
Thunder above, and deeps below,
Make such unquiet, that the ship
Should house him safe, is wreck'd and split;
And he, good prince, having all lost,
By waves from coast to coast is toss'd;
All persons of man, of yell
Ne aught escape but himself;
Till fortune, tir'd with doing bad,
Throw him ashore, to give him glad:
And here he comes: what shall be next,
Pardon old Gower; this long's the text. [Exit.

SCENE I.—Pentapolis. A open Place by the Sea Side.

Enter PERICLES, wet.

Per. Yet cease your ire, ye angry stars of heaven!
Wind, rain, and thunder, remember, earthly man
Is but a substance that must yield to you;
And I, as fits my nature, do obey you.
Alas, the sea hath cast me on the rocks,
Wash'd me from shore to shore, and left me breathe
Nothing to think on, but ensuing death:
Let it suffice the greatness of your powers,
To have bereft a prince of all his fortunes;
And having thrown him from your watry grave,
Here to have death in peace, is all he'll crave.

Enter Three Fishermen.

1 Fish. What, ho, Pilch !
2 Fish. Ho! come, and bring away the nets.
1 Fish. What Patch-breech, I say !
3 Fish. What say you, master ?
1 Fish. Look how thou stirest now! come away, or I'll fetch thee with a vaunton.
3 Fish. 'Fath, master, I am thinking of the poor men that were cast away before us, even now.
1 Fish. Alas, poor souls, it grieved my heart to hear what pitiful cries they made to us, to help them, when, well-a-day, we could scarce help ourselves.
3 Fish. Nay, master, said not I as much, when I saw the proper, how he bounded and tumbled? they said 'twas for half a fish, half flesh; a plague on them, they never come, but I look to be washed.
Master, I marvel how the fishes live in the sea.

1 Fish. Why, as men do a land; the great ones eat up the little ones: I can compare our rich misers to nothing so fitly as to a whale: 'a plays and tumbles, driving the poor fry before him, and at last devours them all at a mouthful. Such whales have I heard on a'the land, who never leave gaping, till they've swallowed the whole parish, church, steeple, bells and all.

Per. A pretty moral.
3 Fish. But, master, if I had been the sexton, I would have been that day in the belfry.
2 Fish. Why, what then?
3 Fish. Because he should have swallowed me too:
and when I had been in his belly, I would have kept such a jangling of the bells, that he should never have left, till he cast bells, steeple, church, and parish, up again. But if the good king Simoides were of my mind——

Per. Simonides?
3 Fish. We would purge the land of these drones, that rob the bee of her honey.

Per. How from the finny subject of the sea
These fishers tell the intimacies of men;
And from their watry empire recollect
All that men approve, or men detect.—
Peace be at your labour, honest fishermen.

2 Fish. Honest, I good fellow, what's that? if it be a day fits you, stretch it out of the calendar, and no body will look after it.

Per. Nay, see, the sea hath cast upon your coast—
2 Fish. What a drakenuk wave was the sea, to cast thee in our way!
Per. An man whom both the waters and the wind,
So that vast tennis-court, hath made the ball
For them to play upon, entreats you pity him;
He asks of you, that never ns'd to beg.
1 Fish. No, friend, cannot you beg? here's them in our country of Greece, gets more with begging, than we can do with working.
2 Fish. Cannot then catch any fishes then?
Per. I never practis'd it.
2 Fish. Nay, then thou wilt starve sure; for here's nothing to do got now a-days, unless thou can't fish for't.

Per. What I have been, I have forgot to know;
But what I am, want teaches me to think on;
A man can stand up cold; my veins are chill,
And have no more of life, than may suffice
To give my tongue that heat, to ask your help;
Which if you shall refuse, when I am dead,
For I am a man, pray see me buried.
1 Fish. Die quoth-a! Now gods forbid! I have a gown here; come put it on; keep thee warm. Now, aphore me, a handsome fellow! Come, thou shalt go home, and we'll have flesh for holidays, fish for fasting-days, and more or less puddings and staggacks;
and thou shalt be welcome.
Per. I thank you, sir.
2 Fish. Hark you, my friend, you said you could not beg.
Per. I did but crave.
2 Fish. But crave! Then I'll turn crater too, and so I shall scarce whippin'.
Per. Why, are all your beggars whipped then?
2 Fish. O, not all, my friend, not all; for if all your beggars were whipped, I would wish no better office, than to be headle. But, master, I'll go draw up the net.

Per. How well this honest mirth becomes their labour!

1 Fish. Hark you, sir! do you know where you are?
Per. Not well.
1 Fish. Why, I'll tell you: this is called Pentapolis, and our king, the good Simonides.
Per. The good king Simonides, do you call him?
1 Fish. Ay, sir; and he deserves to be so called,
for his parts, his rule, and good government.
Per. He is a happy king, since from his subjects
He gains the name of good, by his government.
How far is his court distant from this shore?
1 Fish. Marry, sir, half a day's journey; and I'll tell you, he hath a fair daughter, and to-morrow is her birth-day; and there are princes and knights come from all parts of the world, to just and tourney for her love.

Per. Did but my fortunes equal my desires,
I'd wish to make one there.
1 Fish. O, sir, things must be as they may:
and what a man cannot get, he may lawfully deal for—his wife's soul.

Re-enter the Two Fishermen, drawing up a net.

2 Fish. Help, master, help: here's a fish hangs in the net, like a poor man's right in the law: 'twill hardly come out. Ia! bots on 't, 'tis come at last, and 'tis turned to a rusty armour.

Per. An armour, friends! I pray you, let me see it.
Thanks, fortune, yet, that after all my crosses,
Thou giv'st me somewhat to repair myself;
And though, it was mine own, part of mine heritage,
Which my dead father did bequeath to me,
With this strict charge, (even as he left his life,)—
Keep it, my Pericles, it hath been a shield
Twist me and death; (and pointed to this brace:)—
For that it saved me, keep it; in like necessity,
Which gods protect thee from! it may defend thee.
It kept where I kept, I so dearly lov'd it;
Till the rough seas, that spare not any man,
Took it in rage, though calm'd, they give't again:
I thank thee for't; my shipwreck's now no ill,
Since I have here my father's gift by will.

1 Fish. What mean you, sir? Per. To beg of you, kind friends, this coat of worth,
For it was sometime target to a king;
I know it by this mark. He lov'd me dearly,
And for his sake, I wish the having of it;
And that you'll guide me to your sovereign's court,
Where with 't I may appear a gentleman;
And if that ever my low fortunes better,
I'll pay your bounties; till then, rest your debtor.

PERICLES.

1. Fish. Why, wilt thou tarry for the lady?

Per. 1 'll shew the virtue I have borne in arms.

2. Fish. Why, do ye take it, and the gods give thee good on't!

2. Fish. Ay, but hark, my friend; 'twas we that made up this garment through the rough seams of the waters: there are certain condolements, certain vails.

I hope, sir, if you thrive, you'll remember from whence you had me.

Per. Behave't, I will.

Now, by your furtherance, I am cloth'd in steel;

And spite of all the rapture of the sea,

This jewel holds his biding on my arm;

Unto thy value will I mount myself

Upon a courser, whose delightful steps

Shall make the gazer joy to see them treat.

—Only, my friend, I yet am unprovided

Of a pair of bases.

2. Fish. We 'll sure provide: thou shalt have my best gown to make thee a pair; and I 'll bring thee to the court myself.

Per. Then honour be but a goal to my will;

This day I 'll rise, or else add ill to ill. [Exit.

SCENE II.—The same. A publick Way, or Platform, leading to the Lists. A Pavilion by the side of it, for the reception of the King, Princess, Lords, &c.

Enter Simonides, Thaisa, Lords, and Attendants.

Sim. Are the knights ready to begin the triumph?

1. Lord. They are, my liege;

And stay your coming to present themselves.

Sim. Return them, we are ready; and our daughter,

In honour of whose birth these triumphs are,

Sits here, like beauty's child, whom nature gat

For men to see, and seeing wonder at. [Exit a Lord.

That. It pleasest you, my father, to express

My recommendations great, whose merit's less.

Sim. 'Tis fit it should be so; for princes are

A model, which heaven makes like to itself;

As jewels lose their glory, if neglected,

So princes their renown, if not respected.

'Tis now your honour, daughter, to explain

The labour of each knight, in his device. [Form.

That. Which, to preserve mine honour, I 'll preserve

Enter a Knight; he passes over the stage, and his Squire presents his shield to the Princess.

Sim. Who is the first that doth prefer himself?

That. A knight of Sparta, my renowned father;

And the device he bears upon his shield

Is a black Ethiope, reaching at the sun;

The word, Lux tuam visa mibi.

Sim. He loves you well, that holds his life of you.

Who is the second, that presents himself?

That. A prince of Macedon, my royal father;

And the device he bears upon his shield

Is an arm'd knight, that's conquer'd by a lady:

The motto thus, in Spanish, Plur per dulcure que per facere. [The third Knight passes.

Sim. And what's the third?

That. The third of Antioch.

And his device, a wraith of chivalry:

The word, Mopsus pro vitis apex. [The fourth Knight passes.

Sim. What is the fourth?

That. A burning torch, that's turned upside down;

The word, Quæm nnd alit, me extingu. [The fifth Knight passes.

Sim. And the fifth?

That. He doth no more than other knights have done,

Broken a staff, or so; so let it pass.

Thaisa. The fifth, an hand environed with clouds;

Holding out gold, that's by the touchstone tried:

The motto thus, Sic spectabilis pars. [The sixth Knight passes.

Sim. And what's the sixth and last, which the knight himself

With such a graceful courtesy deliver'd?

Thaisa. He seems a stranger, but his present is

A winder's branch, that's only green at top;

The motto, In haec specie. Sim. A pretty moral;

From the dejected state wherein he is,

He hopes by you his fortunes yet may flourish.

1. Lord. He had need mean better than his outward

Can any way speak in his just commend:

[Shew For, by his rusty outside, he appears

To have gran'ded more the whipslock, than the lance.

2. Lord. He well may be a stranger, for he comes

To an honour'd triumph, strangely furnished.

3. Lord. And on set purpose let his armour rust

Until this day, to scour it in the dust.

Sim. Opinion's but a fool, that makes us scan

The outward habit by the inward man.

But stay, the knights are coming; we 'll withdraw

Into the gallery. [Great shouts, and all cry, The mean knight.

SCENE III.

The same. A Hall of State.—A Banquet prepared.

Enter Simonides, Thaisa, Lords, Knights, and Attendants.

Sim. Knights,

To say you are welcome, were superfluous.

To place upon the volume of your deeds,

As in a title-page, your worth in arms,

Were more than you expect, or more than 's fit,

Since every worth in show commends itself.

Prepare for mirth, for mirth becomes a feast

You are my guests.

Thaisa. But you, my knight and guest;

To whom this wreath of victory I give,

And crown you king of this day's happiness.

Per. 'Tis more by fortune, lady, than my merit.

Sim. Call it by what you will, the day is yours;

And here, I hope, is none that eavies it.

In framing artists, art hath thus decreed,

To make some good, but others to exceed,

[Feast, And you are her labour'd scholar.

Come, queen o'the (For, daughter, so you are,) here take your place:

Marshal the rest, as they deserve their grace.

Knights. We are honour'd much by good Simonides.

Sim. Your presence glads our days; honour we love,

For who hates honour, hates the gods above.

March, sir, yield's your place.

Per. Some other is more fit.

1. Knight. Contend not, sir; for we are gentlemen,

That neither in our hearts, nor outward eyes,

Envy the great, nor do the low despise.

Per. You are right courteous knights.

Sim. Sit, sit; sit. [Exit. By Jove, I wonder, that is king of thoughts,

These eates resist me, she not thought upon.

Thaisa. By Juno, that is queen

Of marriage, all the viands that I eat

Do seem unsavoury, wishing him my meat;

Sure he's a gallant gentleman.

Sim. He's but

A country gentleman;

He done no more than other knights have done,

Broken a staff, or so; so let it pass.

Thaisa. To me he seems like diamond to glass.
SIMONIDES  What is the first that doth prefer himself?

Act II. Sc. 2.
Act II.—Scene IV.

Per. You king's to me, like to my father's picture,Which tells me, in that glory once he was;Had princes sit, like stars, about his throne,And he the sun, for them to reverence.None that behold him but like knaves,Did vail their crowns to his supremacy;Where now his son's a glow-worm in the night,The which hath fire in darkness, none in light;Whereby I see that Time's the king of men,For he's their parent, and he is their grave,And gives them what he will, not what they crave.

Sim. What, are you merry, knights? —
1 Knight. Who can be other, in this royal presence?
Sim. Here, with a cup that's stord' up the brim,(As you do love, fill to your mistress' lips,)We drink this health to you.

Knights. We thank your grace.
Sim. Yet pause a while;You knight, methinks, dost sit too melancholy,As if the entertainment in our courtHad not a show might countervail his worth.Note it not you, Thaisa?

Thaisa. What is it

Sim. To me, my father?

Sim. O, attend, my daughter;Princes, in this, should live like gods above,Who freely give to every one that comesTo honour them; and princes, not doing so,Are like to gnats, which make a sound, but kill'dAre wonder'd at. Therefore to make's entrance more sweet, here say,We drink this standing-bowl of wine to him. That's, my father, it's beats not me Unto a stranger knight to be so bold; He may my proffer take for an offence,Since men take women's gifts for impedance.

Sim. How! Do as I bid you, or you'll move me else.

Thaisa. Now, by the gods, he could not please me better.

Sim. And further tell him, we desire to know,Of whose he is, his name and parentage.

Thaisa. The king my father, sir, has drunk to you.

Per. I thank him.

Thaisa. Wishing it so much blood unto your life.

Per. I thank both him and you, and pledge him freely.

Thaisa. And further he desires to know of,Of whence he are, your name and parentage.

Per. A gentleman of Tyre—(my name, Pericles;My education being in arts and arms;)—Who looking for adventures in the world,Was by the rough seas raft of ships and men,And, after shipwreck, driven upon this shore.

Thaisa. He thanks your grace; names himself Pericles,A gentleman of Tyre, who only by Misfortune of the seas has been bereftOf ships and men, and cast upon this shore.

Sim. Now by the gods, I pity his misfortune,And will awake him from his melancholy.Come, gentlemen, we sit too long on triles,And waste the time, which looks for other revels.Even in your armours, as you are address'd,Will very well become a soldiers' dance.I will not have excuse, with saving, this Lord music is too harsh for ladies' heads;Since they love men in arms, as well as beds.[The Knights dance.
So, this was well ask'd, 'twas so well perform'd.Come, sir; Here is a lady that wants breathing too:And I have often heard, you knights of Tyre Are excellent in making ladies trip; And that their measures are as excellent.

Per. In those that practise them, they are, my lord.

Sim. O, that's as much as you would be denied Of your fair courtesy.—Unclasp, unclasp; Thanks, gentlemen, to all; all have done well,But you the best. [To Pericles.] Pages and lights, conduct These knights unto their several lodgings: Yours, sir, We have given order to be kept out of your own.

Per. I am at your grace's pleasure.

Sim. Princes, it is too late to talk of love.For that's the mark I know you level at:Therefore each one betake him to his rest; To-morrow, all for speeding do their best. [Exeunt.

Scene IV.—Tyre. A Room in the Governor's House.

Enter Helicanes and Esecas.

Hel. No, no, my Esecas; know this of me,—Antiochus from incest liv'd not free;For which, the most high gods not minding longer To withhold the vengeance that they had in store,Due to this heinous capital offence.Even in the height and pride of all his glory,When he was seated, and his daughter with him,In a chariot of inestimable value,A fire from heaven came, and shirvell'd up Their bodies, even to loathing; for they so stunk,That all those eyes ador'd them ere their fall,Scorn now their hand should give them burial.

Eseca. Twas very strange.

Hel. And yet but just; for though This king were great, his greatness was no guard To bar heaven's shaft, but sin had his reward.

Eseca. 'Tis very true.

Enter Three Lords.

1 Lord. See, not a man in private conference, Or conclave, has respect with him but he.

2 Lord. It shall no longer grieve, without reproof.

3 Lord. And curs'd be he that will not second it.

1 Lord. Follow me then: Lord Helican, a word.

Hel. With me! and welcome: Happy day, my lords, And round the shore, that great and motion to the top, And now at length they overflow their banks.

Hel. Your graces, for what? wrong not the prince you love.

1 Lord. Wrong not yourself then; noble Helican; But if the prince do live, let us salute him, Or know what ground's made happy by his breath. If in the world he live, we'll seek him out; If in his grave he rest, we'll find him there; And be resolv'd, he lives to govern us, Or dead, gives cause to mourn his funeral, And leaves us to our free election. —

2 Lord. Whose death's, indeed, the strongest to our And knowing this kingdom, if without a head,(Like goddly buildings left without a roof,) Will soon to ruin fall, your noble self, That best know'st how to rule, and how to reign, We thus submit unto,—our sovereign.

All. Live, noble Helican!

Hel. Try honourable cause; forbear your suffrages:If that you love prince Pericles, forbear.Take I your wish, I leap into the seas, Where's hourly trouble, for a mante's ease.A twelvemonth longer, let me then entreat you To forbear choice 'tis the absence of your king; If in which time expir'd, he not return, I shall with aged patience bear your yoke.
PERICLES.

But if I cannot win you to this love,
Go search like noblemen, like noble subjects,
And in your search, spend your adventurous worth;
Whom if you find, and win unto return,
You shall like diamonds sit about his crown.

1 Lord. To wisdom he's a fool that will not yield,
And, since lord Helican enjoineth us,
We with our travels will endeavour it.

Hel. Then you love us, we you, and we'll clasp hands;
When poets thus knit, a kingdom ever stands. [Exit.

SCENE V.—Pentapolis. A Room in the Palace.

Enter SIMONIDES, reading a letter, the Knights meet him.

1 Knight. Good morrow to the good Simonides.

Sim. Knights, from my daughter this I let you know,
That for this twelvemonth, she'll not undertake
A married life.

Her reason to herself is only known,
Which from herself by no means can I get.

2 Knight. May we not get access to her, my lord?

Sim. Faith, by no means; she hath so strictly tied
To her chamber, that it is impossible. [her

One twelve moons more she'll wear Diana's livery;
This by the eye of Cynthia hath she vowed,
And on her virgin honour will not break it.

3 Knight. Though Jealos to bid farewell, we take our leaves. [Exit.

Sim. So

They're well despatch'd; now to my daughter's letter:
She tells me here, she'll wed the stranger knight,
Or never more to view nor day nor light.

Mistress, 'tis well, your choice agrees with mine;
I like that well.—may how absolute she's not,
Not minding whether I dislike or no!

Well, I commend her choice;
And will no longer have it be delay'd.

Soft, here he comes:—I must dissemble it.

Enter PERICLES.

Per. All fortune to the good Simonides!

Sim. To you as much, sir! I am beholden to you,
For your sweet music this last night:—my ears,
I do protest, were never better fed
With such delightful pleasing harmony.

Per. It is your grace's pleasure to command;
Not my desert.

Sim. Sir, you are music's master.

Per. I. The worst of all her scholars, my good lord,
Sim. Let me ask one thing. What do you think,
My daughter?

[sir of

Per. As of a most virtuoue princess.

Sim. And she is fair too, is she not?

Per. As a fair day in summer; wondrous fair.

Sim. My daughter, sir, thinks very well of you;
And, as well, sir, that you must be her master.
And she'll your scholar be; therefore look to it.

Per. Unworthy I to be her schoolmaster.

Sim. She thinks not so; peruse this writing clee.

Per. What's here!

A letter, that she loves the knight of Tyre?
'Tis the king's subtltly, to have my life. [Aside.

O, seek not to entrap, my gracious lord,
A stranger and distressed gentleman,
That never aim'd so high, to love your daughter,
But bent all offices to honour her.

Sim. Thou hast bewitch'd my daughter, and thou art
A villain.

Per. By the gods, I have not, sir.

Never did thought of marriage office;
Nor never did my actions yet commence
A deed might gain her love, or your displeasure.

Sim. Traitor, thou liest.

Per. Traitor!

Sim. Ay, traitor, sir.

Per. Even in his throat, (unless it be the king,) That calls me traitor, I return the lie.

Sim. Now, by the gods, I do applaud his courage.

[Aside.

Per. My actions are as noble as my thoughts,
That never relish'd of a base descent.
I came unto your court, for honour's cause,
And not to be a rebel to her state;
And he that otherwise accounts of me,
This sword shall prove, he's honour's enemy.

Sim. No!—Here comes my daughter, she can witness it.

Enter THaisa.

Per. Then, as you are as virtuous as fair,
Resolve your angry father, if my tongue
Did e'er solicit, or my hand subscribe
To any syllable that made love to you?

Thais. Why, sir, say if you had,
Who takes offence at that would make me glad?

Sim. Yea, mistress, are you so peremptory?
I am glad of it with all my heart. [Aside. I'll tame
You; will you, not having my consent, bestow
Your love and your affections on a stranger?
(Who, for aught I know to the contrary,
Or think, may be as great in blood as I.) [Aside
Hear therefore, mistress; frame your will to mine,—
And you, sir, hear you.—Either be ruled by me,
Or I will make you—man and wife.

Nay, come; your hands and lips must seal it too,—
And being join'd, I'll thus your hopes destroy;—
And for a further grief,—God give you joy!

What, are you both pleas'd?

Thais. Yes, if you love me, sir.

Per. Even as my life, my blood that fosters it.

Sim. What, are you both agreed?

Both. Yes, 'tis your majesty.
Sim. It pleaseth me so well, I'll see you wed;
Then, with what haste you can, get you to bed. [Ex.

ACT III.*

Enter GOWN.

Gown. Now sleep yslakled hath the root:
No dim but snores, the house about,
Made louder by the o'er-fed breast
Of this most pompous marriage feast.
The cat, with eye of burning coal,
Now coaxes 'fore the mouse's hole;
And crickets sing at th' oven's mouth,
As the blither for their draught.
Hymen hath brought the bride to bed.
Where, by the loss of man's head,
A bale is moulde'd;—Be attent,
And time that is so brieffly spen,
With your fine fancy's quaintly eche;
What's dumb in show, I'll plain with speech.

Dumb Show.

Enter PERICLES and SIMONIDES at one door, with Attendants; A Messenger meets them, kneels, and gives PERICLES a letter. PERICLES shews it to SIMONIDES; the Lords kneel to the former. Then enter THaisa with child, and LEONCIDA. SIMONIDES shews his daughter the letter; she rejoices: she and PERICLES take leave of her father, and depart. Then SIMONIDES, &c, retire.
Act III.—Scene II.

Grec. By many a dear and painful perch, Of Penelop the careful search
By the four opposing coigns, Which the world together joins, In one, within the dead That horse, and sail, and high expense, Can stead the quest. At last from Tyre (Fame answering the most strong inquire,) To the court of king Simonides Are letters brought; the tenour these: Antiochus and his daughter's dead; The men of Tyre, their head Of Helicanus would set on The crown of Tyre, but he will none; The mutiny there he hastens t'appease; Says to them, if king Penelop Come not, in twice six moons, home, He obdient to their doom Will take the crown. The sum of this, Brought hither to Pentapolis, X-ravished the region round, And every one with claps, 'gan sound, Their heir apparent is a king: Who dream'd, who thought of such a thing? Brief, he must hence depart to Tyre: His queen with child makes her desire (Which who shall cross 1) along to go; (Omit we all their dole and woe;) Lychorida, her nurse, she takes, And so to sea. Their vessel shakes On Neptune's billow; half the flood Hath their keel cut; but fortunes mood Varies again; the grizzled north Disgorges such a tempest forth, That, as a duck for life that dives, So up and down the poor ship drives, The lady shrieks, and, well-a-near! Both fall in travail with her fear; And what execises in this foul storm, Shall, for itself, itself perform. I will relate, action may Conveniently the rest convey: Which might not what by me is told In your imagination hold This stage, the ship, upon whose deck The sea- lost prince appears to speak. [Exit.

Scene I.

Enter Penelops, on a ship at sea.

Per. Thou God of this great vast, rebuke these surges, Which wash both heaven and hell; and thou, that hast Upon the winds command, bind them in brass, Having call'd them from the deep! O still thy deading, Thy dreadful thunders; gently quench thy nimble, Sulphurous flames!—0 how, Lychorida, How does my queen?—Thou storm, thou! venemously Wilt thou spit all thyself?—The seaman's whistle Is as a whisper in the ears of death, Unheard.—Lychorida,—Lucina, O Divine patroness, and midwife, gentle To those that cry by night, convey thy deity Aboard our dancing boat; make swift the pangs Of my queen's travels!—Now, Lychorida— [Exit Lychorida, with an infant.

Lyce. Here is a thing Too young for such a place, who, if it had Conceit, would die as I am like to do. Take in your arms this piece of your dead queen. Per. How! how, Lychorida! Lyce. Patience, good sir; do not assist the storm. Here's all that is left living of your queen,—

A little daughter; for the sake of it, Be madly, and take comfort.

Per. O you gods! Why do you make us love your godly gifts, And snatch them straight away? We, here below, Recall not what we give, and therein may Vie honour with yourselves. Lyce. Patience, good sir, Even for this charge. Per. Now, mild may be thy life! For a more blustering birth had never babe: Quiet and gentle thy child be! For thou'rt the rudest welcom'd to this world, That e'er was prince's child. Happy what follows! Thou hast now chiding a nativity, As fire, air, water, earth, and heaven can make, To herald thee from the womb: even at the first, Thy loss is more than can thy portage quit, With all thou canst find here.—Now the good gods Throw their best eyes upon it!

Enter Two Sailors.

1 Sail. What courage, sir? God save you. Per. Courage enough: I do not fear the flaw; It hath done to me the worst. Yet, for the love Of this poor infant, this fresh-new sea-farer, I would it would be quiet.

1 Sail. Slack the holens there; thou wilt not, wilt thou? Bid her, and split thyself.

2 Sail. But sea-room, an thee be brave and cloudy bellow kiss the moon, I care not.

1 Sail. Sir, thy queen must overboard; the sea works high, the wind is loud, and will not lie till the ship be cleared of the dead. Per. That's your superstition.

2 Sail. Pardon us, sir; with us at sea it still hath been observed; and we are strong in earnest. Therefore briefly yield her; for she must overboard straight. Per. Be it as you think meet.—Most wretched Lyce. Here she lies, sir. [Queen! Per. A terrible child-bed last thou had, my dear; No light, no fire: the unfriendly elements Forgot thee utterly; nor have I time To give thee hallow'd to thy grave, but straight Must cast thee, scarcely coffin'd, in the oze; Where, for a monument upon thy bones, And aye-remaining lamps, the belching whale And humming water must overhelm thy corpse, Lying with simple shells. Lychorida, Bid Nikander make up quires, ink and paper, My casket and my jewels; and bid Nicander Bring me the satin coffer: lay the babe Upon the pillow: bide thee, whiles I say A priestly farewell to her: suddenly, woman.

2 Sail. Sir, we have a chest beneath the hatchets, caulk'd and bitum'd ready.

Per. I thank thee. Mariner, say what coast is this?

2 Sail. We are near Tharsus. Per. Thither, gentle mariner, Alter thy course for Tyre. When can'st thou reach it? 2 Sail. By break of day, if the wind cease. Per. O make for Tharsus. There will I visit Cleon, for the babe Cannot hold out to Tyre: there I'll leave it At careful nursing. Go thy ways, good mariner; I'll bring the body presently. [Exit.

Scene II.—Ephesus. A Room in Cerimons House.

Enter Cerimon, a Servant, and some persons who have been shipwrecked.

Cer. Philemon, ho!
PERICLES.

Enter Philæmon.

Phæ. Dosth'my lord call?

Cer. Get fire and meat for these poor men:
It has been a turbulent and stormy night.
Serv. I have been in many; but such a night as this,
Till now, I 'er endur'd.

Cer. Your master will be dead ere you return.
That's nothing can be minister'd to nature.
That can recover him. Give this to the poet, etc.,
And tell me how it works. {To Philæmon.

[Exit Philæmon, Servant, and those who had been shipwrecked.

Enter Two Gentlemen.

1 Gent. Good morrow, sir.

2 Gent. Good morrow to your lordship.

Cer. Why do you stir so early?

1 Gent. Sir, Our lodgings, standing bleak upon the sea,
Shook, as the earth did quake;
The very principals did seem to read,
And all to topple; pure surprise and fear
Made me to quit the house.

2 Gent. That is the cause we trouble you so early;
'Tis not our husbandry.

Cer. O, you say well.

1 Gent. But I much marvel that your lordship, hav-
Rich tire about you, should at these early hours [ing
Shake off the golden slumber of repose.
It is most strange, a thing so conversant with pain,
Being thereto not compell'd.

Cer. I held it ever,
Virtue and cunning were endowments greater
Than nobleness and riches: careless heirs
May the two latter darken and expend;
But immortality attends the former,
Making a man a god. 'Tis known, I ever
Have studied physic, through which secret art,
By turning o'er authorities, I have
Together with my practice, made familiar
To me and to my aid, the blest infusions
That dwell in vegetives, in metals, stones;
And I can speak of the 'pothecary's
That nature works, and of her cures; which gives me
A more content in course of true delight
Than to be thirsty after tottering honour,
Or tie my treasure up in silken bags,
To please the fool and death.

2 Gent. Your honour has through Ephæus pour'd
Your charity, and hundreds call themselves [forth
Your creatures, who by you have been restor'd:
And not your knowledge, personal pain, but even
Your purse, still open, hath built lord Cerimon
Such strong renown as time shall never—

[Exit Two Servants with a chest.

Serv. So; lift there.

Cer. What is that?

Serv. Sir, even now
Did the sea toss upon our shore this chest;
'Tis of some wreck.

Cer. Set down, let's look on it.

2 Gent. 'Tis like a coffin, sir.

Cer. Whate'er it be,
'Tis wondrous heavy. Wrench it open straight;
If the sea's stomach be o'ercharg'd with gold,
It is a good constraint of fortune, that
It belches upon us.

2 Gent. 'Tis so, my lord.

Cer. How close 'tis caulk'd and bitum'd!—

Did the sea cast it up?

Serv. I never saw so huge a billow, sir,
As toss'd it upon shore.

Cer. Come, wrench it open;
Soft, soft!—it smells most sweetly in my sense.

2 Gent. A delicate odour.

Cer. As ever hit my nostril; so,—up with it.
O you most potent gods! What's here! a corse!

1 Gent. Most strange!

Cer. Shrouded in cloth of state; balm'd and an-

With bags of spices full! A passport too! [treaSure'd
Apollo, perfect me 't the characters! {Unfolds a scroll.

Here I give to understand,
(If e'er this coffin drive a land,)—

1, king Pericles, have lost
This queen, worth all our mundane cost.

Who finds her, give her burying,
She was the daughter of a king;
Besides this treasure for a fee,
The gods requite his charity!

If thou livest, Pericles, thou hast a heart
That even cracks for woe!—This chand'c'd to-night.

2 Gent. Most likely, sir.

Cer. Nay, certainly to-night.

For look, how fresh she looks!—They were too rough,
That threw her in the sea. Make fire within;
Fetch both all the boxes in my closet.

Death may usurp on nature many hours,
And yet the fire of life kindle again
The overpressed spirits. I have heard
Of an Egyptian, had nine hours lien dead.
By good appliance was recovered.

Enter a Servant, with boxes, napkins, and fire.

Well said, well said; the fire and the cloths.—
The rough and woful music that we have,
Cause it to sound, 'tisseeze ye.
The vial once more.—How thou stir'st, thou block!

The music there.—I pray you, give her air:—

Gentlemen,

This queen will live: nature awakes; a warmth
Breathes out of her; she hath not been entranc'd
Above five hours. See, how she 'gins to blow
Into life's flower again!

The heavens, sir, Through you, increase our wonder, and set up
Your fame for ever.

Cer. She is alive; behold,
Her eyelids, cases to those heavenly jewels
Which Pericles hath lost,
Begin to part their fringes of bright gold;
The diamonds of a most praised water
Appear, to make the world twice rich. O live,
And make us weep to hear your fate, fair creature,
Rare as you seem to be!

She moves.

That. O dear Diana,
Where am I? Where's my lord? What world is this?

2 Gent. Is not this strange?

1 Gent. Most rare.

Cer. Hush, gentle neighbours; lend me your hands: to the next chamber bear her.
Get linen; now this matter must be look'd to,
For her relapse is mortal. Come, come, come;
And Asculapius guide us!

SCENE III.—Thaisa. A Room in Cleon's House.

Enter Pericles, Cleon, Dionyzus, Lychorida, and Marina.

Per. Most honour'd Cleon, I must needs be gone;
My twelve months are expir'd, and Tytus stands
ACT IV.—SCENE 1.

In a litigious peace. You, and your lady, Take from my heart all thankfulness! The gods Make up the rest upon you!

Cle. Your shafts of Fortune, though they hurt you Yet glance full wand'ringly on us. [mortal, Dion. O your sweet queen!

That the strict fates had pleas'd you had brought her To have bless'd mine eyes! \[bitter, Per.

We cannot but obey The powers above us. Could I rage and roar As doth the sea she lies in, yet the end Must be as 'tis. My babe Marina (whom For she was born at sea, I have nam'd so,) here I charge your charity vital, and leave her The infant of your care; beseeching you To give her princely training, that she may be Manner'd as she is born.

Cle. Fear not, my lord: Your grace, that fed my country with your corn, (For which the people's prayers still fall upon you,) Must in your child be thought on. If neglect Should herein make me vie, the common body, By you reliev'd, would force me to my duty: But if to that my nature need a spur, The gods revenge it upon me and mine, To the end of generation!

Per. I believe you; Your honour and your goodness teach me credit, Without your row. Till she be married, madam, By bright Diana, whom we honour all, Unceas'd shall this hair of mine remain, Though I shew will in't. So I take my leave. Good madam, make me blessed in your care In bringing up my child.

Dion. I have one myself, Who shall not be more dear to my respect, Than yours, my lord.

Per. Madam, my thanks and prayers.

Cle. We'll bring your grace even to the edge o' the shore Then give you up to the mask'd Neptune, And the gentlest winds o' heaven. I will embrace Your offer. Come, dearest madam.—O, no tears, Lychorida, no tears: Look to your little mistress, on whose grace You may depend hereafter.—Come, my lord. [Exeunt.

SCENE IV.

Ephesus.—A Room in Cerimon's House.

Enter Cerimon and Thisba.

Cer. Madam, this letter, and some certain jewels, Lay with you in your coffer: which are now At your command. Know you the character! That. It is my lord's.

That. It was shipp'd at sea, I well remember, Even on my eating time: but whether there Delivered or no, by the holy gods, I cannot rightly say: But since king Pericles, My wedded lord, I ne'er shall see again, A vestal livery will I take me to, And never more have joy.

Cer. Madam, if this you purpose as you speak, Diana's temple is not distant far, Where you may 'bide until your date expire. Moreover, if you please, a niece of mine Shall there attend you.

That. My recompense is thanks, that's all; Yet my good will is great, though the gift small. [Exeunt.

ACT IV.

Enter Gower.

Gow. Imagine Pericles at Tyre, Welcom'd to his own desire. His woeful queen leave at Ephesus, To Dian there a votaries. Now to Marina bend your wark, Whom our fast growing scene must find At Tharsus, and by Cleon train'd In music, letters; who hath gain'd Of education all the grace, Which makes her both the heart and place Of general wonder. But slack! That monster envy, of the wrack Of earned praise, Marina's life Seeks to take off by treason's knife. And in this kind hath our Cleon One daughter, and a wench full grown, Even ripe for marriage fight; this maid Hight Philotet; and it is said For certain in our story, which Would ever with Marina be: Be't when she wear'd the sleided silk With fingers, long, small, white as milk; Or when she would with sharp needl wound The cambric, which she made more sound By hurting it; or when to the late She sung, and made the night-bird mute, That still records with moon; or when She would with rich and constant pen Vail to her mistress Dian; still This Philotet contends in skill With absolute Marina: so With the dove of Paphos might the crow Vie feathers white, Marina rots All praises, which are paid as debts, And not as given. This so darks In Philotet all graceful marks, That Cleon's wife, with envy rare, A present murderer does prepare For good Marina, that her daughter Might stand peerless by this slaughter. The sooner her vile thoughts to stead, Lychorida, our nurse, is dead: And cursed Dionyza hath The pregnant instrument of wrath Prest for this blow. The unborn event I do commend to your content: Only I carry winged time Post on the same feet of my rhyme; Which never could I so convey, Unless your thoughts went on my way.— Dionyza doth appear, With Leonine, a murderer. [Exit.

SCENE I.

Tharsus.—An open Place, near the Sea-shore.

Enter Dionyza and Leonine.

Dion. Thy oath remember; thou hast sworn to do it. 'Tis but a blow, which never shall be known. Thou canst not do a thing in the world so soon, To yield thee so much profit. Let not conscience, Which is but cold, inflame love in thy bosom, Inflame too nicely; nor let pity, which Even women have cast off, melt thee, but be A soldier to thy purpose.

Leon. I'll do't; but yet she is a goodly creature.

Dion. The fitter then the gods should have her. Here weeping she comes for her old nurse's death. Thou art resolv'd?

Leon. I am resolv'd.
Fare MARINA need a banket of flowers.

Min. No, no, I will and Feliicia of her need.

To draw the green with flowers, the savory leaves.

The purple vertuets, and magnificent.

Said as a chantey, hang upon your grace.

While summer days end last, on the poor maid.

Weat in a tempert, when my wether died.

This would be to use a lasting storm.

Wherein me from my friends.

Some how now Marina, why do you keep alone.

How chance my daughter is not join you! Do not

Consume your blood with sorrowing you have

A nurse of mine. I will how your is it a champ?

With this unprejudic'd eye. Come, come.

Give me your wreath of flowers, are the sea wet it.

With both with Locust the airs in a quare.

Feeling, and sharpen well the statues. Come.

Leantake her by the arm, walk with her.

Min. No, I pray you.

I must beare you of your servant.

Dyu. Come, come.

I love the king your father, and yourself.

With more than foreign heart. We every day

Expect him here, when he shall come, and find

Our praises to all reports, thus blasted.

Who is the friend of your own fortune?

Blame both my head and me, that we have on

No care to your best courses. Go, I pray you,

Walk and be cheerful once again, we're

That excellent complexion, which did recall

The eyes of young and old. Care not the me,

I can go home alone.

Dyu. Well, I will go.

But yet I have no desire to it.

Dyu. Come, come, I know it's good for you.

Walk'd an hour, became, at the least.

Remember what I have said.

Lom. I warrant you, madam.

Dyu. I'll leave you, my sweet lady, for a while.

Pray you walk softly, do not heat your blood.

When I have not a care of you.

Min. Thanks, sweet madam. [Exit Dyu.

Is this wind, weary that blows?

Lom. South-west.

Min. When I was born, the wind was north.

Lom. Was it so?

Min. My father, as then said, did, never fear.

But said, good manner to the sailors, guiding.

He doe not; things are turning of the ship.

And, charging to the mast, embard'd a sea.

That ais that first the foot, and from the shudder tackle

Was'd out a cannon-chamber. He says one,

Walt! and, with a cropping industry,

They stop from stem stern, the boats win whistles.

The master cries, and trebles their confession.

Lom. And when was that?

Min. It was when I was born:

Never was weare nor wind more violent.

Lom. Come, say your prayers specially.

Min. What mean you?

Lom. If you require a little space for prayer,

I grant it: Pray: but be not tedious.

For the gods are quick of ear, and I am sworn

To make my work with haste.

Min. Why will you kill me?

Lom. To satisfy my lady.

Min. Why should she have me kill'd?

Now, as I can remember, by my truth,

I never did her hurt in all my life;

I never spake bad word, nor did ill turn

To any living creature, believe me, ta,

I never kill'd a mouse, nor hurt a wye.

I heed upon a white aground my will.

But I might say, I know not, if he did.

Wherein my doubt might work her proue, or

My wife's, or her danger?

Lom. My commissaries

Is not of reason of the deed, but do it.

Min. You, I am not due for all the word, I hope.

You are well know in; and your books to which

You have a great heart. I saw your late;

Wherein you spoke of a man's pluming's, that would:

Good saying, it seem'd well in you. Do so now.

Your lady seeks me; come you between,

And save your own, the weaker.

Lom. I am won't.

And was despare'd.

Faremara. This MARINA is slingling.

1 Prov. Hold, hold, viewer. [Exeunt both. A peer, a peer!]

2 Prov. Her parts, mar's, half part. Come let's have her aboard suddenly. [Exeunt. Fare MARINA and Lom.]

SCENE IV.—The same.

Re-enter LOMIN.

Lom. Those moving stones save not the great prince.

And they have sent MARINA. Let me go: [Vails;

The anchor, sail, she is gone. I swear she is dead.

And knowledge the sea—But, I'll see farther.

Perhaps they will put me myself unless here.

Not carry her aboard. If she remain,

When they have ravish'd, must by me be slain. [Exit.

SCENE III.—Marylowe. A Room in a House.

Enter. Pandar, Reed, and Hooper.

Pand. Brefl.

Reed. Sir.

Pand. Search the market narrowly. Marylowe is full

Of gallants. We lost too much money this mart, by Being too wretched.

Ried. We were never so much out of creatures.

We have but poor store, and they can do more than they can do; and with continual action are even as good as new.

Pand. Therefore let's have fresh ones, whatever we Pay for them. If there be not a conscience to be us'd in Every mart, we'll never regiment; we never</ref>

Bawd. As well as we! ay, and better too; we offend worse. Neither is our profession any trade; it's no calling—but here comes Boult.

Enter the Pirates and Boult, dragging in Marina. Boult. Come your ways. [To Marina.]—My masters, you say she's a virgin?

Pir. O, sir, we doubt it not.

Boult. Master, I have gone thorough for this piece, you see: if you like her so; if not, I have lost my earnest.

Boult. Boult, has she any qualities?

Boult. She has a good face, speaks well, and has excellent good clothes; there's no further necessity of qualities can make her be refused.

Boult. What's her price, Boult? [pieces.] Boult. I cannot be hated one doot of a thousand Boult. Well, follow me, my masters; you shall have your money presently. Wife, take her in; instruct her what she has to do, that she may not be raw in her entertainment. [Exit Pander and Pirates.

Boult. Boult, take you the marks of her; the colour of her hair, complexion, height, age, with want of her virginity: and cry, He or she that gives most, shall have her. Such a match would have been no cheap thing, if men were as they have been. Get this done as I command you.

Boult. Performance shall follow. [Exit Boult.

Mar. Ahick, that Leonine was so slack, so slow! (He should have struck, not spoken;) or these

(Not enough barbarous,) had not been bound [pirates, Thrown out to seek my mother!]

Boult. Why lament you, pretty one?

Mar. That I am pretty.

Boult. Come, the gods have done their part in you.

Mar. I accuse them not.

Boult. You are lit into my hands, where you are like to live.

Mar. The more my fault,

To 'scape his hands, where I was like to die.

Boult. Ay, and you shall live in pleasure.

Mar. No.

Boult. Yes, indeed, shall you, and taste gentlemen of all fashions. You shall fare well; you shall have the difference of all complexions. What do you stop your ears at?

Mar. Are you a woman?

Boult. What would you have me be, an I be not a man. An honest woman, or not a woman.

Boult. Marry, whip thee, gosling: I think I shall have something to do with you. Come, you are a young foolish sapling, and must be bowed as I would have you.

Mar. The gods defend me!

Boult. If it please the gods to defend you by men, then men must comfort you; men must feed you; men must stir you up.—Boult's returned.

Enter Boult.

Now, sir, hast thou ciered her through the market?

Boult. I have ciered her almost to the number of her hairs; I have drawn her picture with my voice. And I pr'ythee tell me, how dost thou find the inclination of the people, especially of the younger sort? Boult. 'Faith, they listened to me, as they would have hearkened to their father's testament. There was a Spaniard's mouth so watered, that he went to bed to her very description.

Boult. We shall have him here to-morrow with his best ruff on.

Boult. To-night, to-night. But, mistress, do you know the French knight that covers i'the hams?

Boult. Who? monsieur Veroleis?

Boult. Ay; he offered to cut a caper at the proclamation; but he made a groan at it, and swore he would see her to-morrow.

Boult. As for him, he brought his disease hither: here he does but repair it. I know, he will come in our shadow, to scatter his crowns in the sun.

Boult. Well, if we had of every nation a traveller, we shall lodge them with this sign.

Boult. Pray you, come hither awhile. You have fortunes coming upon you. Mark me; you must shave thee falsely, which you commit willingly; to despise profit, where you have most gain. To weep that you live as you do, makes pity in your lovers: Seldom, but that pity begets you a good opinion, and that opinion a mere profit.

Mar. I understand you not.

Boult. O, take her home, mistress, take her home. Their blushes of hers must be quenched with some present practice.

Boult. Thou say'st true, i'faith, so they must: for your bride goes to that with shame, which is her way to go with warrant.

Boult. 'Faith, some do, and some do not. But, mistress, if I have bargain'd for the joint,— Boult. Thou mayst cut a morall off the spit.

Boult. I may so.

Boult. Who should deny it? Come, young one, I like the manner of your garments well.

Boult. Ay, by my faith, they shall not be changed yet. Boult. Boult, spend thou that in the town, report what a sojourner we have: you'll lose nothing by custom. What's nature framed this piece, she meant thee a good turn; therefore say what a paragon she is, and thou hast the harvest out of thine own report.

Boult. I warrant you, mistress, thunder shall not so awake the beds of eels, as my giving out her beauty stir up the lewdly inclined. I'll bring home some to-night.

Boult. Come your ways; follow me.

Mar. If fires be hot, knives sharp, or waters deep, United still my virgin knot will keep, Diana, aid my purpose!

Boult. What have we to do with Diana? Pray you, will you go with us?

[Exeunt.

SCENE IV.—Tharsus. A Room in Cleon's House.

Enter Cleon and Dionyza.

Dion. Why, are you foolish? Can it be undone?

Cle. O Dionyza, such a piece of slaughter

The sun and moon ne'er look'd upon!

Dion. I think

You'll turn a child again.

Cle. Were I chief lord of all the spacious world, I'd give it to undo the deed. O lady,

Much less in blood than virtue, yet a princess

To equal any single crown o'the earth,

The justice of compare! O villain Leonine,

Whom thou hast poison'd too!

If thou hadst drunk to him, it had been a kindness

Becoming well thy feat: what canst thou say,

When noble Pericles shall demand his child?

Dion. That she is dead. Nurses are not the fates,

To foster it, nor ever to preserve.

She died by night; I'll say so. Who can cross it?

Unless you play the impious innocent,

And for an honest attribute, ery out,

She died by foul play.

Cle. O, go to. Well, well,

Of all the faults beneath the heavens, the gods

Do like this worst.

Dion. Be one of those, that think

The prettiest wrens of Tharsus will try hence,
And open this to Pericles. I do shew him To think of what a noble strain you are, And of how cow'd a spirit.
Cle. To such proceeding
Who ever but his approbation added, Though not his pre- consent, he did not flow From honourable courses.
Dion. Be it so then: Yet none does know, but you, how she came dead, Nor none can know, Leonine being gone. She did dislay my child, and stood between Her and her fortunes: None would look on her, But east their gazes on Marina's face; Whilst ours was blurted at, and held a malkin, Not worth the time of day. It pierced me thorough; And though you call my course unnatural, You not your child well loving, yet I find, It grieves me, as an enterpize of kindness, Perform'd to your sole daughter.
Cle. Heavens forgive it!
Dion. And as for Pericles, What should he say? We wept after her hearse, And even yet we mon'm: her monument Is almost finish'd, and her epitaphs In glittering golden characters express A general praise to her, and care in us At whose expense 'tis done.
Cle. Then art like the harpy, Which, to betray, doth wear an angel's face. Seize with an eagle's talons.
Dion. You are like one, that superstition Doth swear to the gods, that winter kills the flies; But yet I know you'll do as I advise. [Exit.

Enter GOWER, before the monument of Marina at Tharsus.

Gow. Thus time we waste, and longest leagues make short; Sail seas in cockles, have, and wish but for't; Making, (to take your imagination,) From bourn to bourn, region to region. By us being pardoned, we commit an crime To use one language, in each several clime, Where our scenes seem to live. I do beseech you, To learn of me, who stand 't the gaps, to teach you The stages of our story. Pericles Is now again thwarting the wayward seas, (Attended on by many a lord and knight,) To see his daughter, all his life's delight, Old Escanes, whom Helicanus late Advanc'd in time to great and high estate, Is left to govern. Bear you it in mind, Old Helicanus goes along behind. [brought Well-sailing ships, and bounteous winds have This king to Tharsus, (think his pilot thought;) So with his steerage shall your thoughts grow on,) To fetch his daughter home, who first is gone, Like mates and shadows see them move awhile; Your ears unto your eyes I'll reconcile.

Dumb show.

Enter at one door, Pericles with his Train: Cleon and Dionyza, at the other. Cleon shows Pericles the tomb of Marina; whereof Pericles makes lamentation, puts on sackcloth, and in a mighty passion departs. Then Cleon and Dionyza retire.

Gow. See how belief may suffer by foul show! This borrow'd passion stands for true old woe; And Pericles, in sorrow all devour'd, "show'd, With sighs shot through, and biggest tears o'er Leaves Tharsus, and again embarks. He swears Never to wash his face, nor cut his hairs;

He puts on sackcloth, and to sea. He bears A tempest, which his mortal vessel tears, And yet he rides it out. Now please you writ The epitaph is for Marina writ By wicked Diony.
ACT IV.—SCENE VI.

Lys. Well; call forth, call forth.
Boult. For flesh and blood, sir, white and red, you shall see a rose; and she were a rose indeed, if she had but—

Lys. What, pr'ythee?
Boult. O, sir, I can be modest.
Lys. That dignifies the renown of a bawd, no less than it gives a good report to a number to be chaste.

Enter Marina.

Bawd. Here comes that which grows to the stalk;—never plucked yet, I can assure you. Is she not fair creature?
Lys. 'Fairly, she would serve after a long voyage at sea. Well, there's for you;—leave us.
Boult. I beseech your honour, give me leave: a word, and I'll have done presently.

Lys. I beseech you, do.
Bawd. First, I would have you note, this is an honourable man. [To Marina, whom she takes aside.
Lys. I desire to find him so, that I may worthily note him.

Bawd. Next, he's the governor of this country, and a man whom I am bound to.

Mar. If he govern the country, you are bound to him indeed, but how honourable he is in that, I know not.

Bawd. Pray you, without any more virginal fencing, will you use him kindly? He will live your apron with gold.

Lys. What he will do graciously, I will thankfully

Lys. Have you done? [receive.

Bawd. My lord, she's not paced yet; you must take some pains to work her to your manage. Come, we will leave his honour and her togetherness.

[Exit Bawd, Pandar, and Boult.

Lys. Go thy ways. Now, pretty one, how long have you been at this trade?

Mar. What trade, sir?
Lys. What I cannot name but I shall offend.
Mar. I cannot be offended with my trade. Please you, then, to come.
Lys. How long have you been of this profession?
Mar. Ever since I can remember.

Lys. Did you go to it so young? Were you a gastarner at five, or at seven?
Mar. Earlier too, sir, if now I be one.

Lys. Why, the house you dwell in, proclaims you to be a creature of sale.
Mar. Do you know this house to be a place of such resort, and will come into it? I hear say, you are of honourable parts, and are the governor of this place.
Lys. Why, hath your principal made known unto you who I am?

Mar. Who is my principal?

Lys. Why, your herb-woman; she that sets seeds and roots of shame and iniquity. O, you have heard something of my power, and so stand aloof for more serious woeing. But I protest to thee, pretty one, my authority shall not see thee, or else, look friendly upon thee. Come, bring me to some private place.
Come, come.

Mar. Since you were born to honour, shew it now; If put upon you, make the judgement good
That thought you worthy of it.

Lys. How's this? how's this?—Some more;—be
Mar. For me, [sage.
That am a maid, though most ungenteel fortune
Hath plac'd me here within this leathsome stile,
We, since I came, diseases have been said
Deasier than physic,—O that the good gods
Would set me free from this unhallow'd place,

Though they did change me to the meanest bird
That flies i' the purer air!

Lys. I did not think
Thou could'st have spoke so well; oe'er dream'd thou
Had I brought hither a corrupted mind, [could'st.
The Thy speech had alter'd it. Hold, here's gold for thee:
Perverse still in that clear way thou goest,
And the gods strengthen thee?

Mar. The gods preserve you!

Lys. For me, be you thoughten
That I came with no ill intent: for to me
The very doors and windows savour vilely
Farewell. Thou art a piece of virtue, and
I doubt not but thy training hath been noble.—
Hold; here's more gold for thee,—
A curse upon him, d' he lie a thief,
That robs thee of thy goodness! If thou hear'st from
It shall be for thy good.

As Lys. is putting up his purse, Boult enters.

Boult. I beseech your honour, one piece for me.

Lys. Away with this damned door-keeper! Your
But for this virgin that doth profane it, [house,
Would sink, and overwhelm you all. Away!

[Exit Lysimachus.

Boult. How's this? We must take another course with you. If your poesy chaste, which is not worth a breakfast in the cheapest country under the Dope, shall undo a whole household, let me be gelded like a spaniel. Come your ways.

Mar. Whither would you have me?

Boult. I must have your maidenhead taken off, or the common hangman shall execute it. Come your way.
We 'll have no more gentlemen driven away,
Come your ways, I say.

Re-enter Bawd.

Bawd. How now! What's the matter?

Boult. Worse and worse, mistress; She has here spoken holy words to the lord Lysimachus.
Bawd. O abominable!

Boult. She makes our profession as it were to stink afore the face of the gods.
Boult. Marry, hang her up for ever!

Boult. The nobleman would have dealt with her like a nobleman, and she sent him away as cold as a snowball; saying his prayers too.

Bawd. Boult, take her away; use her at thy pleasure, crack the glass of her virginity, and make the rest malleable.

Boult. An if she was a thorow piece of ground than she is, she shall be ploughed.

Mar. Hark, hark, you gods!
Bawd. She conjures: away with her. Would she had never come within my doors! Marry hang you! She's born to undo us. Will you not go the way of women-kind? Marry come up, my dish of chaste with rosemary and bays!

[Exit Bawd.
Boult. Come, mistress; come your way with me.
Mar. Whither would you have me?
Boult. To take from you the jewel you hold so dear.

Mar. Pr'ythee, tell me one thing first.
Boult. Come now, your one thing.

Mar. What causeth thou wish these enemies to be?

Boult. Why, I could wish him to be my master, or rather, my mistress.

Mar. Neither of these are yet so bad as thou art,
Since they do better thee in their command.

Boult. Thou hold'st a place, for which the painted st fied
Of hell would not in reputation change:
Thou 'rt the damm'd door-keeper to every coxcomb
That hithe comes inquiring for his tib:
To the choleric listing of each rogue thy ear.
PERICLES.

ACT IV.

scene iv.

Verona.

Enter Gentlemen.

Gentlemen,

Enter two Gentlemen.

Enter two Gentlemen.

Enter two Sails, one belonging to the Tyrian vessel, the other to the Venetian galleys.

Tyre. Sir, where's the word Heiscamek! he can rejoice you.

To the Sailer of Miletus.

O hear him —

Sir, there's a word got off from Miletus,

And in it is a letter from the governor,

Who he bade some aboard. What is your word?

The he bade box. Call my some gentlemen.

To Sir. No, gentleman, my soul coal.

Enter Two Gentlemen.

Gentlemen,

There is some a word would come aboard. I pray

To greet them in the

The Gentlemen come by the Two Sails as before,

And goes on board the Tyrian.

Enter two Sails, Vassallers and Lords, the Tyrian Gentlemen, and the Two Sailors.

Two Sailors.

Sir. Sir.

This is the man that can, in a night, you would,

Rescue you.

Joy, less, nor render so The gods preserve you.

Yes, and you sir, to out until the age I am.

And she as I would be.

You wish me well.

Being on shore, honouring of Neptune's image. Seeing the good vessel ride before us,

I made test, to dream of which you are.

The first, see, what is your place?

This is a gentleman of this place, you hear.

Sir.

O come, you are of Tyre, in the king:

A man, who for the three months hath not spoken to any one, that takes sustenance,

But to prognostic gone.

I, too, what ground is his temperament to

Sir. Sir, it would be too tedious to repeat

The main grief of all springs from the loss

Of a beloved daughter and a wife.

May we not see him, than?

Yes, you may indeed, sir.

Blessed, is your sight: he will not speak to any.

Yes, Yet, let his obtain my wish.

I, behind him. (To PERICLES) I have a promise that was a good purpose.

Till the daughter, that, one mortal night,

Drove her to the king. Agi. Sir. King, and hail! the gods preserve you! My son, sir! (To Pericles.)

Yes, it is in vain he will not speak to you.

Long, Sir, we have seen in Miletus, I trust, wages.

Would win some words of him.

Yes, we entreated.

She, for she has none, with her sweet voice.

And other chosenfavours, would allure.

And make a battery through his deafest yet pass.

What now are midnight stopp'd?

She all as happy as of a, the fairest.

Is, with her fellow maidens, now within.

The lady she is that's against

The island is [Far and near one of the attendant Lords.—

Far. Lord, in the range of honour to

Hel. Some, she's effectual, yet nothing we'll omit

That bear recovery strange. But since your business

We have strew'd the offer, let us beseech your father.

That for our gold we may occasion have.

Wherein we are not desir'd for want.

That worthy for the stirringtons.

Lys. O, sir, a courtesy.

Which, if we should deny, the most just view.

For every essay would send a cataract,
And so inflict our province.—Yet once more
Let me entreat to know at large the cause
Of your king's sorrow.

Per. Sit, sir, I will recount it.—
But, see, I am prevented.

Enter, from thearge, Lord, Marina, and a young lady.

Per. O, here is
The lady that I sent for. Welcome, fair one!
Is't not a goodly presence?

Mar. A gallant lady.

Per. She's such, that were I well assured she came Of gentle kind, and noble stock, I'd wish.
No better choice, and think me rarely wld.
Fair one, all goodness that consists in bounty
Expect even here, where is a kindly patient: If that thy prosperous artificial heat
Can draw him but to answer thee in might
Thy sacred physical shall receive such pay
As thy desires can wish.

Mar. Sir, I will use
My utmost skill in his recovery,
Provided none but I and my companion
Husband'd to come near him.

Per. Come, let us leave her,
And the gods make her prosperous! [Marina rage.

Per. Mark'd be your music!

Mar. No, nor look'd on us.

Per. See, she will speak to him.

Mar. Hail, sir! my lord, kind ear:—
Per. Hail! ha! I am a maid, my lord, that e'er before invited eyes,
But have been gaz'd on, count'd like, she speaks,
My lord, that may, be, hath endur'd a grief
Might equal yours, if both were justly weigh'd.
Though wayward fortune did malign my state,
My derision was from ancestors
Who stood equivalent with mighty kings:
But time hath rooted out my parentage,
And to the world a'd awkward casualties
Bound me in servitude.—I will desist;
But there is something glows upon my cheek,
And whispers in mine ear, Go not till he speak.—

[Aside.]

Per. My fortunes—parentage—good parentage—
To equal mine! was it not thus? what say you? I am a maid, my lord, that e'er before invited eyes,
But have been gaz'd on, count'd like, she speaks,
My lord, that may, be, hath endur'd a grief
Might equal yours, if both were justly weigh'd.
Though wayward fortune did malign my state,
My derision was from ancestors
Who stood equivalent with mighty kings:
But time hath rooted out my parentage,
And to the world a'd awkward casualties
Bound me in servitude.—I will desist;
But there is something glows upon my cheek,
And whispers in mine ear, Go not till he speak.—

Per. I do think so.
I pray you, turn your eyes again upon me.—
You are like something that—What countrywoman?
Hence of these shores?

Mar. No, nor of any shores:
Yet I was mortally brought forth and am
No other than I appear.

Per. I am great with woe, and shall deliver weeping,
My dearest wife was like this maid, and such a one
My daughter might have been: my queen's square
Her stature to an inch, as wand-like straight, I bows;
As silver-voic'd: her eyes as jewel-like.
And cast'd as richly: in pace another Juno; [gery,
Who starves the ears she feeds, and makes them hum:
The more she gives them speech.—Where do you live?

Mar. Where I am but a stranger: from the deck
You may discern the place.

Per. Where were you bred?
And how achiev'd you these endowments, which
You make more rich to owe?

Mar. Should I tell my history,
Would seem like lies disdain'd in the reporting.

Per. Why then speak?
Falsehood cannot come from thee, for thou look'st
Modest as justice, and thou seem'st a palace
For the crown'd truth to dwell in: I'll believe thee,
And make my senses credit thy relation,
To points that seem impossible; for thou look'st
Like one I lov'd indeed, what were thy friends?
Didst thou not say, when I did push thee back,
(Which was when I perceiv'd thee,) that thou cam'st
From good descending?

Mar. So indeed I did.

Per. Report thy parentage. I think thou said'st
Thou hast been forc'd from wrong to injury,
And that thou thought'st thy griefs might equal mine,
If both were open'd.

Mar. Some such thing indeed
I said, and said no more but what my thoughts
Did warrant me was likely.

Per. Tell thy story;
If thine consider'd prove the thousandth part
Of my endurance, thou art a marvellous
Have suffer'd like a girl: yet thou dost look
Like Patience, gazing on kings' graves, and smiling
Extremity out of act. What were thy friends?
How lost thou them? Thy name, my most kind virgin I
Recount, do beseech thee: come, sit by me.

Mar. My name, sir, is Marina,

Per. O, I am mock'd,
And thou by some incensed god sent hither
To make the world laugh at me.

Patience, good sir,

Or here I'll cease.

Per. Nay, I'll be patient;
Thou little know'st how thou dost startle me,
To call thyself Marina.

Mar. The same Marina,
Was given me by one that had some power;
My father, and a king.

Per. How? a king's daughter?

Mar. And call'd Marina?

Per. They said you would believe me,
But, not to be a trouble of your peace,
I will end here.

Per. But are you flesh and blood?
Have you a working pulse? and are you fair?
No motion? Well! speak on. Where were you born?
And wherefore call'd Marina?

Mar. Call'd Marina,

Per. For I was born at sea.

Per. At sea? thy mother?

Mar. My mother was the daughter of a king;
Who died the very minute I was born,
As my good nurse Lychorida hath oft
Deliver'd weeping.

Per. O, stop there a little!
This is the rarest dream that e'er dull sleep
Did mock sad souls withal: this cannot be.
My daughter's buried. [Aside.] Well:—where were you bred?

I'll hear you more, to the bottom of your story,
And never interrupt you.

Mar. You'll scarce believe me; 'twere best I did give o'er.

Per. I will believe you by the syllable
Of what you shall deliver. Yet, give me leave:—
How came you in these parts? were you bred?

Mar. The king, my father, did in Tharsus leave me;
Till cruel Cleon, with his wicked wife,
Did seek to murder me: and having woo'd
A villain to attempt it, who having known
A crew of pirates came and rescued me;
Brought me to Mitylene. But, now good sir,
PERICLES.

Whither will you have me? Why do you weep? It may be,
You think me an impostor: no, good faith;
I am the daughter to king Pericles,
If good king Pericles be.

Per. Ho, Helicanus!

Het. Calls my gracious lord?

Per. Thou art a grave and noble counsellor,
Most wise in general: Tell me, if thou canst,
What this mad is, or what is like to be,
That thus hath made me weep?

I know not; but be it as it list,
Here is the regent, sir, of Mitylene,
Speaks nobly of her.

Lyg. She would never tell
Her parentage; being demanded that,
She would sit still and weep.

Per. O Helicanus, strike me, honour’d sir;
Give me a gash, put me to present pain;
Let this great sea of joys rushing upon me,
O’erbear the shores of my mortality,
And drown me with their sweetness. O, come hither,
Thou that beget’st him that did thee beget;
Thou that wast born at sea, buried at Tharsus,
And found at sea again!—O Helicanus,
Down on thy knees, thank the holy gods, as loud
As thunder threatens us: This is Marina.

What was thy mother’s name? tell me but that,
For truth can never be confirm’d enough,
Though doubts did ever sleep.

Mar. First, sir, I pray
What is your title?

Per. I am Pericles of Tyre: but tell me now
(As in the rest thou hast been godlike perfect.)
My drowned queen’s name, thou art the heir of king,
And another life to Pericles thy father.

Dom. Mar. Is it no more to be your daughter than
To say, my mother’s name was Thaisia?
Thaisia was my mother, who did end,
The minute I began.

Per. Now, blessing on thee, rise; thou art my child.
Give me fresh garments. Mine own, Helicanus,
(Not dead at Tharsus, as she should have been,
By savage Cleon,) she shall tell thee all;
When thou shalt kneel and justify in knowledge,
She is thy very princess.—Who is this?

Hel. Sir, ’tis the governor of Mitylene
Who, hearing of thy melancholy state,
Did come to see you.

Per. I embrace you, sir,
Give me my robes; I am wild in my beholding.
O heavens bless my girl! But hark, what music?
Tell Helicanus, my Marina, tell him
O’er, point by point, for yet he seems to doubt,
How sure you are my daughter.—But what music?

Hel. My lord, I hear none.

Per. Now, Marina,
The dance of the spheres: list, my Marina.

Lyg. It is not good to cross him; give him way.

Per. Rarest sounds!

Do ye not hear?

Lyg. Music? My lord, I hear—

Per. Most heavenly music;
It stops me unto list’ning, and thick slumber
Hangs on mine eye-lids; let me rest. [He sleeps.

Lyg. A pillow for his head;

The curtain before the passion of Pericles is closed.
So leave him all. Well, my companion-friends,
If this but answer to my just belief,
I’ll well remember you.

[Exeunt LYSMACHUS, HELICANUS, MARINA, and attendant Lady.

SCENE II.—The same

Pericles on the deck asleep; Diana appearing to him as in a vision.

Dia. My temple stands in Ephesus; hie thee thither,
And do thou there another sacrifice.
There, when my maiden priests are met together,
Before the people all,
Reveal how thou at sea didst lose thy wife:
To mourn thy crosses, with thy daughter’s, call,
And give them repetition to the life.
Perform my bidding, or thou livest in woe:
Do’t, and be happy, by my silver Hel.
Awake, and tell thy dream. [Diana disappears.

Per. Celestial Dian, goddess argentine,
I will obey thee!—Helicanus!

Enter LYSMACHUS, HELICANUS, and MARINA.

Het. Sir.

Per. My purpose was for Tharsus, there to strike
The inhospitable Cleon; but I am
For other service first: toward Ephesus
Turn our blown sails; efsouins I’ll tell thee why.—

[To Helicanus.

Shall we refresh us, sir, upon your shore,
And give you gold for such provision
As our intents will need?

Lyg. With all my heart, sir; and when you come
I have another suit. [ashore

Per. You shall prevail,
Were it to woo my daughter; for it seems
You have been noble towards her.

Lyg. Sir, lead your arm.

Per. Come, my Marina. [Exit.

Enter Gower, before the temple of Dian at Ephesus.

Gow. Now our sands are almost run
More a little, and then done.
This, as my last boon, give me,
(For such kindness must relieve me,) That you aptly will suppose
What pageantry, what feats, what shows,
What minstrelsy, and pretty din,
The regent made in Mitylen,
To greet the king. So he has thriv’d,
That he is promis’d to be liv’d
To fair Marina; but in no wise,
Till he had done his sacrifice,
As Dian bade: whereto being bound,
The interim, pray you, all confound,
In feather’d briefness sails are fill’d
And wishes full out as they’re will’d.
At Ephesus, the temple see,
Our king, and all his company.
That he can lither come so soon,
Is by your fancy’s thankful boon.

[Exit.

SCENE III.—The Temple of Diana at Ephesus;

Thaisa standing near the Altar, as High Priestess; a number of virgins on each side; Crenius and other inhabitants of Ephesus attending.

Enter PERICLES, with his Train; LYSMACHUS, HELICANUS, MARINA, and a Lady.

Per. Hail, Dian! to perform thy just command,
I here confess myself the king of Tyre;
Who, frighted from my country, did wed
The fair Thaisa, at Pentapolis.
At sea in childhood die she, but brought forth
A maid-child call’d Marina; who, O goddess,
Wears yet thy silver livery. She at Tharsus
Was nurs’d with Cleon; whom at fourteen years
He sought to murder, but her better stars
Brought her to Mitylene; against whose shore
ACT V. -- SCENE III.

Ruling, her fortunes brought the maid aboard us,
Where, by her own most clear remembrance, she
May know herself my daughter.

Tha.

Voice and favour! --

You are, you are -- O royal Pericles! -- [She faints.

Per. What means the woman? she dies! help,

Cer. Noble sir, [gentlemen!

If you have told Diana's altar true,

This is your wife.

Per. Reverend sir, appearer, no;

I threw her o'erboard with these very arms.

Cer. Upon this coast, I warrant you.

Per. "Tis most certain.

Cer. Look to the lady; -- O, she's but o'erjoy'd.

Early, one blustering morn, this lady was Thrown on this shore. I op'd the coffin, and Found there rich jewels; recover'd her, and plac'd her

Here in Diana's temple.

Per. May we see them?

Cer. Great sir, they shall be brought you to Whither I invite you. Look! Thaisa is [house,

Recover'd.

If you let me look!

If he be none of mine, my sanctity

Will to my sense bend no licentious ear,

But curb it, spite of seeing. O, my lord,

Are you not Pericles? Like him you speak,

Like him you are: Did you not name a tempest,

A birth, and death?

Per. The voice of dead Thaisa!

Thai. That Thaisa am I, supposed dead,

And drown'd.

Per. Immortal Dian!

Thai. Now I know you better. --

When we with tears parted Pentapolis,

The king, my father, gave you such a ring.

Shews a ring.

Per. This, this: no more, you gods! your present kindness

Makes my past miseries sport: You shall do well,

That on the touching of her lips I may

Melt, and no more be seen. O, come, be buried.

A second time within these arms.

M's. My heart

Leaps to be gone into my mother's bosom.

[kneels to THAISA.

Per. Look, who kneels here! Flesh of thy flesh,

Thy burden at the sea, and call'd Marina, [Thaisa; For she was yield'd there.

Thai. Bless'd, and mine own!

Hel. Hail, mamad, and my queen.

Thai. I know you not.

Per. You have heard, me say, when I did fly from

I left behind an ancient substitute. [Tyre.

Can you remember what I call'd the man?

I have nam'd him oft.

To a former edition of this play were subjoined two Dissertations; one written by Mr. Steevens, the other by me. In the latter I urged such arguments as then appeared to me to have weight, to prove that it was the entire work of Shakespeare, and one of his best compositions. Mr. Steevens on the other hand maintaing, that it was originally the production of some elder playwright, and afterwards improved by our poet, whose hand was acknowledged to be visible in many scenes throughout the play. On a review of the various arguments which each of us produced in favour of his own hypothesis, I am now convinced that the theory of Mr. Steevens was right, and have no difficulty in knowing my own to be erroneous.

This play was entered on the Stationers' books, together with Jovius and Cleopatra, in the year 1599, by Edward Blount, a bookseller of eminence, and one of the publishers of the first facsimile of Shakespeare's works. It was printed with his name in the title-page, in his lifetime; but this circumstance proves nothing, because, by the knavery of booksellers, other pieces were also ascribed to him in his lifetime, of which he imputably wrote not a line. Nor is it necessary to urge, in support of its genuineness, that at a subsequent period it was ascribed to him by several dramatic writers. I wish not to rely on any circumstance of that kind; because, in all questions of this nature, personal evidence is the best that can be produced, and, to every person intimately acquainted with our poet's writings, must appear credible and trustworthy. The cogent sentiments, the numerous expressions bearing a striking similitude to passages in his unprinted plays, some of the incidents, the situation of many of the persons, and in various places the colour of the style, all these combine to set the seal of Shakespeare on the play beyond dispute, and disbursh us from internal and irrepro-table proofs, that a considerable portion of this piece, as it now appears, was written by him. The greater part of the last three acts above, written on this ground, are absolutely assigned to him; and his hand may be traced occasionally in the fifteen remaining.

To add, now resolved, and improve the unsuccessful drama of preceding writers, men, I believe, much more common in the time of Shakespeare than is generally supposed. This piece having been thus new-modelled by my poet, and enriched with many happy strokes from his pen, is unquestionably entitled to that place among his works, which it has now obtained." -- M.QLBNS.

KING LEAR.

PERSONS REPRESENTED.

Lear, King of Britain.
King of France.
Duke of Burgundy.
Duke of Cornwall.
Duke of Albany.
Earl of Kent.
Earl of Gloster.

Eduard, bastard son to Gloster.
Cuban, a courtier.
Old Man, servant to Gloster.
Physician. Ford.
Oswald, steward to Goneril.
An Officer employed by Edmund.
Gentleman, attendant on Cordelia.
A Herald. Servants to Cornwall.
Goneril, Regan, Cordelia, daughters to Lear.
Knights attending on the King, Officers, Messengers, Soldiers, and Attendants.

SCENE,—Britain.

ACT I.

SCENE I.—A Room of State in King Lear's Palace.

Enter Kent, Gloster, and Edmund.

Kent. I thought the king had more affected the duke of Albany, than Cornwall.

Glo. It did always seem so to us: but now, in the division of the kingdom, it appears not which of the dukes he values most: for equalities are so weigh'd, that curiosity in neither can make choice of either's moiety.

Kent. Is not this your son, my lord?

Glo. His breeding, sir, hath been at my charge: I have so often blush'd to acknowledge him, that now I am brazed to it.

Kent. I cannot conceive you.

Glo. Sir, this young fellow's mother could, when upon she grew round-womb'd; and had, indeed, sir, a son for her cradle, ere she had a husband for her bed. Do you smell a fault?

Kent. I cannot wish the fault undone, the issue of it being so proper.

Glo. But I have, sir, a son by order of law, some year elder than this, who yet is no dearer in my account: though this knife came somewhat too secretly into me before he was sent for, yet was his mother fair; there was good sport at his making, and the whoreson must be acknowledged.—Do you know this noble gentleman, Edmund?

Edm. No, my lord.
ACT I.—SCENE I.

And find, I am alone felicitate
In your dear highness' love.

Thrice welcome, learner; then poor Cordelia! [Aside.

And yet not so; since, I am sure, my love's
More rich than my tongue.

Lear. To thee, and thine, hereditary ever,
Remains this ample third of our fair kingdom;
No less in space, validity, and pleasure,
Than that confirm'd on Goneral.—Now, our joy,
Although the last, not least; to whose young love
The vines of France, and milk of Burgundy,
Strive to be interest'd; what can you say, to draw
A third more opulent than your sisters? Speak.
Cor. Nothing, my lord.
Lear. Nothing! Nothing.
Cor. Nothing.
Lear. Nothing can come of nothing: speak again.
Cor. Unhappy that I am, I cannot heave
My heart into my mouth: I love your majesty
According to my bond; nor more, nor less.
Lear. How, how, Cordelia? mend your speech a Little.
Cor. Good my lord,
You have begot me, bred me, lov'd me: I
Return those duties back as are right fit,
Obey you, love you, and most honour you.
Why have my sisters husbands, if they say
They love you, all? Happily, when I shall wed,
That lord, whose hand must take my plight, shall carry
Half my love with him, half my care, and duty!
Sure, I shall never marry like my sisters,
To love my father all.
Lear. But goes this with thy heart?
Cor. Ay, good my lord.
Lear. So young, and so untender?
Cor. So young, my lord, and true.
Lear. Let it be so,—Thy truth then be thy dower:
For, by the sacred radiance of the sun;
The mysteries of Hecate, and the night;
By all the operations of the orbs,
From whom we do exist, and cease to be;
Here I disclaim all my paternal care,
Propinquity and property of blood,
And as a stranger to my heart and me
Hold pride, which she calls plainness, marry her.
Lear. To persevere his generations [thian,
To gorge his appetite, shall to my bosom
Be as well neighbour'd, pitied, and relieve'd,
As thou my sometime daughter.
Kent. Good my liege,—
Lear. Peace, Kent!
Come not between the dragon and his wrath:
I lov'd her most, and sought to set my rest
On her kind nursery.—Hence, and avoid my sight!
So be my grave my peace, as here I give [To Cordelia.
Her father's heart from her!—Call France;—Who Call Burgundy,—Cornwall, and Albany, [stars?
With my two daughters' dowers digest this third:
Let pride, which she calls plainness, marry her.
I do invest you jointly with my power,
Pre-eminence, and all the large effects
That troop with majesty.—Ourself, by monthly course,
With reservation of an hundred knights,
By you to be sustain'd, shall our abode
Make with you by due turns. Only we still retain
The pride, which she calls plainness, marry her.
The sway, Revenue, execution of the rest,
Beloved sons, be yours: which to confirm,
This coronet part between you. [Giving the crown.
Royal Lear,
Whom I have ever honour'd as my king,

Lov'd as my father, as my master follow'd,
As my great patron thought on in my prayers,—

Lear. The bow is bent and drawn, make from the shaft.

Kent. Let it fall rather, though the fork invade
The region of my heart: be Kent unmannerly,
When Lear is mad. What would'st thou do, old man?
Think'st thou, that duty shall have drear to speak,
When power to flattery bows? To plainness honour's bound.

When majesty stoops to folly. Reverse thy doom;
And, in thy best consideration, check
This hideous rashness: answer my life my judgment,
Thy youngest daughter does not love thee least;
Nor are these empty-hearted, whose low sound
Reverb's no hollowness.

Lear. Kent, on thy life, no more.

Kent. My life I never held but as a pawn
To wage against thine enemies; nor fear to lose it,
Thy safety being the motive.

Lear. Out of my sight!

Kent. See better, Lear; and let me still remain
The true blank of thine eye.

Lear. Now, by Apollo,—

Kent. Now, by Apollo, king,
Thou swearest thy gods in vain.

Lear. O, vassal! miscreant! [Laying his hand on his sword.

Kent. Do;

Kill thy physician, and the fee bestow
Upon the foul disease. Revoke thy gift:
Or, whilst I can vent clamour from my throat,
I'll tell thee thou dost evil.

Lear. Hear me, recreant!

On thine allegiance hear me!—
Since thou hast sought to make us break our vow,
(Which we durst never yet.) and, with strain'd pride,
To come between our sentence and our power;
(Which nor our nature nor our place can bear;
Our potency made good, take thy reward.
Five days do we allot thee, for provision
To shield thee from diseases of the world;
And, on the sixth, to turn thy hate back
Into thine own kingdom: if, on the tenth day following,
Thy banish'd trunk be found in our dominions,
The moment is thy death: Away! by Jupiter,
This shall not be revok'd. [Appear.

Kent. Fare thee well, king; since thus thou wilt
Freedom lives hence, and banishment is here.—
The gods to their dear shelter take thee, maid,
[To Cordelia.}

That justly think'st, and hast most rightly said—
And your large speculations may your deeds approve.
[To Regan and Goneril.]

That good effects may spring from words of love.—
Thus Kent, O princes, bids you all adieu;
He'll shape his old course in a country new. [Exit.

Re-enter Glover: with France, Burgundy, and Attendants.

glo. Here's France and Burgundy, my noble lord.

Lear. My lord of Burgundy,
We first address towards you, who with this king
Hath rival'd for our daughter: What, in the least,
Will you require in present dower with her,
Or cease your quest of love?

Bur. Most royal majesty,
I crave no more than hath your highness offer'd,
Nor will you tender less.

Lear. Right noble Burgundy,
When she was dear to us, we did hold her so;
KING LEAR.

But now her price is fall'n: Sir, there she stands;
If sought within that little, seeming substance,
Or all of it, with our displeasure pied,
And nothing more may silly like your grace,
She's there, and she is yours.

Bur. I know no answer.

Lear. Sir,
Will you, with those infirmities she owes,
Unfriend-ed, new-adopted to our hate,
Dower'd with our curse, and stranger'd with our oath,
Take her, or leave her?

Bur. Pardon me, royal sir; I
Election makes not up on such conditions, [made me]
Lear. Then leave her, sir; for, by the power that I tell you all her wealth.—For you, great King, [To France.
I would not from your love make such a stray,
To match you where I hate; therefore beseech you
To avert your liking a more worthy way,
Than on a wretch whom nature is asham'd
Almost to acknowledge her's.

France. This is most strange! That she, that even but now was your best object,
The argument of your praise, balm of your age,
Most best most dearest, should in this truce of time
Commit a thing so monstrous, to dismantle
So many folds of favour! Sure, her offence
Must be of such unnatural degree,
That monsters it, or your fore-vouch'd affection
Fall into taint: which to believe of her,
Must be a faith, that reason without miracle
Could never plant in me.

Cor. I yet beseech your majesty,
(If for I want that glib and oily art,
To break and purpose not; since what I well intend,
I'll do before I speak,) that you make known
It is no violent blot, murder, or foulness,
No unchaste action, or dishonour'd step,
That hath deprived me of your grace and favour:
But even for want of that, for which I am richer;
A still soliciting eye, and such a tongue
That I am glad I have not, though not to have it,
Has lost me in your liking.

Lear. Better thou [better]
Hadst not been born, than not to have pleased me
France. Is it but this? a tardiness in nature,
Which often leaves the history unspeake,
That it intends to do?—My lord of Burgundy,
What say you to the lady? Love is not love
When it is muddled with respects, that stand
Aford from the entire point. Will you have her?
She is herself a dowry.

Bur. Royal Lear,
Give but that portion which yourself propos'd,
And here I take Cordelia by the hand,
Duchess of Burgundy.

Lear. Nothing: I have sworn, I am firm.
Bur. I am sorry then, you have so lost a husband,
That you must lose a husband.

Cor. Peace be with Burgundy! Since that respects of fortune are his love,
I shall not be his wife.

France. Fairest Cordelia, that art most rich, being Most choice, forsaken; and most lov'd, despic'd! Thou
And thy virtues here I seize upon:
Be it lawful, I take up what's cast away. [lect
Gods, gods! 'tis strange, that from their cold'st neg
My love should kindle to inflam'd respect.—
Thy dowerless daughter, king, thrown to my chance,
Is queen of us, of ours, and our fair France:
Not all the dukes of warish Burgundy
Shall buy this unpriz'd precious maid of me.—

Bid them farewell, Cordelia, though unkind;
Thou lovest here, a better where to find.
Lear. Thou hast her, France: let her be thine;
Have no such daughter, nor shall ever see [for we
That face of hers again.—Therefore be gone,
Without our grace, our love, our censure.
Come, noble Burgundy.

[Fleurish. Enter Lear, Burgundy, Cornwall, Albany, Gloucester, and Attendants.

France. Bid farewell to your sisters.

Cor. The jewels of our father, with wash'd eyes
Cordelia leaves you: I know you what you are;
And, like a sister, am most loth to call
Your faults as they are nam'd. Use well our father:
To your profess'd bosoms I commit him:
But yet, alas! stood I within his grace,
I would prefer him to a better place.
So farewell to you both.

France. Prescribe not us our duties.

Cor. Let your study
Be, to content your lord; who hath receiv'd you
At fortune's alms. You have obedience scant'd,
And well are worth the want that you have wanted.
Cor. Time shall unfold what plaiz'd cunning hides;
Who covers faults, at last shame them derides.
Well may you prosper!

France. Come, my fair Cordelia.

[Exeunt France and Cordelia.

Gon. Sister, it is not a little I have to say, of what Most nearly appertains to us both. I think, our father will hence to-night.

Reg. That's most certain, and with you; next month with us.

Gon. You see how full of changes his age is; the observation, made of it last, been little:
he always loved our sister most; and with what poor judgment he hath now cast her off, appears too grossly.

Reg. 'Tis the infirmity of his age: yet he hath ever but slenderly known himself.

Gon. The best and soundest of his time hath been but rash; then must we look to receive from his age, not alone the imperfections of long-engraffed custom, but, therewithal, the unruly waywardness that inflamm and cholerick years bring with them.

Reg. Such unconstant starts we are like to have from him, as this of Kent's banishment.

Gon. There is further compliment of leave-taking between France and him. Pray you, let us hit together: If our father carry authority with such dispositions as he bears, this last surrender of his will but offend us.

Reg. We shall further think of it.

Gon. We must do something, and i' the heat.

[Exeunt.

SCENE II.—A Hall in the Earl of Glenster's Castle.

Enter Gloucester, with a letter.

Edm. Thou, nature, art my goddess; to thy law
My service are bound. Wherefore should I
Stand in the plague of custom; and permit
The curiosity of nations to deprive me,
For that I am some twelve or fourteen moon-shines
Lag of a brother? Why bastard? wherefore base?
When my dimensions are as well compact,
My mind as generous, and my shape as true
As honest mulvan's lam;? Why brand they us
With base? with baseness? bastardly? base? base?
Who, in the lusty stealth of nature, take
More composition and fierce quality,
Then doth, within a dull, stale, tired bed,
Go to the creating a whole tribe of tops,
Got 'tween asleep and wake!—Well then,
Legitimate Edgar, I must have your land:
Our father's love is to the bastard Edmund,
As to the legitimate: Fine word,—legitimate!
Well, my legitimate, if this letter speed,
And my invention thrive, Edmund the base
Shall top the legitimate. I grow; I prosper:
Now, gods, stand up for bastards!

Enter Gloster.

Glo. Kent banish'd thus! and France in choler parted!
And the king gone to-night! subscribe his power!
Confess'd to exhibition! All this done
Upon the appeal!—Edmund! How now; what news?
Edm. So please your lordship none.

[Putting up the letter.]

Glo. Why so earnestly seek you to put up that let-
Edm. I know no news, my lord. [ter?

Glo. What paper were you reading?
Edm. Nothing, my lord.

Glo. No! what needed then that terrible despatch of it into your pocket? the quality of nothing not such need to hide itself. Let's see: Come, if it be nothing, I shall not need spectators.
Edm. I beseech you, sir, pardon me: it is a letter from my brother, that I have not all o'er; for so much as I have perused, I find it not fit for your ear-leaking.

Glo. Give me the letter, sir.
Edm. I shall offend, either to detain or give it. The contents as in part I understand them, are to blame.
Glo. Let's see, let's see.

Edm. I hope, for my brother's justification, he wrote this but as an essay or taste of his virtue.
Glo. This cunning, and reverence of age, makes the world bitter to the best of our times; keeps our fortunes from us, till our oldness cannot relish them.
I begin to find an idle and fond bourdeau in the oppression of aged tyranny; who swears, not as it hath power, but as it is suffered. Come to me, that of this I may speak more.
If our father would sleep till I waked him, you should enjoy half his revenue for ever, and live the beloved of your brother Edgar—Humph!—Conspiracy!—Sleep till I waked him, you should enjoy half his revenue.—My son Edgar! Had he a hand to write this? a heart and brain to breed it in?
When came this to you? Who brought it?

Edm. It was not brought me, my lord; it's the cunning of you, I found it thrown in at the casement of my closet.

Glo. You know the character to be your brother's?
Edm. If the matter were good, my lord, I durst swear it were his; but, in respect of that, I would think it were not.

Glo. It is his.

Edm. It is his, my lord; but I hope, his heart is not in the contents.

Glo. Hath he never herefore sounded you in this business?

Edm. Never, my lord: But I have often heard him maintain it to be fit, that, sons at perfect age, and fathers declining, the father should be as ward to the son, and the son manage his revenue.

Glo. O villain, villain!—His very opinion in the letter!—Abhorred villain! Unnatural, detested, bru-ished villain! worse than brutish!—Go, sirrah, seek him: I'll apprehend him:—Abominable villain!—
Where is he?

Edm. I do not well know, my lord. If it shall please you to suspend your indignation against my brother, till you can derive from him better testimony of his intent, you shall run a certain course; where,
if you violently proceed against him, mistakeing his purpose, it would make a great gap in your own honour, and shake in pieces the heart of his obedience. I dare pawn down my life for him, that he hath writ this to feel my affection to your honour, and to no other pretence of danger.

Glo. Think you so?

Edm. If your honour judge it meet, I will place you where you shall hear us confer of this, and by an auricular assurance have your satisfaction; and that without any further delay than this very evening.

Glo. He cannot be such a monster.

Edm. Not, I think.

Glo. To his father, that so tenderly and entirely loves him.—Heaven and earth!—Edmund, seek him out; wind me into him, I pray you; frame the business after your own wisdom: I would unstate myself, to be in a due resolution.

Edm. I will seek him, sir, presently: convey the business as I shall find means, and acquit me withal.

Glo. These late eclipses in the sun and moon tend no good to us: Though the wisdom of nature can reason it thus and thus, yet nature finds itself scourged by the sequent effects: love cools, friendship falls off, brothers divide: in cities, mutinies; in countries, discord; in palaces, treason; and the bond cracked between son and father. This villain of mine comes under the prediction: there's son against father: the king falls from bias of nature; there's father against child. We have seen the best of our time: Machinations, hollowness, treachery, and all ravenous disorders, follow us disquietly to our graves!
—Find out this villain, Edmund: it shall lose thee nothing; do it carefully:—And the noble and true-hearted Norseth; his offence, honesty!—Strange! strange!

[Exit.]

Edm. This is the excellent folly of the world!
that, when we are sick in fortune, (often the surfeit of our own behaviour,) we make guilty of our disasters, the sun, the moon, and the stars: as if we were villains by necessity; fools, by heavenly compulsion;
knaves, thieves, and traitors, by spherical predomin-
nance; drunkards, liars, and adulterers, by an enforced obedience of planetary influence; and all that we are evil in, by a divine thrusting on: An admi-
irable evasion of whom master man, to lay his goath disposition to the charge of a star! My father compounded with my mother under the dragon's tail:
and my nature taken by a ura major; so that it follows, I am rough and lecherous.—Tut, I should have been that I am, had the meanestest star in the instrument twinkled on my bastardizing. Edgar—

Enter Edgar.

and put he comes, like the catastrophe of the old comedy: My cue is villains melancholy, with a sigh like Tom o'Bedlam.—O, these eclipses do portend these divisions! ha, sol, la, mi.

Edg. How now, brother Edmund? What serious contemplation are you in?

Edm. I am thinking, brother, of a prediction I read this other day, what should follow these eclipses.

Edg. Do you busy yourself with that?

Edm. I promise you, the effects he writes of, succeed unhappily: as of unnaturalness between the child and the parent; death, death, dissolutions of ancient amities; divisions in state, menaces and maredictions against king and nobles; needless difficulties, breach of friendship, changes of the princimates, mutiny, breaches, and I know not what.

Edg. How long have you been a sectary astronomical?

Edm. Come, come; when saw you my father last?
KING LEAR.

Edg. Why, the night gone by.

Edm. Spake you with him?

Edg. Ay, two hours together.

Edm. Parted you in good terms? Found you no displeasure in him, by word or countenance?

Edg. None at all.

Edm. Bethink yourself, wherein you may have offended him: and at my entreaty, forbear his presence, till some little time hath qualified the heat of his displeasure; which at this instant so rageth in him, that with the mischief of your person it would scarcely ally.

Edg. Some villain hath done me wrong.

Edm. That’s my fear. I pray you, have a continent forbearance, till the speed of his rage goes slower; and, as I say, retire with me to my lodging, from whence I will furtively bring you to hear my lord speak: Pray you, go; there’s my key:—If you do stir abroad, go armed.

Edg. Arnael, brother?

Edm. Brother, I advise you to the best; go armed; I am no honest man, if there be any good meaning towards you: I have had such you what I have seen and heard, but faintly; nothing like the image and horror of it: Pray you, away.

Edg. Shall I hear from you anon?

Edm. I do serve you in this business.—[Ex. Edgar.

A credulous father, and a brother noble,
Whose nature is so far from doing harms,
That he suspects none on whose foolish honesty
My practices ride easy!—I see the business,—
Let me, if not by birth, have lands by wit:
All with me’s meet, that I can fashion fit.  [Exit.

SCENE III. A Room in the Duke of Albany’s Palace.

Enter Goneril and Steward.

Gon. Did my father strike my gentleman for chiding of his fool?

Stew. Ay, madam.

Gon. By day and night! he wrongs me; every hour
He flies into onegross crime or other,
That sets us all at odds: I’ll not endure it:
His knights grow riotous, and himself upbraids us
On every tithe.—When he returns from hunting,
I will not speak with him; say, I am sick:—
If you come slack of former services,
You shall do well; the fault of it I’ll answer.

Stew. He’s coming, madam; I hear him.

[Exeunt.

Gon. I put on what weary negligence you please,
You and your fellows; I’d have you come to question:
If he dislike it, let him to my sister.
Whose mind and mine, I know, in that are one,
Not to be over-rul’d. Idle old man,
That still would manage those authorities,
That he hath given away!—Now, by my life,
Old fools are babes again; and must be us’d
With checks, as flatteries,—when they are seen abus’d.
Remember what I have said.

Stew. Very well, madam.  [You.

Gon. And let his knights have colder looks among
What grows of it, no matter; advise your fellows so;
I would breed from hence occasions, and I shall,
That I may speak.—I’ll write straight to my sister,
To hold my very course:—Prepare for dinner. [Exeunt.

May carry through itself to that full issue
For which I raz’d my likeness.—Now, banish’d Kent,
If thou canst serve where thou dost stand condemn’d,
(‘So may it come to!’) thy master, whom thou lov’st,
Shall find thee full of labours.

Horns within. Enter Lear, Knights, and Attendants.

Lear. Let me not stay a jest for dinner; go, get it ready, [Exit an Attendant.] How now, what art thou? Kent. A man, sir.

Lear. What dost thou profess? What wouldst thou with us?

Kent. I do profess to be no less than I seem; to serve him truly, that will put me in trust; to love him that is honest; to converse with him that is wise, and says little; to fear judgment; to fight, when I cannot choose; and to eat no fish.

Lear. What art thou?

Kent. A very honest-hearted fellow, and as poor as the king.

Lear. If thou be as poor for a subject, as he is for a king, thou art poor enough. What wouldst thou? Kent. Service.

Lear. Who wouldst thou serve?

Kent. You. Lear. Dost thou know me, fellow?

Kent. No, sir; but you have that in your countenance, which I would fain call master.

Lear. What’s that?

Kent. Authority.

Lear. What services canst thou do?

Kent. I can keep honest counsel, ride, run, mar a curious tale in telling it, and deliver a plain message bluntly; that which ordinary men are fit for, I am qualified in; and the best of me is diligence.

Lear. How old art thou?

Kent. Not so young, sir, to love a woman for singing; nor so old, to dote on her for any thing: I have years on my back forty-eight.

Lear. Follow me; thou shalt serve me; if I like thee no worse after dinner, I will not part from thee yet,—Dinner, ho, dinner.—Where’s my knife? my fool? Go you, and call my fool butcher;

Enter Steward.

You, you, sirrah, where’s my daughter?

Stew. So please you,—[Exeunt.

Lear. What says the fellow there? Call the clot-poll back.—Where’s my fool, ho?—I think the world’s askep.—How now, where’s that mongrel! Knight. He says, my lord, your daughter is not well. Lear. Why came not the slave back to me, when I call’d him?

Knight. Sir, he answer’d me in the roundest manner, he would not.

Lear. He would not!

Knight. My lord, I know not what the matter is; but, to my judgment, your highness is not entertain’d with that ceremonious affection as you were wont; there’s a great abatement of kindness appears, as well in the general dependants, as in the duke himself also, and your daughter.

Lear. Ha! sayst thou so?

Knight. I beseech you, pardon me, my lord, if I be mistaken: for my duty cannot be silent, when I think your highness is wrong’d. I have not remember’d of me own conception; I have perceived a most faint neglect of late; which I have rather blamed as mine own jealous curiosity, than as a very pretence and purpose of unkindness: I will look further into’t.—But where’s my fool? I have not seen him this two days.
Knight. Since my young lady's going into France, sir, the fool hath much pined away.

Lear. No more of that; I have noted it well.—Go you, and tell my daughter I would speak with her.—Go you, call hither my fool—

Re-enter Steward.

O, you sir, you sir, come you hither: Who am I, sir?

Stew. My lady's father.

Lear. My lady's father! my lord's knave: you whose dog? You slave! you cur!

Stew. I am none of this, my lord; I beseech you, pardon me.

Lear. Do you bandy looks with me, you rascal?

[Striking him.]

Stew. I'll not be struck, my lord.

Kent. Nor tripped neither; you base foot-ball player.

Lear. I thank thee, fellow; thou servest me, and I'll love thee.

Kent. Come, sir, arise, away; I'll teach you differences; away; away: If you will measure your lubber's length again, tarry: but away; go: Have you wisdom? so.

[Pushes the Steward out.]

Lear. Now, my friendly knave, I thank thee; there's earnest of thy service.

[Giving Kent money.]

Enter Fool.

Fool. Let me hire him too;—Here's my coaxcomb.

[Giving Kent his cap.]

Lear. How now, my pretty knave! how dost thou?

Fool. Sirrah, you were best take my coaxcomb. Lear. Why, fool?

Fool. Why? For taking one's part that is out of favour: Nay, an thou canst not smile as the wind sits, thou'lt catch cold shortly: There, take my coaxcomb: Why, this fellow has banish'd two of his daughters, and did the third a blessing against his will; if thou follow him, thou must needs wear my coaxcomb.—How now, nuncle? Would I had two coaxcombs, and two daughters!

Lear. Why, my boy?

Fool. If I gave them all my living, I'd keep my coaxcombs myself: There's mine; beg another of thy daughters.

Lear. Take heed, sirrah; the whip.

Fool. Truth's a dog that must to lean; he must be whipped out, when Lady, the brach, may stand by the fire and sulk.

Lear. A pestilent gall to me!

Fool. Sirrah, I'll teach thee a speech.

Lear. Do.

Fool. Mark it, nuncle:

Have more than thou showest,
Speak less than thou knowest,
Lend less than thou owest,
Ride more than thou goest,
Learn more than thou knowest,
Set less than thou wast;
Leave thy drink and thy whore,
And keep in-a-door;
And thou shalt have more
Than two tens to a score.

Lear. This is nothing, fool.

Fool. Then 'tis like the breath of an unfed law yer; you gave me nothing for't: Can you make no use of nothing, nuncle?

Lear. Why, no boy; nothing can be made out of nothing.

Fool. Pr'ythee, tell him, so much the rest of his land comes to; he will not believe thee. [To Kent.]

Lear. A biter fool!
KING LEAR.

In rank and not-to-be-endured riots. Sir,
I had thought, by making this well known unto you, To have found a late redress; but now grow fearful, By what yourself too late have spoke and done,
That you protect this course, and put it on
By your allowance; which, if you should, the fault Would not 'scape censure, nor the redresses sleep; Which, in the tender of a wholesome weal,
Slight in their working do you that offence,
Which else were shame, that then necessity
Will call discreet proceeding.

Foot. For you trow, nuncle,
The hedge-sparrow fed the cuckoo so long,
That it had its head bit off by its young.
So, out went the candle, and we were left darkling.

Lear. Are you our daughter?

Gon. Come, sir, I would you would make use of that good wisdom whereas I know you are fraught;
and put away these dispositions, which of late transform you from what you rightly are.

Foot. May not an ass know when the cart draws the horse?—Whoop, Jug! I love thee.

Lear. Does any here know me?—Why this is not Lear: does Lear walk thus? speak thiss? Where are his eyes? Either his notion weakens, or his dis-cernings are altogether lethargizing—Ha! sure 'tis not so. —Who is it that can tell me who I am?—Lear's shadow? I would learn that; for by the marks of sovereignty, knowledge, and reason, I should be false persuaded I had daughters.—
Foot. Which they will make an obdurate father.

Lear. Your name, fair gentlewoman?

Gon. Come, sir,
This admiration is much o' the favour
Of other your new pranks. I do beseech you
To understand my purposes aright:
As you are old and reverend, you should be wise:
Here do you keep a hundred knights and squires;
Men so disorder'd, so deabuch'd and bold.
That this our court, infected with their manners,
Shews like a notous inn: epicurism and lust
Make it more like a tavern or a brothel,
Than a grac'd palace. The shame itself doth speak
For instant remedy: Be then desir'd
By her, that else will take the thing she begs,
A little to disquesity your train;
And the remainder, that shall still depend,
To be such men as may benefit your age,
And know themselves and you.

Lear.

Darkness and devils!
Saddle my horses; call my train together,—
Degenerate bastard! I'll not trouble thee;
Yet have I left a daughter.

Gon. You strike my people; and your disorder'd
Make servants of their better.

Enter ALBANY.

Lear. Woe, that too late repents,—O, sir, are you
come?
[horses. Is it your will? [To Arr.] Speak, sir.—Prepare my Ingratitude! thou marble-hearted fiend,
More hideous, when thou shew'st thee in a child,
Than the sea-monster!

Alb. Pray, sir, be patient.

Lear. Detected kite! thou liest: [To Goneril,
My train are men of choice and rarest parts,
That all particulars of duty know;
And in the most exact regard support
The worship of their name,—O most small fault,
How ugly didst thou in Cordelia shew!
Which, like an engine, wrenched my frame of nature
From the inéd place; drew from my heart all love,
And added to the gall. O Lear, Lear, Lear!
Beat at this gate, that let thy folly in;
[Striking his head, And thy dear judgment out!—Go, go, my people.

Alb. My lord, I am guiltless, as I am ignorant
Of what hath mov'd you.

Lear. It may be so, my lord.—Lear, nature, hear;
Dear goddess, hear! Suspend thy purpose, if Thou didst intend to make this creature fruitful!
Into her womb convey sterility!
Let her, the organs of increase;
And from her derogate body never spring
A babe to honour her! If she must teem,
Create her child of spleen; that it may live,
And be a thwart disatur'd torment to her!
Let it stamp wrinkles in her brow of youth;
With cadent tears fret channels in her cheeks;
Turn all her mother's pains, and benefits,
To laughter and contempt; that she may feel
How sharper than a serpent's tooth it is
To have a thankless child!—Away, away!

[Exit.
Alb. Now, gods, that we adore, whereof comes this?
Gon. Never affect yourself to know the cause;
But let his disposition have that scope
That dotage gives it.

Re-enter Lear.

Lear. What, fifty of my followers, at a clap!
Within a fortnight?

Alb. What's the matter, sir?

Lear. I'll tell thee;—Life and death! I am-Amash'd
That thou hast power to shake my manhood thus:

[To Goneril,
That these hot tears, which break from me perforce,
Should make thee worth them.—Blasts and fogs upon
The untedent'd woundings of a father's curse [thee!
Pierce every sense about thee!—Old fond eyes,
Beweep this cause again, I'll pluck you out;
And cast you, with the waters that you lose,
To tempest clay.—Ha! is it come to this?
Let it be so. You have I left a daughter,
Who, I am sure, is kind and comfortable;
When she shall hear this of thee, with her nails
She'll play thy wolish visage. Thou shalt find,
That I'll resume the shape which thou dost think
I have cast off for ever; thou shalt, I warrant thee.

[Exit Lear, Kent, and Attendants.
Gon. Do you mean that, my lord?
Alb. I cannot be so partial, Goneril,
To the great love I bear you;—

Gon. Pray you content.—What, Oswald, ho!
You, sir, more knave than fool, after your master

[To the Fool.
Fool. Nuncle Lear, nuncle Lear, tarry, and take the fool with this.
A fox, when one has caught her,
And such a daughter,
Should sure to the slaughter,
If my cap would buy a halter,
So the fools follow after.

[Exit.
Gon. This man hath had good counsel:—A hundred knights!
Tin politics and safe to let him keep
At points hundred knights. Yes, that on every dream,
Each buzz, each fancy, each complaint, dislike,
He may engraunt his dotage with their powers,
And hold our lives in mercy.—Oswald, I say!—
Alb. Well, you may fear too far.

Gon. Safer than trust:
Let me still take away the harms I.
Not fear still to be taken. I know his heart:
What he hath utter'd, I have writ my sister;
If she sustain him and his hundred knights, [walp!]
When I have shew'd the unfoots.—How now, Os-

Enter Steward.
What, have you writ that letter to my sister?

Stew. Ay, madam.

Gam. Take you some company, and away to horse:
Inform her full of my particular fear;
And thereto add such reasons of your own,
As may compact it more. Get you gone;
And hasten your return. [Exit Stew.] No, no, my
This milky gentleness, and course of yours, [lord,
Though I condemn it not, yet, under pardon,
You are much more attack'd for want of wisdom,
Than praise'd for harmful mildness.

Ab. How far your eyes may pierce, I cannot tell;
Striving to better, oft we mar what's well.

Gam. Nay, then—

Ab. Well, well; the event.

[Exeunt.

SCENE V.—Court before the same.

Enter Lear, Kent, and Fool.

Lear. Go you before to Gloster with these letters:
acquit my daughter no further with any thing
you know, than comes from her demand out of the letter:
If your diligence be not speedy, I shall be there before you.

Kent. I will not sleep, my lord, till I have delivered your letter.

[Exit. Fool.]

Fool. If a man's brains were in his heels, were't not in danger of kibes?

Lear. Ay, boy.

Fool. Then, I pr'ythee, be merry; they will shall not go slip-shod.

Lear. Ha, ha, ha!

Fool. Shall see thy other daughter will use thee kindly; for though she's as like this as a crab is like an apple, yet I can tell what I can tell.

Lear. Why, what canst thou tell, my boy?

Fool. She will taste as like this, as a crab does to a crab. Thou canst tell, why one's nose stands i' the middle of his face?

Lear. No.

Fool. Why, to keep his eyes on either side his nose; that what a man cannot smell out, he may spy into.

Lear. I did her wrong:—

Fool. Canst tell how an oyster makes his shell!

Lear. No.

Fool. Nor I neither; but I can tell why a snail has a house.

Lear. Why?

Fool. Why, to put his head in; not to give it away to his daughters, and leave his horns without a case.

Lear. I will forget my nature.—So kind a father!

—Be my horses ready?

Fool. Thy asses are gone about 'em. The reason why the seven stars are no more than seven, is a pretty reason.

Lear. Because they are not eight?

Fool. Yes, indeed: Thou wouldst make a good fool.

Lear. To take it again perforce!—Monster ingratitude!

Fool. If thouwert my fool, uncle, I'd have thee beaten for being old before thy time.

Lear. How's that?

Fool. Thou should'st not have been old, before thou hadst been wise.

Lear. O let me not be mad, not mad, sweet heaven!
Keep me in temper; I would not be mad!

Enter Gentleman.

How now! are the horses ready?

Gent. Ready, my lord.

Lear. Come, boy. [parture.

Fool. She that is maid now, and laughs at my de-
Shall not be a maid long, unless things be cut shorter.

[Exeunt.

ACT II. SCENE I.—A Court within the Castle of the Earl of Gloster.

Enter EDMUND and CURNAN, meeting.

Edm. Save thee, Curnan.

Cur. And you, sir. I have been with your father, and given him notice, that the duke of Cornwall, and Regan his duchess, will be here with him to-night.

Edm. How comes that?

Cur. Nay, I know not: You have heard of the news abroad; I mean, the whispered ones, for they are yet but ear-kissing arguments?

Edm. Not I; 'Pray you, what are they?

Cur. Have you heard of no likely wars toward,
'twixt the dukes of Cornwall and Albany?

Edm. Not a word.

Cur. You may then, in time Fare you well, sir. [Er.
Edm. The duke be here to night? The better! Best!
This weaves itself perforce into my business!
My father hath set guard to take my brother;
And I have one thing, of a queried question.
Which I must act.—Briefness, and fortune, work!—
Brother, a word;—descend.—Brother, I say;

Enter EDGAR.

Edg. I am sure on't, not a word.

Edm. I hear my father coming.—Pardon me:—
In cunning, I must draw my sword upon you:—
Draw: Seem to defend yourself; Now quit you well.
Yield: come before my father;—Light, ho, here!—
Fly, brother;—Torches! torches!—So, farewell.—

[Exit Edgar.

Some blood drawn on me would beget opinion.

Of more fierce endeavour: I have seen drunkards
Do more than this in sport.—Father! father!
Stop, stop! No help!

Enter GLOSTER and SERVANTS with torches.

Glo. Now, Edmund, where's the villain?—
Edm. Here stood he in the dark, his sharp sword cut,
Mumbling of wicked charms, conjuring the moon
To stand his auspicious mistress:—

Glo. But where is he?

Edm. Look, sir, I bleed.

Gla. Where is the villain, Edmund?—
Edm. Fled this way, sir. When by no means he could—

Glo. Pursue him, ho!—Go after.—[Exit Serv.]

By no means,—what?

Edm. Pursued me to the murder of your lordship;—
But that I told him, the revenging gods
'Gainst paricides did all their thunders bend;—
Spoke, with how manifand and strong a bond
The child was bound to the father:—Sir, in fine,
Seeing bow loathly opposite I stood.

777
To his unnatural purpose, in fell motion,
With his prepared sword, he charges home
My unprovided body, lane'd mine arm:
But when he saw my best armor'd spirits,
Bold in the quarrel's right, roused to the encounter,
Or whether gasted by the noise I made,
Full suddenly he fled.

Glo.
Let him fly far:
Not in this land shall he remain uncaught;
And found—Despatch.—The noble duke my master,
My worthy arch and patron, comes to-night:
By his authority I will proclaim it,
That he, which fends him, shall deserve our thanks,
Bringing the murderous coward to the stake;
He, that conceals him, death.
Edm. When I dismissed him from his intent,
And found him pight to do it, with eust speech
I threaten'd to discover him: He replied,
"Thou unpersuading bustard! dost thou think,
If I would stand against thee, would the reposal
Of any trust, virtue, or worth, in thee
Make thy words faith? No: what I should deny,
(As this I would; ay, though thou didst produce
My very character,) I'd turn it all
To thy suggestion, plot, and damned practise:
And thou must make a dullard of the world,
If they not thought the profits of my death
Were very pregnant and potential spurs
To make thee seek it."

Glo.
Strong and fasten'd villain!
Would he deny his letter?—I never got him.

Hark, the duke's trumpets! I know not why he comes:
Ali ports I'll bar; the villain shall not scape;
The duke must grant me that: besides, his picture
I will send far and near, that all the kingdom
May have due note of him; and of my land,
Loyal and natural boy, I'll work the means
To make thee capable.

Enter Cornwalt, Regan, and Attendants.
Cort. How now, my noble friend? since I came hither.
(Which I can call but now,) I have heard strange news.
Reg. If it be true, all vengeance comes too short,
Which can pursue the offender. How dost, my lord?
Glo. O, O, my old heart is crack'd; it is crack'd!
Reg. What, did my father's godson seek your life?
He whom your father nam'd you Edgar!
Glo. O, lady, lady, shame would have it hid!
Reg. Was he not companion with the riotous knights
That tend upon my father?
Glo.
I know not, madam:
It is too bad, too bad.
Edm.
Yes, madam, he was.
Reg. No marvel then, though he were ill affected;
'Tis they have put him on the old man's death,
To have the waste and spoil of his revenues.
I have this present evening from my sister
Been well inform'd of them; and with such cautions,
That, if they come to sejourn at my house,
I'll not be there.
Cort. Or I, assure thee, Regan—
Edmund, I hear that you shew thy father
A child-like office.
Edm.
'Twas my duty, sir.
Glo. He did bewray his practice; and receiv'd
This hurt you see, striving to apprehend him.
Cort. Is he pursued?
Glo.
Ay, my good lord, he is.
Cort. If he be taken, he shall never more
Be fear'd of doing harm: make your own purpose,
How in my strength you please.—For you, Edmund,
Whose virtue and obedience doth this instant
So much commend itself, you shall be ours;
Natures of such deep trust we shall much need;
You we first seize on.
Edm. I shall serve you, sir,
Truly, however else.
Glo. For him I thank your grace.
Cort. You know not why we came to visit you.—
Reg. Thus out of season; threading think-eyed night.
Occasion, noble Gloster, of some poise,
Wherein we must have use of your advice:—
Our father he hath writ, so hath our sister,
Of differences, which I best thought it fit
To answer from our home: the several messengers
From hence attend despatch. Our good old friend,
Lay comforts to your bosom; and bestow
Your needful counsel to our business,
Which craves the instant use.
Glo. I serve you, madam:
Your graces are right welcome.

[Exeunt.

SCENE II.—Before Gloster's Castle.
Enter Kent and Steward, severally.
Stew. Good dawning to thee, friend: Art of the Kent. Ay.
Stew. Where may we set our horses?
Kent. I 'th'mire.
Stew. Pr'ythee, if thou love me, tell me.
Kent. I love thee not.
Stew. Why, then I care not for thee.
Kent. If I had thee in Lipton bury pinfold, I would make thee care for me.
Stew. Why dost thou use me thus? I know thee not,
Kent. Fellow, I know thee.
Stew. What dost thou know me for?
Kent. A knave; a rascal, an enter of broken meat;
a base, proud, shallow, beggarly, three-suited, hundred-pound, filthy worsted stocking knife; a billy-liver'd, action-taking knife; a whoring, glass-gazing, super-serviceable, finical rogue; one-trunk-inheriting slave; one that would 'st be a bawd, in way of good service, and art nothing but the composition of a knave, beggar, coward, pander, and the son and heir of a mongrel hitch: one whom I will beat into colossal whining, if thou deniest the least syllable of thy addition.
Stew. Why, what a monstrous fellow art thou, then to rail on one, that is neither known of thee, nor knows thee?
Kent. What a brazen-faced varlet art thou to deny thou know'st me! Is it two days ago, since I tripp'd up your tricks, and beat thee, before the king? Draw you rogue: for, though it be night, the moon shines
I'll make a sop o' the moonshine of you: Draw, you whorson callously barber-monger, draw.

Stew. Away; I have nothing to do with thee.
Kent. Draw, you rascal: you come with letter against the king, and take vanity the puppet's part against the royalty of her father: Draw, you rogue or I'll so carbondado your shanks:—draw, you rascal, come your ways.
Stew. Help, ho! murder! help!
Kent. Strike, you slave; stand, rogue, stand; you neat slave, strike.

[Beating him.
Stew. Help, ho! murder! murder!

Enter Edmund, Cornwall, Regan, Gloster, and Servants.
Kent. With you, goodman boy, if you please

ACT II.—SCENE III. 779

Stew. Never any:
It pleas’d the king his master, very late,
To strike at me, upon his misconstruction:
When he, conjuring his displeasure,
Tripp’d me behind : being down, insulted, rail’d,
And put upon him such a deal of man,
That worthy’d him, got praises of the king
For him attempting who was self-subdu’d;
And, in the freshness of this dread exploit,
Drew on me here.
Kent. None of these rogues, and cowards,
But Ajax is their fool.
Corin.Fetch forth the stocks, ho!
You stubborn ancient knave, you reverent braggart,
We’ll teach you—
Kent. Sir, I am too old to learn:
Call not your stocks for me: I serve the king;
On whose employment I was sent to you:
You shall do small respect, shew too bold malice
Against the grace and person of my master,
Stocking his messenger.
Glo. As I’ve life and honour, there shall he sit till noon.
Reg. Till noon! till night, my lord; and all night too.
Kent. Why, madam, if I were your father’s dog,
You should not use me so.
Reg. Sir, being his knife, I will.
Corin. This is a fellow of the self-same colour
Our sister speaks of:—Come, bring away the stocks.
Glo. Let me beseech your grace not to do so:
His fault is much, and the good king his master
Will check him for’t: your purpos’d low correction
Is such, as basest and contempt’dst wretches,
For pilferings and most common trespasses,
Are punish’d with: the king must take it ill,
That he’s so slightly valued in his messenger,
Should have him thus restrained.
Corin. I’ll answer that.
Reg. My sister may receive it much more worse,
To have her gentleman abus’d, assaulted,
For following her affairs.—Put in his legs.—
[Kent is put in the stocks.
Glo. Come, my good lord: away.
[Exit REGAN AND CORNWALL.
Glo. I am sorry for thee, friend; ’tis the duke’s pleasure,
Whose disposition all the world well knows,
Will not be rubb’d, nor stopp’d: I’ll entreat for thee.
Kent. Pray, do not, sir: I have watch’d and travel’d hard;
Some time I shall sleep out, the rest I’ll whistle.
A good man’s fortune may grow out at heels;
Give you good morrow!
Glo. The duke’s to blame in this; ’twill be ill taken.
[Exit.
Kent. Good king, that must approve the common
Thou out of heaven’s benediction com’st [saw!
To the warm sun! Approach, thou beacon, to this under globe,
That by thy comfortable beams I may
Peruse this letter! Nothing almost sees miracles,
But misery:—I know, ’tis from Cordelia;
Who hath most fortunately been inform’d
Of my obscured course; and shall find time
From this enormous state, seeking to give Losses the remedies.—All weary and over-watch’d,
Take vantage, heavy eyes, not to behold
This shameful lodging.
Fortune, good night; smile once more; turn thy wheel!
[He sleeps.
SCENE III.—A Part of the Heath.

Enter Edgar.

Edg. I heard myself proclaim'd; And, by the happy hollow of a tree, Escap'd the hunt. No port is free; no place, That guard, and most unseasonable vigilance, Does not attend my taking. While I may scape, I will preserve myself: and am bethought To take the basest and most poorest shape, That ever penury, in contempt of man, Brought near to beast: my face I'll grime with filth; Blanket my loins; eft all my hair in knots; And with presented nakedness out-face The winds, and persecutions of the sky. The country gives me proof and precedent Of Bedlam beggars, who, with rearing voices, Strike in their numb'd and mortified bare arms Fins, wooden planks, nails, sprigs of rosemary; And with this horrible object, from low farms, Poor pelting villages, sheep-cotes, and mills, Sometime with lunatic bays, sometime with prayers, Enforce their charity.—Poor Turliygood! poor Tom! That's something yet;—Edgar I nothing am. [Exit.

SCENE IV.—Before Gloster's Castle.

Enter Lear, Fool, and Gentleman.

Lear. Tis strange, that they should so depart from And not send back my messenger. [Home. Gent. As I learn'd, the night before there was no purpose in them Of their remove. Kent. Hail to thee, noble master! Lear. How! Mak'st thou this shame thy pastime? Kent. No, my lord. Fool. Ha, ha, ha! look! he wears cruel garments! Horses are tied by the heads; dogs, and bears, by the neck; monkies by the loins, and men by the legs: when a man is over-lusty at legs, then he wears wooden neither-stocks. Lear. What's he, that hath so much thy place mis-to set thee there? [took Kent. It is both he and she, Your son and daughter. Lear. No. Kent. Yes. Lear. No, I say. Kent. I say, yea. Lear. No, no; they would not. Kent. Yes, they have. Lear. By Jupiter, I swear, no. Kent. By Juno, I swear, ay. Lear. They durst not do't; They could not, would not do't; 'tis worse than murder To do upon respect such violent outrage: [der, Resolve me, with all modest haste, which way Thou might'st desire, or they impose, this usage, Coming from us. Kent. My lord, when at their home I did commend your highness' letters to them, Ere I was risen from the place that they'd My duty kneeling, came there a reeking post. Stew'd in his haste, half breathless, panting forth From Goneril his mistress, salutations; Deliver'd letters, spite of intermission, Which presently they read: on whose contents They summon'd up their meiny, straight took horse; Commanded me to follow, and attend The leisure of their answer; gave me cold looks; And meeting here the other messenger, Whose welcome, I perceive'd, had poison'd mine, [Being the very fellow that of late Display'd so saucily against your highness,) Having more man than wit about me, drew; He rais'd the house with loud and coward curses; Your son and daughter found this trespass worth The shame which here it suffers. Fool. Winter's not gone yet, if the wild geese fly Fathers, that wear rags, [that way. Do make their children blind; But fathers, that bear bags, Shall see their children kind. Fortune, that arrant whore, Ne'er turns the key to the poor.— But, for all this, thou shalt have as many dolours for thy daughters, as thou canst tell in a year. Lear. O, how this mother swells up toward my heart! Hysteria positio—down, thou climbing sorrow, Thy element's below!—Where is this daughter? Kent. With the earl, sir, here within. Lear. Follow me not; Stay here. Gent. Made you no more offence than what you Kent. None. [speak of? How once the king comes with so small a train! Fool. An thou hast best set the stocks for that question, thou hast well deserved it. Kent. Why, fool? Fool. We'll set thee to school to an act, to teach thee there's no labouuring in the winter. All that follow their noses are led by their eyes, but blind men; and there's not a nose among twenty, but can smell him that's stinking. Let go thy hold, when a great wheel runs down a hill, lest it break thy neck with following it; but the great one that goes up the hill, let him draw thee after. When a wise man gives thee better counsel, give me mine again: I would have none but knaves follow it, since a fool gives it. That, sir, which serves and seeks for gain, And follows but for form, Will pack, when it begins to rain, And leave thee in the storm. But I will tarry; the fool will stay, And let the wise man fly: The knife turns fool, that runs away; The fool no knife, perdy. Kent. Where learn'd you this, fool? Fool. Not i' the stocks, fool. Re-enter Lear, with Gloster.

Lear. Deny to speak with me? They are sick? they are weary? They have travel'd hard to-night? Mere fetches The images of revolt and flying off! Fetch me a better answer. Glo. My dear lord, You know the fiery quality of the duke; How unremovable and fix'd he is In his own course.

Lear. Vengeance! plague! death! confusion!— Fiery! what quality? why, Gloster, Gloster, I'd speak with the duke of Cornwall, and his wife. Glo. Well, my good lord, I have inform'd them so. Lear. Inforn'd them! Dust thou understand me, Glo. Ay, my good lord. [man? Lear. The king would speak with Cornwall; the dear father [vice. Would with his daughter speak, commands her se- Are they inform'd of this?—[My breath and bluid!— Fiery! the fiery duke?—Tell the hot duke, that— No, but not yet:—may be, he is not well: Infamy doth still neglect all office;
Wherefore our health is bound; we are not ourselves. When our fate, being oppress'd, commands the mind To suffer with the body: I'll forbear; And am fallen out with my more headier will, To take the indisposed and sickly breath. For the sound man.—Death on my state! wherefore [Looking on Kent.] Should he sit here? This act persuades me, That this remotion of the duke and her Is practice only. Give me my servant forth; Go, tell the duke and his wife, I'd speak with them. Now, presently: bid them come, and hear me, Or at their chamber door I'll beat the drum, Till it cry—Sleep to death.

Gon. I'd have all well betwixt you. [Exit.

Lear. O me, my heart, my rising heart!—but, down, Fool. Cry to it, quack, as the cockney did to the eels, when she put them i' the paste alive; she rapp'd o' the eoccombs with a stick, and cry'd, Down, Down, Down! ’Twas her brother, that, in pure kind- ness to his horse, butter'd his hay.

Enter Cornwall, Regan, Gloster, and Servants.

Corn. Good morrow to you both. [Exit.

Reg. Hail to your grace! [Exit.

Kent is set at liberty.

Reg. I am glad to see your highness.

Lear. Regan, I think you are; I know what reason I have to think so: if thou shouldst not be glad, I would divorce me from thy mother's tomb, Sepulch'ring an adulteress.—O, are you free?

[To Kent.

Some other time for that.—Beloved Regan, Thy sister's naught: O Regan, she hath lied
Sharp-tooth'd unkindness, like a vulture, here,— [Points to his heart.

I can scarce speak to thee; thou'lt not believe, Of how deprav'd a quality—O Regan! Reg. I pray you, sir, take patience; I have hope, You less know how to value her desert, Than she to scant her duty. Lear. Say, how is that? Reg. I cannot think, my sister in the least Would fail her obligation: If, sir, perchance, She have restrain’d the riots of your followers, 'Tis on such ground, and to such wholesome end, As clears her from all blame. Lear. My curses on her! Reg. O, sir, you are old; Nature in you stands on the very verge Of her confine: you should be rule’d, and led By some discretion, that discerns your state Better than you yourself: Therefore, I pray you, That to our sister you do make return: Say, you have wrong’d her, sir. Lear. Ask her forgiveness? Do you but mark how this becomes the house? Dear daughter, I confess that I am old; Age is unnecessary: on my knees I beg. [Kneeling. That you’ll vouchsafe me remittance, bed, and food.

Reg. Good sir, no more; these are unjustly tricks: Return you to my sister.

Lear. Never, Regan: She hath abated me of half my train; Look’d black upon me; struck me with her tongue, Most serpent-like, upon the very heart:— All the storn'd vengeances of heaven fall On her ingrateful top! Strike her young bones, Yelling airs, with launcest! [Exit.

Corn. Fye, fye, fye! Lear. You nimbie lightnings, dart your blinding Into her scornful eyes! infect her beauty, flames You ten-suck’d fogs, drawn by the powerful sun, To fall and blast her pride! Reg. O the best gods. So will you wish on me, when the rash mood’s ou. Lear. No, Regan, thou shalt never have my curse; Thy tender-heaved nature shall not give thee o’er to harshness; her eyes are fierce, but thine Do comfort, and not burn: ’Tis not in thee To grudge my pleasures, to cut off my train, To bandy hasty words, to scant my sizes, And, in conclusion, to oppose the bolt Against my coming in: thou better know’st The offices of nature, bound of childhood, Effects of courtesy, dues of gratitude; Thy half o’ the kingdom hast thou not forgot, Wherein I thee endow’d.

Reg. Good sir, to the purpose. [Trumpets within.

Lear. Who put my man i' the stocks! Corn. What trumpet’s that?

Enter Steward.

Reg. I know’t, my sister’s: this approves her letter, That she would soon be here.—Is your lady come? Lear. This is a slave, whose easy-borrow’d pride Dwells in the fickle grace of her he follows:— Out, varlet, from my sight! Corn. What means your grace? Lear. Who stock’d my servant? Regan, I have good hope, [heavens, Thou didst not know of ’t.—Who comes here? O,

Enter Goneril.

If you do love old men, if your sweet sway Allow obedience, if yourselves are old, Make it your cause; send down, and take my part!— Art not asham’d to look upon this beard?— [To Goneril.

O, Regan, wilt thou take her by the hand? Gem. Why not by the hand, sir? How have I off- All’s not offence, that indiscretion finds, [fended And dotage terms so.

Lear. O, sides, you are too tough! Will you yet hold?—How came my man i’ the stocks? Corn. I set him there, sir: but his own disorders Deserv’d more less advancement.

Lear. You! did you?—Reg. I pray you, father, being weak, seem so. If, till the expiration of your mouth, You will return and sojourn with my sister, Dismissing half your train, come then to me; I am now from home, and out of that provision Which shall be needful for your entertainment. Lear. Return to her, and fifty men dismiss’d? No, nor I, rather I abjure all roofs, and choose To wage against the enmity o’ the air: To be a comrade with the wolf and owl,— Necessity’s sharp pinch!—Return with her! Why, the hot-blooded France, that dowerless took Our youngest born, I could as well be brought To kneel his throne, and, squire-like, pension beg To keep base life afoot,—Return with her! Persuade me rather to be slave andsummer To this detested groom. [Looking on the steward.

Gem. At your choice, sir. Lear. I pr’ythee, daughter, do not make me mad, I will not trouble thee, my child; farewell: We’ll no more meet, no more see one another:— But yet thou art my flesh, my blood, my daughter; Or, rather, it is my flesh that is thy daughter, Which I must needs call mine; thou art a boil, A plague-sore, an embossed carbuncle, To my corrupted blood. But I’ll not clude thee;
Let shame come when it will, I do not call it:
I do not bid the thunder-bearer shoot,
Nor tell tales of thee to high-judging Jove:
Mend, when thou canst; be better, at thy leisure:
I can be patient; I can stay with Regan,
I, and my hundred knights.

Reg.
Not altogether so, sir;
I look'd not for you yet, nor am provided
For your fit welcome: Give ear, sir, to say sister;
For those that mingle reason with your passion,
Must be content to think you old, and so—
But she knows what she does.

Lear.
Is this well spoken now?
Reg.  I dare avouch it, sir: What, fifty followers?
Is it not well? What should you need of more?
Yea, or so many! sith that both charge and danger
Speak 'gainst so great a number? How, in one house,
Should many people, under two commands,
Hold amity? 'Tis hard; almost impossible.

Gon. Why might not you, my lord, receive attendance
From those that she calls servants, or from mine?

Reg.  Why not, my lord? If then they chanc'd to shack you,
We could control them: If you will come to me,
(For now I spy a danger,) I entreat you
To bring but five and twenty; to no more
Will I give place, or notice.

Lear. I gave you all—

Reg.  And in good time you gave it.

Lear. Made you my guardians, my depositaries;
But kept a reservation to be follow'd
With such a number: What, must I come to you
With five and twenty, Regan? said you so?

Reg. And speak it again, my lord; no more with me.

Lear. Those wicked creatures yet do look well fav' voor'd,
When others are more wicked; not being the worst,
Stands in some rank of praise,—I'll go with thee;

[To General.

Thy fifty yet doth double five and twenty,
And thou art twice her love.

Gon.
Hear me, my lord;

What need you five and twenty, ten, or five,
To follow in a house, where twice so many
Have a command to tend you?

Reg.  What need one?

Lear. O, reason not the need; our basest beggars
Are in the poorest thing superious:
Allow not nature more than nature needs,
Man's life is cheap as beasts, thou art a lady;
If only to go warm were gorgeous,
Why, nature needs not what thou gorgeous wear'st,
Which scarcely keeps thee warm.—But, for true need,
You heavens, give me that patience, patience I need!
You see me here, you gods, a poor old man,
As full of grief as age; wretched in both!
If it be you that stir these daughters' hearts
Against their father, fool me not so much
To bear it tamely; touch me with noble anger!
O, let not women's weapons, water-drops,
Stain my man's cheeks!—No, you unnatural hags,
I will have such revenges on you both,
That all the world shall—I will do such things,—
What they are, yet I know not; but they shall be
The terrors of the earth. You think, I'll weep,
No, I 'll not weep:—
I have full cause of weeping; but this heart
Shall break into a hundred thousand daws,
Or ere I 'll weep.—O, fool, I shall go mad!

[Exit Lear, Gloucester, Kent, and Fool.

Corn. Let us withdraw, 'twill be a storm.

[Storm heard at a distance.

Reg.  This house
Is little; the old man and his people cannot
Be well bestow'd.

Gon. 'Tis his own blame; he hath put Himself from rest, and must needs taste his folly.

Reg. For his particular, I'll receive him gladly,
But not one follower.

Gon.  So am I purpos'd.

Where is my lord of Gloucester?

Re-enter Gloucester.

Corn. Follow'd the old man forth—he is return'd.

Glo. The king is in high rage.

Corn.  Whither is he going?

Glo. He calls to horse; but will I know not whither.

Corn. 'Tis best to give him way; he leads himself.

Gon. My lord, entreat him by no means to stay.

Glo. Alack, the night comes on, and the bleak winds
Do sorely ruffle; for many miles about
There's scarce a bush.

Reg.  O, sir, to wilful men,
The injuries, that they themselves procure,
Must be their schoolmasters: Shut up your doors;
He is attended with a desperate train;
And that they may license him to be acting
To have his ear abus'd, wisdom bids fear.

Corn. Shut up your doors, my lord; 'tis a wild night:
My Regan counsels well: come out o' the storm.

[Exeunt.

ACT III.

SCENE I.—A Heath.

A storm is heard, with thunder and lightning. Enter Kent, and a Gentleman, meeting.

Kent. Who's here, beside foul weather?

Gent. One minded like the weather, most unequally.

Kent. I know you; Where's the king?

Gent. Contending with the fretful element;

Bids the wind blow the earth into the sea.
Or swell'd the curried waters 'bove the main,

That things might change, or cease: tears his white

Which the impatience of his eyes destroys,
Make his eyes, and make nothing of Strives in his little world of man to out-scorn

The to-and-fro conflicting wind and rain.
This night, wherein the cub drawn bear would couch,

The lion and the belly-pinched wolf

Keep their fur dry, unbonneted he runs,
And bids what will take all.

Kent.  But who is with him?

Gent. None but the fool; who labours to out-jest
His heart-struck injuries.

Kent.  Sir, I do know you;
And dare, upon the warrant of my art,

Commend a dear thing to you. There is division,

Although as yet the face of it be cover'd
With mutual cunning, 'twixt Albany and Cornwall;

Who have (as who have not, that their great stars

Thro' and set high!) servants, who seem no less;

Which are to France the spies and speculations

Intelligent of our state; what hath been seen,

Either in snuffs and packings of the dukus;

Or the hard rein which both of them have borne
Against the old kind king; or something deeper.

What you, and several, these are but furnishings,

But, true it is, from France there comes a power
Into this scatter'd kingdom; who already,

Wise in our negligence, have secret feet
Kent. Alas sir are you here? things that love night, Love not such nights as these; the wrathful skies Gallow the very wanderers of the dark, And make them keep their caves: Since I was man Such sheets of fire, such bursts of horrid thunder, Such groans of roaring wind and rain, I never Remember to have heard: man's nature cannot carry That affliction, nor the fear. Lear. Let the great gods, That keep this dreadful pother o'er our heads, Find out their enemies now. Tremble, thou wretch, That hast within thee undivulged crimes, Unwhipp'd of justice: hide thee, thou bloody hand; Thou perjur'd, and thou similar man of virtue That art incestuous: Cætitif, to pieces shake, That under covert and convenient seeming Hast practis'd on man's life!—Close rent-up guilts, Rive your concealing continents, and cry These dreadful summoners grace.—I am a man, More sin'd against, than sinning. Kent. Alack, bare-headed! Grasping my lord, hard by he is a hovel; Some friendship will it lend you against the tempest; Repose you there; while I to this hard house, (More hard than is the stone whereof'tis rais'd; Which even but now, demanding after you, Demed me to come in,) return, and force Their scanted courtesy. Lear. My wits begin to turn.— Come on, my boy: How dost, my boy? Art cold? I am cold myself.—Where is this straw, my fellow? The art of our necessities is strange, That can make vile things precious. Come, your hovel, Poor fool and knave, I have one part in my heart That's sorry yet for thee. Fool. He that has a little tiny wit,— With height, ho, the wind and the rain.— Must make content with his fortune fit; For the rain it raineth every day. Lear. True, my good boy.—Come, bring us to this hovel. [Enter Lear and Kent. Fool. This is a brave night to cool a courtisan.— I'll speak a prophecy ere I go: When priests are more in word than matter; When brewers mar their malt with water; When nobles are their tutors' tutors; No heretics burn'd, but wenches' suitors; When every case in law is right; No squire in debt, nor no poor knight; When landlords do not live in tongues: Nor cutpurses come not to throns; When usurers tell their gold i'the field; And bawds and whores do churches build;— Then shall the realm of Albion Come to great confusion. Then death the time, who lives to see 't. That going shall be w'd with feet. This prophecy Merlin shall make; for I live before his time. [Exit. SCENE III.—A Room in Gloucester's Castle. Enter Gloster and Edmund. Glo. Alack, alack, Edmund, I like not this unnatural dealing: When I desired their leave that I might pity him, they took from me the use of mine own house; charged me on pain of their perpetual displeasure, neither to speak of him, entreat for him, nor any way sustain him.
KING LEAR.

Edm. Most savage, and unnatural!

Glo. Go to; say you nothing: There is division between the dukes; and a worse matter than that: I have received a letter this night:—'tis dangerous to be spoken;—I have locked the letter in my closet; these injures the king now bears will be revenged home; there is part of a power already footed: we must incline to the king. I will seek him, and pri vily relieve him: go you, and maintain talk with the duke, that my charity be not of him perceived: If he ask for me, I am ill, and gone to bed. If I die for it, as no less is threatened me, the king my old master must be relieved. There is some strange thing toward, Edmund; pray you, be careful.

Enter Lear, Kent, and Fool.

Kent. Here is the place, my lord; good my lord, the tyranny of the open night's too rough: For nature to endure. [Storm still.

Lear. Let me alone.

Kent. Good my lord, enter here.

Lear. Wilt break my heart? [Enter.

Kent. I'd rather break mine own: Good my lord, I think that much, that this tempest invades us to the skin: so 'tis to thee; [Storm But where the greater malady is fix'd, The lesser is scarce felt. Thou'rt shun a hear

But if thy flight lay toward the raging sea, Thou'rt meet the bear' the mouth. When the mind's The body's delicate: the tempest in my mind. [Fool. Doth from my senses take all feeling else, Save what beats thee?—Fool! All ingratitude! Is it not as this mouth should bear this hand, For lifting food to't?—But I will punish home:— No, I will weep no more.—In such a night To shut me out!—Pour on; I will endure:— In such a night as this! O Regan, General!— Your old kind father, whose frank heart gave all,— O, that way madness lies; let me shun that: No more of that,—

Kent. Good my lord, enter here.

Lear. Pr'ythee, go in thyself; seek thine own case; This tempest will not give me leave to ponder On things would hurt me more.—But I'll go in: Io, boy; go first.—[To the Fool.] You houseless poverty,

Nay, get thee in. I'll pray, and then I'll sleep.—

Poor naked wretches, wheresoe'er you are, That bide the peltig of this pitiless storm, How shall your houseless heads, and unfed sides, Your loo'd and window'd raggedness, defend you From seasons such as these? O, I have ta'en Too little care of this! Take physic, pomp; Expose thyself to feel what wretches feel; That thou mayst shake the superflux to them, And shew the heavens more just.

Edg. [Within.] Fathom and half, fathom and half! Poor Tom! [The Fool runs out from the hovel.

Foot. Come not in here, nuncle, here's a spirit. Help me, help me!

Kent. Give me thy hand. —Who's there?

Foot. A spirit, a spirit; he says his name's poor Tom.

Kent. What art thou that dost grumble there? I come forth.

[Fool. Enter Edgar, disguised as a madman.

Edg. Away! the soul fiend follows me!—

Through the sharp Hawthorn blows the cold wind.—

Humph! go to thy cold bed and warm thee.

Lear. Hast thou given all to thy two daughters? And art thou come to this?

Edg. Who gives anything to poor Tom? whom the foul fiend hath led through fire and through flame, through ford and whirlpool, over log and quagmire; that hath laid knives under his pillow, and halters in his pet; set ratsbane by his porridge; made him proud of heart, to ride on a bay trotting horse over four-inched bridges, to course his own shadow for a traitor:—Bless thy five wits! Tom's a-coil.—O, do, do, do, do, —Bless thee from whirlwinds, star-blasting, and taking! Do poor Tom some charity, whom the soul fiend vexes: There could I have him now,—and there,—and there,—and there again, and there.

Lear. What, have his daughters brought him to this pass?

Could'st thou save nothing? Did'st thou give them all? Fool. No, I reserved a blanket, else we had all been shamed.

Lear. Now, all the plagues that in the pendulous air Hang fated o'er men's faults, light on thy daughters! Kent. He hath no daughters, sir. [Nature

Lear. Death, traitor! nothing could have subdued To such a lowness, but his unkind daughters.— It is the fashion, that disordered families Should have this little mercy on their flesh? Judicious punishment! twas this flesh begot Those pelican daughters.

Edg. Pillock sat on pillock's hill;— Halloo, halloo, loo, loo!—

Foot. This cold night will turn us all to fools and madmen.

Edg. Take heed o' the soul fiend: Obey thy parents; keep thy word justly; swear not; com'nt not with man's sworn spouse; set not thy sweet heart on proud array: Tom's a-coil.

Lear. What hast thou been?—

Edg. A serving-man, proud in heart and mind; that curled my hair; wore gloves in my cap, served the lust of my mistress' heart, and did the act of darkness in her company; brought my father, and many others I know by words, and broke them in the sweet face of heaven: one, that slept in the contriving of lust, and waked to do it: Wine loved I deeply; dice dearly; and in woman, out-paramour'd the Turk: False of heart, light of ear, bloody of hand; Hog in sloth, fox in stealth, wolf in greediness, dog in malign, lion in prey. Let not the cracking of shoes, nor the rustling of silks, betray thy poor heart to women: Keep thy foot out of brothels, thy hand out of plackets, thy pen from lenders' books, and defy the soul fiend.—Still through the Hawthorn blows the cold wind: Says suum, man, ha no nonny, dolphin my boy, my boy, sessa: let him trot by. [Storm still continues.

Lear. Why, thou wert better in thy grave, than to answer with thy uncover'd body this extremity of the skies.—Is man no more than this? Consider him well: Thou owest the worm no silk, the beast no hide, the sheep no wool, the cat no perfume:—Ilia! here's three of us are sophistication!—Thou art the thing itself: unaccommodated man is no more but such a poor, bare, forked animal as thou art.—Off, off, you leadings:—Come; unbutton him.

Fool. Pr'ythee, nuncle, be contented; this is a naughty night to swim in.—Now a little fire in a wild field were like an old lecher's heart; a small spark, all the rest of his body cold.—Look, here comes a walking fire.

Edg. This is the foul fiend Fibberiggibbet: he begins at curfew, and walks till the first cock; he gives the web and the pin, squints the eye, and makes the bare-lip; mildews the white wheat, and hurts the poor creature of earth.

Saint Wibold, footed thrice the wold;
He met the night-mare, and her nine-fold;
Bid her alight,
And her truth plight,
And, avoint thee, witch, avoint thee!
Kent. How fares your grace?

Enter GLOSTER, with a torch.

Lear. What's he?

Kent. Who's there? What is't you seek?

Glo. What are you there? Your names?

Edg. Poor Tom; that eats the swimming frog, the toad, the tadpole, the wall-newt, and the water; that in the fury of his heart, when the foul fiend rages, eats cow-dung for sallats; swallows the old rat, and the ditch-dog, drinks the green mantle of the standing pool; who is whipped from thyding to thyding, and stoned, punished, and imprisoned; who hath bad three suits to his back, six shirts to his body, horse to ride, and weapon to wear.

But mice, and rats, and such small deer,
Have been Tom's food for seven long year.

Beware my follower.—Peace, Smolkin; peace, thou fiend!

Glo. What, hath your grace no better company?

Edg. The prince of darkness is a gentleman;
Mode he's call'd, and Mahu.
Glo. Our flesh and blood, my lord, is grown so vile, That it doth hate what gets it.

Edg. Poor Tom's a cold.

Glo. Go in with me; my duty cannot suffer To obey all your daughters' hard commands: Though their injunction be to bar my doors, And let this tyrannous night take hold upon you; Yet have I ventur'd to come seek you out, And find you where both fire and wood is ready.

Lear. First let me talk with this philosopher:—

What is the cause of thunder?

Kent. Good my lord, take his offer;

Go into the house.

Lear. I'll talk a word with this same learned The.-
What is your study?

[ban.]—Edg. How to prevent the fiend, and to kill vermin.

Lear. Let me ask you one word in private.

Kent. Impomptune him once more to go, my lord, His wits begin to unsettle.

Glo. Canst thou blame him? His daughters seek his death:—Ah, that good Kent!—

He said it would be thus:—Poor banish'd man!—
Thou say'st the king grows mad; I'll tell thee, friend, I am almost mad myself: I had a son,
Now outlaw'd from my blood; he sought my life, But lately, very late; I lov'd him, friend,—
No father his son dearer: true to tell thee,

[Torments on.]

The grief hath cra'd my wits. What a night's this! I do beseech your grace,

Lear. O, cry you mercy, Noble philosopher, your company.

Edg. Tom's a cold.

Glo. In, fellow, there to the novei: keep thee warm.

Lear. Come, let's in all.

Kent. This way, my lord.

Lear. With him;

I will keep still with my philosopher.

Kent. Good my lord, sooth him; let him take the Glo. Take him you on.
[Exit.]

Kent. Sirrah, come on; go along with us.

Lear. Come, good Athenian.

Glo. No words, no words.

Ilush.

Edg. Child Rawland to the dark tower came,
His word was still,—Fie, Jok, and fum,
I smell the blood of a British man. [Exeunt.

SCENE V.—A Room in Gloster's Castle.

Enter CORNWALL AND EDGAR.

CORN. I will have my revenge, ere I depart his house.

EDG. How, my lord, I may be censured, that nature thus gives way to loyalty, something fears me to think of.

CORN. I now perceive, it was not altogether your brother's evil disposition made him seek his death; but a provoking merit, set a-work by a reprovable badness in himself.

EDG. How malicious is my fortune, that I must repent to be just! This is the letter he spoke of, which approves him an intelligent party to the advantages of France. O heavens! that this treason were not, or not I the detector!

CORN. Go with me to the duchess.

EDG. If the matter of this paper be certain, you have mighty business in hand.

CORN. True, or false, it hath made thee earl of Gloster. Seek out where thy father is, that he may be ready for our apprehension.

EDG. [Aside.] If I find him comfort, the king, it will still his suspicion more fully:—I will persevere in my course of loyalty, though the conflict be sore between that and my blood.

CORN. I will lay trust upon thee; and thou shalt find a dearer father in my love.

[Exeunt.

ACT III.—SCENE VI.

A Chamber in a Farm-House, adjoining the Castle.

Enter GLOSTER, LEAR, KENT, FOOL, and EDGAR.

Glo. Here is better than the open air; take it thankfully: I will piece out the comfort with what addition I can: I will not be long from you.

Kent. All the power of his wits has given way to his impatience:—The gods reward your kindness! [Exit GLOSTER.

EDG. Frateretto calls me; and tells me, Nero is an angler in the lake of darkness. Pray, innocent, and beware the foul fiend.

FOOL. Pr'ythee, nuncle, tell me, whether a madman be a gentleman, or a yeoman?

KENT. A king, a king!

FOOL. No; he's a yeoman, that has a gentleman to his son; for he's a mad yeoman, that sees his son a gentleman before him.

KENT. To have a thousand with red burning spits Come hissing in upon them:—

EDG. The foul fiend bites my back.

FOOL. He's mad, that trusts in the tameness of a wolf, a horse's heart, a boy's love, or a whore's talk.

Lear. It shall be done, I will arraign them straight—Come, sit thou here, most learned justice:—

Thou, sapient sir, sit here. [To the Fool.]—Now, you see foxes!—

EDG. Look, where he stands and glares!—

Wasten thou eyes at trial, madam?

3D
KING LEAR.

Come o'er the bourn, Bessy, to me:—
Fool. Her bait hath a leek, and she must not speak
Why she doth not come over to thee.

Edg. The foul head haunts poor Tom in the voice of a nightingale. Haply once in Tom's belly for two white herring. Croak not, black angel; I have no food for thee.

Kent. How do you, sir? Stand you not so amaz'd?

Fool. Will you lie down and rest upon the cushions?

Leir. I'll see their trial first:—Bring in the evidence.

Thou robbed man of justice, take thy place;—
And thou, his voice-fellow of equity, [To the Fool.]
Bench by his side:—You are of the commission.
Sit you too. [To Kent.]

Edg. Let us deal justly.

Sleep, or waketh thou, jolly shepherd?

Thy sleep be in the same.

And for one blast of thy mirthful mouth,
Thy sleep shall take no harm.

Pur! The cat is grey.

Leir. Arraign her first: 'tis Goneril. I here take my oath before this honourable assembly, she kicked the poor king her father.

Fool. Come hither, mistress; Is your name Goneril? Leir. She cannot deny it.

Fool. Cry you mercy, I took you for a joint-stool.

Leir. And here's another, whose warp'd looks proclaim
What store her heart is made of.—Stop her there!

Arms, arms, sword, fire!—Corruption in the place!
False justicer, why hast thou let her scape?

Edg. Bless thy five wits!

Kent. O pity!—Sir, where is the patience now, that you so oft have boasted to retain?

Edg. My tears begin to take his part so much, they'll mar my counterfeiting. [Aside.

Leir. The little dogs and all, Tray, Blanche, and Sweet-heart, see, they bark at me.

Edg. Tom will throw his head at them:—Avaunt, you curs!

Be thy mouth or black or white,
Tooth that poisons if it bite;
Mastiff, grey-hound, mongrel grim,
Hound, or spaniel, brace, or lynx;
Or booteil tike, or trundle-tail;
Tom will make them weep and wail:
For, with throwing thus my head,
Dogs leap the latch, and all are fled.

Do de, de de. Sessa. Come, march to wakes and fairs, and market towns:—Poor Tom, thy horn is dry, I'll bud. Then let them anatomize Regan, see what breeds about her heart: Is there any cause in nature, that makes these hard hearts?—You, sir, I entertain you for one of my hundred; only, I do not like the fashion of your garments: you will say, they are Persian attire; but let them be changed. [To Edg.]

Kent. Now, good my lord, lie here, and rest awhile.

Leir. What! no noise, make no noise; draw the curtains:—So, so, so: We'll go to supper the morning: So, so, so.

Fool. And I'll go to bed at noon.

Re-enter Gloster.

Glo. Good friend, I pray thee take him in thy arms; I have o'erheard a plot of death upon him:

There is a litter ready; lay him in's, [meet And drive towards Dover, friend, where thou shalt both welcome and protection. Take up thy master; If thou should'st half an hour, his life,

With thine, and all that offer to defend him,

Stand in assured loss: Take up, take up; And follow me, that will to some provision

Give thee quick conduct.

Kent. Oppress'd nature sleeps:—

This rest might yet have balm'd thy broken senses,

Which, if convenience will not allow,

Stand in hard cure.—Come, help to bear thy master; Thou must not stay behind. [To the Fool.

Glo. Come, come, away.

[Exeunt Kent, Gloster, and the Fool, bearing off the King.

Edg. When we our better see bearing our woes,

We scarcely think our necessities our foes.

Who alone suffers, suffers most o' the mind;

Leaving free things, and happy shows, behind;
But then the mind much sufferance doth o'erstep,

When grief hath nates, and bearing fellowship.

How light and portable my pain seems now,

When that, which makes me bend, makes the king

He could not smile, as I father'd him.—Tom, away:—

[how;

Mark the high noises: and thyself bewray,

When false opinion, whose wrong thought defiles thee,

In thy just proof, repeals, and reconciles thee.

What will hap more to-night, save 'scape the king!—

Lark, lark.

[Exit.

SCENE VII.—A Room in Gloster's Castle.

Enter Cornwall, Regan, Goneril, Edmund, and Servants.

Corn. Post speedily to my lord your husband; shew him this letter:—the army of France is landed:—

Seek out the villain Gloster. [Exeunt some of the Servants.

Edg. Hang him instantly.

Con. Pluck out his eyes.

Corn. Leave him to my displeasure.—Edmund, keep you our sister company; the revenues we are bound to take upon your traitorous father, are not fit for your beholding. Advise the duke, where you are going, to a mostestinate preparation; we are bound to the like. Our posts shall be swift, and intelligent between us. Farewell, dear sister;—farewell, my lord of Gloster.

Enter Steward.

How now? Where's the king?

Stew. My lord of Gloster hath convey'd him hence:

Some five or six and thirty of his knights,

Hot quoistress after him, met him at gate;

Who, with some other of the lord's dependants,

Are gone with him towards Dover; where they boast to have well armed friends.

Corn. Get horses for your mistress.

Con. Farewell, sweet lord, and sister.

[Exeunt Goneril and Edmund.

Corn. Edmund, farewell, farewell.—Go, seek the traitor Gloster.

Finion him like a thief, bring him before us:—

[Exeunt other Servants.

Though well we may not pass upon his life

Without the form of justice; yet our power

Shall do a courtesy to our wrath, which men

May blame, but not control. Who's there? The traitor?
ACT IV.—SCENE I.

787

Reg. Ingrateful fox! 'tis he.

Corn. Bind fast his corky arms.

Glo. What mean your graces? — Good my friends, consider

You are my guests: do me no foul play, friends.

Corn. Bind him, I say. [Servants bind him.

Reg. Hard, hard — O filthy traitor!

Glo. Unmerciful lady as you are, I am none.

Corn. To this chair bind him:—Villain, thou shalt find—

Glo. By the kind gods, 'tis most ignobly done

To pluck me by the beard.

Reg. So white, and such a traitor! —

Glo. Naught but a husband.

These hairs, which thou dost ravish from my chin,
Will quicken, and accuse thee: I am your host;
With robbers' hands, my hospitable favours
You should not ruffle thus. What will you do?

Corn. Come, sir, what letters had you late from France?

Reg. Be simple-answer'd, for we know the truth.

Corn. And what confederacy have you with the Late footed in the kingdom? — [traitors

Reg. To whose hands have you sent the lunatic king?

Speak.

Glo. I have a letter guisingly set down,
Which came from one that's of a neutral heart,
And not from one oppos'd.

Corn. Cunning.

Reg. And false.

Corn. Where hast thou sent the king?

Glo. To Dover.

Reg. Wherefore To Dover? Wast thou not charg'd at thy peril—

Corn. Wherefore to Dover? Let him first answer that.

Glo. I am tied to the stake, and I must stand the

Reg. Wherefore to Dover? — [course.

Glo. Because I would not see thy cruel nails
Pluck out his poor old eye: nor thy fierce sister
In his anointed flesh stick boarish fangs.

The sea, with such a storm as his bare head
In hell-black night endur'd, would have buo'y'd up
And quench'd the stolten fires: yet, poor old heart,
He help the heavens to rain.

If wolves had at thy gate howl'd that stern time,
There should it have said: Good porter, turn the key;
All cruels else subscrib'd: — But I shall see

The winged vengeance overtake such children.

Corn. See it shalt thou never:—Fellows, hold the

Upon these eyes of thine I'll set my foot. [chair:

[Gloster is held down in his chair, while Cornwall plucks out one of his eyes, and sets his foot on it.

Glo. He, that will think to live till he be old,
Give me some help: — O cruel! O ye gods!

Reg. One side will mock another; the other too.

Corn. If you see vengeance,—

Serv. Hold your hand, my lord; I have serv'd you ever since I was a child;
But better service have I never done you
Than now to bid you hold.

Reg. How now, you dog? —

Serv. If you did wear a beard upon your chin,
I'd shake it on this quarrel: What do you mean?
Corn. My villain! [Draws, and runs at him.

Serv. Nay, then come on, and take the chance of anger.

[Draws. They fight. Cornwall is wounded.

Reg. Give me thy wounding — [To another Servant

A peasant stand up thus! —

Serv. O, I am slain! — My lord, you have one eye left
To see some mischief on him:—O! — [Die.

Corn. Lest it see more, prevent it:—Out, vile jelly! Where is thy lustre now?

[Throws out Gloster's other eye, and throws it on the ground.

Glo. All dark and comfortless. — Where's my son Edmund?

Edmund, enkindle all the sparks of nature,
To quit this horrid act.

Reg. Out, treacherous villain! Thou call'st on him that hates thee: it was he
That made the overthrow of thy treasons to us;
Who is too good to pity thee.

Glo. O my follies! Then Edgar was abus'd.—

Kind gods, forgive me that, and prosper him!

Reg. Go, thrust him out at gates, and let him smell
His way to Dover. — How'st thou, my lord? How look you?
Corn. I have receiv'd a hurt.—Follow me, lady.—

Turn out that eyeless villain: — throw this slave
Upon the dunghill. — Regan, I bleed apace:

Utinyme comes this hurt: Give me your arm.

1 Serv. I'll never care what wickedness I do, If this man come to good.

2 Serv. If she live long, And, in the end, meet the old course of death, Women will all turn monsters. [lam

1 Serv. Let's follow the old earl, and get the Bed- To lead him where he would; his roguish madness Allows itself to any thing.

2 Serv. Go thou; I'll fetch some flax, and whites of eggs,
To apply to his bleeding face. Now, heaven help him! — [Exit sorrowfully.

ACT IV.

SCENE I.—The Heath.

Enter Edgar.

Edg. Yet better thus, and known to be contemn'd, Than still contemn'd and flatter'd. — To be worst.
The lowest, and most dejected thing of fortune, Stands still in esperance, lives not in fear; The lamenetable change is from the best: The worst returns to laughter. Welcome then, Thou unsubstantial air, that I embrace! The wretch, that thou hast blown unto the worst. Owes nothing to thy blasts. — But who comes here? —

Enter Gloster, led by an Old Man.

My father, poorly led! World, world, O world! But that thy strange mutations make us hate thee, Life would not yield to age.

Old Man. O ny good lord, I have been your ten- ant, and your father's tenant, these fourscore years. Gloster. Away, get thee away: good friend, be gone: Thy comforts can do me no good at all; Thee they may hurt.

Old Man. Alack, sir, you cannot see your way. Gloster. I have no way, and therefore want no eyes; I stumbled when I saw: — full oft 'tis seen, Our mean secures us; and our mere defects Prove our commodities. — Ah, dear son Edgar, The food of thy abused father's wrath! Might I but live to see thee in my touch, I'd say, I had eyes again!
KING LEAR.

Old Man. How now! Who's there?
Edg. [Aside.] O gods! Who isn't can say, I am at I am worse than e'er I was. [the worst]
Old Man. 'Tis poor mad Tom. Edg. [Aside.] And worse I may be yet: The worst So long as we can say, This is the worst. [is not, Old Man. Fellow, where goest?] Glo. Is it a beggar-man?
Old Man. Madman and beggar too.
Glo. He has some reason, else he could not beg. I' the last night's storm I such a fellow saw; Which made me think a man a worm: My son Came then into my mind; and yet my mind Was then scarce friends with him; I have heard more As flies to wanton boys, are we to the gods; [since: They kill us for their sport.
Edg. How should this be?
Bad is the trade must play the fool to sorrow.
Ang'ring itself and others. [Aside.]—Bless thee, Glo. Is that the naked fellow? [mater! Old Man. Ay, my Lord.
Glo. Then, pr'ythee, get thee gone: If, for my sake, Thou wilt o'ertake us, hence a mile or twain, I' the way to Dover, do it for ancient love; And bring some covering for this naked soul, Whom I'll entreat to lead me.
Old Man. Alack, sir, he's mad.
Glo. 'Tis the times' plague when madmen lead the daughters to bid them, or rather do thy pleasure; [blind. Above the rest, be gone.
Old Man. I'll bring him the best parcel that I have, Come on what will. [Exit.
Glo. Sirrah, naked fellow.
Edg. Poor Tom's a cold.—I cannot dauv it further. [Aside.
Glo. Come, hitter, fellow.
Edg. [Aside.] And yet I must.—Bless thee sweet eyes, they bleed.
Glo. Know'st thou the way to Dover?
Edg. Both stile and gate, horse-way, and foot-path. Poor Tom hath been scared out of his good wits: Bless the good man from the foul fiend! Five fiends have been in poor Tom at once; of lust, as Quicksilver elabo-ridoodness, prince of darkness; M flakes, of stealing; Mode, of murder; and Flibbertigibbet, of mopping and mowing; who since possesses chambermaids and waiting-women. So, bless thee, master!
Glo. Here, take this purse, thou whom the heaven's plagues Have humbled to all strokes: that I am wretched, Makes thee the happier.—Heavens, deal so still! Let the superfluous, and lust-dieted man, That slaves your ordinance, that will not see Because he doth not feel, feel your power quickly; So distribution should undo excess, And each man have enough.—Doth thou know Dover?
Edg. Ay, master.
Glo. There is a cliff, whose high and bending head Looks fearfully, and lust-dieted man, That slaves your ordinance, that will not see Because he doth not feel, feel your power quickly; So distribution should undo excess, And each man have enough.—Dost thou know Dover?
Edg. Give me thy arm; Poor Tom shall lead thee. [Exeunt.

SCENE II.—Before the Duke of Albany's Palace.

Enter Gonereil and Edmund; Steward meeting them.

Gen. Welcome, my lord: I marvel, our mild husband Not met us on the way.—Now, where's your master!

Stew. Madam, within; but never man so chang'd: I told him of the army that was landed; He smil'd at it: I told him, you were coming; His answer was, The worst: of Gloster's treachery, And of the loyal service of his son. When I inform'd him, then he call'd me sot; And told me, I had turn'd the wrong side out:— What most he should dislike, seems pleasant to him; What like, offensive.

Gen. Then shall you go no further.

[To Edmund.] It is the coward spirit of his fire, That dare not undertake, 'll not feel wrongs, Which tie him to an answer: Our wishes, on the way, May prove effects. Back, Edmund, to my brother; Hasten his musters and conduct his powers: I must change arms at home, and give the distaff Into my husband's hands. This trusty servant Shall pass between us: ere long you are like to hear, If you dare venture in your own behalf, A mistress's command. Wear this, spare speech; [Giving a favour. Decline your head: this kiss, if it durst speak, Would stretch thy spirits up into the air;— Conceive, and fare thee well.
Edm. Yours in the ranks of death.
Gen. My most dear Gloster! [Exit Edmund. O, the difference of man and man! To thee A woman's services are due; my fool, Usurps my bed.
Stew. Madam, here comes my lord. [Exit Steward.

Enter Albany.

Gen. I have been worth the whistle.

Edm. O Gonereil! You are not worth the dust which the rude wind Blows in your face.—I fear your disposition; That nature, which contends its origin, Cannot be border'd certain in itself; Sue that herself will silver and disbranch From her material sap, perforse must wither, And come to deadly use.
Gen. No more; the text is foolish.

Alb. Wisdom and goodness to the vile seem vile: Filths savour but themselves. What have you done? Tigers, not daughters, what have you perform'd? A father, and a gracious aged man, Whose reverence the head-lugg'd bear would lick, Most barbarous, most degenerate! have you maddened? Could my good brother suffer you to do it? A man, a prince, by him so benefitted? If that the heavens do not their visible spirits Send quickly down to tame these vile offences, 'Twill come, Humanity must perforse prey on itself, Like monsters of the deep.
Gen. Milk-liver'd man! That bear'st a cheek for blows, a head for wounds; Who hast not in thy brows an eye discerning Thine honour from thy suffering: that not know'st, Fools do those villains pity, who are punch'd Ere they have done their mischief. Where's thy drum? France spreads his banners in our noiseless land; With plumed helm thy slayer begins threats; Whilst thou, a moral fool, sit'st still, and cry'st, Alack, why does he so?

Alb. See thyself, devil! Proper deformity seems not in the fiend So horrid, as in woman.
Gen. O vain tool!
Alb. Thou chang'd and self-cover'd thing, for shame, Be-monger not thy feature. Were it my fitness
To let these hands obey my blood,
They are apt enough to dislocate and tear
Fhy flesh and bones:—How'er thou art a fiend,
A woman's shape doth shield thee.

Gloster, marry, your manhood now!—

Enter a Messenger.

Alb. What news?

Mess. O, my good lord, the duke of Cornwall's
Slain by his servant, going to put out [deed:
The other eye of Gloster.

Gloster's eyes!—

Mess. A servant that he bred, thrill'd with remorse,
Oppos'd against the act, bending his sword
To his great master; who, threat'ning enrag'd,
Flew on him, and amongst them fell'd him dead:
But not without that harmful stroke, which since
Hath pluck'd him after.

This shews you are above,
You justicers, that these our nether crimes
So speedily can venge!—But, O poor Gloster!
Lost he his other eye!

Both, both, my lord,—
This letter, madam, cries a speedy answer;
'Tis from your sister.

Gon. [aside.] One way I like this well;
But being widow, and my Gloster with her,
May all the building in my fancy pluck
Upon my hateful life: Another way,
The news is not so tart,—I'll read, and answer. [Exit.

Alb. Where was his son, when they did take his Come with my lady hither. [eyes?

Alb. He is not here.

Alb. No, my good lord; I met him back again.
Alb. Knows he the wickedness? [him;
Mess. Ay, my good lord; 'twas he inform'd against
And quit the house on purpose, that their punishment
Might have the freer course.

Gloster, I live
To thank thee for the love thou show'dst the king,
And to revenge thine eyes.—Come hither, friend;
Tell me what more thou know'st!—

SCENE III.—The French Camp, near Dover.

Enter Kent and a Gentleman.

Kent. Why the king of France is so suddenly gone back know you the reason?

Genet. Something he left imperfect in the state,
Which since his coming forth is thought of; which Imports to the kingdom so much fear and danger,
That his personal return was most requir'd,
And necessary.

Kent. Who hath he left behind him general?

Kent. Did your letters pierce the queen to any demonstration of grief?

Genet. Ay, sir; she took them, read them in my presence;
And now and then an ample tear trill'd down
Her delicate cheek: it seem'd, she was a queen
Over her passion; who, most rebel-like,
Sought to be the king o'er her.

Kent. O, then it mov'd her.

Genet. Not to rage: patience and sorrow strove
Who should express her goodliest. You have seen
Sunshine and rain at once: her smiles and tears
Were like a better day: Those happy smiles,
That play'd on her riper lip, did not to know
What guests were in her eyes; which parted thence,
As pearls from diamonds drop'd.—In brief, sorrow
Would be a rarity most belov'd, if all

Could so become it.

Kent. Made she no verbal question?

Genet. 'Faith, once or twice she hear'd the name of Paintingly forth, as if it press'd her heart;—[Father
Cried, Sisters! sisters!—Shame of sisters! sisters!
Kent! father! sisters! What? is the storm? 'tis the night?
Let pity not be believ'd!—There she shook
The holy water from her heavenly eyes,
And clamour moisten'd:—then away she started
To deal with grief alone.

Kent. It is the stars,
The stars above us, govern our conditions;
Else one sole mate and mate could not beget
Such different issues. You spoke not with her since?

Genet. No.

Kent. Was this before the king return'd?

Genet. No, since.

Kent. Well, sir; the poor distress'd Learis'the town:
Who sometime, in his better tune, remembers
What in concealment wrap me up awhile;
Will yield to see his daughter.

Genet. Why, good sir? [kindness
Kent. A sovereign shame so embows him: his own un-
That stripp'd her from his benefaction, turn'd her
To foreign casualties, gave her dear rights
To his dog-hearted daughters,—these things stig
His mind so venomously, that burning shame
Detains him from Cordelia.

Genet. Alack, poor gentleman!

Kent. Of Albany's and Cornwall's powers you heard
Genet. 'Tis so; they are afoot. [not?
Kent. Well, sir, I'll bring you to our master, Lear,
And leave you to attend him: some dear cause
Will in concealment wrap me up awhile;
When I am known aright, you shall not grieve
Lending me this acquaintance. I pray you, go
Along with me. [Exit.

SCENE IV.—The same. A Tent.

Enter CORNEILLA, Physician, and Soldiers.

Cor. Alack, 'tis he; why, he was met even now
As mad as the vex'd sea: singing aloud:
Crown'd with rank furmiter, and furrow weeds,
With harlocks, hemlock, nettles, cuckoo-flowers,
Darnel, and all the idle weeds that grow
In our own mad corn,—I can't but laugh at Search every acre in the high-grown field,
And bring him to our eye. [Exit an Officer.]—What
Can man's wisdom do,
In the restoring his bereaved sense?
He, that helps him, take all my outward worth.

Phil. There are means, madam:
Our foster-nurse of nature is repose,
The which he lacks; that to provoke in him,
Are many simples operative, whose power
Will close the eye of anguish.

Cor. All bless'd secrets,
All you unpublic'd virtues of the earth,
Spring with my tears! be aidant, and remediate;
In the good man's distress!—Seek, seek for him;
Lest his ungovern'd rage dissolve the life
That wants the means to lead it.

Enter a Messenger.

Mess. Madam, news
The British powers are marching hitherward.

Cor. This is known: our preparation stands
In expectation of them.—O deare father,
It is thy business that I go about;
Therefore great France
My mourning, and important tears, hath pisted.
KING LEAR.

No blown ambition doth our arms incite,
But love, dear love, and our ag’d father’s right:
Soon may I hear, and see him! [Exeunt.

SCENE V.— A Room in Gloster’s Castle.

Enter Regan and Steward.

Reg. But are my brother’s powers set forth?

Stew. Ay, madam.

Reg. In person there?

Stew. Madam, with much ado:

Your sister is the better soldier.

Reg. Lord Edmund spake not with your lord at home?

Stew. No, madam.

Reg. What might import my sister’s letter to him?

Stew. I know not, lady.

Reg. ’Faith, he is posted hence on serious matter.

It was great ignorance, Gloster’s eyes being out,
To let him live; where he arrives, he moves
All hearts against us; Edmund, I think, is gone,
In pity of his misery, to despach
His nighted life; moreover, to decery
The strength of the enemy.

Stew. I must needs after him, madam; with my letter.

Reg. Our troops set forth to-morrow; stay with us;
The ways are dangerous.

Stew. I may not, madam; My lady charg’d my duty in this business.

Reg. Why should she write to Edmund? Might not Transport her purposes by words? Belike,
[you Something—I know not what— I’ll love thee much,
Let me unseal the letter.

Stew. Madam, I had rather—

Reg. I know, your lady does not love her husband; I am sure of that: and, at her late being here,
She gave strange coochild, and most speaking looks
To noble Edmund: I know, you are of her bosom.

Stew. I, madam?

Reg. I speak in understanding; you are, I know it:
Therefore, I do advise you, take this note:
My lord is dead; Edmund and I have talk’d;
And more convenient is he for my hand,
Than for your lady’s:—You may gather more.
If you do find him, pray you, give him this;
And when your mistress hears thus much from you,
I pray, desire her call her wisdom to her.
So, fare you well.
If you do chance to hear of that blind traitor,
Preferrment falls on him that cuts him off.

Stew. ’Would I could meet him, madam! I would
What party I do follow.

[shew Reg.

Stew. Fare thee well. [Exeunt.

SCENE VI.—The Country near Dover.

Enter Gloster, and Edgar dressed like a peasant.

Glo. When shall we come to the top of that same hill?

Edg. You do climb up it now: look how we labour.

Glo. Methinks, the ground is even.

Edg. Horrible steep:
Hark, do you hear the sea?

Glo. No, truly.

Edg. Why, then your other senses grow imperfect
By your eyes’ anguish.

Glo. So may it be, indeed:
Methinks, thy voice is alter’d; and thou speak’st
In better phrase, and matter, than thou didst.

Edg. You are much deceiv’d; in nothing am I
But in my garments. [chag’d, Glo.

Methinks, you are better spoken.

Edg. Come on, sir; here’s the place:—stand still,

—How fearful
And dirty ’tis, to cast one’s eyes so low!

The crowns, and choosings, that wing the midway air,
Shew scarce so gross as beetles: Half way down
Hangs one that gathers samphire; dreadful trade!

Methinks, he seems no bigger than his head:
The fishermen, that walk upon the beach,
Appear like mice; and you tall authoring bark,
Diminish’d to her cock; her cock, a buoy
Almost too small for sight: The murmuring surge,
That on the unnumber’d idle pebbles chance,
Cannot be heard so high:—I’ll look no more;
Lest my brain turn, and the deficient sight
Topple down headlong.

Glo. Set me where you stand.

Edg. Give me your hand: You are now within a foot
Of the extreme verge; for all beneath the moon
Would I not leap upright.

Glo. Let go my hand.

Here, friend, is another purse; in it, a jewel
Well worth a poor man’s taking: Fairies, and gods,
Prosper it with thee! Go thou further off;
Bid me farewell, and let me hear thee going.
Edg. Now fare you well, good sir. [Seems to go.

Glo. With all my heart.

Edg. Why do I trifle thus with his despair,
Is done to cure it.

Glo. O you mighty gods! This world I do renounce; and, in your sights,
Shake patiently my great affliction off: If I could bear it longer, and not fall To quarrel with your great opposeless wills,
My snuff, and loathed part of nature, should Burn itself out. If Edgar lives, O, bless him!— Now, fellow, fare thee well. [He leaps, and falls along. —

Glo. Gone, sir? farewell. —

And yet I know not how conceit may rob
The treasury of life, when life itself
Yields to the theft: Had he been where he thought,
By this, had thought been past.—Alive, or dead! Ho you sir! friend!—Hear you, sir!—speak! Thou might he pass indeed:—Yet he revives:
What are you, sir?

Glo. Away, and let me die.

Edg. Had’st thou been aught but gossomer, feathers,
So many fathom down precipitating, [air,
Thou had’st shiver’d like an egg: but thou dost breathe; [sourd.
Hast heavy substance; bleed’st not; speak’st; art
Ten masts at each make not the altitude,
Which thou hast perpendicularly fall;
Thy life’s a miracle: Speak yet again.

Glo. But have I fallen, or no?

Edg. From the dread summit of this chalky bourn
Look up a height;—the shrill-gorg’d lark so far Cannot be seen or heard; de but look up.

Glo. Aack! I have no eyes.—

Is wretchedness depriv’d that benefit,
To end itself by death? I’was yet some comfort,
When misery could beguile the tyrant’s rage,
And frustrate his proud will.

Edg. Give me your arm:

Up, up! ——How is’t? Feel you your legs? You
Glo. Too well, too well. [stand.

Edg. This is above all strangeness.

Upon the crown o’t’the cliff, what thing was that
Which parted from you?

Glo. A poor unfortunate beggar.

Edg. As I stood here below, methought, his eyes
Were two full moons; he had a thousand noses,
Horns whelk'd, and wav'd like the emirged sea;
it was some fiend: Therefore, thou happy father,
Think that the clearest gods, who make them honours
Of men's impossibilities, have preserv'd thee.
Glo. I do remember now: henceforth I'll bear
Affliction, till it do cry out itself.
Dough, enough, and, die. That thing you speak of,
I took it for a man; often 'twould say,
The fiend, the fiend: be led me to that place.
Edg. Bear free and patient thoughts.—But who comes here?

Enter Lear, fantastically dressed up with flowers.
The safer sense will ne'er accommodate His master thus.
Lear. No, they cannot touch me for coining:
I am the king himself.
Edg. O thou side-piercing sight!
Lear. Nature's above art in that respect.—There's your press-money. That fellow handles his bow like a crow-keeper: draw me a clothier's yard.—Look, look, a mouse! Peace! Peace;—this piece of toasted cheese will do't.—There's my gauntlet; I'll prove it on a giant.—Bring up the brown bills.—O, well flown, bird!—I the clout, i' the clout: hewgh:
Give the word.
Edg. Sweet marjoram.
Lear. Pass.
Glo. I know that voice.
Lear. Ha! Goneril!—with a white beard!—They flatter'd me like a dog; and told me, I had white hairs in my beard, ere the black ones were there.
To say ay, and no, to every thing I said!—Ay and no, there is no such divinity. When the rain came to wet me once, and the wind to make me chatter;
when the thunder would not peace at my bidding;
there I found them, there I smelt them out. Go to,
they are not men o' their words: they told me I was every thing; 'tis a lie: I am notague-proof.
Glo. The trick of that voice I do well remember:
Is't not the king?
Lear. Ay, every inch a king:
When I do stare, see, how the subject quakes.
I pardon that man's life: What was thy cause?
Adultery.—
Thou shalt not die: Die for adultery! No:
The wren goes to't, and the small gilded fly
Darts, lighter in his sin.
Let suspicion thrive, for Goneril's bastard son
Was kinder to his father, than my daughters
Got 'tween the lawful sheets.
To't, luxury, pell-mell, for I lack soldiers.—
Behold you' simpering dame,
Whose face between her forks presageth snow;
That minces virtue, and does shake the head
To hear of pleasure's name;
The fitchew, nor the sailed horse, goes to't
With a more riotous appetite.
Down from the waist they are countains,
Though women all above:
But to the girdle do the gods inherit.
Beneath is all the fields': there's hell, there's darkness,
there is the sulphurous pit, burning, scalding, stench, consumption:—Fye, fye, fye! pah! pah!
Give me an ounce of civet, good apothecary,
to sweeten my imagination: there's money for thee.
Glo. O, let me kiss that hand.
Lear. Let me wipe it first: it smells of mortality.
Beneath is all the fields': there's hell, there's darkness,

Give me an ounce of civet, good apothecary,
to sweeten my imagination: there's money for thee.
Lear. I remember thine eyes well enough. Dost thou squint at me? No, do thy worst, blind Cupid; I'll not love.—Read thou this challenge; mark but the penning of it.
Glo. Were all the letters sons, I could not see one.
Edg. I would not take this from report:—it is,
And my heart breaks at it.
Lear. Read.
Glo. What, with the case of eyes?
Lear. O, ho, are you there with me? No eyes in your head, nor no money in your purse? Your eyes are in a heavy case, your purse in a light: Yet you see how this world goes.
Glo. I see it feebly.
Lear. What, art mad? A man may see how this world goes, with no eyes. Look with thine ears: see how you' justice rails upon you' simple thief. Hark, in thine ear: Change places; and, handy-dandy,
which is the justice, which is the thief?—Thou hast seen a farmer's dog bark at a beggar!
Glo. Ay, sir.
Lear. Look at the creature run from the cur?
There thou might'st behold the great image of authority: a dog's obeyed in office.—
Thou rascal bendle, hold thy bloody hand:
Why dost thou lash that whore? Strip thine own back;
Thou holy lust'st to use her in that kind. [cozener.
For which thou whip'lt her. The usurer hangs the Thieves's tailor's clothes small vices do appear;
Robes, and fur'd gowns, hide all
Plate sin with gold,
And the strong lance of justice hurtless breaks:
Arm it in rags, a pigmy's straw doth pierce it.
None does offend, none, I say, none; I'll able 'em:
Take that of me, my friend, who have the power
To seal the accuser's lips. Get thee glass eyes;
And, like a scurvy politician, seem
To see the things thou dost not.—Now, now, now, now;
Pull off my boots:—harder, harder; so.
Edg. O, matter and impertinency mix'd!
Reason in madness!
Lear. If thou wilt weep my fortunes, take my eyes.
I know thee well enough; thy name is Gloster;
Thou must be patient; we came crying hither.
Thou know'st, the first time that we smell the air,
We wawl, and cry:—I will preach to thee; mark me.
Glo. Ailack, ailack, the day!
Lear. When we are born, we cry, that we are come
To this great stage of fools:—This a good block!—
It were a delicate stratagem, to shoe
A trifle, in my life's end: I'll put it in proof;
And when I have stolen upon these sous-in-law,
Then, kill, kill, kill, kill, kill, kill.

Enter a Gentleman, with Attendants.

Gent. O, here he is; lay hand upon him.—Sir,
Your most dear daughter—
Lear. No rescue! What, a prisoner? I am even
The natural fool of fortune.—Use me well;
You shall have ransom. Let me have a surgeon,
I am cut to the brains.

Gent. You shall have any thing.
Gent. No seconds! all myself?
Why, this wood is a man, a man of salt,
To use his eyes for garden water-pots,
Ay, and for laying autumn's dust.

Gent. Good su.—
Lear. I will die bravely, like a bridgeroom: What?
I will be jovial; come, come; I am a king,
My masters, know you that?
Gent. You are a royal one, and we obey you.
Lear. Then there's life in it. Nay, an you get it, you shall get it by running. Sa, sa, sa, sa.

Gent. A sight most pitiful in the meanest wretch;
KING LEAR.

Past speaking of in a king!—Thou hast one daughter, who redeems nature from the general curse Which twain have brought her to.

Edg. I'll have gentle sir.

Glo. Sir, speed you: What’s your will?—

Edg. Do you hear aught, sir, of a battle towards?—

Gent. Most sure, and vulgar: every one hears that, Which can distinguish sound.

Edg. But, by your favour, How near’s the other army?—

Gent. Near, and on speedy foot; the main desery Stands on the hourly thought.

Edg. I thank you, sir; that’s all.

Gent. Though that the queen on special cause is Her army mov’d on; [here, Edg.]

I thank you, sir, [Exit Gent.]

Glo. You ever gentle gods, take my breath from me; Let not my worser spirits tempt me again To die before you please!

Edg. Well pray you, father.

Glo. Now, good sir, what are you? [blows; Edg. A most poor man, made tame by fortune’s Who, by the art of known and feeling sorrows, Am pregnant to good pity. Give me your hand, I’ll lead you to some biding.

Glo. Heartly thanks: The bounty and the benison of heaven To boot, and boot!

Enter Steward.

Stew. A proclaim’d prize! Most happy! That eyeless head of thine was first fram’d flesh To raise my fortunes.—Thou old unhappy traitor, Briefly thyself remember:—The sword is out That must destroy thee.

Glo. Now let thy friendly hand Put strength enough to it, [Edgar opposes. Stew. Wherefore, bold peasant, Dar’st thou support a publish’d traitor? Hence; Let that the infection of his fortune take Like hold on thee. Let go his arm.

Edg. Chill not let go, zir, without vurtue’ casion. Stew. Let go, slave, or thou diest.

Edg. Good gentleman, go your gait, and let poor volk pass. And ch’d ha’ been zwagger’d out of his life, ‘twould not ha’ been so long as ‘tis by a wight’s night. Now, come nor near the old man; keep out, else you’re, or ise try whether your costard or my bat be the harder: ’Ch’ll be plain with you. Stew. Out, dunghill!

Edg. ’Ch’ll pick your teeth, zir: Come; no matter vor your foins. [They fight; and Edgar knocks him down. Stew. Slave, thou hast slaine me;—Villain, take my If ever thou wilt thrive, bury my body; [purse; And give the letters, which thou find’st about me, To Edmund earl of Golster; seek him out Upon the British party:—O, untimely death! [Dies. Edg. I know thee well: A serviceable villain; As duteous to the vices of thy mistress, As badness would desire.

Glo. Eid. Eliegent sir, What is he dead?—

Edg. Sit you down, father; rest you— Let’s see his pockets: these letters that he speaks of, May be my friends.—He is dead: I am only sorry He had no other death’s-man.—Let us see:— Leave, gentle wax; and, manners, blame us not; To know our enemies’ minds, we’d rip their hearts; Their papers, is more lawful. [Reads.] Let our reciprocal vows be remembered. You have many opportunities to cut him off: if your will want not, time and place will be fruitfully offered.

There is nothing done, if he return the conqueror; Then am I the prisoner, and his bed my gaol: from the knotted warmth whereof deliver me, and supply the place for your labour. Your wife, (as I would say,) and your affectionate servant, Goneril.

O undistiguish’d: space of woman’s will!— A plot upon her virtuous husband’s life; And the exchange, my brother!—Here, in the sands, Thee I’ll take up, the post unsanctified Of murderous lechers: and, in the mature time, With this ungracious paper strike the sight Of the death-practis’d duke: For him ’tis well, That of thy death and business I can tell. [Exit Edgar, dragging out the body.]

Glo. The king is mad: How stiff is my vile sense, That I stand up, and have ingenious feeling Of my huge sorrows! Better I were distract: So should my thoughts be sever’d from my griefs; And woes, by wrong imaginations lose The knowledge of themselves.

Re-enter Edgar.

Edg. Give me your hand: Far off, methinks, I hear the beating drum. Come, father, I’ll bestow you with a friend. [Exit.]

SCENE VII.

A Tent in the French Camp.—Lear on a Bed, asleep; Physicians, Gentlemen, and others, attending.

Enter Cordelia and Kent.

Cor. O thou good Kent, how shall I live, and work, To match thy goodness? My life shall be too short, And every measure fail me.

Kent. To be acknowledge’d, madam, is o’er-paid. All my reports go with the modest truth; Nor more, nor chipp’d, but so.

Cor. Be better suited: These weeds are memories of those worser hours; I pr’ythee, put them off.

Kent. Pardon me, dear madam; Yet to be known, shortens my made intent: My boon I make it, that you know me not, Till time and I think meet.

Cor. Then be it so, my good lord.—How does the [To the Physician.

Phys. Madam, sleeps still, Cor. O you kind gods, Cure this great breach in his abused nature! The untund’r’d and jarring senses, O, wind up, Of this child-changed father!

Phys. So please your majesty, That we may wake the king? he hath slept long.

Cor. Be govern’d by your knowledge, and proceed I’ the sway of your own will. Is he array’d? Gent. Ay, madam; in the heaviness of his sleep, We put fresh garments on him.

Phys. Be by, good madam, when we do awake him; I doubt not of his temperance.

Cor. Very well. [there.

Phys. Please you, draw near.—Louder the music Cor. O my dear father! Restoration, hang Thy medicine on my lips; and let this kiss Repair those violent harms, that my two sisters Have in thy reverence made! Kent. Kind and dear princess! Cor. Had you not been their father, these white flakes Had challenge’d pity of them. Was this a face To be expos’d against the warring winds? To stand against the deep dread bolted thunder? In the most terrible and nimble stroke
KING LEAR.

LEAR I pray, weep not.

act IV. sc. 3
Of quick, cross-lightning! to watch (poor perdun!)
With this thin helm! Mine enemy's dog.
Though he had bit me, should have beaten that night
Against my fire; and was thou fair, poor father,
To kneel thee with swine, and roures forlorn,
In shorty and musty straw? Alack, alack!
Tis wonder, that thy life and wits at once
Had not concluded all.—He wakes; speak to him.

Phys. Madam, do you; 'tis fittest. [majesty?
Cor. How does my royal lord? How fares your Lear. You do me wrong; to take me out o' the grave:—
Thou art a soul in bliss; but I am bound
Upon a wheel of fire, that mine own tears
Do scald as molten lead.

Cor.
Sir, do you know me?
Lear. You are a spirit, I know; When did you die?
Cor. Still, still, far wide!
Phys. He's scarce awake; let him alone awhile.
Lear. Where have I been? Where am I?—Fair day-light?—
I am mightily abus'd.—I should even die with pity,
To see another thus.—I know not what to say.
I will not swear, these are my hands:—let's see;
I feel this pin prick. 'Would I were assur'd
Of my condition.
Cor.
O, look upon me, sir,
And hold your hands in benediction o'er me:—
No, sir, you must not kneel.

Lear. Pray, do not mock me;
I am a very foolish fond old man,
Fourscore and upward; and, to deal plainly,
I fear, I am not in my perfect mind.
Methinks, I should know you, and know this man;
Yet I am doubtful: for I am mainly ignorant
What place this is: and all the skill I have Remembers not these garments; nor I know not Where I did lodge last night: Do not laugh at me.
For, as I am a man, I think this lady
To be my child Cordelia.
Cor.
And so I am, I am.
Lear. Be your tears wet? Yes, 'tis faith. I pray, weep
If you have poison for me, I will drink it. [not:
I know, you do not love me; for your sisters
Have, as I do remember, done me wrong:
You have some cause, they have not.
Cor.
A cause, no cause, cause.
Lear. Am I in France!
Kent. In your own kingdom, sir.
Lear. Do not abuse me.
Phys. Be comforted, good madam: the great rage
You see, is cur'd in him: and yet it is danger
To make him even o'er the time he has lost.
Desire him to go in; trouble him no more,
Till further settling.
Cor. Will't please your highness walk?
Lear. You must bear with me:
Pray now, forget and forgive: I am old, and foolish.
[Exeunt Lear, CorDELIA, Physician, and Attend.
Kent. Holds it true, sir,
That the duke of Cornwall was so slain?
Kent. Most certain, sir.
Kent. Who is conductor of his people?
Kent. As 'tis said,
The bastard son of Gloster.
Kent. They say, Edgar,
His banish'd son, is with the earl of Kent
In France.
Kent. Report is changeable.
'Tis time to look about; the powers o' the kingdom
Approach apace.
Kent. The arbitration is like to be a bloody.
Fare you well, sir.
[Exit.]

Kent. My point and period will be thoroughly worth, or well, or ill, as this day's battle's fought.
[Exit.

ACT V.
SCENE I.—The Camp of the British Forces, near Dover.
Enter, with drums and colours, Edmund, Regan,
Othoers, Soldiers, and others.
Edm. Know of the duke, if his last promise hold;
Or, whether since he is advis'd by aught
To change the course: He's full of alteration,
And self-reproving:—bring his constant pleasure.
[To an Officer, who goes out.
Reg. Our sister's man is certainly miscarried.
Edm. 'Tis to be doubted, madam.
Reg.
Now, sweet lord,
You know the goodness I intend upon you:
Tell me,—but truly,—but then speak the truth,
Do you not love my sister?
Edm.
In honour'd love.
Reg. But have you never found my brother's way
To the foreclosed place?
Edm. That thought abuses you.
Reg. I am doubtful that you have been conjured
And besom'd with her, as far as we call hers.
Edm. No, by mine honour, madam.
Reg. I never shall endure her: Dear my lord,
Be not familiar with her.
Edm.
Fear me not:—
She, and the duke her husband,—
Enter Albany, Goneril, and Soldiers.
Gon. I had rather lose the battles, than that sister
Should loosen him and me. [Aside.
Abh. Our very loving sister, well be met,—
Sir, this I hear,—The king is come to his daughter,
With others, whom the rigour of our state
Forc'd to cry out. Where I could not be honest,
I never yet was valiant: for this business,
It toucheth us as France invades our land,
Not holds the king: with others, whom, I fear,
Most just and heavy causes make oppose.
Edm. Sir, you speak o'erby.
Reg.
Why is this reason'd?
Gon. Combine together 'gainst the enemy:
For these domestic and particular broils
Are not to question here.
Abh.
Let us then determine
With the ancient of war on our proceedings.
Edm. I shall attend you presently at your tent.
Reg. Sister, you'll go with us?
Gon. No.
Reg. 'Tis most convenient; pray you, go with us.
Gon. O, ho, I know the riddle; [Aside. I will go.
As they are going out, enter Edgar, disguised.
Edg. If e'er your grace had speech with man so poor,
Hear me one word.
Abh.
I'll overtake you.—Speak.
[Exeunt Edmund, Regan, Goneril, Officers,
Soldiers, and Attendants.
Edg. Before you fight the battle, ope this letter.
If you have victory, let the trumpet sound
For him that brought it: wretched though I seem,
I can produce a champion, that will prove
What is avouched there: If you miscarry,
Your business of the world hath so an end,
And machination ceases. Fortune love you!
Abh. Stay till I have read the letter.
En. I was forbid it.

Wen time shall serve, let but the herald cry.

And I appear again. [Exit.

--- Way, fare thee well! I will overlook thy paper.

Re-enter Edgar.

Ed. The enemy's in view, draw up your powers.

Here is the guess of their true strength and forces

By the finest discovery.—but your haste

Is now urged on you.

Jeb. We will greet the time. [Exit.

Ed. To both these sisters have I sworn my love;

Each valued of the other, as the sting

Arose of the adder. Which of them shall I take?

Both! one! or neither? Neither can be enjoy'd,

Both remain alive: To take the widow,

Excelsior, makes mad her sister Gertrude;

And many times I carry out my side,

Her husband being alive. Now then, we'll use

His confinement for the battle, which being done,

Let her, who would be ruin'd of us, devise

His speedy meeting. As for the mercy

Which he intends to Lear, and to Cordelia.

The battle done, and they within our power,

So shall we see his passion for my stern

Stands us to demand, out and to desist. [Exit.

SCENE III.—A Field between the two Camps.

Enter Edgar, to the watches. Lear,

Cordelia, and their Forces, and servants.

Enter Edgar and Gertrude.

Edg. Here, father, take the fruit of this tree

For your good love; pray that the night may thrive

More than your return to us again.

Lear. Grief, and that's true. [Exit Edgar.

Lear. Suffer me to retire. Re-enter Edgar.

Edg. Away, old man, give me thy hand, away;

King Lear hath lost, he and his daughter two:

Give me my hand, come on.

God. No further, sir; a man may not even here.

Edg. What in't ill thoughts again?

Men must endure

Their going hence, even as their coming hither:

Hapiness is as: Come on.

God. And that's true. [Exit.

SCENE IV.—The British Camp near Dover.

Enter in campers, armed and armed. Enter:

Lear and Cordelia, as prisoners; Officers,

Soldiers, &c.

Edm. Some officers take them away; good king;

Gentle their greater sufferings first be known.

That's a reason to prevent them.

God. We are not the first.

Wen, with best meaning, have us sooner, his worse.

For then, oppressed king, I can tell you:

Men. I'll cheer my face with my countenance—

Bere we not these daughters, and these daughters?

Lear. I'll cheer my face with my countenance—

Come let's away to prison:

We have done will hang both it and the tree.

And pray and sing, and see the men, and do

Grace understand, and have poor vagrants.

This is not the news, and we are too much too —

Jove, and they win it —

And am upon the mystery of things.

And we were God's eyes. And we were not,

As a while a prison, rouses and said repetitively,

That ebb and flow by the moon.

Edm. Take them away.

Lear. Upon such sacrifices, my Cordelia! I die!

The gods themselves know no increase. Have I sought

The best parts of us, shall bring a brand from heaven,

And fire us hence, like foxes.

When thee even:

The jupiters shall devour thee, flesh and all!

Ere they shall make us weep, we shall see them stare first.

Come. [Exit Lear and Cordelia, pursued.

Take them this note, [giving a paper.] go, follow them.

One step I have advanced thee: if thou dost

As this instructs thee, thou dost not go the way

To noble fortunes: Know thou this—thou men

Are as the time is: to be tender-minded.

Do not become a sword.—Thy great-employment

Will not bear question.—either say, thou: it's not.

Or thrive by other means.

Off.

Edm. Abound, and write happy, when thou hast

Mark, I say instantly, and carry it so. [Exit.

Off. I cannot draw a cart, not eat tried oats;

If it be man's work, I will do it. [Exit Officer.

Flourish. Enter Albany, Gloucester, Regan,

Officers, and Attendants.

Ed. Sir, you have shown to-day your valiant strain

And fortune led you well. You have the capture

Who were the opposites of this day's strife:

We do require of you so to use them,

As we shall and our means and our safety

May equally determine.

Edm.

Sir, I thought it fit

To some small and miserable sign:

Some retention and appointed guard;

Whose age and charms in it, whose title more,

To plac'd the bosom bosom on his sole.

And turn not impris'd men in our eyes

Which they command them. With him I sent the queen,

My reason all the same: and they are ready

To-morrow, or at further space, to appear

Where you shall hold your season. This time

We sweat, and bleed! the front hath lost its sword;

And the best quarters, in the heat, are cased

By those that see their sharpness:

The question of Cordelia, and her father.

Requires a litter place.

Ed. Sir by your patience,

I had but a subject of this war,

Not as a brother.

Edm. That's as we let grace him.

Mutinies, our pleasure might have been demanded,

Here you and space to fit. He led our powers;

Sure the commission of my grace and person;

The which immediately may well stand up,

And call myself your brother.

Gom. Not so hot

In his own grace he be both subtle indulgent,

More than in your advancement.

In my right.

Edg. By a captured, he compells the best.

Gom. That were the most, if they were husband you.

Edg. Averse to all proved protestants.

Gom. That might this time, you look for but: peace.

Edg. Lady, I am not well.

Gom. From a full-drawn sorrow.

Edg. Take thou my soldiers, prisoners, parliaments;

Dispose of them, one the war ares time

Witness the world, that I created thee here,

My lord and master.
Thou art not well; convey her to mine.

Enter A Herald, arm'd, preceded by a trumpet.

[Trumpet sounds.]

Enter Egan, herald. — The trumpet sounds. —

Herald, inform me, why appears this trumpet sound? —

Every man of quality, or degree, within the lists of the army, will maintain upon Edmund, supposed earl of Gloster, that he is a manifest traitor; let him appear at the third sound of the trumpet: He is bold in his defence.

Enter Sound. —

[Trumpet answers within.]

Herald. — What art thou? —

Know, my name is lost; by treason's tooth bare gnawn, and cabinet bit: Yet am I noble, as the adversary I come to cope withal. —

Herald. — What is that adversary? —

[Enter Gloster.]

Gloster. — What's he that speaks for Edmund earl of Fum, himself? — What sayst thou to him? —

Edgar. — Draw thy sword; that, if my speech offend a noble heart, thy arm may do thee justice: here is mine. Behold, it is the privilege of mine honors, my oath, and my profession; I protest, —

Maugre thy strength, youth, place, and eminence, despite thy victor sword, and fire-new fortune, thy valour, and thy hand; thou art a traitor: False to thy gods, thy brother, and thy father; Conspirant 'gainst this high illustrious prince; and, from the extremest upward of thy head, to the descent and dust beneath thy feet, a most toad-spotted traitor. —

Thou liest.

Edmund. — In wisdom, I should ask thy name; but, since thy side outside looks so fair and warlike, and that thy tongue some 'say of breeding breathes, what safe and nicely I might well delay by rule of knighthood, I disdain and spurn. Back do I toss these treasons to thy head; with the hell-hate he overwraith thy heart; which, (for they yet glance by, and scarcely bruise,) this sword of mine shall give them instant way, where they shall rest for ever. —

[Trumpets, speak.]

Edmund. — What you have charg'd me with, that have I done; and more, much more: the time will bring it out; 'tis past, and so am I: But what art thou, that hast this fortune on me? If thou art noble, I do give thee.

Edgar. — Let's exchange charity. I am no less in blood than thou art, Edmund; if more, the more thou hast wrong'd me. My name is Edgar, and thy father's son. The gods are just, and of our pleasant vices make instruments to scourge us: The dark and vicious place where thee he got, cost him his eyes.

Edmund. — Thou hast spoken right, 'tis true; The wheel is come full circle; I am here. —

Edgar. — Methought thy very gait did prophesy a royal nobleness: I must embrace thee; Let sorrow split my heart, if ever I Did hate thee, or thy father! —

Edgar. — Worthy prince, I know it well. —

Edmund. — Where have you hid yourself? How have you known the miseries of your father? —

Edgar. — By nursing them, my lord. — List a brief tale: —

And, when 'tis told, O that my heart would burst! —

The bloody proclamation to escape, that follow'd me so near, (O our liv'n's sweetness! That with the pain of death we'd hourly die, rather than die at once!) taught me to shift; into a mad-man's rags; to assume a semblance.
KING LEAR.

That very dogs disdain'd; and in this habit
Met I my father with his bleeding rags,
Their precious stones new lost; became his guide,
Led him, begg'd for him, sav'd him from despair;
Never (O fault!) reveal'd myself unto him,
Until some half hour past, when I was arm'd,
Not sure, though hoping, of this good success,
I ask'd his blessing, and from first to last
Told him my pilgrimage: But his flâend heart,
(Alack, too weak the conflict to support!)
Twist two extremes of passion, joy and grief,
Burst smilingly.

Edm. This speech of yours hath mov'd me,
And shall, perchance, do good: but speak you ou;
You look as you had something more to say.

Alb. If there be more, more woful, hold it in;
For I am almost ready to dissolve,
Hearing of this.

Edg. This would have seem'd a period
To such as love not sorrow; but another,
To amplify too-much, would make much more,
And top extremity.
Whilst I was big in clamour, came there a man,
Who having seen me in my worst estate,
Shunn'd my aborder's society; but then, finding
Who was that so endur'd, with his strong arms
He fasten'd on my neck, and bellow'd out
As he'd burst heaven; throw him on my father:
Told the most piteous tale of Lear and him,
That ever ear receiv'd: which in recounting
His grief grew psiant, and the strings of life
Began to crack: Twice then the trumpet sounded,
And there I left him tran'd.

Alb. But who was this?

Edg. Kent, sir, the basih'd Kent; who in disguise
Follow'd his enemy king, and did him service
Improper for a slave.

Enter a Gentleman hastily, with a bloody knife.

Gen. Help! help! O help!

Edg. What kind of help?

Alb. Speak, man.

Edg. What means that bloody knife?

Gen. 'Tis hot, it smokes;
It came even from the heart of—

Gen. Your lady, sir, your lady; and her sister
By her is poison'd; she confesses it.

Edg. I was contract'd to them both; all three
Now marry in an instant.

Alb. Produce their bodies, be they alive or dead!

This judgment of the heavens, that makes us tremble,
Touches us not with pity. [Exit Gentleman.

Enter Kent.

Edg. Here comes Kent, sir. [Exit.

Alb. O! it is he.
The time will not allow the compliment,
Which various manners urges.

Kent. I am come
To bid my king and master aye good night;
Is he not here?

Alb. Great thing of us forgot?

Speak, Edmund, where's the king? and where's Cor-
Sen's thou this object, Kent? [delia?—

[The bodies of Gow. and Rex. are brought in.

Kent. Alack, why thus?

Edm. Yet Edmund was belov'd:
The one the other poison'd for my sake,
And after slew herself.

Alb. Even so—Cover their faces.

Edm. I pant for life:—Some good I mean to do,

Despite of mine own nature. Quickly send,
Be brief in it,—to the castle; for my writ
Is on the life of Lear, and on Cordelia:—
Nay, send in time.

Alb. Run, run, O, run—

Edg. To who, my lord!—Who has the office? send Thy token of reprieve.

Edm. Well thought on; take my sword,
Give to the captain.

Kent. Haste thee, for thy life. [Exit Edgar.

Edm. He hath commission from thy wife and me
To hang Cordelia in the prison, and
To lay the blame upon her own despair,
That she fordid herself.

Alb. The gods defend her! Bear him hence awhile. [Edmund is borne off.

Enter Lear, with Cordelia dead in his arms;

Edgar, Officer, and others.

Lear. Howl, howl, howl, howl!—O, you are men of stones;
Had I your tongues and eyes, I'd use them so
That heaven's vault should crack;—O, she is gone for ever!

I know when one is dead, and when one lives;
She's dead as earth:—Lend me a looking-glass;
If that her breath will mist or stain the stone,
Why, then she lives.

Kent. Is this the promis'd end?

Edg. Or image of that horror?

Alb. Fall, and cease!

Lear. This feather stirs; she lives! if it be so,
It is a chance that does redeem all sorrows
That ever I have felt.

Kent. O my good master! [Kneeling. Lear. Pr'ythee, away.

Edg. Tis noble Kent, your friend.

Lear. A plague upon you, murderers, traitors all!
I might have sav'd her; now she's gone for ever!—
Cordelia, Cordelia, stay a little, fia!
What irst thou say'st?—Her voice was ever soft,
Gentle, and low: an excellent thing in woman—
I kill'd the slave that was a hagging thee.

Off. 'Tis true, my lords, he did.

Kent. Did not, fellow?
I have seen the day, with my good biting falfion
I would have made them skip: I am old now,
And these same crosses spoile me.—Who are you?
Mine eyes are none o' the best:—I'll tell you straight.
Kent. If fortune brag of two she lov'd and hated,
One of them we behold.

Lear. This is a dull sight: Are you not Kent?

Kent. The same.

Your servant Kent: Where is your servant Caius?

Lear. He's a good fellow, I can tell you that;
He'll strike, and quickly too: He's dead and rotten.

Kent. No, my good lord; I am the very man;—
Lear. I'll see that straight.
Kent. That, from your first of difference and decay,
Have follow'd your sad steps.

Lear. You are welcome bither. [deadly.

Kent. Nor no man else; all's cheerless, dark, and
Your eldest daughters have fore-doom'd themselves,
And desperately are dead.

Lear. Ay, so I think.

Alb. He knows not what he says; and vain it is That we present us to him.

Edg. Very bootless.

Enter an Officer.

Off. Edmund is dead, my lord.

Alb. That's but a trifle here.—

You lords, and noble friends, know our intent.
ACT V.—SCENE III.

What comfort to this great decay may come,
Shall be applied: For us, we will resign,
During the life of this old majesty,
To him our absolute power:—You, to your rights;
[To Edgar and Kent.]

With boot, and such addition as your honours
Have more than merited.—All friends shall taste
The whole, with all of their virtues; and all good histories as at That time vulgarly received as true. And, perhaps, if we turn
Our thoughts upon the barbarity and ignorance of the age to which
This story is referred, it will appear not so unlikable as we Estimate Lear's manners by our own. Such preference of one daughter to another, or renunciation of dominion on such conditions, would be yet credible, if told of a petty prince of Connacht or Madagascar. Shakespeare, indeed, by the mention of his earls and dukes, has given us the idea of times more civilized, and of Life regulated by softer manners; and the truth is, that though he so nicely discriminates, and so minutely describes the characters of men, he commonly neglects and confounds the characters of ages, by mingling customs ancient and modern, English and foreign.

My learned friend, Mr. Waron, (afterwards Dr. Joseph War-ton, who has in The Adventures very aptly criticized this play, Remarks, that the instances of cruelty are too savage and shocking, and that the intervention of Edmund destroys the simplicity of the story. These objections may, I think, be answered, by repeating, that the cruelty of the dauphins is an historical fact, to which the plot has added little, having only drawn the characters of the dauphins: and that Edmund is quite able to apologise with equal plausibility for the extremity of Gloucester's eyes, which seems an act too horrid to be endured in dramatic exhibition, and such as must always compel the mind to relieve its distresses by incredulity. Yet let it be remembered that our authors well know what would please the audience for which he wrote.

The plot devised by Edmund to the simplicity of the action is abundantly recomposed by the addition of variety, by the art with which he is made to co-operate with the chief design, and the opportunity which he gives the poet of combining perfidy with perjury, and connecting the wicked son with the wicked daughters, to impress this important moral, that villainy is never at a stop, that crimes lead to crimes, and at last terminate in ruin.

But though this moral be incidentally enforced, Shakespeare has suffered the virtue of Cordelia to perish in a just cause, contrary to the natural idea of justice, to the hope of the reader, and, what is yet more strange, to the faith of chronicles. Yet this conduct is justified by The Spectator, who blains Tate for giving Cordelia success and happiness in his adaptation and de-declares, that in his opinion, The Tragedy has lost half its beauty.

Dennis has remarked, whether justice or not, that, to secure the favourable reception of Cates, the town was poisoned with much false and abominate criticism, and that endeavors had been used to discredit and decry poetical justice. A play in which the wicked prosper, and the virtuous miscarry, may doubtless be good, because it is a just representation of the common events of human life; but since all reasonable beings naturally love justice, I cannot easily persuade, that the observation of justice makes a play worse; or, if that other excellencies are equal, the audience will not always rise better pleased from the final triumph of perverted virtue.

In the present case the public has decided. Cordelia, from the time of Tate, has always retired with victory and felicity.
And, if my sensations could add anything to the general surmise,
I might relate, I was many years ago so shocked by Cordelia's death, that I know not whether I ever endured to read again the last scenes of the play till I undertook to revise them as an editor.

There is another controversy among the critics concerning this play; it is disputed whether the predominant image in Lear's disordered mind is the loss of his kingdom or the cruelty of his daughters. Mr. Murphy, a very judicious critic, has explained by induction of particular passages, that the cru-ulty of his daughters is the primary source of his distress, and that the loss of royalty affects him only as a secondary and subordinate evil. He observes, with great justness, that Lear would move our compassion but little, did we not rather consider the injured father than the deposed king.

The notion of the play, except the episode of Edmund, which is derived, I think, from Sydney, is taken originally from Geoff-frey of Monmouth, whom Holinshed generally copied; but perhaps immediately from an old historical ballad. My reason for believing that the play was posterior to the ballad, rather than the ballad to the play, is, that the ballad has nothing of Shakespeare's nocturnal temper, which is too striking to have been copied, and that it follows the chronicles; it has the same events of the play, but none of its amplifications; it first hinted Lear's madness, but did not array it in circumstances. The writing of the ballad added something to the history, which is a proof that he would have added more, if more had occurred to his mind, and more must have occurred if he had seen Shaks-peare.—JOHNSON.
ROMEO AND JULIET.

Of this play there were four quarto editions published during the life of the author; the first of which was published in 1567. The original author of the story was Luigi da Porto, a gentle- man of Venice, who died in 1532. His novel did not appear till some years after his death, being first printed at Venice in 1553, under the title of La Gerusalemme.

The story had been dramatized in this country, before 1590, for in that year Arthur Brooke published his poem, called The Tragedy of Lucrece and Euphues, and in his advertisement to the reader says, that he had seen "the same argument lately set forth on the stage with more commendation than I can look for." In this dramatic play, and Brooke's poem, Shake- speare was most probably indebted for those rude materials which he has rendered so valuable by his exquisite skill and management in the tragedy before us.

Brevial says, in the Travel, that on a strict inquiry into the his- tory of Lucrece, he found that Shakespeare had varied very little from the truth, either in the names, characters, or other circum- stances. Malone supposes this play to have been writ- ten in 1556.

PROLOGUE.
Two households, both alike in dignity.
In fair Verona, where we lay our scene,
From ancient grudge break to new mutiny,
Where civil blood makes civil hands unclean.
From forth the fatal loins of these two foes
A pair of star-cross'd lovers take their life;
Whose misadventur'd piteous overthrows
Do, with their death, bury their parents' strife.
The fearful passage of their death-mark'd love,
And the conourse of their parents' rage,
Which, but their children's end, nought could remove,
Is now the two hours' truce of our stage;
The which if you with patient ears attend,
What here shall miss, our toil shall strive to mend.

ACT I.

SCENE I.—A public Place.

Enter Sampson and Gregory, armed with swords and bucklers.
Sam. Gregory, o' my word, we'll not carry coals.
Gre. No, for then we should be colliers.

Sam. I mean, as we be in choler, we'll draw.
Gre. Ay, while you live, draw your neck out of the collar.
Sam. I strike quickly, being moved.
Gre. But thou art not quickly moved to strike.
Sam. A dog of the house of Montague moves me.
Gre. To move it—to stir; and to be valiant, is—to stand to it: therefore, if thou art mov'd, thou run'st away.
Sam. A dog of that house shall move me to stand:
I will take the wall of any man or maid of Montague's.
Gre. That shews thee a weak slave; for the weakest goes to the wall.
Sam. True; and therefore women, being the weaker vessels, are ever thrust to the wall:—therefore I will push Montague's men from the wall, and thrust his maids to the wall.
Gre. The quarrel is between our masters, and us their men.
Sam. 'Tis all one, I will shew myself a tyrant: when I have fought with the men, I will be cruel with the maids; I will cut off their heads.
Gre. The heads of the maids?
Sam. Ay, the heads of the maids, or their maiden heads; take it in what sense thou wilt.
Gre. They must take it in sense, that feel it.
Sam. Me they shall feel, while I am able to stand: and 'tis known I am a pretty piece of flesh.
Gre. 'Tis well, thou art not fish; if thou hast, thou hast been poor John. Draw thy tool; here comes two of the house of the Montagues.

Enter ABRAM and BALTHAZAR.
Sam. My naked weapon is out; quarrell, I will back thee.
Gre. How? turn thy back, and run?
Sam. Fear me not.
Gre. No, marry: I fear thee!
Sam. Let us take the law of our sides; let them begin.
Gre. I will frown, as I pass by; and let them take it as they list.
Sam. Nay, as they dare. I will bite my thumb at them; which is a disgrace to them, if they bear it.
Abr. Do you bite your thumb at us, sir?
Sam. I do bite my thumb, sir.
Abr. Do you bite your thumb at us, sir?
Sam. Is the law on our side, if I say—ay?
Gre. No.
Sam. No, sir, I do not bite my thumb at you, sir, but I bite my thumb, sir.
Gre. Do you quarrel, sir?
Abr. Quarrel, sir? no, sir.
Sam. If you do, sir, I am for you; I serve as good a man as you.
Abr. No better.
Sam. Well, sir.
Enter Benvolio, at a distance.

Gree—Say—better; here comes one of my master's kinsmen.

Sum. Yes, better, sir.

Abr. You lie.

Sum. Draw, if you be men.—Gregory, remember thy swaying blow. [They fight.] Ben. Part, fools; put up your swords; you know not what you do. [Beats down their swords.] Enter Tybalt.

Tyb. What, art thou drawn among these heartless Turn thee, Benvolio, look upon thy death. [hinds?] Ben. I do but keep the peace; put up thy sword, Or manage it to part these men with me. Tyb. What, drawn, and talk of peace? I hate the As I hate hell, all Montagues, and thee: [wold. Have at thee, coward. [They fight. Enter several partizans of both houses, who join the fray; then enter Citizens, with clubs. 1 Cit. Clubs, bills, and partizans! strike! beat them down! Down with the Capulets! down with the Montagues!

Enter Capulet, in his gown; and Lady Capulet. Cap. What noise is this? — Give me my long sword, ho! [a sword?] La. Cap. A crutch, a crutch! — Why call you for Cap. My sword, I say! — Old Montague is come, And freedom his blade in spite of me. Enter Montague and Lady Montague. Mon. Thou villain Capulet, — Hold me not, let me go.

La. Mon. Thou shalt not stir one foot to seek a foe. Enter Prince, with Attendants.

Prin. Rebellious subjects, enemies to peace, Profaners of this neighbour-stained steel, Will they not hear? — what ho! you men, you beasts, — That quench the fire of your pernicious rage With purple fountains issuing from your veins, On pain of torture, from those bloody hands Throw your misstemper'd weapons to the ground, And hear the sentence of your moved prince. — Three civil brawls, bred of an airy word, By thee, old Capulet, and Montague, Have three disturb'd the quiet of our streets; And make Verona's ancient citizens Cast by their grave beseeeming ornaments, To wield our partizans, in hands as old, Canker'd with peace, to part your canker'd hate: If ever you disturb our streets again, Your lives shall pay the forfeit of the peace. For this time, all the rest depart away; You, Capulet, shall go along with me; And, Montague, come you this afternoon, To know our further pleasure in this case, To old Free-town, our common judgment-place. Once more, on pain of death, all men depart. [Exeunt Prince and Attendants; Capulet, Lady Capulet, Tybalt, Citizens, and Servants. Mon. Who set this ancient quarrel new abroad? — Speak, nephew, were you by, when it began? Ben. Here were the servants of your adversary, And yours, close fighting ere I did approach: I drew to part them; in the instant came The fierce Tybalt, with his sword prepend; Which, as he breath'd defiance to my ears, He swung about his head, and cut the winds, Who, nothing hurt withal, his'd him in scorn: While we were interchanging thrusts and blows, Came more and more, and fought on part and part, Till the prince came, who parted each part. La. Mon. O, where is Romeo! — saw him you to- Right glad I am, he was not at this fray. [day?] Ben. Madam, an hour before the worship'd sun Peer'd forth the golden window of the east, A troubled mind drave me to walk abroad; Where,—underneath the grove of sycamore, That westward rooteth from the city's side,— So early walking did I see your son: Towards him I made; but he was 'ware of me, And stole into the covert of the wood: I, measuring his affections by my own, — That most are busied when they are most alone,— Purs'd my honour, not Pursuing his, And gladly shunn'd who gladly fled from me. Mon. Many a morning hath he there been seen, With tears augmenting the fresh morning's dew, Adding to clouds more clouds with his deep sighs. But all so soon as the all-cheering sun Should in the further east begin to draw The shady curtains from Aurora's bed, Away from light steals home my heavy son, And private in his chamber pens himself; Shuts up his windows, locks fair daylight out, And makes himself an artificial night. Black and portentous must this humour prove, Unless good counsel may the cause remove. Ben. My noble uncle, do you know the cause? Mon. I neither know it, nor can learn of him. Ben. Have you importun'd him by any means? Mon. Both by myself, and many other friends: But he, in his own affection, — Is to himself — I will not say, how true— But to himself so secret and so close, So far from sounding and discovery, As is the bud with an envious worm, Ere he can spread his sweet leaves to the air, Or dedicate his beauty to the sun. Could we but learn from whence his sorrows grow, We would as willingly give cure, as know. Enter Romeo, at a distance.

Ben. See, where he comes: So please you, stop I'll know his grievance, or be much denied. [aside; Mon. I would, thou wert so happy by thy stay, To hear true shift.—Come Capulet, and let's away. [Exit Montague and Lady. Mon. Good morrow, cousin.

Rom. Is the day so young? Mon. But new struck nine.

Rom. Ah me! sad hours seem long. Mon. Was that my father that went hence so fast! Ben. It was: — What sadness lengthens Romeo's hours? Rom. Not having that, which, having, makes them Ben. In love: [short. Rom. Out.— Mon. Of love? Rom. Out of her favour, where I am in love. Ben. Alas, that love, so gentle in his view, Should be so tyrannous and rough in proof! Rom. Alas, that love, whose view is muffled still, Should, without eyes, see pathways to his will! Where shall we dine? —O me! — What fare was here? Yet tell me not, for I have heard it all. Here's much to do with hate, but more with love: Why then, O brawling love! O loving hate! O any thing, of nothing first create! O heavy lightness! serious vanity! Mis-shapen chaos of well-seeing forms! Feather of lead, bright smoke, cold fire, sick health! Still-waking sleep, that is not what it is —
This love feel I, that feel no love in this,
Dost thou not laugh?
Ben. No, coz, I rather weep.
Rom. Good heart, at what?
Ben. At thy good heart's oppression.
Rom. Why, such is love's transgression.—
Griefs of mine own lie heavy in my breast;
Which thou wilt propagate, to have it prest
With more of thine: this love, that thou hast shewn,
Doth add more grief to too much of mine own.
Love is a smoke raised with the fume of sighs;
Being purg'd, a fire sparkling in lovers' eyes;
Being vex'd, a sea nourish'd with lovers' tears:
What is it else? a madness most discreet,
A choking gall, and a preserving sweet.
Farewell, my coz.
[Going.
Ben. Soft, I will go along;
An if you leave me, so do you leave me here.
Rom. Tut, I have lost myself: I am not here;
This is not Romeo, he's some other where.
Ben. Tell me in sadness, who she is you love.
Rom. What, shall I groan, and tell thee?
Ben. Groan! why no;
But sadly tell me, who,
That bid a sick man in sadness makes his will:—
Ah, word ill urg'd to one that is so ill!—
In sadness, cousin, I do love a woman.
Rom. I aim'd so near, when I suppose'd you lov'd.
Rom. A right good marks-man!—And she's fair
I love.
Ben. A right fair mark, fair coz, is soonest hit.
Rom. Well, in that hit, you miss: she'll not be hit.
With such a heart, she hath Dam's wit:
And, in strong proof of chastity well arm'd,
From love's weak childish bow she lives unarm'd,
She will not stay the siege of loving terms,
Nor hide the encounter of assailing eyes,
Nor ope her lap to saint-seducing gold:
O, she is rich in beauty; only poor,
That when she dies, with beauty dies her store.
Rom. Then she hath sworn, that she will still live chaste?
Rom. She hath, and in that sparing makes huge
For beauty, starv'd with her severity,
Cuts beauty off from all posterity.
She is too fair, too wise; wisely too fair,
To merit bliss by making me despair:
She hath forsworn to love; and, in that vow,
Do I live dead, that live to tell the now.
Ben. Be rud'd by me, forget to think of her.
Rom. O teach me how I should forget to think.
Ben. By giving liberty unto thine eyes;
Examine other beauties.
Rom. 'Tis the way
To call here, exquisite, in question more:
These happy masks, that kiss fair ladies' brows,
Being black, put us in mind they hide the fair;
He, that is stricken blind, cannot forget
The precious treasure of his eyesight lost:
Shew me a mistress that is passing fair,
What doth her beauty serve, but as a note
Where I may read, who pass'd that passing fair?
Farewell; thou canst not teach me to forget.
Ben. I'll pay that doctrine, or else die in debt.
[Exeunt.}

SCENE II.—A Street.

Enter CAPULET, PARIS, and SERVANT.

Cap. And Montague is bound as well as I,
In penalty alike; and 'tis not hard, I think,
For men so old as we to keep the peace.
Par. Of honourable reckoning are you both;
And pity 'tis, you live at odds so long.
But now, my lord, what say you to my suit?
Cap. But saying o'er what I have said before:
My child is yet a stranger in the world,
She hath not seen the change of fourteen years;
Let two more summers wither in their pride,
Ere we may think her ripe to be a bride.
Par. Younger than she are happy mothers made;
Cap. And too soon mar'd are those so early made.
The earth hath swallow'd all my hopes but she,
She is the hopeful lady of my earth:
But woo her, gentle Paris, get her heart,
My will to her consent is but a part;
As she agree, within her scope of choice
Lies my consent and fair according voice.
This night I hold an old accustomed feast,
Whereeto I have invited many a guest,
Such as I love; and you, among the store,
One more, most welcome, makes my number more.
At my poor house, look to behold this night
Earth treading stars, that make dark heaven light:
Such comfort, as do lusty young men feel
When well apparel'd April on the heel
Of limping winter treads, even such delights
And such delights, when such a lady shall you, in this night
Inherit at my house; hear all, all see;
And like her most, whose merit most shall be:
Such, amongst view of many, mine, being one,
May stand in number, though in reckoning none.
Come, go with me;—Go, sirrah, trudge about
Through fair Verona; find those persons out,
Whose names are written there, [gives a paper.]
and say
My house and welcome on their pleasure stay.
[Exeunt CAPULET and PARIS.

SERV. Find them out, whose names are written here?
It is written—that the shoemaker shall meddle with his yard, and the tailor with his last, the fisher with his pencil, and the painter with his nets; but I am sent to find those persons, whose names are here writ, and can never find what names the writing person hath here writ. I must to the learned:—To good time.

Enter BENVOLIO and ROMEO

Rom. Tut, maa! one fire burns out another's burn
The pain is past; ed by another's anguish! [ing,
Turn guilt, and led by hate weep by hating:
Be not sad:
One desperate grief cures with another's anguish:
Take thou some new infection to thy eye,
And the rank poison of the old will die.
Rom. Your plaintain leaf is excellent for that.
Bea. For what, I pray thee?
Rom. For your broken skin.
Bea. Why, Romeo, art thou mad?
Rom. Not mad, but bound more than a madman is:
Shut up in prison, kept without my food, [low,
Whipp'd, and tormented, and—Good-e'en, good fel-
Sere. God gi' good e'en.—I pray, sir, can you read?
Rom. Ay, mine own fortune in my misery.
Sere. Perhaps you have learn'd it without book:
But I pray, can you read anything you see?
Bea. A, if I know the letters, and the language.
Sere. Ye say honestly; Rest you merry!
Rom. Stay, fellow: I can read.
Sigaro Martino, and his wife and daughters;
County Anselme, and his beautiful sisters; the lady widow of Viritruco; Sigaur Placento, and his lovely ieces; Mercurio, and his brother Valentine;
Mine uncle Capulet, his sons and daughters.
My fair niece
Rosalin; Livia; Sigaur Valentine, and his cousin
Tubalt; Lucio, and the lively Helena.
ACT I.—SCENE III.

To see it tetchy, and fall out with the dug.
Shake, quoth the dove-house: 'twas no need, I trow,
To bid me trudge.
And since that time it is eleven years:
For then she could stand alone; nay, by the rood,
She could have run and waddled all about.
For even the day before, she broke her brow;
And then my husband—God be with his soul!
'A was a merry man;—took up the child:
Yes, quoth he, dost thou fall upon thy face?
"Thou wilt fall backward, when thou hast most wit;"
"Wilt thou not, Jule? and, by my holy dam,
The pretty wretch left crying, and said—Ay:
'To see now, how a jest shall come about!
I warrant, an I should live a thousand years,
I never should forget it; 'Will thou not, Jule? quoth he:
And, pretty fool, it stunted, and said—Ay. [Peace.
La. Cap. Enough of this; I pray thee, hold thy Nurse. Yes, madam; yet I cannot choose but laugh,
To think it should leave crying, and say—Ay;
And yet I warrant, it had upon its brow
A bump as big as a young cockrel's stone;
A parlous knock; and it cried bitterly,
Yet, quoth my husband, fallst thou upon thy face?
"Thou wilt fall backward, when thou com'st to age;"
"Wilt thou not, Jule? it stunted, and said—Ay.
Jul. And stilt thou too, I pray thee, nurse, say I.
Nurse. If you please, I have done. God mark thee to his grace!
Thou wast the prettiest babe that ere I nurs'd.
An I might live to see thee married once,
I have my wish.
La. Cap. Marry, that marry is the very theme
I came to talk of—Tell me, daughter Juliet,
How strong is your disposition to be married?
Jul. It is an honour that I dream not of.
Nurse. An honour! were not I thine only nurse,
I'd say, thou hast suck'd wisdom from thy teat.
La. Cap. Well, think of marriage now; younger
Here in Verona, ladies of esteem, [than you,
Are made already mothers: by my count,
I was young mother much upon these years,
That you are now a maid. Thus then, in brief;—
The valiant Paris seeks you for his love.
Nurse. A man, young lady! lady, such a man,
As all the world—Why, he's a man of wax.
La. Cap. Verona's summer hath not such a flower.
Nurse. Nay, he's a flower; in faith, a very flower.
La. Cap. But, if you say so, he will be a man you love the gentle;
This night you shall behold him at our feast; [man?
Read o'er the volume of young Paris' face,
And find delight writ there with beauty's pen;
Examine every married lineament,
And see how one another lends content;
And what obscure'd in this fair volume lies,
Find written in the margin of his eyes.
This precious book of love, this unobd lover,
To beautify him, only lacks a cover:
The fast lives in the sea; and 'tis much pride,
For fair without the fair, within to hide:
That book in many's eyes doth share the glory
That in gold clasps locks in the golden story;
So shall you share all that he doth possess,
By having him, making yourself no less.
Nurse. No less? nay, bigger; women grow by men.
La. Cap. Speak briefly, can you like of Paris' love?
Jul. 'I'll look to like, if looking liking move:
But no more deep will I endart mine eye,
Than your consent gives strength to make it fly.
Enter a Servant.
Serv. Madam, the guests are come, supper served up, you called, my young lady asked for, the nurse cursed in the pantry, and every thing in extremity. I must hence to wait; I beseech you, follow straight.
3 E

La. Cap. We follow thee.—Juliet, the county says.

Nurse. Go, girl, seek happy nights to happy days. [Exeunt.

SCENE IV.—A Street.

Enter Romeo, Mercutio, Benvolio, with Five or Sir Maskers, Torch-bearers, and others.

Rom. What shall this speech be spoken for our excuse? Or shall we on without apology?

Ben. The date is out of such proxility: We'll have no Cupid hood-wink'd with a scarf, Bearing a Tartar's painted bow of lath, Searing the ladies like a crow-keeper; Nor no without-prologue, faintly spoke After the prompter, for our entrance: But let them measure us by what they will. We'll measure them a measure, and be gone.

Rom. Give me a torch.—I am not for this ambling: Being but heavy, I will bear the light.

Mer. Nay, gentle Romeo, we must have you dance.

Rom. Not I, believe me: you have dancing shoes, With nimble soles: I have a soul of lead, So stoutly planted to the ground, I cannot move.

Mer. You are a lover; borrow Cupid's wings, And soar with them above a common bound.

Rom. I am too sore enpierced with his shaft, To soar with his light feathers; and so bound, I cannot bound a pitch above dull woe: Under love's heavy burden do I sink.

Mer. And, to sink in it, should you burden love; Too great and tender a thing by far.

Rom. Is love a tender thing? It is too rough, Too rude, too boistrous; and it pricks like thorn.

Mer. If love be rough with you, be rough with love: Prick love for pricking, and you best love down.—Give me a case to put my visage in: [Putting on a mask.

A visor for a visor:—what care I,

What curious eye doth quote deformities?

Here's the beetle-brow, shall I look for me.

Ben. Come, knock, and enter; and co sooner in.

But every man betake him to his legs.

Rom. A torch for me: let wantons, light of heart, Tickle the senseless rushes with their heels; For I am prove'd with a grandsire phrase,— I'll be a candle-bolder, and look on.— The game was ne'er so fair, and I am done. [word

Mer. But first, don't the mouse, the constable's own. If thou art dun, we'll draw thee from the nire

Of this (save reverence) love, wherein thou stick'st up to the ears.—Come, we burn day-light, ho.

Rom. Nay, that's not so.

Mer. I mean, sir, in delay

We waste our lights in vain, like lamps by day. Take our good meaning; for our judgment sits Five times in that, ere once in our five wits.

Rom. And we mean well, in going to this mask; But 'tis no wit to go.

Mer. Why, may one ask?

Rom. I dreamt a dream to-night.

Mer. And so did I.

Rom. Well, what was yours?

Mer. That dreamers often lie.

Rom. In bed asleep, whilst they do dream things true.

Mer. O, then, I see, queen Mab hath been with you.

She is the fairies' midwife; and she comes In shape no bigger than an agate-stone

On the fore-finger of an alderman, Drawn with a team of little atoms

Athwart men's noses as they lie asleep:

Her waggon-spokes made of long spinners' legs,

The cover, of the wings of grasshoppers; The traces, of the smallest spider's web; The collars, of the moonshine's walt'y beams;

Her whip, of cricket's bone; the lash, of film:

Her waggoner, a small grey-coated gnat,

Not half so big as a round little worm

Prick'd from the lazy finger of a maid:

Her chariot is an empty hazel-nut,

Made by the joiner squirrel, or old grub,

Two out of mind the fairies' coach-makers.

And in this state she gallops night by night

Through lovers' brains, and then they dream of love;

On courtiers' knees, that dream on court'sies straight

O'er lawyers' fingers, who straight dream on fees;

O'er ladies' lips, who straight on kisses dream;

Which oft the angry Mab with blisters plagues,

Because their breaks with sweet meats tainted are.

Sometime she gallops o'er a courtier's nose,

And then dreams he of smelling out a suit;

And sometimes comes she with a tithe-pig's tail,

Tickling a parson's nose as 'a lies asleep,

Then dreams he of another benefice:

Sometimes she driveth o'er a soldier's neck,

And then dreams he of cutting foreign threats;

Of breaches, ambuscades, Spanish blades,

Of false love's fathoms deep, and deep, and deep

Drums in his ear; at which he starts, and wakes;

And, being thus frightened, sweats a prayer or two,

And sleeps again. This is that very Mab,

That plats the horses of Generation in the night;

And bakes the elf-locks in foul sluttish hairs,

Which, once untangled, much misfortune bodes.

This is the Mab, whose goodly maidens ride on their backs,

That pressures them, and learns them first to bear,

Making them women of good carriage.

This, this is she—

Mer. True, I talk of dreams; Which are the children of an idle brain,

Being the sport of nothing but vain fantasy;

Which is as thin of substance as the air;

And more inconstant than the wind, who waives Even now the frozen bosom of the north, And, being anger'd, puff's away from thence,

Turning his face to the dew-dropping south.

Ben. This wind, you talk of, blows us from ourselves;

Supper is done, and we shall come too late.

Rom. I fear, too early; for my mind misgives,

Some consequence, yet hanging in the stars,

Shall bitterlie begin his fearful date

With this night's revels; and expire the term

Of a despised life, clos'd in my breast,

By some vile forfeit of untimely death:

Ben. But he, that hath the steerage of my course,

Direct my sail!—O, lusty gentlemen.

Ben. Strike, drum. [Exeunt.

SCENE V.—A Hall in Capulet's House.

Musicians waiting. Enter Servants.

1 Serv. Where's Potpan, that he helps not to take away? he shift a trencher! he scrape a trencher!

2 Serv. When good manners shall lie all in one or two men's hands, and they unwashed too, 'tis a foul thing.

1 Serv. Away with the joint-stools, remove the court-cupboard, look to the plate:—good thou, save me a piece of marchpane; and, as thou loveth me, let the porter let in Susan Gribaldstone, and Neil,—Antony! and Potpan!
ACT I.—SCENE V.

2 Serv. Ay, boy! ready.
1 Serv. You are looked for, and called for, asked for, and sought for, in the great chamber.
2 Serv. We cannot be here and there too.—Cheerly, boys; be brisk a while, and the longer liver take all. [They retire behind.

Enter Capulet, &c. with the Guests, and the Masks.

Cap. Gentlemen, welcome! ladies, that have their toes Unplagued with corns, will have a bount with you:— Ah ha, my mistresses! which of you all Will now deny to dance? she that makes dainty, she, I'll swear, hath corns; Am I come near you now? You are welcome, gentlemen! I have seen the day, That I have worn a visor; and could tell A whispering tale in a fair lady's ear, Such as would please;—'tis gone, 'tis gone, 'tis gone: You are welcome, gentlemen!—Come, musicians, A hall! a hall! give room, and foot it, girls. [play.

Music plays, and ballance.

More light, ye knaves: and turn the tables up, And quench the fire, the room is grown too hot.— Ah, sirrah, this unlock'd—for sport comes well. Nay, sit, say, sit, good cousin Capulet; For you and I are past our dancing days: How long is't now, since last yourself and I Were on a mask?—

2 Cap. By'r lady, thirty years.
1 Cap. What, man! 'tis not so much, 'tis not so 'Tis since the nuptial of Lucentio. [much: Come pentecost as quickly as it will, Some five and twenty years; and then we mask'd.

2 Cap. 'Tis more, 'tis more: his son is elder, sir; His son is thirty.

1 Cap. Will you tell me that? His son was but a ward two years ago.

Rom. What lady's that, which doth enrich the hand Of yonder knight?

Serv. I know not, sir.

Rom. O, she doth teach the torches to burn bright! Her beauty hangs upon the cheek of night Like a rich jewel in an Ethipian ear: Beauty too rich for use, for earth too dear! So shews a snowy dove troping with crows, As yonder lady o'er her fellows shews. The measure done, I'll watch her place of stand, And, touching hers, make happy my rude hand. Do you not think, fair lady, it were right? For I ne'er saw true beauty till this night.

Tyb. This, by his voice, should be a Montague:— Fetch me my rapier, boy!—What! dare the slave Come hither, cover'd with an antic face, To fler and scorn at our solemnity?

Now, by the stock and honour of my kin, To strike him dead I hold it not a sin. [you so? 1 Cap. Why, how now kinsman! wherefore storm Tyb. Uncle, this is a Montague, our foe; A villain, that is hither come in spite, To scorn at our solemnity this night.

1 Cap. Young Romeo is't?

Tyb. The he, that villain Romeo.

1 Cap. Content thee, gentle coz, let him alone, He bears him like a portly gentleman: And, to say truth, Verona brags of him, To be a virtuous and well-govern'd youth: I would not for the wealth of all this town, Here in my house do him disparagement: Therefore be patient, take so note of him, It is not will; the which thou respect, Shew a fair presence, and put off these frowns, An ill-becoming semblance for a feast.

I't ll fiet, when such a villain is a guest;

I'll not endure him.

1 Cap. He shall be endur'd; What, goodman boy!—I say, he shall;— Go to;— Am I the master here, or you? go to. You'll not endure him?—God shall mend my soul—you'll make a mutiny among my guests! You will set cock-a-hoop! you'll be the man! Tyb. Why, uncle, 'tis a shame.

1 Cap. Go to, go to. You are a sancy boy!—Is't so, indeed?— This trick may chance to seath you;—I know what. You must contrary we marry, 'tis time— Well said, my hearts;—You are a prince; go— De quiet, or—More light, more light, for shame!— I'll make you quiet; What!—Cheerly, my hearts.

Tyb. Patience performe with wilful chealing meeting Makes my flesh tremble in their different greeting. I will withdraw, but this intrusion shall, Now seeming sweet, couerst to bitter gall. [Erit. Rom. If I profane with my unworthv blood

To Juliet.

This holy shrine, the gentle size is this,— My lips, two blushing pilgrims, ready stand To smooth that rough touch with a tender kiss. Jul. Good pilgrim, you do wrong your hand too much, Which manerly devotion shews in this; For saith my hand's the pilgrims' hand do touch, And palm to palm is holy palmers' kiss. Rom. Have not sains lips, and holy palmers too? Jul. Ay, pilgrim, lips that they must use in prayer. Rom. O then, dear saint, let lips do what hands do; They pray, grant thou, lest faith turn to despair. Jul. Saints do not move, though grant for prayers' sake take. [Erit.

Rom. Then move not, while my prayer's effect! Thus from my lips, by yours, my sin is pur'd. [Kissing her.

Jul. Then have my lips the sin that they have took. Rom. Sin from my lips! O trespass sweetly urg'd! Give me my sin again.

Nurse. Madam, your mother craves a word with you: Rom. What is her mother?

Nurse. Marry, bachelor, Her mother is the lady of the house, And a good lady, and a wise, and virtuous: I nurs'd her daughter, that you talk'd withal; I tell you, madam, that can lay hold of her, Shall have the chinks.

Rom. Is she a Capulet? O dear account! my life is my foe's debt.

Rom. Away, begone; the sport is at the best.

Rom. Ay, so I fear; the more is my unrest.

1 Cap. Nay, gentlemen, prepare not to be gone; We have a tripping foolish banquet towards. Is it e'en so? Why, then I thank you all; I thank you, honest gentlemen; good night:— More torches here!—Come on, then let's to bed. Ah, sirrah, [To 2 Cap.] by my fay, it waxes late; I'll to my rest. [Exeunt all but Juliet and Nurse.

Jul. Come hither, nurse; What is ye gentleman? Nurse. The son and heir of old Tiberio.

Jul. What's he, that now is going out of door? Nurse. Marry, that, I think, be young Petrucchio.

Jul. What's he, that follows there, that would not Nurse. I know not. [dance?

Jul. Go, ask his name:—if he be married, My grave is like to be my wedding bed.

Nurse. The only son of your great enemy. Jul. My only love sprung from my only hate! Too early seen unknown, and known too late! [E'd.
ACT III.

Scene I.

[Enter Romeo and Paris, with a sword.]

Romeo: What's the news, Paris? Have you any news from the house of Montague?

Paris: No, my lord. But I have heard that Tybalt, your kinsman, has been killed in a duel with Mercutio.

Romeo: Ah, woe is me! He was a good friend to me. What are you doing here, Paris?

Paris: I come to check on your safety, my lord. I have heard that the Montague family is planning to feast tonight.

Romeo: That is true, Paris. But I must go to the feast and seek a chance to speak with Juliet.

Paris: Be careful, my lord. I fear the Montagues are planning to do harm.

Paris: Goodbye, Romeo. May the fates be kind to you.
Had it written, I would bear the word.

Jul. My ears have not yet drank a hundred words;
Of that thou canst entertain; yet I know the sound;
Art thou not Romeo, and Montague?

Rom. Neither, but same, if either thee dislike.

Jul. How canst thou utter, tell me? and where
The orchard walls are high, and hard to climb, I fear
And the place death, considering who thou art; If yet thou knowest it perchance this

Rom. With love's light wings did I o'er-perch these
For many hours cannot hold love out; [walls]
And what love can do, that date love attempt;
Therefore thy kinmen are so let to me.

Jul. If they do see thee, they will murder thee.

Rom. Alack! there lies more point in thine eye,
Than twenty of their swords, look thou but sweet.
And I am proved against their cruelty.

Jul. I would not for the world, they saw thee here.

Rom. I have night's clock to hide me from their sight;
And, thou love me, let them find me here:
My life were better ended by their hate,
Than death prolonged, wanting of thy love.

Jul. How like dost thou seem to find at such an hour?

Rom. By love, who, listless in the new moon,
He lent me counsel, and I lent him eyes.
I am no pilot; yet,wert thou as far
As that vast shore wash'd with the furthest sea,
I would,advantage for such merchandises.

Jul. Thou knowest, the slack of night is on my face;
Else would a maiden blush be paint my cheek,
For that which thou hast bid me speak to night.
I am well I dower on form, fair, fair deny
What I have spoke: But farewell compliment!
Doat thou love me! I know, thou wilt say—Ay;
And I will take thy word: yet, if thou swearst,
Thou may'st prove false; at lovers' petitions,
They say, love laughs. O, gentle Romeo,
If thou dost love, pronounce it faithfully; Or if thou think'st I am too quickly won,
I'll frame, and be perverse, and say thou nay.
So thou wilt wear; but, else, not for the world.

Jul. In truth, fair Montague, I am too fond;
And therefore thou may'st think my harbour light;
But trust me, gentleman, I'll prove more true
That any sun that has but heard me speak to night.
I should have been more strange, I must confess;
But that thou overheard'st, ere I was ware,
My true love's passion: therefore pardon me; And not impute this yielding to light love,
Which the dark night hath so discover'd.

Rom. Lady, by yonder blessed moon I swear,
That tips with silver all these fruit-ten trees—

Jul. O, swear not by the moon, the inconstant moon
That monthly changes in her circular orb,
Lest that thy love prove likewise variable.

Rom. What shall I swear by?

Jul. Do not swear at all: Or, if thou wilt, swear by thy gracious self,
Which is the god of my disdain,
And I'll believe thee.

Rom. If my heart's dear love—

Jul. Well, do not swear: although I joy in thee,
I have no joy of this contract to-night:
It is too rash, too unadvised, too sudden;
Too like the lightning, which doth cease to be,
Even in the underworld, sooner than I.--

This bed of love, by summer's ripening breath,
May prove a beauteous flower when next we meet.
Good night, good night! as sweet repose and rest
Come to thy heart, as that within my breast!

Rom. O, wilt thou leave me so unsatisfied!

Jul. What satisfaction canst thou have to-night?

Rom. The exchange of thy love's faithful vow for mine:

Jul. I gave thee none before thou didst request it:
And yet I would it were to give again. [Love?

Rom. Would'st thou withdraw it for what purpose,

Jul. But to be frank, and give it thee again.
And yet I wish but for the thing I have:
My bounty is as boundless as the sea,
My love as deep; the more I give thee, the more
The more I have, for both are infinite.

Nurse calls within.

I hear some noise within; [Dear love, adieu! Awa, good morrow!—Sweet Montague, be true;
Stay but a little, I will come again.

[Exit. Rom. O blessed blessed morrow! I am afraid,
Beauty in night, all this is but a dream,
Too flattering-weet to be substantial.

Re-enter Juliet, above.

Jul. Three words, dear Romeo, and good night, in
If that thy love of love be honourable, [ideal,
Thy purpose marriage, send me word to-morrow,
By one that I'll procure to come to thee.
Where, and what time, thou wilt perform the rite,
And all my fortunes at thy foot I'll lay,
And follow thee my road throughout the world.

Nurse. [Within.] Madam.

Jul. I come, aunty;—but if thou mean'st not well,
I do beseech thee,

Nurse. [Within.] Madam.

Jul. By and by, I come—

To cease thy suit, and leave me to my grief.

To-morrow will I send.

Rom. So thrice my soul,

Jul. A thousand times good night. [Exit.

Rom. A thousand times the worse to want thy light,

Love given to love, a school-boy's from their books,
But love from love, toward school with heavy looks.

Re-enter Juliet, above.

Jul. Hyst! Romeo, hyst!—O, for a falconer's voice,
To lure this soul gently back again!

Bondage is worse, and may not speak aloud;
Else would I tear the cops where echo less,
And make her name the word to call me more than mine.

With repetition of my Romeo's name.

Rom. It is my soul, that calls upon my name:
How silver sweet sound lover's tongues by night,
Like sweetest music to attending ears!

Jul. Romeo!

Rom. My sweet!

Jul. Shall I send to thee?

Rom. At the hour of nine.

Jul. I will not fail, 'tis twenty years till then.
I have forgot why I did call thee back

Rom. Let me stand here till thou remember it.

Jul. I shall forget, to have thee still stand there,
Remembering how I love thy company.

Rom. And I'll still stay, to have thee still forget,
Forgetting any other home but this.

Jul. 'Tis almost morning, I would have thee gone.
And yet no further than a wanton's bird;
Who lets it hop a little from her hand,
Like a poor prisoner in his twisted yoke,
And with a silk thin thread doth link again,
So loving jealous of his liberty.

Rom. I would, I were thy bird.

Jul. Sweet, so would I:

Yet I should kill thee with much cherishing.

Good night, good night! parting is such sweet sorrow,
That I shall say—good night, till it be morrow. [Exit.
And all combin'd, save what thou must combine
By holy marriage; When, and where, and how,
We met, we wou'd, and made exchange of vow,
'ill tells thee as we pass; but this I pray,
That thou consent to marry us this day.

Fri. Holy Saint Francis! what a change is here!
Is Rosaline, whom thou didst love so dear,
So soon forsaken? young men's love then lies
Not truly in their hearts, but in their eyes.
Jest Marin! what a deal of brine
Hath wash'd thy sallow cheeks for Rosaline?
How much salt water thrown away in vain,
That wilt thou love that of it doth not taste?
The sun not yet thy sighs from heaven clears,
Thy old groans ring yet in my anciant ears;
Lo, here upon thy check the stain doth sit
Of an old tear that is not wash'd off yet:
If e'er thou wast thyself, and these woes thine,
Thou and these woes were all for Rosaline;
And art thou chang'd! pronounce this sentence then—
Women may fall, when there's no strength in men.

Rom. Thou chidst me off for loving Rosaline.
Fri. For doting, not for loving, pupil mine.
Rom. And bad'st me bury love.
Fri. Not in a grave,
To lay one in, another out to have.
Rom. I pray thee, chide not: she, whom I love now,
Doth grace for grace, and love for love allow;
The other did not so.

Fri. O, she knew well,
Thy love did read by rote, and could not spell.
But come, young waverer, come go with me,
In one respect I'll thy assistant be;
For this alliance may so happy prove,
To turn your household's rancour to pure love.
Rom. O, let us hence; I stand on sudden haste.
Fri. Wisely, and slow; They stumble, that run fast.

Enter Romeo.

Rom. Good morrow, father! —
Fri. Benedicte!

Rom. What early tongue so sweet salutation?
Young son, it argues a distemper'd head,
So soon to bid good morrow to thy bed:
Care keeps his watch in every old man's eye,
And where care lodges, sleep will never lie;
But where unbruised youth with unstifled brain
Doth couch his limbs, there golden sleep doth reign:
Therefore thy earliness doth me assure,
That thou art up-town'd by some distemper,
Or if not so, then here I lift it right—
Our Romeo hath not been in bed to-night.

Rom. That last is true, the sweeter rest was mine.
Fri. God pardon sin! wast thou with Rosaline?
Rom. With Rosaline, my ghostly father? no;
I have forget that name, and that name's went.
Fri. That's my good son: But where hast thou been then?
Rom. I'll tell thee, ere thou ask it me again.
I have been feasting with mine enemy;
Where, on a sudden, one hath wounded me,
That's by me wounded: both our remedies
Within thy help and holy physic lies:
I bear no hatred, blessed man: for lo,
My intercession likewise stands my fee.
Fri. Be plain, good son, and honestly in thy drift;
Riddling confession finds but riddling shrift.
Rom. Then plainly know, my heart's dear love is set
On the fair daughter of rich Capulet;
As mine her's, so her's is set on mine;
Enter Romeo.

Ben. Here comes Romeo, here comes Romeo.

Mer. Without hisroe, like a dried herring;—O, flesh, flesh, how thart thou fished!—Now is he for the numbers that Petrarch flowed in: Laura to his lady, was but a kitchen-wench;—warry, she had a better love to be-hymne her: Dido, a dowdly; Cleopatra, a grisly; Helen and Hero, beldings and harlots; Thistle, a gray eye or so, but not to the purpose.—Signior Romeo, bon jour! there's a French salutation to your French slop. You gave us the counterfeit fairly last night.

Rom. Good morrow to you both. What counterfeft did I give you?

Mer. The slip, sir, the slip; Can you not receive?

Rom. Pardon, good Mercutio, my business was great; and, in such case as mine, a man may strain courtesy.

Mer. That's as much as to say,—such a case as yours constrains a man to bow in the bams.

Rom. Meaning—to court'sy.

Mer. Thou hast most kindly hit it.

Rom. A most courteous exposition.

Mer. Nay, I am the very pink of courtesy.

Rom. Pink for flower.

Mer. Right.

Rom. Why, then is my pump well flowered.

Mer. Well said: Follow me this jest now, till then hast worn out thy pump; that, when the single sole of it is worn, the jest may remain, after the wearing, solely singular.

Rom. O single-soled jest, solely singular for the singleness!

Mer. Come between us, good Benvolio; my wits fail.

Rom. Switch and spurs, switch and spurs; or I'll cry a match.

Mer. Nay, if thy wits run the wild-goose chase, I have done; for thou hast more of the wild goose in one of thy wits, than, I am sure, I have in my whole five: Was I with you there for the goose?

Rom. Thou wast ever with me for any thing, when thou wast not there for the goose.

Mer. I will bite thee by the ear for that jest.

Rom. Nay, good goose, bite not.

Mer. Thy wit is a very bitter sweeting; it is a most sharp sance.

Rom. And is it not well served in to a sweet goose? Mer. O, here's a wit of cheverel, that stretches from an inch narrow to an ell broad!

Rom. I stretch it out for that word—broad: which added to the goose, proves thee far and wide a broad goose.

Mer. Why, is not this better now than groaning for love? now art thou sociable, now art thou Romeo; now art thou what art thou, by art as well as by nature: for this drivelling love is like a great natural, that runs lolling up and down to hide his bauble in a hole.

Rom. Stop there, stop there.

Mer. Thou desirer n.e to stop in my tale against the hair.

Rom. Thou would'st else have made thy tale large. Mer. O, thou art deceived, I would have made it short: for I was come to the whole depth of my tale: and meant, indeed, to occupy the argument no longer.

Rom. Here's goodly goer!

Enter Nurse and Peter.

Mer. A sail, a sail, a sail!

Ben. Two, two, a shirt, and a smack.

Nurse. Peter!

Peter. Anon?

Nurse. My fan, Peter.

Mer. Prythee, do, good Peter, to hide her face; for her fan's the fairer of the two.

Nurse. God ye good morrow, gentlemen.

Mer. God ye good den, fair gentlewoman.

Nurse. Is it good den?

Mer. Tis no less, I tell you; for the bawdy hand of the dial is now upon the priek of noon.

Nurse. Out upon you! what a man are you?

Rom. One, gentlewoman, that God hath made himself to mar.

Nurse. By my troth, it is well said:—For himself to mar, quoth'a?—Gentlemen, can any of you tell me where I may find the young Romeo?

Rom. I can tell you; but young Romeo will be older when you have found him, than he was when you sought him: I am the youngest of that name, for fault of a worse.

Nurse. You say well.

Rom. Yea, is the worst well? very well took, i'faith; wisely, wisely.

Nurse. If you be he, sir, I desire some confidence with you.

Ben. She will indite him to some supper.

Mer. A bawd, a bawd, a bawd! So he!

Rom. What hast thou found?

Mer. No hare, sir; unless a hare, sir, in a lenten pie, that is something stale and hoar ere it be spent.

An old hare how, And an old hare how, Is very good meat in lent: But a hare that is how, Is too much for a score, When it hours ere it be spent.

Romeo, will you come to your father's? we'll to dinner thither.

Rom. I will follow you.

Mer. Farewell, ancient lady; farewell, lady, lady. [Exit Mercutio and Benvolio.

Nurse. Marry, farewell!—I pray you, sir, what saucy merchant was this, that was so full of his ropery? Rom. A gentleman, nurse, that loves to hear himself talk; and will speak more in a minute, than he will stand to in a month.

Nurse. An a speak any thing against me, I'll take him down an a were lustier than he is, and twenty such Jacks; and if I cannot, I'll find those that shall. Scurvy knife! I am none of his flat-gills; I am none of his skitt-mates:—And thou must stand by too, and suffer every knife to use me at his pleasure!

Pet. I saw no man use you at his pleasure; if I had, my weapon should quickly have been out, I warrant you: I dare draw as soon as another man, if I see occasion in a good quarrel, and the law on my side.

Nurse. Now, afoxe God, I am so vexed, that every part about me quivers. Scurvy knife!—Pray you, sir, a word: and as I told you, my young lady bade me inquire you out; what she bade me say, I will keep to myself: but first let me tell ye, if ye should lead her into a fool's paradise, as they say, it were a very gross kind of behaviour, as they say: for the gentlewoman is young; and, therefore, if you should Hast thou met with him? Send thy man away.
Nurse. Peter, stay at the gate. [Exit Peter.
Jul. Now, good sweet nurse,—O lord! why look'st thou sad?
Though news be sad, yet tell them merrily;
If good, thou shamt'st the music of sweet news
By playing it to me with so sour a face.
Nurse. I am awary, give me leave a while:—
Fye, how my bones ache! What a junct have I had!
Jul. I would, thou badst my bones, and I thy news:
Nay, come, I pray thee, speak;—good, good, good nurse, thou speakest.
Nurse. Jesu, What haste can you not stay awhile? Do you not see, that I am out of breath?
Jul. How art thou out of breath, when thou hast
To say to me—that thou art out of breath? [breath
The excuse, that thou dost make in this delay,
Is longer than the tale thou dost excuse.
Is thy news good, or bad? answer to that;
Say either, and I'll stay the circumstance:
Let me be satisfied, Is't good or bad?
Nurse. Well, you have made a simple choice; you Know not how to choose a man: Romeo! no, not he;
though his face be better than any man's, yet his leg exceeds all men's; and for a hand, and a foot, and a body,—though they be not to be talked on, yet they are past compare: Is not the flower of courtesy,
—But I'll warrant him, as gentle as a lamb,—Go thy ways, wench; serve God.—What, have you dined at home?
Jul. No, no: But all this did I know before;
What says he of our marriage? what of that?
Nurse. Lord, how my head aches! what a head have
It beats as it would fall in twenty pieces, [1]
My back o' t' other side.—O, my back, my back!—
Hie thy heart, for sending me about
To catch my death with jaunting up and down?
Jul. T'faith, I am sorry that thou art not well:
Sweet, sweet, sweet nurse, tell me, what says my love?
Nurse. Your love says like an honest gentleman,
And a courteous, and a kind, and a handsome,
And, I warrant, a virtuous:—Where is your mother?
Jul. Where is my mother?—why, she is within;
Where should she be? How oddly thou reply'st!—
Your love says like an honest gentleman,
—Where is your mother?
Nurse. O, God's lady dear!
Are you so hot? Marry, come up, I trow;
Is this the poultrie for my aking bones?
Hereforward do your messages yourself.
Jul. Here's such a coil.—Come, what says Romeo?
Nurse. Have you got leave to go to shift to-day?
Jul. I have.
Nurse. Then hie you hence to friar Laurence' cell,
There stays a husband to make you a wife:
Now comes the wanton blood up in your cheeks,
They'll be in scarlet straight at any news.
He you to church! I must another way,
To fetch a ladder, by the which your love
Must climb a bird's nest soon, when it is dark:
I am the drudge, and toil in your delight;
But you shall bear the burden soon at night.
Go, I'll to dinner; hie you to the cell.
Jul. Hie to high fortune!—honest nurse, farewell. [Exit.

SCENE VI.—Friar Laurence's Cell.
[Enter Friar Laurence and Romeo.
Fri. So smile the heavens upon this holy act,
That after-hours with sorrow chide us not!
Rom. Amen, amen! but come what sorrow can,
NURSE: Jesu! what haste? can you not stay awhile?

 Act II Sc. 5
ACT III.

SCENE I.—A public Place.

Enter Mercutio, Benvolio, Page, and Servants.

Ben. I pray thee, good Mercutio, let's retire.
The day is hot, the Capulets abroad.
And, if we meet, we shall not 'scape a brawl;
For, now these hot days, is the mad blood stirring.

Mer. Thou art like one of those fellows, that, when he enters the confines of a tavern, claps me his sword upon the table, and says, God send me no need of thee! and, by the operation of the second cup, draws it on the drawer, when, indeed, there is no need.

Ben. Am I like such a fellow?

Mer. Come, come, thou art as hot as a Jack in thy mood as any in Italy: and as soon moved to be moody, and as soon moody to be moved.

Ben. And what to?

Mer. Nay, an there were two such, we should have none shortly, for one would kill the other.
Thou! why wilt quarrel with a man that hath a hair more, or a hair less, in his beard, than thou hast.
Thou wilt quarrel with a man for cracking outs, having no other reason but because thou hast hazel eyes; What eye, but such an eye, would spy out such a quirk in as full of quarrels, as an egg is full of meat; and yet thy head hath been beaten as addle as an egg, for quarrelling. Thou hast quarrelled with a man for coughing in the street, because he hath wakened thy dog that hath lain asleep in the sun. Didst thou not fall out with a tailor for wearing his new doublet before Easter? with another, for tying his new shoes with old ribbons; and yet thou wilt tutor me from quarrelling!

Ben. An I were so apt to quarrel as thou art, any man should buy the fee simple of my life for an hour and a quarter.

Mer. The fee-simple! O simple!

Enter Tybalt, and others.

Ben. By my head, here come the Capulets.

Mer. By my heel, I care not.

Tyb. Follow me close, for I will speak to them.

Gentleman, good den: a word with one of you.

Mer. And but one word with one of us? Couple it with something; make it a word and a blow.

Tyb. You will find me apt enough to that, sir, if you will but come to terms.

Mer. Could you not take some occasion without giving?

Tyb. Mercutio, thou consort'st with Romeo.

Mer. Consort! what, dost thou make us minstrels! an thou make minstrels of us, look to hear nothing but discords: here's my fiddlesetck; here's that shall make you an eternal consort.

Ben. We talk here in the public haunt of men:
Either withdraw into some private place, Or reason coldly of your grievances,
Or else depart; here all eyes gaze on us.

Mer. Men's eyes were made to look, and let them I will not budge for no man's pleasure.

[Exeunt.

Enter Romeo.

Tyb. Well, peace be with you, sir! here comes my man.

Mer. But I'll be hanged, sir, if he wear thy livery.

Marry, go before to field, he'll be your follower;
Your worship in that sense, may call him—man.

Tyb. Romeo, the hate I bear thee can afford
No better term than this—Thou art a villain.

Rom. Tybalt, the reason that I have to love thee
Doth much excuse the appertaining rage
To such a greeting:—Villain am I none;
Therefore, farewell; I see, thou know'st me not.

Tyb. Boy, this shall not excuse the injuries
That thou hast done me; therefore turn, and draw.

Rom. I do protest, I never for thee
But love thee better than thou canst devise,
Till thou shalt know the reason of my love:
And so, good Capulet,—which name I tender
As dearly as mine own,—be satisfied.

Mer. O calm, dishonourable, vile submission!
A la stoccata carries it away.

Tybalt, you rat-catcher, will you walk?

Tyb. What wouldst thou have with me?

Mer. Good king of cats, nothing, but one of your nine lives; that I mean to make hold withal, and, as thou shalt use me hereafter, dry-beat the rest of the eight. Will you pluck your sword out of his pitcher by the ears! make haste, lest mine be about your ears ere I put it.

Tyb. I am for you.

[Drawing.

Rom. Gentle Mercutio, put thy rapier up.

Mer. Come, sir, your passado.

[They fight.

Rom. Draw, Benvolio;
Beat down their weapons:—Gentlemen, for shame,
Forbear this outrage:—Tybalt—Mercutio—
The prince expressly hath forbid thee brandy
In Verona streets:—hold, Tybalt:—good Mercutio.

[Exeunt Tybalt and his Partizans.

Mer. I am hurt:—
A plague o' both the houses!—I am sped:
Is he gone, and hath nothing?

Ben. What, art thou hurt?

[Exeunt.
Romeo and Juliet.

Prin. Benvenuto, who began this bloody fray?

Romeo. Tybalt, here slain, whom Romeo's hand did
Romeo that spoke him fair, bade him bothank [play, How once the quarrel was, and urged with His high respecting. — All this — uttered With gentle breath, calm look, knee humbly bow'd. —
"Come, peace, peace!" — A plague upon your houses! — 'tis
To death to death! a braggart, a rogue, a villain, that fights by the book of arithmetic — Why, the devil, came you between us? I was hurt under your arm.

Romeo. "I thought all for the best."

Mercutio. "Help me into some house, Benvenuto, Or I shall fall. — A plague o' both your houses. They have made women's mist of me: I have it, and soundly too: — Your houses.

Romeo. Ben. O Romeo, Romeo, brave Mercutio's dead; That gallant spirit hath ascended to the clouds, Which too unmindful here did seem the earth. — Romeo. This day's black fate on more days doth depend: This but begins the woe, others must end. [pens:

Benv. BENVENO. Ben. Here comes the famous Tybalt back again. Romeo. Alive! in triumph! and Mercutio slain
Away to heaven, respective latter, And fire-ev'ry fury be my conduct now! —
Now, Tybalt, take the villain back again, That late thou gav'st me; for Mercutio's soul Is but a little way above our heads, Striving for thine to keep him company: Either thou, or I, or both, must go with him. Thy, thou, wretched boy, that didst consort him Swift with him hence. [here.

Romeo. This shall determine that.

Ben. Romeo, away, be gone! The citizens are up, and Tybalt slain:
And not amends — the prince will doom thee death, If thou art taken; hence — hence! — away! Romeo. O! I am fortune's fool! Ben. Why dost thou stay? [Exit ROMEO.

Enter Citizens, &c.

Cit. Which way ran he, that kill'd Mercutio? Tybalt, that murderer, which way ran he?

Ben. There lies that Tybalt.

Cit. Charge thee in the prince's name they.

Enter PRINCE, attended; MONTAGUE, CAPULET, their Wives, and others.

PRINCE. Where are the vile beginers of this fray?

Ben. O noble prince, I can discover all The unlucky manage of this fatal brawl: There lies the man, slain by young Romeo. That slew thy kinsman, brave Mercutio.

La. CAP. Tybalt, my cousin! — O my brother's Unhappy night! ah me, the blood is spill'd! child! Of my dear kinsman, — Prince, as thou art true, For blood of ours, shed blood of Montague. —

O cousin, cousin!
ACT III.—SCENE III.

Come, gentle night; come, loving, black-brow'd night; give me my Romeo, and, when he shall die, take him and cut him out in little stars, and he will make the face of heaven so fine, that all the world will be in love with night, and pay no worship to the garish sun.

O, I have bought the mansion of a love, But not possess'd it; and, though I am sold, not yet enjoyed: So tedious is this day, as the night before some festival.

To an impatient child, that hath new robes, and may not wear them. O, here comes my nurse.

Enter Nurse, with cords.

And she brings news; and every tongue that speaks But Romeo's name, speaks heavenly eloquence.

Now, nurse, what news? What hath thou there? thou hast that Romeo bade thee fetch? Nurse. Ay, ay, the cords. [Throws them down.]

Jul. Ah me! what news! what news dost thou bring thine hands? Nurse. Tybalt is dead! he's dead, he's dead; we are undone, lady, we are undone!—[dead]

Alack the day!—he's gone, he's kill'd, he's dead! Jul. Can heaven be so envious?

Nurse. Romeo can,

Though heaven cannot:—O Romeo, Romeo!—Who ever had would have thought it!—Romeo! Jul. What villain art thou, that dost torment me thus? This torture should be read in dismal hell.

Hath Romeo slain himself? say thou but I, And that bare vow I shall poison more Than the death-darting eye of coxcombice: I am not I, if there be such an I; Or those eyes shot, that make thee answer, I. If he be slain, say I; or if not, no: Brief sounds determine of my weal, or woe.

Nurse. I saw the wound, I saw it with mine eyes; God save the mark!—here on his manly breast.

A pitiful corse, a bloody pitiful corse; Pale, pale as ashes, all bedaub'd in blood, All in gore blood,—I swooned at the sight.

Jul. What devil art thou, that dost torment me thus? This torture should be read in dismal hell.

To prison, eyes! never look on liberty! [Once] Vile earth, to earth resigns; end motion here; And thou, and Romeo, press one heavy hier!

Nurse. O Tybalt, Tybalt, the best friend I had! O courteous Tybalt! honest gentleman! That ever I should live to see thee dead!

Jul. What storm is this, that blows so contrary? Is Romeo slaughter'd; and is Tybalt dead? My dear-liev'd cousin, and my dearer lord!—Then, dreadful trumpet, sound the general doom! For who is living, if those two are gone?

Nurse. Tybalt is gone, and Romeo banish'd; Romeo, that kill'd him, he is banish'd. [blood]

Jul. O God!—Did Romeo's hand shed Tybalt's Nurse. It did, it did; alas the day! it did. Jul. O serpent heart, hid with a flow'ring face! Did ever dragon keep so fair a cave? Beautiful tyrant! fiend angelical! Dove-feather'd raven! wolfish-ravening lamb! Despised substance of divinest show! Just opposite to what thou justly seem'st, A damned saint, an honourable villain!— O, nature! what hast thou done to hell, When thou didst lower the spirit of a fiend In mortal paradise of such sweet flesh?— Was ever book, containing such vile matter, So finely bound? O, that deceit should dwell In such a gorgeous palace!

Nurse. There's no trust,

No faith, no honesty in men; all perf'd, All forsworn, all naught, all dissurers.— Ah, where's my man! give me some ay, aye:— These griefs, these woes, these sorrows make me old

Shame come to Romeo! Jul. Blister'd be thy tongue, For such a wish! he was not born to shame! Upon his brow shame is ashamed to sit; For 'tis a throne where honour may be crown'd Sole monarch of the universal earth.

O, what a beast was I to chide at him! [frown]

Nurse. Will you speak well of him that kill'd your Jul. Shall I speak ill of him that is my husband? Ah, poor my lord, what tongue shall smooth thy name, When I, thy three-hours' wife, have nangeld it?— But, wherefore, villain, didst thou kill my cousin? That villain cousin would have kill'd my husband: Back, foolish tears, back to your native spring; Your tributary drops belong to woe,

Which you, mistaken, offer up to joy.

My husband lives, that Tybalt would have slain And Tybalt's dead, that my husband: All this is comfort; Wherefore weep I then? Some word there was, worser than Tybalt's death, That murder'd me: I would forget it fain; But, O! it presses to my memory, Like damned guilty deeds to sinners' minds: Tybalt is dead, and Romeo—banish'd.

Romeo is banish'd, that is for ever banish'd. Hallowed slain ten thousand Tybalts. Tybalt's death Was woe enough, if it had ended there: Or,—if sour woes delights in fellowship, Aot needly will be rank'd with other griefs,— Why follow'd not, when she said—Tybalt's dead, Thy father, or thy mother, nay, or both, Which modern lamentation might have mov'd? But, with a rearward following Tybalt's death, Romeo is banish'd,—to speak that word, Is father, mother, Tybalt, Romeo, Juliet, All slain, all dead:—Romeo is banish'd,—

There is no end, no limit, measure, bound, In that word's death; no words can that woe sound.— Where, Tybalt, Tybalt, Tybalt! Nurse. Weping and wailing over Tybalt's corse: Will you go to there! I will bring you thither.

Jul. Wash they his wounds with tears, mine shall be spent.

When theirs are dry, for Romeo's banishment.

Take up those cords:—Poor ropes, you are beguil'd, Both thou and I; for Romeo is exil'd.

He made you for a highway to my bed; But I, a maid, die maid-widow'd; Come, cords; come, nurse; I'll to my wedding bed; And death, not Romeo, take my maidhead! Nurse. Hie to your chamber: I'll find Romeo To comfort you:—I went well where he is... Hark ye, your Romeo will be here at night: I'll to him; he is hid at Laurence' cell.

Jul. O find him! give this ring to my true knight, And bid him come to take his last farewell. | Exeunt.

SCENE III.—Friar Laurence's Cell.

Enter Friar Laurence and Romeo.

Fri. Romeo, come forth; come forth, thou fearful Affliction is enamour'd of thy parts, man; And thou art wedded to calamity. doom

Rom. Father, what news? what is the prince's What sorrow craves acquaintance at my hand, That I yet know not? Fri. Too familiar Is my dear son with such sour company;
Thou wilt be taken:—Stay awhile:—stand up;
Run to my study:—By and by:—God's will!
What wildness is this? — I come, I come.

Who knocks so hard? whence come you? what's your will?

Nurse. [Within.] Let me come in, and you shall know my errand;
I come from lady Juliet.

Fri. Welcome then.

Enter Nurse.

Nurse. O holy friar, O, tell me, holy friar,
Where is my lady's lord, where is Romeo? [drunk.
Fri. There on the ground, with his own hands made
Nurse. O, he is even in my mistress' case,
Just in her case?

Fri. O woeful sympathy!
Piteous predicament!

Nurse. Even so lies she,
Blubbering and weeping, weeping and blubbering:
— Stand up, stand up; stand, as you be a man:
For Juliet's sake, for her sake, rise and stand;
Why should you fall into so deep an O?

Rom. Nurse. [fall.

Fri. Ah sir! ah sir!—Well, death's the end of
Rom. Spak' st thou of Juliet? how is it with her?
Doth she not think me an old murderer,
Now I have stain'd the childhood of my joy
With blood removed but little from her own?
Where is she? and how doth she? and what says
My courteous lady to our cancell'd love? [weeps;
Nurse. O, she says nothing, sir, but weeps and
And now falls on her bed; and then starts up,
And Tybalt calls; and then on Romeo cries,
And then doth fall again.

Rom. As if that name,
Shot from the deadly level of a gun,
Dial murder her; as that name's cursed hand
Murther'd her kinsman.—O tell me, friar, tell me,
In what vile part of this anatomy
Doth thy dear love lodge? tell me, that I may sack
The hateful mansion.

Fri. [Draws his sword.

Fri. Hold thy desperate hand:
Art thou a man? thy form cries out on art:
Thy tears are womanish; thy wild acts denote
The unreasonable fury of a beast:
Untempered woman, in a seeming man!
Or ill-tempering beast, in seeming both!—
Thou hast amazed me: by my holy order,
I thought thy disposition better temper'd.
Hast thou shun Tybalt? wilt thou slay thyself?
And slay thy lady too that lives in thee,
By doing damned hate upon thyself?

Fri. What rail'st thou on thy birth, the heaven, and earth?
Since birth, and heaven, and earth, all three do meet
In thee at once; which thou at once would'st lose.
Eye, eye! thou sham'st thy shape, thy love, thy wit;
Which, like an usher, adorn'd to thy all,
And useth none in that true sense indeed,
Which should bedeck thy shape, thy love, thy wit.
Thy noble shape is but a form of wax,
Digressing from the value of a man:
Thy dear love a word, but hollow perjury,
Killing that love which thou hast vow'd to cherish
Thy wit, that ornament to shape and love,
Mis-shapes in the conduct of them both,
Like powder in a skill-less soldier's flask,
Is set on fire by thine own ignorance,
And thou dismember'd with thine own defence.

Fri. What, roue thee, man! thy Juliet is alive,
For whose dear sake thou wast but lately dead;
There art thou happy: Tybalt would kill thee,
But thou stlewst Tybalt; there are thou art happy too:
The law, that threaten'd death, becomes thy friend,
And turns it to exile; there art thou happy:
A pack of blessings lights upon thy back;
Happiness courts thee in her best array.
But, like a mischiev'd and sullen wench,
Thou pou'st upon thy fortune and thy love:
Take heed, take heed, for such die miserable.
Go, get thee to thy love, as was decreed,
Ascend her chamber, hence and comfort her;
But, look, thou stay not till the watch be set,
For then thou canst not pass to Mantua;
Where thou shalt live, till we can find a time
To blaze your marriage, reconcile your friends,
Beg pardon of the prince, and call thee back
With twenty thousand thousand times more joy
Than thou went'st forth in lamentation.—
Go, before, nurse; commend me to thy lady;
And bid her hasten all the house to bed,
Which heavy sorrow makes them apt unto:
Romeo is coming.
Nurse. O Lord, I could have staid here all the night,
To hear good counsel: O, what learning is!—
My lord, I'll tell my lady you will come.
Rom. Do so, and bid my sweet prepare to chide.
Nurse. Here, sir, a ring she bid me give you, sir:
Hie you, make haste, for it grows very late.
[Exit Nurse.
Rom. How well my comfort is reviv'd by this?
Fri. Go hence: Good night; and here stands all your state;
Either begone before the watch be set,
Or we shall make the day disadvantageous:
Sojourn in Mantua; I'll find out your man,
And he shall signify from time to time
Every good hap to you, that chances here:
Give me thy hand; 'tis late: farewell; good night.
Rom. But that a joy past joy out calls on me,
It was a grief, so brief to part with thee:
Farewell.
[Exeunt.
SCENE IV.—A Room in Capulet's House.
Enter CAPULET, Lady Capulet, and Paris.
Cap. Things have fallen out, sir, so unluckily,
That we have had no time to move our daughter:
Look, you see the lov'd lady h'as not dearly,
And so did I;—Well; we were born to die.
'Tis very late, she'll not come down to-night:
I promise you, but for your company,
I would have been a-bed an hour ago.
Par. These times of woe afford no time to woo;
Madam, good night: commend me to your daughter.
La. Cap. I will, and know her mind early to-mor-
To night she's mew'd up to her heaviness;
Cap. Sir Paris, I will make a desperate tender
Of my child's love: I think she will be rul'd
In all respects by me; nay more, I doubt it not.
Wife, go you to her ere you go to bed;
Acquaint her here of my son Paris' love;
And bid her, mark you me, on Wednesday next—
But, soft; What day is this?
Par. Monday, my lord.
Cap. Monday? ha! ha! Well, Wednesday is too
O' Thursday let it be;—O' Thursday, tell her, [soon,
She shall be married to this noble earl:—
Will you be ready? do you like this haste?
We are no great ad:—on, friend, or two:—
For hark you, Tybalt being slave so late,
It may be thought we held him carelessly,
Being our kinsman, if we reveal much:
Therefore we'll have some half a dozen friends,
And there an end. But what say you to Thursday?
Par. My lord, I would that Thursday were tomorrow.
Cap. Well, get you gone. O' Thursday be it
Go you to Juliet ere you go to bed.
[Then:—
Prepare her, wife, against this wedding-day:—
Farewell, my lord. — Light to my chamber, ho!
Afore me, it is so very late, that we
May call it early by and by:—Good night.
[Exeunt.
SCENE V.—Juliet's Chamber.
Enter Romeo and Juliet.
Jul. Wilt thou be gone? it is not yet near day:
It was the nightingale, and not the lark,
That pier'd the fearfull hollow of thine ear;
Nightly she sings on yon pomegranate tree:
Believe me, love, it was the nightingale.
Rom. Juliet, the lark, the herald of the morn,
No nightingale: look, love, what envious streaks
Do lace the severing clouds in yonder east:
Night's candles are burnt out, and jocund day
Stands tip toe on the misty mountain tops;
I must be gone and live, or stay and die.
Jul. You light is not day-light, I know it, I;
It is some meteor that doth enwreathes,
To be to thee this night a torch-bearer,
And light thee on thy way to Mantua:
Therefore stay yet, thou need'st not to be gone.
Rom. Let me be ta'en, let me be put to death;
I am content, so thou wilt have it so.
I'll say, yon gray is not the morning's eye,
Tis but the pale releas'd of Cynthia's cheek.
Nor that is not the lark, whose notes do beat
The vaulty heaven so high above our heads:
I have more care to stay than will to go:—
Come, death, and welcome! Juliet wills it so.—
How is't, my soul? let's talk, it is not day.
Jul. It is, it is, he hence, he gone, away;
It is the lark that sings so out of tune,
Straining harsh discords, and dissonant sharps.
Some say, the lark makes sweet division;
This doth not so, for she divideth us:
Some say, the lark and loathed toad change eyes,
O, now I would they had chang'd voices too!
Since arm from arm that voice doth us affray,
Hunt thee hence with hounds up to the day.
Now be gone; more light and light it grows.
Rom. More light and light?—more dark and dark our woes.
Enter Nurse.
Nurse. Madam!
Jul. Nurse?
Nurse. Your lady mother's coming to your chamber.
The day is broke; be wary, look about.
[Exit Nurse.
Jul. Then, window, let day in, and let life out.
Rom. Farewell, farewell! one kiss, and I'll de-send.
[Exit Romeo.
Jul. Art thou gone so? my love! my lord! my
I must hear from thee every day the hour, [friend!
For in a minute there are many days;
O! by this count I shall be much in years,
Ere I again behold my Romeo.
Rom. Farewell! I will omit no opportunity
That may convey my greetings, love, to thee.
Jul. O, think'st thou, we shall ever meet again!
Rom. I doubt it not; and all these woes shall serve
For sweet discourses in our time to come.
Jul. O God! I have an ill-diviuing soul;
Methinks I see thee, now thou art below,
As the sun set in the south to the tomb,
I am full of mystery, feel it is not in vain.
Rom: And tell me now, shall I then meet thee so soon?
Juliet: Wilt thou farewell, even as thy harlot's smile?
Rom: And she_with whom thy eyes were bent.
Juliet: My Lady, my father's daughter, art thou so true,
Rom: I am but then, and how dost thou know me now?
Juliet: How dost thou know me now, great love?
Rom: Therefore, because I met thee first before,
Juliet: I was not so much as when thou first didst see me.
Rom: And Juliet, in the friar's daughter's arms,
Juliet: What was that cause, which made me so much to love thee?
Rom: I am not much, and thou dost not keep thee long.
Juliet: Nor dost thou keep thee long, good love.
Rom: What must I do, and what must I do, Juliet?
Juliet: Then must I do, and what must I do, good love?
Rom: And do not I? jest, and what must I do, good love?
Juliet: Then must I do, and what must I do, good love.
Rom: I am not much, and thou dost not keep thee long.
Juliet: Nor dost thou keep thee long, good love.
Rom: What must I do, and what must I do, Juliet?

ACT IV.—SCENE I.

Fri. On Thursday, sir? the time is very short. Par. My father Capulet will have it so; And I am nothing slow, to slack his haste.

Fri. If you say, you do not know the lady's mind; Uneven is the course, I like it not.

Par. Immediately she weeps for Tybalt's death, And therefore have I little talk'd of love; For Venus smiles not, but she smiles not, When, sir, her father counts it dangerous, That she doth give her sorrow so much sway; And, in his wisdom, hates our marriage, To stop the inundation of her tears; Which, too much minded by herself alone, May be put from her by society.

Now you know the reason of this haste.

Fri. I would I knew not why it should be slow'd.

[Aside.]

Look, sir, here comes the lady towards my cell.

Enter Juliet.

Par. Happily met, my lady, and my wife!

Jul. That may be, sir, in May, I may be a wife.

Par. That may be, must be, love, on Thursday next.

Jul. What must be, shall be.

Fri. That's a certain text.

Par. Come you to make confession to this father?

Jul. To answer that, were to confess to you.

Par. Do not deny to him, that you love me.

Jul. I will confess to you, that I love him.

Par. So will you, I am sure, that you love me.

Jul. If I do so, it will be of more price, Being spoke behind your back, than to your face.

Par. Poor soul, thy face is much abused with tears.

Jul. The tears have got small victory by that;

For it was bad enough, before their spite. [port.

Par. Thou wrong'st it, more than tears, with that re-

Jul. That is no slander, sir, that is a truth;

And what I spake, I spake it to my face.

Par. Thy face is mine, and thou hast slander'd it.

Jul. It may be so, for it is not mine own—

Are you at leisure, holy father, now;

Or shall I come to you at evening mass?

Fri. My leisure serves me, pensive daughter, now—

My lord must play a long match, and later.

Par. God shield, I should disturb devotion!

Juliet, on Thursday early will I rouse you;

Till then, adieu! and keep this holy kiss. [Exit Paris.

Jul. O, shut the door! and when thou hast done so,

Come weep with me: Past hope, past cure, past help! [Exit.

Fri. Ah, Juliet, I already know thy grief;

It strikes so past the compass of my power,

I hear thou must, and nothing must prologue it,

On Thursday next be married to this county.

Jul. Tell me not, friar, that thou hear'st of this,

Unless thou tell me how I may prevent it:

If, in thy wisdom, thou canst give no help,

Do thou but call my resolution wise,

And with this knife I'll help it presently.

God join'd my heart and Romeo's, thou our hands,

And ere this hand, by thee to Romeo seal'd,

Shall be the label to another deed,

Or my true heart with treacherous revolt

Tura to another, this shall shay them both:

Therefore, out of thy long-experience'd time,

Give none present counsel; or, behold,

Twist my extremities and me this bloody knife

Shall play the umpire; arbitrating that

Which the commission of thy years and art

Could to no issue of true honour bring,

Be not so long to speak; I long to die,

If what thou speakest not speak of remedies.

Fri. Hold, my daughter; if I do spy a kind of hope,

Which craves as desperate an execution

As that is desperate which we would prevent.
If, rather than to marry county Paris,
Thou hast the strength of will to stay thyself;
Then is it likely, thou wilt undertake
A thing like death to chide away this shame,
That cop'st with death himself to scarce from it;
And, if thou dar'st, I'll give thee remedy.

Jul. O, bid me leap, rather than marry Paris,
From off the battlements of yonder tower;
Or walk in thievish ways; or bid me lurk,
Where serpents are; chain me with roaring bears;
Or shut me nightly in a charnel-house.
O'er-cover'd quite with dead men's rattling bones;
With reeky shanks, and yellow chapless sculls;
Or bid me go into a new-made grave,
And hide me with a dead man in his shroud;
Things that, to hear them told, have made me tremble;
And I will do it without fear or doubt.

To live an unstand'd wife to my sweet love.

Fri. Held, then; go home, be merry, give consent
To marry Paris: Wednesday is to-morrow;
To-morrow night look that thou lie alone,
Let not thy nurse lie with thee in thy chamber.
Take thou this phial, being then in bed,
And this distill'd liquor drink thou off:
When, presently, through all thy veins shall run
A cold and drowsy humour, which shall seize Each vital spirit; for no pulse shall keep
His natural progress, but succeed to beat:
No warmth, no breath, shall testify thou livest;
The roses in thy lips and cheeks shall fade
To paly ashes; thy eyes' windows fall
Like death, when he shuts up the day of life;
Each part, depriv'd of supple government,
Shall stiff, and stark, and cold, appear like death:
And in this borrow'd likeness of shrunk death
Thou shalt remain full two and forty hours,
And then awake as from a pleasant sleep.
Now when the bridgedoor in the morning comes
To rouse thee from thy bed, there art thou dead:
Then (as the manner of our country is,) in Thy best robes uncover'd on the bier,
Thou shalt be borne to that same ancient vault,
Where all the kindred of the Capulets lie.
In the mean time, against thou shalt awake,
Shall Romeo by my letters know our drift;
And hither shall he come; and he and I
Will watch thy waking, and that very night
Shall Romeo bear thee hence to Mantua.
And this shall free thee from this present shame;
If no unconstant toy, nor womanish fear,
Abate thy valour in the acting it.

Jul. Give me, O give me! tell me not of fear.

Fri. Held; get you gone, be strong and prosperous
In this resolve: I'll send a friar with speed
To Mantua, with my letters to thy lord.

Jul. Love, give me strength! and strength shall help afford.

Farewell, dear father! [Exeunt.

SCENE 11.—A Room in Capulet’s House.

Enter Capulet, Lady Capulet, Nurse, and Servants.

Cap. So many guests invite as here are write.—
[Exit Servant.

Sirrah, go hire me twenty cunning cooks.

 namedtuple: serv. You shall have none ill, sir; for I'll try if they can lick their fingers.

Cap. How canst thou try them so?

namedtuple: serv. Marry, sir, 'tis an ill cook that cannot lick his own fingers: therefore he, that cannot lick his fingers, goes not with me.

Cap. Go, begone.—
[Exit Servant.

We shall be much unfurnish'd for this time.—
What, is my daughter gone to friar Laurence?

Nurse. Ay, forsooth.

Cap. Well, he may chance to do some good on her:
A peevish self-will'd harlotry it is.

Enter Juliet.

Nurse. See, where she comes from shrift with merry look.

Cap. How now, my headstrong? where have you
Jul. Where I have learnt me to repent the sin
Of disobedient opposition
To you, and your behets; and am enjoin'd
Henceforward to remain in silence here:
And beg your pardon:—Pardon, I beseech you!
Henceforward I am ever rul'd by you.

Cap. Send for the county; go tell him of this:
I’ll have this knot knit up to-morrow morning.

Jul. I met the youthful lord at Laurence's cell;
And gave him what became love I might,
Not stepping o'er the bounds of modesty.

Cap. Why, I am else:—'tis not enough to stand up:
This as it should be.—Let me see the county:
Ay, marry, go, I say, and fetch him hither.

Now, afofe God, this reverend holy friar,
All our whole city is much bound to him.

Jul. Nurse, will you go with me into my closet,
To help me sort such needful ornaments
As you think fit to furnish me to morrow.

La. Cap. No, not till Thursday; there is time enough.

Cap. Go, nurse, go with her:—we'll to church to-morrow.
[Exeunt Juliet and Nurse.

La. Cap. We shall be short in our provision;
Tis now near night.

Cap. Tush! I will stir about,
And all things shall be well, I warrant thee, wife:
Go thou to Juliet, help to deck up her:
I'll not to bed to-night; let me alone;
I'll play the housewife for this once.—What, ho!
They are all forth: Well, I will walk myself
To county Paris, to prepare him up
Against to-morrow: my heart is wondrous light,
Since this same wayward girl is so reclaim'd.
[Exeunt.

SCENE III.—Juliet’s Chamber.

Enter Juliet and Nurse.

Jul. Ay, those attires are best:—But, gentle nurse, I pray thee, leave me to myself to-night;
For I have need of many orisons
To move the heavens to smile upon my state,
Which, well thou know'st, is cross and full of sin.

Enter Lady Capulet.

La. Cap. What, are you busy? do you need my help?

Jul. No, madam: we have cuid'd such necessary
As are behovelful for our state to-morrow:
So please you, let me now be left alone,
And let the nurse this night sit up with you;
For, I am sure, you have your hands full all,
In this so sudden business.

La. Cap. Good night!
Get thee to bed, and rest; for thou hast need.
[Exit Lady Capulet and Nurse.

Jul. Farewell!—God knows, when we shall meet again.
I have a faint cold fear thrills through my veins,
That almost freezes up the heat of life:
I'll call them back again to comfort me;
Nurse!—What should she do here?
My dismal scene I needs must act alone.—
Come, urn phial.
What if this mixture do not work at all?
Must I of force be married to the county?—
No, no;—this shall forbid it;—lie thou there.——
[Leaving down a dogger.]

What if it be a poison, which the friar
Subly hath minister'd to have me dead;
Lest in this marriage he should be dishonour'd,
Because he married me before to Romeo?
I fear, it is: and yet, methinks, it should not,
For he hath still been tried a holy man:
I will not entertain so bad a thought.—
How if, when I am laid into the tomb,
I wake before the time that Romeo
Come to redeem me! there's a fearful point!
Shall I not then be stilled in the vault,
To whose foul mouth no healthsome air breathes in,
And there die strangled ere my Romeo comes?
Or, if I live, is it not very vile,
The horrible conceit of death and night,
Together with the terror of the place,
As in a vault, an ancient receptacle.
Where, for these many hundred years, the bones
Of all my buried ancestors are pack'd;
Where bloody Tybalt, yet but green in earth,
Lies fast entwined in his shroud, as they say,
At some hours in the night's spirits resort:—
Alack, alack! is it not like, that I,
So early waking,—what with loathsome smells;
And shrieks like mandrakes, torn out of the earth,
That living mortals, hearing them, run mad;—
O! if I wake, shall I not be distraught,
Enraged with all these hideous fears?
And madly play with my forefathers' joints?
And pluck the mangled Tybalt from his shroud?
And, in this rage, with some great kinsman's bone,
As with a club, dash out my desperate brains?
O, look! methinks, I see my cousin's ghost,
Seeking out Romeo, that did spilt his body
Upon a rapier's point:—Stay, Tybalt, stay!—
Romeo, I come! this do I drink to thee.
[She throws herself on the bed.

SCENE IV.—Capulet's Hall.

Enter Lady Capulet and Nurse.

La. Cap. Hold, take these keys, and fetch more spices, nurse.
Nurse. They call for dates and quinces in the pastry.

Enter Capulet.

Cap. Come, stir, stir, stir! the second cock hath crow'd.
The curfew bell hath rung, 'tis three o'clock:—
Look to the bak'd meats, good Angelica:—
Spare not for cost. nurse.
Go, go, you cot-quean, go,
Get you to bed; 'tis late, you'll be sick to-morrow
For this night's watching.
Cap. No, not a whit; What! I have watch'd ere now
All night for lesser cause, and ne'er been sick.
La. Cap. Ay, you have been a mouse-hunt in your time:—
But I will watch you from such watching now.
[Exit Lady Capulet and Nurse.

Cap. A jealous-hood, a jealous-hood!—Now, fel-
What's there?—

Enter Servants, with spits, logs, and baskets.

1 Serv. Things for the cook, sir; but I know not what.
Cap. Make haste, make haste. [Exit 1 Serv.]
Sirrah, fetch drier logs:—
Call Peter, he will show thee where they are.

2 Serv. I have a head, sir, that will find out logs,
And never Trouble Peter for the matter. [Exit.

Cap. 'Mass, and well said; A merry whorson! ha,
Thou shalt be beggar-head. Good faith, 'tis day:
The county will be here with music straight,
[Music within.
For so he said he would. I hear him near:—
Nurse!—Wife!—what, ho!—what, nurse, I say!—

Enter Nurse.

Go, waken Juliet, go, and trim her up;
I'll go and chat with Paris:—He, make haste,
Make haste! the bridegroom is come already:
Make haste, I say. [Exit.

SCENE V.—Juliet's Chamber; Juliet on the bed.

Enter Nurse.

Nurse. Mistress!—what, mistresse!—Juliet!—fast,
I warrant her, she:—
Why, lamb!—why, lady!—fye, you slug-a-bed!—
Why, love, I say!—madam! sweet-heart!—why, bride—
What, not a word?—you take your pennyworths now;
Sleep for a week; for the next night, I warrant,
The county Paris hath set up his rest,
That you shall rest but little.—God forgive me,
(Marry, and amen!) how sound is she asleep!
I needs must wake her:—Madam, madam, madam!—
Ay, let the county take you in your bed;
He'll fright you up, I'faith.—Will it not be?
What, drest? and in your clothes! and down again!
I must needs wake you: Lady! lady! lady!
Alas! alas!—Help! help! help! my lady's dead!—
O, well-a-day, that ever I was born!—
Some aqua-vitie, ho!—my lord! my lady!—

Enter Lady Capulet.

La. Cap. What noise is here?
Nurse. O lamentable day!
La. Cap. What is the matter?
Nurse. Look, look! O heavy day!—
La. Cap. O me, O me!—my child, my only life,
Revive, look up, or I will die with thee!—
Help, help!—call help.

Enter Capulet.

Cap. For shame, bring Juliet forth; her lord is come.
Nurse. She's dead, dead, deceased; she's dead; she Mask the day!
La. Cap. Alack the day! she's dead, she's dead,
Cap. Ha! let me see her:—Out, alas! she's cold;
Her blood is settled, and her joints are stiff;
Life and these lips have long been separated:
Death lies on her, like an unimmont frost
Upon the sweetest flower of all the field.
Accursed time! unfortunate old man!
Nurse. O lamentable day!
La. Cap. O woeful time!
Cap. Death, that hath ta'en her hence to make me
Ties up my tongue, and will not let me speak. [wait,

Enter Friar Laurence and Paris, with musicians.

Fri. Come, is the bride ready to go to church?
Cap. Ready to go, but never to return:
O son, the night before thy wedding-day
Hath death lain with thy bride:—See, there she lies,
Flower as she was, deflowered by him.
Death is in my son's law, death is my heir;
My daughter he hath wedded! I will die,
And leave him all; life leaving, all is death's.
Par. Have I thought long to see this morning's face,
And doth it give me such a sight as this?
La. Cap. Accurs'd, unhappy, stretched, hateful day
Most miserable hour, that e'er time saw
In lasting labour of his pilgrimage!
But one, poor one, one poor and loving child,
But one thing to rejoice and solace in,
And cruel death hath catch’d it from my sight.
Nurse. O woe! O woful, woful, woful day!
Most lamentable day! most woful day,
That ever, ever, I did yet behold!
O day! O day! O hateful day!
Never was seen so black a day as this:
O woful day, O woful day!

Pur. Beguill’d, divorced, wronged, spited, slain!
Most detestable death, by thee beguill’d,
By cruel cruel thee quite overthrown!—
O love! O life!—not life, but love in death!
Cap. Despis’d, distressed, hated, martyr’d, kill’d!—
Uncomfortable time why can’t thou now
To murder murder our solemnity?
O child! O child!—my soul, and not my child!—
Dead art thou, dead!—alack! my child is dead!
And; with my child, my joys are buried!
Fri. Peace, ho, for shame! confusion’s cure lives
In these confusions. Heaven and yourself [not
Had part in this fair maid; now heaven hath all,
And all the better is it for the maid:
Your part in her you could not keep from death!
But heaven keeps his part in eternal life.
The most you sought was—her promotion;
For ‘twas your heaven, she should be advanc’d:
And weep ye now, seeing she is advanc’d,
Above the clouds, as high as heaven itself!
O, in this love, you love your child so ill,
That you ran mad, seeing that she is well;
She’s not well married, that lives married long;
But she’s best married, that dies married young.
Dry up your tears, and stick your rosemary
On this fair corse; and, as the custom is,
In all her best array bear her to church:
For though fond nature bids us all lament,
Yet nature’s tears are reason’s meriment.
Cap. All things, that we ordained festival,
Turn from their office to black funeral:
Our instruments, to melancholy bells;
Our wedding cheer, to a sad funeral feast;
Our solemn hymns to sullen dirges change;
Our bridal flowers serve for a buried corse,
And all things change them to the contrary.
Fri. Sir, go you in,—and, madam, go with him;—
And, too, sir Paris,—every one prepare
To follow this fair corse unto her grave:
The heavens do low’r upon you, for some ill;
Move them no more, by crossing their high will.
Nurse. Honest good fellows, ah, put up, put up,
For, well you know, this is a pitiful case. [Exit Nurse.
1 Mus. Ay, by my troth, the case may be amended.

Enter Petru.
Pet. Musicians, O, musicians, Heart’s ease, heart’s ease; O, an you will have me live, play—heart’s ease.
1 Mus. Why heart’s ease?
Pet. O musicians, because my heart itself plays—My heart is full of woe: O, play me some merry ditty, to comfort me.
2 Mus. Not a dump we; ’tis no time to play now.
Pet. You will not, then?
Mus. No.
Pet. I will then give it you soundly.
1 Mus. What will you give us?
Pet. No money, on my faith; but the gleeck: I will give you the ministers.
2 Mus. Then will I give you the serving-creature.
ACT V.—SCENE III.

John. Going to find a bare-foot brother out,
One of our order, to associate me,
Here in this city visiting the sick,
And finding him, the searchers of the town,
Suspecting, that we both were in a house
Where the infectious pestilence did reign,
Saw'd up the doors, and would not let us forth;
So that my speed to Mantua there was stay'd,
Lau. Who bare my letter then to Romeo?
John. No man to send it—here it is again,
Nor get a messenger to bring it thee,
So fearful were they of infection.
Lau. Unhappy fortune! by my brotherhood,
The letter was not nice, but full of charge.
Of dear import; and the neglecting it
May do much danger: Friar John, go hence;
Get me an horn crow, and bring it straight
Unto my cell.
Lau. Now must I to the monument alone;
Within this three hours will fair Juliet wake;
She will beshrew me much, that Romeo
Hath had no notice of these accidents;
But I will write again to Mantua,
And keep her at my cell till Romeo come:
Poor living curse, clos'd in a dead man's tomb! [Exit.

SCENE III.—A Church-Yard; in it, a Monument belonging to the Capulets.

Enter Paris, and his Page, bearing flowers and a torch.

Par. Give me thy torch, boy: Hence, and stand
Yet put it out, for I would not be seen. [aloof;]
Under yon yew-trees lay thee all along,
Holding thine ear close to the hollow ground;
So shall no foot upon the church-yard tread,
(Being loose, unfirm, with digging up of graves),
But thou shalt hear it: whistle then to me
As signal that thou hast'st something approach,
Give me those flowers. Do as I bid thee, go.
Page. I am almost afraid to stand alone
Here in the church-yard: yet I will adventure [Retires.
Par. Sweet flower, with flowers I strew thy bridial
Sweet tomb, that in thy circuit dost contain [bed:
The perfect model of eternity;
Fair Juliet, that with angels dust remain,
Accept this latest favour at my hands;
That living honour'd thee, and, being dead,
With funeral praises do adorn thy tomb! [The Boy whistles.

The boy gives warning, something doth approach.
What cursed foot wanders this way to-night,
To cross my obsequies, and true love's rites?
What, with a torch!—muffle me, night, a while.
[Retires.

Enter Romeu and Balthasar with a torch, mattock, &c.

Rom. Give me that mattock, and the wenching iron.
Hold, take this letter; early in the morning
See thou deliver it to my lord and father.
Give me the light: Upon thy life I charge thee,
What'er thou hear'st or seest, stand all aloof,
And do not interrupt me in my course.
Why I descend into this bed of death,
Is, partly, to behold my lady's face:
But, chiefly, to take thence from her dead finger
A precious ring; a ring, that I must use
In dear employment: therefore hence, be gone:—
But if thou, jealous, dost return to pry
In what I further shall intend to do,
By heaven, I will tear thee joint by joint,
And strew this hungry church-yard with thy limbs:
The time and my intents are savage-wild;
More fierce, and more inexorable far,
Than empty tigers, or the rearing sea.

But I will be gone, sir, and not trouble you.
Romeo. So shalt thou shew me friendship.—Take thou then that:
Live, and be prosperous; and farewell, good fellow.
But. For all this same, I'll hide me hereabout;
Thou knows I fear, and his intents I doubt. [Receives.
Romeo. Thou detestable maw, thou womb of death,
Gorg'd with the dearest morsel of the earth,
Thus I enforce thy rotten jaws to open.
And, in despite, I'll cram thee with more food!
Par. This is that banish'd haughty Montague,
That murder'd my love's cousin;—with which grief,
It is supposed, the fair creature shed,—
And here is come to do some villainous shame
To the dead bodies: I will apprehend him.— [Advances.
Stop thy unsaw'ld toil, vile Montague!
Can vengeance be pursu'd further than death?
Condemn'd villain, I do apprehend thee:
Obev, and go with me; for thou must die.
Romeo. I must, indeed; and thereforecame I hither.—
Good gentle youth, tempt not a desperate man,
Fly hence and leave me;—think upon these gone;
Let them affright thee, and bereave thee, youth,
Heap not another sin upon my head:
By urging me to fury.—O, be gone!
By heaven's, I love thee better than myself;
For I come hither arm'd against myself:
Stay not, be gone:—live, and hereafter say—
A madman's mercy bade thee run away.
Par. I do defy thy conjurations,
And do attach thee as a felon here.
Romeo. With this provocation I then have thee, bay,
[They fight.
Par. O lord! they fight: I will go call the watch.
Par. O, I am slain! [Falls.—If thou be merciful,
Open the tomb, lay me with Juliet. [Dies.
Romeo. In faith, I will:—Let me pursue this face,—
Mercutio's kinman, noble country Paris:
What said my man, when my betossed soul
Did not attend him as we rode? I think,
He told me, Paris should have married Juliet:
Said he not so? or did I dream it so?
Or am I mad, hearing him talk of Juliet,
To think it was so?—O, give me thy hand,
One writ with me in our misfortune's book:
I'll bury thee in a triumphant grave,—
A grave! O, no; a lantern, slaughter'd youth,
For here lies Juliet, and her beauty makes
This vault a feasting presence full of light.
Death, be thou there, by a dead man inter'd.
[Leaving Paris in the monument.
How oft when men are at the point of death,
Have they been merry! which their keepers call
A lightning before death: O, how may I
Call this a lightning?—O, my love! my wife!
Death, that hath suck'd the honey of thy breath,
Hath had no power yet upon thy beauty;
Thou art not conquer'd; beauty's ensign yet
Is crimson in thy lips, and in thy cheeks,
And death's pale hand is not advanced there—
Tybalt, liest thou there in thy bloody sheet?
O, what more favour can I do to thee,
Than with that hand that cut thy youth in twain
To Sunder his that was thine enemy!
Forgive me, cousin!—Ah, dear Juliet.
Why art thou yet so fair? Shall I believe
That unsubstantial death is amorous;
And that the lean abhorred monster keeps
Thee here in dark to be his paramour!
For fear of that, I will still stay with thee;
And never from this palace of dim night
Depart again; here, here will I remain
With wounds that are thy chamber-maids; O, here
Will I set up my everlasting rest;
And shake the yoke of inauspicious stars
From this world-wearied flesh.—Eyes, look your last!
Arms, take your last embrace! and lips, O you
The doors of breath, seal with a righteous kiss
A dateless bargain to engrossing death!
Come, bitter conduct, come, unsavoury guide!
Thou desperate pilot, now at once run on
The dashing rocks thy sea-sick weary bark!
Here's to my love!—[Drinks.] O, true apothecary!
Thy drugs are quick.—Thus with a kiss I die. [Dies.
Enter, at the other end of the church-yard, Friar
Laurence, with a lantern, crew, and spade.
Fri. Saint Francis be my speed! how oft to-night
Have my old feet stumbled at graves?—Who's there?
Who is it that consorts, so late, the dead? [well.
Bal. Here's one, a friend, and one that knows you.
Fri. Bliss be upon you! Tell me, good my friend,
What torch is yond', that vainly lends his light
To guard and eyelids veiled; as I discern,
It burneth in the Capulet's monument.
Bal. It doth so, holy sir; and there's my master,
One that you love.
Fri. Who is it?
Bal. Romeo.
Fri. How long hath he been there?
Bal. Full half an hour.
Fri. Go with me to the vault.
Bal. I, dare not, sir;
My master knows not, but I am gone hence;
And fearfully did menace me with death,
If I did stay to look on his intents.
Fri. Stay then, I'll go alone:—Fear comes upon
O, much I fear some ill unlucky thing.
[me,
Bal. As I did sleep under this yew-tree here,
I dreamt my master and another fought,
And that my master slew him.
Fri. Romeo!—[Advances.
Alack, alack, what blood is this, which stains
The stony entrance of this sepulchre?—
What mean these masterless and gory swords
To he discouler'd by this place of peace?
[Exeunt the monument.
Romeo! O, pale!—Who else! what, Paris too?
And steep'd in blood!—Ah, what an unkind hour
Is guilty of this lamentable chance!—
The lady stirs.
Juliet wakes and stirs.
Jul. O, comfortable friar! where is my lord?
I do remember well where I should be,
And there I am:—Where is my Romeo?
Fri. I hear some noise.—Lady, come from that nest
Of death, contagion, and unnatural sleep;
A greater Power than we can contradict.
Hath thwarted our intents; come, come away:
Thy husband in thy bosom there lies dead;
And Paris too; come, I'll dispose of thee
Among a sisterhood of holy nuns:
Stay not to question, for the watch is coming;
Come, go, good Juliet,—[Noise again] I dare stay
no longer. [Exit.
Jul. Go, get thee hence, for I will not wait.
What's here? a cup, cles'd in my true love's hand?
Poison, I see, hath been his timeless end:
ACT V.—SCENE III.

O churl! drink all; and leave no friendly drop, To help me after?—I will kiss thy lips; Haply, some poison yet doth hang on them, To make me die with a restorative. [Kisses him.]
Thy lips are warm! 1 Watch. [Within.] Lead, hoy:—Which way! Jul. Yes, noise!—then I'll be brief.—O happy chance be slave to patience!—This is thy sheath; [Stabs herself] there rust, and let me die. [Falls on Romeo's body, and dies.

Enter Watch, with the Page of Paris.

Page. This is the place; there, where the torch doth burn. 1 Watch. The ground is bloody; Search about the church-yard.
Go, some of you, who'er ye find, attach. [Exeunt some Watchmen.
1 Watch. Hold him in safety, till the prince come.

Enter another Watchman, with Friar Laurence.

3 Watch. Here's Romeo's man, we found him in the church-yard. [Exeunt other Watchmen.
We see the ground whereon these woes do lie; But the true ground of all these piteous woes, We cannot without circumstance descry.

Enter some of the Watch, with Balthasar.

2 Watch. Here's Romeo's man, we found him in the church-yard. [Exeunt.

1 Watch. Hold him in safety, till the prince come.

Enter another Watchman, with Friar Lawrence.

3 Watch. Here is a friar, that trembles, sighs, and weeps:
We took this mattock and this spade from him, As he was coming from this church-yard side.
1 Watch. A great suspicion; Stay the friar too.

Enter the Prince, and Attendants.

Prince. What misadventure is so early up, That calls our person from our morning's rest?

Enter Capulet, Lady Capulet, and others.

Cap. What should it be, that they so shriek abroad? Lat. Cap. The people in the street cry—Romeo, Some—Juliet, and some Paris; and all run, With open outcry, toward our monument.

Prince. What fear is this, which startles in our ears?
1 Watch. Sovereign, here lies the county Paris slain; And Romeo dead; and Juliet, dead before, Warm and new kill'd.

Prince. Search, seek, and know how this foul murder comes.

1 Watch. Here is a friar, and slaughter'd Romeo's With instruments upon them, fit to open [man; These dead men's tombs.

Cap. O, heavens!—O, wife! look how our daughter bleeds!
This dagger hath mista'en,—for, lo! his house Is empty on the back of Montague, And it mis-sheathed in my daughter's bosom. Lat. Cap. O me! this sight of death is as a bell, That warns my old age to a sepulchre.

Enter Montague and others.

Prince. Come, Montague; for thou art early up, To see thy son and heir more early down. Mon. Alas, my liege, my wife is dead to-night; Grief of my son's exilè hath stopp'd her breath: What further woe conspires against mine age? Prince. Look, and thou shalt see.

Mon. O then untangle! what manners is in this, To press before thy father to a grave? Prince. Seal up the mouth of outrage for a while, Till we can clear these ambiguities, And know their spring, their head, their true descent; And then will I be general of your woes, And lead you even to death: Meantime forbear, And let what chance be slave to patience.— Bring forth the parties of suspicion.

Fri. I am the greatest, able to do least, Yet most suspected, as the time and place Doth make against me, of this direful murder; And here I stand, both to impeach and purge Myself condemned and myself excus'd.

Prince. Then say at once what thou dost know in this, Fri. I will be brief, for my short date of breath is not so long as is a tedious tale. Romeo there dead, was husband to that Juliet, And she, there dead, that Romeo's faithful wife: I married them; and their stol'n marriage-day Was Tybalt's dooms-day, whose untimely death Vanish'd the new-made bridgroom from this city; For what was not for Tybalt, Juliet's part. You—to remove that siege of grief from her,— Betroth'd, and would have married her perforce, To county Paris:—Then comes she to me; And, with wild looks, bid me devise some means To rid her from this second marriage, Or, in my cell there would she kill herself. Then save her, so turn by my advice: A sleeping potion; which so took effect As I intended, for it wrought on her The form of death: meantime I write to Rome, That he should hither come as this dire night, To help to take her from her borrow'd grave, Being the time the potion's force should cease. But he whom love my letter, friar John, Was staid by accident; and yesternight Return'd my letter back: Then all alone, At the prefixed hour of her waking, Came I to take her from her kindred's vault; Meant to keep her closely at my cell, Till I conveniently could send to Rome: But when I came, (some minute ere the time Of her waking,) here she was already laid In the noble Paris, and true Romeo, dead. She wakes; and I entreated her come forth, And bear this work of heaven with patience: But then a noise did scare me from the tomb; And she, too desperate, would not go with me, But (as it seems) did violence on herself. All this I know; and to the marriage Her name is privy: And, if aught in this Miscarried by my fault, let my old life Be sacrifice'd, some hour before his time, Unto the rigour of severest law.

Prince. We still have known thee for a holy man.— Where's Romeo's man? what can he say in this? Bath. I brought my master news of Juliet's death; And then in post he came from Mantua. To this same place, to this same monument. This letter he early bid me give his father: And threat'nd me with death, going in the vault, If I departed not, and left him there. Prince. Give me the letter, I will look on it.— Where is the county's page, that rais'd the watch—— Sirrah, what made your master in this place? Page. He came with flowers to strew his lady's And bid me stand aloof, and so I did: [grave Aton, comes one with light to ope the tomb; And, by and by, my master drew on him; And then I ran away to call the watch.
This play is one of the most pleasing of our author's performances. The scenes are busy and various, the incidents are numerous and important, the catastrophe irresistibly affecting, and the process of the action carried on with such probability, at least with such congruity to popular opinions, as tragedy requires.

Here is one of the few attempts of Shakespeare to exhibit the conversation of gentlemen, to represent the airy sprightliness of juvenile elegance. Mr. Drakeley mentions a tradition, which might easily reach his time, of a declaration made by Shakespeare, that he was obliged to kill Mercutio in the third act, lest he should have been killed by him. Yet he thinks him no such formidable person, but that he might have lived through the play, and died in his bed, without danger to the poet. Drakeley well knew, he has been in quest of truth, in a pointed sentence, that more regard is commonly had to the words than the thought, and that it is very seldom to be rigorously understood. Mercutio's wit, gaiety, and courage, will always procure him friends that wish him a longer life; but his death was precipitated, he has lived out the time allotted him in the construction of the play; nor do I doubt the ability of Shakespeare to have contained his existence, though some of his sallies are perhaps out of the reach of Dryden, whose genius was not very fertile of meretricious, nor dextrous to humour, but acute, argumentative, comprehensive, and sublime.

The Nure is one of the characters in which the author delighted: he has, with great subtlety of distinction, drawn her at once inquisitive and secret, envious and insolent, treasy and dishonest.

The first edition of this splendid tragedy, which has been recently discovered, was printed in 1603. It was among the earliest of our Author's works, and Stevens saw a copy of Speight's edition of Chaucer, which formerly belonged to Mr. Gabriel Harvey the antagonist of Nash, who, in his own hundred rhyme, has set down Hamlet, as a performance with which he was well acquainted, in 1598. His words are these: "The younger sort take much delight in Shakespeare's Venus and Adonis; but his Lear is, and his tragedy, of Hamlet, Prince of Denmark, have it in them to please the wiser sort, 1598." In the books of the Stationers' Company, this play was entered by James Roberts, July 25, 1600, under the title of "A booke called the Revenge of Hamlet, Prince of Denmark, as it was lately acted by the Lord Chamberlain his servauntes." The story on which the play is built, may be found in Saxo Grammaticus, the Danish historian. From these Birkhoffs adopted it in his collection of novels; and from this latter work, the "History of Hamlet," quarto, 1581, I was translated.

HAMLET, PRINCE OF DENMARK.

Act I.

SCENE I.—Elsinore. A Platform before the Castle.

FRANCISCO on his post. Enter to him BERNARDO.

BER. Who's there?

FRAN. Nay, answer me: stand, and unfold Yourself.

BER. Long live the king!

FRAN. Bernardo?

BER. He.

FRAN. You come most carefully upon your hour. BER. 'Tis now struck twelve; get thee to bed, Francisco.

FRAN. For this relief, much thanks: 'tis bitter cold, And I am sick at heart.

BER. Have you had quiet guard?

FRAN. Not a mouse stirring.

BER. Well, good night.

If you do meet Horatio and Marcellus, The rivals of my watch, bid them make haste.

Enter HORATIO and MARCELLUS.

FRAN. Think, I think, I hear them.—Stand, ho! Who is Hor. Friends to this ground? [Here.] MAR. And liege men to the Dane.

FRAN. Give you good night.
Mar. O, farewell, honest soldier: Who hath reliev'd you?
Fran. Bernardo hath my place.

Exit

Mar. Go you good night.

Enter Francisco.

What, is Horatio there?

Hor. A piece of him.

Ber. Welcome, Horatio; welcome, good Marcellus.

What, has this thing appear'd again to-night?

Ber. I have seen nothing.

Hor. What?—this but our fantasy; and will not let belief take hold of him.

Touching this dreaded sight, twice seen of us:
Therefore I have estranged him, along
With us to watch the minutes of this night;
That, if again this apparition come,
He may approve our eyes, and speak to it.

Hor. Tush! tush! 'twill not appear.

Ber. Sit down awhile; and let us once again assail your ears,
That are so fortified against our story,
What we two nights have seen.

Hor. Well, sit we down,
And let us hear Bernardo speak of this:

Ber. In the same figure, like the king that's dead.

Mar. Thou art a scholar, speak to it, Horatio.

Ber. Looks it not like the king? mark it, Horatio.

Hor. Most like:—it harbors me with fear, and Ber. It would be spoke to.

[Enter Ghost.]

Mar. What art thou, that surrupt at this time of night,
Together with that fair and warlike form
In which the majesty of buried Denmark
Did sometimes march? by heaven I charge thee, speak.

Mar. It is offended.

Hor. See! it stalks away.

Hor. Stay; speak: I charge thee, speak.

[Exit Ghost.

Hor. 'Tis gone, and will not answer.

Ber. How now, Horatio? you tremble, and look
Is not this something more than fantasy? [pale:
What think you of it?

Hor. Before my God, I might not this believe,
Without the sensible and true avouch
Of mine own eyes.

Mar. Is it not like the king?

Hor. As thou art to thyself:
Such was the very armour he had on,
When he the ambitious Norway combated;
So frown'd he once, when, in an angry parle,
He smote the sledded Polack on the ice.

'Tis strange.

Mar. Thus, twice before, and jump'd at this dead hour,
With martial stalk hath he gone by our watch.

Hor. In what particular thought to work, I know
But, in the gross and scope of mine opinion, [not;
This bodes some strange eruption to our state.

Mar. Good now, sit down, and tell me, 'tis that Knows,
Why this same strict and most observant watch
So nightly tells the subject of the land?
And why such daily cast of brozen cannon,
And foreign mart for implements of war—

Why such impress of shipwrights, whose sore task
Does not divide the Sunday from the week:
What might be toward, that this sweaty haste
Doth to the night joint-labourer with the day;
Who is 't, that can inform me?

Hor. That can I;
At least, the whisper goes so. Our last king,
Whose image even but now appear'd to us,
Was, as you know, by Fortinbras of Norway,
Thereto prick'd on by a most emulatus pride,
Dard to the combat; in which our valiant Hamlet
For so the side of our renowned world esteem'd him,
Did slay this Fortinbras; who, by a seal'd compact,
Well ratified by law, and heraldry,
Did forfeit, with his life, all those his lands,
Which he stood seiz'd of, to the conqueror:
Against the which, a moity competent
Was gaged by our king; which had return'd
To the inheritance of Fortinbras;
Had he been vanquisher; as, by the same co-mat,
And carriage of the article design'd,
His fell to Hamlet: Now, sir, young Fortinbras,
Of unimproved mettle hot and full,
Hath in the skirts of Norway, here and there,
Shark'd up a list of landless resolutes,
For food and diet, to some enterprize
That hath a stomach in 't: which is no other
(As it doth well appear unto our state,)
But to recover of us by strong hand,
And terms compulsorily, those foresaid lands
So by his father lost: And this, I take it,
Is the main motive of our preparations;
The service of this our watch; and the chief head
Of this post-haste and rousage in the land.

Ber. I think it be no other, but even so:
Well may it sort, that this portentous figure
Comes armed through our watch; so like the king
That was, and is, the question of these wars.

Hor. A mote it is, to trouble the mind's eye.
In the most high and palmy state of Rome,
A little cloud hath in the sightiest part of Julius fell,
The graves stood tenantless, and the sheeted dead
Did squeak and gibber in the Roman streets.

As, stars with trains of fire shed dew of blood,
Disasters dimm'd the sun; and the moist star,
Upon whose influence Neptune's empire stands,
Was as this almost to doom by eclipse.

And even the like precurse of fierce events,—
As harbingers preceding still the fates,
And prologue to the omen coming on,—
Have heaven and earth together demonstrated
Unto our climatures and countries—

Re-enter Ghost.

Hor. But, soft; behold! lo, where it comes again!
I'll cross it, though it blast me.—Stay, illusion!
If thou hast any sound, or use of voice,
Speak to me:
If there be any good thing to be done,
That may to thee do ease, and grace to me,
Speak to me:
If thou art privy to thy country's fate,
Which, happily, foreknowing may avoid,
O, speak!
Or, if thou hast upholstered in thy life
Exerted treasure in the womb of earth,
For which, they say, you spirits oft walk in death,
Speak of it:—stay, and speak.—Stop it, Marcellus.

Mar. Shall I strike at it with my partisan?

Hor. Do, if it will not stand.
HAMLET.

Ber.

Tis here! Tis here!

Hor.

Exit Ghost.

Mar. 'Tis gone! We do it wrong, being so majestical, To offer it the show of violence; For it is, as the air, invulnerable, And our vain blows malicious mockery.

Hor. It was about to speak, when the cock crew.

Mar. And then it started like a guilty thing Upon a fearful summons. I have heard, The cock, that is the trumpet to the morn, Doth with his lofty and shrill-sounding throat Awake the god of day; and, at his warning, Whether in sea or fire, in earth or air, The extravagant and erring spirit flies To his confine: and of the truth herein This present object made probation.

Mar. It faded on the crowing of the cock.

Some say, that ever 'gainst that season comes Wherein our Saviour's birth is celebrated, This bird of dawning singeth all night long: And then, they say, no spirit dares stir abroad: The nights are wholesome; then no planets strike, No thunder blows; nature's own trumpet strikes, So hallowed and so gracious is the time.

Hor. So have I heard, and do in part believe it. But, look, the morn, in rasset mantle clad, Walks o'er the dew of yon high eastern hill: Break we our watch up; and, by my advice, Let us impart what we have seen to-night Unto young Hamlet: for, upon my life, This spirit, dumb to us, will speak to him: Do you consent we shall acquaint him with it, As needful in our loves, fitting our duty?

Mar. Let's do't, I pray; and I this morning know Where we shall find him most convenient.

SCENE II.—The same. A Room of State in the same.

Enter the King, Queen, Hamlet, Polonius, Laertes, Voltimand, Cornelius, Lords, & Attendants.

King. Though yet of Hamlet our dear brother's death The memory be green; and that it us befitted To bear our hearts in grief, and our whole kingdom To contract in one a bond of sorrow, Yet so far hath discretion fought with nature, That we with wisest sorrow think on him, Together with remembrance of ourselves. Therefore our sometime sister, now our queen, The imperial jointress of this warlike state, Have we, as 'twere, with a defeated joy,— With one auspicious, and one drooping eye; With mirth and funeral, and with darge in marriage, In equal scale, weighing delight and dole,— Taken to wife; no have we herein bair'd Your better wisdoms, which have freely gone With this affair along:—For all, our thanks.

Now follows, that you know, young Fortinbras,— Holding a weak supposal of our worth; Our thinking, by our lord dear brother's death, Our state to be disjointed by our frame, Colleagued with this dream of his advantage, He hath not fail'd to pester us with message, Importing the surrender of those lands Lost by his father, with all bands of law, To our most valiant brother.—So much for him. Now for ourself, and for this time of meeting, Thus much the business is: We have the writ To Norway, uncle of young Fortinbras,— Whom, impatient and bed-rid, scarcely hears Of this his nephew's purpose,—to suppress His further gait heron; in that the levies, The lists, and full proportions, are all made Out of his subject:—and we here despatch You, good Cornelius, and you, Voltimand, For bearers of this greeting to old Norway; Giving to you no further personal power To business with the king, more than the scope Of these dilated articles allow.

Farewell; and let your haste commend your duty.

Cor. Vol. In that, and all things, will we shew our duty.

King. We doubt it nothing; heartily farewell. [Exit Voltimand and Cornelius.]

And now, Laertes, what's the news with you? You told us of some suit? What is't, Laertes? You cannot speak of reason to the Dane, And lose your voice: What would'st thou beg, Laert. That shall not be my offer, not thy asking? [Yes. The head is not more native to the heart, The hand more instrumental to the mouth, Than is the throne of Denmark to thy father. What would'st thou have, Laertes?

Laert. My dread lord, Your leave and favour to return to France; From whence though willingly I came to Denmark, To shew my duty in your coronation: Yet now, I must confess, that duty done, My thoughts and wishes bend again toward France, And bow them to your gracious leave and pardon.

King. Have you your father's leave? What says Polonius?

Pol. He hath, my lord, wrung from me now slow By laboursome petition; and, at last, [leave. Upon his will I seal'd my hard consent: I do beseech you, give him leave to go.

King. Take thy fair hour, Laertes; time be thine, And thy best graces: spend it at thy will.— But now, my cousin Hamlet, and my son,—

Ham. A little more than kin, and less than kind. [Aside.

King. How is it that the clouds still hang on you?

Ham. Not so, my lord, I am too much in the sun.

Queen. Good Hamlet, cast thy nighted colour off, And let thine eye look like a friend on Denmark.

Do not, for ever, with thy wailed lads Seek for thy noble father in the dust: Thou know'st, 'tis come to pass, all that live, must die, Passing through nature to eternity.

Ham. Ay, madam, it is common.

Queen.

If it be, Why seems it so particular with thee?

Ham. Seems, madam? nay, it is; I know not seems. 'Tis not alone my inky cloak, good mother, Nor customary suit of solemn black, Nor wonted suspension, for 'tis breath, Nor, no, nor the fruitful river in the eye, Nor the dejected 'haviour of the visage, Together with all forms, modes, shows of grief, That can denote me truly: These, indeed, seem, For they are actions that a man might play: But I have that within, which passeth show; These, but the trappings and the suits of woe.

King. 'Tis sweet and commendable in your nature, Hamlet, To give these mourning duties to your father: But, you must know, your father lost a father; That father lost, lost his: and the survivor bound, In filial obligation, for some term To do observance sorrow: But to persever In obstinate condolence, is a course Of impious stubbornness; 'tis unmanly grief: It shews a will most incorrect to heaven;
A heart unfortified, or mind impatient:
As understanding simple and unschoold:—
For what, we know, must be, and is as common
As any of the most vulgar thing to sense,
Why should we, in our peevish opposition,
Take it to heart? Fie! ’tis a fault to heaven,
A fault against the dead, a fault to nature.
To reason most absurd; whose common theme
Is death of fathers, and who still hath cried,
From the first; hence, to this last; consequently.
This must be so.
We pray you, throw to earth this
Unprevailing woe: and think of us
As of a father: for let the world take note,
You are the most immediate to our house;
And, with no less nobility of love,
Than that which dearest father bears his son,
Do I impart toward you. For your intent
In going back to school in Wittenberg,
It is most retrograde to our desire:
And, we beseech you, bend you to remain
Here, in the cheer and comfort of our eye,
Our chiefest courtier, cousin, and our son.
Queen. Let not thy mother lose her prayers, Hamlet;
I pray thee, stay with us; go not to Wittenberg.
Hor. I shall in all respect obey you, madam.
King. Why, ’tis a loving and a fair reply;
Be as ourself in Denmark.—Madam, come;
This gentle and unforc’d accord of Hamlet
Sits smiling to my heart: in grace whereof,
No jocund health, that Denmark drinks to-day,
But the great cannon to the clouds shall tell;
And the king’s renown the heaven shall bruise again,
Re-speaking earthly thunder. Come away.

[Enter King, Queen, Lords, &c. Polonius, and Laertes.

Ham. O, that this too solid flesh would melt,
Thaw, and resolve itself into a dew!
Or that the Everlasting had not fix’d
His canon ’gainst self-slaughter! O God! O God!
How weary, stale, flat, and unprofitable
Seem to me all the uses of this world!
Fye on’t! O fye! ’tis an unweeded garden,
That grows to seed; things rank, and gross in nature,
Possess it merely. That it should come to this!
But two months’ dead!—nay, not so much, not two;
So excellent a king; that was, to this,
Hyperion to a satyr; a thing to wonder at,
That he might not betide the winds of heaven
Visit her face too roughly. Heaven and earth!
Must I remember? why, she would hang on him,
As if increase of appetite had grown
By what it fed on: And yet, within a month,—
Let me not think on’t:—Fraility, thy name is woman!—
A little month, or else the shoes were old,
With which she follow’d my poor father’s body:
Like Niobe, all tears:—why she, even she,—
O heaven! a beast, that waits discourse of reason,
Would have mournd longer,—married with my uncle,
My father’s brother; but no more like my father,
Than I to Hercules: Within a month;
Ere yet the salt of most unrighteous tears
Had left the flushing in her cheek unwiped,
She married:—O most wicked speed, to post
With such dexterity to incestuous sheets!
It is not, nor it cannot come to, good;
But break, my heart; for I must hold my tongue!

Enter Horatio, Bernardo, and Marcellus.

Hor. Hail to your lordship!—

Ham. I am glad to see you well:
Horatio,—or I do forget myself.
Hor. The same, my lord, and your poor servant ever,

Ham. Sir, my good friend; I’ll change that name
with you.
And what guide you from Wittenberg, Horatio?—

Marcellus?

Mar. My good lord,—

Ham. I am very glad to see you; good even, sir,—
But what, in faith, make you from Wittenberg?

Hor. A transt disposition, good my lord.

Ham. I would not hear your enemy say so;
Nor shall you do mine ear that common cheat,
To make it truster of your own report
Against yourself: I know, you are no traitor.
But what is your affair in Elsinore?
We’ll teach you to drink deep, ere you depart.

Hor. My lord, I came to see your father’s funeral.

Ham. I pray thee, do not mock me, fellow-student;
I think, it was to see my mother’s wedding.

Hor. Indeed, my lord, on their watch.

Ham. Thrift, thrift, Horatio! the funeral baulk’d meats
Did coldly furnish forth the marriage tables.
Would I had met my dearest foe in heaven
Or ever I had seen that day, Horatio?—

My father,— Methinks, I see my father.

Hor. Where, my lord?

Ham. In my mind’s eye, Horatio.

Hor. I saw him once, he was a goodly king.

Ham. He was a man, take him for all in all,
I shall not look upon his like again.

Hor. My lord, I think I saw him yesternight.

Ham. Saw? who?

Hor. My lord, the king your father.

Ham. The king my father!—

Hor. Season your admiration for a while
With an attent ear; till I may deliver,
Upon the witness of these gentlemen,
This marvell to you.

Ham. For God’s love, let me hear.

Hor. Two nights together had these gentlemen,
Marcellus and Bernardo,
In the dead waist and middle of the night,
Been thus encounter’d.—A figure like your father,
Armed at point, exactly, cap-a-pé,
Appears before them, and, with solemn mien,
Goes slow and stately by them: thrice he walk’d,
By their oppress’d and fear-surprized eyes,
With his eyes; and three times in thank, whilst they, distill’d
Almost to jelly with the act of fear,
Stand dumb, and speak not to him. This to me
In dreadful secrecy impart they did;
And I with them, the third night kept the watch:
Where, as they had deliver’d, both in time,
Form of the thing, each word made true and good,
The apparition comes; I knew your father;
These hands are not more like.

Ham. But where was this?

Mar. My lord, upon the platform where we watch’d.

Ham. Did you not speak to it?

Hor. My lord, I did:
But answer made it none: yet once, methought,
I lift up its head, and did address
Itself to motion, like as I would speak;
But, even then, the morning cock crow loud;
And at the sound it shrunk in haste away,
And vanish’d from our sight.

Ham. ’Tis very strange.

Hor. As I do live, my honour’d lord, ’tis true:
And from that day it writ down in our duty,
To let you know of it.

Ham. Indeed, indeed, sirs, but this troubles me.
Hold you the watch to-night?

All. We do, my lord.
HAMLET.

Ham. Arm'd say you! Arm'd, my lord.

Ham. From top to toe?

All. My lord, from head to foot.

Ham. Then saw you not his face.

Hor. O, yes, my lord; he wore his beaver up.

Ham. What, look'd he frowningly up?

Hor. A countenance more in sorrow than in anger.

Ham. Nay, very pale. Pale, or red?

Hor. And fix'd his eyes upon you?

Ham. Most constantly.

Hor. I would, I had been there.

Ham. It would have much amaz'd you.

Ham. Very like:

Very like: Stay'd it long?

Hor. While one with moderate haste might tell a

Mar. Longer, longer. [hundred.

Ham. Not when I saw it.

Ham. His beard was grizzl'd? no?

Ham. It was, as I have seen it in his life,

A sable silver'd.

Ham. I will watch to-night;

Perchance, 'twill walk again.

Hor. If it assume my noble father's person,

I'll speak to it, though holl itself should gape,

And bid me hold my peace. I pray you all,

If you have hitherto conceald this sight,

Let it be teneable in your silence still;

And whatsoever else shall hap to-night,

Give it an understanding, but no tongue;

I will require your loves; So, fare you well;

Upon the platform, twixt eleven and twelve,

I'll visit you.

All. Our duty to your honour.

Ham. Your loves, as mine to you: Farewell.

[Exit Horatio, Marcellus, and Bernardo.

My father's spirit in arms! all is not well;

I doubt some foul play: 'would the night were come!

Till then sit still, my soul: foul deeds will rise,

Though all the earth o'erwhelm them, to men's eyes.

[Exit.

SCENE III.—A Room in Polonius' House.

Enter Laertes and Ophelia.

Laer. My necessaries are embark'd; farewell:

And, sister, as the winds give benefit,

And convoy is assistant, do not sleep,

But let me hear from you.

Oph. Do you doubt that?

Laer. For Hamlet, and the trifling of his favour,

Hold it a fashion, and a toy in blood;

A violet in the youth of primy nature;

Four and twenty pair, not permanent, sweet, not lasting,

The pérçame and suppliance of a minute;

No more.

Oph. No more but so?

Laer. Think it no more: For nature, crescent, does not grow alone

In thaws, and bulk; but, as this temple waxes,

The service of the mind and soul

Grows wide withal. Perhaps, he loves you now;

And now no soil, nor cautel, doth besmirch

The virtue of his will: but, you must fear,

His greatness weigh'd, his will is not his own;

For he himself is subject to his birth:

He may not, as unvalued persons do,

Carve for himself; for on his choice depends

The safety and the health of the whole state,

And therefore must his choice be circumscrib'd

Unto the voice and yielding of that body.

Where'er he is the head: Then if he says, he loves you,

It wits your wisdom so far to believe it,

As he in his particular act and place

May give his saving deed; which is no farther,

Than the main voice of Denmark goes withal.

Then weigh what loss your honour may sustain,

If with too credant ear you list his songs;

Or lose your heart; or your chaste treasure open

To his unmaster'd importunity.

Fear it, Ophelia, fear it, my dear sister;

And keep you in the rear of your affection,

Out of the shot and danger of desire.

The chaste maid is prodigal enough,

If she unmask her beauty to the moon:

Virtue itself scapes not clamantious strokes:

The canker galls the infants of the spring,

Too oft before their buttons are disclo'd;

And in the morn and liquid dew of youth

Contagious blastments are most imminent.

Be wary then: best safety lies in fear;

Virtue to itself rebels, though none else near.

Oph. I shall the effect of this good lesson keep.

As watchmen to my heart: But, good my brother,

Do not, as some ungracious pastors do,

Shave off the steep and sly way to heaven:

Whilst, like a puff'd and reckless libertine,

Himself the primrose path of dalliance treads,

And recks not his own read.

Laer. O fear me not: I stay too long;—But here my father comes.

Enter Polonius.

A double blessing is a double grace;

Occasion smiles upon a second leave.

Pol. Yet here, Laertes! aboard, aboard, for shame!

The wind sits in the shoulder of your sail.

And you are staid for: There, my blessing wish you!

And these few words, I would be brief:

Look on her character. Give thy thoughts no tongue,

Nor any unproportion'd thought his act.

Be thou familiar, but by no means vulgar.

The friends thou hast, and their adoption tried,

Grapple them to thy soul with hooks of steel;

But do not dull the palm with entertainment

Of each new-hat'd Fellow, undisc'd comrade.

Beware of entrance to a quarrel: but, being in

Bear it, that the opposer may beware of thee.

Give every man thine ear, but few thy voice:

Take each man's censure, but reserve thy judgment.

Costly thy habit as thy purse can buy,

But not express'd in fancy: rich, not gaudy.

For the apparel oft proclaims the man:

And they in France, of the best rank and station,

Are most select and generous, civil in that.

Neither a borrower, nor a lender be:

For loan oft loses both itself and friend;

And borrowing dulls the edge of husbandry,

This above all,—To thine own self be true;

And it must follow, as the night the day,

Thou canst not then be false to any man.

Farewell! my blessing season this in thee!

Laer. Most humbly do I take my leave, my lord.

Pol. The time invites you; go, your servants tend.

Laer. Farewell, Ophelia: and remember well

What I have said to you.

Oph. Tis in my memory lock'd,

And you yourself shall keep the key of it.

Laer. Farewell.

[Exit Laertes.
ACT I.—SCENE IV.

Pol. What isn't, Ophelia, be said to you?

Oph. So please you, something touching the lord

Pol. Marry, well betoward: [Hamlet.

'Tis told me, he hath very oft of late
Given private time to you: and you yourself
Have of your audience been most free and bounteous:
If it be so, (as so 'tis put on me,
And that in way of caution,) I must tell you,
You do not understand yourself so clearly,
As it beolves my daughter, and your honour:
What is between you! give me up the truth.

Pol. He hath, my lord, of late, made many tenders
Of his affection to me.

Pol. Affection? puh! you speak like a green girl,
Unsifted in such perilous circumstance.
And will you believe his tenders as you call them?

Oph. I do not know, my lord, what I should think.

Pol. Marry, I'll teach you: think yourself a baby;
That you have 'tis'en these tenders for true pay,
Which are not sterling. Tender yourself more dearly;
Or, (not to crack the wind of the poor phrase, Wronging it thus,) you'll tender me a fool

Oph. My lord, he hath importuned me with love,
In honourable fashion.

Pol. Ay, fashion you may call it; go to, go to.

Oph. And hath given countenance to his speech,
With almost all the holy vows of heaven. [my lord,

Pol. Ay, springes, to catch woodcocks. I do know,
When the blood barns, how prodigal the soul
Lends the tongue vows: these blazes, daughter,
Giving more light than heat,—extinct in both,
Even in their promise, as it is a making.—
You must not take for fire. From this time,
Be somewhat scanter of your maiden presence;
Set your entertainments at a higher rate,
Than a command to parley. For lord Hamlet,
Believe so much in him, That he is young,
And with a larger tender you may call them,
Than may be given you: In few, Ophelia,
Do not believe his vows: for they are brokers
Not of that die which their investments shew,
But mere implorators of unholy suits,
Breathing like sanctified and pious bonds,
The better to beguile. This is for all,—
I would not, in plain terms, from this time forth,
Have you so slander any moment's leisure,
As to give words or talk with the lord Hamlet.

Look to't, I charge you; come your ways.

Oph. I shall obey, my lord. [Exeunt.

SCENE IV.—The Platform.

Enter Hamlet, Horatio, and Marcellus.

Ham. The air bites shrewdly; it is very cold.

Hor. It is a nipping and an eager air.

Ham. What hour now?

Hor. I think it lacks of twelve.

Mar. No, it is struck.

Hor. Indeed! I heard it not; then it draws near the Wherein the spirit is best set to walk. [scene
(A flourish of trumpets, and ordinance shot off, within.

What does this mean, my lord? [muse.

Ham. The king doth wake to-night, and takes his Keeps wassel, and the swaggering up spring reels;
And, as he drains his draughts of Rheims down,
The kettle-drums and trumpet thus Bray out
The triumph of his pitch.

Hor. Is it a custom?

Ham. Ay, marry, is't:

But to my mind,—though I am native here,
And to the manner born,—it is a custom
More honour'd in the breach, than the observance.

This heavy-headed revel, east and west,
Makes us traduc'd, and tax'd of other nations:
They clepe us drunkards, and with winy phrase
Soil our addition; and, indeed, it takes
From our achievements, though perform'd at height
The pith and marrow of our attribute.

So, oft it chances in particular men,
That for some vicious mole of nature in them
As, to their birth, (wherein they are not guilty, Since nature cannot choose his origin.)
By the o'ergrowth of some complication,
Oft breaking down the pales and forts of reason;
Or by some habit, that too much o'er-leavens
The form of plausible manners,—that these men,—
Carrying, I say, the stamp of one defect;

Being nature's lively, or fortune's star,—
Their virtues else (as they be pure as grace,
As infinite as man may undergo),

Shall in the general censure take corruption
From that particular fault: The dram of base
Doth all the noble substance often dount.

To his own scandal.

Enter Ghost.

Hor. Look, my lord, it comes!

Ham. Angels and ministers of grace defend us!—

Be thou a spirit of health, or goblin damn'd,

Bring with thee airs from heaven, or blasts from hell,

Be thy intents wicked, or charitable,

Thou com'st in such a questionable shape,

That I will speak to thee; I'll call thee Hamlet,

King, father, royal Dane: O, answer me:

Let me not burst in ignorance! but tell,

Why thy canoniz'd bones, hearsed in death,

Have burst their cerements? why the sepulchre,

Wherein we saw thee quietly in-ur'd,

Hath op'd his ponderous and marble jaws,

To cast the morrow in again; that may this mean,

That thou, dead corse, again, in complete steel,

Revisit'st thus the glimpses of the moon,

Making night hideous; and we fools of nature,

So horribly to shake our disposition,

With thoughts beyond the reaches of our souls?

Say, why is this? wherefore? what should we do?

Hor. It beacons you to go away with it,

As if it some impartial did desire

To you alone.

Mar. Look, with what courteous action

It waves you to a more removed ground:

But do not go with it

Hor. No, by no means.

Ham. It will not speak; then I will follow it.

Hor. Do not, my lord.

Ham. Why, what should be the fear?

I do not set my life at a pin's fee;

And, for my soul, what can it do to that,

Being a thing immortal as itself?

It waves me forth again;—I'll follow it.

Hor. What, if it tempt you toward the flood, my

Or to the dreadful summit of the hill? [lord

That beetles o'er his base into the sea?

And there assume some other horrible form,

Which might deprive your sovereignty of reason,

And draw you into madness? think of it:

The very place puts toys of desperation.

Without more motive, into every brain,

That looks so many fathoms to the sea,

And hears it roar beneath.

Ham. It waves me still:—

Go on, I'll follow thee.

Mar. You shall not go, my lord.

Ham. Hold off your hands.
HAMLET.

Hor. Be rul'd, you shall not go.

Ham. My fate cries out, and makes each petty artery in this body as hardy as the Nemean lion's nerve.

[Ghost beckons.]

Still am I call'd;—unheard, me, gentleman!—

[Breaking from them.]

By heaven, I'll make a ghost of him that lets me;—

I say, away,—Go on, I'll follow thee.

[Exeunt Ghost and Hamlet.]

Hor. He waxes desperate with imagination.

Mar. Let's follow; 'tis not fit thus to obey him.

Hor. Have after;—To what issue will this come?

Mar. Something is rotten in the state of Denmark.

Hor. Heaven will direct it.

Mar. Nay, let's follow him. [Exeunt.]

SCENE V.—A more remote Part of the Platform.

Re-enter Ghost and Hamlet.

Ham. Whither wilt thou lead me? speak, I'll go no further. Mark me.

[Ham.]

Ghost. My hour is almost come.

When I to sulphurous and tormenting flames Must render up myself.

Ham. Alas, poor ghost!—

Ghost. Pity me not, but lend thy serious hearing To what I shall unfold.

Ham. Speak, I am bound to hear.

Ghost. I am thy father's spirit;—

Doon'd for a certain term to walk the night, And, for the day confin'd to fast in fires, Till the foul crimes, done in my days of estate, Are burnt and purg'd away. But that I am forbid To tell the secrets of my prison-house, I could a tale unfold, whose lightest word Would harshly rouse thy soul; freeze thy young blood; Make thy two eyes, like stars, start from their spheres; Thy knotted and combined locks to part, And each particular hair to stand on end, Like quills upon the fretful porcupine; But this eternal blazon must not be To such an audience; List, list, O list!—

If thou didst ever thy dear father love,—

Ham. O heaven!—

[Ghost.]

Revenge his foul and most unnatural murder.

Ham. Murder!—

[der.]

Ghost. Murder most foul, as in the best it is; But this most foul, strange, and unnatural.

Ham. Haste me to know it; that I, with wings as swift As meditation, or the thoughts of love, May sweep to my revenge.

Ghost. I find thee apt;

And duller shoul'dst thou be than the fat wood That rots itself in ease on Letha wharf, Would'st thou not stir in this. Now, Hamlet, hear:—

'Tis given out, that sleeping in mine orchard, A serpent stung me; so the whole ear of Denmark Is by a forged process of my death; Rankly abus'd: but know, thou noble youth, The serpant that did sting thy father's life, Now wears his crown.

Ham. O, my prophetic soul! my uncle!—

Ghost. Ay, that incestuous, that adulterate beast With witchcraft of his ear, with traitorous gifts, (O wicked wit, and gifts, that have the power So to seduce!) you to his shamefullust; The will of my most seeming virtuous queen: O, Hamlet, what a falling-off was there!—

From me, whose love was of that diginity, That it went hand in hand even with the vow I made to her in marriage; and to decline Upon a wretch, whose natural gifts were poor To those of mine!—

But virtue, as it never will be mov'd, Though lewdness court it in a shape of heaven; So just, though to a radiant angel link'd, Will sate itself in a celestial bed, And prey on garbage.

But, soft! methinks I scent the morning air; Brief let me be,—Sleeping within mine orchard, My custom always of the afternoon, Upon my secure hour thy uncle stole, With juice of cursed hebenon in a vial, And in the porches of mine ears did pour The leperous distillment; whose effect Holds such an enmy with blood of man, That, swift as quicksilver, it courses through The natural gates and allies of the body; And, with a sudden vigour, it doth posset And curd, like eager droppings into milk, The stream and wholesome blood: so did it mine; And a most instant terror bark'd about, Most lazar-like, with vile and loathsom crust, All my smooth body.

Thus was I, sleeping, by a brother's hand, Of life, of crown, of queen, at once despatch'd. Cut off even in the blossoms of my sin, Unhousel'd, disappointed, unanel'd; No reckoning made, but sent to my account With all my imperfections on my head.

Ham. O, horrible! O, horrible! most horrible!—

Ghost. If thou hast nature in thee, bear it not; Let not the royal bed of Denmark be A couch for luxury and damned incest.

But, howsoever thou pursu'st this act, Taint not thy mind, nor let thy soul contrive Against thy mother aught; leave her to heaven, And to those thorns that in her bosom lodge, To prick and sting her. Fare thee well at once! The glow worm shows the matin to be near, And gins to pale his effectual fire:

Adieu, adieu, adieu! remember me. [Exit.]

Ham. O! all you host of heaven! O earth! What's this?—

And, as I shall hold hold, hold, my And you, my sinews, grow not instant old, [heart; But bear me stilly up!—Remember thee? Ay, thou poor ghost, while memory holds a seat in this distracted globe. Remember thee?—

Yea, from the table of my memory I'll wipe away all trivial fond records, All saws of books, all forms, all pressures past That youth and observation copied there; And thy commandment all alone shall live Within the book and volume of my brain. Unmix'd with baser matter: yes, by heaven. O most pernicious woman! O villain, villain, smiling, damned villain! My tables,—meet it is, I set it down, That one may smile, and smile, and be a villain; At least, I am sure, it may be so in Denmark:

[Writing.] So, uncle, there you are. Now to my word; It is, Adieu, adieu! remember me. I have sworn't.

Hor. [Within.] My lord, my lord,—

Mar. [Within.] Lord Hamlet, let not your spirit!—

Hor. [Within.] Heaven secure him!—

Ham. So be it.

Mar. [Within.] Hillo, ho, ho, my lord!—

Ham. Hillo, ho, ho, boy! come, bird, come.
ACT II.—SCENE I.

Enter Horatio and Marcellus.

Hor. How is't, my noble lord! Mar. How, O, wonderful! Ham. How, good my lord, tell it. Ham. No; You will reveal it. Hor. Not I, my lord, by heaven. Mar. Nor I, my lord. Ham. How say you then; would heart of man once think it?— But you'll be secret, Hor. Mar. Ay, by heaven, my lord. Ham. There's ne'er a villain, dwelling in all Den- But he's an arrant knave. [mark, Hor. There needs no ghost, my lord, come from the To tell us this. [grave, Ham. Why, right; you are in the right: And so, without more circumstance at all, I hold it fit that we shake hands, and part: You, as your business, and desire, shall point you;— For every man hath business, and desire, Such as it is,—and for my own poor part, Look you, I will go pray. Hor. These are but wild and whirling words, my lord. Ham. I am sorry they offend you, heartily; yes, 'Faith, heartily. There's no offence, my lord. Ham. Yes, by St. Patrick, but there is, Horatio; And much offence too. Touching this vision here,— It is an honest ghost, then let me tell you; For your desire to know what is between us, O'er-master it as you may. And now, good friends, As you are friends, scholars, and soldiers, Give me one poor request. Hor. What is't, my lord? We will. [night. Ham. Never make known what you have seen to Hor. Mar. My lord, we will not. Ham. Nay, but swear't. Hor. Nay, but no oath, lord. Mar. Nor I, my lord, in faith. Ham. Upon my sword. Mar. We have sworn, my lord, already. Ham. Indeed, upon my sword, indeed. Ghost. [Beneath.] Swear. Ham. Ha, ha, boy! say'st thou so? art thou there? Come on,—you hear this fellow in the cellarage,— Consent to swear. Hor. Propose the oath, my lord. Ham. Never to speak of this that you have seen, Swear by my sword. Ghost. [Beneath.] Swear. Ham. Hic et ubique? then we'll shift our ground:— Come, hither, gentlemen, And lay your hands again upon my sword: Swear by my sword. Never to speak of this that you have heard. Ghost. [Beneath.] Swear by my sword. Ham. Well said, old mole! can't work the earth so fast! A worthy pioneer!—Once more remove, good friends, Hor. O day and night, but this is wondrous strange! Ham. And therefore as a stranger give it welcome. There are more things in heaven and earth, Horatio, Than are dreamt of in your philosophy.

But come:— Here, as before, never, so help you mercy! How strange or odd soe'er I bear myself, As I, perchance, hereafter, shall think meet To put an antic disposition on.— That you, at such times seeing me, never shall With arms cucumber'd thus, or this head-shake, Or by pronouncing of some doubtful phrase. As, Well, well, we know ye; or, We could, and if we would:— or, If we list to speak:—or, There be, an if they might:— Or such ambiguous giving out, to note That you that know aught of me:—This do you swear, So grace and mercy at your most need help you! Ghost. [Beneath.] Swear. Ham. Rest, rest, perturbed spirit! So, gentlemen, With all my love I do commend you to: And what so poor a man as Hamlet is May do, to express his love and friendship to you, God willing, shall not lack. Let us go in together; And still your fingers on your lips, I pray. The time is out of joint:—O cursed spite! That ever I was born to set it right! Nay, come, let's go together. [Exeunt.]

ACT II.

SCENE I.—A Room in Polonius' House.

Enter Polonius and Reynaldo.

Pol. Give him this money, and these notes, Rey. Rey. I will, my lord. [naldo. Pol. You shall do marvellous wisely, good Rey. Before you visit him, to make inquiry [naldo, Of his behaviour. Rey. Pol. And, in part, him:—Do you mark this, Reynaldo? Rey. Ay, very well, my lord. Pol. And, in part, him:—but, you may say, not well: But, if 't be he I mean, he's very wild; Addicted to, and so:—and there put on him What forgets you please; marry, could so rank As may dishonour him; take heed of that; But, sir, such wanton, wild, and usual slips, As are companions noted and most known To youth and liberty. Rey. As gaging, my lord. Pol. Ay, or drinking, fencing, swearing, quarrelling; Drabbling:—you may go so far. Rey. My lord, that would dishonour him. Pol. Faith, no: as you may season it in the charge. You must not put another scandal on him, That he is open to inconstancy; That's not my meaning: but breathe his faults so That they may seem the taints of liberty: [quaintly, The flash, and out-break of a fiery mind; A savageness in unreclaimed blood, Of general assault. Rey. But, my good lord, Pol. Wherefore should you do this? Rey. Ay, my lord, I would know that. Pol. Marry, sir, here's my drift; And, I believe, it is a fetch of warrant: You laying these slight suffiles on my son,
As 'twere a thing a little soil'd i'the working,
Mark you
Your party in converse, him you would sound,
Having ever seen, in the prominen crimes,
The youth you breath of, guilty, be assur'd,
He closes with you in this consequence;
Good sir, or so; or friend, or gentleman,—
According to the phrase, or the addition,
Of man, and country.

Rey. Very good, my lord.
Pol. And then, sir, doth he this,—He does—
What was I about to say? By the mass, I was about to say something:—Where did I leave?

Rey. At, closes in the consequence.
Pol. At closes with you thus:—I know the gentleman;
I saw him yesterday, or 'tother day,
Or then, or then; with such, or such; and, as you say,
There was he gaining; there o'ertook in his course:
There falling out at tennis; or, perchance,
I saw him enter such a house of sale,
(Videliet, a brothel,) or so forth.—

See you now;
Your bait of falsehood takes this carp of truth:
And thus do we of wisdom and of reach,
With windlacies, and with assays of bias,
By indictions find directions out;
So may my former letters and advice,
Shall you my son: You have me, have you not?

Rey. My lord, I have.

Pol. God be wi' you; fare you well.

Rey. Good my lord,—

Pol. Observe his inclination in yourself.
Rey. I shall, my lord

Pol. And let him ply his music.
Rey. Well, my lord.

[Exit.]

Enter Ophelia.

Pol. Farewell!—How now, Ophelia? what's the matter?

Oph. O, my lord, my lord, I have been so affrighted!
Pol. With what, in the name of heaven?

Oph. My lord, as I was sewing in my closet,
Lord Hamlet,—with his doublet all unbrac'd;
No hat upon his head; his stockings fould,
Ungarter'd, and down-gyved to his ankle;
Pale as his shirt; his knees knocking each other;
And with a look so piteous in purport,
As if he had been lousied out of hell,
To speak of horrors,—he comes before me.
Pol. Mad for thy love!

Oph. My lord, I do not know; But, truly, I do fear it.
Pol. What said he?

Oph. He took me by the wrist, and held me hard;
Then goes he to the length of all his arm;
And, with his other hand thus o'er his brow,
He falls to such perusals of my face,
As he would draw it. Long stay'd he so;
At last,—A little shaking of mine arm,
And thrice his head thus waving up and down,—
He rais'd a sigu so piteous and profound,
As it did seem to shatter all his bulk,
And end his being: That done, he lets me go:
And, with his head over his shoulder turn'd,
He seem'd to find his way without his eyes;
For out o'doors he went without their helps,
And, to the last, bend'd their light on me.

Pol. Come, go with me; I will go seek the king. This is the very eactasy of love;
Whose violent property fordeces itself,
And leads the will to desperate undertakings,
As oft as any passion under heaven,
That does affect our natures. I am sorry,—
What, have you given him any hard words of late?

Oph. No, my good lord; but, as you did command,
I did repel his letters, and denied
His access to me.

Pol. That hath made him mad.
I am sorry, that with better heed, and judgment,
I had not quoted him: I fear'd, he did but trife,
And meant to wreck thee; but, beshrew my jealousy!
It seems, it is as proper to our age,
To cast beyond ourselves in our opinions,
As it is common for the younger sort
To lack discretion. Come, go we to the king:
This must be known; which, being kept close, might
More grief to hide, than hate to utter love. move

[Exit.]

SCENE II.—A Room in the Castle.

Enter King, Queen, Rosencrantz, Guildenstern, and Attendants.

King. Welcome, dear Rosencrantz, and Guilded—
Moreover that we much did long to see you, [stern]
The need, we have to use you, did provoke
Our hasty sending. Something have you heard
Of Hamlet's transformation; so I call it,
Since out the exterior was this inward man
Resembles that it was: What it should be,
More than his father's death, that thus hath put him
So much from the understanding of himself,
I cannot dream of: I entertain you both,
That,—being of so young days brought up with him;
And, since, so negligent and untutor'd as—
That you, our most rest here in our court
Some little time: so by your companies
To draw him on to pleasures; and to gather,
So much as from occasion you may glean,
Whether aught, to us unknown, afflicts him thus,
That, open'd, lies within our remedy.

Queen. Good gentlemen, he hath much talk'd of you;
And, sure I am, two men there are not living,
To whom he more adheres. If it will please you
To show us so much gentry, and good will,
As to expend your time with us a while,
For the supply and profit of our hope,
Your visitation shall receive such thanks
As fits a king's remembrance.

Rosencrantz. Both your majesties
Might, by the sovereign power you have of us,
Put your dread pleasures more into command
Than to entreaty.

Guil. But we both obey;
And here give up ourselves, in the full heat,
To lay our service freely at your feet,
To be commanded. [stern]

King. Thanks, Rosencrantz, and gentle Guilden-

Queen. Thanks, Guildenstern, and gentle Rosen-

Rosencrantz. And I beseech you instantly to visit

Guil. My too much changed son.—Go, some of you,
And bring these gentlemen where Hamlet is.

Guil. Heavens make our presence, and our practices,
Pleasant and helpful to him!

Queen. [Exit Rosencrantz, Guildenstern, and some Attendants.

Enter Polonius.

Pol. The ambassadors from Norway, my good lord,
Are joyfully return'd.

King. Thou still hast been the father of good news.

Pol. Have I, my lord! Assure you, my good hege,
I hold my duty, as I hold my soul,
Both to my God, and to my gracious king:
And do I think, (or else this brain of mine
Hunts not the trail of policy so sure
As it hath us'd to do,) that I have found
The very cause of Hamlet's lunacy.

King. O, speak of that; that do I long to hear.
Pol. Give first admittance to the embassadors;
My news shall be the fruit to that great feast.
King. Thyself do grace to them, and bring them io.

[Exit Polonius.
He tells me, my dear Gertrude, he hath found
The head and source of all your son's distemper.
Queen. I doubt, it is no other but the main;
His father's death, and our o'ershady marriage.

[Re-enter Polonius, with Voltimand and Cornelius.
King. Well, we shall sit him.—Welcome, my good friends!
Say, Voltimand, what from our brother Norway?
Vot. Most fair return of greetings, and desires.
Upon our first, he sent us suppers
His nephew's levees; which to him appeard
To be a preparation 'gainst the Polack;
But better look'd into, he thought for his
It was against your higliness: Whereat griev'd—
That so his sickness, age, and impotence,
Was falsely borne in hand,—sends out arrests
On Forthinbras; which, in brief, obeys;
Receives rebuke from Norway; and, in fine,
Makes vow before his uncle, never more
To give the assay of arms against your majesty.

King. Norway, over and above the rest.
Gives him three thousand ducats in annual fee;
And his commission, to enrich those soldiers,
So levied as before, against the Polack:
With an entreaty, herein further shewn; [Gives paper.
That it might please you to give quiet pass
Through your dominions for this enterprise;
On such regards of safety, and allowance,
As therein are set down.

King. It likes us well;
And, at our more consider'd time, we'll read,
Answer, and think upon this business.
Mean time, we thank you for your well-took labour:
Go to your rest; at night we'll feast together:
Most welcome home!

[Exeunt Voltimand and Cornelius.

Pol. This business is well ended.
My liege, and madam, to expostulate
What majesty should be, what duty is,
Why day is day, night, night, and time is time,
Were nothing but to waste night, day, and time.
Therefore,—since brevity is the soul of wit,
And tediousness the limbs and outward flourishes,—
I will be brief: Your noble son is mad:
Mad call I it: for, to define true madness,
What'st, but to be nothing else but mad:
But let that go.
Queen. More matter, with less art.
Pol. Madam, I swear, I use no art at all.
That he is mad, 'tis true: 'tis true, 'tis pity;
And pity 'tis, 'tis true; a foolish figure.
But farewell it, for I will use no art.
Mad let us grant him then: and now remains,
That we find out the cause of this effect;
Or, rather say, the cause of this defect;
For this effect, defective, comes by cause
Thus it remains, and the remainder thus.

Perypsum. I have a daughter; have, while she is mine;
Who, in her duty and obedience, mark,
Hath given me this: Now gather, and surmise.
—To the celestial, and my soul's idol, the most beautiflower, —
That's an ill phrase, a vile phrase; beautified is a vile phrase; but you shall hear.—Thus:

In her excellent white bosom, these, &c.—
Queen. Came this from Hamlet to her?
Pol. Good madam, stay awhile; I will be faithful.—

Doubt thou, the stars are fire;
Doubt, that the sun doth move;
Doubt truth to be a lie;
But never doubt, I love.

O dear Ophelia, I am ill at these numbers; I love not art to recoll my gowns: but that I love thee best,
O most best, believe it. Adieu.
Thine evermore, most dear lady, whilst this machine is to him, Hamlet.

This, in obedience, hath my daughter shewn me:
And more above, hath his solicitings,
As they fell out by time, by means, and place,
All given to mine ear.

King. But how hath she Receiv'd his love?

Pol. What do you think of me?
King. As of a man faithful and honourable.
Pol. I would fain prove so. But what might you
When I was sent this last letter, king, think,
(As I perceiv'd it, I must tell you that,
Before my daughter told me,) what might you,
Or my dear majesty your queen here, think,
If I had play'd the desk, or table-book;
Or given my heart a working, mute and dumb,
Or look'd upon this love with idle sight;
What might you think? no, I went round to work,
And my young mistress thus did I bespeak;
Lord Hamlet is a prince out of thy sphere;
This must not be: and then I precepts gave her,
That she should lock herself from his resort,
Admit no messengers, receive no tokens,
Which done, she took the fruits of my advice,
And he, repulsed, (a short tale to make,) fell into a sadness; then into a fast;
Thence to a watch; thence into a weakness;
Thence to a lightness; and, by this declension,
Into the madness wherein now he raves,
And all we mourn for.

King. Do you think, 'tis this?

Queen. It may be, very likely.
Pol. Hath there been such a time, (I'd fain know
That I have positively said, 'Tis so,
[that,]
When it prov'd otherwise?

King. Not that I know.
Pol. Take this from this, if this be otherwise:
[Pointing to his head and shoulder.
If circumstances lead me, I will find
Where truth is hid, though it were hid indeed
Within the centre.

How may we try it further?
Pol. You know, sometimes he walks four hours to-
Here in the lobby.

Queen. So he does, indeed.
Pol. At such a time I'll loose my daughter to him:
Be you and I behind an arras then;
Mark the encounter: if he love her not,
And he not from his reason fallen thereon,
Let me be no assistant for a state,
But keep a farm, and caterers.

King. We will try it.

[Enter Hamlet, reading.

Queen. But, look, where sadly the poor wretch comes reading.
Ham. In the secret parts of fortune? O, most true; she is a strumpet. What news?
Ros. None, my lord; but that the world's grown honest.
Ham. Then is dooms-day near: But your news is not true. Let me question more in particular: What have you, my good friends, deserved at the hands of fortune, that she sends you to prison hither?
Guil. Prison, my lord?
Ham. Denmark's a prison.
Ros. Then is the world one.
Ham. A goodly one; in which there are many confines, wards, and dungeons; Denmark being one of the worst.
Ros. We think not so, my lord.
Ham. Why, then 'tis none to you: for there is nothing either good or bad, but thinking makes it so: to me it is a prison.
Ros. Why, then your ambition makes it one; 'tis too narrow for your mind.
Ham. O God! I could be bounded in a nut-shell, and count myself a king of infinite space; were it not that I have bad dreams.
Guil. Which dreams, indeed, are ambition; for the very substance of the ambitions is merely the shadow of a dream.
Ham. A dream itself is but a shadow.
Ros. Truly, and I hold ambition of so airy and light a quality, that it is but a shadow's shadow.
Ham. Then are we beggars, bodies; and our monarchs, and outstrip't heroes, the beggars' shadows: Shall we to the court? for, by my lay, I cannot reason.
Ros. Guil. We'll come upon you.
Ham. No such matter; unless you will not sort you with the rest of my servants to speak to you like an honest man, I am most diligently attended. But in the beaten way of friendship, what make you at Elsinore?
Ros. To visit you, my lord; no other occasion.
Ham. Beggar that I am, I am even poor in thanks; but I thank you: and sure, dear friends, my thanks are too dear, a half-penny. Were you not sent for? Is it your own inclination? Is it a free visitation? Come, come; deal justly with me: come, come, nay, speak.
Guil. What should we say, my lord?
Ham. Any thing—but to the purpose. You were sent for; and there is a kind of confession in your looks, which your modesties have not craft enough to colour: I know, the good king and queen have sent for you.
Ros. To what end, my lord?
Ham. That you must teach me. But let me confute you, by the rights of our fellowship, by the connubialty of our youth, by the obligation of our ever-preserved love, and by what more dear a better proposer could charge you withal, be even and direct with me, whether you were sent for, or no.
Ros. What say you? [To Guilienstern.]
Ham. Nay, then I have an eye of you; [Aside.]—if you love me, hold not off.
Guil. My lord, we were sent for.
Ham. I will tell you why; so shall my anticipation prevent your discovery, and your secrecy to the king and queen mostl no feather. I have of late, (but, wherefore, I know not,) lost all my mirth, for-gone all custom of exercises: and, indeed, it goes so heavily with my disposition, that this goodly frame, the earth, seems to me a stiff premonitory; this most excellent canopy, the air, look on you, this brave over-hanging firmament, this majestic roof fretted with golden fire, why, it appears no other thing to me, than a foul and pestilent congregation of vapours. What a piece of work is a man! How noble in reason! how infinite in faculties! in form, and moving, how express and admirable! in action, how like an angel! in apprehension, how like a god! the beauty of the world! the paragon of animals! And yet, to me, what is this quintessence of dust? man delights not me, nor woman neither; though, by your smiling, you seem to say so.

Ros. My lord, there is no such stuff in my thoughts. Ham. Why did you laugh then, when I said, Man delights not me?

Ros. All would, my lord, if you delight not in man, what mean entertainment the players shall receive from you; we coted them on the way, and hither are they coming, to offer you service.

Ham. He that plays the king shall be welcome; his majesty shall have tribute of me: the adventurous knight shall use his foil and target: the lower shall not sigh gravs, the humorous man shall end his part in peace: the clown shall make those laugh, whose lungs are tickled o’ the sere; and the lady shall say her mind freely, or the blank verse shall halt for’t.

What players are they?

Ros. Even those you were wont to take such delight in, the tragedians of the city.

Ham. How chances it, they travel? their residence, both in reputation and profit, was better both ways.

Ros. I think, their inhibition comes by the means of the late innovation.

Ham. Do they hold the same estimation they did when I was in the city? Are they so followed?

Ros. No, indeed, they are not.

Ham. How comes it? Do they grow rust? Ros. Nay, it is but an old man that keeps in the wonde pace; but there is, sir, an aery of children, little eyases, that cry out on the top of question, and are most tyrannically clapped for’t; these are now the fashion; and so berattle the common stages, (so they call them) that many wearing rapiers, are afraid of goose quills, and dare scarce come thither.

Ham. What, are these children that maintains them, and have they excot? Will they pursue the quality no longer than they can sing? will they not say afterwards, if they should grow themselves to common players, (as it is most like, if their means are no better,) their writers do them wrong, to make them explain against their own succession?

Ros. Faith there has been much ado to do on both sides; and the nation holds it no sin, to tarre them on to controversy: there was, for a while, no money bid for argument, unless the poet and the player went to cuffs in the question.

Ham. Is it possible?

Guit. O, there has been much throwing about of brains.

Ham. Do the boys carry it away?

Ros. Ay, that they do, my lord; Hercules and his load too.

Ham. It is not very strange: for my uncle is king of Denmark; and those, that would make mouths at him while my father lived, give twenty, forty, fifty, an hundred ducats a-piece, for his picture in little. ’Sblood, there is something in this more than natural, if philosophy could find it out.

[Fleurish of trumpets within.

Gui. There are the players.

Ham. Gentlemen, you are welcome to Elsinore. Your hands. Come then: the appenctance of welcome is fashion and ceremony: let me comply with you in this gamb; lest my extent to the players, which, I tell you, must shew fairly outward, should more appear like entertainment than yours. You are welcome: but my uncle-father, and aunt-mother, are deceived.

Gui. In what, my dear lord?

Ham. Hark you, Gentlemen, you must mind north-north-west: when the wind is southerly, I know a hawk from a handsaw.

Enter Polonius.

Pol. Well be with you, gentlemen! Ham. Hark you, Gueldenstern,—and you too:—at each ear a hatter; that great baby, you see there, is not yet out of his swaddling clothes.

Ros. We can’t have the sence some time come to them; for, they say, an old man is twice a child.

Ham. I will prophesy, he comes to tell me of the players; mark it. You say right, sir: o’ Monday morning: ’twas then, indeed.

Pol. My lord, I have news to tell you. Ham. My lord, I have news to tell you. When Receiuit what an how then, my lord. Ham. Baz, baz! Pol. Upon my honour,—

Ham. Then come each actor on his as,

Pol. The best actors in the world, either for tragedy, comedy, history, pastoral, pastoral-comical, historical-pastoral, tragical-historical, tragical-comical, historical-comical, scene indelible, or poem unlimited: Senece cannot be too heavy, nor Plautus too light. For the law of wit, and the liberty, these are the only men.

Ham. O Jephthah, judge of Israel,—what a treasure hast thou!

Pol. What a treasure had he, my lord?

Ham. Why, the Condensation of the fair daughter, and no more. The which he loved passing well.

Pol. Still on my daughter.

Aside. Ham. Am not I the right, old Jephthah?

Pol. If you call me Jephthah, my lord, I have a daughter, that I love passing well.

Ham. Nay, that follows not.

Pol. What an actor in Roes. Masters, you are all welcome. We’ll e’en to I like French falconers, fly at any thing we see: We’ll have a speech straight: Come, give us a taste of your quality; come, a passionate speech.

1 Play. What speech, my lord?

Ham. I heard thee speak me a speech once,—but it was in a bat, or, if it was, not above once; for the play, I remember, pleased not the million; ’twas caviare to the general: but it was (as I received it, and others, whose judgments, in such matters, cried in the top of mine,) an excellent play; was digested in the scenes, set down with as much mosity as cunning. I remember, one said, there were no sallies in the lines, to make the matter savoury;
HAMLET.

The instant burst of eloquence that she made,
(Unless things mortal move them not at all.)

Pol. Look, whether he has not turn'd his colour
And has tears in his eyes.—Pr'ythee, no more.

Ham. 'Tis well; I'll have thee speak out the rest of this soon.—Good my lord, will you see the players well bestowed? Do you hear, let them be well used; for their acts are the abstract, and brief chronicles, of the time: After your death you were better have a bad epitaph, than their ill report while you live.

Pol. My lord, I will use them according to their desert.

Ham. Odd's bodkin, man, much better: Use every man after his desert, and who shall scape whipping! Use them after your own honour and dignity! The less they deserve the more merit is in your bounty. Take them in.

Pol. Come, sirs.

Ham. Follow him, friends: we'll hear a play to-morrow.—Dost thou hear me, old friend? can you play the mariner of Gonzago?

1. Play. Ay, my lord.

Ham. I have it.—morrow night. You could, for a need, study a speech of some dozen or sixteen lines, which I would set down, and insert in't? could you not?

1. Play. Ay, my lord.

Ham. Very well.—follow that lord; and look you mock him not. [Exit Player.] My good friends, [To Ros. and Guts.] I'll leave you till night: you are welcome to Elsinore.

Ros. Good my lord!

[Exit Rosenkrantz and Guildenstern.

Ham. Ay, so, God be wi' you.—Now I am alone, O, what a rogue and peasant slave am I! Is it not monstrous, that this player here,

But in a fiction, in a dream of passion,

Could force his soul so to his own conceit,

That from her working all his visage wan'd;

Tears in his eyes, distraction in's aspect,

A broken voice, and his whole function suiting

With forms to his conceit? and all for nothing!

For Hecuba!

What's Hecuba to him, or he to Hecuba,

That he should weep for her? What would he do,

Hath in the motive and the cue for passion,

That I have? He would drown the stage with tears,

And clear the general ear, with horrid speech;

Make mad the guilty, and appal the free,

Confound the ignorant; and amaze, indeed,

The very faculties of eyes and ears.

Yet I,

A dull and muddied rascal, peak,

Like John a-dreams, unpregnant of my cause,

And can say nothing; no, not for a king,

Upon whose property, and most dear life,

A damn'd defeat was made. Am I a coward?

Who calls me villain? breaks my pate across?

Plucks off my beard, and blows it in my face?

Tweaks me by the nose? gives me the lie I' th' throat;

A deep as to the lungs? Who does me this?

Ha! Why, I should take it: for it cannot be,

But I am pigeon- liver'd and lack gall,

To make oppression bitter; or, ere this,

I should have fatted all the region kites

With this slave's offal: Bloody, bloody villain!

Remorseless, treacherous, lecherous, kindless villain!

Why, what an ass am I! This is most brave;
That I, the son of a dear father murder’d,
Prompted to my revenge by heaven and hell,
Must, like a whore, unpack my heart with words,
And fall to cursing like a very drab,
A scullion! [Aside.]
Eye upon’t! ho! About my brains! Humph! I have
That guilty creatures sitting at a play,
Have by the very cunning of the scene
Been struck to the soul, that presently
They have proclaim’d their malefactions;
For though it seem they have no tongue,
With most miraculous organ I’ll have these players
Play something like the murder of my father,
Before mine uncle: I’ll observe his looks;
I’ll tent him to the quick; if he do bleach,
I know my course. The spirit that I have seen,
May be a devil: and the devil hath power
To assume a pleasing shape; yea, and, perhaps,
Out of my weakness and my melancholy,
(As he is very potent with such spirits.)
Abuses me to damn me: I’ll have grounds
More relative than this: the play’s the thing,
Wherein I’ll catch the conscience of the king. [Exit.

ACT III.

SCENE I.—A Room in the Castle.

Enter KING, QUEEN, POLONIUS, OPHELIA, ROSENCRANZ, and GUILDENSTERN.

King. And can you tell, by no drift of conference
Get from him, why he puts on this confusion;
Grating so harshly all his days of quiet
With turbulent and dangerous lunacy!
Ros. He does confess, he feels himself distracted;
But from what cause he will by no means speak.
Guil. Nor do we find him forward to be sounded;
But, with a crafty madness keeps aloof,
When we would bring him on to some confession
Of his true state.

Queen. Did he receive you well?
Ros. Most like a gentleman.
Guil. But with much forcing of his disposition.
Ros. Niggard of question; but, of our demands,
Most free in his reply.

Queen. Did you assay him
To any pastime?
Ros. Madam, it so fell out, that certain players
We o’er-naghted on the way: of these we told him;
And there did seem in him a kind of joy
To hear of it: They are about the court;
And, as I think, they have already order
This night to play before him.

Pol. ’Tis most true:
And he beseech’d me to entreat your majesties,
To hear and see the matter.

King. With all my heart; and it doth much con
To hear him so inclin’d; [tent me
Good gentlemen, give him a further edge.
And drive his purpose to these delights.

Ros. We shall, my lord.

[Exit ROSENCRANZ and GUILDENSTERN.

King. Sweet Gertrude, leave us too:
For we have closely sent for Hamlet hither;
That he, as ‘twere accident, may here
Affront Ophelia:
Her father, and myself (lawful espials,) Will so bestow ourselves, that, seeing, unseen,
We may of their encounter frankly judge:
And gather by him, as he is behav’d,

I’t be the affliction of his love or no,
That thus he suffers for.

Queen. I shall obey you:
And, for your part, Ophelia, I do wish,
That your good beauties be the happy cause
Of Hamlet’s wildness; so shall I hope your virtues
Will bring him to his wonted way again,
To both your honours.

Oph. Madam, I wish it may. [Exit QUEEN.
Pol. Ophelia, walk you here.—Gracious, so please you,
We will bestow ourselves:—Read on this book;

[To OPHELIA.

That show of such an exercise may colour
Your loneliness.—We are oft to blame in this,—
’Tis too much prov’d, that, with devotion’s visage,
And pious action, we do sugar o’er
The soul himself.

King. O, ’tis too true! how smart
A lash that speech doth give my conscience!
The harlot’s cheek, beautified with plast’ring art,
Is not more ugly to the thing that helps it,
Than is my deed to my most painted word:

O heavy burden! [Aside.
Pol. I hear him coming; let us withdraw, my lord.

[Enter KING and POLONIUS.

Ham. To be, or not to be, that is the question:—
Whether ’tis nobler in the mind, to suffer
The sling and arrows of outrageous fortune;
Or to take arms against a sea of troubles,
And, by opposing, end them.—To die,—to sleep,—
No more;—and, by a sleep, to say we end
The heart-ache, and the thousand natural shocks
That flesh is heir to,—’tis a consummation
Devoutly to be wish’d. To die;—to sleep;—
To sleep; perchance to dream;—ay, there’s the rub;
For in that sleep of death what dreams may come,
When we have shuffled off this mortal coil,
Must give us pause: there’s the respect, [Exit
That makes calamity of so long life:
For who would bear the whips and scorns of time,
The oppressor’s wrong, the proud man’s contumely,
The pangs of despi’d love, the law’s delay,
The insolence of office, and the spurns
That patient merit of the unworthy takes,
When he himself might his quietus make
With a bare bodkin? who would fardels bear,
To grunt and sweat under a weary life:
But that the dread of something after death,
The undiscover’d country, from whose bourn
No traveller returns.—puzzles the will;
And makes us rather bear those ills we have,
Than fly to others that we know not of;
Thus conscience does make cowards of us all;
And thus the native hue of resolution
Is sicklied o’er with the pale cast of thought;
And enterprises of great pith and moment,
With this regard, their currents turn awry,
And lose the name of action.—Soft you, now:
The fair Ophelia;—Nymph, in thy orisons
Be all my sins remember’d.

Oph. Good my lord,
How does your honour for this many a day?

Ham. I humbly thank you; well.

Oph. My lord, I have remembrances of yours
That I have longed long to re-deliver;
I pray you, now receive them.

Ham. No, not I;
I never gave you aught.

Oph. My honour’d lord, you know right well, you

3 G 2
And, with them, words of so sweet breath compos'd
As made the things more rich: their petrune lost,
Take these again; for to the noble mind,
Rich gifts wax poor, when givers prove unkind.
There, my lord.

Ham. Ha, ha! are you honest?

Oph. My lord?

Ham. Are you fair?

Oph. What means your lordship?

Ham. That if you be honest and fair, your honesty should admit me no discourse to your beauty.

Oph. Could beauty, my lord, have better commerce with than honesty?

Ham. Ay, truly; for the power of beauty will sooner transform honesty from what it is to a bawd, than the force of honesty can translate beauty into his likeness; this was some time a paradox, but now the time gives it proof. I did love you once.

Oph. Indeed, my lord, you made me believe so.

Ham. You should not have believed me: for virtue cannot so inoculate our old stock, but we shall relish of it: I lov'd you not.

Oph. I was the more deceived.

Ham. Get thee to a nunnery; Why would'st thou be a breeder of sinners? I am myself indifferent honest, but I yet I could account of such things, that it were better, my mother had not born me: I am very proud, revengeful, ambitious; with more offences at my beck, than I have thoughts to put them in, imagination to give them shape, or time to act them in: What should such fellows as I do crawling between earth and heaven? We are arrant knaves, all; believe none of us: Go thy ways to a nunnery. Where's your father?

Oph. At home, my lord.

Ham. Let the doors be shut upon him; that he may play the fool no where but in his own house. Farewell.

Oph. O, help him, you sweet heavens!

Ham. If thou dost marry, I'll give thee this plague for thy dowry: Be thou as chaste as ice, as pure as snow, thou shalt not escape calumny. To a nunnery: farewell: Or, if thou wilt needs marry, marry a fool; for wise men know well enough, what monsters you make of them. To a nunnery, go; and quickly too. Farewell.

Oph. Heavenly powers, restore him!

Ham. I have heard of your paintings too, well enough; God hath given you one face, and you make yourselves another; you jog, you amble, and you lie, and nick-name God's creatures, and make your wantonness your ignorance: Go to, I'll no more of 't; it hath made me mad. I say, we will have no more marriages: those that are married already, all but one, shall live; the rest shall keep as they are. To a nunnery, go. [Exit Hamlet.

Oph. O, what a noble mind is here o'erthrown! The courtier's, soldier's, scholar's, eye, tongue, sword! The expectancy and rose of the fair state.

The glass of fashion, and the mould of form.

The observer of all observers! quite, quite down! And I, of ladies most deject and wretched,
That suck'd the honey of his music vows,
Now see that noble and most sovereign reason,
Like to a ball, unstrung, out of tune and harsh;
That unmatch'd form and feature of blazon youth,
Blasted with ecstasy: O, woe is me!

To have seen what I have seen, see what I see!

Re-enter King and Polonius.

King. Love! his affections do not that way tend; Nor what he spake, though it lack'd form a little, Was not like madness. There's something in his soul, O'er which his melancholy sits so bent;
And, I do doubt, the batch, and the disclose,
Will be some danger: Which for to prevent, I have, in quick determination,
Thus set it down; He shall with speed to England
For the demand of our neglected tribute:
Haply, the seas, and countries different,
With variable objects, shall expel
This thinking-settled matter in his heart;
Whereon his brains still beating, puts him thus—
From fashion of himself. What think you on't? Pol. It shall do well; but yet I do believe,
The origin and commencement of his grief
Sprung from neglected love.—How now, Ophelia? You need not tell us what lord Hamlet said;
We heard it all.—My lord, do as you please; But, if you hold it fit, after the play,
Let his queen mother all alone entreat him
To shew his grief; let her be round with him,
And I'll be plac'd, so please you, in the ear Of all their conferences: If she find him not, To England send him: or confine him, where Your wisdom best shall think.

King. It shall be so: Madenss in great ones must not unwatch'd go. [Exeunt.

SCENE II.—A Hall in the same.

Enter Hamlet, and certain Players.

Ham. Speak the speech, I pray you, as I pronounced it to you, trippingly on the tongue: but if you mouth it, as many of our players do, I had as lief the town-criers spoke my lines. Nor do not saw the eye, nor trim the speech too fine, nor will I let you play the soldiers, thus; all gently: for in the very torrent, tempest, and (as I may say) whirlwind of your passion, you must acquire and beget a temperance, that may give it smoothness. O, it offends me to the soul, to hear a robustious periwigs-pated fellow bear a passion to tatters, to very rags, to split the ears of the groundlings; who, for the most part are capable of nothing but inexplicable dumb shows and noise: I would have such a fellow whipped for o'erdoing Termagant; it out herds' head: pray you, avoid it.

1 Play. I warrant your honour.

Ham. Be not too much entail'd, neither let your own discretion be your tutor; suit the action to the word, the word to the action; with this special observe, that you o'erstep not the modesty of nature; for any thing so undone is from the purpose of playing, whose end, both at the first, and now, was, and is, to hold, as 'twere, the mirror up to nature; to shew virtue her own feature, scorn her own image, and the very age and body of the time, his form and pressure. Now this, overdone, or come too short, though it make the unskilful laugh, can but make the judicious gasp; the censure of whose one, must, in your allowance, o'er-weigh a whole theatre of others. O, there be players, that I have seen play,—and heard others praise, and that highly,—not to speak it profanely, that, neither having the accent of Christians, nor the gait of Christian, pagan, nor man, have so strutt'd, and bellow'd, that I have thought some of nature's journeymen had made men, and not made them well; they imitated humanity so abominably.

1 Play. I hope, we have reformed that indifferently with us.

Ham. O, reform it altogether. And let those, that play your clowns, speak no more than is set down for them: for there be of them, that will themselves laugh, to set on some quantity of barren spectators to laugh too; though, in the mean time, some necessary question of the play be then to be considered:—
that's villainous; and shews a most pitiful ambition in the fool that uses it. Go, make you ready.

[Exeunt Players.

Enter Polonius, Rosencrantz, & Guildenstern.

How now, my lord? will the king hear this piece of work?

Pol. And the queen too, and that presently.

Ham. Did the players make haste.—[Exit Pol.
Will you two help to hasten them?

Both, Ay, my lord.—[Exeunt Rosenc. & Guild.

Ham. What, ho; Horatio!—

Enter Horatio.

Hor. Here, sweet lord, at your service.

Ham. Horatio, thou art e'en as just a man
As e'er my conversation cop'd withal.

Hor. O, my dear lord,—

Ham. Nay, do o't think I flatter:
For what advancement may I hope from thee,
That so revenue hast, but his occulted spirits
To feed, and clothe thee? Why should the poor be flat-
No, let the candied tongue lick absurd pomp; 'tis'tard
And crook the present hinges of the knee,
Where thrift may follow fawning. Dost thou hear?
Since my dear soul was mistress of her choice,
And could of men distinguish her election,
She hath seal'd thee for herself; for thou hast been
As one, in suffering all, that suffers nothing;
A man, that fortune's buffets and rewards
Hath ta'en with equal thanks: and bless'd are those,
Whose blood and judgment are so well co-mingled,
That they are not a pipe for fortune's finger
To sound what stop she please: Give me that man
That is not passion's slave, and I will wear him
In my heart's core, ay, in my heart of heart,
As I do thee.—Something too much of this. —
There is a play to-night before the king;
One scene of it comes near the circumstance,
Which I have told thee of my father's death.
I pr'ythee, when thou seest that act a-foot,
Even with the very comment of thy soul
Observe my uncle: if his occulted spirits
Do not itself unkennel in one speech,
It is a damned ghost that we have seen;
And my imaginations are as foul
As Vulcan's stithy. Give him heedful note:
For I mine eyes will rivet to his face;
And, after, we will both our judgments join
In measure of his seeming.

Hor. Well, my lord; If he steal aught, the while this play is playing,
And scape detecting, I will pay the theft.

Ham. They are coming to the play; I must be idle:
Get you a place.

Danish March. A Flourish. Enter King, Queen, Polonius, Ophelia, Rosencrantz, Guilden-sten, and others.

King. How fares our cousin Hamlet?

Ham. Excellent, /faith; /of the cavalier's dish: —
I eat the air, promise-crammed: You cannot feed caupons so.

King. I have o'ertaking with this answer, Hamlet; — these words are o't mine.

Ham. No, nor mine now. My lord,—you played once in the university, you say! —[To Polonius.

Pol. You two help to

Ham. And what did you enact?

Pol. I did enact /Julius Cæsar: I was killed i'the
Capitol; Brutus killed me.

Ham. It was a brute part of him, to kill so capital a calf there.—lie the players ready?

Res. Ay, my lord; they stay upon your patience.

Queen. Come hither, my dear Hamlet, sit by me.

Ham. No, good mother, here's metal more attractive.
Pol. O ho! do you mark that? —[To the King.

Ham. Lady, shall I lie in your lap?

Oph. No, my lord.

Ham. I mean, my head upon your lap?

Oph. Ay, my lord.

Ham. Do you think, I meant country matters?

Oph. I think nothing, my lord.

Ham. That's a fair thought to lie between maid's legs.

Oph. What is, my lord?

Ham. Nothing.

Oph. You are merry, my lord.

Ham. Who, I?

Oph. Ay, my lord.

Ham. O! your only jig-maker. What should a man do, but be merry? for, look you, how cheerfully my mother looks, and my father died within these two hours.

Oph. Ay, sir. It is twice two months, my lord.

Ham. So long? Nay, then let the devil wear black, for I'll have a suit of sables. O heavens! die two months ago, and not forgotten yet? Then there's hope, a great man's memory may outlive his life half a year: But, by'lander, he must build churches then:
or else shall he suffer not thinking on, with the hobby-horse; whose epitaph is, For, O, for, O, the hobby-horse is forgot.

Trumpets sound. The dumb show follows.

Enter a King and a Queen, very lovingly; the Queen embracing him, and he her. She kneels, and makes show of protestation unto him. He takes her up, and declares his head upon her neck: lows him down upon a bank of flowers; she, seeing him asleep, leaves him.
Anon comes in a fellow, takes off his crown, kisses it,
and pours poison in the King's ears, and exit.

The Queen returns: finds the King dead, and makes passionate action. The poisoner, with some two or three mates, comes in again, seeming to lament with her.
The dead body is carried away. The poisoner wows the Queen with gifts; she seems beshirt and unwilling awhile, but, in the end, accepts his love. —[Exeunt.

Oph. What means this, my lord?

Ham. Marry, this is miching mallecho; it means mischief.

Oph. Belike, this show imports the argument of the play.

Enter Prologue.

Ham. We shall know by this fellow: the players cannot keep counsel; they'll tell all.

Oph. Will he tell us what this show meant?

Ham. Ay, or any show that you 'll shew him: Be not you ashamed to shew, he'll not shame to tell you what it means.

Oph. You are taught, you are taught: I'll mark the play.

Pro. For us, and for our tragedy,
Here stooping to your elements,
We beg your hearing patiently.

Ham. Is this a prologue, or the posy of a ring?

Oph. 'Tis brief, my lord.

Ham. As woman's love.

Enter a King and a Queen.

P. King. Full thirty times hath Phæbus' east gone round
Neptune's salt wash, and Tellus' erod'ed ground;
And thirty duse moons, with bow'd'd Sheen,
About the world has times twelve thirties been;
Since love our hearts, and Hueman did our hands,
Unite commutual in most sacred bands.

P. Queen. So many journeys may the sun and moon
Make us again count o'er; ere love be done!
But, wo'e is me, you are so sick of late,
So far from cheer, and from your former state,
That I distrust you. Yet, though I distrust,
Do not fear you, my lord, it nothing must.
For women fear too much, even as they love;
And women's fear and love hold quantity;
It neither aught, or in extremity,
Now, what my love is, proof hath made you know;
And as my love is sir'd, my fear is so.
Where love is great, the slightest doubts are fear;
Where little fear grows great, great love grows there.

P. King. Faith, I must leave thee, love, and shortly
My operand powers their functions leave to do; [too]
And thou shalt live in this fair world behind,
Honour'd, belov'd; and, haply, one as kind
For husband shalt thou—
P. Queen. O, confound the rest!
Such love must needs be treason in my breast:
In second husband let me be secure;
None wed the second, but who killed the first.
Ham. That's wormwood.

P. Queen. The instances, that second marriage move,
Are base respects of thrift, but none of love;
A second time I kill my husband dead;
When second husband kisses me in bed.
P. King. I do believe, you think what now you say,
What we do determine, on the break. [speak]
Purpose is but the slave to memory;
Of violent birth, but poor validity:
Which now, like fruit unripe, sticks on the tree;
But fall, unshaken, when they mellow be.
Most necessary 'tis, that we forget
To pay ourselves what to ourselves is debt:
What to ourselves in passion we propose,
The passion ending, doth the purpose lose.
The violence of either grief or joy
Their own enactures with themselves destroy:
Where joy most revell, grief doth most lament;
Grief joys, joy grieves, on slender accident.
This world is not for age; nor 'tis not strange,
That even our loves should with our fortunes change;
For this is but the trade, yet to prove;
Whether love lead fortune, or else fortune love.
The great man down, you mark, his favourite lies;
The poor advance'd makes friends of enemies.
And hitherto doth love on fortune tend:
For who not needs, shall never lack a friend;
And who in want a hollow friend doth try,
Directly reasons him his enemy.
But, orderly to end where I began,—
Our wills, and fates, do so contrary run,
That our devices still are overthrown:
Our thoughts are ours. their ends none of our own:
So think you wilt no second husband wed;
But die thy thoughts, when thy first lord is dead.
P. Queen. Nor earth to me give food, nor heaven light.
Sport and repose lock from me, day, and night!
To desperation turn my trust and hope!
An anchor's cheer in prison be my scope!
Each opposite, that blanks the face of joy,
Meet what I would have well, and it destroy!
Both here, and hence, pursue me lasting strife,
If, once a widow, ever I be wife!
Ham. If she should break it now,— [To Ophelia.

P. King. 'Tis deeply sworn. Sweet, leave me here a while:
My spirits grow dull, and pain I would beguile
The tedious day with sleep. [Sleeps.
P. Queen. Sleep rock thy brain
And never come mischeance between us twain! [Exit.
Ham. Madam, how like you this play?
Queen. The lady doth protest too much, methinks.
Ham. O, but she'll keep her word.
King. Have you heard the argument? Is there no offence in it?
Ham. No, no, they do but jest, poison in jest: to no offence the world.
King. What do you call the play?
Ham. The mouse-trap, Marry, how! Tropically.
This play is the image of a murder done in Vienna
Gonzago is the duke's name; his wife, Baptista;
you shall see anon; 'tis a knavish piece of work:
But what of that? your majesty, and we that have free souls, it touches us not: Let the galled jade wince, our withers are unwrung.—

Enter Lucianus.

This is one Lucianus, nephew to the king;
Oph. You are as good as a chorus, my lord.
Ham. I could interpret between you and your love,
If I could see the puppets dallying.
Oph. You are keen, my lord, you are keen.
Ham. It would cost you a groaning, to take off my edge.
Oph. Still better, and worse.
Ham. So you mistake your husbands.—Begin, murderer;—leave thy damnable faces, and begin.
Come; —The creaking raven
Doth bellow for revenge. [agreeing;
Luc. Thoughts black, hands apt, drugs fit, and true
Confedrate season, else no creature seeing;
Thou mixture rank, of midnight weeds collected,
With Heact's ban thirst blasted, thusence infected,
Thy natural magic and dire property,
On wholesome life usurp immediately.
[Pour the poison into the sleeper's ears.

Ham. He poisons him in the garden for his estate.
His name's Gonzago; the story is extant, and written in very choice Italian: You shall see anon, how the murderer gets the love of Gonzago's wife.
Oph. The king rises.
Ham. What ['tis? How! With false fire!
Queen. How fares my lord!
Pol. Give o'er the play.
King. Give me some light,—away!
Pol. Lights, lights, lights!
[Exeunt all but Hamlet and Horatio.

Ham. Why, let the stricken deer go weep,
The hart ungalled play;
For some must watch, while some must sleep;
Thus runs the world away.
Would not this, sir, and a forest of feathers, (if the rest of my fortunes turn Turk with me,) with two Provencal roses on my rared shoes, get me a fellowship in a cry of players, sir?
Hor. Half a share.
Ham. A whole one, I.
For thou dost know, O Damon dear,
This realm dismantled was
Of Jove himself; and uew reigns here
A very, very—peacock.
Hor. You might have rhymed.
Ham. O good Horatio, I'll take the ghost's word for a thousand pound. Did'st perceive?
Hor. Very well, my lord.
ACT III.—SCENE III.

Ham. Upon the talk of the poisoning.—
Hor. I did very well note him.
Ham. Ah, ha!—Come, some music; come, the recorders.—
For if the king like not the comedy, Why then, belike,—he likes it not, perdy.

Enter Rosencrantz and Guildenstern.

Come, some music.

Guil. Good my lord, vowsuchase me a word with you.
Ham. Sir, a whole history.

Guil. The king, sir.—
Ham. Ay, sir, what of him?
Guil. Is, in his return, that marvellous distempered.
Ham. With drink, sir?
Guil. No, my lord, with choler.
Ham. Your wisdom should shew itself more richer, to signify this to the doctor; for, for me to put him to his purgation, would, perhaps, plunge him into more choler.
Guil. Good my lord, put your discourse into some frame, and start not so wildly from my affair.
Ham. I am tame, sir:—pronounce.

Guil. The queen, your mother, in most great affliction of spirit, hath sent me to you.
Ham. You are welcome.

Guil. Nay, good my lord, this courtesy is not of that breed. If it shall please you to make me a wholesome answer, you shall command. And, or, as you say, my mother, therefore, no more, but to the matter: My mother, you say.

Ros. Then thus she says; Your behaviour hath struck her into amazement and admiration.

Ham. O wonderful son, that can so astonish a mother!—But is there no sequel at the heels of this mother's commendation; impart,
Ros. She desires to speak with you in her closet, ere you go to bed.
Ham. We shall obey, were she ten times our mother.
Have you any further trade with us?
Ros. My lord, you once did love me.

Ham. And do still, by these pickers and stealers.

Ros. Good my lord, what is your cause of distemp' rer? you do, surely, but har; the door upon your own liberty, if you deny your griefs to your friend.
Ham. Sir, I lack advancement.
Ros. How can that be, when you have the voice of the king himself for your succession in Denmark?

Ham. Ay, sir, but While the grass grows,—the proverb is something musty.

Enter the Players, with recorders.

O, the recorders,—let me see one.—To withdraw w; h; you:—Why do you go about to recover the wind of me, as if you would drive me into a toil?

Guil. O, my lord, if my duty be too bold, my love is too unnatural.

Ham. I do not well understand that. Will you play upon this pipe?
Guil. My lord, I cannot.

Ham. I pray you.

Guil. Believe me. I cannot.
Ham. I do beseech you.

Guil. I know no touch of it, my lord.

Ham. 'Tis as easy as lying: govern these ventages with your fingers and thumb, give it breath with your mouth, and it will discourse most eloquent music.

Look you, these are the stops.

Guil. But these cannot I command to any utterance of harmony; I have not the skill.

Ham. Why, look you now, how unworthy a thing you make of me. You would play upon me; you would seem to know my stops; you would pluck out the heart of my mystery; you would sound me from my lowest note to the top of my compass: and there is much music, excellent voice, in this little organ; yet cannot you make it speak. S'blood, do you think, I am easier to be played on than a pipe? Call me what instrument you will, though you can fret me, you cannot play upon me.

Enter Polonius.

God bless you, sir!

Pol. My lord, the queen would speak with you, and presently.

Ham. You see yonder cloud, that's almost in shape of a camel!

Pol. By the mass, and 'tis like a camel, indeed
Ham. Methinks, it is like a weasel.

Pol. It is backed like a weasel.

Ham. Or, like a whale?

Pol. Very like a whale.

Ham. If then will I come to my mother by and by.
—They fool me to the top of my head.—I will come by and by.

Pol. I will say so.

[Exit Polonius.

Ham. By and by is easily said.—Leave me, friends.

'Tis now the very witching time of night;
When churchyards yawn, and hell itself breathes out
Contagion to this world; O, then, good night,
I could drink hot blood, and do such business as the bittier day
Would make to look on. Soft; now to my mother. —
O, heart, lose not thy nature; let not ever
The soul of Nero enter this firm bosom:
Let me be cruel, not unnatural;
I will speak daggers to her, but use none;
My tongue and soul in this be hypocrisies:
How in my words soever she be absent,
To give them seals never, my soul, consent! [Exit.

SCENE III.—A Room in the same.

Enter King, Rosencrantz, and Guildenstern.

KING. I like him not; nor stands it safe with us,
To let his madness range. Therefore, prepare you;
Your commission will forthwith despatch,
And he to England shall along with you:
The terms of our estate may not endure
Hazard so near us, as doth hourly grow
Out of his lunes.

Guil. We will ourselves provide:
Most hol inflating and holy is.
To keep those many many bodies safe,
That live, and feed upon your majesty.
Ros. The single and peculiar life is bound,
With all the strength and armour of the mind,
To keep itself from 'circumstance;' but much more
That spirit, upon whose weight depend and rest
The balance of this world. The ease of majesty
Dies not alone; but, like a gulf, doth draw
What's near it, with it: it is a massy wheel,
Fix'd on the summit of the highest mount,
To whose huge spokes ten thousand lesser things
Are mortis'd and adjourn'd: which, when it falls,
Each small annexment, petty consequence,
Attends the boisterous ruin.

Never alone
HAMLET.

Did the king sigh, but with a general groan.
King. Arm you, I pray you, to this speedy voyage;
For we will feterus put upon this fear,
Which now goes too free-footed.
Ros. Guil. We will haste us. [Exit ROSCRAFANT AND GUILDENSTERN.

Enter POLONIUS.

Pol. My lord, he's going to his mother's closet:
Behind the arras I'll convey myself,
To hear the process; I'll warrant, she'll tax him home.
And, as you said, and wisely was it said,
'Tis meet, that some more audience than a mother,
Since nature makes them partial, should o'erhear
The speech of vantage. Fare you well, my liege:
I'll call upon you ere you go to bed,
And tell you what I know.

King. Thanks, dear my lord. [Exit POLONIUS.
O, my offence is rank, it smells to heaven;
It hath the primal odour of the Time
A brother's murder! — Pray God I may not,
Though inclination be as sharp as will;
My stronger guilt defies my strong intent;
And, like a man to double business bound,
I stand in pause where I shall first begin,
And both neglect. What if this cursed hand
Were thicker than itself with brother's blood?
Is there not rain enough in the sweet heavens,
To wash it white as snow? Wherefore serves mercy,
But to confront the visage of offence?
And what's in prayer, but this two-fold force,—
To be confront'd, ere we come to fall,
Of course, by pious hands down? Then I'll look up;
My fault is past. But, O, what form of prayer
Can serve my turn? Forgive me my foul murder! —
That cannot be; since I am still possess'd
Of those effects for which I did the murder,
My crown, mine own ambition, and my queen.
May one be pardon'd, and retain the offence?
In the corrupted currents of this world,
Offence's gilded hand may move by justice;
And oft 'tis seen, the wicked prize itself
Buys out the law: But 'tis not so above:
There is no shuffling, there the action lies
In his true nature; and we ourselves compell'd,
Even to the teeth and forehead of our faults,
To give in evidence. What then? what rests?
Try what repentance can: What can it not?
Yet what can it, when one can not repent?
O wretched state! O bosom, black as death!
O limed soul; that struggling to be free,
Art more engag'd! Help, angels, make assay.
Bow, stubborn knees! and, heart, with strings of steel,
Be not as sinews of the new-born babe;
All may be well! [Retires, and kneels.

Enter HAMLET.

Ham. Now might I do it, pat, now he is praying;
And now I'll do't; and so he goes to heaven:
And so am I reveng'd? That would be scann'd:
A villain kills my father; and, for that,
I, his sole son, do this same villain send
To heaven.
Why, this is hire and salary, not revenge.
He took my father grossly, full of bread;
With all his crimes broad blown, as blush as May;
And, how his audit stands, who knows, save heaven?
But, in our circumstance and course of thought,
'Tis heavy with him: And am I then reveng'd,
To take him in the purging of his soul,
When he is fit and season'd for his passage?
No,
ACT III.—SCENE IV.

841

Call's virtue, hypocrite; takes off the rose
From the fair forehead of an innocent love,
And sets a blister there; makes marriage vows
As false as dicer's oath: O, such a deed
As from the body of contraction plucks
The very soul; and sweet religion makes
A rhapsody of words: Heaven's face doth glow;
Yea, this solidity and compound mass,
With tristful visage, as against the doom,
Is thought-sick at the act.

Queen. Ah me, what act,
That tears so loud, and thunders in the index?

Ham. Look here, upon this picture, and on this:
The counterfeit presentment of two brothers.
See, what a grace was seated on this brow:
Hyperion's curl; the front of Jove himself;
An eye like Mars, to threaten and command;
A station like the herald Mercury,
New-lighted on a heaven kissing hill;
A combination, and a form, indeed,
Where every god did seem to set his seal,
To give the world assurance of a man:
This was your husband. — Look you now, what follows:
Here is your husband; like a mildew'd ear,
Blasting his wholesome brother. Have you eyes?
Could you on this fair mountain leave to feed,
And batten on this moor! Ha! have you eyes?
You cannot call it love: this is not love,
The very harlot-honour of those eyes.
The holy-day in the blood is tane, it's humble,
And waits upon the judgment; And what judgment
Would step from this to this? Sense, sure, you have,
Else, could you not have motion: But sure, that sense
Is appex'd: for madness would not err;
Nor sense to ecstasy was ne'er so thral'd,
But that there's some quantity of choice.
To serve in such a difference. What devil was't,
That thus hath cozen'd you at hoodman-blind?
Eyes without seeing, feeling without sight,
Ears without hands or eyes, smelling sans all,
Or but a sickly part of one true sense
Could not so mope.
O, that my blushing blush would be thy blush! Rebellions hell,
If thou canst mutine in a matron's bones,
To flaming youth let virtue be as wax,
And melt in her own fire: proclaim no shame,
When the compulsive ardour gives the charge;
Since frost itself as actively doth burn,
And reason panders will.

Queen. O Hamlet, speak no more.

Ham. Nay, but to live
In the rank sweat of an esteemed bed;
Stew'd in corruption; honeying, and making love
Over the nasty sty —

Queen. O, speak to me no more;
These words, like daggers, enter in mine ears;
Nu more, sweet Hamlet.

Ham. A murderer, and a villain:
A slave, that is not twentieth part the tythe
Of your precedent lord: — a view of kings:
A cutpurse of the empire and the rule;
That from a shelf the precious diadem stole,
And put it in his pocket! No more.

Enter Ghost.

Ham. A king
Of sheeds and patches —
Save me, and hover o'er me with your wings, [figure?
You heavenly guards! — What would your gracious

Queen. Alas! he's mad.

Ham. Do you not come your tardy son to chide,
That, laps'd in time and passion, let's go by
The important acting of your dread command! O, say,

Ghost. Do not forget: This visitation
Is but to whet thy almost blunted purpose.
But, look! - amenity on thy mother sits:
O, step between her and her fighting soul;
Concent in weaknesses boister strongest works:
Speak to her, Hamlet.

Ham. How is it with you, lady?

Queen. Alas, how is 't with you?

Ham. That you do bend your eye on vacancy,
And with the incoporal air do hold discourse!

Ghost. Forth at your eyes your spirits wildly peep;
And as the sleeping soldiers in the alarm,
Your bedded hair, like life in excrement,
Starts up, and stands on end. O gentleman,
Upon the heat and flame of thy dissembler
Sprinkle cool patience. Wherecon do you look?

Ham. On him! — on him! — Look you, how pale he glares!
His form and cause conjoin'd, preaching to stones,
Would make them capable. — Do not look upon me;
Lest, with this piteous action, you convert
My steep effects: then what I have to do
Will want true colour; tears, perchance, for blood.

Queen. To whom do you speak this?

Ham. Do you see nothing there?

Queen. Nothing at all; yet all, that is, I see.

Ham. Nor did you nothing hear?

Queen. No, nothing, but ourselves. Ham. Why, look you there! look, how it steals away!
My father, in his Habits as he liv'd!
Look, where he goes, even now, out at the portal!

[Exit Ghost.

Queen. This is the very coinage of your brain:
This bodiless creation ecstasy
Is very cunning in.

Ham. Ecstasy! My purpose, my desire, dost temperately keep time,
And makes as healthful music: It is not madness,
That I have utter'd: bring me to the test,
And I the matter will re-word; which madness
Would gambol from. Mother, for love of grace,
Lay not that flattering action on your soul,
That not your trespass, but my madness, speaks:
It will but skin and film the meager place;
While rank corruption, mining all within,
Infests unseen. Confess yourself to heaven;
Repeal what's past: avoid what is to come;
And do not spread the compost on the weeds,
To make them ranker. Forgive me this my virtue.
For in the fatness of these putting times,
Virtue itself of vice must pardon beg;
Yea, curb and woo, for leave to do him good.

Queen. O Hamlet! thou hast left my heart in twain.

Ham. O throw away the worser part of it,
And live the purer with the other half.

Good night: but go not to my uncle's bed;
Assume a virtue, if you have it not.
That monster, custom, who all sense doth eat
Of habit and devil, is angel yet in this:
That to the use of actions fair and good
He likewise gives a frock, or livery,
That aptly is put on: Refrain to-night:
And that shall lend a kind of easiness
To the next abstinence; the next more easy:
For use almost can change the stamp of nature,
And either curb the devil, or throw him out
With wondrous potency. Once more, good night;
ACT IV—SCENE IV.

Follow me in the morning, and I'll go with thee to the court; therefore, let us part now.

Very well; and I'll go with thee, gentle lord.

[Exeunt.]
HAMLET

To do't. Examples, gross as earth, exhort me:
Witness, this army of such mass, and charge
Led by a delicate and tender prince;
Whose spirit, with divine ambition puff'd,
Makes mouths at the invisible event;
Exposing what is mortal, and unsure,
To all that fortune, death, and danger, dare
Even for an egg-shell. Rightly to be great,
Is, not to stir without great argument;
But greatly to find quarrel in a straw,
When honour's at the stake. How stand I then,
That have a father kill'd, a mother stain'd,
Exeitments of my reason, and my blood,
And let all sleep! white, to my shame, I see
The imminent death of twenty thousand men,
That, for a fantasy, and trick of fame,
Go to their graves like beds; fight for a plot
Whereon the numbers cannot try the cause,
Which is not tomb enough, and continent,
To hide the slain!—O, from this time forth,
My thoughts be bloody, or be nothing worth! [Exit.

SCENE V.—Elsinore. A Room in the Castle.
Enter Queen and Horatio.

Queen. — I will not speak with her.
Hor. She is importunate; indeed, distract;
Her mood will needs be pitied.
Queen. — What would she have?
Hor. She speaks much of her father; says, she hears,
There's tricks 't the world; and hems, and beats her heart;
Spures enviously at straws; speaks things in doubt,
That carry but half sense: her speech is nothing.
Yet the unshaped use of it doth move
The hearers to collection; they aim at it.
And both the words up fit to their own thoughts;
Which, as her winks and nods, and gestures yield then,
Indeed would make one think, there might be thought,
Though nothing sure, yet much unhappily.

Queen. 'Twere good she were spoken with; for she may shew
Dangerous conjectures in ill-breeding minds:
Let her come in. [Exit Horatio.
To my sick soul, as sin's true nature, go,
Each toy seems prologue to some great amiss;
So full of artless jealousy is guilt,
It spills itself, in fearing to be spilt.

Re-enter Horatio, with Ophelia.

Oph. Where is the beauteous majesty of Denmark?
Queen. How now, Ophelia?
Oph. How should I your true love know
From another one?
By his cocke hat and staff,
And his sandle show?

[Sing.

Queen. Alas, sweet lady, what imports this song?
Oph. Say you 't nay, pray you, mark.

[Sing.

He is dead and gone, lady,
At his head a gross-green turf,
At his heels a stone.

O, ho!
Queen. Nay, but Ophelia,
Oph. Pray you, mark.

White his shroud at the mountain snow,
[Sing.

Enter King.

Queen. Alas, look here, my lord.

Oph. Larded all with sweet flowers;
Which h prick to the grave did go,
With true-love showers.

King. How do you, pretty lady?
Oph. Well, God'ield ye! They say, the owl was a baker's daughter. Lord, we know what we are, but, know not what we may be. God be at your table!
King Conceit upon her father.

Oph. Pray, let us have no words of this; but when they ask you what it means, say you this:
Good morrow, 'tis Saint Valentine's day,
All in the morning betime,
And I a maid at your window,
To be your Valentine:
Then up he rose, and did his clothes,
And up'd the chamber door;
Let in the maid, that out a maid
Never departed more.

King. Pretty Ophelia!
Oph. Indeed, without an oath, I'll make an end on't:

By Git, and by Saint Charity,
Atael, and jue for shame!
Young men will do't, if they come to't;
By cock, they are to blame.
Quoth she, before you tumbled me,
You promised me to wed:

[He answers.]

So would I ha' done, by yonder sun,
An thou hadst not come to my bed.

King. How long hath she been thus?
Oph. I hope, all will be well. We must be patient: but I cannot choose but weep, to think, they should lay him in the cold ground: My brother shall know of it, and so thank you for your good counsel.

Come, my coach! Good night, ladies; good night,
Sweet ladies; good night, good night. [Exit.

King. Follow her close; give her good watch, I pray you.

[Exit Horatio.

O! this is the poison of deep grief; it springs
All from her father's death: And now behold,
O Gertrude, Gertrude,
When sorrow comes, they come not single spies,
But in battalions! First, her father slain;
Next, your son gone; and he most violent author
Of his own just remove: The people muddied,
Thick and unwholesome in their thoughts and wis-
pers,

For good Polonius' death; and we have done but green-
In hagger-magger to infer him: Poor Ophelia,
Divided from herself, and her fair judgment;
Without the which we are pictures, or mere beasts.
Last, and as much containing as all these,
Her brother is in secret come from France:
Feeds on his wonder, keeps himself in clouds,
And wants not buzzers to infect his ear
With pestilent speeches of his father's death;
Wherein necessity, of matter beggar'd,
Will nothing stick our person to arraign;
In ear and ear. O my dear Gertrude, this,
Like to a murdering piece, in many places
Gives me superfluous death. [A noise within.

Queen. Alack! what noise is this?

Enter a Gentleman.

King. Attend:

Where are my Switzers? Let them guard the door.
What is the matter?

Oph. Save yourself, my lord;
The ocean, overpeering of his list,
Eats not the flats with more impetuous haste,
Than young Laertes, in a riotous head,
O'weares your officers; The rabble call him, lord,
And as the world were now but to begin,
A generate forget, a generation known.
The ruffians and props of every word,
They cry, Choose we; Laertes shall be king!
Caps, hands, and tongues, applaud it to the clouds,
Laertes shall be king, Laertes king!
Queen. How cheerfully on the false trail they cry!
O, this is counter, you false Danish dogs.
King. The doors are broke. [Noise within.

Enter Laertes, armed; Danes following.

Laer. Where is this king?—Sirs, stand you all with—
Dan. No, let's come in.

Laer. I pray you, give me leave, Dan. We will, we will. [They retire without the door.

Laer. I thank you:—keep the door.—O thou vile
Give of my father.
Queen. Calmly, good Laertes. [bастard
Laer. That drop of blood, that's calm, proclaims me
Cries, cuckold, to my father; brands the harlot
Even here, between the chaste unmarred brow
Of my true mother.
King. What is the cause, Laertes,
This rebellion looks so giant-like?—
Let him go, Gertrude; do not fear our person;
There's such divinity doth hedge a king,
That treason can but peep to what it would,
Acts little of his will.—Tell me, Laertes,
Why thou art thus incensed;—Let him go, Gertrude;—
Speak, man.
Laer. Where is my father?
King. Dead.
Queen. But not by him.
Laer. Let him demand his fill.
Laer. How came he dead? I'll not be joggled with:
To hell, allegiance! vows, to the blackest devil?
Conscience, and grace, to the profoundest pit!—
I dare damnation.—To this point I stand,—
That both the worlds I give to negligence,
Let come what comes; only I'll be reveng'd
Most thoroughly for my father.

King. Who shall stay you?

Laer. My will, not all the world's:
And, for my means, I'll husband them so well,
They shall go far with little.

King. Good, Laertes, if you desire to know the certainty
Of your dear father's death, 'tis writ in your revenge,
That, sweepstake, you will draw both friend and foe,
Winner and loser!

Laer. None but his enemies.

King. Will you know them then?
Laer. To his good friends thus wide I'll ope my
And, like the kind life-rend'ring pelican, [arms
Repart them with my blood.

King. Why, now you speak
Like a good child, and a true gentleman.
That— an guiltless of your father's death,
And am most sensibily in grief for it,
It shall as level to your judgment bear,
As day does to your eye.

Dnres. [Within.] Let her come in.

Laer. How now! what noise is that?

Enter Ophelia fantastically dressed with straw and flowers.
O heat, dry up my brains! tears, seven times salt,
Burn out the sense and virtue of mine eye!—
By heaven, thy madness shall be paid with weight,
Till our scale turn the beam. O rose of May!
Dear maid, kind sister, sweet Ophelia!—
O heavens! is't possible, a young maid's wits
Should be as mortal as an old man's life?
Nature is fine in love: and, where 'tis fine,
It sends some precious instance of itself
After the thing it loves.

Oph. They bore him barefoot'd on the bier;
Hey nonny, nonny hey nonny:
And in his grave rain'd many a tear;—
Fare you well, my dove!

Laer. I last then thy wits, and didst persuade
It could not move thus. [venge.

Oph. You must sing, Down a-down, an you call him a-down-a. O, how the wheel becomes it! It is the false steward, that stole his master's daughter.

Laer. This nothing's more than matter.

Oph. There's rosemary, that's for remembrance; pray you, love, remember: and there is pansies, that's for thoughts.

Laer. A document in madness; thoughts and remembrance fitted.

Oph. There's a fennel for you, and cumbines:—
there's rye for you; and here's some for me:—we may call it, herb of grace o'Sundays:—you may wear your rue with a difference.—There's a daisy:—I would give you some violets; but they wither'd all, when my father died:—They say, he made a good end.—

For bonny sweet Robin is all my joy,— [Sings.

Laer. Thought and affliction, passion, hell itself,
She turns to favour, and to prettiness.

Oph. And will he not come again? [Sings.

No, no, he is dead,
Go to thy death-bed,
He never will come again.

His beard was as white as snow,
All flowers was his pall:
He is gone, he is gone,
And we cut away men;
God a mercy on his soul!

And of all christian souls! I pray God. God be wi'
you! [Exit Ophelia.

Laer. Do you see this, O God?

King. Laertes, I must commune with your grief,
Or you deny me right. Go but apart,
Make choice of whom your wisest friends you will,
And they shall hear and judge 'twixt you and me:
If by direct or by collateral hand
They find us touch'd, we will our kingdom give,
Our crown, our life, and all that we call ours,
To you in satisfaction; but, if not,
Be you content to lend your patience to us,
And we shall jointly labour with your soul
To give it due content.

Laer. Let this be so;
His means of death, his obscure funeral,—
No trophye, sword, nor hatchment, o'ert his bones,
No noble rite, nor formal ostentation,—
Cry to be heard, as 'ware from heaven to earth,
That I must call in question.

King. So you shall:
And, where the offence is, let the great axe fall.
I pray you, go with me.

[Exeunt.

SCENE VI.—Another Room in the same.

Enter Horatio, and a Servant.

Hor. What are they that would speak with me?

Serv. Sailors, sir;
HAMLET.

They say, they have letters for you.
_Hor_. Let them come in.—
[Exit Servant.
I do not know from what part of the world I should be greeted, if not from lord Hamlet.
_Enter Sailors._

1 Seil. God bless you, sir.
_Hor_. Let him bless thee too.

1 Seil. He shall, sir, an't please him. There's a letter for you, sir; it comes from the ambassador that was bound for England; if your name be Horatio, as I am let to know it is.
_Hor_. [Reads.] Horatio, when thou shalt have overlooked this, give these fellows some meaus to the king; they have letters for him. Ere we were two days old at sea, a pirate of very warlike appointment gave us chase: Finding ourselves too slow of sail, we put on a compelled colour; and in the grapple I boarded them; on the instant, they got clear of our ship; so I alone became their prisoner. They have dealt with me, like thieves of mercy; but they knew what they did; I am to do a good turn for them. Let the king have the letters I have sent; and repair thou to me with as much haste as thou woul'st fly death. I have words to speak in thine ear, will make thee dumb; yet are they much too light for the sore of the matter. These good fellows will bring thee where I am. Rosencrantz and Guildenstern hold their course for England; of them I have much to tell thee. Farewell.

_He that thou knowest thine, Hamlet._
Come, I will give you way for these your letters; And do't the speedier, that you may direct me To him from whom you brought them.
[Exit._

SCENE VII.—Another Room in the same.

_Enter King and Laertes._

King. Now must your conscience my acquaintance
And you must put me in your heart for friend;
[Seal.
Sith you have heard, and with a knowing ear,
That he, which hath your noble father slain,
Purs'd my life.
_Laer._

It well appears:—But tell me,
Why you proceeded not against these feats,
So criminal and so capital in nature,
As by your safety, greatness, wisdom, all things else,
You mainly were stirp'd up.

King. O, for two special reasons;
Which may to you, perhaps, seem much unsinew'd,
But yet to me they are strong. The queen, his mother,
Lives almost by his looks; and, for myself,
(My virtue, or my plague, be it either which,)
She is so conjunctive to my life and soul,
That as the star moves not but in his sphere
I could not but by her. The other motive,
Why to a public count I might not go,
Is the great love the general gender bear him.
Who, dipp'd all his faults in their affection,
Work like the spring that turneth wood to stone,
Convert his gyves to graces; so that my arrows,
Too slightly timber'd for so loud a wind,
Would have reverted to my bow again,
And not where I had aim'd them.

_Laer._ And so have I a noble father lost;
A sister driven into desperate terms;
Whose worth, if praises may go back again,
Stood challenger on mount of all the age
For perfections:—but my revenge will come.

King. Break not your sleeps for this; you must not That we are made of stuff so flat and dull, [think,
That we can let our beard lie shock with danger,
And think it pastime. You shortly shall hear more:
I loved your father, and we love ourself;

And that, I hope, will teach you to imagine,—
How now? what news?

Enter a Messenger._

Mess. Letters, my lord, from Hamlet;
This to your majesty; this to the queen.

King. From Hamlet? Who brought them?
Mess. Sailors, my lord, they say: I saw them not;
They were given me by Claudio, he receiv'd them
Of him that brought them.

King. Laertes, you shall hear them:—
[Exit Messenger.

[Reads.] High and mighty, you shall know, I am set here on your kingdom. To-morrow shall I beg leave to see your kingly eyes: when I shall, first asking your pardon thereunto, recount the occasion of my sudden and more strange return.

Hamlet.

What should this mean? Are all the rest come back?
Or is it some abuse, and no such thing?
_Laer._ Know you the head?

King. 'Tis Hamlet's character. Naked,—
And, in a postscript here, he says, alone:
_Canst thou advise me?_
_Laer._ I am lost in it, my lord. But let him come;
It warns the very sickness in my heart,
That I shall live and tell him to his teeth,
This didest thou.

King. If it be so, Laertes,
As how should it be so! how otherwise?—
Will you be rul'd by me?

_Laer._ Ay, my lord;
So you will not o'er-rule me to a peace.

King. To thine own peace. If he be now return'd,
As checking at his voyage, and that he means
No more to undertake it,—I will work him
To an exploit, now ripe in my device,
Under the which he shall not choose but fall;
And for his death no wind of blame shall breathe;
But even his mother shall uncharge the practice,
And call it, accident.

_Laer._ My lord, I will be rul'd.

The rather, if you could devise it so,
That I might be the organ.

King. It falls right.

You have been talk'd of since your travel much,
And that in Hamlet's bearing, for a quality
Wherein, they say, you shine: your sum of parts
Did not together place such envy from him,
As did that one; and that, in my regard,
Of the unworthiest siege.

_Laer._ What part is that, my lord?

King. A very ribband in the cap of youth,
Yet needful too; for youth no less becomes
The light and careless livery, that it wears,
Than settled age his sables, and his weeds,
Importing health and graveness.—Two months since,
Here was a gentleman of Normandy,—
I have seen myself, and serv'd against the French,
And they can well on horseback: but this galliant
Had witscraft in't; he grew unto his seat;
And much would 'tis doing brought his horse,
As he had been incorp'sd and demi-natur'd
With the brave beast: so far he topp'd my thought,
That I, in forgery of shapes and tricks,
Come short of what he did.

_Laer._ A Norman, was't?

King. A Norman.

_Laer._ Upon my life, Lamord.

King. The very same.

_Laer._ I know him well: he is the brooch, indeed,
And gem of all the nation.

King. He made confession of you;
There on the pendant boughs her coronet
Weed, and a silver sliver broke.

Act IV, Sc. 1
ACT V.—SCENE I.

Enter Queen.

How now, sweet queen:
Queen. One wee doth tread upon another's heel,
So fast they follow:—I our sister's drown'd, Laertes.
Laert. Drown'd! O, where?
Queen. There is a willow grows asculant the brook,
That shews his hoar leaves in the glassy stream;
Therewith fantastic garlands did she make
Of crow-flowers, nettles, daisies, and long purples,
That liberal shepherds give a grosser name,
But our cold maids to dead men's fingers call them;
There on the pendent boughs her coronet weeds
Clambering to hang, an avious sliver brake;
When down her weedy trophies, and herself,
Fell in the weeping brook, her clothes spread wide;
And, mermaid-like, a while they bore her up:
Whence time, she chant'd soatches of old tueses;
As one incapable of her own distress,
Or like a creature native and im'd
Unto that element: but long it could not be,
Till that her garments, heavy with their drink,
Pulled the poor wretch from her melodious lay
To muddy death.

Laert. Alas then, she is drown'd?
Queen. Drown'd, drown'd.
Laert. Too much of water hast thou, poor Ophelia,
And therefore I forbid my tears: But yet
It is our trick; nature her custom holds.
Let shame say what it will: when these are gone,
The woman will be out.—Adieu, my lord!
I have a speech of fire, that fain would blaze,
But that this folly drown'd it.

[Exit. King.

Let's follow, Gertrude;
How much I had to do to calm his rage!
Now fear I, this will give it start again;
Therefore, let's follow.

[Exeunt.

ACT V.

SCENE I.—A Church-Yard.

Enter Two Clowns, with spades, &c.

1 Clo. Is she to be buried in christian burial, that willfully seeks her own salvation?
2 Clo. 1 tell thee, she's; therefore make her grave straight: the crowner hath set her, and finds it christian burial.
1 Clo. How can that be, unless she drowned herself in her own defence?
2 Clo. Why, 'tis found so.
1 Clo. It must be so offendendo; it cannot be else.
For here lies the point: if I drown myself willingly, it argues an act: and an act hath three branches; it is, to act, to do, and to perform: Argal, she drowned herself willingly.
2 Clo. Nay, but hear you, goodman deliver.
1 Clo. Give me leave. Here lies the water; good:
here stands the man; good: If the man go to this water, and drown himself, it is, will he, will he, he goes; mark you that: but if the water come to him, and drown him, he drown'd not himself: Argal, he,
that is not guilty of his own death, shorts not his own life.
2 Clo. But is this law?
1 Clo. Ay, marry is:—a crowner's-quest law.
2 Clo. Will you ha' the truth out? If this had not been a gentlewoman, she should have been buried out of christian burial.
1 Clo. Why, there thou say'st: And the more pity; that great folks shall have countenance in this world to drown or hang themselves, more than their even christian. Come, my spade. There is no ancient gentlemen but gardeners, ditchers, and gravemakers; they hold up Adam's profession.

2 Clo. Was he a gentleman?

1 Clo. He was the first that ever bore arms.

2 Clo. Why, he had none.

1 Clo. What, art a heathen? How dost thou understand the scripture? The scripture says, Adam digged; Could he dig without arms? I'll put another question to thee: if thou answerest me not to the purpose, confess thyself—

2 Clo. Go to.

1 Clo. What is he, that builds stronger than either the mason, the shipwright, or the carpenter?

2 Clo. The gallows-maker; for that frame outliveth a thousand tenants.—

1 Clo. I like thy wit well, in good faith; the gallows does well: But how does it well? it does well to those that do ill: now thou dost ill, to say, the gallows is built stronger than the church; argal, the gallows may do well to thee. Toot again; come.

2 Clo. Who builds stronger than a mason, a shipwright, or a carpenter?

1 Clo. Ay, tell me that, and unyoke.

2 Clo. Marry, now I can tell.

1 Clo. Toot.

Enter HAMLET and HORATIO, at a distance.

1 Clo. Cudgel thy brains no more about it; for your dull ass will not mend his pace with beating: and, when you are asked this question next, say, a grave-maker; the houses that he makes, last till doomsday. Go, get thee to Taugharn, and fetch me a stoup of liquor.

1 Clown digs, and sings.

In youth, when 1 did love, did love,
Methought, it was very sweet,
To contract, O, the time, for, ah, my behave
O, methought, there was nothing meet.

Ham. Has this fellow no feeling of his business? he sings at grave-making.

Hor. Custom hath made it in him a property of earsness.

Ham. 'Tis even so: the hand of little employment hath the daintier sense.

1 Clo. But age, with his stealing steps,
Hath claw'd me in his clutch,
And hath shipped me into the land,
As if I had never been such.

Ham. That scull had a tongue in it, and could sing once: How the knave jowls it to the ground, as if it were Cain's jaw-bone, that did the first murder! This might be the pate of a politician, which this ass now o'er reaches; one that would circumvent God, might it not?

Hor. It might, my lord.

Ham. Or of a courtier; which could say, Good-morrow, sweet lord! How dost thou, good lord? This might be my lord Such-a-one, that praised my lord Such-a-one's horse, when he meant to bag it; might it not?

Hor. Ay, my lord.

Ham. Why, 'c'en so: and now my lady Worm's; chapless, and knocked about the mazzard with a sexton's spade: Here's fine revolution, an we had the trick to see't. Did these bones cost no more the breeding, but to play at loggats with them? mine acht to think on't.

1 Clo. A pitch-axe, and a spade, a spade, [Sings]
For—and a throuding sheet:
O, a pit of clay for to be made,
For such a guest is meet.

Ham. There's another: Why may not he be the scull of a lawyer? Where be his quiddits now, his chisels, his carpenter's tenures, and his tricks? why does he suffer this rude knave now to knock him about the secooe with a dirty shovell, and will not tell him of his action of battery! Humph! This fellow might be in's time a great buyer of land, with his statutes, his recognizances, his fines, his double vouchers, his recoveries: Is this the fine of his fines, and the recovery of his recoveries, to have his fine pate full of hole dirt? will his vouchers vouch him no more of his purchases, and double ones too, than the length and breadth of a pair of indentures? The very conveyances of his lands will hardly lie in this box; and must the inheritor himself have no more? ha!

Hor. Not a jot more, my lord.

Ham. Is not parchment made of sheep-skins?

Hor. Aye, my lord, and of calves-skins too.

Ham. They are sheep, and calves, which seek out assurance in that. I will speak to this fellow:—Whose grave's this, sirrah?

1 Clo. Mine, sir.—

O, a pit of clay for to be made [Songs]
For such a guest is meet.

Ham. I think it be thine, indeed: for thou liest in't.

1 Clo. You lie out on't, sir, and therefore it is not yours: for my part, I do not lie in't, yet it is mine.

Ham. Thou dost lie in't, to be in't, and say it is thine: 'tis for the dead, not for the quick; therefore thou liest.

1 Clo. 'Tis a quick lie, sir; 'twill away again from me to you.

Ham. What man dost thou dig it for?

1 Clo. For no man, sir.

Ham. What woman then?

1 Clo. For none neither.

Ham. Who is to be buried in't?

1 Clo. Only that was a woman, sir; but, rest her soul, she's dead.

Ham. How absolute the knave is! we must speak by the card, or equivocation will undo us. By the lord, Horatio, these three years I have taken note of it; the age is grown so pick'd, that the toe of the peasant comes so near the heel of the courtier, he galls his kike.—How long hast thou been a grave-maker?

1 Clo. Of all the days i'the year, I came in't that day that our last king Hamlet overcame Fortinbras.

Ham. How long's that since?

1 Clo. Cannot you tell that? every fool can tell that: it was that very day that young Hamlet was born: he that is mad, and sent into England.

Ham. Ay, marry, why was he sent into England?

1 Clo. Why, because he was mad: he shall recover his wits there; or, if he do not, 'tis no great matter there.

Ham. Why?

1 Clo. 'Twill not be seen in him there; there the men are as mad as he.

Ham. How came he mad?

1 Clo. Very strangely, they say.

Ham. How strangely?

1 Clo. 'Faith, e'en with losing his wits.

Ham. Upon what ground?
ACT IV.—SCENE I.

1 Clow. Why, here in Denmark; I have been sevteen here, man, and boy, thirty years.

Ham. How long will a man lie i'the earth ere he rot?

1 Clow. 'Faith, if he be not rotten before he die, (as we have many pocky corses now-a-days, that will scarce hold the laying in,) he will last you some eight year, or nine year; a Tanner will last you nine year.

Ham. Why more than another?

1 Clow. Why, sir, his hide is so tanned with his trade, that he will keep out water a great while; and your water is a sore decayer of your whoreson dead body. Here's a scull now hath lain you i'the earth three-and-twenty years.

Ham. Whose was it?

1 Clow. A whoreson mad fellow's it was; Whose do you think it was?

Ham. Nay, I know not.

1 Clow. A pestilence on him for a mad rogue! he poured a flagon of Rhenish on my head once. This same scull, sir, was Yorick's scull, the king's jester.

Ham. This?

1 Clow. Even that.

Ham. Alan, poor Yorick!—I knew him, Horatio; a fellow of infinite jest, of most excellent fancy: he hath borne me on his back a thousand times; and now how abhorred in my imagination it is! my gorge rises at it. Here hangs those lips that I have kissed I know not how oft. Where be your gibes now? your yams! your flashes of merriment, that were wont to set the table on a roar! Not one now, to mock your own grinning? quite chappell'd? Now get you to my lady's chamber, and tell her, let her paint an inch thick, to this favour she must come; make her laugh at that.—Pr'ythee, Horatio, tell me one thing.

Hor. What's that, my lord?

Ham. A' them think, Alexander looked o' this fashion i'the earth?

Hor. Even so.

Ham. A' smelt so? pah! [Throws down the scull, Hor. Even so, my lord.

Ham. To what base uses we may return, Horatio! Why may not imagination trace the noble dust of Alexander, till he find it stopping a bung-hole?

Hor. I swore to consider too curiously, to consider so. Ham. No, faith, not a jot; but to follow him thither with modesty enough, and likelihood to lead it: As thus; Alexander died, Alexander was buried, Alexander returned to dust; the dust is earth; of earth we make leam: And why of that leam, wherein he was converted, might they not stop a beer-barrel? Impious Caesar, dead, and turn'd to clay, Might stop a hole to keep the wind away: O, that the earth, which kept the world in awe, Should patch a wall to expel the winter's flaw! But soft! but soft! aside:—Here comes the king.

Enter Priests, &c. in procession; the corpse of Ophelia, Laertes and Mourners following; King, Queen, their Trains, &c.

The queen, the courtiers: Who is this they follow? Aul with such maimed rites! This doth betoken, The corse, they follow, did with desperate hand Foroedo its own life. 'Twas of some estate: Couch we a while, and mark. [Retiring with Horatio. Laer. What ceremony else?

Ham. That is Laertes, A very noble youth: Mark. Laer. What ceremony else?

1 Priests. Her observences have been so far enlarg'd As we have warranty: Her death was doubtful; And, but that great command oversways the order, The should in ground unsanctified have lodg'd Till the last trumpet; for charitable prayers, Shards, flints, and pebbles, should be thrown on her, Yet here she is allowed her virgin crants, He maidsen strewments, and the bringing home Of bell and burial. Laer. Must there no more be done?

Ham. No more be done! We should profane the service of the dead, To sing a requiem, and such rest to her, As to peace-parted souls. [Scattering flowers.

Ham. Lay her i'the earth;—
And from her fair and unpolluted flesh May violets spring!—I tell thee, churlish priest, A miniature angel shall my sister be, When thou liest howling. Ham. What, the fair Ophelia? Quean. Sweets to the sweet: Farewell!

Hor. I hop'd, thou should'st have been my Hamlet's wife; I thought, thy bride-bed to have deck'd, sweet maid, And not have strew'd thy grave.

Laer. O, treble woe
Fall ten times treble on that cursed head, Whose wicked deed thy most ingenious sense Depriv'd thee of?—Hold off the earth a while, Till I have caught her once more in mine arms: [Leaps into the grave.

Now pile your dust upon the quick and dead; Till of this that a mountain you have made, To o'er-top old Pelion, or the skyish head Of blue Olympus.

Ham. [Advancing.] What is he, whose grief Bears such an emphasis? whose phrase of sorrow Conjures the wand'ring stars, and makes them stand Like wonder-wounded hearers? this is I. Hamlet the Dane. [Leaps into the grave. Laer. The devil take thy soul! [Grappling with him.

Ham. Thou pray'st not well. I pr'ythee, take thy fingers from my throat; For, though I am not splenetic and rash, Yet have I in me something dangerous, Which thou wilt not know, but there is something Like wonder-wonder'd hearers? this is I. Hamlet the Dane. [Leaps into the grave.

Hor. [The Attendants part them, and they come out of the grave. Ham. Why, I will fight with him upon this theme, Until my eyelids will no longer wag. Quean. O my son! what theme? Ham. I lov'd Ophelia; forty thousand brothers Could not, with all their quantity of love, Make up my sum.—What wilt thou do for her? King. O, he is mad, Laertes. Quean. For love of God, forbear him. Ham. Dumb, shew me what thou hast done: Would 'wont weep? 'wont fight? 'wont fast? 'wont tear 'wont drink up Esil? eat a crocodile? 'thyself? I'll do.—Dost thou come here to whine? To outface me with leaping in her grave? Be buried quick with her, and so will I: And, if thou prate of mountains, let them throw Millions of earth on us; till our ground Singing his praise against the burning zooe, Make Ossa like a wart! Nay, an thou'lt mouth, I'll rant as well as thou. Quean. This is mere madness: And thus a while the fit will work on him; Anon, as patient as the female dove,
When that her golden couplets are disclos'd,
His silence will sit drooping.

Ham. What is the reason, that you use me thus? I lov'd you ever: But it is no matter; Let Hercules himself do what he may, The cat will mew, and dog will have his day. [Exit.]

King. I pray thee, good Horatio, wait upon him. [Exit Horatio.]

Strengthen your patience in our last night's speech; [To Laertes.]

We'll put the matter to the present push.

Good Gertrude, set some watch over your son.

This grave shall have a living monument:
An hour of quiet shortly shall we see;
Till then, in patience our proceeding be. [Exeunt.]

SCENE II.—A Hall in the Castle.

Enter Hamlet and Horatio.

Ham. So much for this, sir: now shall you see the
You do remember all the circumstance? [other;—]

Hor. Remember it, my lord!

Ham. Sir, in my heart there was a kind of fighting;
That could not let me sleep: methought, I lay
Worse than the mutines in the billores. Rashly,
And prais'd be rashness for it,—Let us know,
Our indiscretion sometimes serves us well,
When our deep plots do pall; and that should teach
There's a divinity that shapes our ends, [us,
Rough-hew them how we will.

Ham. That is most certain.

Ham. Up from my cabin,
My sea-gown scar'd about me, in the dark
Grop'd to find out them: had my desire;
Finger'd their packet; and, in fine, withdrew
To mine own room again: making so bold,
My fears forternating manners, to unseal
Their grand commission; where I found, Horatio,
A royal knavery; an exact command,—
Larded with many several sorts of reasons,
Importing Denmark's health, and England's too,
With, ho! such bugs and goblins in my life,—
That, on the supervise, no leisure bated,
No, not to stay the grinding of the axe,
My head should be struck off.

Ham. Is't possible?

Ham. Here's the commission; read it a more leisure.
But wilt thou hear now how I did proceed?

Hor. Ay, 'tis beseech you.

Ham. Being thus confederate round with villainies,
Or I could make a prologue to my brains,
They had begun the play;—I set me down;
Devis'd a new commission; wrote it fair;
I once did hold it, as our statists do,
A baseness to write fair, and labour'd much
How to forget that learning; but, sir, now
It did me yeoman's service: Wilt thou know
The effect of what I wrote?

Hor. Ay, good my lord.

Ham. An earnest conjunction from the king,—
As England was his faithful tributary;
As love between them like the palm might flourish;
As peace should still her wheaten garland wear,
And stand a comma 'tween their amities;
And many such like as of great charge,—
That on the view and knowing of these contents,
Without debatement further, more, or less,
He should the bearers put to sudden death,
Not dwelling time allow'd.

Hor. How was this seal'd?

Ham. Why, even in that was heaven ordain'd;
I had my father's signet in my purse,
Which was the model of that Danish seal:
Folded the writ up in form of the other;
Subscrib'd it; gave't the impression; plac'd it safely,
The changeling never known; Now, the next day
Was our sea-fight: and what to this was sequent
Thou know'st already.

Hor. So Guildenstern and Rosencrantz go to't.

Ham. Why, man, they did make love to this employ-
They are not near my conscience; their defeat [meant;
Does by their own insinuation grow;
'Tis dangerous, when the baser nature comes
Between the pass and fell incensed points
Of mighty opposites.

Hor. Why, what a king this is!

Ham. Does it not, think thee, stand me now upon;
He that hath kill'd my king, and whor'd my mother;
Popp'd in between the election and my hopes;
Thrown out his angle for my proper life,
And with such cozenage: 'tis not perfect conscience,
To quit him with this arm? and is't not to be damn'd,
To let this canker of our nature come
In further evil?

Hor. 'Tis more than man hath power to do; in very act
What he would is no matter of the business there.

Ham. It will be short: the interim is mine;
And a man's life's no more than to say, one.
But I am very sorry, good Horatio,
That to Laertes I forgot myself;
For by the image of my cause, I see
The portraiture of his: I'll court his favours:
But, sure, the bravery of his grief did put me
Into a towering passion.

Hor. Peace; who comes here?

Enter Osrac.

Osr. Your lordship is right welcome back to Denmark.

Ham. I humbly thank you, sir.—Dost know this water-flop?

Hor. No, my good lord.

Ham. Thy state is the more gracious; for 'tis a close to know him: He hath much land, and fertile:
let a beast be lord of beasts, and his crib shall stand at the king's mess: 'Tis a chough; but, as I say, spacious in the possession of dirt.

Osr. Sweet lord, if your lordship were at leisure,
I should have some thing to you from my master.

Ham. I will receive it, sir, with all diligence of spirit: Your bonnet to his right use; 'tis for the head.

Osr. I thank your lordship, 'tis very hot.

Ham. No, believe me, 'tis very cold; the wind is northerly.

Osr. It is indifferent cold, my lord, indeed.

Ham. But yet, methinks, it is very sultry and hot;
or my complexion—

Osr. Exceedingly, my lord; it is very sultry,—as 'twere,—I cannot tell how.—My lord, his majesty bade me signify to you, that he has laid a great wager on your head: Sir, this is the matter,—

Ham. I beseech you, remember——

[Hamlet moves him to put on his hat.

Osr. Nay, good my lord; for my ease, in good faith. Sir, here is newly come to court, Laertes believe me, an absolute gentleman, full of most excel-
Ient differences, of very soft society, and grant showing; Indeed, to speak feelingly of him, he is the card or calendar of gentry, for you shall find in him the centurion of what part a gentleman would see.

Ham. Sir, his deficiency suffers no perturbation in you—thought, I know, to divide him inventorially, would dizzy the arithmetic of memory; and yet but Enter a Lord.

Lord. My lord, his majesty commanded him to you by young Osric, who brings back to him, that you attend him in the hall: He sends to know, if your pleasure hold to play with Laertes, or that you will take longer time.

Ham. I am constant to my purposes, they follow the king's pleasure: if his fitness speaks, mine is ready; nor, or whatsoever, provided I be so able as now.

Lord. The king, and queen, and all are coming down.

Ham. In happy time.

Lord. The queen desires you, to use some gentle entertainment to Laertes, before you fall to play.

Ham. She well instructs me. [Exit Lord.] Hor. You will lose this wager, my lord.

Ham. I do not think so; since he went into France, I have been in exceptional practice; I shall win at the odds. But thou would'st not think, how ill all's here about my heart; but it is no matter.

Hor. Nay, good my lord,—

Ham. It is but foolery; but it is such a kind of gain-giving, as would, perhaps, trouble a woman. Hor. If your mind dislike any thing, obey it: I will forswear their repair hither, and say, you are not fit.

Ham. Not a whit, we defy angry; there is a special providence in the fall of a sparrow. If it be now, 'tis not to come; if it be not to come, it will be now; if it be not now, yet it will come: the readiness is all: Since no man, of ought he leaves, knows, what is't to leave betimes? Let be.

Enter King, Queen, LAERTES, Lords, OSRIC, and Attendants with foils, &c.

King. Come, Hamlet, come, and take this hand from me. [The King puts the hand of Laertes into that of Hamlet.]

Ham. Give me your pardon, sir: I have done you But pardon it, as you are a gentleman. [Wrong; This presence knows, and you must needs have heard, how I am punish'd with a sore distraction. What I have done, that might your nature, honour, and exception, Roughly awake, I here proclaim was madness. Was't Hamlet wrong'd Laertes? Never, Hamlet. If Hamlet from himself be ta'en away, And, when he's not himself, does wrong Laertes, Then Hamlet does it not, Hamlet denies it. Who does it then? His madness: 'Tis not to be, Hamlet is of the faction that is wrong'd; His madness is poor Hamlet's enemy, Sir, in this audience, Let my disclaiming from a purpose'd evil Free me so far in your most generous thoughts, That I have shot my arrow o'er the house, And hurt my brother. Laer. I am satisfied in nature, Whose motive, in this case, should stir me most To my revenge: but in my terms of honour, I stand aloof; and will no reconciliation, Till by some elder masters, of known honour, I have a voice and precedent of peace, To keep my name ungod'd: But till that time, I do receive your offer'd love like love, And will not wrong it.

Ham. [Exit. I embrace it freely;
HAMLET.

And we in th' other's wagers flash, play,—
Give in the noise come on.

Enter. Come, one for me.

Ham. O, be your ears my instruments! I must mine! Your ear shall take a start at the largest note, stuck there off, indeed. You mock me, sir.

Enter. No, by this hand.

Ham. Give them the fools, young Horatio—Cousin the know the wager.' [Hamlet.

Enter. Far well, my lord.

Your Grace hath told the odds, the seeker side.

Ham. I do not hear it. I have seen you both—But since she's better off, we have therefore ours.

Enter. This is too heavy; let me see another.

Ham. This likes me well. These fools have all a tongue. [They prepare to play.

Ham. My good lord.

Enter. Set me the sum of mine, and that it be—
If Horatio give the first, or exceed you.

Give me an answer of the third exchange.

My stint small, and my patience near advance.

The pack is all gone; it is a better breach;

The pack in the run shall make it short throw.

Wit's when that four successive kings

Do Lemminks, or crown, or crown, crown, crown; Give me the rise.

And in the middle the trumpet speaks.

The trumpets in the sunshines victorious,

The suns in the heavens, the heaven to earth,

And the earth around to heaven—Come, begin—

And you, the shepherd, hear a very voice.

Enter. Come in, sir.

Enter. Come, my lord. [They play.

Enter. Stay, give me looks. Hamlet, this bears is

More to my thought.—O, I am up the tap, chance

To make a common sort of villain.

Enter. I pray you, once fiire place, set it by writing.

Enter. Another shot.—not now, sir: [They play.

Enter. You struck, much, I confess.

Enter. O, you stand at the court, and a score of breaths.

Ham. Hamlet, in my napkin, in your brow.

The green illumes to my fortune, think it.

Ham. Good morn. —

Enter. graceful, to be drunk.

Queen. I will my lord—draw you, garden me.

Enter. Is it a person any?— drew a man. [Queen.

Enter. I am not drunk: I am, by my lady.

Queen. Some of me, my lord.

Enter. I do not think it.

Enter. And yet it is not against my conscience.

Enter. Come, in the court. Laurence, You and I are upon the earth, with your best—Sir, come quickly

Let—be it now. [They play.

Enter. thing another way.

Enter. Come, my lord. [She takes him.

Enter. Nay come again. Laurence. They sneer at the through the tears. [Queen.

Enter. They sneer at us—now a noise. [Queen.

Enter. They are in Jupiter. [Queen.

Enter. Everything in Jupiter. [Queen.

Enter. I am the weather. [Queen.

Enter. I am with mine own treachery.

Ham. Where is the queen?—I am poison.

Queen. O, Villain—He set the door to be locked.

Enter. The Queen is new Hamlet, Hamlet, thou art slain; No medicine in the world can do thee good, in that thou is not hail an hour's life; The heathenish instrument is in thy hand. [Enter, and environ the old man practices Enter in itself on the—So here I am. Never move again. Then another poison.

I can no more the king, the king to blame.

Enter. The point Enron but thus—Then, vemone, to my work.

Enter. The Queen.

Enter. The Queen.

Ham. He is very wise.

Enter. This is a poison temper'd by himself.

Enter. Exchange forgiveness with me, noble Hamlet.

Enter. Heaven make thee free of all I follow thee.

Enter. Most sovereign, when I that look pale and tremble at this measure, That are but motives or audaces of this act,

Enter. This instant, this instant serves, to serve—

Enter. He is dead.

Enter. Never believe it:

Enter. Here am I a Barish and a Dane.

Enter. As thou in a man—

Enter. Give me the cup. let go, by heaven I have as,

Enter. In the name of—what a troubled name,

Enter. Things coming from unknown, shall live behind me?

Enter. From thee to me, from me to thee, from me to thee,

Enter. And in this barr w I drew my breath in pain.

Enter. To all my sight—More is said and—woman.

Enter. What warped state is this?

Enter. Young Fortinbras, with conquest comes from Enter. To the ambassadors of England, given

Enter. This warlike valiant.

Enter. O, Fortinbras.

Enter. The part go with a strength—

Enter. That laugh we the news from England

Enter. On Fortune's have we lost your name,

Enter. The part warlike—

Enter. Enter. Laurence, the English Ambassadors,

Enter. Where. Where is the court.

Enter. Where it is, you would see it.

Enter. This quittance, and—[Queen.

Enter. This quittance, and—[Queen.

Enter. Where is the court.
That thou so many princes, at a shot,
So bloodily hast struck?
1 amb. The sight is dismal;
And our affairs from England do impart
The ears senseless, that should give us hearing,
To tell him, his commandment is fulfilled,
That Rosencrantz and Guildenstern are dead;
Where should we have our thanks?
Hor. Not from his mouth,
Had it the ability of life to thank you;
He never gave commandment for their death.
Hor. We must commit upon this bloody question,
You from the Polack wars, and you from England,
Are here arrive; give order, that these bodies
High on a stage, be placed to the view;
And let me speak, to the yet unknown world,
Howthese things came about: So shall you hear
Of carnal, bloody, and unnatural acts;
Of accidental judgments, casual slaughters;
Of deaths put on by cunning and forc'd cause;
And, in this upshot, purposes mistook
Fall o' the inventors' heads: all this can I Truly deliver.
Fort. Let us haste to bear it,
And call the nobest to the audience.
For me, with sorrow I embrace my fortune:
I have some rights of memory in this kingdom,
Which now to claim my vantage don't invite me.
Hor. Of that I shall have also cause to speak.
And from his mouth whose voice will draw on more
But let this same be presently performed.
Even while men's minds are wild; test most มา
On plots, and errors, happen.
[Exeunt, chance.
Fort. Let four captains
Bear Hamlet, like a soldier, to the stage;
For he was likely, had been been put on,
To have proud most royally: and, for his passage,
The Soldier's music, and the rites of war,
Speak loudly for him.

Othello.

This tragedy, which Malone supposes to have been written so early as 1622, was first entered as "Othello," Oct. 6, 1623, and printed the year following.
The story is taken from the seventh tale, in the third canto, of Othello in the Italian version published in 1565. In the English translation exist in Shakespeare's time, and with the contents of which he must have been acquainted by his knowledge either of the Italian or the French language.
"The time of this play," says Heath, "may be ascertained from the following circumstances. We remark the second formula, or design against Cyprus in 1569, and took it in 1571. This was the only attempt the Turks ever made upon that island after it came into the hands of the Venetians, which was in the year 1475, whereas the time must fall in with some part of that interval. I learn from the play that there was a junction of the Turkish fleet at Rhodes, in order for the invasion of Cyprus. The Venetians, under the command of Barattino, went to Rhodes, there met another squadron, and then resumed its way to Cyprus. These were real political facts, which happened when Massenaga, Servadac's general, attacked Cyprus May 1573, which therefore is the true period of this performance. See Boeckh's "History of the Turks," p. 836, 846, 867."

ACT I.

SCENE 1.—Venice. A Street.
Enter Rodrigo and Iago.

Rod. Thou, never tell me, I take it much unkindly, that thou, Iago,—who hast had my purse.
As if the strings were thine,—shouldst thou know of this.
Iago. Blood, but you will not hear me:
If ever I did dream of such a matter.

Abhor me.
Rod. Thou'rt tell'dst me, then didst hold him in thy hate.
Iago. Despise me, if I do not. Three great oves of the
In personal suit to make me his lieutenant, [Exit.
Of th' /a/cy to him:— and, by the faith of man,
I know my price. I am worth no worse a place:
But he, as loving his own pride and purposes,
Perutes them, with a bom-bast circumstance,
 Horribly stuff'd with crotchets of war:
And, in conclusion, nonsens
My meditation; for, certes, says he,
I have already chose my officer.
And what was he?
Torsos, a great mathetician.
One Michel Catalio, a Florentine.
A fellow almost dam'd in a fair wife;
That never set a squadron in the field,
Nor the division of a battle knows.
More than a spinster: unless the hookish theoretic,
Wherein, the terror'd consul can propose
As master's he: mere prattle, without practice,
Is all his soldiership. But, he, sir, had the election:
And, of whom his eyes had seen the proof.
At Rhodes, as Cyprus: and on other grounds
Christian and heathen. must be he bless'd and calm'd
By debtor and creditor, this counter-caster;
He's a good time, must his gentleman be.
And, God bless the men his Moorish-ship's ancient.
Rod. By heaven, I rather would have been his hang man.
Jago. But there's no remedy, 'tis the curse of ser-
Preferment goes by letter, and affection, (vice;
Not by the old gradation, where each second
Sined him to the first. New, sir, be judge yourself,
When I in arry just term am aff'red
To love the Moon.
And. I would not follow him then.
Jago. O, sir, content you:
I follow him to serve my turn upon him:
We cannot all be masters, nor all masters
Cannot be truly followed. You shall mark
Many a duteous and true-crooking knave,
That, doting on his own obnoxious bondage,
Wears out his time, much like his master's ass,
For nought but provender; and, when he's old,
cashier'd:
Whip me such honest knaves: Others there are,
Who, tram'd in forms and visages of duty,
Keep yet their hearts attending on themselves:
And, though the service be not service on their lords.
Do well thrive by them, and, when they have line'd their coats.
Do themselves hommage: these fellows have some soul.
And such a one do I profess myself.
For, sir.
It is as sure as you are Roderigo.
Were I the Moon, I would not be Jago:
In following him, I follow but myself;
Heaven is my judge, not! for love and duty,
But seeming so, for my peculiar end:
For when my outward action doth demonstrate
The native act and figure of my heart
In compliment extern. is not long after:
But I will wear my heart upon my sleeve
For a dawn to peck at, I am not what I am.
Rod. What a full fortune does the thick-lips owe,
If he can carry thus!
Jago. Call up her father.
Reuse him: make after him, poison his delight,
Preach him in the streets: incense his kinsmen.
And, though he in a fertile climate dwell,
Plagued with ambition, though he's joy be joy,
Yet throw such changes of vexation o'er.
As it may lose some colour
Rod. Here is her father's house: I'll call abroad.
Jago. Do: with like timorous accent, and dire yell,
As when, by night and negligence, the fire
Is spied in a pyramidal cornice,
Dua. What, ho! Brabantio! signior Brabantio, ho!
Jago. Awake! what, ho! Brabantio! thieves!
Thieves! thieves!
Look to your house, your daughter, and your bags!
Thieves! thieves!

Brabantio, above, at a window.
Dua. What is the reason of this terrible summons?
What is the matter there?
Dua. Signior, is all your family within?
Jago. Are your doors lock'd?
Dua. Why? wherefore ask you this?
Jago. Zounds, sir, you are robb'd: for shame, put on your gown.
Your heart is burst, you have lost half your soul;
Even now, very now, an old black ram
Is ramping your white ewe.
Arise, arise;
Awake the snoring citizens with the bell,
Or else the devil will make a granduse of you.
Arise, I say.
Dua. What, have you lost your wits?
Jago. Most revolent signior, do you know my voice?
Dua. Not I: what are you?
Rod. My name is—Roderigo.
Dua. The worse welcome:
I have charg'd thee, not to haunt about my doors:
In honest plenness thou hast heard me say,
My daughter is not for thee, and now, in madness,
Being full of suspicion, and discontented drags,
Upon malicious bravery, dost thou come
To start my quiet.
Rod. But thou must needs be sure,
My spirit, and my place, have in them power
To make this bitter to thee.
Dua. Patience, good sir.
Rod. What tell'st thou me of rebukes? this is Vem-
My house is not a grange.
Dua. Most grave Brabantio,
In simple, and pure soul I come to you.
Jago. Zounds, sir, you are one of those, that will not serve God, if the devil bid you. Because we come to do you service, you think we are muffins:
You'll have a dand' daughter covered with a Barbary horse:
You'll have your navigation weigh to you:
you'll have courser for cousins, and genets for germans.
Jago. What profane wretch art thou?
Jago. I am one, sir, that comes to tell you, your daughter and the Moon are now making the beast with two backs.
Dua. Thou art: a villain.
Jago. You are—a senator.
Rod. This shalt shall answer: I know thee, Ro-
Rod. Sir, I will answer anything. But I beseech you,
If I be your pleasure, and most wise consent.
As partly. I find, it is:) that your fair daughter,
At this odd-even and droll watch o' the night,
Plagued witha sighing, transmuted— with no worse nor better gait.
But with a knave of common hire, a gondolier,
To the gross claps of a lascivious Moor,—
If this be known to you, and your allowance.
We then have done you bold and stamy wrongs;
But, if you know not this, my manners tell me,
We have your wrongs revenge. Do not believe,
That, from the sense of duty, I thus would play and trade with your reverence;
Your daughter.—if you have not given her leave,
I say again, hath made a gross revolt;
Tying her duty, beauty, wit, and fortunes.
ACT I.—SCENE II.

In an extravagant, and wheeling stranger,
Of here and every where: Straight satisfy yourself:
If she be in her chamber, or your house,
Let me see, or me the justice of the state
For thus deluding you.

Bra. Strike on the tinder, ho!
Give me a taper.—call up all my people:—
This accident is not unlike my dream;
Belief of it oppresses me already:—

Light, I say! light! let not Farewell; for I leave you.
It seems not meet, nor wholesome to my place,
To be produc'd (as, if I stay, I shall,)
Against the Moor: For, I do know, the state,—
However this may gall him with some check,—
Cannot with safety cast him; for he's embark'd
With such loud reason to the Cyprus' wars,
(Which even now stand in act,) that, for their souls,
Another of his faction they have not,
To lead their business: in which regard,
Though I do hate him as I do hell paitos,
Yet, for necessity of present life,
I must shew out a flag and sign of love,
Which is indeed but sign. That you shall surely find
Lead to the Sagittary the rais'd search; [him,
And there will I be with him. So, farewell. [Exit.

Enter, below, BRABANTIO, and Servants with torches.

It is too true an evil: gone she is;
And what's to come of my despaired time,
Is sought but bitterness.—Now, Rodenigo,
Where didst thou see her?—O, unhappy girl!—
With the Moor, say'st thou? Who would be a father?—
How didst thou know twas she!—O, thou deceiv'st
Past thought!—What said she to you?—Get more
Raise all my kindred.—Are they married, think you?
Rod. Truly, I think they are. [the blood!—
Bra. O heaven!—How got she out?—O treason
Of Fathers, from hence trust not your daughters' minds
By what you see them act.—Are there not charms,
By which the property of youth and maidhood
May be abus'd? Have you not read, Rodenigo,
Of some such thing?
Rod. Yes, sir; I have indeed. [her;—
Bra. Call up my brother.—O, that you had
Some knowledge of the business, as you know
Where we may apprehend her and the Moor?
Rod. I think, I can discover him; if you please
To get good guard, and go along with me.
Bra. Pray you, lead on. At every house I'll call,
I may command at most:—Get weapons, roderigo,
And raise some special officers of night.
On, good Rodenigo,—I'll desire your pains. [Exit.

SCENE II.—The same. Another street.

Enter Othello, Iago, and Attendants.

Iago. Though in the trade of war I have slain men,
Yet do I hold it very stuff o' the conscience,
To do no contriv'd murder: I lack iniquity.
Sometimes, to do me service: Nine on ten times
I had thought to have yerk'd him here under the ribs,
Oth. 'Tis better as it is.
Iago. Nay, but he prated,
And spoke such scurry and provoking terms
Against your honour,
That, with the little godliness I have,
I did full hard forbear him. But, I pray, sir,
Are you fast married? for, be sure of this,—
That the magnifico is much beloved;

And hath, in his effect, a voice potential
As double as the duke's; he will divorce you;
Or put upon you what restraint and grievance
The law (with all his might, to enforce it on,)
Will give him cable.
Oth. Let him do his spite:
My services, which I have done the signory,
Shall out-tongue his complaints. 'Tis yet to know,
(Which, when I know that boasting is an honour,
I shall promulgate,) I fetch my life and being
From men of royal siege; and my dements
May speak, unbonneted, to as proud a fortune
As this that I have reach'd: For know, Iago,
But that I love the gentle Desdemona,
I would not my unhoused free condition
Put into circumscription and confine yonder?
For the sea's worth. But, look! what lights come

Enter Cassio, at a distance, and certain Officers with torches.

Iago. These are the raised father, and his friends:
You were best go in.
Oth. Not I: I must be found;
My parts, my title, and my perfect soul,
Shall manifest me rightly. Is it they?
Iago. By Janus, I think no.
Oth. The servants of the duke, and my lieutenant.
The goodness of the night upon you, friends!
What is the news?
Cas. The duke does greet you, general;
And he requires your haste-post haste appearance,
Even on the instant.
Oth. What is the matter, think you?
Cas. Something from Cyprus, as I may divise;
It is a business of some heat: the gally
Have sent a dozen sequent messengers
This very night, at one another's heels;
And many of the consuls, rais'd, and met,
Are at the duke's already: You have been hotly call'd
When, being not at your lodging to be found. [for;
The senate hath sent about three several quests,
To search you out.
Oth. 'Tis well I am found by you.
I will but spend a word here in the house,
And go with you. [Exit.
Cas. Ancient, what makes he here?
Iago. Faith, he's met with something; I hear
If it prove lawful prize, he's made for ever.
Cas. I do not understand.
Iago. He's married.
Cas. To who?
Re-enter Othello.

Iago. Marry, to—Come, captain, will you go?
Oth. Have with you.
Cas. Here comes another troop to seek for you.

Enter Brabantio, Roderigo, and Officers of night, with torches and weapons.

Iago. It is Brabantio.—general, be advis'd;
He comes to bad intent.
Oth. Hola! stand there!
Rod. Signior, it is the Moor.
Bra. Down with him, thief!
[They draw on both sides.

Iago. You, Roderigo! come, sir, I am for you.
Oth. Keep up your bright swords, for the dew will Gainst them.
Good signior, you shall more command with years,
Than with your weapons.
[daughter?
Bra. O thou foul thief, where hast thou stow'd my Damo'd as thou art, thou hast enchanted her:
For I'll refer me to all things of sense,
If she in chains of magic were not bound,
Whether a maid—so tender, fair, and happy;
So opposite to marriage, that she shunn'd
The wealthy cursed darlings of our nation,
Would ever have, to incur a general mock,
Run from her guardage to the sooty bosom
Of such a thing as thou: to fear, not to delight.
Judge me the world, if 'tis not gross in sense,
That thou hast practis'd on her with foul charms;
Abus'd her delicate youth with drugs, or minerals,
That waken motion;—I'll have it disputed on,
'Tis probable, and palpable to thinking
I therefore apprehend and do attach thee,
For an abuser of the world, a practiser
Of arts inhabited and out of warrant:—
Lay hold upon him: if he do resist,
Subdue him at his peril.

Oth. Hold your hands, both of you.
Both of my inclining, and the rest:
Were it my cue to fight, I should have known it
Without a prompter.—Where will you that I go
To answer this your charge?

Bra. To prison: till fit time
Of law, and course of direct session,
Call thee to answer.

1 Sen. What if I do obey?
How may the duke be therewith satisfied;
Whose messengers are here about my side,
Upon some present business of the state,
To bring me to him.

Off. 'Tis true, most worthy signior,
The duke's in council; and your noble self,
I am sure, is sent for.

Bra. How! the duke in council!
In this time of the night!—Bring him away:
Mine's not an idle cause: the duke himself,
or any of my brothers of the state
Cannot but feel this wrong, as 'twere their own:
For if such actions may have passage free,
Bond-slaves, and pagans, shall our statesmen be.

[Execut.

SCENE III.—The same. A Council-Chamber.

The Duke, and Senators, sitting at a table; Officers attending.

Duke. There is no composition in these news,
That gives them credit.

1 Sen. Ay, indeed, they are disproportion'd;
My letters say, a hundred and seven gallies.
Duke. And mine a hundred and forty.

2 Sen. And mine, two hundred:
But though they jump not on a just account,
(Ass in these cases, where the aim reports,
'Tis oft with difference,) yet do they all confirm
A Turkish fleet, and bearing up to Cyprus.

Duke. Nay, it is possible enough to judgment;
I do not so secure me in the error,
But the main article I do approve
In fearful sense.

Enter an Officer, with a Sailor.

Off. A messenger from the gallies.

Duke. Now? the business?

Sail. The Turkish preparation makes for Rhodes:
So was I bid report here to the state,
By signior Angelo.

Duke. How say you by this change?

1 Sen. This cannot be,
By no essay of reason; 'tis a pageant,

To keep us in false gaze: When we consider
The importance of Cyprus to the Turk;
And let ourselves again but understand,
That, as it more concerns the Turk than Rhodes,
So may be with more facile question hear it,
For that it stands not in such warlike brace,
But altogether lacks the abilities
That Rhodes is dress'd in: if we make thought of this,
We must not think, the Turk is so unskillful.
To leave that latest which confirms him first;
Neglecting an attempt of ease, and gain,
To make, and wage, a danger profitless.

Duke. Nav, in all confidence, he's not for Rhodes.

Off. Here is more news.

Enter A Messenger.

Mes. The Ottomites, reverent and gracious,
Steering with due course toward the isle of Rhodes,
Have there injeint them with an after fleet.

1 Sen. Ay, so I thought;—How many, as you guess?

Mes. Of thirty sail: and now do they re-steam
Their backward course, bearing with frank appearance
Their purposes toward Cyprus.—Signior Montano,
Your trusty and most valiant servitor,
With his free duty, recommends you thus,
And prays you to believe him.

Duke. 'Tis certain then for Cyprus.—
Marc. Manage, perchance, is he not in town?

1 Sen. He's now in Florence. [despatch.

Duke. Write from us; wish him post-post haste—

1 Sen. Here comes Brabantio, and the valiant Moor.

Enter Brabantio, Othello, Iago, Rodrigo, and Officers.

Duke. Valiant Othello, we must straight employ you
Against the general enemy Ottoman.
I did not see you; welcome, gentle signior,
[To Brabantio.

We lack'd your counsel! and your help to-night.

Bra. So did I yours: Good your grace, pardon me;
Neither my place, nor ought I heard of business,
Hath rais'd me from my bed: nor doth the general
Take hold on me; for my particular care
Is of so flood-gate and o'erbearing nature.
That it engulfs and swallows other sorrows,
And it is still itself.

Duke. Why, what's the matter?

Bra. My daughter! Of, my daughter!

Sen. Dead?

Bra. Ay, to me;
She is abus'd, stol'n from me, and corrupted
By spells and medicines bought of mountebanks:
For nature so preposterously to err,
Being not deficient, blind, or lame of sense,
Sans witchcraft could not—

Duke. Who e'er he be, that, in this foul proceeding
Hath thus beguil'd your daughter of herself,
And you of her, the bloody book of law
You shall yourself read in the bitter letter,
After your own sense: yea, though our proper son
Stood in your action.

Bra. Humbly I thank your grace.

Here is the man, this Moor; whom now, it seems,
Your special mandate, for the state affairs,
Hath hither brought.

Duke & Sen. We are very sorry for it.

Duke. What, in your own part, can you say to this?

[To Othello.

Bra. Nothing, but this is so.

Oth. Most potent, grave, and reverend signiors,
My very noble and approv'd good masters,—
That I have ta'en away this old man's daughter,
It is most true; true, I have married her;
The very head and front of my offending
Hath, in this instant, more. Ruin all, in my speech,
And little bless'd with the set phrase of peace;
For since these arms of mine had seven years' pith,
Till now some nine moons wasted, they have us'd
Their dearest action in the tented field;
And little of this great work can I speak,
More than pertain to feats of broil and battle;
And therefore little shall I grace my cause,
In speaking for myself: Yet, by your gracious pains,
I will a round unvarnish'd tale deliver [gence,
Of my whole course of love; what drugs, what charms,
What conjuration, and what mighty magic.
(For such proceeding I charg'd withal,) I won my daughter with.

Oth. A maiden never bold;
Of spirit so still and quiet, that her motion
Blush'd at herself; And she,—in spite of nature,
Of years, of country, credit, every thing,—
To fall in love with what she fear'd to look on?
It is a judgment main'd, and most imperfect,
That will confess—perfection so could err
Against all rules of nature; and must be driven
To find out practices of cunning.
Why this should be. I therefore vouch again,
That with some mixtures powerful o'er the blood,
Or with some dram conjur'd to this effect,
He wrought upon her.

Duke. To vouch this, is no proof;
Without more certain and more overt test,
Than these this habits, and poor likelihoods
Of modern seeming, do prefer against him.

1 Sen. But, Othello, speak—
Did you by indirect and forced courses
Subdue and poison this young maid's affections;
Or came it by request, and such fair question
As soul to soul affordeth? I do beseech you,
Send for the lady to the Sagittary,
And let her speak of me before her father:
If you do find me foul in her report,
The trust, the office, I do hold of you,
Not only take away, but let your sentence
Even fall upon my life.

Oth. Ancient, conduct them; you best know the place.—[Exit IAGO and Attendants.

And, till she come, as truly as to heaven
I do confess the vices of my blood,
So justly to your grave ears I'll present
How I did thrive in this fair lady's love,
And she in mine.

Duke. Say it, Othello.

Oth. Her father lov'd me; oft invited me;
Still question'd me the story of my life,
From year to year; the battles, sieges, fortunes,
That I have pass'd.
I ran it through, even from my boyish days,
To the very moment that he bade me tell it.
Wherein I spoke of most disastrous chances,
Of modern seeming, by flood and field;
Of hair-breadth escapes I the imminent deadly breach,
Of being taken by the insolent foe,
And sold to slavery; of my redemption thence,
And portance in my travel's history:
Wherein of antres vast, and desarts wild, [heaven,
Rough quarries, rocks, and hills whose heads touch
What ever as she could with haste despatch,
She'd come again, and with a greedy ear
Devour up my discourse: Which I observing,
Took once a plain hour: and found good means
To draw from her a prayer of earnest heart,
That I would all my pilgrimage dilate,
Whereof by parcell she had something heard,
But not intuitively: And often thought
And often did beguile her of her tears.
When I did speak of some distressful stroke,
That my youth suffer'd. My story being done,
She gave me for my pains a world of sighs:
She swore,—In faith, 'twas strange, 'twas passing
'Twas pitiful, 'twas wondrous pitiful: [strange;
She wish'd, she had not heard it; yet she wish'd
That heaven had made her such a man: she thank'd
And bade me, if I had a friend that lov'd her, [me;
I should but teach him how to tell my story,
And that would woo her. Upon this hint, I spake:
She lov'd me for the dangers I had pass'd;
And I lov'd her, that she did pity them.
This only is the witchcraft I have us'd;
Here comes the lady, let her witness it.

Enter DESDEMONA, IAGO, and Attendants.

Duke. I think, this tale would win my daughter
Good Brabantio. [too.—
Take up this mangled matter at the best:
Men do their broken weapons rather use,
Than their bare hands.

Bra. I pray you, hear her speak;
If she confess, that she was half the wooer,
 Destruction on my head, if my bad blame
Light on the man!—Come hither, gentle mistress;
Do you perceive in all this noble company,
Where most you owe obedience?

Desd. My noble father,
I do perceive here a divided duty:
To you, I am bound for life, and education;
My life, and education, both do learn me
How to respect you; you are the lord of duty,
I am hither to your daughter: But here's my husband;
And so much duty as my mother shew'd
To you, preferring you before her father,
So much I challenge that I may profess
Due to the Moor, my lord.

Bra. God be with you!—I have done:
Please it your grace, on to the state affairs;
I had rather to adopt a child, than get it.—
Come hither, Moor; I here do give thee that with all my heart,
Which, but thou hast already, with all my heart
I would keep from thee. For your sake, jewel,
I am glad at soul I have no other child;
For thy escape would teach me tyranny,
To hang clogs on them.—I have done, my lord.

Duke. Let me speak like yourself; and lay a sentence,
Which, as as grise, or step, may help these lovers
Into your dear care.
When remedies are past, the griefs are ended.
By seeing the worst, which late on hopes depended.
To mourn a miscarriage that is past and gone,
Is the next way to draw new miscarriage on.
What cannot be preserve'd when fortune takes,
Patience her injury a mockery makes.
The robber's brazen smiles, steals away the thing
He robs himself, that spends a bootless grief.

Bra. So let the Turk of Cyprus us beguile;
We lose it not, so long as we can smile.
He bears the sentence well, that nothing bears
But the free comfort which from thence he bears.
But he bears both the sentence and the sorrow,
That, to pay grief, most of poor patience borrow.
These sentences, to sugar, or to gall,
Being strong on both sides, are equivocal:
But words are words; I never yet did hear,
That the brows’d heart was pierced through the car,
I humbly beseech you, proceed to the affairs of state.

_Duke._ The Turk with a most mighty preparation makes for Cyprus — Othello, the fortitude of the place is well known to you: And though we have there a substitute of most allowed sufficiency, yet opinion, a sovereign mistress of effects, throws a more safe voice on you: you must therefore be content to stub-ber the gloss of your new fortunes with this more stubborn and boisterous expedition.

_Oth._ The tyrant custom, most grave senators,
Hath made the flinty and steel couch of war
My thrice-driven bed of down: I do assure
A natural and prompt alacrity,
I find in hardness; and do undertake
These present wars against the Ottomites.
Most humbly therefore bending to your state,
I crave fit disposition for my wife;
Due reference of place, and exhibition;
With such accommodation, and besar,
As levels with her breeding.

_Duke._ If you please,
_Beat at her father’s.
_Bra._ I’ll not have it so.

_Oth._ Nor I.

_Dest._ Nor I; I would not there reside,
To put my father in impatient thoughts.
By putting him in his eye. Most gracious base,
To my unfolding lend a prosperous ear;
And let me find a charter in your voice,
To assist my simpleness.

_Duke._ What would you, Desdemona?

_Des._ That I did love the Moor to live with him,
My downright violence and scorn of fortunes
May trumpet to the world: my heart’s subdued
Even to the very quality of my lord:
I saw Othello’s visage in his mind;
And to his honours, and his valiant parts,
Did my soul and fortunes consecrate.
So that, dear lords, if I be left behind,
A moth of peace, and he go to the war,
The rights for which I love him, are bereft me,
And I a heavy interim shall support
By his dear absence: Let me go with him.

_Oth._ Your voices, lords: — beseech you, let her will Have a free way.

_Vouch with me, heaven; I therefore beg it not,
To please the palate of my appetite;
Nor to comply with heat, the young affects,
In my distinct and proper satisfaction.
But be free and fountainous to your mind:
And heaven defend your good souls, that you think
I will your serious and great business scant.
For she is with me: No, when light-wing’d toys
Of feather’d Cupid see with wanton dulness
My speculative and active instruments,
That my disports corrupt and taint my business.
Let household make a salver of my helm,
And all indig and base adversaries
Make head against my estimation!

_Duke._ Be it as you shall privately determine,
Either for her stay, or going: the affairs cries — haste,
And speed must answer it: you must hence to-night.

_Des._ To-night, my lord!

_Duke._ This night.

_Oth._ With all my heart.

_Duke._ At nine i’ the morning here we’ll meet again.

_Othello, leave some officer behind,
And be we shall our commission bring to you;
With such things else of quality and respect,
As doth import you.

_Oth._ Please your grace, my ancient;
A man he is of honesty, and trust:
To his conveyance I assign my wife,
With what else needful your good grace shall think
To be sent after me.

_Duke._ Let it be so.

_Good night to every one. — And, noble signior,
If virtue no delighted beauty lack.
_Your son-in-law is far more fair than black.

_1 Sen._ Adieu, brave Moor! I use Desdemona well.
_Bra._ Look to her Moor: have a quick eye to see;
She has deceiv’d her father, and may thee.

_[Exit Duke, Senators, Officers, &c._

_Oth._ My life upon her faith. — Honest Iago,
My Desdemona must I leave to thee;
I pr’ythee, let thy wife attend upon her;
And bring them after in the best advantage.

_Come, Desdemona, I have but an hour
Of love, of worldly matters and direction,
To spend with thee: we must obey the time.

_[Exit Othello and Desdemona._

_Rod._ Iago.
_Iago._ What say’st thou, noble heart?
_Rod._ What will I do, think’st thou?
_Iago._ Why, to bed, and sleep.
_Rod._ I will incontinent drown myself.
_Iago._ Well, if thou dost, I shall never love thee after it. Why, thou silly gentleman!
_Rod._ It is silliness to live, when to live is a tor-mend: and then we have a prescription to die, when death is our physician.

_Iago._ O villainous! I have looked upon the world for four times seven years! and since I could distinguish between a benefit and an injury, I never found a man that knew how to love himself. Ere I would say, I would drown myself for the love of a Gunmen—he, I would change my humanity with a baboon.

_Rod._ I could not: I pr’ythee, this is my shame to be so fond; but it is not in virtue to amend it.

_Iago._ Virtue? a fig! ’tis in ourselves, that we are thus, or thus. Our bodies are our gardens; to the which, our wills are gardeners: so that if we will plant nettles, or sow lettuce; set hyssop, and weed up thyme; supply it with one gender of herbs, or distract it with many; either to have it strew with idleness, or mann’d with industry; why, the power and corrigible authority of this lies in our wills.
If the balance of our lives had not one scale of reason to poise another of sensuality, the blood and baseness of our natures would conduct us to most preposterous conclusions: But we have reason to cool our raging motions, our earnal stings, our unbitted lusts; whereof
I take this, that you call—love, to be a sect or scion.
_Rod._ It cannot be.

_Iago._ It is merely a lust of the blood, and a permission of the will. Come, be a man: Drown thyself? drown cats and blind puppies. I have profess’d me thy friend, and I confess me knit to thy deserving with cables of perdurable toughness; I could never better esteem thee now. Put money in thy purse; follow these wars; defeat thy favour with an asper’d beard; I say, put money in thy purse. It cannot be, that Desdemona should long continue her love to the _Moor,—put money in thy purse;—nor be his to her:
It was a violent commenancement, and thou shalt
ACT II.—SCENE I.

SCENE I.—A Sea-port Town in Cyprus. A Platform.

Enter MONTANO and Two Gentlemen.

Mon. What from the cape can you discern at sea?

1 Gent. Nothing at all: it is a high-wrought flood; f cannot, 'twixt the heaven and the main, Descry a sail.

Mon. Methinks, the wind hath spoke aloud at land; a fuller blast ne'er shook our battlements:

If it hath ruffian'd so upon the sea,

What ribs of oak, when mountains melt on them,

Can hold the mortise? what shall we hear of this!

2 Gent. A segregation of the Turkish fleet:

For do but stand upon the foaming shore,

The chiding billow seems to pelt the clouds;

The wind-shak'd surge, with high and monstrous main,

Seems to cast water on the burning bear,

And quench the guards of the ever-fixed pole:

I never did like molestation view

On th' enchaunted flood.

Mon. But if that the Turkish fleet

Do not insister'd and embay'd, they are drown'd;

It is impossible they bear it out.

Enter a Third Gentleman.

3 Gent. News, lord! our wars are done:

The desperate tempest hath so bang'd the Turks,

That their designment halts: A noble ship of Venice

Hath seen a grievous wreck and suffrance

On most part of their fleet.

Mon. How! is this true?

3 Gent. The ship is here put in,

The Veronessa; Michael Cassio.

Lieutenant to the warlike Moor, Othello,

Is come on shore: the Moor himself at sea,

And is in full commission here for Cyprus.

Mon. I am glad on't; 'tis a worthy governor.

3 Gent. But this same Cassio,—though he speak

Of comfort,

Touching the Turkish loss,—yet he looks sadly,

And prays the Moor be safe; for they were parted

With foul and violent tempest.

Mon. Pray heaven he be;

For I have serv'd him, and the man commands

Like a full soldiers. Let's to the sea-side, ho!

As well to see the vessel that's come in,

As to throw out our eyes for brave Othello;

Even 'til we make the main, and the aerial blue,

An indistinct regard.

3 Gent. Come, let's do so,

For every minute is expectancy

Of more arrivance.

Enter Cassio.

Cas. Thanks to the valiant of this warlike isle,

That so approve the Moor; O, let the heavens,

Give him defence against the elements,

For I have lost him on a dangerous sea!

Mon. Is he well ship'd?

Cas. His bark is stoutly timber'd, and his pilot

Of very expert and approv'd allowance;

Therefore my hopes, not surpris'd to death,

Stand in bold cure.

[Within.] A sail, a sail, a sail!

Enter another Gentleman.

Cas. What noise?

4 Gent. The town is empty; on the brow o'the sea

Stand ranks of people, and they cry—a sail.

Cas. My hopes do shape him for the governor.

2 Gent. They do discharge their shot of courtesy.

[Gun heard.]

Our friends at least.

Cas. I pray you, sir, go forth,

And give us truth who 'tis that is arriv'd.

2 Gent. I shall.

Mon. But, good lieutenant, is your general wi'd?

Cas. Most fortunately: he hath achiev'd a maid

That paragon's description, and wild fame;

One that excels the quirks of blazing pens,
And in the essential vesture of creation,
Does bear all excellency.—How now! who has put Re-enter Second Gentleman.

S. Gent. 'Tis one Iago, ancient to the general.
Cas. He has such admirable and happy speed:
Tempests themselves, high seas, and howling winds,
The gutter'd rocks, and congregated sands,—
Traitors enstop'd to clog the guiltless keel,
As having sense of beauty, do omit
Their mortal natures, letting go safely by
The divine Desdemona.

Iago. What is she?—
Cas. She that I spake of, our great captain's cap-
Left in the conduct of the bold Iago;
That foot here anticipates our thoughts,
A se'might's speed. Great Jove, Othello guard,
And swell his sail with thine own powerful breath:
That he may bless this bay with his tall ship,
Make love's quick pants in Desdemona's arms,
Great renown'd fire to our extincted spirits,
And bring all Cyprus comfort!—O, behold,

Enter Desdemona, Emilia, Iago, Roderigo,
and Attendants.

The riches of the ship is come on shore!
Ye men of Cyprus, let her have your knees:—
Hail to thee, lady! and the grace of heaven,
Before, behind thee, and on every hand,
Enwheel thee round!—

Des. 1 thank you, valiant Cassio.

What tidings can you tell me of my lord?
Cas. He is not yet arriv'd; nor know I aught
But that he's well, and will be shortly here.

Des. O, but I fear,—how know you company?
Cas. The great contention of the sea and skies
Parted our fellowship: but, hark! a sail.

2 Gent. They give their greeting to the citadel;
This likewise is a friend.

Cas. See for the news.—[Exit Gentleman.

Good ancient, you are welcome:—Welcome, mistress:

Let it not gull your patience, good Iago.
That I extend my manners; 'tis my breeding
That gives me this bold show of courtesy. [Kissing her.
Iago. Sir, would she give you so much of her lips,
As of her tongue she oft bestows on you?
You have enough.

Des. Alas, she has no speech.

Iago. In faith, too much;
I find it still, when I have list to sleep;
Marry, before your ladyship, I grant,
She puts her tongue a little in her heart,
And chides with thinking.

Emili. You have little cause to say so. [doors.
Iago. Come on, come on; you are pictures out of Bells in your parlours, wild cats in your kitchecas,
Saints in your injuries, devils being offended.
Players in your housewifery, and housewives in your
Des. O, y'eye upon thee, slanderer! [beds.
Iago. Nay, it is true, or else I am a Turk;
You rise to play, and go to bed to work.
Emili. You shall not write my praise.

Iago. No, let me not.

Des. What would'st thou write of me, if thou should'st praise me?

Iago. O gentle lady, do not put me to't;
For I am nothing, if not critical.

Des. Come on, assay:—There's one gone to the Iago. Ay, madam. [harbour!

Des. I am not merry; but I do beguile
The thing I am, by seeming otherwise.

Come, how would'st thou praise me?

Iago. I am about it; but, indeed, my invention
Comes from my pate, as birdlime does from fierce
It plucks out brains and all: But my muse labours,
And thus she is delivered.

If she be fair and wise,—fairness, and wit,
The one's for use, the other useth it.

Des. Well prais'd! How if she be black and witty?

Iago. If she be black, and thereto have a wit,
She'll find a white that shall her blackness fit.

Des. Worse and worse.

Emili. How, if fair and foolish?

Iago. She never yet was foolish that was fair;
For even her folly help'd her to an heir.

Des. These are old food paradoxes, to make fools
Laugh i'the alcove. What unsalable praise hast thou
For her that's foul and foolish?

Iago. There's none so foul, and foolish thereunto,
But does foul pranks which fair and wise ones do.

Des. O heavy ignorance!—thou praises the worst.
But what praise could'st thou bestow on a deserving woman indeed? one, that, in the authority of her merit, did justly put on the vouch of very malice itself?

Iago. She that was ever fair, and never proud,
Had tongue at will, and yet was never loud;
Never lack'd gold, and yet went never gay;
Fled from her wish, and yet said,—now I may,
She that, being aegur'd, her revenge being nigh,
Bade her wrong stay, and her displeasure fly;
She that in wisdom never was so frail,
To change the eold's head for the salmon's tail,
That she could think, and ne'er discourse her mind,
See suitors following, and not look behind;
She was a wight,—if ever such wight were.—

Des. Do what?

Iago. To suckle fools, and chronicle small beer.

Des. O most lame and impotent conclusion!—Do not learn of him, Emilia, though he be thy husband.
—How say you, Cassio? is he not a most profane and liberal counsellor?

Cas. He speaks home, madam; you may relish him more in the soldier, than in the scholar.

Iago. [aside] He takes her by the palm: Ay, well said, whether with as little word as this, will I ensnare as great a fly as Cassio. Ay, smile upon her, do; I will gie thee in thine own curstship. You say true; 'tis so, indeed: if such tricks as these strip you out of your lieutenantcy, it had been better you had not kissed your three fingers so oft, which now again you are most apt to play the sir in. Very good;
well kissed! an excellent courtesy! 'tis so, indeed.
Yet again your fingers to your lips would, they were yester-pipes for your sake!—[Trumpet. The Moor, I know his trumpet.

Cas. 'Tis truly so.

Des. Let's meet him, and receive him.

Cas. Lo, where he comes!

Enter Othello, and Attendants.

Oth. O my fair warrior!—My dear Othello?

Des. It gives me wonder great as my content,
To see you here before me. O my soul's joy!
If after every tempest come such calms,
May she winds blow till they have waken'd death!
And let the labouring bark climb hills of seas,
Olympus-high: and deck again as low
As hell's from heaven! If it were now to die,
'Twere now to be most happy; for, I fear,
My soul hath her content so absolute,
That not another comfort like to this
ACT II.—SCENE II.

Iago. Sir, he is rash, and very sudden in cholcr; and, haply, with his truceon may strike at you: Provokc him, that he may see, for even out of that, will I cause these of Cyprus to mutiny, whose qualification shall come into no truc taste again, but by the displanting of Cassio. So shall you nave a shorter journey to your desires, by the means I shall then have to prefer them; and the impediment most profitably removed, without the which there were 'no expectation of our prosperity.

Rod. I will do this, if I can bring it to any opportunity.

Iago. I warrant thee. Meet me by and by at the citadel. I must fetch his necessaries ashore.

Farwell.

Rod. Adieu. [Exit Iago. That Cassio loves her, I do well believe it; That she loves him, 'tis not, and of great credit: The Moor's but in regard that I, hot, - Is of a constant, loving, noble nature; And, I dare think, he'll prove to Desdemona A most dear husband. Now I do love her too: Not out of absolute lust, (though, peradventure I stand accountable for as great a sin,) But partly led to diet my revenge, For that I do suspect the lusty Moor Hath leaped into my seat: the thought whereof Doth, like a poisonous mineral, gnaw my inwards; And nothing can or shall content my soul, Till I am even with him, wife for wife; Or, failing so, yet that I put the Moor At least into a jealousy so strong That judgment cannot cure, Which thing to do, — If this poor trash of Venice's treasure, For his quick hunting, stand the putting on, I'll have our Michael Cassio on the hip: Abuse him to the Moor in the rank garb, — For I fear Cassio with my night-cap too: Make the Moor thank me, love me, and reward me, For making him egregiously an ass, And practicing upon his peace and quiet Even to madness. 'Tis here, but yet confus'd; Knavery's plain face is never seen, till us'd. [Exit Iago.]

SEClE II.—A Street.

Enter a Herald, with a proclamation:

People following

Her. It is Othello's pleasure, our noble and valiant general, that, upon certain tidings now arrived, importing the mere perdition of the Turkish fleet, every man put himself into triumph; some to dance, some to make bonfires, each man to what sport and revels his addiction leads him; for, besides these beneficial news, it is the celebration of his supper. So much was his pleasure should be proclaimed. All offices are open; and there is full liberty of feasting, from this present hour of five, till the bell hath told eleven.
Heaven bless the isle of Cyprus, and our noble general, Othello. [Exeunt]

SCENE III.—A Hall in the Castle.

Enter Othello, Desdemona, Cassio, and Attendants.

Oth. Good Michael, look you to the guard to-night. Let's teach ourselves that honourable stop, Not to out-sport discretion.

Cas. Iago hath direction what to do; But, notwithstanding, with my personal eye Will I look to't.

Oth. Iago is most honest.

Michael, good night. To-morrow, with our earliest, Let me have speech with you. — Come, my dear love, The purchase made, the fruits are to ensue; That profit's yet to come 'twixt me and you.—

Good night. [Exeunt Oth., Des., and Cassio, and Attend.]

Enter Iago.

Cas. Welcome, Iago! We must to the watch.

Iago. Not this hour, lieutenant; 'tis not yet ten o'clock: Our general cast us thus early, for the love of his Desdemona; whom let us not therefore blame; he hath not yet made wanton the night with her: and she is sport for Jove.

Cas. She's a most exquisite lady.

Iago. And, I'll warrant her, full of game.

Cas. Indeed, she is a most fresh and delicate creature.

Iago. What an eye she has! methinks it sounds a parley of provocation.

Cas. An inviting eye; and yet methinks right modest.

Iago. And, when she speaks, is it not an alarm to love?

Cas. She is, indeed, perfection.

Iago. Well, happiness to their sheets! Come, lieutenant, I have a stoup of wine: and here without are a brace of Cyprus gallants, that would fain have a measure to the health of the black Othello.

Cas. Not to-night, good Iago! I have very poor and unhappy brains for drinking: I could well wish courtesy would invent some other custom of entertainment.

Iago. O, they are our friends; but one cup; I'll drink for you.

Cas. I have drunk but one cup to-night, and that was craptly qualified too, and, behold, what innovation it makes here: I am unfortunate in the infirmity, and dare not task my weakness with any more.

Iago. What, man! 'tis a night of revels; the gallants desire it.

Cas. Where are they?

Iago. Here at the door; I pray you call them in.

Cas. I'll do it; but it disliketh me. [Exit Cassio.

Iago. If I can fasten but one cup upon him, With that which he hath drank to-night already, He'll be as full of quarrel and offence [derigo, As my young mistress' dog. Now, my sick fool, No whom love has turn'd almost the wrong side outward, To Desdemona hath to-night carouse'd Potations pottle deep; and he's to watch: Three lads of Cyprus,—noble swelling spirits, That hold their honours in a wary distance, The very elements of this warlike isle,— Have I to-night fluster'd with flowing cups, And they watch too. Now, 'mongst this flock of drunkards, Am I to put our Cassio in some action That may offend the isle:—But here they come:

If consequence do but approve my dream, My boat sails freely, both with wind and stream.

Re-enter Cassio, with him Montano, and Gentlemen.

Cas. 'Fore heaven, they have given me a rouse already.

Mon. Good faith, a little one; not past a pint, as I am a soldier.

Iago. Some wine, ho!

And let me the canakin clink, clink; [Sings.

And let me the canakin clink:

A soldier's a man;

A life's but a span;

Why then let a soldier drink.

Some wine, boys! [Wine brought in.

Cas. 'Fore heaven, an excellent song.

Iago. I learned it in England, where (indeed) they are most potent in potting: your Dane, your German, and your swag-bellied Hollander,—Drink, ho!—are nothing to your English.

Cas. Is your Englishman so expert in his drinking?

Iago. Why, he drinks you, with faculty, your Dane dead drunk; he sweats not to overthrow your Almain; he gives your Hollander a vomit, ere the next bottle can be filled.

Cas. To the health of our general.

Mon. I am for it, lieutenant; and I'll do you justice.

Iago. O sweet England!

King Stephen was a worthy peer; His breeches cost him but a crown; He held them sixpence all too dear, With that he call'd the tailor—town.

He was a wight of high renown, And thou art but of low degree: 'Tis pride that pulls the country down, Then take thine auld cloak about thee.

Some wine, ho!

Cas. Why, this is a more exquisite song than the other.

Iago. Will you hear it again?

Cas. No; for I hold him to be unworthy of his place, that does those things. —Well, —Heaven's above all; and there be souls that must be saved, and there be souls must not be saved.

Iago. It's true, good lieutenant.

Cas. For mine own part,—no offence to the general, nor any man of quality,—I hope to be saved.

Iago. And so do I too, lieutenant.

Cas. Ay, but, by your leave, not before me; the lieutenant is to be saved before the ancient. Let's have no more of this; let's to our affairs. —Forgive us our sins!—Gentlemen, let's look to our business. Do not think, gentlemen, I am drunk; this is my ancient; this is my right hand, and this is my left hand: —I am not drunk now; I can stand well enough, and speak well enough. [Drinks.

Iago. And so drink well.

Cas. Why, very well, then: you must not think then that I am drunk. [Exit.

Mon. To the platform, masters; come, let's set the watch.

Iago. You see this fellow, that is gone before: —He is a soldier, fit to stand by Cassar And give direction: and do but see his vice; 'Tis to his virtue a just equinox,
The one as long as the other: 'tis pity of him. I fear, the trust Othello puts him in,
On some odd time of his infirmity,
Will shake this island.

Mon. But is he often thus?

Iago. 'Tis evermore the prologue to his sleep:
He'll watch the horologe a double set,
If drink rock not his cradle.

Mon. It were well,
The general were put in mind of it.
Perhaps, he sees it not; or his good nature
Prizes the virtue that appears in Cassio,
And looks not on his evils; Is not this true?

Enter Roderigo.

Iago. How now, Roderigo? [Aside]
I pray you, after the lieutenant; go. [Exit Rod. Mon. And 'tis great pity, that the noble Moor
Should hazard such a place, as his own second,
With one of an ingrained infiniteness:
It were an honest action, to say
So to the Moor.

Iago. Not I, for this fair island:
I do love Cassio well; and would do much
To cure him of this evil. But how! what noise? [Cry within.—Help! help!]

Re-enter Cassio, driving in Roderigo.

Cas. You rogue! you rascal!

Mon. What's the matter, lieutenant?

Cas. A knave!—teach me my duty!
I'll beat him in a town into a twigg'd bottle.

Rod. Beat me! [Striking Rod.]

Mon. Nay, good lieutenant;—[Staying him]
I pray you, sir, hold your hand.

Cas. Let me go, sir,
Or I'll knock you o'er the mazzard.

Mon. Come, come, you're drunk. [They fight.]

Iago. Away, I say! go out, and cry—a mutiny.

[Aside to Rod., who goes out]
Nay, good lieutenant,—alas, gentlemen,—
Help, ho!—Lieutenant,—sir,—Montano,—sir;—
Help masters!—Here's a goodly watch, indeed! [Bell rings.]

Who's that who rings the bell?—Diablo, ho! The town will rise: God's will, lieutenant! hold you;
You shall be shamed for ever.

Enter Othello, and Attendants.

Oth. What is the matter here?

Mon. I bleed still, I am hurt to the death;—he dies.

Oth. Hold, for your lives.

Iago. Hold, hold, lieutenant,—sir, Montano,—gentlemen,—

— Have you forgot all sense of place and duty?
Hold, hold! the general speaks to you; hold, for shame!—

Oth. Why, how now, ho! from whence arisest this thing?
Are we turn'd Turks; and to ourselves do that,
Which heaven hath forbid the Ottomites?
For Christian shame, put by this barbarous brawl:—
He that stirs next to carve for his own rage,
Holds his soul light; he dies upon his motion.—
Silence that dreadful bell, it frights the idle
From her propriety.—What is the matter, masters?—

Honest Iago, that look'st dead with grieving,
Speak, who began this? on thy love, I charge thee.

Iago. I do not know;—tried all but now, even now,
In quarter, and in terms like bride and groom
Devestings them for bed: and then, but now,
(As if some planet had unwitted men,) Swords out, and titling one at other's breast,
In opposition bloody. I cannot speak

Any beginning to this peevish odds:
And 'would in action glorious I had lost
These legs, that brought me to a part of it!—

Oth. How comes it, Michael, you are thus forgot
Cas. I pray you, pardon me, I cannot speak.

Oth. Worthy Montano, you were wont be civil;
The gravity and stillness of your youth,
The world hath noted, and your name is great
In mouths of wisest censure;—What's the matter,
That you unplace your reputation thus,
And spend your rich opinion, for the same
Of a night-brawler? give me answer to it.

Mon. Worthy Othello, I am hurt to danger;
Your officer, Iago, can inform you—
While I spare speech; which something now offends
Of all that I do know: nor know I aught [me;—
By me that's said or done amiss this night;
Unless self-charity be sometime a vice;
And to defend ourselves it be a sin,
When violence assails us.

Oth. Now, by heaven, my blood begins my safer guide to rule;
And passion having been judgment collid'd,
Assays to lead the way: If I once stir,
Or do but lift this arm, the best of you
Shall sink in my rebuke. Give me to know
How this foul rout began, who set it on;
And he that is approv'd in this offence,
Though he had twain'd with me, both at a birth,
Shall lose his life in it:—What's the matter?
Yet wild, the people's hearts brimful of fear,
To manage private and domestic quarrel,
In night, and on the court and guard of safety!
'Tis monstrous,—Iago, who began it?
Mon. If partially affraid, or leag'd in office,
Thou dost deliver more or less than truth,
Thou art no soldier.

Touch me not so near:—

Iago. I had rather have this tongue cut from my mouth,
Than it should do offence to Michael Cassio;
Yet, I persuade myself, to speak the truth
Shall nothing wrong him. Thus it is, general.
Montano and myself being in speech,
There comes a fellow, crying out for help;
And Cassio, follow'd this ha'perd sword,
To execute upon him: Sir, this gentleman
Steps in to Cassio, and entreats his peace;
Myself the crying fellow did pursue,
Lest, by his clamour, (as it so fell out,)—
The town might fall in fright: he, swift of foot,
Outran my purpose; and I return'd the rather
For that I heard the clink and fall of swords,
And Cassio high in oath:—which, till to-night,
I ne'er might say before: When I came back,
(For this was brief,) I found them close together,
At blow, and thrust; even as again they were,
When you yourself did part them.

More of this matter can I not report:—
But men are men: the best sometimes forget:—
Though Cassio did somewhat wrong to him,
As men in rage strike those that wish them best,—
Yet, surely Cassio, I believe, receiv'd,
From him that fled, some strange indignity,
Which patience could not pass.

Oth. I know, Iago, Thy honesty and love doth mine this matter,
Making it light to Cassio;—Cassio, I love thee;
But never more be officer of mine.—

Enter Desdemona, attended.

Look, if my gentle love be not rais'd up;—
I'll make thee an example.
Des. What's the matter, dear? Oth. All's well now, sweeting; come away to bed. Sir, for your hurts, myself will be your surgeon: lead him off. To Montano, who is led off.

Iago, look with care about the town; and silence those whom this vile brawl distracted.—Come, Desdemona; 'tis the soldier's life, to have their bally slumbers wak'd with strife.

Even all but Iago and Cassio.

Iago. What, are you hurt, lieutenant? Cas. Ay, past all surgery. Iago. Marry, heaven forbid! Cas. Reputation, reputation, reputation! O, I have lost my reputation! I have lost the immortal part, sir, of myself; and what remains is beastly. My reputation, Iago, my reputation.

Iago. As I am an honest man, I thought you had received some bodily wound; there is more offence in that, than in reputation. Reputation is an idle and most false imposition; oft got without merit, and lost without deserving; you have lost no reputation at all, unless you repute yourself such a loser. What, man! there are ways to recover the general again; you are but now in his mood, a punishment more in policy than in malice; even so as one would beat his offenceless dog, to affright an imperious lion: sue to him again, and he is yours.

Cas. I will rather sue to be despised, than to deceive so good a commander, with so slight, so drunken, and so indiscreet an officer. Drunk? and speak parrot! and squabbly! swagger! swear! and discourse furious with one's own shadow? —O thou invisible spirit of wine, if thou hast no name to be known by, let us call thee — devil! Iago. What was it that you followed with your sword? What had he done to you? Cas. I know not. Iago. Is it possible? Cas. I remember a mass of things, but nothing distinctly; a quarrel, but nothing wherefore. —O, that men should put an enemy in their mouths to steal away their brains! that we should, with joy, revel, pleasure, and applause, transform ourselves into beasts!

Iago. Why, but you are now well enough: How came you thus recovered?

Iago. I hath pleased the devil, drunkenness, to give place to the devil, wrath: one unkindest look shows me another to me, I frankly despise myself.

Iago. Come, you are too severe a moriger: At the time, the place, and the condition of this country stands, I could heartily wish this had not befallen; but, since it is as it is, mend it for your own good.

Cas. I will ask him for my place again; he shall tell me, I am a dronkard! had I as many mouths as Hyperion, such an answer would stop them all. To be now a sensible man, by and by a fool, and presently a beast! O strange! —Every inordinate cup is unblesseid, and the ingredient is a devil.

Iago. Come, come, good wine is a good familiar creature, if it be well used; exclaim no more against it. And, good lieutenant, I think, you think I love you. Cas. I have well approved it, sir. —I drunk! Iago. Every man's living, may be drunk at some time, man. I'll tell you what you shall do. Our general's wife is now the general: —I may say so in this respect, for that he hath devoted and given up himself to the contemplation, mark, and denotement of her parts and graces:—confess yourself freely to her; importune her; she'll help to put you in your place again: she is of so free, so kind, so apt, so blessed a disposition, that she holds it a vice in her goodness, not to do more than she is requested: This broken joint, between you and her husband, entreat her to splinter; and, my fortunes against any lay worth naming, this crack of your love shall grow stronger than it was before.

Cas. You advise me well. Iago. I protest, in the sincerity of love, and honest kindness. Cass. I think it freely; and, betimes in the morning, I will beseech the virtuous Desdemona to undertake for me: I am desperate of my fortunes, if they check me here.

Iago. You are in the right. Good night, lieutenant; I must to the watch.

Cas. Good night, honest Iago. [Exit Cassio. Iago. And what's he then, that says, —I play the villain?

When this advice is free, I give, and honest, Probable to thinking, and (indeed) the course To win the Moor again? For 'tis most easy The inclining Desdemona to subdue In any honest suit; she's fram'd as fruitful As the free elements. And then for her To win the Moor,—were't to renounce his baptism, All seals and symbols of redeemed sin,— His soul is to ender't to her love.

That she may make, unmake, do what she lists, Even as her appetite shall play the god With his weak function. How am I then a villain, To counsel Cassio to this parallel course, Directly to his good? Divinity of hell! When devils will their blackest sins put on, They do suggest at first with heavenly shows, As I do now: For while this honest fool Flies Desdemona to repair his fortunes, And she for him plies strongly to the Moor, I'll pour this pestilence into his ear,— That she repeals him for her body's lust; And, by how much she strives to do him good, She shall undo her credit with the Moor. So will I turn her virtue into pitch; And out of her own goodness make the net, That shall ensnare them all. —How now, Rodrigo?

Enter Roderigo.

Rood. I do follow here in the chase, not like a hound that hunts, but one that fills up the ery. My money is almost spent; I have been to-night exceeding well employed; and, I think, the issue will be— I shall have so much experience for my pains: and so, with no money at all, and a little more wit, return to Venice.

Iago. How poor are they, that have not patience! —What wound did ever heal, but by degrees? Thou know'st, we work by wit, and not by witchcraft; And wit, that depends on dilatory time. Does't not go well? Cassio hath beaten thee, And thou, by that small hurt, hast cashier'd Cassio: Though other things grow fair against the sun, Yet fruits, that blossom first, will first be ripe: Content thyself a while,—By the mass, 'tis morning; Pleasure, and action, make the hours seem short.— Retire thee; a place where the art billeted Away, I say. thou shalt know more hereafter: Nay, get thee gone. [Exit Rood.] Two things are to be done,—

My wife must move for Cassio to her mistress; I'll set her on; Myself, the while, to draw the Moor apart, And bring him jump when he may Cassio find Soliciting his wife: —Ay, that's the way; Dull not device by coldness and delay.

[Exit.]
ACT III.—SCENE I.

Enter Cassio, and some Musicians.
Cas. Masters, play here, I will content your pains,
Something that's brief; and bid—good-morrow, gen-

[Music.

Enter Clown.
Cl. Why, masters, have your instruments been at Naples, that they speak it the nose thus?
[1 Mas. How, sir, how!
Cl. Are these, I pray you, called wind instruments?
[1 Mas. Ay, marry, are they, sir.
Cl. O, thereby hangs a tail.
[1 Mas. Whereby hangs a tale, sir?
Cl. Marry, sir, by many a wind instrument that I know. But, masters, here's money for you; and the general so likes your music, that he desires you,
of all loves, to make no more noise with it.
[1 Mas. Well, sir, we will not.
Cl. If you have any music that may not be heard, to't again: but, as they say, to hear music, the general does not greatly care.
[1 Mas. We have none such, sir.
Cl. Then put up your pipes in your bag, for I'll away: Go; vanish into air; away. [Ex. Musicians.
Cas. Dost thou hear, my honest friend? Iago.
Cl. No, I hear not your honest friend, I hear you. Iago.
Cas. Prythee, keep up thy quilllets. There's a poor piece of gold for thee: if the gentlewoman that attends the general's wife, be stirring, tell her, there's one Cassio entertains her a little favour of speech: Wilt thou do this?
Cl. She is stirring, sir; if she will stir hither, I shall seem to notify unto her. [Exit.

Enter Iago.
Cas. Do, good my friend.—In happy time, Iago.
Iago. You have not been a-bed then?
Cas. Why, no; the day had broke
Before we parted. I have made bold, Iago,
To send in to your wife: My suit to her
Is, that she will to virtuous Desdemona
Procure me some access.
Iago. I'll send her to you presently;
And I'll devise a mean to draw the Moor
Out of the way, that your converse and business
May be more free. [Exit.
Cas. I humbly thank you for't. I never knew
A Florentine more kind and honest.

Enter Emilia.
Emil. Good morrow, good lieutenant: I am sorry
For your displeasure; but all will soon be well.
The general, and his wife are talking of it;
And she speaks for you stoutly: The Moor replies,
That he, you hurt, is of great fame in Cyprus,
And great affinities; and that, in wholesome wisdom,
He might not but refuse you: but, he protests, he loves
And needs no other suitor, but his likings; [you
To take the safest occasion by the front,
To bring you in again.
Cas. Yet, I beseech you,—
If you think fit, or that it may be done,—
Give me advantage of some brief discourse
With Desdemona alone.
Emil. Pray you, come in;
I will bestow you where you shall have time
To speak your bosom freely.
Cas. I am much bound to you. [Exeunt.

SCENE II.—A Room in the Castle.

Enter Othello, Iago, and Gentlemen.
Oth. These letters give, Iago, to the pilot;
And, by him, do my duties to the state;
That done, I will be walking on the works,
Repair there to me.
Iago. Well, my good lord, I'll do't.
Oth. This fortification, gentlemen,—shall we see it?
Gent. We'll wait upon your lordship. [Exeunt.

SCENE III.—Before the Castle.

Enter Desdemona, Cassio, and Emilia.
Des. Be thou assur'd, good Cassio, I will do
All my abilities in thy behalf.
Emil. Good madam, do; I know, it grieves my
As if the case were his.
[husband,
Des. O, that's an honest fellow.—Do not doubt,
But I will have my lord and you again [Cassio,
As freely as you were.
Cas. Bounteous madam, Whatever shall become of Michael Cassio,
He's never any thing but your true servant.
Des. O, sir, I thank you: You do love my lord:
You have known him long; and be you well assur'd,
He shall in strangeness stand no further off
Than in a politic distance.
Cas. Ay, but, lady,
That policy may either last so long,
Or feed upon such nice and waterish diet,
Or breed itself so out of circumstance,
That, I being absent, and my place supplied,
My general will forget my love and service.
Des. Do not doubt that; before Emilia here,
I give thee warrant of thy place; assure thee,
If I do vow a friendship, I'll perform it
To the last article: my lord shall never rest;
I'll watch him tame, and talk him out of patience;
His bed shall seem a school, his board a shrift;
I'll intermingle every thing he does
With Cassio's suit: Therefore be merry, Cassio;
For thy solicitor shall rather die,
Than give thy cause away.

Enter Othello and Iago, at a distance.
Emil. Madam, here comes
My lord.
Cas. Madam, I'll take my leave.
Des. Why, stay,
And hear me speak.
Cas. Madam, not now; I am very ill at ease,
Unfit for mine own purposes.
Des. Do your discretion.
[Exit Cassio.
Iago. Ha! I like not that.
Iago. Nothing, my lord: or if—I know not what.
Oth. Was not that Cassio, parted from my wife?
Iago. Cassio, my lord? No, sure, I cannot think it
That he would steal away so guilty-like,
Seeing you coming.
Oth. I do believe 'twas he.
Des. How now, my lord!
I have been talking with a suitor here,
A man that languishes in your displeasure.
Oth. Who is't you mean?
Des. Why, your lieutenant Cassio. Good my lord
If I have any grace, or power to move you,
His present reconciliation take;
For, if he be not one that truly loves you,
That errs in ignorance, and not in cunning,
I have no judgment in an honest face:
I prythee, call him back.

Oth. Went he hence now?

Des. Ay, sooth; so humbled,
That he hath left part of his grief with me;
I suffer with him. Good love, call him back.

Oth. Not now, sweet Desdemona; some other time.

Des. But shall it be shortly?

Oth. The sooner, sweet, for you.

Des. Shall it be to-night at supper?

Oth. No, not to-night.

Des. To-morrow dinner then?

Oth. I shall not dine at home;
I set the captains at the citadel.

Des. Why then, to-morrow night; or Tuesday morn;
Or Tuesday noon, or night; or Wednesday morn;
I pray thee, name the time; but let it not Exceed three days: in faith, he's pesterent;
And yet his trespass in our common reason,
(Save that, they say, the wars must make examples
Out of their best,) is not almost a fault
To incur a private check: When shall be come?
Tell me, Othello. I wonder in my soul,
What you could ask me, that I should deny,
Or stand so mannering on. What! Michael Cassio,
That came a wooing with you; and many a time,
When I have spoken of you disparagingly,
Hath ta'en your part; to have so much to do
To bring him in! Trust me, I could do much.

Oth. Prythee, no more: let him come when he will;
I will deny thee nothing:

Des. Shall I deny you? no: Farewell, my lord.

Oth. Farewell, my Desdemona: I will come to thee straight. [Exit]; you.

Des. Emilia, come:—Be it as your fancies teach:
What'er you be, I am obedient. (Exit, with Emilia.

Oth. Excellent wretch! Perdition catch my soul,
But I do love thee! and when I love thee not,
Chaos is come again.

Iago. My noble lord,—

Oth. What dost thou say, Iago?

Iago. Did Michael Cassio, when you woo'd my lady,
Know of your love?

Oth. He did, from first to last: Why dost thou ask?

Iago. But for a satisfaction of my thought;
No further harm.

Oth. Why of thy thought, Iago? [Her.

Iago. I did not think, he had been acquainted with

Oth. O, yes; and went between us very oft.

Iago. Indeed?

Oth. Indeed! ay, indeed:—Discern'st thou aught
In him not honest? [in that?

Iago. Honest, my lord?

Oth. Ay, honest.

Iago. My lord, for aught I know.

Oth. What dost thou think?

Iago. Think, my lord?

Oth. Think, my lord!

By heaven, he echoes me,
As if there were some monster in his thought [thing:
Too hideous to be shewn.—Thou dost mean some-

I heard thee say but now.—Thou lik'dst not that,
When Cassio left my wife; What did'st not like?
And, when I told thee,—he was of my counsel
In my whole course of wooing, thou cry'dst, Indeed?
And did'st contract and purse thy brow together,
As if thou then had'st shut up in thy brain
Some horrible conceit: if thou dost love me,
Shew me thy thought.

Iago. My lord, you know I love you.

Oth. I think thou dost;
And,—for I know thou art full of love and honesty,
And weigh'st thy words before thou giv'st them breath,
Therefore these steps of thine fright me the more:
For such things in a false disloyal knife,
Are tricks of custom; but, in a man that's just,
They are close denotements, working from the heart,
That passion cannot rule.

Iago. For Michael Cassio,—

I dare be sworn, I think that he is honest.

Oth. I think so too.

Iago. Men should be what they seem;
Or, those that be not, would they might seem none!

Oth. Certain, men should be what they seem.

Iago. Why then, I think, that Cassio is an honest man.

Oth. Nay, yet there's more in this:
I pray thee, speak to me as to thy thoughts,
As thou dost ruminate; and give thy worst of thoughts
The worst of words.

Iago. Good my lord, pardon me;
Though I am bound to every act of duty,
I am not bound to that all slaves are free to.
Utter my thoughts? Why, say, they are vile and false,
As where's that palace, whereunto foul things
Sometimes intrude not? who has a breast so pure,
But some uncleanly apprehensions
Keep leets, and law-days, and in session sit
With meditations lawful?

Oth. Thou dost conspire against thy friend, Iago,
If thou but think'st him wrong'd, and mak'st his ear
A stranger to thy thoughts.

Iago. I do beseech you,—
Though I perchance, am vicious in my guess,
As, I confess, it is my nature's plague
To spy into abuses; and, oft my jealousy
Shapes faults that are not; and entices thee
From one that so imperfectly conjects,
You'd take no notice; nor build yourself a trouble
Out of his scattering and unsure observance:—
It were not for your quiet, nor your good,
Nor for my manhood, honesty, or wisdom,
To let you know my thoughts.

Oth. What dost thou mean?

Iago. Good name, in man, and woman, dear my lord,
Is the immediate jewel of their souls: [nothing:
Who steals my purse, steals trash; 'tis something,
'Twas mine, 'tis his, and has been slave to thousands;
But he, that filches from me my good name,
Rob'st me of that, which not enriches him,
And makes me poor indeed.

Oth. By heaven, I'll know thy thought.

Iago. Thou cannot, if my heart were in your hand
Nor know not, whilst 'tis in my custody.

Oth. Ha!

Iago. O, beware, my lord, of jealousy;—
It is the green-eyed monster, which doth mock
The meat it feeds on: That cuckold lives in bliss,
Who,不曾 of his fate, loves not his wrangling;
But, O, what damned minutes tells he o'er;
Who dotes, yet doubts; suspects, yet strongly loves!

Oth. O misery!

Iago. Poor, and content, is rich, and rich enough;
But riches, faultless, is as poor as winter,
To him that ever fears he shall be poor:
Good heaven, the souls of all my tribe defend
From jealousy!

Oth. Why? why is this?

Think'st thou, I'd make a life of jealousy,
To follow still the changes of the moon
With fresh suspicions! No: to be once in doubt,
Is—once to be resolved: Exchange me for a goat,
When I shall turn the business of my soul
To such exsufflicate, and blown surmises,
Matching thy inference. 'Tis not to make me jealous,
To say—my wife is fair, feeds well, loves company,
In her of speech, gait, looks, plays, and dances well.
Where virtue is, these are more virtuous:
Nor from mine own weak merits will I draw
The smallest fear, or doubt of her revolt;
For she had eyes, and chose me: No, Iago;
I'll see, before I doubt; when I doubt, prove;
And, on the proof, there is no more but this,—
Away at once with love, or jealousy.

Iago. I am glad of this; for now I shall have reason
To shew the love and duty that I bear you
With franker spirit: therefore, as I am bound,
Receive it from me:—I speak not yet of proof.
Look to your wife; observe her well with Cassio—
Wear your eye—thus, not jealous, nor secure:
I would not have your free and noble nature,
Out of self-bounty, be abused; look to't;
I know our country disposition well;
In Venice they do let heaven see the pranks
They dare not shew their husbands; their best con-
Is—not to leave undone, but keep unknown. [sceene
Oth. Dost thou say so?

Iago. She did deceive her father, marrying you;
And, when she seemed to shake, and fear your looks,
She lov'd them most.

Oth. And so she did.

Iago. Why, go to, then.
She that so young, could give out such a seeming,
To seel her father's eyes up, close as oak,
He thought, 'twas witchcraft:—But I am much to
I humbly do beseech you of your pardon, [blame;
For too much loving you.

Oth. I am bound to thee for ever.
Iago. I see, this hath a little dash'd your spirits.

Oth. Not a jot, not a jot.

Iago. Trust me, I fear it has.
I hope, you will consider, what is spoke
Comes from my love:—But, I do see you mov'd:—
I am to pray you, not to strain my speech
To gesser issues, nor to larger reach,
Than to suspicion.

Oth. To suspicion.

Iago. I will not.

Iago. Should you do so, my lord,
My speech should fall into such vile success
As my thoughts aim not at. Cassio's my worthy friend:—
My lord, I see you are mov'd.

Oth. No, not much mov'd:—
I do not think but Desdemona's honest. [so! Iago.
Long live she so! and long live you to think
Oth. And yet, how nature erring from itself,—
Iago. Ay, there's the point:—As,—to be with hold
Not to affect many proposed matches, [you,
Of her own clime, complexion, and degree;
Whereeto, we see, in all things nature teads;
Foh! one may smell, in such, a will most rank,
Foul disproportion, thoughts unnatural.—
But, pardon me; I do not in position,
Distinctly speak of her: though I may fear,
Her will, recoiling to her better judgment,
May fall to match you with her country formas,
And (happily) repeat.

Oth. Farewell; farewell:
If more thou dost perceive, let me know more;
Set on thy wife to observe: Leave me, Iago.

Oth. Why did I marry?—This honest creature, doubtless,
See and knows more, much more, than he unfolds.

Iago. My lord, I would, I might entreat your honour
To scan this thing no further; leave it to time:
And though it be fit that Cassio have his place,
(For, sure, he fills it up to give ability,)
Yet, you please, to hint him off awhile,
You shall by that perceive him and his means:
Note, if your lady strain his entertainment
With any strong or vouchsient importunity;
Much will be seen in that. In the mean time,
Let me be thought too busy in my fears,
(As worthy cause I have, to fear—I am,) And hold her free, I do beseech your honour.

Oth. Fear not my government.

Iago. One more take my leave. [Exit.

Oth. This fellow o's of exceeding honesty,
And knows all qualities, with a learned spirit,
Of human dealings: if I do prove her haggard,
Though that her jesses were my dear heart-strings,
I'd whistle her off, and let her down the wind,
To prey at fortune. Haply, for I am black;
And have not those soft parts of conversation
That chamberers have:—Or, for I am dec'd
Into the vale of years;—yet that's not much;
She's gone; I am abus'd; and my relief
Must be—to loath her. O curse of marriage,
That we can call these delicate creatures ours,
And not their appetites! I had rather be a toad,
And live upon the vapours of a dungeon,
Than keep a corner in the thing I love,
For others' uses. Yet 'tis the plague of great ones;
Prerogativ'd are they less than the base;
'Tis destiny unshunnable, like death;
Even then this forged plague is fated to us,
When we do quicken. Desdemona comes.

Enter DESDEMONA and EMILIA.

If she be false, O, then heaven mocks itself!—
I'll not believe it.

Des. How now, my dear Othello?
Your dinner, and the generous islanders
By you invited, do attend your presence.

Oth. I am to blame.

Des. Why is your speech so faint? are you not well?
Oth. I have a pain upon my forehead here.

Des. Faith, that's with watching; 'twill away again:
Let me but bind it hard, within this hour
It will be well.

Oth. Your napkin is too little;

[He puts the watercloth from him, and it drops.
Let it alone. Come, I'll go in with you.

Des. I am very sorry that you are not well.

[Exit Oth. and Des.

Emil. I am glad I have found this napkin;
This was her first remembrance from the Moor:
My wayward husband hath a hundred times
Word'd me to steal it: but she so loves the token,
(For he could'rd her, she would doe keep it,) That she reserves it evermore about her,
To kiss, and talk to. I'll have the work 'ta'en out,
And give it Iago;

What he'll do with it, heaven knows, not I;
I nothing, but to please his fantasy.
Enter Iago.
Iago. How now! what do you here alone?

Emil. Do you not chide; I have a thing for you.
Iago. A thing for me!—it is a common thing.
Emil. Ha!
Iago. To have a foolish wife.
Emil. O, is that all? What will you give me now
For that same handkerchief?
Iago. What handkerchief?

Emil. Why, that, the Moor first gave to Desdemona;
That which so often you did bid me steal.
Iago. Hast stolen it from her?
Emil. No, faith; she let it drop by negligence;
And to the advantage, I, being here, took't up.
Look, here it is.

Iago. A good wench; give it me.
Emil. What will you do with it, that you have been
To have me fitch it?
Iago. What! why's that to you? [Snatching it.
Emil. If it be not for some purpose of import,
Give me it again: Poor lady! she'll run mad,
When she shall lack it.
Iago. Be not you known of; I have use for it.
Go, leave me.

Iago. I will Cassio's lodging lose this napkin,
And let him find it: frizzes, light as air,
Are to the jealous, confirmations strong
As proofs of holy writ. This may do something.
The Moor already changes with my poison:—
Dangerous conceits are, in their natures, poisons,
Which, at the first, are scarce found to distaste;
But, with a little act upon the blood,
Burn like the mines of sulphur.—I did say so:—

Enter Othello.

Look, where he comes! Not poppy, nor mandragora,
Nor all the drowsy syrups of the world,
Shall ever medicine thee to that sweet sleep
Which thou ow'st yesterday.

Oth. Ha! ha! ha! false to me?
To me?
Iago. Why, how now, general? so more of that?
Oth. Avaunt! be gone! thou hast set me on the
I swear, 'tis better to be much abus'd, [rack—
Than put to know a little.
Iago. How now, my lord?
Oth. What sense had I of her stolen hours of lust?
I saw it not, thought it not, it harm'd not me:
I slept the next night well, was free and merry;
I found not Cassio's kisses on her lips:
He that is robb'd, not wanting what is stolen,
Let him not know it, and he's not robb'd at all.
Iago. I am sorry to hear this.
Oth. I had been happy, if the general camp,
Pirates and all, had tasted her sweet body,
So I had nothing known: O now, for ever,
Farewell the tranquill mind! farewell content!
Farewell the plumed troop, and the big wars,
That make ambition virtue! O, farewell!
Farewell the neighing steed, and the shrill trumpet,
The spirit-stirring drum, the ear-piercing fife,
The royal banner, and all quality,
Pride, pomp, and circumstance of glorious war!
And O you mortal engines, whose rude threats
The immortal Jove's dread clamours counterfeit,
Farewell! Othello's occupation's gone!
Iago. Is it possible!—My lord,—
Oth. Villain, be sure thou prove my love a whore,
Be sure of it; give me the peacular proof;
[Taking him by the throat.
Or, by the worth of mine eternal soul,
Thou hast been better have been born a dog,
Than answer my wak'd wrath.
Iago. Is it come to this?
Oth. Make me to see it; or (at the least) so prove it
That the probation bear no hinge, nor loop,
To hang a doubt on: or, woe upon thy life!
Iago. My noble lord,—
Oth. If thou dost slander her, and torture me,
Never pray more: abandon all remorse;
On horror's head horrors accumulate:
Do deeds to make heaven weep, all earth amaz'd,
For nothing canst thou to damnation add,
Greater than that.
Iago. O grace! O heaven defend me!
Are you a man? have you a soul, or sense?—
God be wi'you; take mine office.—O wretched fool,
That liv'st to make thing honesty a vice!—
O monstrous world! Take note, take note, O world,
To be direct and honest, is not safe.—
I thank you for this profit; and, from hence,
I'll love no friend, since love breeds such offence.
Oth. Nay, stay;—Thou shouldst be honest.
Iago. I should be wise; for honesty's a fool,
And loses that it works for.
Oth. By the world,
I think my wife be honest, and think she is not;
I think that thou art just, and think thou art not;
I'll have some proof: Her name, that was as fresh
As Dian's visage, is now begrim'd and black
As mine own face.—If there be cords, or knives,
Poison, or fire, or suffocating streams,
I'll not endure it.—Would, I were satisfied!
Iago. I see, sir, you are eaten up with passion:
I do repent me, that I put it to you.
You would be satisfied?
Oth. Would? Bay, I will.
Iago. And may: But, how? how satisfied, my lord?
Would you, the supervisor, grossly gape on?
Behold her tupped?—
Oth. Death and damnation! O!
Iago. It were a tedious difficulty, I think,
To bring them to that prospect: Damn them then,
If ever mortal eyes do see them bolster,
More than their own! What then? how then?
What shall I say? Where's satisfaction?
It is impossible, you should see this,
Were they as prime as goats, as hot as monkeys,
As salt as wolves in pride, and fools as gross
As ignorance made drunk. But yet, I say,
If imputation, and strong circumstances,—
Which lead directly to the door of truth,—
Will give you satisfaction, you may have it.
Oth. Give me a living reason she's disloyal.
Iago. I do not like the office:
But, sith I am enter'd in this cause so far,—
Prick'd to it by foolish honesty and love,—
I will go on. I lay with Cassio lately;
And, being troubled with a raging tooth,
I could not sleep.
There are a kind of men so loose of soul,
That in their sleeps will mutter their affairs;
One of this kind is Cassio:
In sleep I heard him say—Sweet Desdemona,
Let us be wary, let us hide our loves!
And then, sir, would he gripe, and wring my hand,
Cry,—O, sweet creature! and then kiss me hard,
As if he pluck'd up kisses by the roots,
That grew upon my lips: then laid his leg
Over my thigh, and sig'd, and kiss'd; and then
Cry'd,—Cursed fate! that gave thee to the Moor!
Oth. O monstrous! monstrous!
Iago. Nay, this was but his dream,
ACT III.—SCENE IV.

Oth. But this denoted a foregone conclusion; this is a shrewd doubt, though it be but a dream.

Iago. And this may help to thicken other proofs, that do demonstrate this thing.

Oth. I'll bear her all to pieces.

Iago. Nay, but be wise: yet we see nothing done; she may be honest yet. Tell me but this,—Have you not sometimes seen a handkerchief, spotted with strawberries, in your wife's hand?

Oth. I gave her such a one; 'twas my first gift.

Iago. I know not that but such a handkerchief, (I am sure it was your wife's) did I to-day see Cassio wipe his beard with.

Oth. If it be that,—

Iago. If it be that, or any that was her's, it speaks against her, with the other proofs.

Oth. O, that the slave had forty thousand lives; one is too poor, too weak for my revenge! Now do I see 'tis true.—Look here, Iago; All my fond love thus I do blow to heaven: 'Tis gone.

Arise, black vengeance, from thy hollow cell! Yield up, O love, thy crown, and hearted throne, To tyrannous hate! swell, bosom, with thy fraught, For 'tis of aspics' tongues! Iago. Pray, be content.

Oth. O, blood, Iago, blood!

Iago. Patience, I say; your mind, perhaps, may change.

Oth. Never, Iago. Like to the Pontic sea, Whose levy current and compellative course Ne'er feels retiring ebb, but keeps due on To the Proponentick and the Hellespont; Even so my bloody thoughts, with violent pace, Shall ne'er look back, ne'er ebb to humble love, Till that a capable and wide revenge Swallow them up.—Now, by your' marble heaven, In the due reverence of a sacred vow [Kneels.] I here engage my words. Iago. Witness, you ever-burning lights above! You elements that clip us round about! Witness, that here Iago doth give up The execution of his wit, hands, heart, To wrong'd Othello's service! let him command, And to obey shall be in me remorse, What worldly work soever. Iago. I greet thee true, Not with vain thanks, but with acceptance bounteous, And will upon the instant put thee to't: Within these three days let me hear thee say, That Cassio's not alive. Iago. My friend is dead; 'tis done, at your request; But let her live.

Oth. Damn her, lewd minx! O, damn her! Come, go with me apart; I will withdraw, To furnish me with some swift means of death For the fair devil. Now art thou my lieutenant. Iago. I am your own for ever. [Exeunt.

SCENE IV.—The same.

Enter Desdemona, Emilia, and Clown.

Des. Do you know, sirrah, where lieutenant Cassio
Clo. I dare not say, he lies any where. [Dies?

Des. Why, man?

Clo. He is a soldier; and for me to say a soldier lies, is stabbing.

Des. Go to; Where lodges he?

Clo. To tell you where he lodges, is to tell you where I lie.

Clo. Can any thing be made of this?

Oth. I know not where he lodges; and for me to devise a lodging, and say—he lies here, or he lies there, were to lie in my own throat.

Des. Can you inquire him out, and be edified by report?

Oth. I will catechize the world for him; that is, make questions, and by them answer.

Des. Seek him, bid him come hither; tell him, I have moved my lord in his behalf, and hope, all will be well.

Clo. To do this, is within the compass of man's wit; and therefore I will attempt the doing it. [Exit. Des. Where should I lose that handkerchief, Emilia? I have it not, madam. [Emilia? Des. Believe me, I had rather have lost my purse Full of crusadoes. And, but my noble Moor Is true of mind, and made of no such baseness As jealous creatures are, it were enough To put him to ill thinking. Emilia. Is he not jealous? Des. Who, he? I think, the sun, where he was born, Drew all such humour from him. Emilia. Look, where he comes. Des. I will not leave him now, till Cassio Be call'd to him.—How is it with you, my lord?

Enter Othello.

Oth. Well, my good lady,—[Aside.] O, hardleas How do you, Desdemona? [to dissemble?] Des. Well, my good lord. [lady. Oth. Give me your hand: This hand is moist, my Des. It yet has felt no age, nor known no sorrow. Oth. This argues fruitfulness, and liberal heart; Hot, hot, and moist: This hand of yours requires A sequester from liberty, fasting and prayer, Much castigato and exercise devout: For here's a young and sweating devil here, That commonly rebels. 'Tis a good hand, A frank one. Des. You may, indeed, say so; For 'twas that hand that gave away my heart. Oth. A liberal hand: The hearts, of old, gave But one; a modern carder is—hands, not hearts. [Haeds. Des. I cannot speak or taste. Come now your po- Oth. What promise, chuck? [Mis- Des. I have sent to bid Cassio come speak with you. Oth. I have a salt and swollen rheum offends me; Lend me thy handkerchief.

Here, my lord

That is a fault: This handkerchief Did an Egyptian to my mother give; She was a charmer, and could almost read [it. The thoughts of people; she told her, while she kept Twould make her amiable, and subdue my father Entirely to her love; but if she lost it, Or made a gift of it, my father's eye Should hold her loathly, and his spirits should hunt Her new favories: She, dying, gave it me; And bid me, when my fate would have me wife, To give it her. I did so: and take heed of, Make it a darling like your, precious eye; To lose or giv' away, was such perdurance, As nothing else could match.

Des. Is it possible?

Oth. 'Tis true: There's magic in the web of it. A sibyl, that had number'd in the world The sun to make two hundred compasses,
In her prophetic fury sew'd the work:
The worms were hallow'd, that did breed the silk;
And it was dy'd in mummy, which the skilful
Conserv'd of madmen's hearts.

Oth. Indeed! is't true?

Otth. Then 'would to heaven, that I had never seen
Oth. Ha! wherefore?

Otth. Why do you speak so startlingly and rash?
Oth. Is't lost? is't gone? speak, is it out of the Otth. Heaven bless us!

Otth. Say you?

Oth. It is not lost; but what an if it were!
Oth. Ha!

Oth. I say, it is not lost.

Otth. Fetch't, let me see it.

Otth. Why, so I can, sir, but I will not now;
This is a trick, to put me from my suit;
I pray, let Cassio be receiv'd again.
Otth. Fetch me that handkerchief: my mind mis-

Otth. Come, come;

Otth. You'll never meet a more sufficient man.

Oth. The handkerchief,——

Oth. I pray, talk of Cassio.

Oth. The handkerchief,——

Oth. A man that, all his time,
Hath founded his good fortune on your love,
Still dangers with you;——

Otth. The handkerchief,——

Otth. In sooth,
You are to blame.

Oth. Away!

[Exit Othello.

Emil. Is not this man jealous?

Otth. I never saw this before.
Sure, there's some wonder in this handkerchief;
I am most unhappy in the loss of it.

Emil. 'Tis not a year or two shews us a man;
They are all but stomachs, and we all but food;
They eat us hungerly, and when they are full,
They belch us. Look! Cassio, and my husband.

Enter Iago and Cassio.

Iago. There is no other way; 'tis she must do't;
And, lo, the happiness! go, and importune her.

Otth. How now, good Cassio? what's the news
with you?

Cas. Madam, my former suit: I do beseech you,
That, by your virtuous means, I may again
Exist, and be a member of his love;
Whom I, with all the duty of my heart,
Entirely honour; I would not be delay'd;
If my offence be of such mortal kind,
That neither service past, nor present sorrows,
Nor purpos'd merit in futurity,
Can ransome me into his love again,
But to know so must be my benefit;
So shall I clothe me in a fore'd content,
And shut myself up in some other course,
To fortune's aims.

Otth. Alas! thrice-gentle Cassio,
My advocacy is not now in tune;
My lord is not my lord; nor should I know him,
Were he in favour, as in humour, alter'd.
So help me, every spirit sanctified,
As I have spoken for you all my best,
And stood within the blank of his displeasure,
For my see speech! You must a while be patient:
What I can do, I will; and more I will,
Than for myself I dare: let that suffice you.

Iago. Is my lord angry?

Emil.

He went hence but now,
And, certainly, in strange unquietness.

Iago. Can he be angry? I have seen the cannon,
When it hath blown his ranks into the air;
And, like the devil, from his very arm
Ful'd his own brother:——And can he be angry?
Something of moment, then: I will go meet him;
There's matter in't indeed, if he be angry,

Des. I pr'ythee, do so.—Something, sure, of state.——

[Exit Iago.

Either from Venice; or some unhatch'd practice,
Made demonstrable here in Cyprus to him.——
Hath paddled his clear spirit: and, in such cases,
Men's natures wrangle with inferior things,
Though great ones are their object, 'tis even so;
For let our finger acie, and it indues
Our other healthful members ev't to that sense
Of pain: Nay, we must think, meo are not gods;
Nor of them look for such observances
As fit the bridal.—Pashrew me much, Emilia,
I was (unhandsome warrior as I am,)
Arranging his unkindness with my soul;
But now I find, I had suborn'd the witness,
And he's indit'd falsely.

Emil. Pray heaven, it be state matters, as you think,
And no conception, nor no jealous toy,
Concerning you.

Otth. Alas, the day! I never gave him cause.
Emil. But jealous souls will not be answer'd so;
They are not ever jealous for the cause,
But jealous for they are jealous: 'tis a monster,
Begot upon itself, born on itself.

Otth. Heaven keep that monster from Othello's mind!
Emil. Lady, amen.

Otth. I will go seek him.—Cassio, walk hereabout:
If I do find him fit, I'll move your suit,
And seek to affect it to his own house.

Cas. I humbly thank your ladyship.——

Bian. Save you, friend Cassio!

Cas. What make you from home?

Bian. How is it with you, almost fairest Bianca?

Cas. Faith, sweet love, I was coming to your house.

Bian. And I was going to your lodgings, Cassio.

Bian. What! keep a week away? seven days and nights?
Eight score eight hours? and lovers' absent hours,
More tedious than the dial eight score times?
O weary reckoning!

Cas. Pardon me, Bianca;
I have this while with lesser thoughts been press'd;
But I shall, in a more continuat time,
Strike off this score of absence. Sweet Bianca,

Take me this work out.

Bian. O, Cassio, whence came this?
This is some token from a newer friend.
To the felt absence now I feel a cause:
Is it come to this? Well, well.

Cas. Woman, go to!
Throw your vile guesses in the devil's teeth,
From whence you have them. You are jealous now,
That this is from some mistress, some remembrance:
No, in good truth, Bianca.

Bian. Why, whose is it?

Cas. I know not, sweet: I found it in my chamber.
I like the work well; ere it be demanded,
(As like enough it will,) I'll have it copied;
Take it, and dot; and leave me for this time.

Bian. Leave you! wherefore?

Cas. I do attend here on the general;
And think it no addition, nor my wish,
To have him see me woman'd.
ACT IV.

SCENE I.—The same.

Enter Othello and Iago.

Iago. Will you think so?

Oth. What? Iago?

Iago. To kiss in private?

Oth. An unauthorized kiss.

Iago. Or to be naked with her friend abed,
An hour, or more, not meaning any harm?

Oth. Naked abed, Iago, and not mean harm?

Iago. Is hypocrisy against the devil?

Oth. They that mean virtuously, and yet do so,
The devil their virtue tempts, and they tempt heaven.

Iago. So do they nothing, 'tis a venial slip:
But if I give my wife a handkerchief,—

Oth. What then?

Iago. Why, then 'tis hers, my lord; and, being hers,
She may, I think, bestow 't on any man.

Oth. She is protectress of her honour too;
May she give that?

Iago. Her honour is an essence that's not seen;
They have it very oft, that have it not:
But, for the handkerchief,—

Oth. By heaven, I would most gladly have forgot
Thou said'st,—O, it comes o'er my memory, [it:—
As doth the raven o'er the infected house,
Boiling to all,—he had my handkerchief.

Iago. Ay, what of that?—

Oth. That's not so good, now.

Iago. What, if I had said, I had seen him do you wrong?

Or heard him say,—As knaves be such abroad,
Who having, by their own importunate suit,
Or voluntary dotage of some mistress,
Convinced or supplied them, cannot choose
But they must blab—

Oth. Hath he said any thing?

Iago. He hath, my lord: but be you well assur'd
No more than he'll unswear.

Oth. What hath he said?

Iago. 'Faith, that he did,—I know not what he did.

Oth. What? what?

Iago. Lie—

Oth. With her?—

Iago. With her, on her; what you will.

Oth. Lie with her! lie on her!—We say, lie on her, when they belie her: Lie with her! that's fulsome—Handkerchief,—confessions,—handkerchief.

To confess, and be hanged for his labour,—First,
to be hanged, and then to confess:—I tremble at it.
Nature would not invest herself in such shadowing passion, without some instruction. It is not words, that shake me thus.—Fish!—Noses, ears, and lips:

Is it possible?—Confess!—Handkerchief!—O devil!—

[ Falls in a trance.

Iago. Work on.

My medicine, work! Thus credulous fools are caught;
And many worthy and chaste dames, even thus,

All guiltless meet reproach.—What, ho! my lord!

Enter Cassio.

My lord, I say! Othello!—How now, Cassio?

Cassio. What is the matter?

Iago. My lord is fallen into an epilepsy;
This is his second fit; he had one yesterday.

Oth. Rub him about the temples.

Iago. No, forbear:
The lethal gout must have his quiet course:
If not, he foams at mouth; and, by, and by,
Breaks out to savage madness. Look, he stirs:
Do you withdraw yourself a little while,
He will recover straight; when he is gone,
I would on great occasion speak with you.—

How is it, general? have you not hurt your head?

Oth. Dost thou mock me?

Iago. I mock you! no, by heaven:
'Would you would bear your fortunes like a man.

Oth. A horned man's a monster, and a beast.

Iago. There's many a beast then in a populous city,
And many a civil monster.

Oth. Did he confess it?

Iago. Good sir, be a man;

Think, every bearded fellow, that's but yok'd,
May draw with you: there's millions now alive,
That nightly lie in those unproper beds,
Which they dare swear peculiar; your case is better.
O, 'tis the spite of hell, the fiend's arch-mock,
To lip a wanton in a secure couch,
And to suppose her chaste! No, let me know:
And, knowing what I am, I know what she shall be.

Oth. O, thou art wise! 'tis certain.

Iago. Stand you awhile apart;
Contine yourself but in a patient list.

Whilest you were here, ere while mad with your grief,
(A passion most unsightly such a man,) Cassio came hither: I shifted him away,
And laid good 'scuse upon your ecstasy;
Bade him anon return, and here speak with me;
The which he promised: Do but encave yourself,
And mark the doers, the givers, and notable scorns,
That dwell in every region of his face;
For I will make him tell the tale anew,—
Where, how, how oft, how long ago, and when
He hath, and is again to cope your wife;
I say, but mark his gesture. Marry, patience;—
Or I shall say, you are all in all in spleen,
And nothing of a man.

Oth. Dost thou hear, Iago?

Iago. I will be found most cunning in my patience;
But (dost thou hear?) most bloody.

Iago. That's not amiss;
But yet keep time in all. Will you withdraw?

Now will I question Cassio of Bianca,
A housewife, that, by selling her desires,
Buys herself bread and clothes: it is a creature,
That doth on Cassio,—as 'tis the strumpet's plague,
To beguile many, and he beguil'd by one:—
He, when he hears of her, cannot refrain

From the excess of laughter:—Here he comes.

Re-enter Cassio.

As he shall smile, Othello shall go mad;
And his unbookish jealousy must continue
Poor Cassio's smiles, gestures, and light behaviour.
Quite in the wrong.—How do you now, lieutenant?

Cassio. The worser, that you give me the addition,
Whose want even kills me.

Iago. Ply Desdemona well, and you are sure oft.
Now, if this suit lay in Bianca's power, [Speaking lower.]

How quickly should you speak?

Cas. Alas, poor caitiff!

Oth. Look, how he laughs already! [Aside.

Iago. I never knew a woman love man so.

Cas. Alas, poor rogue! I think faith, she loves me.

Oth. Now he denies it faintly, and laughs it out.

[Aside.

Iago. Do you hear, Cassio?

Oth. Now he importunes him to tell it o'er: Go to; well said, well said. [Aside.

Iago. She gives it out, that you shall marry her:

Do you intend it?

Cas. Ha, ha, ha!

Oth. Do you triumph, Roman? do you triumph?

Cas. I marry her!—what? a customer! I pr'ythee, bear some charity to my wit; do not think it so unwholesome. Ha, ha, ha!

Oth. So, so, so, so: They laugh that win. [Aside.

Iago. 'Faith, the cry goes, that you shall marry her.

Cas. Pr'ythee, say true.

Iago. I am a very villain else.

Oth. Have you scored me? Well. [Aside.

Cas. This is the monkey's own giving out: she is persuaded I will marry her; out of her own love and flattery, not out of my promise.

Iago. Iago beconks me; now he begins the story. [Aside.

Cas. She was here even now; she haunts me in every place. I was, the other day, talking on the sea-bank with certain Venetians; and thither comes this bauble; by this hand, she fain's thus about my neck.

Oth. Crying, O dear Cassio! as it were: his gesture imports it. [Aside.

Cas. So hangs, and jolts, and weeps upon me; so hales, and pulls me: ha, ha, ha!—

Oth. Now he tells, how she plucked him to his chamber: O, I see that nose of yours, but not that dog I shall throw it to. [Aside.

Cas. Well, I must leave her company.

Iago. Before me! look, where she comes.

[Enter Bianca.

Cas. 'Tis such another fitchew! marry, a perfumed one.—What do you mean by this haunting of me?

Bian. Let the devil and his dam haunt you! What did you mean by that same handkerchief, you gave me even now? I was a fine fool to take it. I must take out the whole work!—A likely piece of work, that you should find it in your chamber, and not know who left it there! This is some minx's token, and I must take out the work? There,—give it your hobby horse: wheresoever you had it, I'll take out no work on't.

Cas. How now, my sweet Bianca? how now? how now?

Oth. By heaven, that should be my handkerchief! [Aside.

Bian. Ah you'll come to supper to-night, you may: an you will not, when you are next prepared for.

[Exit.

Iago. After her, after her.

Cas. 'Faith, I must, she'll rain in the street else.

Iago. Will you sup there?

Cas. 'Faith, I intend so.

Iago. Well, I may chance to see you; for I would very fain speak with you.

Cas. Pr'ythee, come; Will you?

Iago. Go to; say no more. [Exit Cassio.

Oth. How shall I murder him, Iago?

Iago. Did you perceive how he laughed at his vice? Oth. O, Iago!

Iago. And did you see the handkerchief?

Oth. Was that mine?

Iago. Yours, by this hand: and to see how he prizes the foolish woman, your wife! she gave it him, and he hath given it his whore.

Oth. I would have him nine years a killing:—

A fine woman! a fair woman! a sweet woman!

Iago. Nay, you must forget that.

Oth. Ay, let her rot, and perish, and he damned to-night; for she shall not live: No, my heart is turned to stone; I strike it, and it hurts my hand. O, the world hath not a sweeter creature: she might lie by an emperor's side, and command him tasks.

Iago. Nay, that's not your way.

Oth. Hang her! I do but say what she is:—So delicate with her needle!—An admirable musician! O, she will sing the savageness out of a bear!—Of so high and plentiful wit and invention!

Iago. She's the worse for all this.

Oth. O, a thousand, a thousand times:—And then, of so gentle a condition!

Iago. Ay, too gentle.

Oth. Nay, that's certain: But yet the pity of it, Iago!—O, Iago, the pity of it, Iago!

Iago. If you are so fond over her iniquity, give her patent to offend; for, if it touch not you, it comes near nobody.

Oth. I will chop her into messes:—Cuckold me!

Iago. O, 'tis foul in her.

Oth. With mine officer!

Iago. That's fouler.

Oth. Get me some poison, Iago; this night:—I'll not expostulate with her, lest her body and beauty unprove my mind again—this night, Iago.

Iago. Do it not with poison, strange her in her bed, even the bed she hath contaminated.

Oth. Good, good; the justice of itPlease; very good.

Iago. And, for Cassio, —let me be his undertaker; You shall hear more by midnight. [A trumpet within. Oth. Excellent good:—What trumpet is that same? Iago. Something from Venice, sure. 'Tis Lodovico, Come from the duke: and, see, your wife is with him.

[Enter Lodovico, Desdemona, and Attendants.

Lod. 'Tis not you, worthy general!

Oth. With all my heart, sir

Lod. The duke and senators of Venice greet you. [Gives him a packet.

Oth. I kiss the instrument of their pleasures.

[Opens the packet, and reads.

Des. And what's the news, good cousin Lodovico? Iago. I am very glad to see you, signior; Welcome to Cyprus.

Oth. Are you sure of that?

Des. My lord?

Oth. [Reads.] This fail you not to do, as you will.—

Lod. He did not call: he's busy in the paper. Is there division 'twixt thy lord and Cassio?

Des. A most unhappy one; I would do much To atone them, for the love I bear to Cassio.

Lod. Fire and brimstone! My lord?

Oth. Are you wise?

Des. What, is he angry?

Lod. 'May be, the letter mov'd him;
For, as I think, they do command him home,
Deputing Cassio in his government.

Des. By my troth, I am glad on't.

Oth. Indeed?

Des. My lord?
Oth. I am glad to see you mad.

Des. How, sweet Othello?
Oth. Devil! I have not deserv'd this.

Des. My lord, this would not be believed in Venice,
Though I should swear I saw it: 'Tis very much;
Make her amends, she weeps.

Oth. O devil, devil!
If that the earth could teem with woman's tears,
Each drop she falls would prove a crocodile:—
Out of my sight!

Des. I will not stay to offend you. [Going.

Lod. Truly, an obedient lady:—
I do beseech your lordship, call her back.

Oth. Mistress—

Des. My lord!
Oth. What would you with her, sir.

Lod. Who I, my lord?

Oth. Ay; you did wish, that I would make her turn:
Sir, sir, she was turn, and turn, and yet go on,
And turn again: and she can weep, sir, weep,
And she's obedient, as you say,—obedient,—
Very obedient:—Proceed you in your tears.—
Concerning this, sir,—O well-painted passion!
I am commanded home:—Get you away,
I'll send for you anon—Sir, I obey the mandate,
And will return to Venice;—Hence, awaunt!

[Exit Desdemona.

Cassio shall have my place. And,—sir, to night,
I do entreat that we may sup together.
You are welcome, sir, to Cyprus. Goats and monkies!

[Exit.

Lod. Is this the noble Moor whom our full senate
Call,—all-in-all sufficient!—This the noble nature
Whom passion could not shake? whose solid virtue
The shot of accident, nor dart of chance,
Could neither graze nor pierce?

Iago. He is much chang'd.

Lod. Are his wits safe? is he not light of brain?
Iago. He is that he is; I may not breathe my censure.
What he might be,—if, what he might, he is not,—
I would to heaven, he were.

Lod. What, strike his wife!
Iago. 'Faith, that was not so well; Yet 'would I
That stroke would prove the worst. [knew

Lod. Is it his use?
Or did the letters work upon his blood,
And new-create this fault?

Iago. Alas, alas!
It is not honesty in me, to speak
What I have seen and known. You shall observe him:
And his own courses will denote him so,
That I may save my speech: Do but go after,
And mark how he continues.

Lod. I am sorry, that I am deceiv'd in him. [Ex.

SCENE II.—A Room in the Castle.

Enter Othello and Emilia.

Oth. You have seen nothing then?

Emil. Nor ever heard: nor ever did suspect.

Oth. Yes, you have seen Cassio and she together.

Iago. But then I saw no harm; and then I heard
Each syllable, that breath made up between them.

Oth. What, did they never whisper?

Emil. Never, my lord.

Oth. Nor send you out o'the way?

Emil. Never.

Oth. To fetch her fan, her gloves, her mask, nor Emil. Never, my lord. [nothing

Oth. That's strange.

Emil. I durst, my lord, to wager she is honest,
Lay down my soul at stake: if you think other,
Remove your thought; it doth abuse your bosom.
If any wretch hath put this in your head,
Let heaven requite it with the serpent's curse!
For, if she be not honest, chaste, and true,
There's no man happy; the purest of their wives
Is foul as slander.

Oth. Bid her come hither:—go. [Exit Emi1
She says enough;—yet she's a simple wad,
That cannot say as much. This is a subtle whore,
A closet-lock-and-key of villainous secrets:
And yet she'll kneel, and pray: I have seen her do't.

Re-enter Emilia, with Desdemona.

Des. My lord, what is your will?

Oth. Pray, chuck, come hither.

Des. What is your pleasure?

Oth. Let me see your eyes;

Lod. Look in my face.

Des. What horrible fancy's this?

Oth. Some of your function, mistress; [To Emil
Leave procreants alone, and shut the door;
Cough, or cry,—hem, if any'body come;
Your mystery, your mystery;—nay, despatch.

[Exit Emilia.

Des. Upon my knees, what doth your speech im-
I understand a fury in your words, [port
But not the words.

Oth. Why, what art thou?

Des. Your wife, my lord; your true
And loyal wife.

Oth. Come, swear it, damn thyself;

Lest, being like one of heaven, the devils themselves
Should fear to seize thee: therefore be double-
Swear—thou art honest. [darn'd,

Des. Heaven doth truly know it.

Oth. Heaven truly knows, that thou art false as hell. [false

Des. To whom, my lord? with whom? How am I

Oth. O Desdemona! away! away! away!

Des. What is the heavy care?—Why do you weep?
Am I the occasion of these tears, my lord?
If, haply, you my father do suspect,
An instrument of this your calling back,
Lay not your blame on me; if you have lost him,

Why, I have lost him too.

Oth. Had it pleas'd heaven
To try me with affliction; had he rain'd
All kinds of sorrow, and shames, on my bare head;
Steep'd me in poverty to the very lips;
Given to captivity me and my utmost hopes;
I should have found in some part of my soul
A drop of patience; but (alas!) to make me
A fixed figure, for the time of scorn
To point his slow unmoving finger at,—

O? O!
Yet could I bear that too, well, very well:
But there, where I have garner'd up my heart;
Where either I must live, or bear no life;

The fountain from which the my current runs,
Or else dries up; to be discarded thence! one
Or keep it as a cistern for foul toads
To knot and gender in—I turn the complexion there!
Patience, thou young and rose-lipp'd cherubin;
Ay, there, look grim as hell!

Des. I hope, my noble lord esteems me honest.
Othello. He here shall have as by You I. Alas, what ignorant sin have I committed? Oth. Was this fair paper, this most goodly book Made to write where upon? What committed! Committed!—O thou public commoner! I should make very forges of my cheeks, That would to cinders burn up modesty, Did I but speak thy deeds. What committed! Heaven stops the nose at it, and the moon winks; The bawdy wind, that kisses all it meets, Is hush'd within the hollow mine of earth, And will not hear it: What committed! Impudent strumpet! Des. By heaven, you do me wrong. Oth. Are you not a strumpet? Des. No, as I am a Christian: If to preserve this vessel for my lord, From any other foul unlawful touch, Be not to be a strumpet, I am none. Oth. What, not a whore? Des. No, as I shall be saved. Oth. Is it possible? Des. O, heaven forgive us! Oth. I cry you mercy, then: I took you for that cunning whore of Venice, That married with Othello.—You, mistress, Re-enter Emilia. That have the office opposite to Saint Peter, And keep the gate of hell; You! you! ay, you! We have done our course; there's money for your pains; I pray you, turn the key, and keep our counsel. [Exit. Emilia. Alas, what does this gentleman conceive?— How do you, madam? how do you, my good lady? Des. Faith, half asleep. Emilia. Good madam, what's the matter with my lord? Des. With who? Emilia. Why, with my lord, madam. Des. Who is thy lord? Emilia. He that is yours, sweet lady. Des. I have none: Do not talk to me Emilia; I cannot weep; nor answer I have none, But what should go by water. Pr'ythee, to-night Lay on my bed my wedding sheets,—remember;— And call thy husband hither. Emilia. Here is a change, indeed! [Exit. Des. 'Tis meet I should be us'd so, very meet. How have I been behav'd, that he might stick The smallest opinion on my greatest abuse? Re-enter Emilia, with Iago. Iago. What is your pleasure, madam? How is it with you? Des. I cannot tell. Those, that do teach young Do it with gentle means, and easy tasks: [babes, He might have chid me so; for, in good faith, I am a child to chiding. Iago. What's the matter, lady? Emilia. Alas, Iago, my lord hath so bewhored her, Thrown such despite and heavy terms upon her, As true hearts cannot bear. Des. Am I that name, Iago? Iago. What name, fair lady? Des. Such as, she says, my lord did say I was. Iago. He call'd her, where? a beggar, in his drink, And could not have laid such terms upon his callant. Iago. Why did he so? Des. I do o't, know; I am sure, I am none such. Iago. Do not weep, do not weep; Alas, the day! Emilia. Has she forsook so many noble matches, Her father, and her country, and her friends, To be called—where? would it not make one weep? Des. It is my wretched fortune. Iago. Deshew him for it! How comes this trick upon him? Des. Nay, heaven doth know. Emilia. I will be hang'd, if some eternal villain, Some busy and insinuating rogue, Some coggling cozening slave, to get some office, Have not devis'd this slander; I'll be hang'd, else. Iago. Fye, there is no such man; it is impossible. Des. If any such there be, heaven pardon him! Emilia. A kilter pardon him! and hell gnaw his bones! [pansy? Why should he call her, whore? who keeps her com- What place? what time? what form? what likelihood? The Moor's abus'd by some most villainous knave, Some base notorious knave, some scurril fellow:— O, heaven, that such companions thou'rt unfold'd; And put in every honest hand a whip, To lash the rascal naked through the world, Even from the east to the west! Iago. Speak within door. Emilia. O, fye upon him! some such squire he was, That turn'd your wit the sea'nay side without, And made you to suspect me with the Moor. Iago. You are a fool; go to. Des. O good Iago, What shall I do to win my lord again? Good friend, go to him; for, by this light of heaven, I know not how I lost him. Here I kneel:— If e'er my will did trespass 'gainst his love, Either in discourse or thought, or actual deed; Or that mine eyes, mine ears, or any sense, Delighted them in any other form; Or that I do not yet, and ever did, And ever will,—though he do shake me off To beggarly divorcement,—love him dearly, Comfort forswear me! Unkindness may do much; And his unkindness may defeat my life, But never taint my love. I cannot say, whore; It does abhor me, now I speak the word; To do the act that might the addition earn, Not the world's mass of vanity could make me. Iago. I pray you, be content; 'tis Lat his humour; The business of the state does him offence, And he does chide with you. Des. If 'were no other,— Iago. It is but so, I warrant you. [Trumpets. Hark, how these instruments summon to supper! And the great messengers of Venice stay: Go in, and weep not: all things shall be well. [Erewhon Desdemona and Emilia. Enter Roderigo. How now, Roderigo? Rod. I do not find, that thou dost cast justly with me. Iago. What in the contrary? Rod. Every day thou dost at me with some device, Iago; and rather (as it seems to me now,) keep'st from me all conveniency, than suppliest me with the least advantage of hope. I will, indeed, no longer endure it: Nor am I yet persuaded, to put up in peace what already I have foolishly suffered. Iago. Will you hear me, Roderigo? Rod. 'Faith, I have heard too much for your words, and performances, are no kin together. Iago. You charge me most unjustly. Rod. With nought but truth. I have wasted my- self out of my means. The jewels you have had from me, to deliver to Desdemona, would half have cor-rupled a votarist: You have told me—she has received them, and returned me expectations and comforts of sudden respect and acquittance; but I find none.

Iago. Well; go to; very well.

Rod. Very well! go to! I cannot go to, man; nor tis not very well: By this hand, I say, it is very scorvy; and begin to find myself fibbed in it.

Iago. Very well.

Rod. I tell you, tis not very well. I will make myself known to Desdemona: If she will return me my jewels, I will give over my suit, and repent my unlawful solicitation; if not, assure yourself, I will seek satisfaction of you.

Iago. You have said now.

Rod. Ay, and I have said nothing, but what I protest to indemnity of doing.

Iago. Why, now I see there's mettle in thee; and even, from this instant, do build on thee a better opinion than ever. Give me thy hand, Roderigo: Thou hast taken against me a most just exception; but yet,
I protest, I have dealt most directly in thy affair,

Rod. It hath not appeared.

Iago. I grant, indeed, it hath not appeared; and your suspicion is not without wit and judgment. But,
Roderigo, if thou hast that within thee indeed, which I have greater reason to believe now than ever,—I mean, purpose, courage, and valour,—this night shew it: if thou the next night following enjoyest not Desdemona, take me from this world with treachery, and devide engines for my life.

Rod. Well, what is it? Is it within reason, and compass?

Iago. Sir, there is especial commission come from Venice, to depute Cassio in Othello's place.

Rod. Is that true? why, then Othello and Desdemona return again to Venice.

Iago. Ay, no; he goes into Mauritania, and takes away with him the fair Desdemona, unless his abode be lingered here by some accident; wherein none can be so determinate, as the removing of Cassio.

Rod. How do you mean—removing of him?

Iago. Why, by making him incapable of Othello's place; knocking out his brains.

Rod. And what would you have me do?

Iago. Ay; if you dare do yourself a profit, and a right. He sups to-night with a harlot, and that will I go to him;—he knows not yet of his honourable fortune; if you will watch his going thence, (which I will fashion to fall out between twelve and one,) you may take him at your pleasure; I will be near to second your attempt, and he shall fall between us. Come, stand not amazed at it, but go along with me; I will shew you such a necessity in his death, that you shall think yourself bound to put it on him.
It is now high supper-time, and the night grows to waste: about it.

Rod. I will hear further reason for this.

Iago. And you shall be satisfied. [Exeunt.

SCENE III.—Another Room in the Castle.

Enter Othello, Lodovico, Desdemona, Emilia,
and Attendants.

Lod. I do beseech you, sir, trouble yourself no
further.

Oth. O, pardon me; 'twill do me good to walk.

Lod. Madam, good night; I humbly thank your ladyship.

Des. Your honour is most welcome.

Oth. Will you walk, sir?

Des. My lord?

Oth. Get you to bed on the instant; I will be returned forthwith: dismiss your attendant there; look, it be done.

Des. I will, my lord.

[Lodovico, Emilia, and Attendants exit.

Oth. How goes it now? he looks gentler than he
Des. He says, he will return incontinent; [sighed.
He hath commanded me to go to bed,
And bade me to dismiss you.

Oth. Dismiss me!

Des. It was his bidding; therefore, good Emilia,
Give me my nightly wearing, and adieu:
We must not ow displease him.

Oth. I would, you had never seen him!

Des. So would not I; my love doth so approve him.
That even his stubbornness, his cheeks, and frowns,—
Frythee, unpin me,—have grace and favour in them.

Oth. I have laid those sheets you bade me on the bed. [minds! —

Des. All's one:—Good father! how foolish are our
If I do die before thee, pr'ythee, shroud me one of these same sheets.

Oth. Come, come, you talk.

Des. My mother had a maid call'd—Barbara;
She was in love; and he, she lov'd, prov'd mad,
And did forsake her; she had a song of—willow,
An old thing 'twas, but it express'd her fortune,
And she died singing it: That song, to-night,
Will not go from my mind: I have much to do,
But to go hang my head all at once,
And sing it, like poor Barbara. Pr'ythee, despatch.

Oth. Shall I go fetch your night-gown?

Des. No, unpin me here.—

This Lodovico is a proper man.

Oth. A very handsome man.

Des. And he speaks well.

Oth. I know a lady in Venice, who would have walked barefoot to Palestine, for a touch of his other lip.

I. Des. The poor soul sat sighing by a sycamore tree,
Sing all a green willow; [Singing.
Her hand on her bosom, her head on her knee,
Sing willow, willow, willow:
The fresh streams ran by her, and murmured'd her
Sing willow, &c.

[Moans; Her salt tears fell from her, and softened the stones;

Lay by these:

Sing willow, willow, willow;

Pr'ythee, tie thee; he 'll come anon.—

Sing all a green willow must be my garland.

II. Let nobody blame him, his scorn I approve,—

Nay, that's not next.—Hark! who is it that knocks?

Oth. It is the wind.

Des. I call'd my love, false love; but what said he [Then? If I court my women, you 'll cough with me men.

So, get thee gone; good night. Mine eyes do itch;

Oth. Doth that bode weeping? —

Des. I have heard it said so.—O, these men, these men!—

Oth. Dost thou in conscience think,—tell me, Emilia,—

That there be women do abuse their husbands.
In such gross kind?

Emil. There be some such, no question.

Des. Would'st thou do such a deed for all the Emil. Why, would not you? [world]

Des. No, by this heavenly light!

Emil. Nor I neither by this heavenly light;

I might do't as well 'tis the dark.

Des. Would'st thou do such a deed for all the world?

Emil. The world is a huge thing: 'Tis a great price
For a small vice.

Des. Good troth, I think thou would'st not.

Emil. By my troth, I think I should: and undoe't, when I had done. Marry, I would not do such a thing for a joint-ring; nor for measures of laws; or for gowns, petticoats, nor caps, nor any pety exhibition: but for the whole world.—Why, who would not make her husband a cuckold, to make him a monarch? I should venture purgatory for't.

Des. If'shrew me, if I would do such a wrong for the whole world.

Emil. Why, the wrong is but a wrong 'tis the world;
and, having the world for your labour, 'tis a wrong in your own world, and you might quickly make it right.

Des. I do not think there is any such woman.

Emil. Yes, a dozen; and as many [for]
To the vantage, as would store the world they play'd
But, I do think, it is their husbands' faults;
If wives do fall: Say, that they slack their duties,
And pour out treasures into foreign laps;
Or else break out in peevish jealousies,
Throwing restraint upon us; or, say, they strike us,
Or scant our former having in despite
Why, we have gall's; and, though we have some grace,
Yet we have some revenge. Let husbands know,
Their wives have sense like them: they see, and smell,
And have their palates both for sweet and sour,
As husbands have. What is it that they do,
When they change us for others? Is it sport?
I think, it is; and doth affection brood it?
I think, it doth; Is't frailty, that thus errs?
It is so too: And have not we affections?
Desires for sport? and frailty, as men have?
Then, let them use us well: else, let them know,
The ills we do, their ills instruct us to.

Des. Good night, good night: Heaven me such usage send,
Not to pick bad from bad; but, by bad, mend! [Exit emil]

ACT V.

SCENE I.—A Street.

Enter Iago and Roderigo.

Iago. Here, stand behind this bulk; straight will he come:
Wear thy good rapier bare, and put it home;
Quick, quick; fear nothing; I'll be at thy elbow:
It makes us, or it mars us: think on that,
And fix most firm thy resolution.

Rod. Be near at hand; I may miscarry in't.

Iago. Here at thy hand; be bold, and take thy sword. [Retires to a little distance.

Rod. I have no great devotion to the deed;
And yet he has given me satisfying reasons:—
'Tis but a man gone:—forth, my sword; he dies.

[Enter Iago.]

Iago. I have rubb'd this young quatt almost to the sense, And he grows angry. Now whether he kill Cassio,

Or Cassio him, or each do kill the other,
Every way makes my gain: Live Rodrigo,
He calls me to a restitution large
Of gold, and jewels, that I bobb'd from him,
As gifts to Desdemona;
That it must not be: if Cassio do remain,
He hath a daily beauty in his life,
That makes me ugly; and besides, the Moor
May unfold me to him; there stand I much peril;
No, he must die:—But so, I hear him coming.

Enter Cassio.

Rod. I know his gait, 'tis he:—Villain, thou diest.

Cas. That thrust had been mine enemy indeed,
But that my coat is better than thou think'st;
I will make proof of thine.

[Draws, and wounds Roderigo.

Rod. [Iago rushes from his post, cuts Cassio behind in the leg, and exit.

Cas. I am main'd for ever:—Help, ho! murder!— murder! [Falls.

Enter Othello, at a distance.

Oth. The voice of Cassio:—Iago keeps his word.

Rod. O, villain that I am!

Oth. [Hark! 'tis even so.

Cas. O, help! ho! light! a surgeon!

Oth. 'Tis he:—O brave Iago, honest, and just,
That hast such noble sense of thy friend's wrong
Thou teachest me,—Minion, your dear lies dead,
And your fate hies apace:—Strumpet, I come:
Forth of my heart those charms, thine eyes are blotted;
Thy bed, lust-stain'd, shall with lust's blood be spotted.

Enter Lodovico and Gratiano, at a distance.

Cas. What ho! no watch? no passage? murder!

Gra. 'Tis some mischance; the cry is very direful.

Cas. O, help!

Rod. [Hark!

Cas. O wretched villain!

Rod. Two or three groans:—it is a heavy night;
These may be counterfeit; let's think't unsate
To come in to the cry, without more help.

Rod. No body come? then shall I bleed to death.

Enter Iago with a light.

Rod. Hark? [weapons

Gra. Here's one comes in his shirt, with light and Iago. Who's there? whose noise is this that cries
Rod. We do not know. [on murder

Iago. Did you not hear a cry?

Cas. Here, here; for heaven's sake, help me.

Iago. What's the matter; [this

Gra. This is Othello's ancient, as I take it.

Rod. The same, indeed; a very valiant fellow.

Iago. What are you there, that cry so grievously?—
Cas. Iago? O, I am spoil'd, undone by villains!
Give me some help.

Gra. O me, lieutenant! what villains have done
Cas. I think that one of them is hereabout,
And cannot make away.

Iago. O treacherous villains?—
What are you there? come in, and give some help.

[To Lodovico, and Gratiano.

Rod. O, help me here!

Cas. That's one of them.

Iago. O murderous slave! O villain!

[Iago stabs Roderigo.
ACT V.—SCENE I.

Rod. O damn'd Iago! O inhuman dog!—

O! O! O! [thieves!]

Iago. Kill men! the dark!—Where be these bloody How silent is this town! Ho! murder! murder! What may you be? and wherefore you of good, or evil?
Lod. As you shall prove us, praise us.

Iago. Signior Lodovico?

Lod. He, sir.

Iago. I cry you mercy; Here's Cassio hurt
By villains.

Gras. Cassio?

Iago. How is it, brother?

Cass. My leg is cut in two.

Iago. Marry, heaven forbid! Light, gentlemen; I'll bind it with my shirt.

Enter Bianca.

Bian. What is the matter, ho? who is that cry'd?

Iago. Who is that cry'd?

Bian. O my dear Cassio! my sweet Cassio! O Cassio! Cassio! Cassio! [pect Iago. O notable strumpet!—Cassio, may you suspect Who they should be, that have thus mangled you?

Cas. No, [seek you.]

Gar. I am sorry to find you thus: I have been to Iago. Lend me a garter: So—O, for a chair,
To bear him easily hence!

Bian. Alas, he fainos!—O Cassio! Cassio! Cassio!

Iago. Gentlemen all, I do suspect this trash
To be a party in this injury.—

Patience a while, good Cassio.—Come, come;

Lend me a light.—Know we this face, or no?

Alas! my friend, and my dear countryman,
Roderigo! to—Yes, sure; O heaven! Roderigo.

Gar. What, of Venice?

Iago. Even he, sir; did you know him?

Iago. Signior Gratiano! I cry you gootle pardon;

These bloody accidents must excuse my manners,
That so neglected you.

Gar. I am glad to see you.

Iago. How do you, Cassio?—O, a chair, a chair!

Gar. Roderigo!

Iago. He, he, 'tis he;—O, that's well said: the chair—[A chair brought in.

Some good man hear him carefully from hence:
I'll fetch the general'surgeon. For you, mistress,

[To Bianca.
Save you your labour.—He that lies slain here, Cassio,
Was my dear friend: What malice was between you?

Cas. None in the world; nor do I know the man.

Iago. [To Bian.] What look you pale!—O, bear him out o' the air.

[To Cassio and Rod. are borne off.

Stay you, good gentlemen.—Look you pale, mistress? Do you perceive the gaiety of her eye?

Nay, if you stare, we shall hear more anon:—
Behold her well: I pray you, look upon her;
Do you see, gentlemen? nay, guiltiness will speak, Though tongues were out of use.

Enter Emilia.

Emil. 'Las, what's the matter? what's the matter, husband?

Iago. Cassio hath here been set on in the dark,
By Roderigo, and fellows that are scap'd; He's almost slain, and Roderigo dead.

Emil. Alas, good gentleman! alas, good Cassio! Iago. This is the fruit of whoring.—Pr'ythee,

Emil. Go know of Cassio where he supp'd to-night:—

What, do you shake at that? [shake not.

Bian. He supp'd at my house; but I therefore
Des. I will so: What's the matter?
Oth. That handkerchief, which I so lov'd, and gave Thou gav'st to Cassio.
Des. No, by my life and soul:
Send for the man, and ask him.
Oth. Sweet soul, take heed,
Take heed of perjury; thou'rt on thy death-bed.
Des. Ay, but not yet to die.
Oth. Yes, presently:
Therefore confess thee freely of thy sin;
For to deny each article with oath,
Cannot remove, nor choke, the strong conception,
That I do groan within. Thou art to die.
Des. Then, Lord have mercy on me!
Oth. I say, amen.
Des. And have you mercy too!—I never did
Offend you in my life; never lov'd Cassio,
But with such general warranty of heaven,
As I might love: I never gave him token.
Oth. By heaven, I saw thy handkerchief in his hand.
O perjur'd woman! thou dost stone my heart,
And must me call, what I intend to do,—
A murder, which I thought a sacrifice:
I saw the handkerchief.
Des. He found it then;
I never gave it him:—Send for him hither,
And let him confess a truth.
Oth. He hath confess'd.
Des. What, my lord?
Oth. That he hath—us'd thee.
Des. How? unlawfully?
Oth. Ay.
Des. 'll he not say so.
Oth. No, his mouth is stopp'd;
Honest Iago hath ta'en order for't.
Des. My fears interpret then,—What, is he dead?
Oth. Had all his hairs been lives, my great revenge
Had stomach for them all.
Des. Alas! he is betray'd, and undone.
Oth. Out, strumpet! Weep'st thou for him to my
Des. O, banish me, my lord, but kill me not. [face?
Oth. Down, strumpet!
Des. Kill me to-morrow, let me live to-night.
Oth. Nay, if you strive,—
Des. But half an hour:
Oth. Being done,
There is no pause.
Des. But while I say one prayer.
Oth. It is too late.
[He smoothes her.
Emil. [Within.] My lord, my lord! what ho! my lord! my lord!
Oth. What noise is this?—Not dead! not yet quite
I, that am cruel, am yet merciful; [dead!
I would not have thee linger in thy pain.—
So, so.
Emil. [Within.] What ho, my lord! my lord!
Oth. Who's there?
Emil. [Within.] O, good my lord, I would speak
a word with you.
Oth. Yes;—it's Emilia:—by and by:—She's dead.
'Tis like she comes to speak of Cassio's death;
The noise was high.—[1]a? no more moving!
Still as the grave. Shall she come in? I Were't good!
I think, she stirs again:—No.—What's the best?
If she come in, she'll sure speak to my wife:
My wife! my wife! what wife?—I have no wife:
O, isupportable! O heavy hour!
Methinks it should be now a huge eclipse
Of sun and moon; and that the affrighted globe
Should yawn at alteration.
Emil. [Within.] I do beseech you I may speak with
O, good my lord!
[you,
Oth. I had forgot thee: O, come in, Emilia:—
Silently by and by:—Let me the curtains draw.—
Where art thou? What's the matter with thee now?
[Unlocks the door.
Enter Emilia.
Emil. O, good my lord, your soul's murder done.
Oth. What? now?
Emil. But now, my lord!
Oth. It is the very error of the moon;
She comes more near the earth than she was wont;
And makes men mad.
Emil. Cassio, my lord, has kill'd a young Venetian,
Call'd—Roderigo.
Oth. Roderigo kill'd!
And Cassio kill'd?
Emil. No, Cassio is not kill'd.
Oth. Not Cassio kill'd! Then murder's out of tune,
And sweet revenge grows harsh.
Des. O, falsely, falsely murder'd!
Emil. Alas; what cry is that?
Oth. That! what?
Emil. Out and alack! that was my lady's voice:—
Help! help, ho! help!—O lady, speak again!
Sweet Desdemona! O, sweet mistress, speak!
Des. A guiltless death I die.
Emil. O, who hath done
This deed?
Des. Nobody; I myself; farewell:
Command me to my kind lord; O, farewell. [Dies.
Oth. Why, how should she be murder'd?
Emil. Alas, who knows?
Oth. You heard her say herself, it was not I.
Emil. She said so: I must needs report the truth
Oth. She's, like a liar, gone to burning hell;
'Twas I that kill'd her.
Emil. O, the more angel she,
And you the blacker devil!
Oth. She turn'd to folly, and she was a whore.
Emil. Thou dost belie her, and thou art a devil.
Oth. She was false as water.
Emil. Thou art rash as fire, to say
That she was false; O, she was heavenly true!
Oth. Cassio did tup her: ask thy husband else.
O, I were damn'd beneath all depth in hell,
But that I did proceed upon just grounds
To this extremity: Thy husband knew it all.
Emil. My husband?
Oth. Thy husband.
Emil. That she was false to wedlock?
Oth. Ay, with Cassio,
Nay, had she been true,
If heaven would make me such another world
Of one entire and perfect chrysolite,
I'd not have sold her for it.
Emil. My husband?
Oth. Ay, 'twas he that told me first;
A honest man he is, and hates the slime
That sticks on filthy deeds.
Emil. My husband!
Oth. What needs this iterance, woman? I say, thy husband.
Emil. O mistress, villain hath made mocks with My husband say, that she was false? [love!—
Oth. He, woman;
I say, thy husband: Dust understand the word?
My friend, thy husband, honest, honest Iago.
Emil. If he say so, may his pernicious soul
Rut half a grain a day! he lies to the heart;
She was too fond of her most filthy bargain.
Oth. Ha!
Emil. Do thy worst;
EMILIA: She lov'd thee cruel Moor.

Act V, Sc 2
ACT V.—SCENE II.

This deed of thine is no more worthy heaven, Than thou wast worthy her.

Oth. Peace, you were best.

Emil. Thou hast not half the power to do me harm, As I have to be hurt. O gulf! O doft! As ignorant as dirt! thou hast done a deed,— I care not for thy sword; I'll make thee known, Though I lost twenty lives—Help! help me! help! The Moor has kill'd my mistress; Murder! murder!

Enter Montano, Gratiano, and Iago.

Mon. What is the matter?—How now, general? Emil. O, are you come, Iago? you have done well, That men may lay their murders on your neck.

Oth. What is the matter? Emil. Disprove this villain, if thou be'st a man: He says, thou told'st him that his wife was false: I know, thou didst not, thou'rt not such a villain: Speak, for my heart is full.

Iago. I told him what I thought; and told no more Than what he found himself was apt and true.

Emil. But did you ever tell him she was false? Iago. I did.

Emil. You told a lie; an odious damned lie; Upon my soul, a lie; a wicked lie:— She false with Cassio!—Did you say with Cassio? Iago. With Cassio, mistress; Go to, to charm your tongue.

Emil. I will not charm my tongue; I am bound to My mistress here lies murder'd in her bed. [speak; All O heavens forfend! Emil. And your reports have set the murder on. Oth. Nay, stare not, masters; it is true, indeed. Gra. 'Tis a strange truth.

Mon. O monstrous act!

Emil. Villany, villany, villany!— I Gra. Upon's, I think!—smell';—O villany! I thought so then;—I'll kill myself for grief. O villany! villany! [home.

Iago. What, are you mad? I charge you, get you Emil. Good gentlemen, let me have leave to speak; 'Tis proper I obey him, but not now: Perchance, Iago, I will ne'er go home.

Oth. O! O! O! [Hanging over his wife.

Nay, lay thee down, and roar. For thou hast kill'd the sweetest innocent, That e'er did lift up eye.

Oth. O, she was fair!— [Rising. I scarce did know you, uncle: There lies your niece, Whose breath, indeed, these hands have newly stopp'd; I know this act shews horrible and grim. Gra. Poor Desdemona! I am glad thy father's dead; Thy match was mortal to him, and pure grief Shore his old head in twain: did he live now, This sight would make him do a desperate turn, Yea, curse his better angel from his side, And fall to reprobation.

Oth. 'Tis pitiful; but yet Iago knows, The Moor is here in Cassio's act of shame; A thousand times committed; Cassio confess'd it: And she did gratify his amorous works With that recognition and pledge of love Which I first gave her; I saw it in his hand; It was a handkerchief, an antique token My father gave my mother.

Emil. O heaven! O heentilly powers! Iago. Come, hold your peace. Emil. 'Twill out,'twill out;—I hold my peace, sir! No, I will speak as liberal as the air;—no; Let heaven, and men, and devils, let them all, All, all, cry shame against me, yet I'll speak. Iago. Be wise, and get you home.

Emil. I will not. [Iago offers to stab his wife Gra. Fye! Your sword upon a woman? Emil. O thou dull Moor! that handkerchief thou speak'st of, I found by fortune, and did give my husband; For often with a solemn earnestness, (More than, indeed, belongs to such a trifle,) He begg'd of me to steal it.

Iago. Villainous whore! Emil. She gave it Cassio! no, alas; I found it, And I did give it my husband.

Iago. Filth, thou liest. Emil. By heaven, I do not; I do not, gentlemen: O murder'd swine! what should such a fool Do with so good a wife? [Iago stabs EMILIA, then runs out.

Oth. Are there no stones in heaven, But what serve for the thunder?—Precious villain! Gra. The woman falls; sure he has kill'd his wife. Emil. Ay, ay: O lay me by my mistress' side! Gra. You have, but his wife's kill'd. [poo, Mou, 'Tis a notorious villain. Take you this wea- Which I have here recover'd from the Moor: Come, guard the door without; let him not pass, But kill him rather; I'll after that same villain, For 'tis a damned slave.

Iago. I am not valiant neither, But every puny whisperer gets my sword— But why should honour outlive honesty? Let it go all.

Emil. What did thy song bode, lady? Hark, can'st thou hear me? I will play the swan, And die in music:—Willow, willow, willow.— Moor, she was chaste; she lov'd thee, cruel Moor So come my soul to bliss, as I speak true; So speaking as I think, I die,—I die. [Dies.

Oth. I have another weapon in this chamber, It is a sword of Spain, the ice-brook's temper:— O, here it is:—Uncle, I must come forth. [Dear, Gra. [Within.] If thou attempt it, it will cost thee Thou hast no weapon, and perforce must suffer. Oth. Look in upon me then, and speak with me, Or, naked as I am, I will assault thee.

Re-enter Gratiano.

Gra. What is the matter? Oth. Behold! I have a weapon; A better never did itself sustain Upon a soldier's thigh: I have seen the day, That with this little arm, and this good sword, I have made my way through more impediments Than twenty times your stop:—But, O vain boast! Who can control his fate! 'tis not so now.— Be not afraid, though you do see me weapon'd; Here is my journey's end, here is my butt, And very sea-mark of my utmost sail. Do you take back dismay'd! 'tis a lost fear; Man but a rush against Othello's breast, And he retires;—Where should Othello go?— Now, how dost thou look now? Oll-starr'd wench Pale as thy smirk, when we shall meet at compt, This look of thine will hurl my soul from heaven, And fiends will snatch at it. Cold, cold, my girl! Even like thy chastity. O cursed, cursed slave!—Whip me, ye devils, From the possession of this heavenly sight! Blow me about in winds! roast me in sulphur! Wash me in steep-down gulfs of liquid fire!— O Desdemona! Desdemona! dead? Dead? O! O! O!
The beauty of this play impresses themselves so strongly upon the attention of the reader, that they draw no aid from critical illustration. The fiery openness of Othello, magnanimous, artless, and credulous, heedless in his confidences, absent in his affection, inflexible in his resolution, and obturate in his declination to give ear to the importunities of Iago, admirably in his resentment, subtle in his designs, and studious at once of his interest and his vengeance; the soft simplicity of Desdemona, confident of merit, and conscious of innocence, her artless perseverance in her suit, and her slowness to suspect that she can be suspected, are such proofs of Shakespeare's skill in human nature, as, I suppose, it is vain to seek in any modern writer. The gradual progress which Iago makes in the Moor's confidence, and the circumstances which he employs to entamaze him, are so artfully natural, that, though it will perhaps not be said of him as we say of himself, that he is a man not easily jealous; yet we cannot but pity him, who at last we find him perplexed in the crisis.

There is always danger, lest wickedness, contained with abilities, should ascend upon esteem, though it misses of approbation; but the character of Iago is so conducted, that he is from the first scene to the last hated and despised.

Even the inferior characters of this play would be very conspicuous in any other piece; not only for their fitness, but their strength. Cassio is brave, beneficent, and honest; ruined only by his want of shrewdness to resist an inaudious insinuation. Roderigo's suspicious credulity, and impatience submissions to the taunts which he sees practised upon him, and which by persuasion he is supposed to be required, exhibit a strong picture of a weak mind betrayed by unlawful desires in a false friend; and such excessive hate often found even honest, but not cast off, easy to commit small crimes, and quickened and alarmed at frivolous suspicions.

The scenes from the beginning to the end are busy, varied by happy interchanges, and regularly pursuing the progression of the story; and the narrative in the end, though it tells what is known already, yet is necessary to produce the death of Othello.

END OF THE PLAYS.
THE

POEMS OF SHAKESPEARE.

TO THE RIGHT HONOURABLE HENRY Wriothesly,

Earl of Southampton, and Baron of Verney.

Right Honourable,
I know not how I shall offend in dedicating my unpolished lines to your Lordship, nor how the world will censure me for choosing so strong a prop to support so weak a barrenness: only if your honour seem but pleased, I account myself highly prais'd, and vow to take advantage of all idle hours, till I have honour'd you with some graver labour. But if the first her of my invention prove deformed, I shall be sorry it had so noble a godfather, and never after car so barren a field; for fear it yield me still so bad a harvest. I leave it to your honourable survey, and your honour to your heart's content; which I wish may always answer your own wish, and the world's hopeful expectation.

Your Honour's in all duty,

William Shakespeare

VENUS AND ADONIS.

Even as the sun with purple-colour'd face
Had taken his last leaf of the weeping morn,
Rose cheek'd Adonis bade him to the chase;
Hunting he lov'd, but love he laugh'd to scorn;
Sick-thoughts Venus makes amain unto him,
And like a hold-fac'd tutor gins to woo him.
Three times fairer than myself, (thus she began)
The field's chief flower, sweet above compare,
Stain to all nymphs, more lovely than a man,
More white and red than doves or roses are;
Nature that made thee, with herself at strife,
Sath that the world hath ending with thy life.
Vouchsafe, thou wonder, to alright thy steed,
And reign his proud head to the saddle-bow.
If thou wilt desir'd this favour, for thy need,
A thousand honey-secret saith thou know:
Here come and sit, where serpent never kisses,
And, being set, I'll smoother thee with kisses.
And yet not cloy thy lips with bash'd satiety,
But rather famish them amid their plenty,
Making them red and pale with fresh variety
Ten kisses short as one, one long as twenty:
A summer's day will seem an hour but short,
Being wasted in such time-beguiling sport.
With this, she seizeth on his sweating palm,
The precedent of pity and livelihood,
And, trembling in her passion, calls it balm,
Earth's sovereign salve to do a goddess good:
Being so enraged, desire doth lend her force,
Courageously to pluck him from his force.
Over one arm the lusty courser's rein,
Under the other was the tender boy,
Who blush'd and pout'd in a dull disdain,
With leaden appetite, unapt to toy;
She red and hot, as coals of glowing fire,
He red for shame, but frosty in desire.
The studd'd biddle on a ragged bough
Nimbly she fastens (O how quick is love!) The steed is capp'd up, and even now To tie the rider she begins to prove:
Backward she pull'd him, as she would be thrust,
And govern'd him in strength, though not in last.
So soon was she along, as he was down,
Each leaning on their elbows and their hips:
Now doth she stroke his cheek, now doth he frown,
And gins to chide, but soon she stops his lips:
And kissing speaks, with lustful language broken,
"If thou wilt chide, thy lips shall never open."
He burns with bashful shame, she with her tears
Both quench the manner burning of his cheeks;
Then with her windy sighs, and golden hairs,
To fan and blow them dry again she seeks:
He says, she is immodest, blames her miss;
What follows more, she matches with a kiss.
Even as an empty eagle, sharp by fast,
Turns with her beats on feathers, flesh and bone,
Shaking her wings, devouring all in haste,
I till either gorge be stuff'd, or prey be gone;
Even so she kiss'd his brow, his cheek, his chin,
And where she ends, she doth anew begin.
For'd to content, but never to obey,
Pasting he lies, and breathing to her face;
She feedeth on the steam, as on a prey,
And calls it heavenly moisture, surf of grace.
Wishing her cheeks were gardens full of flowers,
So they were dews'd with such distilling showers.
Look how a bird lies tangled in a net,
So fasten'd in her arms Adonis lies;
Pure shame and seemed resistance made him fret,
Which bred more beauty in his angry eyes:
Thain added to a river that is rank,
Perforce will force it overflow the bank.
Still she entreats, and prettily entreats,
Far to a pretty ear she tunes her tale;
still is he sullen, still he lowe's and frets.
Twist crimson shame and anger, why pale;
Being red, she loves him best; and being white,
Her best is bester'd with a more delight.
Look how he can, she cannot choose but love;
And by her fair immortal land she swears
From his soft bosom never to remove,
Till he take truce with her contending tears,
Which long have ran'd, making her cheeks all wet;
And one sweet kiss shall pay this countless debt.
Upon this promise did he raise his chin,
Like a di-appeter peering through a wave,
Who being look'd on, doth seem a quack'y fin;
So offers he to give what she did crave;
But when her lips were ready for his pay,
He winks, and turns his lips another way.

5 K
VENUS AND ADONIS.

Never did passenger in summer's heat
More thirst for drink, than she for this good turn.
Her help she sees, but help she cannot get;
She bathes in water, yet in fire must burn:
'Tis pitch, 'gan she cry, 'flint, burnt nay, nay;
'Tis but a kiss I beg; 'why art thou coy?
I have been woad, as I entreat thee now,
Even by the stern and direful god of war,
Whose sinewy neck in battle ne'er did bow,
Who conquers where he comes, in every jar;
Yet hath he been my captive and my slave,
And begg'd for that which thou unask'd shall have.

Over my altars hath he hung his lance,
His bated shield, his uncontroll'd crest,
And for my sake hath learned to sport and dance,
To coy, to wanton, dally, smile, and jest;
Scorning her churlish drum, and enraged red,
Making his arms his field, his tent my bed.
Thus him that over-rul'd, I oversway'd,
Leading him prisoner in a red-rose chain:
Strong-temper'd steel his stronger strength obey'd,
Yet was he servile to my coy disdain.
O be not proud, nor brag not of thy might,
For mastring her that foil'd the god of light.
Touch but my lips with those fair lips of thine,
(Though mine be not so fair, yet are they red.)
The kiss shall be thine own as well as mine:
What see'st thou in the ground? hold up thy head;
Look in mine eye-ball's where thy beauty lies:
Then why not lips on lips, since eyes on eyes?
Art thou ashamed to kiss? then wink again,
And I will wink, so shall the day seem night;
Love keeps his revels where there be but twain,
Be bold to play, our sport is not in sight:
These blue-veind violet's whereon we lean,
Never can blab, nor know they what we mean.

The tender spring upon thy tempting lip
Shews thee unripe; yet may'st thou well be tasted;
Make use of time, let not advantage slip;
Beauty within itself should not be wasted;
Fair flowers that are not gather'd in their prime,
Rot and consume themselves in little time.
Were I hard-favour'd, foul, or wrinkled-old,
Ill-natur'd, crooked, churlish, harsh in voice,
O'er-worn, despised, rheumatic and cold,
Thick-sighted, barren, lean, and lacking juice,
Then might'st thou pause, for then I were not for thee;
But having no defects, why dost abhor me?

Thou canst not see one wrinkle in my brow;
Mine eyes are grey, and bright, and quick in turning;
My beauty as the spring doth yearly grow,
My fleshy soft and plump, my marrow burning;
My smooth moist hand, were it with thy hand felt,
Would in thy palm dissolve, or seem to melt.
Bid me discourse, I will enchant thine ear,
Or, like a fairy, trip upon the green,
Or, like a nymph, with long dishevell'd hair,
Dance on the sands, and yet no footing seen:
Love is a spirit all compact of fire,
Not gross to sink, but light, and will aspire.
Witness this primrose bank whereon I lie;
These forceless flowers, like sturdy trees support me.
Two strengthless doves will draw me through the sky,
From morn till night, even where I list, to sport me:
Is love so light, sweet boy, and may it be
That thou shouldst think it heavy unto thee?

'Is thine own heart to thine own face affected?
Can thy right hand seize love upon thy left?
Then woo thyself, be of thyself rejected,
Steal thine own freedom, and complain of theft.

Narcissus so, himself himself forsook,
And dy'd to kiss his shadow in the brook.
Torch's are made to light, jewels to wear,
Dainties to taste, fresh beauty for the use,
Hero's for their smell, and sappy plants to hear;
Things growing to themselves are growth's abuse:
Seeds spring from seeds, and beauty breedeth beauty,
Thou wert begot—to get it is thy duty.

Upon the earth's increase why shouldst thou feed,
Unless the earth with thy increase be fed?
By law of Nature thou art bound to breed,
That thine may live, when thou thyself art dead;
And so in spite of death thou dost survive,
In that thine likeness still is left alive."

By this, the love-sick queen began to sweat,
For, where they lay, the shadow had forsook them.
And Titan, tired in the mid-day heat,
With burning eye did hotly overlook them;
Wishing Adonis had his team to guide,
So he were like him, and by Venus' side.
And now Adonis, with a lazy spright,
And with a heavy, dark, disliking eye,
His low'ring brows o'erwhelming his fair sight,
Like misty vapours, when they blot the sky,
Souring his cheeks, cries, "Fie! no more of love;
The sun doth burn my face; I must remove."

"Ah me, (quoth Venus) young, and so unkind!
What bare excuses mak'st thou to be gone!
I'll sigh celestial breath, whose gentle wind
Shall cool the heat of this descending sun;
I'll make a shadow for thee of my hairs:
If they burn too, I'll quench them with my tears.
The sun that shines from heaven, shines but warm,
And lo, I lie between that sun and thee;
The heat I have from thence doth little barm,
Thine eye darts forth the fire that burneth me:
And were I not immortal, life were done,
Between this heavenly and earthly sun.
Art thou obdurate, flinty, hard as steel,
Nay more than first, for stone at rain relenteth?
Art thou a woman's son, and cannot feel

What 'tis to love! how want of love tormenteth?
O had thy mother borne so bad a mind,
She had not brought forth thee, but died unkind.
What am I, that thou'st content me this?
Or what great danger doth upon my suit?
What were thy lips the worse for one poor kiss?
Speak, fair; but speak fair words, or else he mute.
Give me one kiss, I'll give it thee again,
And one for interest, if thou wilt have twain.

Fie, lifeless picture, cold and senseless stone,
Well painted idol, image, dull and dead,
Statue, contenting but the eye alone.
Thing like a man, but of no woman bred;
Thou art no man, though of a man's complexion,
For men will kiss even by their own direction."

This said, impatience chokes her pleading tongue,
And swelling passion doth provoke a pause;
Red cheeks and fiery eyes blaze forth her wrong;
Being judge in love, she cannot right her cause;
And now she weeps, and now she fairest would speak,
And now her sobs do her intentions break.
Sometimes she shakes her head, and then his hand,
Now gazeth she on him, now on the ground;
Sometimes her arms inform him like a band;
She would, he will not in her arms be bound;
And when from thence he struggles to be gone,
She locks her loving fingers, in one in.
VENUS AND ADONIS.

"Fondling, she said, since I have hemm'd thee here, Within the circuit of this ivory pale, I'll be the park, and thou shalt be my deer; Feed where thou wilt, on mountain or in dale; Graze on my lips; and if those hills be dry, Stray lower, where the pleasant fountains lie. Within this limit is relief enough, Sweet bottom-grass, and high delightful plain, Round rising hillocks, brakes obscure and rough, To shelter thee from tempest and from rain; This is my deer, since I am such a park; No dog shall rouse thee, though thou thousand bark." At this Adonis smiles, as in disdain, That in each cheek appears a pretty dimple; Love made those hollows, if himself were slain, He might be buried in a tomb so simple; Fore-knowing well, if there he came to lie, Why there love liv'd, and there he could not die. These lovely caves, these round-encircling pits, Open'd their mouths to swallow Venus' liking: Being mad before, how doth she now for wits! Struck dead at first, what needs should she thrive? Poor queen of love, to thine own law forlorn, To love a cheek that smiles at thee in scorn! Now which way shall she turn! what shall she say? Her words are done, her woes the more increas'd, The time is spent, her object will away, And from her twining arms doth urge releasing: "Pity—(she cries) some favour—some remorse."— Away his springs, and kasteth to his horse. But lo, from forth a cope that neighbours by, A breeding jennet, lusty, young, and proud, Adonis' trampling courser doth esp'y, And forth she rushes, snarls, and neighs aloud; The strong-neck'd steed, being tied unto a tree, Breaketh his rein, and to her straight goes he. Imperiously he leaps, he neighs, he bounds, And now his woen girts he breaks asunder, The bearing earth with his hard hoof he wounds, Whose hollow womb resounds like heaven's thunder; This iron bit he crushes 'tween his teeth, Concerning what he was controll'd with, His ears up prick'd; his braded hanging mane Upon his compass'd crest now stands on end; His nostrils drink the air, and forth again, As from a furnace, vapours doth he send: His eye, which glisters scornfully like fire, Shews his hot courage and his high desire. Sometimes he trots, as if he told the steps, With gentle majesty, and modest pride; Anon he rears upright, curvets and leaps, As who would says, lo! thus my strength is try'd; And thus I do to captivate the eye Of the fair breeder that is standing by. What rebeck he his rider's angry stir, His flattering holla, or his Stand, I say? What care he now for curb, or pricking spur? For rich caparisons, or trappings gay! He sees his love, and nothing else he sees, For nothing else with his proud sight agrees. Look, when a painter would surpass the life, In limning out a well-proportion'd steed, His art with Nature's workmanship at strife, As if the dead the living should exceed; So did this horse excel a common one, In shape, in courage, colour, pace, and borne. Round-hoof'd, short-jointed, fetlocks long and long, Breast broad, full eyes, small head, and nostril wide, High crest, short ears, straight legs, & passing strong, Thin mane, thick tail, broad buttock, tender hide: Look what a horse should have, he did not lack; Save a proud rider on so proud a back. Sometimes he scuds far off, and there he stars, Anon he starts at stirring of a feather; To bid the wind a base he now prepares, And when he run, or fly, they knew not whether: For through his mane and tail the high wind sings, Fanning the hairs, who wave like feather'd wings. He looks upon his love, and neighs unto her; She answers him, as if she knew his mind: Being proud, as females are, to see him woo her, She puts on outward strangeness, seems unkund; Spurns at his love, and scorns the heat he feels, Beating his kind embracement with her heels. Then, like a melancholy male content, He vails his tail, that like a falling plume, Cool shadow to his melting buttsck lent; He stamps and bites the poor flies in his fume! His love perceiving how he is enrag'd, Grew kinder, and his fury was assag'd. His fiery master goeth about to take him; Where lo, the unback'd breeder, full of fear, Jealous of catching, swiftly doth forsake him; With her he horse, and left Adonis there: As they were mad, unto the wood they hie them, Out-stripping crows that strive to over-fly them. All swola with chasing, down Adonis sits, Banaing his boisterous and unruly beast; And now the happy season once more fits, That love-sick Love, by pleasing may be blest; For lovers say, the heart hath treble wrong, Which is the bane of the balance of the tongue. An oven that is stopp'd, or river stay'd, Burneth more hotly, swelleth with more rage; So of concealed sorrow may be said; Free vent of words love's fire doth assuage; But when the heart's attorney once is mute, The client breaks, as desperate in his suit. He sees her coming, and begins to glow, (Even as a dying coal revived with wind,) And with his bonnet hides his angry brow; Looks on the dull earth with distrait mind; Taking no notice that she is so nigh, For all askance he holds her in his eye. O what a sight it was, wistly to view How she came stealing to the wayward boy! To note the fighting conflict of her hue! How white and red each other did destroy! But now, her cheek was pale, and by and by It flash'd forth fire, as lightning from the sky. Now was she just before him as he sat, And like a lowly lover down she kneels; With one fair hand she heareth up his hat, Her other tender hand his fair cheek feels: His tender cheeks receive her soft hand's print, As apt as new fallen snow takes any dint. O what a war of looks was then between them? Her eyes, petitioners, to his eyes suing: His eyes saw her eyes as they had not seen them; Her eyes wou'd still, his eyes disdain'd the woeing: And all this dumb play had his acts made plain With her eyes, which, cherub-like, her eyes did rain. Full gently now she takes him by the hand, A lady prison'd in a gird of snow, Or ivory in an alabaster band: So white a friend engirts so white a foc: This beauteous combat, wilful and unwilling, She'd like to silver doves that sit a billing.
Long a we fret o'er our untold story
And as we speak, the words fly away.
I dreamt of love, to make our story
Felt as the wind, as the waves today.

Peace we seek, to let our story
Live as the sun, in every way.
I feel a heart that can be
A place to rest, among the trees.

A story of life, a tale of love,
A dream of hope, a song of peace.
In this world, we search for love,
A place to call our own.

The beauty of life, the strength of love,
A journey of worth, in every way.
We seek a place, where we can
A story of hope, a tale of peace.

Peace we seek, to let our story
Live as the sun, in every way.
I feel a heart that can be
A place to rest, among the trees.

A story of life, a tale of love,
A dream of hope, a song of peace.
In this world, we search for love,
A place to call our own.

The beauty of life, the strength of love,
A journey of worth, in every way.
We seek a place, where we can
A story of hope, a tale of peace.

Peace we seek, to let our story
Live as the sun, in every way.
I feel a heart that can be
A place to rest, among the trees.

Set the deceiving harmony should run into the quiter closure of my heart;
And then my little heart were quite undone.
In his bed-chamber to be bared of rest.
No, lady, no; my heart longs not to grow,
But soundly sleeps, while now it sleeps alone.
What have you urged that I cannot reprove?
The path is smooth that leadeth unto danger;
I hate not love, but your device in love,
That lends embraces unto every stranger.
You do it for increase; 'tis strange enough
What folly, what petulance, to think so long.
Call it not love, for love to heaven is fed,
Some swelling lust on earth usurps his name;
Under whose simple semblance he hath fed
Upon fresh beauty, blighting it with shame;
Which the hot tyrant stains, and soon bereaves,
As caterpillars do the tender leaves.

Love comforteth, like sun-shine after rain;
But lent's effect is tempest after sun,
Love's gentle spring doubt doth always fresh remain,
Lust's winter comes ere summer be done.
Love surfeits not; just like a glutton does;
Love is all truth; but full of forged lies.
More I could tell, but more I dare not say;
The text is old, the orator too green.
Therefore, in sadness, now I will away;
My face is full of shame, my heart of keen;
Mine ears that to your wanton talk attended,
Do burn themselves for having so offended.
With this, he breaketh from the sweet embrace
Of those fair arms which bound him to her breast.
And housethward through the dark lawns runs space;
Leaves Love upon her back deeply distress'd.
Look how a bright star shooteth from the sky,
So gildes be in the night from Venus' eye.

Which after him she darts, as one on shore
Caring upon a late-embarked friend,
Till the wild waves will have him seen no more,
Whose ridges with the meeting clouds contend;
So did the merciless and pitiful wind
Fold in the object that did feed her sight.
Whereat amaz'd, as one that unaware
Hath dropped a precious jewel in the flood,
Or 'sround as night-wanderers often are,
Their light blown out in some mistastried wood;
Even so confounded in the dark she lay,
Having lost the fair discovery of her way.
And now she beats her heart, whereat it groans,
That all the neighbour-caves, as seeming troubled,
Make verbal repetition of her moans;
Passion on passion deeply is redoubled.
Ah me! she cries, and twenty times, woe, woe!
And twenty echoes twenty times cry so.

She marking them, begins a wailing noise,
And sings expressly a woeful ditty.
How love makes young maid thrill, and old men droop;
How love is wise in folly, foolish in woe.
Her heavy anthem still concludes in woe,
And still the echoes answer her so.
Her song was tedious, and overwore the night,
For love's bowers are long, though seeming short:
If pleased themselves, others they seem distinct;
In such like circumstance, with such like sport:
Their copious stories, often times began.
End without audience, and are never done.
For who hath the power to spend the night whilst,
But idle sounds, remowing parasites.
But shrill-ton'd lappers answering every call,

Soothing the humour of fantastic wins.
She said, thus; so, they answer all, thus so,
And would say after her, if she had said.

Lo! here the gentle lady, weary of rest.
From an arm, which seemeth moves up on light,
And waxes the unsung love whose inner breast
The sun illuminates magically;
Who doth the word so gently beheld.
That cedar-tops and all seem burnish'd gold.
Venus salutes him with this fair good morrow;
'0 thou clear god, and patron of the light;
From whose beams each beam, thy bow so sweetly bow,
The beams domestique that makes love a song,
There lives a son, that such an early mother,
May lend them light, as they drest next to other.
This said, she hastens to a myrtle grove.
Moving the morning is so much o'erween;
And yet she bears no tokens of her love;
She hear'sth for his sound, and for his bow.
Amor shears these, that are in her duty.
And all in view she couches to the cry.
And as the rays, the brother in the wave,
Some catch her by the neck, some kiss her face.
Some shrive about her thigh to make her stay,
She wildly breesthein from their strict embrace.

Like a milch doe, whose swelling dugs she sate,
Hastening to feed her fawn, and in some Brake.
By this, she bears the bowers are at bay,
Whereat she starts, like one that espies summer.
Wrack'd up in dull records, just in this way,
The fowle-watersthooth make him shane and shoulder.
Even so the tumorous religion of the winds.
Appeals her senses, and her spirit confounds.

For now she knows it is no gentle chance,
But the silent bow, rugged bear, or iron proof.
Because the cry remained in one place,
Where fearful she doys express abmond:
Finding their enemy to be so vast,
They all strait court sy who man, cope him first.
This dismal cry rings sadly in her ear,
Through which it enters to surprise her heart,
Who are bowed by doubt and bloodiness feel.
With cleft-pace weakness, sends each falling part.
Like soldiers, when their captain once did yield,
They basely fly, and dare not stay the hoard.

Thus stands she in a trembling enemy,
This checking up her senses were disposed,
She tells them, in a careless fancy,
And childish error that they are traitors.
Each them leave pressing with them their no more —
And with that word she up'd the trained-hound.
Whose frothy mouth besprinkled all with spit,
Like blown and blood-drawing mangled-beast together,
A terror over every where enters and spreads.
Wherein may serve she knows not what wonder:—
This way she runs, and now she will no other,
But back restores the bow for murther.
A thousand spleen bear her a thousand ways.
She troth'd — she says — that the answer lies again.
Her more than love is masked with delays
Like the proceedings of a drunken bear:
For of respect, yet not at all respecting,
In land with all things, steeped at and depoicting.
Her head in a bow, she finds a bound.
And asks the weary cape of his murther.
And there another bearing of his wracks.
Gainst restor'd these only sovereign pleasures.
And here she meets another eagle swaying.
To whom she opens, and be replies with howing.
When he had ceased his ill-resounding noise,
Another flap-mouth'd mourner, black and grim,
Against the welkin voids out his voice;
Another and another answer him,
Clapping their proud tails to the ground below,
Shaking their stretch'd ears, bleeding as they go.

Look, how the world's poor people are amazed
At apparitions, signs, and prodigies,
Whence with fearful eyes they long have gazed,
Infusing them with dreadful prophecies;
So she at these sad signs draws up her breath,
And, sighing it again, exclaims on death.

Hard-favour'd earth, its worm, what dost thou
To stifle beauty, and to steal his breath, [mean
Who when he liv'd, his breath and beauty set
Gloss on the rose, smell to the violet?

If he be dead,—O no, it cannot be,
Seeing his beauty, thou shouldst strike at it—
O yes, it may be seen by thee to see,
But hatefully at random dost thou hit,
Thy mark is feeble age; but thy false dart
Mistakes that aim, and cleaves an infant's heart.

Hadst thou but bid beware, then he had spoke,
And hearing him, thy power had lost his power.
The destinies will curse thee for this stroke;
They bid thee reap a weed, thou pluck'st a flower:
Love's golden arrow at him should have fled,
And not death's ebon dart, to strike him dead.

Dost thou drink tears, that thou provok'st such weep.
What may a heavy groan advantage thee! [ing
Why hast thou cast into eternal sleeping
Those eyes that taught all other eyes to see?
Now Nature cares not for thy mortal vigour,
Since her best work is ruin'd with thy rigour.

Here overcome, as one full of despair,
She veil'd her eye-lids, who, like slaves, stopp'd
The crystal tide that from her two cheeks fair
In the sweet channel of her bosom dropp'd;
But through the flood-gates breaks the silver rain,
And with his strong course opens them again.

O how her eyes and tears did lend and borrow!
Her eyes seen in her tears, tears in her eye;
Both together, where they dwell'd each other's sorrow,
Sorrow, that friendly sighs somght still to dry;
But like a stormy day, now wind now rain,
Sigh's dry her cheeks, tears make them wet again.

Variable passions through her constant woe,
As striving which should best become her grief;
All entertain'd, each passion labours so,
That every present sorrow seemeth chief,
But none is best; then join they all together,
Like many clouds consulting for foul weather.

By this, far off she hears some huntsman holla;
A mar'st's song ne'er pleas'd her bale so well:
The dire imagination she did follow
This sound of hope doth labour to expell;
For now reviving joy bids her rejoice,
And flatters her, it is Adonis' voice,
Whereat her tears began to turn their tide,
Being prison'd in her eye, like pearls in glass;
Yet sometimes falls an orient drop beside,
Which her cheek melts, as scorching it should pass,
To wash the foul face of the sluttish ground,
Who is but drunken when she seemeth drown'd.

O hard-believing love, how strange it seems
Not to believe, and yet too credulous!
Thy weal and woe are both of them extremes,
Despair and hope make thee ridiculous:
The one doth flatter thee in thoughts unlikely,
With likely thoughts the other kills thee quickly.
Now she unweaves the web that she had wrought;
Adonis lives, and death is not to blame;
It was not she that call'd him all to naught;
Now she adds honour to his hateful name;
She clepes him king of graves, and grave for kings,
Imperial supreme of all mortal things.

No, no, (quoth she) Sweet death, I did but jest;
Yet when I spake, I felt a kind of fear,
When as I met the boar, that bloody beast,
Which knows no pity, but is still severe:
Then, gentle shadow, (truth I must confess)
I rai'd on thee, fearing my love's decease.
'Tis not my fault: the boar provok'd my tongue;
Be wreak'd on him, invisible commander;
'Tis he, foul creature, that hath done thee wrong;
I did but act, he's author of thy slander:
Grief hath two tongues, and never woman yet
Could guide them both, without the ten women's wit.

Thus hoping that Adonis is alive,
Her reason suspect she doth extenuate;
And that his beauty may the better thrive,
With death she humbly doth insinuate;
Tell's him of trophies, statues, tombs; and stories
His victories, his triumphs, and his glories.

O Jove, quoth she, how much a fool was I,
To be of such a weak and silly mind,
To wail his death, who lives, and must not die,
Till mutual overthrow of mortal kind!
For he being dead, with him is beauty slain,
And, beauty dead, black chaos comes again.

Fie, fie, fond love, thou art so full of fear,
As one with treasure laden, hemm'd with thieves;
Trikes, unwitness'd with eye or ear,
Thy coward heart with false bethinking griefs.
Even at this word she hears a worry horn,
Whereat she leaps, that was but late forlorn.
As faulcon to the lure, away she flies;
The grass stoops not, she treads on it so light;
And in her haste unfortunately spoils
The foul bear's conquest on her fair delight;
What she seens, her eyes, as murder'd with the view,
Like stars ashamed of day, themselves withdrew.
Or, as the snail, whose tender horns being hit,
Shirks backward in his shelly cave with pain,
And there, all smother'd in shade doth sit,
Long after fearing to creep forth again;
So, at his bloody view, her eyes are fled
Into the deep dark cabins of her head,
Where they resign their office and their light
To the disposing of her troubled brain;
Who bids them still consort with ugly sight,
And never wound the heart with looks again;
Who, like a king perplexed in his throne,
By their suggestion gives a deadly groan.

Whereat each tributary subject quakes;
As when the wind, imprison'd in the ground,
Struggling for passage, earth's foundation shakes,
Which with cold terrors doth men's mind confound.
This mutiny each part doth so surprises,
That from their dark base, once more, leap her eyes;
And, being open'd, there unwilling sight
Upon the wide wound that the boar had trench'd
In his soft flank; whose wonted lily white
With purple tears, that his wound wept, wadrench'd;
No flower was nigh, no grass, herb, leaf, or weed,
But stole his blood, and seem'd with him to bleed.
This solemn sympathy poor Venus noteth;
Over one shoulder doth she hang her head;
Dumbly she passions, frantically she doteth;
She thinks he could not die, he is not dead.
Her voice is stopp'd, her joints forget to bow;
Her eyes are mad that they have wept till now.

Upon his hurt she looks so steadfastly,
That her sight dazzling makes the wound seem three;
And then she reprehend her mangling eye,
That makes more gashes where no breach should be:
His face seems twain, each several limb is doubled,
For oft the eye mistakes, the brain being troubled.

My tongue cannot express my grief for one,
And yet, quoth she, beheld two Adonis dead!
My sighs are blown away, my salt tears gone,
Mine eyes are turn'd to fire, my heart to lead:
Heavy heart's lead melt at mine eyes, as fire!
So shall I die by drops of hot desire.

Alas, poor world, what trouble hast thou lost!
What face remains alive that's worth viewing?
Whose tongue is music now? what canst thou bowst
Of things long since, or anything ensuing?
The flowers are sweet, their colours fresh and trim;
But true-sweet beauty liv'd and dy'd in him.

Bonnet or veil henceforth no creature wear!
Nor sun nor wind will ever strive to kiss you:
Having no fair to lose, you need not fear;
The sun doth scorn you, and the wind doth kiss you:
But when Adonis liv'd, sun and sharp air
Lurk'd like two thieves, to rob him of his fair;

And therefore would he put his bonnet on,
Under whose brim the gaudy sun would peep;
The wind would blow it off, and, being gone,
Play with his locks; then would Adonis weep:
And straight, in pity of his tender years,
They both would strive who first should dry his tears.

To see his face, the lion walk'd along
Behind some hedge, because he would not fear him;
To recreate himself, when he hath sung,
The tiger would be tame, and gently bear him:
If he be spoke, the wolf would leave his prey,
And never fright the silly lamb that day.

When he beheld his shadow in the brook,
The fishes spread on it their golden gills;
When he was by, the birds such pleasure took,
That some would sing, some other in their bills
Would bring him mulberries, and ripe red cherries;
He fed them with his sight, they him with berries.

But this foul, grim, and urchin-snouted bear,
Whose downward eye still looketh for a grave,
Ne'er saw the beauteous livery that he wore;
Witness the entertainment that he gave;
If he did see his face, why then I know,
He thought to kiss him, and hath kill'd him so.

Tis true, 'tis true; thus was Adonis slain;
He ran upon the bear with his sharp spear,
Who would not whet his teeth at him again,
But by a kiss thought to persuade him there;
And nuzzling in his flank, the loving swine
Sheath'd, unaware, his task in his soft groin.

Had I been tooth'd like him, I must confess
With kissing him I should have kill'd him first;
But he is dead, and never did he bless
My youth with his; the more I am accurst.
With this she falleth in the place she stood,
And stains her face with his congealed blood.

She looks upon his lips, and they are pale;
She takes him by the hand, and that is cold;
She whispers in his ear, a heavy tale,
As if he heard the woeful words she told:
She lifts the coffer-lids that close his eyes,
Where, lo! two lamps, burnt out, in darkness lies.

Two glasses, where herself herself beheld a thousand times, and now no more reflect;
Their virtue lost, wherein they late exceld;
And every beauty robb'd of his effect:
Wonder of time, quoth she, this is my spite,
That, you being dead, the day should yet be light.

Since thou art dead, lo! here I prophesy,
Sorrow on love hereafter shall attend;
It shall be waited on with jealousy,
Find sweet beginning, but unsavoury end;
Ne'er settled equally, to high or low;
That all love's pleasure shall not match his woe.

It shall be fickle, false, and full of fraud,
And shall be blasted in a breathing while;
The bottom poison, and the top o'erstraw'd
With sweets, that shall the sharpest sight beguile:
The wasting body shall it make most weak,
Strike the wise dumb, and teach the fool to speak.

It shall be sparing, and too full of riot,
teaching desorrect age to tread the measures;
The staring ruffian shall it keep in quiet,
Pluck down the rich, enrich the poor with treasures:
It shall be raging-mad, and silly-mild,
Make the young old, the old become a child.

It shall suspect, where is no cause of fear;
It shall not fear, where it should most mistrust;
It shall be mercifull, and too severe,
And most deceiving, when it seems most just;
Perverse it shall be, when it seems most toward,
Put fear to valour, courage to the coward.

It shall be cause of war, and dire events,
And set dissension twixt the son and sire;
Subject and servile to all discontentments,
As dry combustious matter is to fire;
Sith in his prime death did my love destroy,
They that love best, their love shall not enjoy.

By this, the boy that by her side lay kill'd,
Was melted like a vapour from her sight to view;
And in his blood that on the ground lay spill'd,
A purple flower sprung up, chequer'd with white;
Resembling well his pale cheeks, and the blood
Which in round drops upon their whiteness stood.

She bows her head, the new-sprung flower to smell,
Comparing it to her Adonis' breath;
And says, within her bosom it shall dwell,
Since he himself is rest from her by death;
She drops the stalk, and in the breathless gape
Green dropping sap, which she compares to tears.

Poor flower, quoth she, this was thy father's guise,
(Sweet issue of a more sweet-smelling sire)
For every little grief to wet his eyes:
To grow unto himself was his desire,
And so 'tis thine; but know, it is as good
To wither in my breast, as in his blood.

Here was thy father's bed, here in my breast;
Thou art the next of blood, and 'tis thy right:
Lo! in this hollow cradle take thy rest.
My throbbing heart shall rock thee day and night;
There shall not be one minute of an hour,
Wherein I will not kiss my sweet love's flower.

Thus weary of the world, away she hies,
And yokes her silver doves; by whose swift aid
Their mistress maimed, through the empty skies
In her light chariot quickly is convey'd,
Holding their course to Paphos, where their queen
Means to immure herself, and not be seen.
THE RAPE OF LUCEEE.

TO THE RIGHT HONOURABLE HENRY WRIETHESLY,
Earl of Southampton, and Baron of Titchfield.

The love I dedicate to your Lordship is without end; whereof this pamphlet, without beginning, is but a superficial moiety. The warrant I have of your honourable disposition, not the worth of my untutored lines, makes it assured of acceptance. What I have done is yours, what I have to do is yours; being part in all I have devoted yours. Were my worth greater, he should shew greater: mean time, as it is, it is bound to your Lordship, to whom I wish long life, still lengthened with all happiness.

Your Lordship's in all duty,

WILLIAM SHAKESPEARE.

THE ARGUMENT.

LUCIUS TARQUINIUS (for his excessive pride surnamed Superbus) after he had cause his own father-in-law, Servius Tullius, to be cruelly murdered, and, contrary to the Roman laws and customs, not requiring or staying for the people's suffrages, laid possession of the kingdom; went, accompanied with his sons and other noblemen of Rome, to beseech Ardea. During which siege, the principal men of the army meeting one evening at the tent of basea Tarquiniius, the king's son, in their discourses after supper, every one commended the virtues of his own wife; amongst whom Collatius extolled the incomparable chastity of his wife Lucretia. In that pleasant humour they all posted to Rome; and intending, by their secret and sudden arrival, to make trial of that which every one had before avouched, only Collatius finds his wife (though it were late in the night) means among his other maids; the other ladies were all found dancing and revelling, or in several delights. Whereupon the boldness yielded Collatius the victory; and his wife the fame. At that time Servius Tarquiniius being inflamed with Lucrece's beauty, yet smothering his passions for the present, departed with the rest back to the camp; from whence he shortly after privately withdrew himself, and was (according to his estate) royally encurtained and lodged by Lucrece at Collatium. The same night he treacherously stoweth into her chamber, violently revolsheth her, and early in the morning speedeth away. Lucrece in this lamentably plight, hastily dispatched messengers, one to Rome for her father, another to the camp for Collatine. They came, the one accompanied with Julius Brutus, the other with Publius Varro; and finding Lucrece attir'd in mourning habit, demanded the cause of her sorrows. She, first taking as oath of them for her revenge, revealed the actor, and withal suddenly stabbed herself. Which done, with one consent they all vowed to root out the whole hated family of the Tarquins; and hearing the dead body to Rome, Brutus acquainted the people with the forned matter of the late occurrences, with a bitter invective against the tyranny of the king; wherefore the people were so moved, that with one consent and a general acclamation the Tarquins were all exild, and the state government changed from kings to consuls.

From the besieged Ardea all in post,
Borne by the trustless wings of false desire,
Last-breathed Tarquin leaves the Roman host,
And to Collatium bears the lightless fire,
Which, in pale embers bides, lurks to aspire,
And girdle with embracing flames the waist
Of Collatine's fair love, Lucrece the chaste.

Haply that name of chase unhappily set
This baseless edge on his keen appetite;
When Collatine unwisely did not let
To praise the clear unwrinkled red and white
Which triumph'd in that sky of his delight,
Where mortal stars, as bright as heaven's beauties,
With pure aspects did him peculiar duties.
For he the night before, in Tarquin's tent,
Unlock'd the treasure of his happy state;
What priceless wealth the heavens had him lent
In the possession of his beauteous mate;
Reckoning his fortune at such high-prond rate,
That kings might be espoused to more fame,
But king nor peer to such a peerless dame.
O happiness enjoy'd but of a few!
And, if possess'd, as soon decayed and done
As is the morning's silver-melting dew
Against the golden splendour of the sun!
An expir'd date, cancel'd ere well begun:
Honour and beauty in the owner's arms.
Are weakly fortress'd from a world of harms.
Beauty itself doth of itself persuade
The eyes of men without an orator;
What needeth then apology be made
To set forth that which is so singular?
Or why is Collatine the publisher
Of that rich jewel he should keep unknown
From thievish ears, because it is his own?
Perchance his boast of Lucrece's sovereignty
Suggested this proud issue of a king;
For by our ears our hearts oft tainted be:
Perchance that envy of so rich a thing,
Braving compare, disdainfully did sting
[vaunt His high-pitch'd thoughts, that meaner men should
The golden haps which their superiors want.
But some unthyme thought did instigate
His all-too-timeless speed, if none of those:
His honour, his affairs, his friends, his state,
Neglected all, with swift intent he goes
To quench the coal which in his liver glows.
O rash false heart, wrap't in repentant cold,
Thy hasty spring still blasts, and ne'er grows old!
When at Collatium this false lord arrived,
Well was he welcome'd by the Roman dame,
Within whose face beauty and virtue strive'd
Which of them both should underprop her fame;
When virtue bragg'd, beauty would blush for shame;
When beauty boasted blushes, in despite
Virtue would stain that o'er with silver white.
But beauty, in that white intituled,
From Venus' doves both challenge that fair field;
Then virtue claims from beauty beauty's red,
Which virtue gave the golden rose, to girl
Their silver checks, and call'd it then their shield;
Teaching them thus to use it in the fight,—
When shame assaill'd, the red should fence the white.
This heraldry in Lucrece's face was seen,
Argued by beauty's red, and virtue's white.
Of either's colour was the other queen,
Proving from world's minority their right:
Yet their ambition makes them still to fight;
The sovereignty of either being so great;
That oft they interchange each other's seat.
This silent war of lilies and of roses
Which Tarquin view'd in her fair face's field,
In their pure ranks his traitor eye encloses;
Where, lest between them both it should be kill'd,
The coward captive vanquish'd doth yield
To those two armies that would let him go,
Rather than triumph in so false a foe.
Now thinks he that her husband's shallow tongue
(The niggard prodigy that prais'd her so)
In that high task hath done her beauty wrong;
Which far exceeds his barren skil to shew:
Therefore that praise which Collatine doth owe,
Enchanted Tarquin answers with surmise,
In silent wonder of still-gazing eyes.
This earthly saint, adored by this devil,
Little suspecteth the false worshipper;
For though his unsight, all for a hollow dream on evil;
Birds never lim'd no secret bushes fear:
So guiltless she scarcely gives good cheer
And reverend welcome to her princely guest,
Whose inward ill no outward harm express'd.
For that he colour'd with his high estate,
Hiding base sin in plait's of majesty;
That nothing in him seem'd inordinate,
Stev sometime too much wonder of his eye,
Which, having all, all could not satisfy;
But, poorly rich, so wanteth in his store,
That cloy'd with much, he pigheth still for more.
But she that never cop'd with stranger eyes,
Could pick no meaning from their parling looks,
Nor read the subtile-shining secrecy
Writ in the glassy margents of such books;
She touch'd no unknown baits, nor fear'd no hooks;
Nor could she moralize his wanton sight,
More than his eyes were open'd to the light.

He stories to her ears her husband's fame,
Won in the fields of fruitful Italy;
And decks with praises Collatine's high name,
Made glorious by his manly chivalry,
With broised arms and wreaths of victory:
Her joy with heav'd-up hand she doth express,
And, wordless, so greets heaven for his success.
Far from the purpose of his coming thither,
He makes excuses for his being there.
No cloudy show of stormy blustering weather
Doth yet in his fair welkin once appear;
Till saile Night, mother of Dread and Fear,
Upon the world dim darkness doth display,
And in her vanity prison stows the day.
For then is Tarquin brought unto his bed,
Intending weariness with heavy spright;
For, after supper, long he questioned
With modest Lucrece, and wore out the night:
Now laden slumber with life's strength doth fight;
And every one to rest himself betakes, 't块es.
Save thieves, and cares, and troubled minds that
As one of which doth Tarquin lie revolving
The sundry dangers of his will's obtaining;
Yet ever to obtain his will resolving,
Though weak-built hopes persuade him to abstaining;
Despair to gain, doth traffic off for gaining;
And when great treasure is the need proposed,
The' death be abject, there's no death supposed.
Those that much covet, are with gain so fond,
That what they have not (that which they possess)
They scatter and lose it from their bond,
And so, by hoping more, they have but less;
Or gaining more, the profit of excess
Is but to surfeit, and such griefs sustain;
That they prove bankrupt in this poor-rich gain.
The aim of all is but to nurse the life
With honour, wealth, and ease, in wasting age;
And in this aim there is such thwarting strife,
That none for all, or for one wage;
As life for honour, in fell battles' rage
Honour for wealth; and oft that wealth doth cost
The death of all, and altogether lost.

So that in vent'ring ill, we leave to be
The things we are, for that which we expect;
And this ambitious foul inconstancy,
In having much, torments us with defect
Of that we have: so then we do neglect
The thing we have, and, all for want of wit,
Make something nothing, by augmenting it.
Such hazard now must dotting Tarquin make,
Pawning his honour to obtain his Jest;
And for himself, himself he must forsake:
Then where is truth, if there be no self-trust?
When shall he think to find a stranger just,
When he himself himself confounds, betrays
To slanderous tongues, and wretched hateful days?
Now stole upon the time the dead of night,
When heavy sleep had clos'd up mortal eyes;
No comfortable star did lend his light,
No noise but owls' and wolves' death-boding cries:
Now serves the season that they may surprise
The silly lambs, pure thoughts are dead and still,
While Jest and nuder wake to stain and kill.
And now this lustful lord leap'd from his bed,
Throwing his mantle rudely o'er his arm,
Is madly toss'd between desire and dread;
The one sweetly flatters, the other feareth harm,
But honest Fear, bewitch'd with lost's foul charm.
Doth too too oft betake him to retire,
Beaten away by brain-sick rude Desire.
His falchion on a flint he softly smiteh,
That from the cold stone sparks of fire do fly;
Whereat a waxen torch forthwith be lighteth,
Which must be lode-star to his lustful eye:
And to the flame this speaks adviselly:
As from this cold flint I e'foreth this fire,
So Lucrece must I force to my desire.
Here pale with fear he doth premeditate
The dangers of his loathsome enterprise,
And in his inward mind he doth debate
What following sorrow may on this arise:
Then looking scornfully, he doth despise
His naked armory of still-slaughter'd jest,
And justly thus controls his thoughts unjust
Fair torch, burn out thy light, and lend it not
To darken her whose light excelleth thine! And die unhallow'd thoughts, before you blot
With your uncleanness that which is divine!
Offer pure incense to so pure a shrine:
Let fair humanity abhor the deed
That spots and stains love's modest snow-white
O shame to knighthood and to shaming arms!
O foul dishonour to my household's grave!
O impious act, including all foul harms!
A martial man to be so fine a slave!
Tme valour still a true respect should have;
Then my digression is so vile, so base,
That it will live engraven in my face.
Yea, though I die, the scandal will survive,
And be an eye-sore in my golden coat;
Some loathsome drop the herald will contrive,
To cipher me, how fondly I did dote;
That my posterity, shan't with the note,
Shall curse my bones, and hold it for no sin
To wish that I their father had not been.
What win I, if I gain the thing I seek?
A dream, a breath, a froth of fleeting joy;
Who buys a minute's mirth to wait a week?
Or sells eternity, to get this joy?
For one of these who take all for a wage.
Or what fond beggar, but to touch the crown,
Would with the sceptre straight be stricken down?
With his thought her heavenly image sits,
And in the selfsame seat sits Collatinus:
That eye which looks on her, confounds his wits,
That eye which him beholds, as more divine,
Unto a view so false will not incline.
But with a pure appeal seeks to the heart,
Which once corrupted, takes the worser part;
And therein heartens up his servile powers,
Who, flatter'd by his leader's jocund show,
Stuff up his lust, as minutes fill up hours;
And as their captain, so their pride doth grow,
Paying more slavish tribute than they owe.
By reprobate desire thus madly led,
The Roman lord marcheth to Lucrece' bed.

The locks between her chamber and his will,
Each one by him enforce'd, retires his ward;
But as they open, they all rate his ill,
Which drives the creeping thief to some regard:
The threshold grates the door to have him heard;
Night-ward ring wensels shriek to see him there;
They fright him, yet he still pursues his fear.

As each unwilling portal yields him way,
Through little vents and crannies of the place
The wind wares with his torch, to make him stay,
And throws the smoke that falls into his face,
Extinguishing his conduct in this case;
But his hot heart, which fond desire doth scourch,
Puffs forth another wind that fires the torch:
And being lighted, by the light he spies
Lucretia's glove, wherein her needle sticks;
He takes it from the rushes where it lies;
And gripping it, the needl his finger pricks;
As who would say, this glove to wanton tricks
Is not inured; return again in haste;
Then see our mistress' ornaments are chase.

But all these poor forbiddings could not stay him;
He in the worst sense construes their denial;
The doors, the wind, the glove that did delay him,
He takes for accidental things of trial;
Or as those bars which stop the hourly dial,
Who with a ling'ring stay his course doth let,
Till every minute pays the hour his debt.

So, so, quoth he, these lets attend the time,
Like little frosts that sometime threat the spring,
To add a more rejoicing to the prime,
And give the snapped birds time to begin to sing.

Pain pays the income of each precious thing; [ands,
Huge rocks, high winds, strong pirates, shelves and
The merchant bears, ere rich at home he lands.

Now is he come unto the chamber door
That shuts him from the heaven of his thought,
Which with a yielding latch, and with no more,
Hath bar'd him from the blessed thing he sought.
So from himself impiety hath wrought,
That for his prey to pray he doth begin,
As if the heaven should countenance his sin.

But in the midst of his unfruitful prayer,
Having solicited the eternal power,
That his foul thoughts might compass his fair,
And they would stand auspicious to the hour,
Even there he starts: —quoth he, I must deflow'r
The powers to whom I pray, abhor this fact,
How can they then assist me in the act?

Then Love and Fortune be my gods, my guide!
My will is back'd with resolution;
Thoughts as the smokeless till their effects be tried,
The blackest sin is clear'd with absolution;
Against love's fire, fear's frost hath dissolution.
The eye of heaven is out, and misty night
Covers the shame that follows sweet delight.

Within his thought her heavenly image sits,
And in the selfsame seat sits Collatinus:
That eye which looks on her, confounds his wits,
That eye which him beholds, as more divine,
Unto a view so false will not incline.
But with a pure appeal seeks to the heart,
Which once corrupted, takes the worser part;
And therein heartens up his servile powers,

Then see our mistress' ornaments are chase.

But all these poor forbiddings could not stay him;
He in the worst sense construes their denial;
The doors, the wind, the glove that did delay him,
He takes for accidental things of trial;
Or as those bars which stop the hourly dial,
Who with a ling'ring stay his course doth let,
Till every minute pays the hour his debt.

So, so, quoth he, these lets attend the time,
Like little frosts that sometime threat the spring,
To add a more rejoicing to the prime,
And give the snapped birds time to begin to sing.

Pain pays the income of each precious thing; [ands,
Huge rocks, high winds, strong pirates, shelves and
The merchant bears, ere rich at home he lands.

Now is he come unto the chamber door
That shuts him from the heaven of his thought,
Which with a yielding latch, and with no more,
Hath bar'd him from the blessed thing he sought.
So from himself impiety hath wrought,
That for his prey to pray he doth begin,
As if the heaven should countenance his sin.

But in the midst of his unfruitful prayer,
Having solicited the eternal power,
That his foul thoughts might compass his fair,
And they would stand auspicious to the hour,
Even there he starts: —quoth he, I must deflow'r
The powers to whom I pray, abhor this fact,
How can they then assist me in the act?

Then Love and Fortune be my gods, my guide!
My will is back'd with resolution;
Thoughts as the smokeless till their effects be tried,
The blackest sin is clear'd with absolution;
Against love's fire, fear's frost hath dissolution.
The eye of heaven is out, and misty night
Covers the shame that follows sweet delight.

Within his thought her heavenly image sits,
And in the selfsame seat sits Collatinus:
That eye which looks on her, confounds his wits,
That eye which him beholds, as more divine,
Unto a view so false will not incline.
But with a pure appeal seeks to the heart,
Which once corrupted, takes the worser part;
And therein heartens up his servile powers,
Who, flatter'd by his leader's jocund show,
Stuff up his lust, as minutes fill up hours;
And as their captain, so their pride doth grow,
Paying more slavish tribute than they owe.
By reprobate desire thus madly led,
The Roman lord marcheth to Lucrece' bed.

The locks between her chamber and his will,
Each one by him enforce'd, retires his ward;
But as they open, they all rate his ill,
Which drives the creeping thief to some regard:
The threshold grates the door to have him heard;
Night-ward ring wensels shriek to see him there;
They fright him, yet he still pursues his fear.

As each unwilling portal yields him way,
Through little vents and crannies of the place
The wind wares with his torch, to make him stay,
And throws the smoke that falls into his face,
Extinguishing his conduct in this case;
But his hot heart, which fond desire doth scourch,
Puffs forth another wind that fires the torch:
And being lighted, by the light he spies
Lucretia's glove, wherein her needle sticks;
He takes it from the rushes where it lies;
And gripping it, the needl his finger pricks;
As who would say, this glove to wanton tricks
Is not inured; return again in haste;
Then see our mistress' ornaments are chase.

But all these poor forbiddings could not stay him;
He in the worst sense construes their denial;
The doors, the wind, the glove that did delay him,
He takes for accidental things of trial;
Or as those bars which stop the hourly dial,
Who with a ling'ring stay his course doth let,
Till every minute pays the hour his debt.

So, so, quoth he, these lets attend the time,

The blackest sin is clear'd with absolution;
Against love's fire, fear's frost hath dissolution.
The eye of heaven is out, and misty night
Covers the shame that follows sweet delight.
This said, I, a guilty hand pluck’d up the latch,
And with his knee the door he opens wide:
The door sleeps fast that this night-owl will catch;
Thus treason works ere traitors be espied.
Who sees the lurking serpent, steps aside:
But she, sound sleeping, fearing no such thing,
Lies at the mercy of his mortal sting.

Into the chamber wickedly he stalks,
And gazeth on her yet unstained bed.
The curtains being close, about he walks,
Rushing his gristy hand-balls in his head:
By their high treason is his heart misled;
Which gives the watch-word to his hand full soon,
To draw the cloud that hides the silver mooo.

Look as the air, and fiery-pointed sun,
Rushing from forth a cloud, bereaves our sight;
Even so, the curtain drawn, his eyes begun
To wink, being blinded with a greater light:
Whether it is, that she reflects so bright,
That dazzleth them, or else something is supposed;
But blind they are, and keep themselves enclosed.

O, had they in that darksome prison died,
Then had they seen the period of their ill!
Then Collatine again by Lucrece’ side:
In his clear bed might have reposed still:
But they must ope, this blessed league to kill;
And holy-thoughted Lucrece to their sight
Must sell her joy, her life, her world’s delight.

Her lily hand her rosy cheek lies under,
Cozeing the pillow of a lawful kiss;
Who therefore angry, seems to part in sunder,
Swelling on either side to want his bliss.
Between whose hills her head intom’d is:
Where, like a virtuous monument, she lies,
To be admired of lewd unballow’d eyes.

Without the bed her other fair hand was,
On the green coverlet; whose perfect white
Shew’d like an April daisy on the grass,
With pearly sweet, resembling dew of night.
Her eyes, like marigolds, had sheath’d their light,
And compos’d in darkness, sweeter day,
Till they might open to adorn the day.

Her hair, like golden threads, play’d with her breath;
O modest wantons! wanton modesty!
Shewing life’s triumph in the map of death,
And death’s dim look in life’s mortality.
Each in her sleep themselves so beautify,
As if between them twain there were no strife,
But that life liv’d in death, and death in life.

Her breasts, like ivory globes circled with blue,
A pair of wan’den worlds unconquerd,
Save of their lord, no bearing yoke they knew,
And him by oath they truly honour’d.
These worlds in Tarquin new ambition bred;
Who, like a foul usurper, went about
From this fair throne to have the owner out.

What could he see, but mightily he noted!
What did he note, but strongly he desired?
What he beheld, on that he thinly dotted,
And in his will his wilful eye he bred.
With more than admiration he admired
Her azure veins, her alabaster skin,
Her coral lips, her snow-white dimpled chin.

As the grim lion saweth o’er his prey,
Sharp hunger by the conquest satisfied,
So o’er this sleeping soul doth Tarquin stay,
His rage of lust by gazing qualified;
Slack’d, not suppress’d: for standing by her side,
His eye, which late this madly restrains,
Unto a greater uproar tempts his veins.

And they, like struggling slaves for pillage fighting,
Obliterate vassals, fell exploits effecting
In bloody death and ravishment delighting,
Nor children’s tears, nor mother’s groans respecting,
Swell in their pride, the onset still expecting:
Anon his beating heart, alarum striking,
Gives the hot charge, and bids them do their liking.

His drumming heart cheers up his burning eye,
His eye commends the leading to his hand;
His hand, as proud of such a dignity,
Smoking with pride, making on him to make his stand
On her bare breast, the heart of all her land;
Whose ranks of blue veins, as his hand did scale
Left their round turrets destitute and pale.

They mustering to the quiet cabinet
Where their dear governness and lady lies,
Do tell her she is dreadfully beset,
And fright her with confusion of their cries:
She much amazed, breaks ope her lock’d-up eyes,
Where she beholding this tumult to behold,
Are by his flaming torch dimm’d and control’d.

Imagine her as one in dead of night
From forth dull sleep by dreadful fancy waking,
That thinks she hath beheld some ghastly sprite,
Whose grim aspect sets every joint a shaking;
What terror ‘tis! but she, in warser taking,
From sleep disturbed, heedfully doth view,
The sight which makes supposed terror true.

Wrapp’d and confounded in a thousand fears,
Like to a new-kill’d bird she trembling lies;
She dares not look; yet, waking, there appears
Quick shifting antics, ugly in her eyes.
Such shadows are the weak brain’s forgeries:
Who, angry that the eyes fly from their lights,
In darkness daunts them with more dreadful sights.

His hand that yet remains upon her breast
(Rude ram, to batter such an ivory wall!)
May feel her heart (poor citizen!) distress’d,
Wounding itself to death, rise up and fall,
Beating her bulk, that his hand shakes withal.
This moves in him more rage, and lesser pity,
To make the breach, and enter this sweet city.

First, like a trumpet, doth his tongue begin
To sound a parley to his heartless foe,
Who o’er the white sheet peers her whiter chin,
The reason of this rash alarm to know,
Which he by dumb demeanour seeks to show;
But she with vehement prayers urgeth still,
Under what colour he commits this ill.

Thus he replies: The colour in thy face
(That even for anger makes the lily pale,
And the red rose blush at her own disgrace.)
Shall plead for me, and tell my loving tale:
Under what colour am I come to scale
Thy never-conquer’d fort; the fault is thine,
For those thine eyes betray thee unto mine.

Thus I forestall thee, if thou mean to chide;
Thy beauty hath ensn’rd thee to this night,
Where thou with patience must my will abide,
My will that marks thee for my earth’s delight,
Which I to conquer sought with all my might;
But as reproof and reason beat it dead,
By thy bright beauty was it newly bred.

I see what crosses my attempt will bring;
I know what thorns the growing rose deeleth;
I think the honey guarded with a sting;
All this, beforehand, couched comprehends;
But will is dear, and bears no heedless friends;
Only he hath an eye to gaze on beauty,
And doth on what he looks, ‘gainst law or duty.
THE RAPE OF LUCRECE.

I have debated, even in my soul,
What wrong, what shame, what sorrow I shall brede;
But nothing can affection's course control,
Or stop the headlong fury of his speed.
I know repentant tears ensue the deed,
Reproach, disdain, and deadly enmity;
Yet strive I to embrace mine infamy.

This said, he shaks aloft his Roman blade,
Which like a falcon towering in the skies,
Coucheth the fowl below with his wing's shade,
Whose crooked beak threats if he mount he dies:
So under the insulting falcon lies
Harriers Lucretia, marking what he tells,
With trembling fear, as fowl hear falcons' bells.

Luerce, quoth he, this night I must enjoy thee:
If thou deny, then force must work my way,
For in thy bed I purpose to destroy thee;
That done, some worthless slave of thine I'll slay,
To kindle thine honour with thy life's decay;
And in thy dead arms do I mean to place him,
Swearing I slew him, seeing thee embrace him.

So thus surviving husband shall remain
The scornful mark of every open eye:
The passion, whereon he set their heads at this disdain,
Thy issue bount'd in wordless jealousy:
And thou, the author of their obloquy,
Shall have thy trespass cited up in rhymes,
And sung by children in succeeding times.

But if thou yield, I rest thy secret friend:
The fault unknown is as a thought unacted;
A little harm done to a good end.
For lawful policy remains enacted.
The poisonous simple sometimes is compaceted
In forms so simple as to pass for good:
But in some simples is the venom's end,
In pure effect in is purf'd.

Then for thy husband's and thy children's sake
Tender my suit; bequeath not to their lot
The shame that from them no device can take,
The blemish that will never be forgot;
Worse than a slavish wiper, or birth-hour's blot:
For marks deserted in men's vanity
Are nature's faults, not their own infamy.

Here with a cockatrice' dead-killing eye,
He rouseth up himself, and makes a pause,
With stony, weighty, silent, piercing gaze.
Like a white hound under the grype's sharp claws,
Pleads in a wilderness, where are no laws,
To the rough beast that knows no gentle right,
Nor ought obeys but his foul appetite.

Look, when a black-fac'd cloud the world doth o'erthrust,
In his dim mist the aspiring mountains hiding.
From earth's dark womb some gentle gust doth get,
Which blows these pitchy vapours from their biding,
Hilfering their present fall by this dividing:
So his unhovah'd haste her words delays,
And moody Etto wanks while Orpheus plays.

Yet foul night-walking eat, he doth but dally,
While in his hold-fast foot the weak mouse panteth;
Her sad behaviour feeds his vulture folly,
A swallowing gulf that even in plenty wanteth:
His ear her prayers admits, but his heart graneth.
No penetrable entrance to her plaining:
Tears harden lust, though marble wear with raining:
Her pity-pleading eyes are sadly fix'd
In the remorseless wrinkles of his face;
Her modest eloquence with sighs is mixed,
Which to her oratory adds more grace.
She puts the period of his place,
And 'midst the sentence so her accent breaks,
That twice she doth begin ere once she speaks.

She enforces him by high almighty Jove,
By knighthood, gentry, and sweet friendship's oath,
By her untamely tears, her husband's love,
By foul offenders thou, perform my oath,
By heaven and earth, and all the power of both,
That to his borrow'd bed be make retire,
And stoop to honour, not to foul desire.

Quoth she, reward not hospitality
With such black payment as thou hast pretended;
Mud not the fountain that gave drink to thee;
Mar not the thing that cannot be amended;
End thy ill aim, before thy shoot be ended:
He is no wise man that doth bend his bow
To strike a poor unreasonable doe.

My husband is thy friend, for his sake spare me,
Thyself art mighty, for thine own sake leave me;
Myself a weakling, do not then ensnare me.
Thou lookst not like deceit: do not deceive me:
My sighs, like whirlwinds, labour hence to heave thee.
If ever man were mov'd with woman's means,
He moved with my tears, my sighs, my groans;
All which together, like a troubled ocean,
Beat at thy rocky and wreck-threatening heart,
To soften it with their continual motion;
For stones dissolved do ever so do.
O, if no harder than a stone thou art,
Melt at my tears and be compassionate!
Soft pity enters at an iron gate.

In Tarquin's likeness I did entertain thee:
Hast thou put on his shape to do him shame?
To all the host of heaven I complain thee,
Thou wrong'st th'insign honour, wount'st th'insign name,
Thou art not what thou seem'st, and if the same,
Thou seem'st not what thou art, a god, a king:
For kings like gods should govern every thing.

How will thy shame be seeded in thine age,
When thus thy vices bud before thy spring?
If in thy hope thou dar'st do such outrage,
What dar'st thou not when once thou art a king?
O be remember'd, no outrageous thing
From vassal actors can be wip'd away;
Then kings' misdeeds cannot be hid in clay.

This deed will make thee only lov'd for fear,
But happy monarchs still are fear'd for love:
With tyrannous oppressors thou perform'st the pear,
When in thee the like offences prove:
If but for fear of this, thy will remove;
For princes are the glass, the school, the book.
Where subjects' eyes do learn, do read, do look.

And wilt thou be the school where Lust shall learn?
Must he in thee read lectures of such shame?
Wilt thou be glass, wherein it shall discern
Authority for sin, warrant for blame,
To privilege dishonour in the name?
Thou back'st reproach against long-living land,
And mak'st fair reputation but a bawd.

Hast thou command? by him that gave it thee,
From a pure heart command thy rebel will:
Draw not thy sword to guard iniquity,
For it was lent thee all that brood to kill.
The princely office how canst thou fulfill.
When, pattern'd by thy fault, foul Sin may say,
He learn'd to sin, and thou didst teach thy way.

Think but how vile a spectacle it were
To view thy present trespass in another.
Men's faults do seldom to themselves appear;
Their own transgressions partially they smoother.
This guilt would seem death-worthy in thy brother.
O how are they wrapp'd in with infamies,
That from their own misdeeds askance their eyes!
THE RAPE OF LUCRECE.

395

To thee, to thee, my head-up hands appeal
Not to reducing lust, thy rash rehber,
I sue for ex'd majesty's repeal,
Let him return, and flattering thoughts retire:
His true respect will 'prison false desire,
And wipe the dumd must from thy doting eye,
That thou shalt see thy state, and pity mine.

Have done, quoth he, my uncontrolled tide
Turns not, but swells the higher by this let.
Small light unseen brings down the dews of night,
And with the wind in greater fury feet:
The petty streams that pay a daily debt
To their salt sovereign, with their fresh falls haste
Add to his flow, and after not his taste.

Thou art, quoth she, a sea, a sovereign king;
And lo, there falls into thy boundless flood
Black lust, dishonour, shame, misgovernment.
Who seek to stain the ocean of thy blood.
If all these petty ills shall change thee good,
Thy sea within a puddle's womb is herded,
And not the puddle in thy sea dispersed.

So shall these slaves be king, and thou their slave;
Thou nobly base, they basely dignified;
Thou their fan life, and they thy lower grave;
Thou feathered in their shame, they in thy pride.
The lesser thing should not the greater hide;
The cedar stoops not to the base shrub's foot,
But low shrubs wither at the cedar's root.

So let thy thoughts, low vassal, to thy state—
No more, quoth he, by heaven, I will not hear thee:
Yield to my love; if not, enforced hate,
Instead of love's coy touch, shall rudely tear thee:
That done, desperately I mean to bear thee
Unto the base bed of some rascal groom,
To be thy partner in this shameful doom.

This said, he sets his foot upon the light,
For light and lust are deadly enemies:
Shame folded up in blood concealing night,
When most unseen, then most doth tyrannize.
The wolf hath seized his prey, the poor lamb cries,
Till with her own white fleece her voice control'd
Entombs her outcry in her lips' sweet fold:

For with the nightly linen that she wears,
He pens her pitious charmers in her head;
Crouding his hot face in the closest tears
That ever modest eyes with sorrow shed.
O last prove lust could obtain so pure a bed!
This is whereof could weeping purify
Her tears should drop on them perpetually.

But she hath lost a dearer thing than life,
And he hath won what he would lose again.
This forced league doth force a further stride,
This momentary joy breeds months of pain,
This hot desire converts to cold disdain:
Fond charity is rifled of her store,
And lust, the thief, far poorer than before.

Look on the full-fed hound or sated hawk,
Unapt for tender smell or speedy flight,
Make slow pursuit, or altogether lack
The prey wherein by nature they delight;
So suffit-taking Tarquin faces this night:
His taste delicious, in digestion souring,
Devours his will that he'd by foul devouring.

O deeper sin thanbottomless conceit
Can comprehend in still imagination!
Desire must infest his recept,
For he can see his own abominations.
While lust is in his pride, no explanation
Can curb his heat, or rein his rash desire,
Till, like a jade, self-will himself doth tire.

And then with lank and lean discordant check,
With heavy eye, knell brow, and strengthless pace,
Feeble desire, all recreant, poor, and meek.
Like to a bankrupt beggar waits his case;
The flesh being proud, desire doth fight with grace,
For there it revels; and when that decays,
The guilty rebel for remission pray's.

So fases it with this faithful lord of Rome,
Who this accomplishment so hotly chose.
For now against himself counts this doom,
That through the length of times he stands disgraced.
Besides, his soul's fair temple is defaced;
To whose weak rains musters troops of cares,
To ask the spotted princess how she fares.

She says, her subjects with foul insurrection
Have hatter'd down her consecrated wall,
And by their mortal fault brought in subjection
Her immortality, and made her thrall
To living death, and pain perpetual:
Which in her presence she controlled still,
But her true-sight could not fore taint their will.

Even in her thought, though in the dark night best stealthful,
A captive victor, that hath lost in gain;
Bearing away the wound that nothing heals,
The scar that will, despite of cure, remain,
Leaving his spent people'd in greater pain.
She bears the load of lust he left behind,
And he the burden of a guilty mind.
He, like a thirsty dog, creeps sadly thence,
She, like a weaned lamb, lies pouting there;
He scowls, and hates himself for his offence,
She desperate, with her nails her flesh doth tear;
He faintly flies, sweating with guilty fear;
She stays, exclaiming on the direful night;
He runs, and chides his vanish'd, boast'd delight
He thence departs, a heavy convertible,
She there remains, a hopeless cast-away;
He in his speed looks for the morning light,
She plays she never may behold the day;
For day, quoth she, night-scapes doth open lay;
And my true eyes have never practis'd how
To cloak offences with a cunning brow.

They think not but that every eye can see
The same disgrace which they themselves behold;
And therefore would they still in darkness be,
To have their unseen sin remain untold;
For there their guilt with weeping will unfold,
And grief, like water, doth eat at their heart,
Upon my checks what helpless shame I feel.
Here she exclaims against repos and rest,
And bids her eyes hereafter still be blind.
She wakes her heart by beating on her breast,
And bids it leap from thence, where it may find
Some parer chest, to close so pure a mind.

Pratice with grief thus breathes she forth her spire
Against the he unseen secrecy of night.

O comfort-killing night, image of hell!
Dun register and snarly of shame!
Black stage for tragedies and murders fall!
Vast sin-concealing chaos! nurse of blame!
Blind muffled wail! dark harbour for defiance!
Grin cave of death, whispering conspirator
With close-tongued treason and the ravisher!

O hateful, vaporous and foggy night,
Since thou art guilty of my curseless crime,
Must thy mists meet to the eastern light,
Make war against proportion'd conquest of time?
Or if thou wilt permit the sun to climb
His wonted height, yet ere he go to bed,
Knit poisonous clouds about his golden head.
THE RAPE OF LUCRECE.

With rotten damp ravish the morning air;
Let their exhal'd unwholesome breaths make sick
The life of purity, the supreme fair,
Ere he arrive his weary noon-tide prick;
And let thy misty vapours march so thick,
That in their smoke no rank his weather'd light
May set at noon, and make perpetual night.
Were Tarquin night, (as he is but night's child,)
The silver-shining queen he would disdain;
Her twinking handmaids too, by him defil'd,
Through night's black bosom should not peep again;
So should I have copartners in my pain:
And fellowship in woe doth woe assuage,
As palmers' chat makes short their pilgrimage.
Where now I have no one to blush with me,
To cross their arms, and hang their heads with mine,
To mask their brows, and hide their infancy;
But I alone, alone must sit and pine,
Seasoning the earth with showers of silver brine,
Mingling my talk with tears, my grief with groans,
Poor wasting monuments of lasting moans.
O night, thou furnace of soul-reeking smoke,
Let not the jealous day behold that face
Which underneath thy black all-hiding cloak
Immodestly lies martyr'd with disgrace!
Keep still possession of thy gloomy place,
That all the homage which in thy reign are made
May likewise be sepulchred in thy shade!
Make me not object to the tale-tell day
The night will shew, character'd in my brow,
The story of sweet chastity's decay,
The impious breach of holy wedlock's vow?
Yea, the illiterate that know not how
To 'cipher what is writ in learned books,
Will quote my loadsome trespass in my eyes.
The nurse, to still her child, will tell my story,
And fright her crying babe with Tarquin's name;
The orator, to deck his oratory,
Will couple my reproach to Tarquin's shame:
Feast-finding minstrels, tuning my defame,
Will tie the hearers to attend each line.
How Tarquin wronged me, I Collatine.
Let my good name, that senseless reputation,
For Collatine's dear love be kept unspotted;
If that be made a theme for disputation,
The branches of another root are rotted,
And undeserv'd reproach to him allotted,
That is as clear from this attain't of mine,
As I, ere this, was pure to Collatine.
O unseen shame! invisible disgrace!
O unfelt sore! crest-wounding, private scar!
Reproach is stamp'd in Collatine's face,
And Tarquin's eye may read the mot afar,
How he in peace is wounded, not in war,
Alas, how many bear such shameful blows,
Which not themselves, but he that gives them knows
If, Collatine, thine honour lay in me,
From me by strong assault it is bereft,
My honey lost, and I a crane-like bee,
Have no perfection of my summer left,
But rob'd and ransack'd by injurious theft:
In thy weak hive a wandering wasp hath crept,
And suck'd the honey which thy chaste bee kept.
Yet am I guiltless of thy honour's wreck;
Yet for thy honour did I entertain him;
Coming from thee, I could not put him back,
For it had been dishonour to disdain him;
Beast's breath to breathe upon him,
And talk'd of virtue:—O unlook'd for evil,
When virtue is profan'd in such a devil!
Why should the worm intrude the maiden bud?
Or hateful cuckoo hatch in sparrows' nests?
Or toads infect fair fonts with venom mud?
Or tyrant folly lurk in gentle breasts?
Or kings be breakers of their own behests?
But unperfection is a base estate.
That some impiery doth not pollute.
The aged man that coffers up his gold,
Is plagued with cramps, and gouts, and painful fits,
And scarce hath eyes his treasure to behold,
But like still-pining Tantalus he sits,
And useless barns the harvest of his wits;
Having no other pleasure of his gain,
But torment that it cannot cure his pain.
So then he hath it when he cannot use it,
And leaves it to be master'd by his young;
Who in their prince do presently abuse it:
Their father was too weak, and they too strong,
To hold their cursed-blessed fortune long.
The sweets we wish for turn to loathed sours,
Even in the moment that we call them ours.
Unruly blasts wait on the tender spring;
Unwholesome weeds take root with precious flowers;
The adder hisses where the sweet bird sings;
What virtue breeds, inequity devours:
We have no good that we can say is ours,
But ill-annex'd opportunity last,
Or kills his life, or else his quality.
O Opportunity! thy guilt is great;
'Tis then that excent'st the traitor's treason;
Thou set'st the wolf where he the lamb may get;
Whoever plots the sin thou point'st the season;
'Tis thou that spurst at right, at law, at reason;
And in thy shady cell, where none may spy him,
Sits Sis, to seize the souls that wander by him.
Thou mak'st the vestal violate her oath;
Thou blow'st the fire when temperament is thaw'd;
Thou smoother'st honesty, thou murder'st truth;
Thou foul abetter! thou notorious bawd!
Thou plantest scandal, and displaceth land:
Thou ravisher, thou traitor, thou false thief,
Thy honey turns to gall, thy joy to grief!
Thy secret pleasure turns to open shame,
Thy private fasting to a public fast;
Thy smoothing titles to a ragged name;
Thy sugar'd tongue to bitter wormwood taste;
Thy violent vanities can never last,
How comes it then, vile opportunity.
Being so bad, such numbers seek for thee?
When wilt thou be the humble supplicant's friend,
And bring him where his suit may be obtained?
When wilt thou sort an hour great strifes to end?
Or free that soul which wretchedness hath chained?
Give physic to the sick, ease to the pained?
The poor, lame, blind, halt, creep, cry out for thee;
But they ne'er meet with opportunity.
The patient dies while the physician sleeps;
The orphans pine while the oppressor feeds;
Justice is fasting while the widow weeps;
Advice is sporting while infection breeds;
Thou grant'st no time for charitable deeds?
Wrath, envy, treason, rape, and murder's rages;
Thy heinous hours wait on them as their pages.
When Truth and Virtue have to do with thee,
A thousand crosses keep them from thy aid;
They buy thy help: but Sin ne'er gives a fee,
He gratis comes; and this art well appay'd
As well to bear as grant what he hath said.
My Collatine would else have come to me
When Tarquin did, but he was stay'd by thee.

Guilty thou art of murder and of theft;
Guilty of perjury and subornation;
Guilty of treason, forgery, and shift:
Guilty of sin, and base abandon;
An accessory by thine incitement
To all sins past, and all that are to come,
From the creation to the general doom.

Misshapen Time, copesmate of ugly night,
Swift subtle post, carrier of grisly care;
Eater of youth, false slave to false delight,
Base watch of woes, sin's pack-horse, virtue's snare;
Thou nurses all, and murderest all that are.
O hear me then, injurious, shifting time!
Be guilty of my death, since of my crime.

Why hast thy servant, Opportunity,
Betray'd the hours thou gav'st me to repose?
Cancell'd fortune, and enchanted me
To endless date of never-ending woes?
Time's office is to fod the hate of foes;
To eat up error by opinion bred.
Not spend the doory of a lawful bed.

Time's glory is to calm contending kings,
To unknock falsehood, and bring truth to light,
To stamp the seal of time in aged things,
To wake the morn, and send it deep sleep,
To wrong the waggish till he render right;
To ruinate proud buildings with thy hours,
And smear with dust their glittering golden towers:

To feed with worm-holes stately monuments,
To feed oblivion with decay of things,
To blot old books, and alter their contents,
To pluck the hills from ancient raven's wings,
To dry the wild oak's sap, and cherish springs;
To spoil antiquities of hammer's steel,
And turn the giddy round of fortune's wheel:

To shew the beldena daughters of her daughter,
To make the child a man, the man a child,
To shay the tiger that doth live by slaughter,
To tame the unicorn and lion wild;
To mock the subtle, in themselves beguil'd;
To rear the ploughman with industrious crops,
And waste huge stones with little water-drops.

Why work'st thou mischief in thy pilgrimage,
Unless thou could'st return to make amends?
One poor retiring minute in an age
Would purchase thee a thousand thousand friends,
Lending him wit, that to bad debtors lends: [back.
O, this dreed night, would'st thou one hour come
I could prevent this storm, and shun this wrack!

Thou ceaseless lackey to eternity,
With some mischance cross Tarquin in his flight.
Device extremes beyond extremity,
To make him curse this cursed criminal night:
Let ghastly shadows his lewd eyes affright;
And the dire thought of his committed evil,
Shape every bush a hideous shapeless devil.

Disturb his hours of rest with restless trances,
Afflict him in his bed with bedrid groans;
Let there bechance him pitiful mischances,
To make him mean, but pily not his means:
Stone him with harden'd hearts, harder than stones;
And let mild women to his love their wildness,
Wildcr to him than tigers in their wildness.

Let him have time to see his friends his foes,
And merry fools to mock at him resort:
Let him have time to mark how slow time goes
In time he shall, and how swift and short
His time of folly and his time of sport:
And ever let his unrecalling crime
Have time to wear the abusing of his time.

O Time, thou tutor both to good and bad,
Teach me to curse him that thou taught'st this ill!
At his own shadow let the thief run mad,
Himself himself seek every hour to kill!
Such wretched hands such wretched blood should spill:
For who so base would such an office have
As shanderous death's-man to so base a slave?
The baster is he, coming from a king,
To shame his hope with deeds degenerate.
The mightier man, the mightier is the thing
That makes him honor'd, or begetts him hate;
For greatest scandal waits on greatest state.
The moon being clouded presently is miss'd,
But little stars may hide them when they list.
The crow may bathe his coal-black wings in mire,
And unperceiv'd fly with the fifth wave,
But if the like the snow-white swan desire,
The stain upon his silver down will stay.
Poor grooms are sightless night, kings glorious day,
Gnats are unnoticed whereas' er they fly,
But eagles gaz'd upon with every eye.

Out idle words, servants to shallow fools!
Unprofitable sounds, weak arbitrators!
Busy yourselves in skill-contriving schools,
Debate where leisure serves with dull debaters,
To troubling plaintiffs be you mediators:
For me, I force not argument a straw,
Since that my case is past the help of law.

In vain I rail at Opportunity,
At Time, at Tarquin, and uncheerful night;
In vain I cavil with my infancy,
In vain I spurn at my confound'd despite:
This helpless smoke of words doth me no right
This time doth indeed to do me good;
Is to let forth my fowl, defiled blood.

Poor hand, why quiver'st thou at this decree?
Honour yourself to rid me of this shame;
For if I die, my honour lives in thee,
But if I live, thou liv'st in my defame:
Since thou couldst not defend thy loyal dame,
And wast afraid to scratch her wicked foe,
Kill both thyself and her for yielding so.

This said, from her be-gumber'd couch she starteth,
To find some desperate instrument of death.
But this no-slaughter-house no tool imparteth,
To make more vent for passage of her breath,
Which thronging through her lips so vanisheth
As smoke from Extia, that in air consumes,
Or that which from discharged cannon fumes.

In vain, quoth she, I live, and seek in vain
Some happy mean to end a hapless life.
I fear'd by Tarquin's falshion to be slain,
Yet for the selfsame purpose seek a knife:
But when I fear'd, I was a loyal wife.
So am I now: — O no, that cannot be;
Of that true type hath Tarquin rified me.

O that is gone, for which I sought to live,
And therefore now I need not fear to die.
To clear this spot by death, at least I give
A badge of fame to slander's livery:
A dying life to living infancy:
Poor helpless help, the treasure stolen away,
To burn the guiltless casket where it lay!
Come, Philomel, that sing'st of ravishment,
Make thy sad grove in my disheswell'd hair.
As the dank earth weeps at thy languishment,
So I at each sad strain will strain a tear,
And with the deep ground's inspirations bear:
For this wise I'll hum on Tarpin still,
While thou on Tereus descant'st, better skill.
And whiles against a thorn thou bear'st thy part,
To keep thy sharp woes waking, wretched I,
To impute thee well, against my heart
Will fix a sharp knife, to affright mine eye;
Who, if it wike, shall thereon fall and die.

These means, as frets upon an instrument,
Will tune our heart-string to true languishment.
And for, poor bird, thou sing'st not in the day,
As shaming any eye should thee behold.
Some dark deep desert, sated from the way,
That knows nor parching heat nor freezing cold,
Will we find out; and there we will unfold.
To creatures stern sad tunes, to change their kinds:
Since men prove beasts, let beasts bear gentle minds.

As the poor frightened deer, that stands at gaze,
Wildly determining which way to fly,
Or one encompass'd with a wiolding maze,
That cannot tread the way out readily;
So with herself is she in mutiny.
To live or die which of the twain were better.
When life is sham'd, and Death Reproach'd the debtor.

To kill myself, quoth she, alack! what were it,
But with my body my poor soul's pollution?
They that lose half, with greater patience bear it,
Than they whose whole is swallowed in confusion.
That mother tries a merciless conclusion,
Who, having two sweet babes, when death taketh one,
Will say the other, and be nurse to none.

My body or my soul, which was the dearer?
When the one pure, the other made divine.
Whose love of either to myself was nearer?
When both were kept for heaven and Collatine.

Ah me! the bark peel'd from the lofty pine,
His leaves will wither, and his sap decay;
So must my soul, her bark being peel'd away.

Her house is sack'd, her quiet interrupted,
Her mansion batter'd by the enemy;
Her sacred temple spotted, spoil'd, corrupted,
Gross with the guilt that made her blind:
Then let it not be call'd impious.

If in this blemish'd fort I make some hole,
Through which I may convey this troubled soul.
Yet die I will not, till my Collatine
Have heard the cause of my untimely death;
That he may vow, in that sad hour of mine,
Revenge on him that made me stop my breath.
My stained blood to Tarpin I'll bequeath,
Which by him tainted, shall for him be spent,
And as his due, write in my testament.

My honour I'll bequeath unto the knife
That wounds my body so dishonourd.
'Tis honour to deprive dishonourd life;
The one will live, the other being dead:
So of shame's ashes shall my fame be bred;
For in my death I murder shameful scorn:
My shame so dead, mine honour is new-born.

Dear lord of that dear jewel I have lost,
What legacy shall I bequeath to thee?
My resolution, Love, shall be thy boast,
By whose example thou may'st well be.
How Tarpin must be us'd, read it in me:
Myself, thy friend, will kill myself, thy foe,
And, for my sake, serve thou false Tarpin so.
RAPP OF LUCRER:

One justly weeps.
This brief abridgment of my will I make:

My soul and body to the skies and ground;
My resolution, husband, do you take;
Mioe honour be the knife's, that makes my wound;
My shame be his that did my fame that lives, disburset be
To those that live, and think no shame of me.

Thou, Collatine, shalt oversee this will;
How was I oversee that thou shalt see it!
My blood shall wash the slander of mine ill;
My life's foul deed, my life's fair end shall free it.
Faint not, faint heart, but stoutly say, so be it.
Yield to my hand: my hand shall conquer thee;
Thou dead, both die, and both shall victors be.

This plot of death when sadly she had laid,
And wip'd the brimish tear from her bright eyes,
With usto'd tongue she haerously call'd her maid,
Whose swift obedience to her mistress hies;
For fleet-wing'd duty with thought's feathers flies.
Poor Lucrece' cheeks unto her maid seem so
As winter meads when sun doth melt their snow.
Her mistress she doth give demure good morrow,
With soft-slow tongue, true mark of modesty,
And sorts a sad look to her lady's sorrow,
(For what by her face was ready to be lively)
But burst not ask of her audaciously.
Why her two suns were closed-eclipse so,
Nor why her fair checks over-washed with woes.
But as the earth doth weep, the sun being set,
Each flower moisten'd like a melting eye;
Even so the maid with swallowing drops 'gan wet
Her circled eye, enforc'd by sympathy
Of those fair sues, set in her mistress' sky.
Who in a salt-ward ocean quench their light,
While weak-maid maid were like to the dewy night.

A pretty while these pretty creatures stand,
Like ivory conduits coral cisterns filling:
One justly weeps: the other takes in hand
No cause, but company, of her drops spilling:
Their gentle sex to weep are often willing;
Grieving themselves to guess at others' smarts,
And then they draw their eyes, or break their hearts:
For men have marble, women waxen minds,
And therefore are they form'd as marble will;
The weak oppress'd, the impression of strange minds
Is form'd in them by force, by fraud, or skill:
Then call them out the authors of their ill,
No more than wax shall be accounted evil,
Wherein is stamp'd the semblance of a devil.
Their smoothness, like a goodly champagne plain,
Lays open all the little worms that creep:
In men, as in a rough-grown grove, remain
Cave-keeping evils that obscurely sleep:
Through crystal walls each little mote will peep:
Though men can cover crimes with bold stern looks,
Poor women's faces are their own faults' books.

No man inveigh against the wither'd flower,
But chide rough winter that the flower hath kill'd!
Not that devour'd, but that which doth devour,
Is worthy blame. O let it not be hild.
Poor women's faults, that they are so fulfili'd
With men's abuses: those proud lords, to blame,
Whose mark-made maid were like to their shame.
The precedent whereof in Lucrece view
Assail'd by night with circumstances strong
Of present death, and shame that might ensue
By that her death, to do her husband wroag;
Such danger to resistance did belong,
That dying fear through all her body spread;
And who cannot abuse a body dead?

By this, mild patience bid fair Lucrece speak
To the poor counterfeit of her complaining;
My girl, quoth she, on what occasion break
Those tears from thee, that down thy cheeks are raising?
If thou dost weep for grief of my suspending,
Know, gentle wench, it small avoids my mood:
If tears could help, mine own would do me good.

But tell me, girl, when went—(and there she stayed Till after a deep groan) Tarquin from hence?
Madam, ere I was, reply'd the maid,
The more to blame my sluggish negligence;
Yet with the fault I thus far can dispense;
Myself was stirring ere the break of day,
And, ere I rose, was Tarquin gone away.

But lady, if your maid may be so bold,
She would request to know your heaviness.
O peace! quoth Lucrece; if it should be told,
The repetition cannot make it less;
For more it is than I can well express:
And that deep torture may be call'd a hell,
Where more is felt than one hath power to tell.

Go, get me hither paper, ink, and pen—
Yet save that labour, for I have them here.
What should I say?—One of my husband's men,
But let him be ready, by and by, to have
A letter to my lord, my love, my dear,
Bid him with speed prepare to carry it:
The cause craves haste, and it will soon be writ.
Her maid is gone, and she prepares to write,
First hovering o'er the paper with her quill:
Coucett and grief an eager combat fight;
What wit sets down, is blotted straight with will;
This is too curious-good, this blunt and ill,
Much like a press of people at a door,
Through her inventions, which shall go before.

At last she thus begins: "Thou worthy lord
Of that unworthy wife that greezet thee,
Health to thy person! next vouchsafe to afford
(If ever, love, thy Lucrece thou wilt see,
Some present speed to come and visit me:
So I commend me from our house in grief;
My woes are tedious, though my words are brief;"
Here fol'd she up the tenour of her woe,
Her certain sorrow writ uncertainly.
By this short schedule Collatine may know
Her grief, but not her grief's true quality;
She dares not thereof make discovery,
Lest he should hold it her own gross abuse,
Ere she with blood hath staid her stain'd excuse.

Besides, the life and feeling of her passion
She heard, to spend when he is by to hear her:
When sighs and groans and tears may grace the fashion
Of her disgrace, the better so to clear her
From that suspense which the world might hear her
To shun this blot, she would not blot the letter
With words, till action might become them better
To see sad sights moves more than hear them told;
For then the eye interprets to the ear
The heavy motion that it doth behold,
When every part a part of woe doth hear.
'Tis but a part of sorrow that we hear;
Deep sounds make lesser noise than hollow fords,
And sorrow hills, being blown with wind of words,
Her letter now is seal'd, and on it writ.
At Adea to my lord with more than haste
The post attends, and she delivers it,
Charging the sour-fac'd groom to gie as fast
As lagging fowls before the northern blast.
Speed more than speed, but dull and low she deems:
Extremity still urgeth such extremes.
The rape of Lucrece.

The homely villain curst'ies to her low;
And blushing on her, with a stedfast eye
Receives the scroll, without or yea or no.
And forth with bashful innocence doth flee.

But they whose guilt within their bosoms lie,
Imagine every eye beholds their blame,
For Lucrece thought he blush'd to see her shame.

When, slyly groom! God wot, it was defect
Of spirit, life, and bold audacity.
Such harmless creatures have a due respect
To things in decent order, save to feel
Promise more speed, but do it leisurely:
Even so, this pattern of the worn-out age
Pawn'd honest looks, but laid no words to goe.

His kindled duty kindled her mistrust,
That two red fires in both their faces blazed;
She thought he blush'd, as knowing Tarquin's lust,
And, blushing with him, wisely on him gazed;
Her earnest eye did make him more amazed:
The more she saw the blood his cheeks replenish,
The more her thought the thought did seem bluish.

But long she thinks till he return again,
And yet the duteous vassal scarce is gone.
The weary time she cannot entertain,
For now 'tis stale to sigh, to weep, and groan:
So wee hath wearied wee, worn tiresen mood.
That she her paints a little while doth stay,
Pausing for means to morose some newer way.

At last she calls to mind where hangs a piece
Of skilful painting, made for Priam's Troy:
Before which is drawn the power of Greece,
For Helen's rape the city to destroy.
Threatening cloud-kissing Ilión with annoy;
Which the conceited painter drew so proud,
As heaven (it seem'd) to kiss the turrets bow'd.

A thousand lamentable objects there,
In scorn of Nature, Art gave lifeless life:
Many a dry drop seem'd a weeping tear,
Shed for the slaugther'd husband by the wife:
The red blood neck'd to shew the painter's strife;
And dying eyes gleam'd forth their shy lights,
Like dying coals burnt out in tedious nights.

There might you see the labouring pioneer
Begruit with sweat, and smeared all with dust;
And from the towers of Troy there would appear
The very eyes of men through loop-holes thrust,
Gazing upon the Greeks with little lust:
Such sweet observance in this work was had,
That one might see those far-off eyes look sad.

In great commanders grace and majesty
You might behold, triumphing in their faces;
In youth, quick bearing and dexterity
And here and there the painter interlaces.
Pale cowards, marching on with trembling paces;
Which heartless peasants did so well resemble, [lie.
That one would swear he saw them quake and trem-

In Ajax and Ulysses, O what art
Of physiognomy might one behold:
The face of either 'ciph'rd either's heart;
Their face their manners most expressly told:
In Ajax's eyes blent rage and figure roll'd;
But the mild glance that sly Ulysses lent
Show'd deep regard and smiling government.

There pleading might you see grave Nestor stand,
As 'were encouraging the Greeks to fight;
Making such sober action with his hand,
That it beguil'd attention, charm'd the sight:
In speech, it seem'd, his beard, all silver white,
Wagg'd up and down, and from his lips did fly
Thin winding breath, which purli'd up to the sky.

About him were a press of gapping faces,
Which seem'd to swallow up his sound advice;
All jointly listening, but with several graces,
As if some mermaid did their ears entice;

Some high, some low, the painter was so nice;
The scalps of many, almost hid behind,
To jump up higher seem'd, to mock the mind.

Here one man's hand lean'd on another's head,
His nose being shadow'd by his neighbour's ear;
Here one being thong'd bears back all blown
And another's, that seem'd so pale away did rise;
And in their rage such signs of rage they bear,
As, but for loss of Nestor's golden words,
It seem'd they would debate with angry swords.

For much imaginary work was there;
Conceit deceitful, so compact, so kind,
That for Achilles' image stood his spear,
Grip'd in an armed hand; himself, behind,
Was left unseen, save to the eye of mind:
A hand, a foot, a face, a leg, a head,
Stood for the whole to be imagin'd.

And from the walls of strong-besieg'd Troy,
When their brave hope, bold Hector, March'd to field,
Stood many Trojan mothers, sharing joy
To see their youthful sons bright weapons wield;
And to their hope they such o'd action yield,
That, through their light joy, seemed to appear
(Like bright things stain'd) a kind of heavy fear.

And, from the strand of Dar'dian where they fought,
To Simois' ready banks the red blood ran,
Whose waves to imitate the battle sought
With swelling rages; and their ranks began
To break upon the galled shore, and then
Retire again, till meeting greater ranks
They join, and shoot their foam at Simois' banks.

To this well-painted piece is Lucrece come,
To find a face where all distress is stel'd.
Many she sees, where cares have carved some,
But none where all distress and dolorous dwell'd,
Till she despiring Hecuba beheld,
Staring on Priam's wounds with her old eyes,
While his proud eyes blazed, and her proud foot lies.

In her the painter had anatom'd
Time's rain, beauty's wear, and grim care's reign;
Her cheeks with chaps and wrinkles were disguis'd;
Of what she was, no semblance did remain:
Her blue blood chang'd to black in every vein,
Wanting the spring that those shrunk pipes had fed,
Shew'd life imprison'd in a body dead.

On this sad shadow Lucrece spends her eyes,
And shapes her sorrow to the bel dame's woes,
Who nothing wants to answer her but cries,
And bitter words to bon her cruel foes.
The painter was no God to lend her those;
And therefore Lucrece swears he did her wrong,
To give her so much grief, and not a tongue.

Poor instrument, quoth she, without a sound,
I'll tune thy woes with my lamenting tongue:
And drop sweet balm in Priam's painted wound,
And rai on Pyrrhus that hath done him wrong,
And with my tears quench Troy that burns so long,
And with my knife scratch out the angry eyes
Of all the Greeks that are thine enemies.

Shew me the strumpet that began this stir,
That with my nails her beauty I may tear
Thy heat of lust, fond Paris, did incur
This load of wrath that burning Troy doth bear,
Thy eye kindled the fire that burneth here;
And here in Troy, for trespass of thine eye,
The site, the son, the dame, and daughter, die.
THE RAPE OF LUCRECE.

901

Why should the private pleasure of some one
Become the public plague of many moe?
Let sin, alone committed, light alone
Upon his head that hath transgressed so.
Let guiltless souls from such a guilty woe:
For one's offence why should so many fall,
To plague a private sin in general?

Lo here weeps Hecuba, here Priam dies,
Here manly Hector stares, here Trosius swounds;
Here friend by friend to bloody channel lies,
And friend to friend gives unsaid wounds.
And one man's lust these many lives confounds:
Had doing Priam check'd his son's desire,
Troy had been bright with fame, and not with fire.

Here feelingly she weeps Troy's painted woes:
For sorrow, like a heavy hanging bell,
Once set on ringing, with his own weight goes;
Then little strength rings out the doleful knell:
So Lucrece set a work, sad tales doth tell
To pencil'd pensiveness and colour'd sorrow; row.
She sends them words, and she their looks doth bor-

She throws her eyes about the painting, round,
And whom she finds forlorn, she doth lament:
At last she sees a wretched image bound.
That pitious looks to Phrygian shoes lends lent;
His face, his hands, his words, full of contraries,
Yet shew'd content:
Onward to Troy with the blunt swains he goes,
So mild, that Patience seem'd to scorn his woes.

In him the painter laboured with his skill
To hide deceit, and give the harmless show
An humble gait, calm looks, eyes waiting still,
A brow unbeaut, that seem'd to welcome wo;
Cheeks, neither red nor pale, but mingled so
That blushing red no guilty instance gave,
Nor ash pale the fear that false hearts have.

But, like a constant and confirmed devil,
He entertain'd a show so seeming just,
And therein so eascon'd his secret evil,
That jealousy itself could not mistrust
False-creeping craft and perjury should thrust
Into so bright a day such black-fac'd storms,
Or blot with hell-born sin such saint-like forms.

The well-skil'd workman this mild image drew
For perjur'd Simon, whose enchanting story
The credulous old Priam after saw;
Whose words, like wild-fire, burst the shining glory
Of rich-built Ilion, that the skies were sorry,
And little stars shot from their fixed places.
Faces,
When their glass fell wherein they view'd their

This picture she advis'dly pens'd,
And chid the painter for his wondrous skill;
Saying, some shape in Simon's was abus'd,
So fair a form lodg'd not a mind so ill;
And still on him she gazed, and gazing still,
Such signs of truth in his plain face she spy'd
That she concludes the picture was bely'd.

It cannot be, quoth she, that so much guile
(She would have said) can lurk in such a look;
But Tarquin's shape came in her mind the while,
And from her tongue, can lurk from cannot took;
It cannot be she in that sense forsook,
And turn'd it thus: "It cannot be, I find,

Such a face should from a woman's mind:
For even as subtle Simon here is painted,
So sober-sad, so weary, and so mild;
(As if with grief or travail he had fainted)
To me came Tarquin armed; so beguil'd
With outward honesty, but yet decl'd
With inward vice: as Priam him did cherish,
So did I Tarquin; so my Troy did perish.

Look, look, how listening Priam wets his eyes,
To see those borrow'd tears that Simon sheds.
Priam, why art thou old, and yet not wise?
For every tear he falls, a Trojan bleeds;
His eyes drops fire, no water hence proceeds:
Those round clear pearls of his that move thy pity
Are balls of quenchless fire to burn thy city.

Such devils steal effects from lightless hell;
For Simon in his fire doth quake with cold,
And in that cold, hot-burning fire doth dwell;
These contraries such unity do hold,
Only to flatter fools, and make them bold:
So Priam's trust false Simon's tear doth flatter,
That he finds means to burn his Troy with water.

Here, all emrag'd, such passion her assails,
That patience is quite beaten from her breast.
She tears the senseless Simon with her nails,
Comparing him to that unhappy guest
Whose deed hath made herself herself.detest:
At last she smilingly with this giv's o'er:
Fool! fool! quoth she, his wounds will not be sore.
Thus chibs and flows the current of her sorrow,
And time doth weary time with her complaining.
She looks for night, and then she longs for morrow,
And both she thinks too, with her remaining:
Short time seems long in sorrow's sharp sustaining.
Though woe be heavy, yet it seldom sleeps;
And they that watch, see time how slow it creeps,
Which all this time hath overspill'd her thought,
That she with painted images hath spent;
Being from the feeling of her own grief brought
By deep surmise of others' detrament;
Losing her woe in shows of discontent.
It causeth some, though none it ever cared,
To think their dolour others have endur'd.

But now the mindful messenger, come back,
Brings home his lord and other company;
Who finds his Lucrece clad in mourning black;
And round about her tear-distained eye.
Blue circles stream'd, like rainbows in the sky.
These water-galls in her dim element
Foretell new storms to those already spent.
Which when her sad-beholding husband saw
Amazely in her sad face he stares.
Her eyes, though old and sad, look'd red and raw,
Her lips in this colour'd kill'd with deadly cares.
He hath no power to ask her how she fares;
But stood, like old acquaintance in a trance.
Meth thought from home, wondering each other's chance.
At last he takes her by the bloodless hand,
And thus begins: What uncount'! ill event
Hath thee befallen, that thou dost trembling stand?
Sweet love, what spite hath thy fair colour spent?
Why art thou thus attir'd in discontent?
Unmask, dear dear, this moody heaviness.
And tell thy grief, that we may give redress.

Three times with sighs she gives her sorrow's fire,
Fer once she can discharge one word of woe:
At length address'd to answer his desire,
She modestly prepares to let them know
Her honour is taken prisoner by the foe;
While Collatine and his consort'd lords
With sad attention long to hear her words.
And now this gale swain in her watery nest
Begins the sad dirge of her certain ending:
Few words, quoth she, shall fit the trespass bold,
Where no excuse can give the fault amending:
In me more woes than words are now depending;
And my laments would be drawn out too long,
To tell them all with one poor tired tongue.
THE RAPE OF LUCRECE.

Then be this all the task it hath to say:—
Dear husband, in the interest of thy bed
A stranger came, and on that pillow lay
Where thou wast wont to rest thy weary head;
And what wrong else may be imagined
By foul enforcement might be done to me,
For in that, alas! thy Lucrece is not free.

For in the dreadful dead of dark midnight,
With shivering falshion in my chamber came
A creeping creature, with a flaming light.
And softly cry'd, Awake, thou Roman dame,
And entertain my love; else lasting shame
On thee and thine this night I will inflict,
If thou my love's desire do contradict.

For some hard-favoured groom of thine, quoth he,
Unless thou yoke thy liking to my will,
I'll murder straight, and then I'll slaughter thee,
And swear I found you where you did fail
The loathsome act of lust, and so will kill
The lechers in their deed: this act will be
My fame, and thy perpetual infamy.

With this I did begin to start and cry,
And then against my heart he set his sword,
Swearing, unless I took all patiently,
I should not live to speak another word:
So should my shame still rest upon record,
And never be forgot in mighty Rome
The adulterate death of Lucrece and her groom.

Mine enemy was strong, my poor self weak.
And far the weaker with so strong a fear;
My bloody judge forbade my tongue to speak;
No rightful plea might plead for justice there:
His scarlet lust came evidence to swear
That my poor beauty had purblind his eyes,
And when the judge is robb'd, the prisoner dies.

O teach me how to make mine own excuse!
Or, at the least, this refuge let me find;
Though my gross blood be stain'd with this abuse,
Immaculate and spotless is my mind;
That love not forc'd; that never unclenched
To necessary yieldings, but still pure
Doth in her poison'd closet yet endure.

Lo here, the hopeless merchant of this loss,
With head declin'd, and voice damn'd up with woe,
With sad-set eyes, and wretched arms across,
From lips new-waxen pale begins to blow
The grief away, that stops this answer so:
But wretched as he is, he strives in vain;
What he breathes out his breath drinks up again.

As through an arch the violent roaring tide
Outruns the eye that doth behold his haste;
Yet in the eddy boundeth in his pride
Back to the strait that forc'd him on so fast;
In rage sent out, recall'd in rage, being past:
Even so he sighs, his sorrows, make a saw,
To push grief on, and back the same grief draw.

Which speechless woe of his, poor she attendeth,
And his untimely frenzy thus awaketh:
Dear lord, thy sorrow to my sorrow lendeth
Another power; no blood by rainfall slacketh.
My heart too sensible thy passion maketh.
More feeling-painful: let it then suffice
To drown one woe, one pair of weeping eyes.

And for my sake, when I might charm thee so,
For she that was thy Lucrece,—now attend me;
Be suddenly revenged on my foe,
Thine, mine, his own; suppose thou dost defend me
From what is past: the help that thou shalt lend me
Comes all too late, yet let the traitor die;
For sparing justice feeds iniquity.
SONNETS.

I.

From fairest creatures we desire increase,
That thereby beauty might come to increase; But even this nature in herED end, But as the riper should by time decrease, His tender heir might bear his memory: But thou, contracted to thine own bright eyes, Feed'st at thy light's flame with self-substantial fuel, Making a famine where abundance lies, Thyself thy foe, to thy sweet self too cruel, That nature might not Machaon's charge to bear, Weep'st for her self, she Hath that killed. My daughter and my wife with clamours kill'd The dispers'd air, who holding Lucrece' life, Answer'd their cries, my daughter and my wife.

When forty winters shall besiege thy brow, And dig deep trenches in thy beauty's field, Thy youth's proud livery so gaudy and brave, Will be a tatter'd weed of small worth held, When being ask'd where all thy beauty lies, Where all the treasure of thy lusty days; To say, within thine own deep-sunken eyes, Were an all-eating shame, and thriftless praise. How much more praise deserve thy beauty's use, If thou couldst answer--"This fair child of mine Shall sum my count, and make my old excuses"-- Proving his beauty by succession thine. This were to be new-made when thou art old, And see thy blood warm when thou feelst it cold.

II.

Poor broken glass, I often did behold
In thy sweet semblance my old age new-born; But now that fair fresh mirror, dim and old, Shews me a bare-bou'd death by time out-worn; O, from thy cheeks my image thou hast torn! And shiver'd all the beauty of my glass,

That I no more can see what once I was. O time, cease thou thy course, and last no longer, If they succese to be, that should survive. Shall rotten death make conquest of the stronger, And leave the flattering feeble souls alive? Thy wit, the young possess their hive.

Then live sweet Lucrece, live again, and sue Thy father die, and not thy father thee! By this starts Collatine as from a dream, And bids Lucretius give his sorrow place; And then in key-cold Lucrece' bleeding stream He falls, and bathes the pale fear in his face, And counterfeits to die with her a space;

Till manly shame bids him possess his breath, And live to be reveng'd on her death. The deep vexation of his inward soul Has made a dumb and speechless tongue; Who mad that sorrow should his use control, Or keep him from heart-easing words so long. Begins to talk; but through his lips do throng Weak words, so thick come, in his poor heart's aid, That no man could distinguish what he said.

Yet sometime Tarquin was pronounce'd plain, But through his teeth as if the name were tore, This windy tempest, till it blow up rain, Held back his sorrow's tide, to make it more; At last it rain, and busy winds give o'er: Then son and father weep with equal strife, Who should weep most for daughter or for wife.

The one doth call her his, the other his, Yet neither may possess the claim they lay. The father says, she's mine: O mine she is, Replies her husband: Do not take away My sorrow's interest; let no mourner say He weeps for her, for she was only mine, And only must be wail'd by Collatine.

O, quoth Lucretius, I did give that life, Which she too early and too late hath spill'd. Woe, woe, quoth Collatine, she was my wife, I owned her, and 'tis mine that she hath kill'd. My daughter and my wife with clamours kill'd The dispers'd air, who holding Lucrece' life, Answer'd their cries, my daughter and my wife.
SONNETS.

III.

Look in thy glass, and tell the face thou viewest,
Now is the time that face should form another;
Whose fresh repair if now thou not renewest,
Thou dost beguile the world, unblest some mother.
For where is she so fair, whose un-ear'd womb
Disclaims the tallow of thy husbandry?
Or who is he so fond, will be the tomb
Of his self love, to stop posterity?
Thou art thy mother's glass, and she in thee
Calls back the lovely April of her prime:
So thou through windows of thine age shalt see,
Despite of wrinkles, this thy golden time.
But if thou live, remember'd not to be,
Die single, and thine image dies with thee.

IV.

Unthrifty loveliness, why dost thou spend
Upon thyself thy beauty's legacy?
Nature's bequest gives nothing, but doth lend,
And being fraug, she lends to those are free.
Then, beauteous nigard, why dost thou abuse
The boorish largess given thee to give?
Profligate usurer, why dost thou use
So great a sum of sums, yet canst not live!
For having traffic with thyself alone,
Thou of thyself thy sweet self dost deceive.
Then how, when nature calls thee to be gone,
What acceptable audit canst thou leave?
Thy mind's beauty must be tomb'd with thee,
Which, used, lives thy executor to be.

V.

Those hours, that with gentle work did frame
The lovely gaze where every eye doth dwell,
Will play the tyrants to the very same,
And that unfair which fairly doth excell;
For never-resting time leads summer on
To hideous winter, and confounds him there;
Sac check'd with frost, and lusty leaves quite gone,
Beauty's dersonow'd, and bareness every where:
Then, were not summer's distillation left,
A liquid prisoner pent in walls of glass,
Beauty's effect with beauty were herefit,
Nor it, nor no remembrance what it was,
But flowers distill'd, though they with winter meet,
Leese but their show; their substance still lives sweet.

VI.

Then let not winter's ragged band deface
In thee thy summer, eve thou be distill'd:
Make sweet some phial, treasure thou some place
With beauty's treasure, ere it be self-kil'd,
That use is not forbidden usury,
Which happies those that pay the willing loan;
That's for thyself to breed another thee;
Or ten times happier, be it ten for one;
Ten times thyself were happier than thou art,
If ten of thine ten times requir'd thee:
Then, what could death do if thou should'st depart,
Leaving thee living in posterity?
Be not self-will'd, for thou art much too fair.
To be death's conquest, and make worms thine heir.

VII.

Le, in the orient, when the gracious light
Lifts up his burning head, each under eye
Doth homage to his new-appearing sight,
Serving with looks his sacred majesty;
And having clin'd the steep-appearing hill
Resembling strong youth in his middle age,
Yet mortal looks adore his beauty still,
Attending on his golden pilgrimage;
But when from high-most pitch, with weary ear,
Like feeble age, he recedeth from the day,
The eyes, fore duteous, now converted are
From his low tract, and look another way:
So thou, thyself out-going in thy noon,
Unlook'd on diest, unless thou get a son.

VIII.

Music to hear, why hear'st thou music sadly?
Sweets with sweets war not, joy delights in joy.
Why lov'st thou that which thou receiv'st not gladly?
Or else receiv'st with pleasure thine annoy?
If the true concord of well-tuned sounds,
By unions married, do offend thine ear,
They do but swetty chide thee who confounds
To singleness the parts that thou should'st bear.
Mark how one string, sweet husband to another,
Stikes each in each by mutual ordering;
Resembling sire and child and happy mother,
Who all in one, one pleasing note do sing:
Whose speechless song, being many, seeming one,
Sings this to thee, "thou single wilt prove none."

IX.

Is it for fear to wet a widow's eye,
That thou consom'st thyself in single life?
Ah! if thou impetuous hast hap to die,
The world will wail thee, like a mateless wife;
The world will be thy widow and still weep,
That thou no form of thee hast left behind,
When every private widow well may keep,
By children's eyes, her husband's shape in mind.
Look, what an unthrift in the world doth spend,
Shifts but his place, for still the world enjoys it;
But beauty's waste bath in the world an end,
And kept unus'd, the user so destroys it.
No love toward others in that bosom sits,
That on himself such murderous shame commits

X.

For shame! deny that thou hear'st love to any,
Who for thyself art so unprovident.
Grant if thou wilt, thou art belov'd of many,
But that thou no lov'st, is most evident;
For thou art so possess'd with murderous hate,
That 'gainst thyself thou stick'st not to conspire,
Seeking that beauteous roof to ruminate,
Which to repair should be thy chief desire.
O change thy thought, that I may change my mind:
Shall hate be fairer lodg'd than gentle love?
Be, as thy presence is, gracious and kind,
Or to thyself, at least, kind-hearted prove:
Make thee another self, for love of me,
That beauty still may live in thee and thee.

XI.

As fast as thou shalt wane, so fast thou grow'st
In one of thine, from that which thou departedst;
And that fresh blood which youngly thou bestow'st,
Thou may'st call thine, when thou from youth convert-
Hencealive wisdom, beauty, and increase; [est
Without this, folly, age, and cold decay
If all were minded so, the times should cease,
And threescore years would make the world away.
Let those whom nature hath not made for store,
Harsh, featureless, and rude, barrenly perish:
Look whom she best endow'd, she gave thee more,
Which bounteous gift should'st to bounty cherish;
She curv'd thee for her seal, and meant thereby.
The should'st print more, nor let that copy die.
When I do count the clock that tells the time,
And see the brave day sunk in hideous night;
When I behold the violet past prime,
And sable curls, all silver d'ore with white;
When lofty trees I see barren of leaves,
Which erst from heat did canopy the herd,
And summer's green all girded up in sheaves,
Borne on the bier with white and briskly beard;
Then of thy beauty do I question make,
That thou among the walks of time must go,
Since sweets and beauties do themselves forsake,
And die as fast as they see others grow;
And nothing 'gainst time's scythe can make defiance,
Save breed, to brave him, when he takes thee hence.

O that you were yourself! but, love, you are
No longer your's, than you yourself here live:
Against this coming end you should prepare,
And your sweet semblance to some other give.
So should that beauty which you hold in lease,
Find no determination: then you were Yourself again, after yourself's decease,
When your sweet issue your sweet form should bear.
Who lets so fair a house fall to decay?
Against the stormy gusts of winter's day,
And barren rage of death's eternal cold?
O! none but unthrifts:—Dear, my love, you know
You had a father; let your son say so.

Not from the stars do I my judgment pluck;
And yet methinks I have astronomy,
But not to tell of good, or evil luck,
Of plague, or deaths, or seasons' quality:
Nor can I fortune to brief minutes tell,
Pointing to each thy thunder, rain and wind,
Or say, with princes if it shall go well,
By oft predict that I in heaven find;
But from thine eyes my knowledge I derive,
And (constant stars) in them I read such art,
As truth and beauty shall together thrive,
If from thyself to store thou woul'st convert:
Or else of thee this I prognosticate,
Thy end is truth's and beauty's doom and date.

When I consider every thing that grows
Holds in perfection but a little moment,
That this huge state presenteth nought but shows
Whereon the stars in secret influence comment;
When I perceive that men as plants increase,
Cheered and check'd even by the self-same sky;
Vast in their youthful sap, at height decrease,
And wear their brave state out of memory;
Then the conceit of this inconstant stay
Sets you most rich in youth before my sight,
Where wasteful time debateth with decay,
To change your day of youth to sullied night;
And, all in war with time, for love of you,
As he takes from you, I engrave you new.

But wherefore do not you a mightier way
Make war upon this bloody tyrant, Time?
And fortify yourself in your decay
With means more blessed than my barren rhyme?
Now stand you on the top of happy hours;
And many warden gardens yet unset

With virtuous wish would bear you living flowers,
Much liker than your painted counterfeits:
So should the lines of life that life repair,
Which this, Time's pencil, or my pen could,
Neither in inward worth, nor outward fair,
Can make you live yourself in eyes of men.
To give away yourself, keeps yourself still;
And you must live, drawn by your own sweet skill.

Who will believe my verse in time to come,
If it were fill'd with your most high deserts?
Though yet, heaven knows, it is but as a tomb
Which hides your life, and shows not half your parts.
If I could write the beauty of your eyes,
And to fresh numbers number all your graces,
The age to come would say this poet lies,
Such heavenly touches fare touch'd earthy faces.
So should my papers, yellow'd with their age,
Be scor'd, like old men of less truth than tongue;
And your true rights be term'd a poet's rage,
And stretch't metre of an antique song:
But were some child of yours alive that time,
You should live twice;—in it, and in my rhyme.

Shall I compare thee to a summer's day?
Thou art more lovely and more temperate:
Rough winds do shake the darling buds of May,
And summer's lease hath all too short a date:
Sometime too hot the eye of heaven shines,
And sometime too brief are its gold complexion dinn'd;
And every fair from fair sometime declines,
By chance, or nature's changing course, and arrin'm'd;
But thy eternal summer shall not fade.
Nor lose possession of that thou owwest;
Nor shall death brag thou wander'st in his shade,
When in eternal lines to time thou growest:
So long as men can breathe, or eyes can see,
So long lives this, and this gives life to thee.

Devouring Time, blunt thou the lion's paws,
And make the earth devour her own sweet brood;
Pluck the keen teeth from the fierce tiger's jaws,
And burn the long-lived phoenix in her blood;
Make glad and sorry seasons, as thou fleet'st,
And do whatsoever thou wilt, swift-footed Time,
To the wide world, and all her fading sweet;
But I forbid thee one most heinous crime:
O carve not with thy thry time's fair brow,
Nor draw no lines there with thine antique pen;
Him in thy course untainted do allow,
For beauty's pattern to succeeding men.
Yet, do thy worst, old time: despite thy wrong,
My love shall in my verse ever live young.

A woman's face, with nature's own hand painted,
Hast thou, the master-mistress of my passion;
A woman's gentle heart, but not acquainted
With shifting change, as is false women's fashion;
An eye more bright than theirs, less false in rolling,
Gilding the object whereupon it gazeth;
A man in hue, all hues in his controlling,
Which steals men's eyes, and women's souls amazeth.
And for a woman worth thou first created,
Till nature, as she wrought thee, fell a-doting;
And by addition me of thee defeated.
By adding one thing to my purpose nothing.
But since she prick'd thee out for women's pleasure,
Mine be thy love, and thy love's use their treasure.
SONNETS.

So it is not with me as with that muse,
Stir'd by a painted beauty to his verse;
Who heaven itself for ornament doth use,
And every fair with his fair doth rehearse;
Making a couplement of proud compare,
With sun and moon, with earth and sea's rich gems,
With April's first-born flowers, and all things rare
That heaven's air in his huge rondure hews.
O let me, true in love, but truly write,
And then believe me, my love is as fair
As any mother's child, though not so bright
As those gold candles fixed in heaven's air:
Let them say more that like of heart-say well;
I will not praise, that purpose not to sell.

My glass shall not persuade me I am old,
So long as youth and thou are of one date;
But when in thee time's furrows I behold,
Then look I death my days should expiate.
For all that beauty that doth cover thee,
Is but the seemingly rainment of my heart,
Which in thy breast doth live, as thine in me;
How can I then be elder than thou art?
O therefore, love, be of thyself so wary,
As I not for myself, but for thee will;
Bearing thy heart, which I will keep so chary
As tender nurse her babe from faring ill.
Presume not on thy heart when mine is shin;
Thou gav'st me thine, not to give back again.

As an unperfect actor on the stage,
Who with his fear is put beside his part,
Or some fierce thing replete with too much rage,
Whose strength's abundance weakens his own heart;
So I, for fear of trust, forget to say
The perfect ceremony of love's rite,
And in mine own love's strength seem to decay.
O'ercrosh'd with barthen of mine own love's light.
O let my books be then the eloquence
And dumb presagers of my speaking breath;
Who plead for love, and look for recompence,
More than that tongue that more hath more express'd.
O learn to read what silent love hath writ:
To hear with eyes belongs to love's fine wit.

Mine eye hath play'd the painter, and hath stell'd
Thy beauty's form in table of my heart;
My body is the frame wherein 'tis held,
And perspective it is best painter's art.
For through the painter must you see his skill,
To find where your true image picture'd lies,
Which in my bosom's shop is hanging still,
That hath his windows glazed with thine eyes.
Now see what good turns eyes for eyes have done;
Mine eyes have drawn thy shape, and thine for me.
Are windows to my breast, where-through the sun
Delights to peep, to gaze therein on thee;
Yet eyes this cunning want to grace their art,
They draw but what they see, know not the heart.

Let those who are in favour with their stars,
Of public honour and proud titles boast,
Whilst I, whom fortune of such triumph bars,
Unlook'd-for joy in that I honour most.
Great princes' favourites their fair leaves spread,
But as the marigold at the sun's eye,
And in themselves their pride lies buried,
For at a frown they in their glory die.
The painful warrior famou'sed for fight,
After a thousand victories once toil'd,
Is from the book of honour razed quite,
And all the rest forget for which he toil'd:
Then happy I, that love and am beloved,
Where I may not remove, nor be removed

Lord of my love, to whom in vassalage
Thy merit hath my duty strongly knit,
To thee I send this written embassage,
To witness duty, not to shew my wit.
Duty so great, which wit so poor as mine
May seem bare, in wanting words to shew it;
But that I hope some good conceit of thine
In thy soul's thought, all naked, will bestow it:
Till whatsoever star that guides my moving,
Points on me graciously with fair aspect,
And puts apparel on my tattered loving,
To shew me worthy of thy sweet respect:
Then may I dare to boast how I do love thee, [me.
Till then, not shew my head where thou may'st prove

Weary with toil, I haste to my bed,
The dear repose for limbs with travel tired;
But then begins a journey in my head,
To work my mind, when body's work's expired:
For then my thoughts (from far where I abide)
Intend a zealous pilgrimage to thee,
And keep my drooping eye-lids open wide,
Looking on darkness which the blind do see,
Save that my soul's imaginary sight
Presents thy shadow to my sightless view,
Which, like a jewel hung in ghostly night,
Makes black night beauteous, and her old face new.
Lo thus by day my limbs, by night my mind,
For thee, and for myself no quiet find.

How can I then return in happy plight,
That am debarr'd the benefit of rest?
When day's oppression is not eas'd by night,
But day by night and night by day oppress'd?
And each, though enemies to either's reign,
Do in consent shake hands to torture me,
The one by toil, the other to complain
How far I toil, still farther off from thee.
I tell the day, to please him, thou art bright,
And dost him grace when clouds do blot the heaven:
So flatter I the swart-complexion'd night;
When sparkling stars twire not, thou gild'st the even.
But day doth daily draw my sorrows longer,
And night doth nightly make grief's length seem stranger.

When in disgrace with fortune and men's eyes,
I all alone beweep my outcast state,
And trouble deaf heaven with my bootless cries,
And look upon myself, and curse my fate,
Wishing me like to one more rich in hope,
Feator'd like him, like him with friends possess'd,
Desiring this man's art, and that man's scope,
With what I most enjoy contented least;
Yet in these thoughts myself almost despising,
Haply I think on thee,—and then my state
(Like to the lark at break of day arising
From sullen earth) sings hymns at heaven's gate;
For thy sweet love remember'd, such wealth brings,
That then I scorn to change my state with kings.
When to the sessions of sweet silent thought
I summon up remembrance of things past,
I bring back former days to mind,
And with old woes new wail my dear time's waste:
Then can I drown an eye, unused to flow,
For precious friends hid in death's dateless night,
And weep afresh love's long-since cancilled woe,
And mean the expence of many a vanish'd sight.
Then can I grieve at grievances fore-gone,
And heavily from woe to woe tell o'er
The sad account of fore-bemoaned men,
Which I new pay as if not pay'd before.
But if the while I think on thee, dear friend,
All losses are restor'd, and sorrows end.

Thy bosom is endear'd with all hearts,
Which I by lacking have supposed dead;
And there reigns love and all love's loving parts,
And all those friends which I thought buried.
How many a holy and obsequious tear
 Hath dear religious love stolen from mine eye,
As interest of the dead, which now appear
But things remov'd, that hidden in thee lie!
The sight of the grave where many a buried love doth live,
Hung with the trophies of my lovers gone,
Who all their parts of thee did give;
That duc of many now is thine alone:
Their images I lov'd I view in thee,
And thou (all they) hast all the all of me.

If thou survive my well-contented day,
When that hurleth Death my bones with dust shall cover,
And shalt by fortune once more re-survey
These poor rude lines of thy deceased lover,
Compare them with the bettering of the time;
And though they be out-strip'd by every pen,
Reserve them for my love, not for their rhyme,
Exceeded by the height of happier men,
O then vouchsafe me but this loving thought!
Had my friend's muse grown with this growing age,
A dearer birth than this his love had brought,
To march in ranks of better equipage:
But since he died, and poets better prove,
Theirs for their style I'll read, his for his love.

Full many a glorious morning have I seen
Flatter the mountain tops with sovereign eye,
Kissing with golden face the meadows green,
Gilding pale streams with heavenly alchemy;
Anon permit the basest clouds to ride
With ugly rack on his celestial face,
And from the forlorn world his visage hide,
Steal ing unseen to west with this disgrace:
Even so my sun one early morn did shine,
With all triumphant splendour on my brow;
But out I slack'd he was but one hour mine.
The region cloud hath mask'd him from me now,
Yet him for this my love no whit disdaineth;
Sun's of the world may stain, when heaven's sun staineth.

Why didst thou promise such a beauteous day,
And make me travel forth without my cloak,
To let base clouds o'take me in my way,
Hiding thy bravery in their rotten smoke?
"Thou hast enough that through the cloud thou break,
To dry the rain on my storm-bitten face
For no man well of such a salve can speak,
That heals the wound, and cures not the disgrace:
Nor can the shame give physic to my grief;
Though thou repent, yet I have still the loss:
The offender's sorrow lends but weak relief
To him that bears the strong offence's cross.
Ah! but those tears are pearl which thy love sheds,
And they are rich, and ransom all ill deeds.

No more be grieved at that which thou hast done:
Roses have thorns, and silver fountains mud;
Clouds and eclipse stain both moon and sun,
And batosame canker lives in sweetest bud.
All men make faults, and even I in this,
Authorizing thy trespass with compare,
Mist I in thy delight, salving thy amiss,
Excusing thy sins more than thy sins are:
For to thy sensual fault I bring in sense,
(Thy adverse party is thy advocate,) And 'gainst myself a lawful plea commence:
Such civil war is in my love and hate,
That I an necessary seeds must be
To that sweet thief, which sourly robs from me.

Let me confess that we two must be twain,
Although our undivided loves are one:
So shall those blots that do with me remain,
Without thy help, by me be borne alone.
In our two loves there is but one respect,
Though in our lives a separable spite,
Which though it alter not love's sole effect,
Yet doth it steal sweet hours from love's delight
I may not evermore acknowledge thee,
Lest my bewailed guilt should do thee shame;
Nor thou with public kindness honour me,
Unless thou take that honour from thy name:
But do not so; I love thee in such sort,
As thou being mine, mine is thy good report.

As a decrep't father takes delight
To see his active child do deeds of youth,
So I, made lame by fortune's dearest spite,
Take all my comfort of thy worth and truth;
For whether beauty, birth, or wealth, or wit,
Or any of these all, or all, or more,
Entitled in thy parts do crown'd sit,
I make my love engraven to this store:
So then I am not lame, poor, nor despis'd,
Whilst that this shadow doth such substance give,
That in our shadou blame am su'd, and
And by a part of all thy glory live,
Look what is best, that best I wish in thee;
This wish I have; then ten times happy me!

How can my muse want subject to invent,
While thou dost breathe, that pour'est into my verse
Thine own sweet argument, too excellent
For every vulgar paper to rehearse?
O give thyself the thanks, if sugh't in me
Worthy perusal, stand against thy sight,
For who's so dumb that cannot write to thee.
When thou thyself dost give invention light?
Be thou the tenth Muse, ten times more in worth
Than those old nine, which chimeres invoke;
And he that calls on thee, let him bring forth
Eternal numbers to out-live long date.
If my slight muse do please these curious days,
The pain be mine, but thine shall be the praise.
SONNETS.

XXXIX.
O how thy worth with manners may I sing,
When thou art all the better part of me!
What can mine own praise to mine own self bring?
And what is't but mine own, when I praise thee?
Even for this let us divide love,
And our dear love lose name of single one,
That by this separation I may give
That due to thee, which thou deserv'st alone.
O absence, what a torment wouldest thou prove,
Were it not thy sorrow, that gave sweet leave
To entertain the time with thoughts of love,
(Which time and thoughts so sweetly doth deceive,) And that thou teachest how to make one twain,
By praising him here, who doth hence remain.

XL.
Take all my loves, my love, yea, take them all;
What hast thou then more than thou hadst before?
No love, my love, that thou may'st true love call;
All mine was thine, before thou hadst this more.
Then if for my love thou my love receivest,
I cannot blame thee, for my love thou wast;
But yet be blam'd, if thou thyself deceivest
By wilful taste of what thyself refusest.
I do forgive thy robbery, gentle thief,
Although thou steal thee all my property;
And yet love knows, it is a greater grief
To bear love's wrong, than hate's known injury.
Lascivious grace, in whom all ill shows,
Kill me with spites; yet we must not be fees.

XLI.
Those petty wrongs that liberty commits,
When I am sometime absent from thy heart,
Thy beauty and thy years full well befits,
For still temptation follows where thou art.
Gentle thou art, and therefore to be won,
Beautiful thou art, therefore to be assailed;
And when a woman wooes, what woman's son
Will so lightly leave her till she have prevail'd?
Ah me! but yet thou might'st, my sweet, forbear,
And chide thy beauty and thy straying youth,
Who lead thee in their riot even there
Where thou art forc'd to break a two-fold truth;
He's, by thy beauty tempting her to thee,
Thine, by thy beauty being false to me.

XLII.
That thou hast her, it is not all my grief,
And yet it may be said I lov'd her dearly;
That she hath thee, is of my wailing chief,
A loss in love that touches me more nearly.
Loving offenders, thus I will excuse ye.—
Thou dost love her, because thou know'st I love her;
And for my sake even so doth she abuse me,
Suffering my friend for my sake to approve her.
If I lose thee, my loss is my love's gain,
And losing her, my friend hath found that loss;
Both find each other, and I lose both twain,
And both for my sake lay on me this cross:
But here's the joy; my friend and I are one;
Sweet flattery!—then she loves but me alone.

XLIII.
When most I wink, then do mine eyes best see,
For all the day they view things unrespected;
But when I sleep, in dreams they look on thee,
And darkly bright, are bright in dark directed.
Then thou whose shadow shadows doth make bright,
How would thy shadow's form form happy show
To the clear day with thy much clearer light,
When to unseeing eyes thy shade shines so?
How would (I say) mine eyes be blessed made
By looking on thee in the living day.
When in dead night thy fair imperfect shade
Through heavy sleep on sightless eyes doth stay?
All days are nights to see, till I see thee, [me.
And nights, bright days, when dreams do show thee

XLIV.
If the dull substance of my flesh were thought,
Injuries distance should not stop my way;
For then, despite of space, I would be brought
From limits far remote, where thou dost stay.
No matter then although my foot did stand
Upon the farthest earth remov'd from thee,
For nimble thought can jump both sea and land,
As soon as think the place where he would be.
But ah! thought kills me, that I am not thought,
To leap large lengths of miles when thou art gone,
But that, so much of earth and water wrought,
I must attend time's leisure with my moan;
Receiving ought by elements so slow
But heavy tears, badges of either's woe.

XLV.
The other two, slight air and purging fire,
Are both with thee, wherever I abide;
The first my thought, the other my desire,
These present-absent with swift motion slide.
For when these quicker elements are gone
In tender embassy of love to thee,
My life being made of two, with two alone,
Sinks down to death, oppress'd with melancholy;
Until life's composition be recur'd
By those swift messengers return'd from thee,
Who even but now come back again, assured
Of thy fair health, recounting it to me:
This told, I joy; but then no longer glad,
I send them back again, and straight grow sad.

XLVI.
Mine eye and heart are at a mortal war,
How to divide the conquest of thy sight;
Mine eye my heart thy picture's sight would bar,
My heart mine eye the freedom of that right.
My heart doth plead, that thou in him dost lie,
(A closet ever pier'd with crystal eyes,)—
But the defendant doth that plea deny,
And says in him thy fair appearance lies.
To 'cide this title is impannel'd
A quest of thoughts, all tenants to the heart;
And by their verdict is determined
The clear eye's moiety, and the dear heart's part,
As thus; mine eye's due is thy outward part,
And my heart's right thy inward love of heart.

XLVII.
Betwixt mine eye and heart a league is took,
And each doth good turns new unto the other:
When that mine eye is famish'd for a look,
Or heart in love with sights himself doth vomit,
With my love's picture then my eye doth feast,
And to the painted banquet bids my heart:
Another time mine eye is my heart's guest,
And in his thoughts of love doth share a part:
So, either by thy picture or my love,
Thyself away art present still with me,
For thou not farther than my thoughts caest move,
And with me still with thou art with thee;
Or if they sleep, thy picture in my sight
Awakes my heart to heart's and eye's delight.
XLVII.
How careful was I when I took my way,
Each trite under trusty bars to thrust,
That, to my use, it might unused stay
From hands of falsehood, in sure wards of trust!
But thou, to whom my jewels tristes are,
Most worthy comfort now my greatest grief,
I bids thee hear. Of tunes, most gentle care,
Are left the prey of every vulgar thief.
This have I not lock'd up in any chest,
Save where thou art not, though I feel thou art,
Within the gentle closure of my breast.
From whence at pleasure thou may'st come and part;
And even thence thou wilt be stolen I fear,
For truth proves thievish for a prize so dear.

XLIX.
Against that time, if ever that time come,
When I shall see thee frown on my defects,
Whenas thy love hath cast its utmost sun,
Call'd to that audit by advis'd respects,
Against that time, when thou shalt strangely pass,
And scarcely greet me with that same thine eye,
When love, converted from the thing it was,
Shall reasons find of settled gravity,
Against that time do I ensonce me here
Within the knowledge of mine own desert,
And this my hand against myself appear,
To guard the lawful reasons on thy part:
To leave poor me thou hast the strength of laws,
Since, why to love, I can allege no cause.

L.
How heavy do I journey on the way,
When I seek,—my weary travel's end,—
Doth teach that ease and that repose to say,
"Thrice far the miles are measure'd from thy friend!"
The beast that bears me, tired with my woe,
Plods dully on, to bear that weight in me,
As if by some instinct the wretched did know
His rider lov'd not speed, being made from thee:
The bloody spur cannot provoke him on
That sometimes anger thrusts into his side,
Which heavily he answers with a groan,
More sharp to me than deadly to his side:
For that same groan doth put this in my mind,
My grief lies onward, and my joy behind.

L.
Thus can my love excuse the slow offence
Of my dull bearer, when from thee I speed:
From where thou art why should I haste me hence?
Till I return, of posting is no need.
O, what excuse will my poor beast then find,
When swift extremity can seem but slow?
Then should I spur, though mounted on the wind;
In winged speed no motion shall I know:
Then can no horse with my desire keep pace;
Therefore desire, of perfect love being mine,
Shall neigh (no dull flesh) in his fiery race;
But love, for love, thus shall excuse my jade;
Since from thee going he went wilful slow,
Towards thee I'll run, and give him leave to go.

LII.
So am I as the rich, whose blessed key
Can bring him to his sweet up-locked treasure,
The which he will not every hour survey,
For blunting the fine point of seldom pleasure. Therefore are feasts so solemn and so rare,
Since seldom coming, in the long year set,
Like stones of worth they thinly placed are,
Or captain jewels in the carcanet.
So is the time that keeps you, as my chest,
Or as the wardrobe which the robe doth hide,
To make some special instant special-blest,
By new unfolding his imprison'd pride.
Blessed are you, whose worthiness gives scope,
Being had, to triumph, being lack'd, to hope.

LIII.
What is your substance, whereof are you made,
That millions of strange shadows on you tend?
Since every one hath, every one, one shade,
And you, but one, can every shadow lend.
Describe Adonis, and the counterfeit
Is poorly imitated after you;
On Helen's cheek all art of beauty set,
And you in Grecian tires are painted new:
Speak of the spring, and foison of the year:
The one doth shadow of your beauty shew,
The other as your bounty doth appear,
And you in every blessed shape we know.
In all external grace you have some part,
But you like none, none you, for constant heart.

LIV.
O how much more doth beauty beauteous seem,
By that sweet ornament which truth doth give!
The rose looks fair, but fairer we it deem
For that sweet odour which doth in it live.
The roses usual have full as deep a dye,
As the perfumed tincture of the roses,
Hang on such thorns, and play as wantonly
When summer's breath their masked buds discloses.
But, for their virtue only is their show,
They live unwo'd, and unrespected fade;
Die to themselves. Sweet roses do not so;
Of their sweet deaths are sweetest odours made:
And so of you, beauteous and lovely youth,
When that shall fade, my verse distils your truth.

LV.
Not marble, nor the gilded monuments
Of princes, shall out-live this powerful rhime;
But you shall shine more bright in these contents
Than unawak'd stones, bearmar'd with sluttish time.
When wasteful war shall statues overturn,
And broils root out the work of masonry,
Nor Marsis' sword nor war's quick fire shall burn
The livid record of your memory.
Grainest death and all-oblivious eminety
Shall you pace forth; your praise shall still find room,
Even in the eyes of all posterity.
That wear this world out to the ending doom.
So till the judgment that yourself arise,
You live in this, and dwell in lovers' eyes.

LVI.
Sweet love, renew thy force; be it not said,
Thy edge should be softer than appetite,
Which but to-day by feeding is alway'd.
To-morrow sharpen'd in his former might:
So, love, be thou; although to-day thou fill
Thy hungry eyes, even till they wink with fulness,
To-morrow see again, and do not kill
The spirit of love with a perpetual dulness.
Let charmed beams like golden locks be shot
Which parts the shore, where two contracted-new Come daily to the banks, that, when they see
Return of love, more blest may be the view:
Or call it winter, which being full of care, [rare.
Makes summer's welcome three more wish'd, more
SONNETS

Tokeep our charms and old beams in me,
The season is now of the passions.
Our love may grow, though slow, yet sure,
And never rage that makes no eye awake.
You may be young, but may I not be so,
To play the watchman over the false light?
You know me not, nor know what I did;
You have not seen an hour of me.

So slow a show requir'd a slow eye
As none can love, and none can see.

SONNETS.

126.
Th'ill with all these, for mortal death I cry,—
As to behold desert a seguir's born,
And needly nothing tram'd in jollity,
And purest faith unhappily forsworn,
And gilded honour shamefully mispav'd,
And maiden virtue rudely stripp'd,
And right perfection wrongfully disgrac'd,
And strength by lieing away disabled,
And art made tongue ty'd by authority,
And fully doctor'd courteisie tolling skill,
And simple truth mispav'd simplicity,
And captive Good attending Catholic
Th'ill with all these, from these would I be gone,
Save that, to die, I leave my love alone.

127.
Ah! wherefore with infection should he live,
And with his presence grace impyct
That sin by him advantage should achieve,
And face itself with his society!
Why should false painting imitate his cheek,
And steal dead seeing of his living hue?
Why should pure beauty with pleasing see
Roses of shadow, since his rose is true?
Why should he live, now Nature bankrupt is,
Beggard of blood, to blush through lively veins?
For she hath no exchequer now but his,
And proud of many, lives upon his gains.
O, him she stores, to shew what wealth she had,
In days long since, before these last so bad.

128.
Thus is his cheek the map of days out-worn,
When beauty liv'd and died as flowers do now,
Before these bastard signs of fair were borne,
Or durst inhabit on a living bow;
Before the golden truce of the dead,
The right of squallor's, were shorn away,
To live a second life on second head,
For beauty's dead fiends made another gay:
In him those holy antique hours are seen,
Without all ornament, itself, and true,
Making no summer of another's green,
Robbing so old to make his beauty new;
And him as for a map doth nature show,
To shew false art what beauty was of yore.

129.
These parts of thee that the world's eye doth view,
Want nothing that the thought of hearts can mend:
All tongues (the voice of souls) give thee that due,
Uttering bare truth, even so as faces commend.
Thy outward thus with outward praise is crown'd:
But these same tongues that give thee so thine own,
In other accents do this praise confound,
By seeing farther than the eye hath shewn,
They look into the beauty of thy mind,
And that, in guess, they measure by thy deeds;
(kind,
Then elocutis) their thoughts, although their eyes were
To thy fair flower add the rank smell of weeds:
But why thy odour matcheth not thy show,
To solve in this,—that thou dost common grow.

130.
That thou art blam'd shall not be thy defect,
For slander's mark was ever yet the fair;
The ornament of beauty is suspect,
A crow that flies in heaven's sweetest air.
So thou be good, slander doth but approve
Thy worth the greater, being woor'd of time;
For canker vice the sweetest birds doth love,
And thou present'st a pure unstained prime.
Those last pass'd by the ambush of young days,
Either not assuy'd, or vector being charg'd;
Yet this thy praise cannot be so thy praise,
To tie up envy, evermore enlarg'd:
If some suspect of ill mask'd not thy show,
Then those abate kingdoms of hearts should stowe.

131.
No longer mourn for me when I am dead,
Than you shall hear the surly sullen bell
Give warning to the world that I am fled
From this vile world with viles worse to dwell:
Nay, if you read this line, remember not
The hand that writ it; for I love you so,
That I in your sweet thoughts would be forgot,
If thinking on me then should make you woe.
O if (I say) you look upon this verse,
When I perhapscompound am with clay,
Do not so much as my poor name rehearse;
But let your love even with my life decay:
Lest the wise world should look into your mean,
And mock you with me after I am gone.

132.
O, lest the world should task you to recite
What merit liv'd in me, that you should love
After my death, dear love, forget me quite,
For you in me can nothing worthy prove;
Unless you would devise some virtuous lie,
To do more for me than mine own desire,
And hang more praise upon deceased
Than niggard truth would willingly impart;
O, lest your true love may seem false in this,
That you for love speak well of me untrue,
My name be hurled where my body is,
And live no more to shame nor me nor you.

133.
That time of year thou may'st in me behold
When yellow leaves, or none, or few, do hang Upon those boughs which shake against the cold,
Bare and forlorn, where late the sweet birds sang.
In me thou seest the twilight of such day,
As after sun set fadeth in the west,
Which by and by black night doth take away,
Death's second self, that seals up all in rest.
In me thou seest the glowing of such fire,
That on the ashes of his youth doth lie,
As the death-bed wherein it must expire,
Consum'd with that which it was nourish'd by.

This thou perceiv'st which makes thy love more strong,
To love that well which thou must leave ere long.

134.
But let me confess, when that fell arrest
Without all bail shall carry me away,
My life hath in this line some interest,
Which for memorial still with thee shall stay.
When thou reviewest this, thou dost review
The very part was consecrate to thee,
The earth can have but earth, which is his due;
My spirit is thine, the better part of me:
So then thou hast not lost that dead man,
The prey of worms, my body being dead;
The coward conquest of a wretch's knife,
Too base of thee to be remembered.
The worth of that, is that which it contains,
And that is this, and this with thee remains.
LXXV.
So are you to my thoughts, as food to life,
Or as sweet season'd showers are to the ground,
And for the peace of you I hold such strife
As 'twixt a miser and his wealth is found;
Now proud as an en joyer, and anon
Doubling the filching age will steal his treasure;
Now counting best to be with you alone,
Then better'd that the world may see my pleasure:
Sometime, all full with feasting on your sight,
And by and by clean starved for a look;
Possessing or pursuing no delight,
Save what is bad or must from you be took.
Thus do I pine and surfeit day by day,
Or gluttonning on all, or all away.

LXXVI.
Why is my verse so barren of new pride?
So far from variation or quick change?
Why, with the time, do I not glance aside
To new-found methods and to compounds strange?
Why write I still all one, ever the same,
And keep invention in a noted weed,
That every word doth almost tell my name,
Showing their birth, and where they did proceed?
And of this book this learning may'st thou taste.
The wrinkles which thy glass will truly shew,
Of moulded graves will give thee memory;
Thou by thy dial's shady stealth may'st know
Time's thiefish progress to eternity.
Look, what thy memory cannot contain,
Commit to these waste blanks, and thou shalt find
Those children nurs'd, deliver'd from thy brain,
To take a new acquaintance of thy mind.
These offices, so oft as thou wilt look,
Shall profit thee, and much enrich thy book.

LXXVII.
So oft have I involk'd thee for my muse,
And found such fair assistance in my verse,
As every alien pen hath got my use,
And under thee their poetie disperse.
Thine eyes, that taught the dumb on high to sing,
And heavy ignorance afoot to fly,
Have added feathers to the learned wing,
And given grace a double majesty.
Yet be most proud of that which I compile,
Whose influence is thine, and born of thee.
In others' works thou dost but mend the style,
And arts with thy sweet graces grace be;
But thou art all my art, and dost advance
As high as learning my rude ignorance.

LXXIX.
Whilst I alone did call upon thy aid,
My verse alone had all thy gentle grace;
But now thy gracious numbers are decay'd,
And my sick muse doth give another place.
I grant, sweet love, thy lovely argument
Deserves the travail of a worthier pen;
Yet what of thee thy poet doth invent,
He robs thee of, and pays it thee again.

He lends thee virtue, and he stole that word
From thy behaviour; beauty doth he give,
And found it in thy cheek; he can afford
No praise to thee but what in thee doth live.
Then thank him not for that which he doth say,
Since what he owes thou thyself dost pay.

LXXX.
O how I faint when I of you do write,
Knowing a better spirit doth use your name,
And in the praise thereof spends all his might,
To make the tongue try speckling up your fame!
But since your worth (wide, as the ocean is,)
The humble as the proudest sail doth bear,
My saucy bark, inferior far to his,
On your broad main doth willfully appear.
Your shallowest help will hold me up aloft,
Whilst he upon your soundless deep doth ride;
Or, being wreek'd, I am a worthless boat,
Of tall building, and of goodly pride;
Then if he thrive, and I be cast away,
The worst was this,—my love was my decay.

LXXXI.
Or I shall live your epitaph to make,
Or you survive when I in earth am rotten;
From hence your memory death cannot take,
Though in me each part will be forgotten.
Your name from hence immortal life shall have,
Though I, once gone, to all the world must die.
The earth can yield me but a common grave,
When you entombed in men's eyes shall lie.
Your monument shall be my gentle verse,
Which eyes not yet created shall o'er-read;
And tongues to be, your being shall rehearse,
When all the breathers of this world are dead;
You still shall live (such virtue hath my pen,)
Where breath most breathes,—even in the mouths of men.

LXXXII.
I grant thou wert not married to my muse,
And therefore may'st without attaint o'erlook
The dedicated words which writers use
Of their fair subject, blessing every book.
Thou art as fair in knowledge as in hue,
Finding thy worth a limit past my praise;
And therefore art enforc'd to seek anew
Some fresher stamp of the time-bettering days.
And do so, love; yet when they have devis'd
What strained touches rhetoric can lend,
Thou truly fair went truly sympathiz'd
In true plain words, by thy true-telling friend;
And their gross painting might be better us'd
Where cheeks need blood; in thee it is abus'd.

LXXXIII.
I never saw that you did painting need,
And therefore to your fair no painting set.
I found, or thought I found, you did exceed
The barren tender of a poet's debt;
And therefore have I slept in your report,
That you your elf, being extant, well might show
How far a modern quill doth come too short,
Speaking of worth, what worth in you doth grow.
This silence for my sin you did impute,
Which shall be most my glory, being dumb;
For I impair not beauty being mute,
When others would give life, and bring a tomb.
There lives more life in one of your fair eyes,
Than both your poets can in praise devise.
SONNETS.

lxixiv. Who is it that says most? which can say more, Than this rich praise,—that you alone are you! In whose confine immured is the store Which should example where your equal grew, That to his subject lends not some small glory; But he that writes of you, if he can tell That you are you, so dignifies his story, Let him but copy what in you is writ, Not making worse what nature made so clear, And such a counter-part shall fame his wit, Making his style admired everywhere. You to your beauteous blessings add a curse, Being fond on praise, which makes your praises worse.

lxixv. My tongue-ty'd muse in manners holds her still, While comments of your praise, richly compil'd, Reserve their character with golden quill, And precious phrase by all the muses fill'd. I think good thoughts, while others write good words, And, like unletter'd clerk, still cry Amen To every hyme that able spirit affords, In polish'd form of well-refined pen Hearing you prai'd, I say, 'tis so, 'tis true, And to the most of praise add something more; But that is in my thought, whose love to you, Though words come hindmost, holds his rank before. Then others for the breath of words respect, Me for my dumb thoughts, speaking in effect.

i. Was it the proud full sail of his great verse, Bound for the prize of all-too-precious you, That did my rife thoughts in my brain inhearse, Making their tomb the womb wherein they grew? Was it his spirit, by spirits taught to write Above a mortal pitch, that struck me dead? No, neither he, nor his compere by night Giving him aid, my verse astonish'd. He, nor that affable familiar ghost Which nightly calls him with intelligence, As victors, of my silence cannot boast; I was not sick of any fear from thence. But when your countenance fill'd up his line, Then lack'd I matter; that enfeebled mine.

lxixvii. Farewell! thou art too dear for my possessing, And like enough thou know'st what estimate: The charter of thy worth gives thee releasing; My bonds in thee are all determinate. For how do I hold thee but by thy granting? And for that riches where is my deserving? The cause of this fair gift in me is wanting, And so my patent back again is swerving. Thyself thou gav'st, thy own worth then not knowing, Or me, to whom thou gav'st it, else mistaking; So thy great gift, upon misprision growing, Comes home again, on better judgment making. Thus have I had thee, as a dream doth flatter, To sleep a king, but waking, no such matter.

lxixviii. When thou shalt be dispos'd to set me light, And place my merit in the eye of Scorn, Upon thy side against myself I'll fight, And prove thee virtuous, though thou art forsworn. With mine own weakness being best acquainted, Upon thy part I can set down a story Of faults conceal'd, wherein I am attainted; That thou, in loving me, shalt win much glory: And I by this will be a gainer too; For bending all my loving thoughts on thee, The injuries that to myself I do, Doing thee vantage, double-vantage me. Such is my love, to thee I so belong, That for thy right myself will bear all wrong.

lxixix. Say that thou didst for sake me for some fault, And I will comment upon that offence: Speak of my lameness, and I straight will halt; Against thy reasons making no defence. Thou canst not, love, disgrace me half so ill, To set a form upon desired change, As I'll myself disgrace: knowing thy will, I will acquaintance strangle, and look strange; Be absent from thy walks; and in my tongue Thy sweet beloved name no more shall dwell; Lest I (too much profane) should do it wrong, And hark of our old acquaintance tell. For thee, against myself I'll vow debate, For I must ne'er love him whom thou dost hate.

xl. Then hate me when thou wilt; if ever, now; Now while the world with unprofitable deeds to cross, Join with the spite of fortune, make me bow, And do not drop in for an after-loss: Ah! do not, when my heart hath scap'd this sorrow, Come in the rearward of a conquer'd wo; Give not a wisty night a rainy morrow, To linger out a purpos'd overthrow. If thou wilt leave me, do not leave me last, When other petty griefs have done his spite, But in the onset come; so shall I taste At first the very worst of Fortune's might; And other strains of woe, which now seem woe, Compar'd with loss of thee, will not seem so.

xli. Some glory in their birth, some in their skill, Some in their wealth, some in their body's force; Some in their garments, though new-fangled ill, Some in their hawks and hounds, some in their horse; And every humour hath its adjunct pleasure, Wherein it finds a joy above the rest; But these particulars are not my measure, All these I better in one general best. Thy love is better than high birth to me, Richer than wealth, prouder than garments' cost, Of more delight than hawks or horses be; And having thee, of all men's pride I boast. Wretched in this alone, that thou may'st take All this away, and me most wretched make.

xlii. But do thy worst to steal thyself away, For term of life thou art assured mine; And life no longer than thy love will stay, For it depends upon that love of thine, Then need I not to fear the worst of wrongs, When in the least of them my life hath end. I see a better state to me belong; Than that which on thy humour doth depend, Thou canst not vex me with inconstant mind, Since that my life on thy revolt doth lie. O what a happy title do I find, Happy to have thy love, happy to die! But what's so blessed-fair that fears no blot?— Thou may'st be false, and yet I know it not.
Bearing the wanton bathsheba of the prime,
Like widow's wombs after their lords decease:
Yet this abundant issue seem'd to me
But hope of orphans, and unfather'd fruit;
For summer and his pleasures wait on thee,
And thou away, the very birds are mute;
Or, if they sing, 'tis with so dull a cheer,
That leaves look pale, dreaded the winter's near.

From you have I been absent in the spring,
When proud-pied April, dress'd in all his trim,
Hath put a spirit of youth in every thing;
That heavy Saturn laugh'd and leap'd with him.
Yet nor the laments of birds, nor the sweet smell
Of different flowers in odour and in hue,
Could make me any summer's story tell,
Or from their proud lap pluck them where they grew:
Nor did I wonder at the lilies white,
Nor praise the deep vermilion in the rose;
They were but sweet, but figures of delight,
Drawn after you, you patter'd of all those.
Yet seem'd it winter still, and, you away,
As with my shadow I with these did play:

The forward violet thus did I chide:—
Smells, sweet thief, whence dost thou steal thy sweet that
If not from my love's breath? The purple pride
Which on thy soft cheek for complexion dwells,
In my love's veins thou hast too grossly dy'd.
The lily I condemned for thy hand,
And buds of marmion had stolen thy hair:
The roses fearfully on thorns did stand,
One blushing shame, another white despair;
A third, nor red nor white had stol'n of both,
And to his robbery had annex'd thy breath;
But for his theft, in pride of all his growth
A vengeful canker eat him up to death.
More flowers I noted, yet I none could see,
But sweet or colour it had stolen from thee.

Where art thou, Muse, that thou forget'st so long
To speak of that which gives thee all thy might?
Spend'st thou thy fury on some worthless song,
Darkening thy power, to lend base subjects light?
Return, forgetful Muse, and straight redeem
In gentle numbers time so idly spent;
Sing to the ear that doth thy lays esteem,
And gives thy pen both skill and argument.
Rise, restive Muse, my love's sweet face survey,
If Time have any wrink'le graven there;
If any, be a satire to decay,
And make Time's spoils despised everywhere.
Give my love fame faster than time wastes life;
So thou prevent'st his scythe, and crooked knife.

O truant Muse, what shall be thy amends,
For thy neglect of truth in beauty dy'd?
Both truth and beauty on my love depends:
So dost thou too, and therein dignify'd.
Make answer, Muse: wilt thou not hapsy say,
Truth needs no colour, with his colour fade,
Beauty no pencil, beauty's truth to lay:
But best is best, if never intermix'd?
Because he needs no praise, wilt thou be dumb?
Excuse not silence so; for it lies in thee
To make him much out-live a gilded tomb,
And to be prais'd of ages yet to be.
Then do thy office, Muse: I teach thee how
To make him seem long hence as he shows now,
SONNETS.

915

I see their antique pen would have express'd
Even such a beauty as you master now,
So all their praises are but prophecies
Of this our time, all you prefiguring;
And, for they look'd but with divine eyes,
They had not skill enough your worth to sing:
For we, which now behold these present days,
Have eyes to wonder, but lack tongues to praise.

CIV.

Not mine own fears, nor the prophetic soul
Of the wide world dreaming on things to come,
Can yet the lease of my true love control,
Suppos'd as forfeit to a confin'd end;
The mortal moon hath her eclipse endur'd,
And the sad augurs mock their own presages;
Incertainties now crown themselves assur'd,
And peace proclaims olives of endless age.
Now with the drops of this most balmy time
My love looks fresh, and Death to me subscribes,
Since spite of him I'll live in this poor rhyme,
While he insult's o'er dull and despised age.
And thou in this shall find thy monument,
When tyrants' crests and tombs of brass are spent.

CIVII.

What's in the brain that ink may character,
Which hath not figure to thee my true spirit?
What are words, now, to speak what new we find,
That may express my love, or thy dear merit?
Nothing, sweet boy; but yet, like prayers divine,
I must each day say o'er the very same;
Counting no old thing old, thou mine, I thine,
Even as when first I hallow'd thy fair name.
So that eternal love in love's fresh case
Weighs not the dust and injury of age,
Nor gives to necessary wrinkles place,
But makes antiquity for aye his page;
Finding the first conceit of love there bred,
Where time and outward form should shew it dead.

CIX.

O never say that I was false of heart,
Though absence seem'd my flame to qualify.
As easy might I from myself depart,
As from my soul which in thy breast doth lie:
That is my home of love: if I have rang'd,
Like him that travels, I return again;
Just to the time, not with the time exchang'd,—
So that myself bring water for my stain.
Never believe, though in my nature reign'd
All frailties that besiege all kinds of blood,
That it could so preposterously be stain'd,
To leave for nothing all thy sum of good;
For nothing this wide universe I call,
Save thou, my rose; in it thou art my all.

CXL.

Alas, 'tis true, I have gone here and there,
And made myself a motley to the view,
Gor'd mine own thoughts, sold cheap what's most dear,
Made old offences of affections new.
Most true it is, that I have look'd on truth
Askance and strangely; but, by all above,
These bleaches gave my heart and wits a tour,
And worse essays prov'd thee my best of love.
Now all is done, save what shall have no end:
Mine appetite I never more will grind
On newer proof, to try an older friend,
A god in love, to whom I am confin'd.
Then give me welcome, next my heaven the best,
Even to thy pure and most loving breast.

SONNETS.

O for my sake do you with fortune chide,
The guilty goddess of my harmful deeds,
That did not better for my life provide,
Than public means, which public manners breeds.
Thence comes it that my name receives a brand,
And almost thence my nature is subdued
To what it works in, like the dyer's hand.

Pity me then, and wish I were renew'd;
Whilst, like a willing patient, I will drink
Potions of yessest, gainst my strong infection;
No bitterness that I will bitter think,
Nor double penance to correct correction.

Pity me then, dear friend, and I assure ye,
Even that your pity is enough to cure me.

Your love and pity doth the impression fill
Which vulgar scandal stamp'd upon my brow;
For what care I who calls me well or ill,
So you o'er-green my bad, my good allow?
You are my all-the-world, and I must strive
To know my shames and praises from your tongue;
None else to me, nor I to none alive,
That my steel'd sense or changes, right or wrong.
So profound abyss I throw all care
Of others' voices, that my adder's sense
To critic and to flatterer stopped are.
Mark how with my neglect I do dispense:
You are so strongly in my purpose bred,
That all the world besides methinks are dead.

Since I left you, mine eye is in my mind,
And that which governs me to go about,
Doth part his function, and is partly blind,
Seems seeing, but effectually is out;
For 0, no form delivers to the heart
Of o'er, of flower, or shape, which it doth lack;
Of his quick objects hath the mind no part,
For his own vision holds what it doth catch;
For if it see the rud'st or gentlest sight,
The most sweet favour, or deform'd creature,
The mountain or the sea, the day or night,
The crow or dove, it shapes them to your feature.
Incapable of more, replete with you,
My most true mind thus maketh mine untrue.

Or whether doth my mind, being crown'd with you,
Drink up the monach's plague, this flattery,
Or whether shall I say mine eyes saith true,
And that your love taught it this alechemy,
To make of monsters and things indigest,
Such cherubism as your sweet self resemble,
Creating every bad a perfect best,
As fast as objects to his beams assemble?
O 'tis the first; 'tis flattery in my sense,
And my great mind most kingly drinks it up:
Mine eye well knows what with his gust is greening,
And to his palate doth prepare the cup;
If it be poison'd, 'tis the lesser sin
That mine eye loves it, and doth first begin.

Those lines that I before have writ, do lie,
Even those that said I could not love you dearer;
Point then my judgment knew no reason why
My most full flame should afterwards burn clearer.
But reckoning time, whose million'd accidents
Creep in twist vows, and change decrees of kings,
Tan sacred beauty, blunt the sharpest intents,
Divert strong minds to the course of altering things;
Alas! why, fearing of time's tyranny,
Might I not then say, now I love you best,
When I was certain o'er incertainty,
Crowning the present, doubting of the rest?
Love is a sake; then might I not say so,
To give full growth to that which still doth grow?

Let me not to the marriage of true minds
Admit impediments. Love is not love
Which alters when it alteration finds,
Or bends with the remover to remove:
O no! it is an ever-fixed mark,
That looks on tempests, and is never shaken;
It is the star to every wandering bark,
Whose worth's unknown, although his height be taken.

So is my love, and such as bed amends,
With his bending sickle's compass come:
Love alters not with his brief hours and weeks,
But bears it out even to the edge of doom.
If this be error, and upon me prov'd,
I ever writ, nor no man ever lov'd.

Accuse me thus; that I have scanted all
Which mean I should your great deserts repay;
Forgot upon your dearest love to call,
Wheroeto all bonds do tie me day by day;
That I have frequent been with unknown minds,
And given to time your own dear-purchas'd right;
That I have hoist'd sail to all the winds
Which should transport me farthest from your sight.

Book both my wilfullness and errors down,
And on just proof, surmise accumulate,
Bring me within the level of your frown,
But shoot not at me in your waken'd hate:
Since my appeal says, I did strive to prove
The constancy and virtue of your love.

Like as, to make our appetites more keen,
With eager condiments we our palate urge:
As, to prevent our maladies unseen,
Weicken to shun sickness, when we purge;
Even so, being full of your ne'er-cloying sweetness,
To bitter sauces did I frame my feeding,
And, sick of wealth, found a kind of meaatness
To be diseas'd, ere that there was true needing.
Thus policy in love, to anticipate
The ills that were not, grew to faults assured,
And brought to medicine a healthful state,
Which, rank of goodness, would by ill be cured.
But thence I learn, and find the lesson true,
Drugs poison him that so fell sick of you.

What potions have I drunk of Syren tears
Distill'd from limbecks foul as bell within.
Applying fears to hopes, and hopes to fears,
Still losing when I saw myself to win!
What wretched errors hath my heart committed,
Whilst it hath thought itself so blessed ever!
Now have mine eyes out of their spheres been fitted,
To the distraction of this madding fever!
O benefit of ill! now I find true
That better is by evil still made better,
And ruin'd love, when it is built anew,
Grows faiher than at first, more strong, far greater.
So I return reback'd to my content,
And gain by ill thrice more than I have spent.
SONNETS.

That you were once unkind, befriended me now, And for that sorrow, which I then did feel, Needs must I under my transgression bow, Unless my nerves were brass or hammer'd steel. For if you were by my unkindness shaken, As I by your's, you have pass'd a hell of time; And I, a tyrant, have no leisure taken To weigh how once I suffer'd in your crime. O that our night of woe might have remember'd My deepest sense, how hard true sorrow hits, And soon to you, as you to me, then tender'd The humble salve which wounded bosom fits! But that your trestpass now becomes a fee; Mine ransom your's, and your's must ransom me.

Tis better to be vile, than vile esteem'd, When not to be receives reproach of being, And the just pleasure lost, which is so deem'd Not by our feeling, but by others' seeing. For why should others' false adulterate eyes Give salutation to my sportive blood? Or on my frailties why are frazier spits, Which in their wills count not what I think good? No,—I am that I am; and they that level At my abuses, reckon up their own: I may be straight, though they themselves be bevel; By their rank thoughts my deeds must not be shewn: Unless this general evil they maintain, All men are bad, and in their badness reign.

Thy gift, thy tables are within my brain Full character'd with lasting memory, Which shall above that idle rank remain, Beyond all date, even to eternity: Or at the least so long as brain and heart Have faculty by nature to subsist; Till each to raz'd oblivion yield his part Of thee, thy record never can be miss'd. That poor retention could not so much hold, Nor need I tallies, thy dear love to score; Therefore to give them from me was I bold, To trust those tables that receive thee more: To keep an adjunct to remember thee, Were to import forgetfulness in me.

No! Time, thou shalt not boast that I do change: Thy pyramids built up with newer might To me are nothing novel, nothing strange; They are but dressings of a former sight. Our dates are brief, and therefore we admire What thou dost bestow upon us that is old, And rather make them born to our desire, Than think that we before have heard them told. Thy registers and thee I both defy, Not wandering at the present nor the past; For thy records and what we see doth lie, Made more or less by thy continual base! This I do vow, and this shall ever be, I will be true, despite thy scythe and thee.

If my dear love were but the child of state, It might for fortune's bastard be unfather'd, As subject to Time's love, or to Time's hate, Weeds among weeds, or flowers with flowers gather'd. No, it was builded far from accident; It suffers not in smiling gory, nor falls Under the blow of thrall'd discontent, Whereto the inviting time our fashion calls: It fears not policy, that heretic, Which works on leases of short-number'd hours, But all alone stands hugely polite, That it not grows with heat, nor drowns with showers. To this I witness call the foals of time, Which die for goodness, who have liv'd for crime.

Were it aught to me I bore the canopy, With my extern the outward honouring, Or lay'd great bases for eternity, Which prove more short than waste or ruining? Have I not seen dwellers on form and favour Lose all, and more, by paying too much rent, For compound sweet foregoing simple savour, Pitiful thrivers, in their gazings spent? No,—let me be obsequious in thy heart, And take thou my obligation, poor but free, Which is not mix'd with seconds, knows no art, But mutual render, only me for thee. Hence, thou suborn'd informer! a true soul, When most impish'd, stands least in thy control.

O thou, my lovely boy, who in thy power Dost hold Time's fickle glass, his sickle, hour; Who hast by vanity grown, and therein shew'st Thy lovers withering, as thy sweet self grow'st! If nature, sovereign mistress over wack, As thou go' st onwards, still will plac'd thee back, She keeps thee to this purpose, that her skill May time disgrace, and wretched minutes kill. Yet fear her, O thou mission of her pleasure; She may detain, but not still keep her treasure: Her audit, through delay'd, answer'd must be, And her quietus is to render thee.

In the old age black was not counted fair, Or if it were, it bore not beauty's name; But now is black beauty's successive heir, And beauty slander'd with a bastard shame. For since each hand hath put on nature's power, Fairing the fowl with art's false borrow'd face, Sweet beauty hath no name, no holy hour, But is profan'd, if not lives in disgrace. Therefore my mistress' eyes are raven black. Her eyes so united: and they mourners seem At such, who not born fair, no beauty lack, Slanderer creation with a false esteem: Yet so they mourn, becoming of their woe. That every tongue says, beauty should do so.

How oft, when thou, my music, music play'st, Upon that blessed wood whose motion sounds With thy sweet fingers, when thou gently sway'st The wiry concord that mine ear confounds, Do I envy those jacks, that nimble leap To kiss the tender inward of thy hand, Whilst my poor lips, which should that harvest reap, At the wood's boldness by thee blushing stand! To be so tickled, they would change their state And situation with those dancing chips, O'er whom thy fingers walk with gentle gait, Making dead wood more bless'd than living lips. Since saucy jacks so happy are in this, Give them thy fingers, me thy lips to kiss.
SONNETS.

The expense of spirit in a waste of shame
Is lust in action; and till action lust
Is purge of murder, bloody, full of blame,
Savage, extreme, rude, cruel, not to trust;
Enjoy'd no sooner but despis'd straight;
Past reason hunted; and no sooner had,
Past reason hated, as a swallow'd bait,
On purpose laid to make the taker mad:
Mad in pursuit, and in possession so;
Had, having, and in quest to have, extreme;
A fine in proof, and -price, a very weal.
Before, a joy propos'd; behind, a dream:
All this the world well knows; yet none knows well
To shun the heaven that leads men to this hell.

My mistress' eyes are nothing like the sun;
Coral is far more red than her lips red:
If snow be white, why then her breasts are dun;
If hairs be wires, black wires grow on her head.
I have seen roses damask'd, red and white,
But no such roses see I in her cheeks;
And in some perfumes is there more delight
Than in the breath that from my mistress reeks.
I love to hear her speak, -- yet well I know
That music hath a far more pleasing sound;
I grant I never saw a goddess go,
My mistress, when she walks, treads on the ground;
And yet by heaven, I think my love as rare
As any she bely'd with false compare.

Thou art as tyrannous, so as thou art,
As those whose beauties proudly make them cruel;
For well thou know'st to my dear doating heart
Thou art the fairest and most precious jewel.
Yet, in good faith, some say that thee behold,
Thy face hath not the power to make love groan:
To say they err, I dare not be so bold,
Although I swear it to myself alone.
And, to be sure that is not false I swear,
A thousand groans, but thinking on thy face,
One on another's neck, do witness bear
Thy black is fairest in my judgement's place.
In nothing art thou black, save thy deeds,
And thence this slander, as I think, proceeds.

Thine eyes I love, and they, as pitying me,
Knowing thy heart, torment me with disdain;
Have put on black, and loving mourners be,
Looking with pretty ruth upon my pain.
And truly not the morning sun of heaven
Better becomes the grey cheeks of the east,
Nor that full star that asher's in the even,
Doth half that glory to the sober west,
As those two mourning eyes become thy face:
O let it then as well beseech thy heart
To mourn for me, since mourning doth thee grace,
And suit thy pity like in every part.
Then will I swear beauty herself in black,
And all they foul that thy complexion lack.

Beskrew that heart that makes my heart to groan
For that deep wound it gives my friend and me!
Is 't not enough to torture me alone,
But slave to slavery my sweet's friend must be?
Me from myself thy cruel eye hath taken,
And my next self thou harder hast engross'd,

Of him, myself and thee, I am to saken;
A torment three three-fold thus to be cross'd;
Prison my heart in thy steel bosom's ward,
But then my friend's heart let my poor heart bail;
Whoe'er keeps me, let my heart be his guard;
Thou canst not then use rigour in my goal:
And yet thou wilt; for I, being pent in thee,
Perforce am thine, and all that is in me.

So now I have confess'd that be is thine,
And I myself am mortgag'd to thy will;
Myself I'll forfait, so that other mine
Thou wilt restore, to be my comfort still:
But thou wilt not, nor he will not be free,
For thou art covetous, and he is kind;
He learn'd but, surety-like, to write for me,
Under that bond that him as fast doth bind.
The statute of thy beauty thou wilt take,
Thou usurer, that put'st forth all to use,
And sue a friend, came debtor for my sake;
So him I lose through my unkind abuse.
Him have I lost; thou hast both him and me;
He pays the whole, and yet I am not free.

Whoever hath her wish, thou hast thy will,
And will to boot, and will in overplus;
More than enough am I that vex thee still,
To thy sweet will making addition thus:
Wilt thou, whose will is large and spacious,
Not once vouchsafe to hide my will to thine?
Shall will in others seem right gracious,
And in my will no fair acceptance shine?
The sea, all water, yet receives rain still,
And in abundance addeth to his store;
So thou, being rich in will, add to thy will
One will of mine, to make thy large will more.
Let no unkind, no fair beseeches kill;
Think all but one, and me in that one Will.

If thy soul check thee that I come so near Swear to thy blind soul that I was thy will,
And will, thy soul knows, is admitted there;
Thus far for love, my love-suit, sweet, fulfill.
Will will fulfill the treasure of my love,
Ay, fill it full with wills, and my will one.
In things of great receipt with ease we prove;
Among a number one is reckon'd none.
Then in the number let me pass untold,
Though in thy stores' account I one must be;
For nothing hold me, so it please thee hold
That nothing me, a something sweet to thee:
Make but my name thy love, and love that still,
And then thou lovest me, -- for my name is Will.

Thou blind fool, Love, what dost thou to mine eyes
That they behold, and see not what they see?
They know what beauty is, see where it lies,
Yet what the best is, take the worst to be.
If eyes, corrupt by over-partial looks
Be drunk'd in the bay where all men ride,
Why of eyes' falsehood hast thou forged books,
Whereto the judgment of my heart is ty'd?
Why should my heart think that a several plot,
Which my heart knows the wide world's common
Or mine eyes seeing this, say this is not, [place]?
To put fair truth upon so foul a face;
In things right true my heart and eyes have err'd,
And to this false plague are they now transferr'd.
SONNETS.

CXXVIII.
When my love swears that she is made of truth,
I do believe her, though I know she lies;
That she might think me some untutor'd youth,
Unlearned in the world's false subtilities.
Thus vainly thinking that she thinks me young,
Although she knows my days are past the best,
Simply I credit her false speaking tongue,
On both sides thus is simple truth suppress'd,
But wherefore says she not, she is unjust?
And wherefore say not I, that I am old?
O love's best habit is in seeming trust.
And age in love loves not to have years told:
Therefore I lie with her, and she with me,
And in our faults by lies we flatter'd be.

CXXIX.
O call not me to justify the wrong,
That thy unkindness lays upon my heart;
Wound me not with thine eye, but with thy tongue;
Use power with power, and slay me not by art.
Tell me thou lovest elsewhere; but in my sight,
Dear heart, forbear to glance thine eye aside.
What need'st thou wound me with cunning when thy
Is more than my oppress'd defence can bear? [might Let me excuse thee: ah! my love well knows
Her pretty looks have been mine enemies;
And therefore from my face she turns my foes,
That they elsewhere might dart their injuries:
Yet do not so; but since I am near slain,
Kill me out right with looks, and rid my pain.

CXL.
Be wise as thou art cruel; do not press
My tongue-ty'd patience with too much disdain;
Lest sorrow lend me words, and words express
The manner of my pitty-wanting pain.
If I might teach thee wit, better it were,
Though not to love, yet, love, to tell me so;
(As testy sick men, when their deaths be near,
No news but health from their physicians know:
For, if I should despair, I should grow mad,
And in my madness might speak ill of thee:
Now this ill-wrestling world has grown so bad,
Mad slanderers by mad ears believed me.
That I may not be so, nor thou beliy'd,
Bear thine eyes straight, though thy proud heart go.

CXLI.
Lo faith I do not love thee with mine eyes,
For they in thee a thousand errors note;
But 'tis my heart that loves what they despise,
Who in despite of view is pleas'd to dete.
Nor are my ears with thy tongue's tale delighted;
Nor tender feeling, to base touches prone,
Nor taste nor smell, desire to be invited
To any sensual feast with thee alone:
But my five wits, nor my five senses can
Dissuade one foolish heart from serving thee,
Who leaves unwary'd the likeness of a man,
Thy proud heart's slave and vassal wretch to be:
Only my plague thus far I count my gain,
That she that makes me sin, awards me pain.

CXLII.
Love is my sin, and thy dear virtue hate,
Hate of my sin, grounded on sinful loving:
O but with mine compare thou thine own state,
And thou shalt find it merits not reproving;
Or if it do, not from those lips of thine,
That have profan'd their scarlet ornaments,
And seal'd false bonds of love as oft as mine;
Robb'd others' beds revenues of their rents,
Be it lawful I love thee, as thou lov'st those Whom thine eyes won with some mine impotent thee:
Root pity in thy heart, that when it grows,
Thy pity may deserve to pity'd be.
If thou dost seek to have what thou dost hide,
By self-example may'st thou be deny'd!

CXLIII.
Lo as a careful house-wife runs to catch
One of her feather'd creatures broke away,
Sets down her babe, and makes all swift dispatch,
In pursuit of the thing she would have stay;
Whilst her neglected child holds her in chase,
Cries to catch her whose busy care is beat
To follow that which flies before her face,
Not prizing her poor infant's discontent;
So run'st thou after that which flies from thee,
Whilst I thy babe chase thee afar behind;
But if thou catch thy hope, turn back to me,
And play the mother's part, kiss me, be kind:
So will I pray that thou may'st have thy Will,
If thou turn back, and my loud crying still.

CXLIV.
Two loves I have of comfort and despair,
Which like two spirits do suggest me still;
The better angel is a man right fair,
The worser spirit a woman, colour'd ill.
To win me soon to hell, my female evil
Tempeth my better angel from my side,
And would corrupt my saintly to be a devil,
Wounding his purity with her foul pride.
And whether that my angel be turn'd a fiend,
Suspect I may, yet not directly tell;
But being both from me, both to each friend,
I guess one angel is another's hell.
Yet this shall I ever know, but live in doubt,
Till my bad angel fire my good one out.

CXLV.
Those lips that Love's own hand did make,
Breath'd forth the sound that said, I hate,
To me that languish'd for her sake:
But when she saw my woeful state,
Straight in her heart did mercy come,
Chiding that tongue, that ever sweet
Was us'd in giving gentle doom;
And taught it this a-new to give:
I hate she alter'd with an end,
That follow'd it as gentle day
Doth follow night, who like a fiend
From heaven to hell is flown away.
I hate from hate away she threw,
And sav'd my life, saying—not you.

CXLVI.
Poor soul, the centre of my sinful earth,
Fool'd by those rebel powers that thee array,
Why dost thou pine within, and suffer death,
Paining thy outward walls so costly gay?
Why so large cost, having so short a lease,
Dost thou upon thy fancy's spurn spend so much
That shall worms, inheritors of this excess,
Eat up thy charge? Is this thy body's end?
Then, soul, live thou upon thy servant's loss,
And let that pine to aggravate thy store;
Buy terms divine in selling hours of dross;
Within be fed, without be rich no more.
So shalt thou feed on death, that feeds on men,
And, death once dead, there's no more dying then.
CXLVII.
My love is as a fever, longing still
For that which longer nurseth the disease;
Feeding on that which doth preserve the ill,
The uncertain sickly appetite to please.
My reason, the physician to my love,
Angry that his prescriptions are not kept,
Hath left me, and I desperate now approve,
Desire is death, which physic did except;
Past cure I am, now reason is past care,
And frantic-mad with ever-more unrest;
My thoughts and my discourse as mad men's are,
At random from the truth vainly express'd;
For I have sworn thee fair, and thought thee bright,
Who art as black as hell, as dark as night.

CXLVIII.
O me! what eyes hath love put in my head,
Which have no correspondence with true sight?
Or, if they have, where is my judgment fled,
That censures falsely what they see aright?
If that be fair wherein my false eyes dote,
What means the world that this it is not so?
If it be not, then love doth well denote,
Love's eye is not so true as all men's: no,
How can it? O how can Love's eye be true,
That is so vex'd with watching and with tears?
No marvel then though I mistake my view;
The sun itself sees not, till heaven clears.
O cunning Love! with tears thou keepest me blind,
Let eyes well-seeing thy foul faults should find.

CXLIX.
Canst thou, O cruel! say I love thee not,
When I, against myself, with thee partake?
Do not think on thee, when I forget
Am of myself, all tyrant, for thy sake?
Who hateth thee that I do call my friend?
On whom frown'st thou that I do fawn upon?
Nay if thou lower'st on me, do I not spend
Revenge upon myself with present moan?
What merit do I in myself respect,
That is so proud thy service to despise,
When all my best doth worship thy defect,
Commanded by the motion of thine eyes?
But, love, hate on, for now I know thy mind;
Those that can see thou livest, and I am blind.

CL.
O from what power hast thou this powerful might,
What insufficiency my heart to sway?
To make me give the lie to my true sight,
And swear that brightness doth not grace the day?
Whence hast thou this becoming of things ill,
That in the very refuse of thy deeds
There is such strength and warrantise of skill,
That in my mind, thy worst all exceeds?
Who taught thee how to make me love thee more,
The more I hear and see just cause of hate?
O, though I love what others do abhor,
With others thou should'st not abhor my state;
If thy unworthiness rais'd love in me,
More worthy I to be belov'd of thee.

CLI.
Love is too young to know what conscience is;
Yet who knows not, conscience is born of love?
Then, gentle cheater, urge not amiss,
Lest guilty of my faults thy sweet self prove.
For thou betraying me, I do betray
My nobler part to my gross body's reason;
My soul doth tell my body that he may
Triumph in love; flesh stays no farther reason;
But rising at thy name, doth point out thee
As his triumphant prize. Proud of this pride,
He is contented thy poor drudge to be,
To stand in thy affairs, fall by thy side.
No want of conscience hold it that I call
Her love, for whose dear love I rise and fall.

CLII.
In loving thee thou know'st I am forsworn,
But thou art twice forsworn, to me love swearing;
In act thy bed-vow broke, and new faith fora,
In vowing new hate after new love bearing.
But why of two oaths' breach do I accuse thee,
When I break twenty? I am perjur'd most;
For all my vows are oaths but to misuse thee,
And all my honest faith in thee is lost.
For I have sworn deep oaths of thy deep kindness,
Oaths of thy love, thy truth, thy constancy;
And, to enlighten thee, gave eyes to blindness,
Or made them swear against the thing they see;
For I have sworn thee fair: more perjur'd I,
To swear, against the truth, so foul a lie.

CLIII.
Cupid lay'd by his brand, and fell asleep:
A maid of Diana's this advantage found,
And his love-kindling fire did quickly steep
In a cold valley-fountain of that ground;
Which borrow'd from this holy fire of love
A dateless lively heat, still to endure,
And grew a seething bath, which yet men prove Against strange maladies a sovereign cure.
But at my mistress' eye love's brand new-fir'd,
The boy for trial needs would touch my breast;
I sick withal, the help of bath desired,
And thither fled, a sad distemper'd guest,
But found no cure; the bath for my help lies
Where Cupid got new fire; my mistress' eyes.

CLIV.
The little love-god lying once asleep,
Laid by his side his heart-inflaming brand,
Whilst many nymphs that vow'd chaste life to keep,
Came tripping by; but in her maiden hand
The fairest votary took up that fire
Which many legion of true hearts had warm'd;
And so the general of hot desire
Was sleeping by a virgin hand disarm'd.
This brand she quenched in a cool well by,
Which from love's fire took heat perpetual,
Growing a bath and helpful remedy
For new dissembl'd; but I, my mistress' thrall,
Came here for cure, and this by that I prove,
Love's fire heats water, water cools not love.
PASSIONATE PILGRIM.

I.

Did not the heavenly rhetoric of thine eye,
'Gainst whom the world cannot hold argument,
Perouse my heart to this false perjury?
Vows for thee broke deserve not punishment,
A woman I forswore; but I will prove.
Thou being a goddess, I forswore not thee:
My vow was earthly, thou a heavenly love;
Thy grace being gain'd, cures all disgrace in me.
My vow was breath, and breath a vapour is;
Then thou fair sun, when no other lust shine,
Exhalest this vapour vow; in thee it is:
If broken, then it is no fault of mine.
If by me broke, what fool is not so wise
To break an oath, to win a paradise?

II.

Sweet Cytherea, sitting by a brook,
With young Adonis, lovely, fresh, and green,
Did court the lad with many a lovely look,
Such looks as none could look but beauty's queen.
She told him stories to delight his ear;
She shew'd him favours to allure his eye;
To win his heart, she touch'd him here and there:
Touches so soft still conquer chastity.
But whether unripe years did want conception,
or he refus'd to take her figur'd proffer,
The tender fisher would not touch the bait,
But smile and jest at every gentle offer:
Then fell she on her back, fair queen, and toward;
He rose and ran away; ah fool too froward!

III.

If love make me forsworn, how shall I swear to love?
O never faith could hold, if not to beauty vow'd:
Though to myself forsworn, to thee I'll constant prove;
These thoughts to me like oaks, to thee like osiers bow'd.
Study his bias leaves, and makes his book thine eyes,
Where all those pleasures live, that art can comprehend.
If knowledge be the mark, to know thee shall suffice,
Well learned is that tongue that well can thee commend;
All ignorant is that soul that sees thee without wonder;
Which is to me some praise, that I thy parts admire:
Thine eye Jove's lightning seems, thy voice his dreadful thunder,
Which (not to aager bent) is music and sweet fire.
Celestial as thou art, O do not love that wrong,
To sing the heavens' praise with such an earthly tongue.

IV.

Scarcely had the sun dried up the dewy morn,
And scarce the herd gone to the hedge for shade,
When Cytherea, all in love forlorn,
A longing tarryance for Adonis made,
Under an osier growing by a brook,
A brook, where Adon us'd to cool his spleen.
Hot was the day; she butter that did look
For his approach, that often there had been.
Anon he comes, and throws his mantle by,
And stood stark naked on the brook's green brim;
The sun look'd on the world with glorious eye,
Yet not so wistly, as this queen on him:
He spiring she, bowan'd in, whereas she stood;
Oh Jove, quoth she, was not I a lord?

V.

Fair is my love, but not so fair as fickle,
Mild as a dove, but neither true nor trusty;
Brighter than glass is, and yet, as glass is, brittle,
Softer than wax, and yet, as iron, rusty:
A little pale, with damask die to grace her,
None fairer, nor none failer to delase her.
Her lips to mine how often hath she join'd,
Between each kiss her oaths of true love swearing!
How many takest to please me hath she count'd,
Dreading my love, the loss whereof still fearing!
Yet in the midst of all her pure protestings,
Her faith, her oaths, her tears, and all were jestings.
She burst with love, as straw with fire flamest,
She burst out love, as soon as straw out bursteth;
She fram'd the love, and yet she foil'd the framing,
She bade love last, and yet she fell a turning;
Was this a lover, or a lecher whether?
Bad in the best, though excellent in neither.

VI.

If music and sweet poetry agree,
As they must needs, the sister and the brother,
Then must the love be great 'twixt thee and me,
Because thou lovest the one, and I the other.
Dowland to thee is dear, whose heavenly touch
Upon the lute doth ravish human sense;
Spens to me, whose deep conceit is such,
As passing all conceit, needs no defence.
Thou lovest to hear the sweet melodious sound,
That Phoebus' lute, the queen of music, makes;
And I in deep delight am chiefly drown'd,
Whenas himself to singing he betakes.
One god is god of both, as poets feign;
One knight loves both, and both in thee remain.

VII.

Fair was the morn, when the fair queen of love,

VIII.

Paler for sorrow than her milk-white dove,
For Adon's sake, a youngster proud and wild;
Her stand she takes upon a steep-up hill:
Anon Adonis comes with horn and hounds;
She silly queen, with more than love's good will,
Forbade the boy he should not pass those grounds.
Once, quoth she, did I see a fair sweet youth
Here in these brakes deep-wounden with a boar,
Deep in the thigh, a spectacle of ruth!
See in my thigh, quoth she, here was the sore:
She shewed hers; he saw more wounds than one,
And blushing fled, and left her all alone.

IX.

Sweet rose, fair flower, untimely pluck'd,
Soon faded, pluck'd in the bud, and faded in the spring;
Bright orient pearl, alack! too timely shaded!
Fair creature, kill'd too soon by death's sharp sting!
Like a green plum that hangs upon a tree,
And falls, through wind, before the fall be should
I weep for thee, and yet no cause I have;
For why? thou left'st me nothing in thy Will.
And yet thou left'st me more than I did crave;
For why? I craved nothing of thee still:
O yes, dear friend, I pardon crave of thee;
Thy discontent thou didst bequeath to me.

X.

Fair Venus with Adonis sitting by her,
Under a myrtle shade, began to woo him:
She told the youngling how god Mars did try her,
And as he fell to her, she fell to him.
Even thus, quoth she, the warlike god embrac'd me;
And then she chip'd Adonis in her arms:
Even thus quoth she, the warlike god embrac'd me,
As if the boy should use like loving charms.
Even thus, quoth she, he seized on my lips,
And with her lips on his did act the seizure;
And as she fetched breath, away he skips;
And would not take her meaning nor her pleasure.
Ah! that I had my lady at this bay,
To kiss and clip me till I run away!
Till looking on an Englishman, the fairest that eye
Her fancy fell a turning. [could see.
Long was the combat doubtful, that love with love
did fight,
To leave the master loveless, or kill the gallant knight:
To put in practice either, alas it was a spite
Unto the silly damsel.
But one must be resusced, more mickle was the pain,
That nothing could be used, to turn them both to gain,
For of the two the trusty knight was wounded with Alas she could not help it! [disdain -
Thus art with arms contending was victor of the day,
Which by a gift of learning did bear the maid away;
Then lullaby, the learned maun hath got the lady gay;
For now my song is ended.

On a day (alack the day!)
Love, whose month was ever May,
Spy'd a blossom passing fair,
Playing in the wanton air,
Through the velvet leaves the wind,
All unseen, 'gan passage find;
That the lover, sick to death,
Wish'd himself the heaven's breath:
Air, quoth he, thy cheeks may blow;
Air, would I might triumph so!
But alas my hand hath sworn Ne'er to pluck thee from thy thorn -
Vow, alack, for youth unmeet,
Youth, so apt to pluck a sweet.
Do not call it sin in me,
That I am forsworn for thee;
Then for whom even Jove would swear
Juno but an Ethiope were;
And deny himself for Jove,
Turning mortal for thy love.

My flacks feed not,
My owes breed not,
My rams speed not,
All is amiss:
Love's denying,
Faith's defying,
Heart's renying,
Causeth of this,
All my merry jigs are quite forgot,
All my lady's love is lost, God wot,
Where her faith was firmly fix'd in love,
There a nay is plac'd without remove.
One silly cross
Wrought all my loss;
O frowning fortune, cursed, fickle dame!
For now I see,
Inconstancy
More in women than in men remain.
In black mourn I,
All tears scorn I,
Love hath forlorn me,
Living in thrall:
Heart is bleeding,
All help needing.
(O cruel speedagu!)
Fraughted with gall.
My shepherd's pipe can sound no dell,
My wether's bell rings doleful knell;
My curtail dog that wont to have play'd
Plays not at all, but seems afraid;
With sighs so deep,
Procures to weep;
In howling-wise, to see my doleful plight.
Now sighs resound
Through heartless ground,
Like a thousand vanquish'd men in bloody fight!
Clear wells spring not,
Sweet birds sing not,
Green plants bring not
Forth; they die,
Heads stand weeping,
Flocks all sleeping,
Nymphs back peeping
Fearfully.
All our pleasure known to us poor swains,
All our merry meetings on the plains,
All our evening sport from us is fled,
All our love is lost; for love is dead.
Farewell, sweet love,
Thy like ne'er was
For sweet content, the cause of all my moan:
Poor Coridon
Must live alone,
Other help for him I see that there is none.

When as thine eye hath chose the dame,
And stall'd the deer that thou should'st strike,
Let reason rule things worthy blame,
As well as fancy, partial might:
Take counsel of some wiser head,
Neither too young, nor too unwise,
And when thou com'st thy tale to tell,
Smooth not thy tongue with filed talk,
Lest she some subtle practice smell;
(A cripple soon can find a halt:)
But plainly say thou lov'st her well,
And set her person forth to sale.
What though her frowning brows be bent,
Her cloudy looks will calm ere night;
And then too late she will repent,
That thus dissembled her delight;
And twice desire, ere it be day,
That which with scorn she put away.
What though she strive to try her strength,
And ban and brawl, and say thee nay,
Her feeble force will yield at length,
When craft hath taught her thus to say:
"Thou women been so strong as men,
In faith you had not had it then."
And to her will frame all thy ways;
Spare not to spend,—and chiefly there
Where thy desert may merit praise,
By ringing in thy lady's ear:
The strongest castle, tower, and town,
The golden bullet beats it down.
Serve always with assured trust,
And in thy suit be humble, true;
Unless thy lady prove unjust,
Press never thou to choose anew:
When time shall serve, be thou not slack
To proffer, though she put thee back.
The wiles and guiles that women work,
Dissembled with an outward show,
The tricks and toys that in them lurk,
The cock that treads them shall not know.
Have you not heard it said full oft,
A woman's nay doth stand for nought?

Think women still to strive with men,
To sin, and never for to saint:
There is no heaven, by holy then,
When time with age shall them attain.
Were kisses all the joys in bed,
One woman would another wed.
But soft! enough,—too much I fear,
Lest that my mistress hear my song;
She'll not stick to round me 'th' ear,
To teach my tongue to be so long:
Yet will she blush, here be it said,
To hear her secrets so bewray'd.

As it fell upon a day,
In the merry month of May,
Sitting in a pleasant shade
Which a grove of myrtles made,
Beasts did leap, and birds did sing,
Trees did grow, and plants did spring:
Every thing did blush exultant:
Save the nightingale alone;
She, poor bird, as all forlorn,
Lean'd her breast up-till a thorn,
And there sung the dulsefull'st ditty,
That to hear it was great pity:
Are, nay, no, now would she cry,
Teru, Teru, by and by:
That to hear her so complain,
Scarcely could from tears refrain;
For her griefs so lively shewn,
Made me think upon mine own.
Ah! (thought I) thou mourn'st in vain;
None take pity on thy pain:
Senseless trees, they cannot hear thee;
Ruthless beasts, they will not cheer thee;
King Pandion, he is dead;
All thy friends are happy in lead:
All thy fellow birds do sing,
Careless of thy sorrowing.
Even so, poor bird, like thee,
None alive will pity me.
Whilst a fickle fortune smil'd,
That all we were both beguil'd.
Every one that that flatters thee,
is no friend in misery.
Words are easy like the wind;
Faithful friends are hard to find.
Every man will be thy friend,
Whilst thou hast wherewith to spend;
But if store of crowns be scant,
No man will supply thy want.
If that one be prodigal,
Dolefull'st they will him call:
And with such like flattering,
"Pity but he were a king."
If he be addict to vice,
Quickly him they will entice;
If to women he be bent,
They have him at commandement:
But if fortune once do frown,
Then farewell his great renown;
They that fawn'd on him before,
Use his company no more.
He that is thy friend indeed,
He will help thee in thy need,
If thou sorrow, he will weep;
If thou wake, he cannot sleep:
Thus of every grief in heart
He with thee doth bear a part.
These are certain signs to know
Faithful friend from flattering foe.

Take, oh, take those lips away,
That so sweetly were forsworn;
And these eyes, the break of day,
Lights that do mislead the morn:
But my kisses bring again,
Seals of love, but seal'd in vain.
Hide, oh, hide those hills of snow
Which thy frozen bosom bears,
On whose tops the pinks that grow,
Are of those that April wears,
PASSIONATE PILGRIM.

But first set my poor heart free,
Bound in those icy chains by thee.

Let the bird of loudest lay,
On the sole Arabian tree,
Herald sad and trumpet be,
To whose sound chaste wings obey.

But thou shrieking harbinger,
Foul pre-curser of the void,
Augur of the fever's end,
To this troop come thou not near.

From this session interdict
Every fowl of tyrant wing,
Save the eagle, feather'd king;
Keep the obsedy so strict.

Let the priest in surplice white,
That defunctive music can,
Be the death-divining swan,
Lest the requiem lack his right.

And thine, treble-dated crow,
That thy sable gender mak'st
With the breath thou givest and tak'st,
'Mongst our mourners shalt thou go.

Here the anthem doth commence:
Love and constancy is dead;
Phoenix and the turtle fled
In a mutual flame from hence.

So they lov'd as love in twain
Had the essence but in one;
Two distincts, division none;
Number there in love was slain.

Hearts remote, yet not asunder;
Distance, and no space was seen
'Twixt the turtle and his queen:
But in them it were a wonder.

So between them love did shine,
That the turtle saw his right
Flaming in the phoenix's sight.
Either was the other's mine.

Property was thus appell'd,
That the self was not the same;
Single nature's double name.
Neither two nor one was call'd.

Reason, in itself confounded,
Saw division grow together;
To themselves yet either-neither,
Simple were so well compounded.

That it cried how true a twain
Seemeth this concordant one!
Love hath reason, reason none,
If what parts can so remain.

Where upon it made this thing
To the phoenix and the dove,
Co-supremes and stars of love;
As chorus to their tragic scene.

THRONES.

Beauty, truth, and rarity,
Grace in all simplicity,
Here inclois'd in cinders lie.
Death is now the phoenix' nest;
And the turtle's loyal breast
To eternity doth rest,
Leaving no posterity:
'Twas not their infinity,
It was married chastity.

Truth may seem, but cannot be;
Beauty brag, but 'tis not she;
Truth and beauty buried be,
To this urn let those repair,
That are either true or fair;
For these dead birds sigh a prayer.

A LOVER'S COMPLAINT.

From off a hill whose concave womb re-warded
A plentiful story from a sistering vale,
My spirits to attend this double voice accorded,
And down I lay to list the sad-tun'd tale:

Ere long espy'd a fickle maid full pale,
Tearing of papers, breaking rings a-twine,
Storming her world with sorrow's wind and rain.

Upon her head a platted hive of straw,
Which fortified her visage from view,
Whereon the thought might think sometime it saw
The carcass of a beauty spent and done.

Time had not scythed all that youth begun,
Nor youth all quit; but, spite of heaven's fell rage,
Some beauty peep'd through lattice of scar'd age.

Oft did she heave her napkin to her eyene,
Which on it had concocted characters,
Laund'ring the silken figures in the brine
That season'd woe had pelleted in tears,
And often reading what contents it bears;
As often shrieking undistinguish'd woe,
In clamours of all size, both high and low.

Sometimes her levell'd eyes their carriage ride,
As they did battery to the spheres intend;
Sometimes diverted their poor balls are ty'd
To the orb'd earth; sometimes they do extend
Their view right on; anon their gates lead
To every place at once, and no where fix'd,
The mind and sight distractedly commix'd.

Her hair, nor loose, nor ty'd in formal plat,
Proclaim'd in her a careless hand of pride;
For some untuck'd, descended her sheav'd hat,

Hanging her pale and pined cheek beside,
Some in her threaden fillet still did hide,
And, true to bondage, would not break from thence,
Though slackly braided in loose negligence.

A thousand favours from a maund she drew
Of amber, crystal, and of bedded jet,
Which one by one she in a river throw,
Upon whose weeping margin she was set,—
Like wary, applying wet to wet,
Or monarchs' labels, that let not bounty fall,
Where want cries some, but where excess begs all.

Of folded schedules had she many a one,
Which she perus'd, sigh'd, tore, and gave the flood;
Crack'd many a ring of posted gold and bone,
Bidding them find their sepulchres in mud;
Found yet more letters sadly pinn'd in blood,
With sev'd silk feast and affectedly
Easawld'd, and seal'd to curious secrecy.

These often bath'd she in her fuxive eyes,
And often kiss'd, and often 'gan to tear;
Cry'd, O false blood! thou register of lies,
What unapproved witness dost thou bear!
Ink would have seem'd more black and damned here!
This said, in top of rage the lines she rents,
Big discontent so breaking their contents.

A reverend man that gras'd his cattle nigh,
(Some time a blustering, that the ruffle knew
Of court, of city, and had let go by
The swiftest hours,) observed as they flew;
Towards this afflicted fancy fastly drew;
And, privileg'd by age, desires to know
In brief, the grounds and motives of her woe.
A LOVERS COMPLAINT.

Look here what tribute wounded favours sent me,
Of paled pearls, and rubies red as blood.
To his horse he said, "What! is that horse mine, a horse which I have not been permitted to ride?"

"Yes," was the reply. "And his rider will say that it is his, even though he has not been invited to ride it."

So the horse was given to the speaker, and he rode it with great joy.

Many there were that did his picture get,
To serve their eyes, and in it put their mind;
Like tools that in the imagination set
The goodly objects which abroad they find
Of hands and hearts, and senses they assign'd;
And labouring in more pleasures to bestow them,
Than the true gouty landlord which doth owe them:
So many have, that never touch'd his hand,
Sweetly suppos'd them mistress of his heart.
My woeful self, that did in freedom stand,
And was my own fee-simple, (not in part,) That with his art in youth, and youth in art,
Threw my affections in his charmed power,
Reserv'd the stalk, and gave him all my flower.
Yet did I not, as some my equals did,
Demand of him, nor being desired, yielded;
Finding myself in honour so forbid,
With safest distance I mine honour shielded:
Experience for me many bulwarks builded
Of proofs new-bleding, which remain'd the foil
Of this false jewel, and his amorous spoil.
But ah! who ever shunn'd with precedent
The destin'd ill she must herself assay?
Or love'd examples, 'gainst her own content,
To put the by-pass'd pearls in her way?
Counsel may stop a while what will not stay;
For when we rage, advice is often seen
By blunting us to make our wits more keen.
Nor gives it satisfaction to our blood,
That we must curb it upon others' proof,
To be forbid the sweets that seem so good,
For fear of harms that preach in our behalf.
Of appetites, from judgement stand aloof!
The one a palate bath, that needs will taste,
Though reason weep, and cry it is thy last.
For further I could say, this man's untrue,
And knew the patterns of his foul beguiling;
Heard where his plants in others' orchards grew,
Saw bow deceits were gilded in his smiling;
Knew vows were ever brokers to deluding;
Thought, characters, and words, merely but art,
And bastards of his foul adulate heart.
And long upon these terms I held my city,
Till thus he 'gan besiege me: "Caitiff maid,
Have of my suffering youth some feeling pity,
And be not of my holy vows afraid:
That's to you sworn, to none was ever said;
For feasts of love I have been call'd unto,
Till now did ne'er invite, nor never vow.
All my offences that abroad you see,
Are errors of the blood, none of the mind:
Love made them not; with acture they may be;
Where another party is not true nor kind:
They sought their shame that so their shame did find;
And so much less of shame in me remains,
By how much of me their reproach contains.
Among the many that mine eyes have seen,
Not one whose flame my heart so much as warm'd,
Or my affection put to the smallest teen,
Or any of my pleasures ever charm'd:
Harm have I done to them, but ne'er was harm'd;
Kept hearts in livers, but mine own was free,
And reigh'd, commanding in his monarchy:
Look here what tributes wounded fancies sent me,
Of palest pearls, and rubies red as blood;
Figuring that they their passions likewise lent me
Of grief and blushes, aptly understood
In bloodless white and the encrison'd mood;
Effects of terror and dear modesty,
Escamp'd in hearts, but fighting outwardly.
A LOVER'S COMPLAINT.

And lo! behold these talents of their hair,
With twisted metal amorously implesh'd,
I have receiv'd from many a several fair,
(Their kind acceptance weepingly beseech'd.)
With the annexions of fair gems enrich'd,
And deep-brain'd sonnets that did amplify
Each stone's dear nature, worth, and quality.
The diamond, why 'twas beautiful and hard,
Where'er his invis'd properties did tend;
The deep-green emerald, in whose fresh regard
Weak sight their sickly radiance do amends;
The heaven-hued sapphire and the opal blend
With objects manifold; each several stone,
With wit well blazon'd, smil'd or made some moan.
Lo! all these trophies of affections hot,
Of pensive and subsidus desires the tender,
Nature hath charg'd me that I board them not,
But yield them up where I my soul must render;
That is to, you, my origin and ender:
For these, of force, must your oblations be,
Since I their altar, you enpatron me.
O then advance of yours that phraseless hand,
Whose white weighs down the airy scale of praise;
Take all these similes to your own command,
Hallow'd with sighs that burning lungs did raise;
When you my minister, for you obeys,
Works under you; and to your audit comes
Their distinct parcels in combined sums.
Lo! this device was sent me from a nun,
Or sister sanctified of holiest note;
Which lute her noble snit in court did shun,
Whose rarest havings made the blossoms dote;
For she was sought by spirits of richest coat,
But kept cold distance, and did thence remove,
To spend her living in eternal love.
But O, my sweet, what labour is't to leave
The thing we have not, mastering what not strives?
Playing the place which did no form receive,
Playing patient sports in unconstrained gyres:
She that her fame so to herself contrives,
The scars of battle scapeth by the flight,
And makes her absence vallant, not her might.
O pardon me, in that my boast is true;
The accident which brought me to her eye,
Upon the moment did her force subdue,
And now she would the caged cloister fly:
Religious love put out religion's eye:
Not to be tempted, would she be enam'rd,
And now, to tempt all, liberty procured.
How mightly then you are, O hear me tell!
The broken bosoms that to me belong,
Have emptied all their fountains in my well,
And mingled in the cup, that may I call,
I strong o'er them, and you o'er me being strong,
Must for your victory as all conquest,
As compound love to physic your cold breast.
My parts had power to charm a sacred nun,
Who discipline'd and dieted in grace,
Believ'd her eyes when I the assault began,
All vows and consecrations giving place,
O most potent love! vow, bond, nor space,
In thee hath neither sting, knot, nor confine,
For thou art all, and all things else are thine.

When thou impressed, what are precepts worth
Of stale example? When thou wilt inflame,
How coldly those impediments stand forth
Of wealth, of filial fear, law, kindred, fame! [shame.
Love's arms are peace, 'gainst rule, 'gainst sense,'gainst
And sweetens, in the suffeting pangs it bears.
The aloe of all forces, shocks, and fears.
Now all these hearts that do on mine depend,
Feeling it break, with bleeding groans they pine.
And sapulcral their sighs to you extend,
And leave the battery that you make 'gainst mine,
Leading soft audience to my sweet design,
And credent soul to that strong-bonded oath,
That shall prefer and undertake my troth.
"This said, his watery eyes he did dismount,
Whose sights till then were levell'd on my face,
Each cheek a river running from a fount;
With bristish current downward flow'd apace;
O how the channel to the stream gave grace!
Who, glaz'd with crystal, gate the glowing roses
That flame through water with their hue incloses
O father, what a hell of witchcraft lies
In the small orb of one particular tear?
But with the inundation of the eyes
What rocky heart to water will not weat?
What breast so cold that is not warmed here?
O dear effect! cold modesty, hot wrath,
Both fire from hence and chill extincture hath!
For lo! his passion, but an art of craft,
Even there resolv'd my reason into tears;
There my white stole of chastity I daft,
Shook off my sober guards, and civil fears;
Appear to him, as he to me appears,
All melting; though our drops this difference bore,
His poison'd me, and mine did him restore.
In him a plentitude of subtle matter,
Applied to cautels, all strange forms receives,
Of burning blushes, or of weeping water,
Of swooning paleness; and he takes and leaves,
In either's apoteos as it best deceives,
To blush at speeches rank, to weep at woes,
Or to turn white and swan at tragic shows;
That not a heart which in his level came,
Could scape the bale of his all-burning aim,
Showing fair nature is both kind and tame;
And veil'd in them, would win whom he would main;
Against the thing he sought he would exclaim;
When he most brunt in heart-wish'd luxury,
He preach'd pure maid, and prais'd cold chastity.
Thus merely with the garment of a Grace
The naked and concealed fire he cover'd,
That the unexpectid gave the tempter place,
Which, like a cherubin, above them hover'd.
Who, young and simple, would not be so lover'd?
Ah me! I fell; and yet do question make
What I should do again for such a sake.
O, that infected moisture of his eye,
O, that false fire which in his cheek so glow'd,
O, that fore'd thunder from his heart did fly,
O, that sad breath his spagyng lungs bestow'd,
O, all that borrowed motion, seeming owd,
Would yet again betray the fore-betray'd,
And new pervert a reconciled maid!

THE END.
